

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] January 6 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Monday, January 6, 2020 5:34:44 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Mon., January 6, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. WHITE HOUSE:

NEPA climate overhaul could unleash energy projects

The White House is poised to exclude climate considerations from its rewrite of rules surrounding the nation's core environmental law, according to a draft memo obtained by E&E News. If finalized, the proposed changes could clear the way for energy projects like the Keystone XL pipeline that federal judges have blocked.

TOP STORIES

2. SECURITY:

Iran could launch cyberattacks after U.S. strike — experts

3. DOE:

Rick Perry joins board of Dakota Access developer

4. ELECTRICITY:

N.Y. set to close last coal plant

FEDERAL AGENCIES

5. DOE:

Will Trump release oil to blunt Iran?

6. INTERIOR:

Polar bear study sets road map for ANWR seismic testing

OIL AND GAS

7. PIPELINES:

Energy Transfer to pay record fine over Pa. explosion, fire

8. NATURAL GAS:

N.M. researchers get funds for methane leak detection

9. PERMIAN BASIN:

Wave of pipeline projects is late to the oil boom

ELECTRICITY

10. NEW MEXICO:

Group wants court review of shutdown costs at coal plant

11. TRANSMISSION:

Navajo maintains electric line that carried coal-fired power

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Key dates to put on your calendar for 2020
Date: Monday, January 6, 2020 9:45:03 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Key dates to put on your calendar for 2020

President Trump returns to the White House on Sunday night after spending two weeks at Mar-a-Lago for the holidays. (Oliver Contreras/Pool/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: January will be dominated by three I's: Iran, impeachment and Iowa.

We don't know when or how Iran will retaliate for the strike that killed Quds Force commander Qasem Soleimani. Nor do we know for sure when Speaker Nancy Pelosi will transmit the articles of impeachment so Senate Republicans can begin their trial, and presumed acquittal, of President Trump. With the Iowa caucuses a month away, the latest polling shows a three-way tie for first place.

If the first week of the year is any indication, 2020 will be tumultuous, unpredictable and enormously consequential. With that in mind, here are some key dates for the coming trip around the sun that should be on your radar:

Jan. 11: Taiwan's elections offer a referendum on relations with China. President Tsai Ing-wen, a hardliner who has supported U.S. efforts to check Beijing's power, is up for reelection this weekend. She faces a challenge from the mayor of Kaohsiung, the island's second-largest city, who favors closer ties with the mainland.

Jan. 14: The Democrats have their final debate before Iowa votes. Only five candidates have qualified so far to appear onstage at Drake University in Des Moines next Tuesday because of higher eligibility criteria set by the Democratic National Committee. Trump has scheduled a rally in Milwaukee for that night to counterprogram the Democratic debate. There's speculation among the Democratic campaigns that their debate, scheduled to air on CNN, might get pushed back if it conflicts with the impeachment trial, potentially to the evening of Jan. 20, a federal holiday for Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

Jan. 21-24: Trump plans to return to the World Economic Forum in Davos. His administration will send a sizable delegation to the annual gathering of the global elite.

Jan. 28: Michael Flynn is scheduled to finally be sentenced. A federal judge last month rejected the former Trump national security adviser's attacks against the FBI and his request to find prosecutors in contempt. U.S. District Judge Emmet Sullivan of Washington ruled there was no basis for the retired three-star Army general's allegations that federal law enforcement officials entrapped him into accepting a plea deal from special counsel Bob Mueller for making false statements to the FBI about his Russian contacts.

Jan. 31: Brexit finally happens. The U.K. officially leaves the European Union after Prime Minister Boris Johnson's big win in last month's elections.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) knocks on doors on Sunday to speak to undecided caucus goers in Maquoketa, Iowa. (Andrew Harnik/AP)

Feb. 3: Democrats caucus in Iowa. The night after the Super Bowl takes place in Miami, up to 300,000 Iowans will gather across the state for hours of deliberation on a winter night. Starting with Jimmy Carter's win in the 1976 caucuses, which put him on a glidepath to the presidency, the top individual vote-getter in the Iowa caucuses has gone on to win the Democratic nomination seven out of nine times.

Feb. 4: Trump delivers his State of the Union. That same day is the crowded Democratic primary in the special election to succeed the late Elijah Cummings in his Baltimore district. His widow is among the candidates.

