What JFK means to me

Isidora Bestic
May 18, 2011

John Fitzgerald Kennedy was the 35th President of the United states of America. He was also the youngest President and to this day he still is. John Fitzgerald Kennedy was killed by Lee Harvey Oswald in 1963. In all that time John Fitzgerald Kennedy did so much stuff to help countries all over the world that two Presidents couldn't do what he did alone!

I think the most important think he did was help end segregation. Segregation is when black people and white people had different rights. White people were treated fairly and nicely but black people were treated badly because of the color of their skin. John Fitzgerald Kennedy knew this was n't fair! He knew you should never judge people by their looks but their personality. He wanted everybody to be treated fairly. If white people get 100% then black people get the same! People say he waited too long to end segregation. Finally he made a move. He worked with Martin Luther King Jr. to end segregation. Martin Luther King Jr. wanted the same thing as John. John and Martin Jr. worked hard to make a plan. Finally they made speeches and told the world what they thought about segregation. Finally times got better and better and white people and black people got along better. Soon our world was like it is now! Everybody has the same rights and our world is fair.

I chose to write about segregation because who knows what our world would be like if segregation was still going on? John helped end segregation for us! I think me and John are alike because we both want everything in our world to be fair.