John Fitzgerald Kennedy was one of the most courageous people in the world. He could handle almost all of the dangerous things in the world with all the courage that he had. He had an amazing imagination and he thought of bad things that could be fixed. He did not know that one day he would fix those things. He disagreed with segregation. He did not think it was fair. He gave speeches in front of thousands of people and said, segregation must stop! He had alot of courage because he was the first president to say that segregation was not fair. He worked with Martin Luther King Jr. He could have let segregation continue, but he did not. JFK was not worried about protesters He had the courage that he needed to stop segregation. He was not afraid of almost anything.

JFK and I are I like because we have both had to stop something unfair. For example, when I said that the soccer teams unfair but the other kids would not change there minds. I asked and asked and finally got my way. At the end, everyone thought that the teams were fair!

J.F.K. has taught me that trying to stop something unfair is great because you help yourself and other people. J.F.K. was a very courageous man he changed the USA and how we live. J.F.K. should always be remembered!