Feb. 7: The eighth Democratic debate will take place in New Hampshire. ABC will air the Friday night debate from St. Anselm College outside Manchester.

Feb. 11: The New Hampshire primary is the following Tuesday. The results will significantly winnow the field.

Feb. 19: The ninth Democratic debate will be in Las Vegas and air on NBC, three days before the caucuses in Nevada.

Feb. 20: Roger Stone's sentencing. The president's longtime political confidant was convicted in November of seven felony counts of lying to investigators, obstructing a congressional probe and witness tampering. His crimes carry a combined maximum sentence of 50 years in prison. Stone's lawyers secured a two-week extension from the judge last month to allow them to compile financial records.

Feb. 21: Iran holds its once-every-four-years parliamentary elections. The conflict with the United States will shadow these highly restricted contests. Recent protests against the regime appear to have given way, at least for now, to rallying around the flag after the strike on Soleimani.

Feb. 22: The Nevada caucuses offer Democrats their first racially diverse contest. Latinos could make the difference.

Feb. 25: The 10th Democratic debate will take place in

Charleston, S.C. CBS will air the debate, co-sponsored by the Congressional Black Caucus Institute. Will there any be any candidates of color left in the race? The DNC tentatively plans to sanction one debate in April and another in May, assuming the race continues, but the dates and sponsors have not been announced.

Feb. 29: The South Carolina Democratic primary is the final early-state contest. Joe Biden is counting on strong African American support as a firewall, but it could erode if he underperforms in the first three states.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu chairs his weekly cabinet meeting in Jerusalem on Sunday. (Ronen Zvulun/Pool via AP)

March 2: Israel has its third national election in 11

months. Neither Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu nor challenger Benny Gantz could assemble a majority coalition in the Knesset, their parliament, after the previous two elections. Talks broke down. So there will be an unprecedented third election in an effort to break the impasse.

March 3: About 40 percent of Democratic delegates will be awarded on Super Tuesday. Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont and Virginia go to the polls. California and Texas are the two biggest delegate prizes of the whole contest. The Golden State has been terrible about tabulating results in recent years so, be warned, that it could be a few days before we know for sure who got the most delegates.

An undercard to watch that night: Former attorney general Jeff Sessions is running in Alabama to win back his old Senate seat in a crowded GOP primary. The winner will be considered the favorite in the fall against Democratic incumbent Doug Jones, who beat Roy Moore in the 2017 special election. Trump has remained angry at Sessions for recusing himself from the Russia probe, but Sessions is still trying to link himself closely with the president. The big question is how involved Trump gets in the race and, more specifically, whether he endorses one of Sessions's opponents.

March 4: The Supreme Court will hear oral arguments in a challenge to the constitutionality of a Louisiana abortion law that requires doctors who perform abortions to have the right to admit patients at a nearby hospital. This is the first time that these nine justices will consider abortion restrictions, and it could lead to the rollback of Roe v. Wade.

March 5: OPEC meets in Vienna, Austria. What the cartel chooses to do with the global oil supply could become super significant for domestic gas prices if a hot war breaks out between the United States and Iran. The Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries is scheduled to gather again on June 9-10. Oil prices rose above $70 a barrel today for the first time in more than three months because of this Iran donnybrook. (March 5 also happens to be the 250th anniversary of the Boston Massacre.)

March 10: This is being called Super Tuesday II. Michigan will be the biggest prize of the night. Bernie Sanders won a big upset over

Hillary Clinton in the 2016 primary, which foretold her weakness in the Wolverine state during the general election. Democrats also vote in Idaho, Mississippi, Missouri, North Dakota and the state of Washington.

House candidate Marie Newman, challenging Rep. Dan Lipinski in the Democratic primary, campaigns in LaGrange, Ill. (Sara Burnett/AP)

March 17: Democrats have primaries in Arizona, Florida, Illinois and Ohio. If one candidate sweeps all four states, there will be pressure on everyone else to drop out and anoint that winner the presumptive nominee.

The big undercard on this night is the left-wing primary challenge to Rep. Dan Lipinski, an anti-abortion moderate in Chicago. He narrowly survived an expensive primary fight two years ago and faces a rematch against Marie Newman. Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot tweeted over the weekend that Lipinski deserves to lose. Outside money has poured in from both sides of the abortion wars.

March 24: Georgia has the day to itself for a symbolically significant primary. Will Stacey Abrams, who lost the 2018 governor's race but whose name still appears on list of potential vice-presidential nominees, endorse one of the Democrats?

March 29: Puerto Rico has a Democratic primary. Several of the candidates have campaigned in San Juan, with an emphasis on hurricane relief, over the past year.

April 1: Census Day is observed nationwide. By this day, every household in America will have received an invitation to participate in the 2020 Census. People are asked to say how many people live in their home as of April 1. In May, census takers will begin knocking on the doors of people who didn't respond. The outcome of this count will have major impacts on redistricting for the next decade.

Gerardo Parra holds the World Series trophy, with a Baby Shark stuffed animal inside, during a November parade in Washington. He will not return next season. (Evelyn Hockstein/The Washington Post)

April 2: The Nationals play their home opener. The defending World Series champions, without a few of the guys who got us there, start the new season in New York on March 26 against the Mets and then go to Miami before coming home for their first game at Nationals Park. Opening Day has been an unofficial holiday in the District since baseball came back in 2005. This year it will be doubly so, thanks to all the fans who jumped on the bandwagon during last October's magical run. Ticket prices on StubHub already reflect this.

For those of us who cannot wait until April for baseball, pitchers and catchers report for spring training the week of Feb. 10. And the Nats will play the Astros – in a Grapefruit League rematch of the World Series – at the stadium the two teams share in West Palm Beach on Feb. 22.

April 4: On this Saturday, Democrats will caucus in Alaska, Hawaii and Wyoming and vote in a Louisiana primary. All four states may be ruby red, but a not insignificant chunk of delegates will be up for grabs.

April 7: Wisconsin holds its Democratic primary. Sanders beat

Clinton there by 13 points four years ago, another warning sign of her weakness across the industrial Midwest. Much will be made of what the Badger State does in the primary.

April 15: All 300 seats in South Korea's National Assembly are on the ballot. This could turn into a referendum on Seoul's approach toward Pyongyang, and Trump's demands that the South contribute more toward its defense could become an issue. It's also Tax Day here in the United States, which will be a peg for lots of stories about how much the debt has ballooned since Trump took office.

April 22: Earth Day turns 50. Big events are planned.

April 28: Six Northeastern states hold Democratic primaries. New York and Pennsylvania are the biggest prizes. Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland and Rhode Island also have primaries.

May 2: Kansas has its primary on a Saturday.

May 5: Indiana holds its primary the following Tuesday.

Russian President Vladimir Putin and President Trump confer on the sidelines of the G-20 summit in Osaka, Japan, last June. (Kevin Lamarque/Reuters)

May 9: Russian President Vladimir Putin has invited Trump to come to Moscow for a parade to celebrate the 75th anniversary of Germany's surrender in World War II. Trump has said he's considering the invite. "I appreciate the invitation," Trump told reporters in November. "It is right in the middle of political season, so I'll see if I can do it. But I would love to go if I could."

May 12: A special House election in California to replace Katie Hill (D) could become competitive. She ousted GOP incumbent Steve Knight in 2018 in the 25th District, which includes parts of Ventura and Los Angeles counties, but she resigned this fall amid an ethics investigation into allegations that she was romantically involved with her legislative director. The former congresswoman, who identifies as bisexual, denied that. But she admitted to engaging in a consensual three-person relationship with her now-estranged husband and a woman on her campaign staff.

One of the Republicans running for the open seat is George Papadopoulos, the former Trump foreign policy adviser who pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI about his Russia-related contacts and served 12 days in federal prison in 2018. His remark to an Australian diplomat in 2016 that the Russians had “dirt” on Clinton over drinks at a bar in London, which was passed along to U.S. officials, helped ignite the FBI investigation of Trump’s campaign.

Nebraska and West Virginia have presidential primaries on May 12, as well.

May 19: Kentucky and Oregon hold primaries.

May 22: This is the first important deadline of the year on Capitol Hill for a “must-pass” bill. The expiration of funding for community health centers is being talked about by lawmakers in both parties as the only real shot at forcing a prescription drug price deal and some other changes to the health laws.

June 2: Democratic will vote in presidential primaries in D.C., Montana, New Jersey, New Mexico and South Dakota. If the delegate hunt remains close, you might have candidates going to the Virgin Islands before the Democratic caucuses there on June 6. (Count me in to cover that.)

Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell silences his phone before a Senate Banking Committee hearing. (Yuri Gripas/Reuters)

June 10: The Federal Reserve's board meets eight times a year to decide interest rates, and Fed Chairman Jay Powell holds a news conference, including on this day. But most experts agree that how the economy is doing about six months before the election has the biggest influence on the outcome. That's why this gathering is probably a key time for how the Fed describes the health of the economy and whether the board votes to add any more stimulus. Similar logic is why the June 5 jobs report will get a lot of coverage. But also keep an eye on the numbers in May and July.

June 10-12: Trump hosts the G-7 at Camp David. He initially announced that the summit of world leaders would take place at a golf resort he owns in Doral, Fla., but backed off under criticism and amid legal concerns that this could violate the Constitution's emoluments clause. One flashpoint to watch will be whether Trump follows through with his announcement from last summer's meeting that he intends to invite Putin. The Russian strongman, who has now called the shots in his country for 20 years, was kicked out of what used to be the G-8 after he invaded Ukraine and seized Crimea in 2014. Trump, however, has expressed public sympathy for Putin over his pariah status, despite credible warnings that Russia is actively trying to interfere again in the U.S. presidential election on his behalf.

June 14: Trump turns 74. He will be the oldest world leader at the G-7. Three of the leading Democratic candidates vying to challenge the president in the general are also septuagenarians. Elizabeth Warren turns 71 on June 22. Sanders turns 79 on Sept. 8. And Biden turns 78 on Nov. 20. In contrast, Pete Buttigieg – who would be the youngest American president ever if he wins – turns 38 on Jan. 19.

Mid-June: The Supreme Court's term ends. The justices are considering several cases that could lead to decisions with major political implications, including whether federal law protects LGBTQ workers from discrimination or being fired and whether the Trump administration's efforts to end the Obama-era program that protects immigrants brought to this country as children are lawful. The court could also hand down a major Second Amendment decision and decide whether a state may withhold aid to private religious schools if it offers funding to secular ones.

July 13-16: The Democratic National Convention is in Milwaukee. You'll probably read a lot of stories in the next few months about a contested convention, but Democrats haven't had one since 1968.

The new National Stadium will be the main site for the upcoming Tokyo 2020 Olympic Games. (Tomohiro Ohsumi/Getty Images)

July 24-Aug. 9: The Summer Olympics in Tokyo will overshadow politics for a few weeks. One wrinkle is that Aug. 6 is the 75th anniversary of the Enola Gay dropping the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Aug. 9, the day of the closing ceremonies, is the anniversary of the U.S. bombing Nagasaki. V-J Day came Aug. 14.

July 31-Sept. 18: Congress is scheduled to take a 38-day summer recess. Lawmakers are scheduled to leave town again on Oct. 2 to campaign for the month before the election.

Aug. 24-27: The Republican National Convention is in Charlotte during the week before Labor Day. This will likely be every bit as much a coronation as the 2012 Democratic convention was for Barack Obama in the same city.

Sept. 18: Early voting begins in the presidential election. Minnesota is the first state that will begin voting – 46 days before the general election. Several other states will begin allowing early voting the next day. Expect a record number of voters to cast their ballots in the weeks before Election Day, continuing a trend that's accelerated as more states have made it easier to vote by mail or get an absentee ballot. In 2016, 57.2 million Americans voted early, absentee or by mail – up from 24.9 million in 2004. In the last presidential race, more than half the votes were cast early in 16 states.

Sept. 29: The first presidential debate of the general election is at Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind. That's Buttigieg's hometown, where he just wrapped up eight years as mayor. One wildcard is that Trump has hinted he might refuse to debate.

Sept. 30: The government needs to be funded by this date, or there could be another shutdown. It seems most likely that both sides will want to avoid a showdown so close to the election, but Trump could use this deadline to demand appropriations for his border wall if he thinks picking a fight with Pelosi could be advantageous in the home stretch.

Donald Trump prepares for an appearance in 2005 on "Days of Our Lives" with actress Arianne Zucker. He is accompanied to the set by "Access Hollywood" host Billy Bush. The video emerged in October 2016. (Obtained by The Washington Post)

October Surprise: There always is something we don't expect. In 2016, it was the FBI reopening the Clinton email investigation and the "Access Hollywood" tape that showed Trump boasting on a hot microphone about grabbing women by the genitals and kissing them without their consent.

Oct. 5-10: The Convention on Biological Diversity meets in Kunming, China. Delegates from around the world will vote on whether to pledge to protect a third of the land and a third of the sea on Earth. The UN will convene a separate round of climate talks at some point late in the year, during which countries will declare their pledges for cutting greenhouse gas emissions over the next five years.

Oct. 7: The only vice-presidential debate is at the University of Utah in Salt Lake City. Which Democrat will Mike Pence face?

Oct. 15: The second presidential debate is at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Oct. 22: The third and final presidential debate is scheduled for Belmont University in Nashville, Tenn. This is also the day that presidential campaign committees must file their final pre-election fundraising report, which will give a last window into their financial strength for the final 12 days.

Oct. 29: The government will unveil its advance estimate of gross domestic product growth for the third quarter. This is the final read of how healthy the economy is before the election. Also, watch the stock market from Aug. 1 to Oct. 31. One of the most reliable predictors of the presidential election is whether stocks rise or fall in the three-month period. Stocks actually fell slightly during that stretch in 2016, implying a change in party control and a Trump victory.

Nov. 3: Election Day. A federal law in 1845 scheduled presidential elections for the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November so that voters in what was then an agrarian society wouldn't need to travel on Sundays and could respect the Sabbath. While all Americans will go to the polls, voters in about half a dozen battleground states will determine whether Trump secures a second term. Could he again win the electoral college while losing the popular vote? The Senate and the House are also in play.

Smoke billows as a woman wears a mask while walking in a neighborhood next to a coal-fired power plant in Shanxi, China. (Kevin Frayer/Getty Images)

Nov. 4: The United States is set to complete its withdrawal from the Paris climate accord. The Trump administration gave a required one-year notice in November. All the Democratic presidential candidates promise to rejoin if they win.

Nov. 9: The Mayflower arrived 400 years ago on this date. The Puritans would soon have what would be remembered as the first Thanksgiving in 1620, and the New World would never be the same. Expect the commemorations to be more sensitive to the impact on the indigenous peoples than past milestone anniversaries.

Nov. 21-22: The Saudis host the G-20 summit in Riyadh. Will Trump be a lame duck?

Dec. 31: This is the real Brexit deadline. The official exit date is at the end of this month, but there will be a transition period in which little changes as London and Brussels negotiate the future of the relationship. There's a fine chance they go for a major break, which will lead to British businesses getting slapped with big new taxes in their biggest market, the European Union, and an uncertain future for the millions of Brits living in Europe and Europeans living in Britain. But Johnson, the prime minister, says Britain will be fully split from the E.U. by the end of this year come hell or high water.

Heather Long, Juliet Eilperin, Robert Barnes, Michael Birnbaum, David Weigel, Paul Kane, Mike DeBonis, and Tom Hamburger contributed ideas for dates.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Tens of thousands gather in Iran for Soleimani's funeral

THE WORLD IS A TINDERBOX:

-- “Trump served a bellicose brew of threats, rebukes and contempt on Sunday as he escalated tensions in the Middle East and awaited Iran's possible retaliation for the U.S. killing of one of its top generals,” Seung Min Kim and Philip Rucker report.

“Trump projected a wartime posture as he wrapped up his holiday vacation, reiterating that if Iran took military action against the United States, he may order attacks on Iranian cultural sites, which could constitute a war crime under international law ... Trump threatened Iraq as well. He countered the Iraqi parliament's move Sunday to try to expel foreign troops, including U.S. forces, by telling reporters that he would respond by imposing ‘very big sanctions’ on the nation and demanding that Iraq reimburse the United States for the billions of dollars it had invested in a major air base there. Trump also flouted protocols at home, making a mockery of his necessity to advise

Congress of military action by writing on Twitter that his tweets would serve as official notification of strikes. ...

“The president's vow to target Iranian sites of historic and cultural significance prompted particular concern. On Twitter late Saturday, Trump said that the United States was targeting 52 Iranian sites, representing the 52 American hostages taken by Iran four decades ago, and that some of those are ‘a very high level & important to Iran & the Iranian culture.’ The 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property bans the targeting of cultural sites with military action; there is a provision that allows for a waiver due to ‘military necessity.’ Iran has 24 locations on the U.N. list of cultural world heritage sites. ... Trump’s tough talk is emblematic of a president who has flouted the tenets of international and U.S. law on war crimes. He has insisted that enhanced interrogation tactics such as waterboarding work, suggested killing terrorists’ families to fight the Islamic State and two months ago cleared three members of the U.S. armed services accused or convicted of war crimes over objections from senior military officials.”

-- Nancy Pelosi announced overnight the House will vote on a war powers resolution this week to limit Trump’s military actions against Iran. The speaker told fellow House Democrats in a letter that the strike on Soleimani was a “provocative and disproportionate military airstrike targeting high-level Iranian military officials” that endangered members of the U.S. military, diplomats and others. Pelosi said lawmakers were concerned the Trump administration acted without consulting Congress. Pelosi said the resolution would mandate that “if no further Congressional action is taken, the Administration’s military hostilities with regard to Iran cease within 30 days.”

“She said the House will introduce and vote on a resolution similar to one that Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) introduced in the Senate last week,” Donna Cassata reports. “Freshman Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.), a former CIA and Pentagon analyst specializing in Shiite militias, will spearhead the resolution in the House. The measure is likely to pass in the Democratic-controlled House and put Republicans on record on the issue, but won’t go far in the GOP-led Senate.”

Pompeo goes on media blitz to defend Soleimani killing

-- Soleimani’s killing follows a long push from Secretary of State Mike Pompeo for aggressive action against Iran. John Hudson, Josh Dawsey, Shane Harris and Dan Lamothe report: “Pompeo had lost a similar high-stakes deliberation last summer when Trump declined to retaliate militarily against Iran after it downed a U.S. surveillance drone, an outcome that left Pompeo ‘morose,’ according to one U.S. official. But recent changes to Trump's national security team and the whims of a president anxious about being viewed as hesitant in the face of Iranian aggression created an opening for Pompeo to press for the kind of action he had been advocating. The greenlighting of the airstrike near Baghdad airport represents a bureaucratic victory for Pompeo, but it also carries multiple serious risks: another protracted regional war in the Middle East; retaliatory assassinations of U.S. personnel stationed around the world; an interruption in the battle against the Islamic State; the closure of diplomatic pathways to containing Iran's nuclear program; and a major backlash in Iraq ... 'Taking out Soleimani would not have happened under [former secretary of defense Jim] Mattis,' said a senior administration official who argued that the Mattis Pentagon was risk-averse. ... Mattis declined to comment. ...

"Trump chose Pompeo to appear on all of the Sunday news shows ... But critics inside and outside the administration have questioned Pompeo's justification for the strike based on his claims that 'dozens if not hundreds' of American lives were at risk. Lawmakers left classified briefings with U.S. intelligence officials on Friday saying they heard nothing to suggest that the threat posed by the proxy forces guided by Soleimani had changed substantially in recent months. When repeatedly pressed on Sunday about the imminent nature of the threats, whether it was days or weeks away, or whether they had been foiled by the U.S. airstrike, Pompeo dismissed the questions. Some defense officials said Pompeo's claims of an imminent and direct threat were overstated, and they would prefer that he make the case based on the killing of the American contractor and previous Iranian provocations. Critics have also questioned how an imminent attack would be foiled by killing Soleimani, who would not have carried out the strike himself. ...

“Following the strike, Pompeo has held back-to-back phone calls with his counterparts around the globe but has received a chilly reception from European allies, many of whom fear that the attack puts their embassies in Iran and Iraq in jeopardy and has now eliminated the chance to keep a lid on Iran’s nuclear program. ‘We have woken up to a more dangerous world,’ said France’s Europe minister, Amelie de Montchalin. ...

“A critical moment for Pompeo is nearing as he faces growing questions about a potential Senate run, though some GOP insiders say that decision seems to have stalled. Pompeo has kept in touch with Ward Baker, a political consultant who would probably lead the operation, and others in [Mitch] McConnell’s orbit, about a bid. But Pompeo hasn’t committed one way or the other, people familiar with the conversations said. Some people close to the secretary say he has mixed feelings about becoming a relatively junior senator from Kansas after leading the State Department and CIA, but there is little doubt in Pompeo’s home state that he could win.”

How the backlash to Soleimani's killing is unfolding

-- Iran said Sunday that it is suspending its commitments under the 2015 nuclear deal and will abandon the accord's "final restrictions" on uranium enrichment and other activities unless U.S. sanctions are lifted. Erin Cunningham reports: "The government announced the move in a statement carried by state news agencies. ... It added that Iran will continue to cooperate with the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations' nuclear watchdog. ...

"Iraq's caretaker prime minister urged parliament on Sunday to take 'urgent measures' to force the withdrawal of foreign forces following the strike. In an address to the legislature, Adel Abdul Mahdi recommended that the government establish a timetable for the departure of foreign troops, including the members of the U.S.-led coalition fighting the Islamic State militant group, 'for the sake of our national sovereignty.' ... Lawmakers responded by passing a* nonbinding resolution calling on the government to end the foreign troop presence in Iraq. But Abdul Mahdi, who resigned in November and has been serving in a caretaker role, is not legally authorized to sign the bill into law. As a result, the vote Sunday did not immediately imperil the U.S. presence in Iraq, but it highlights the head winds the Trump administration faces after the strike.

-- Despite Trump's threats last night, experts believe ending America's military presence in Iraq may not be that hard. Louisa Loveluck reports: "Unlike most deployments stretching back to the aftermath the 9/11 attacks, American troops in Iraq are not operating under a conventional Status of Forces agreement approved by the Iraqi parliament ... Instead, the current military presence is based on an arrangement dating from 2014 that's less formal, and ultimately, based on the consent of an executive which yesterday told the troops to get out. So, with the stroke of a pen, the 5,000-strong force could technically be asked to leave."

-- Some of the 52 American hostages who were detained by Iran in 1979, who Trump cited when threatening to destroy the 52 Iranian sites, said they would rather not be mentioned by the president. From the Los Angeles Times: "Even though four decades have passed since Iranian protesters stormed the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and took the Americans hostage, resulting in a 444-day ordeal, those wounds continue to haunt Americans. ... William J. Daugherty, a 72-year-old former CIA case officer who lives in Georgia, said he didn't believe Iran's proxy war capability had taken a hit because of Suleimani's death. 'Suleimani has already been replaced,' Daugherty said. 'I'm not sure killing him will have any positive result.'"

-- A government website was “defaced” with pro-Iran messages and an image of a bloodied Trump. Hackers have claimed responsibility. (Allyson Chiu)

-- A former head of Iran’s Revolutionary Guard threatened to turn Israeli cities “to dust” if the U.S. attacks 52 targets in Iran. “If America takes any measures after our military response, we will turn Tel Aviv and Haifa to dust,” tweeted Mohsen Rezai, who currently heads the Expediency Council, a top state body. (Yahoo)

-- The Arab states in the Gulf, faced with the possibility of becoming Iran’s targets for retaliation against the U.S., are trying to keep tensions between Tehran and Washington from spiraling out of control From Bloomberg News: “Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman has instructed his younger brother, Deputy Defense Minister Khalid bin Salman, to travel to Washington and London in the next few days to urge restraint, the Asharq Al-Awsat newspaper reported ... The U.A.E.’s minister of state for foreign affairs, Anwar Gargash, called for ‘rational engagement’ .... In Tehran, Qatar’s foreign minister, Mohammed bin Abdulrahman Al Thani, met with Iranian President Hassan Rouhani to discuss ‘measures to maintain the security and stability of the region,’ state-run Qatar News Agency reported.”

-- The Department of Homeland Security stopped dozens of Iranian Americans and Iranians as they attempted to cross Washington state’s border with Canada. From the Times: “More than 60 of the travelers, many returning from work trips or vacations, were trying to come home to the United States on Saturday when agents at the Peace Arch Border Crossing in Blaine, Wash., held them for additional questioning about their political views and allegiances, according to advocacy groups and accounts from travelers. Most of the travelers were released after the extra scrutiny, according to administration officials, although advocates said some were denied entry into the United States. Masih Fouladi, an executive director of the Council on American-Islamic Relations, a Muslim civil rights and advocacy organization, said some were held in a waiting room and questioned for up to 10 hours. ... When one family asked agents why they were being questioned, an officer told them, 'This is a bad time to be an Iranian,' according to Mr. Fouladi, whose group has spoken to the travelers. ... Matt Leas, a spokesman for Customs and Border Protection, disputed the accounts and reports from advocacy groups that [DHS] had issued a directive to detain those with Iranian heritage entering the country, despite their citizenship status."

-- A woman in Portland, Ore., allegedly tried to choke a Muslim student with her own hijab. Katie Shepherd reports: "Jasmine Renee Campbell allegedly tried to choke the student, who is Muslim, with her hijab before the victim shoved the attacker away. Prosecutors said in a statement Campbell then ripped the woman's hijab from her head. ... The affidavit also alleges Campbell mocked the victim's religion and made fun of her hijab. The frightening encounter ended in an arrest after witnesses called the police, but left the Portland State University exchange student, who isn't being named by law enforcement officials, afraid to wear her religious garb in public. On Friday, prosecutors obtained an arrest warrant after 23-year-old Campbell failed to appear in court for her arraignment on five misdemeanor charges."

U.S. Air Force Staff Sgt. Devin Boyer salutes the flag during an August ceremony signifying the change from tactical to enduring operations at Camp Simba in Kenya. The al-Shabab extremist group attacked Camp Simba on Sunday. (Staff Sgt. Lexie West/U.S. Air Force/AP)

-- Al-Shabab militants launched a predawn attack Sunday on an airstrip used by the U.S. and Kenyan militaries, on Kenya's coast near the border with Somalia, killing one U.S. service member and two American private contractors. Two other American contractors were wounded and were being evacuated in stable condition, according to a U.S. military statement. Max Bearak reports from Nairobi:

“The attack marked a rare successful incursion by al-Shabab into a foreign military compound, let alone one outside its usual operating grounds in Somalia and one used by U.S. Special Forces and other defense personnel. Residents and tourists in the Lamu

region reported seeing a plume of smoke and hearing gunfire at 3:30 a.m. that continued until midmorning. It was unclear exactly how the attack unfolded, but pictures of the aftermath indicated that al-Shabab was able to detonate explosives where U.S. military equipment such as helicopters and other aircraft would have been stationed. The U.S. military statement said reports indicated damage to six 'contractor-operated civilian aircraft.' U.S. forces train Kenyan soldiers at a base attached to the airstrip known as Camp Simba, and they use the airstrip for aerial missions against al-Shabab in Somalia. ... Kenyan Defence Forces spokesman Lt. Col. Paul Njuguna said the bodies of five attackers were found. ...

"Al-Shabab, which is affiliated with al-Qaeda, has mounted a string of attacks in Kenya recently, including multiple ambushes on passenger buses traveling in the region close to the Somali border. Last Saturday, the group bombed a busy intersection in the Somali capital, Mogadishu, killing at least 80 people."

Dramatic scuffles erupt as security forces block Guaidó

-- Venezuela's last democratic institution fell after President Nicolás Maduro attempted a de facto takeover of the National Assembly in a move orchestrated to rob international credibility from Juan Guaidó, who had led the legislative body and nearly a year ago staked a rival claim as head of state. Rachelle Krygier and Anthony Faiola report: "The dramatic events marked a sharp escalation in Maduro's gambit to end Guaidó's quest to unseat him and sparked immediate condemnation by Washington, which has strongly backed the 36-year-old opposition leader. Opposition officials declared the move an effective 'parliamentary coup' meant to consolidate Maduro's near-dictatorial powers. ... Later Sunday, Guaidó sought to counter the move by gathering opposition lawmakers at the headquarters of El Nacional, a local newspaper, to cast an official vote. In a 100-to-0 tally — enough to put him over the top in a full session of the 167-seat chamber — those present reelected Guaidó as head of the legislature. Twenty-eight of the 100 were votes from stand-ins of exiled lawmakers. But Maduro, in an address to the nation, hailed what he called the National Assembly's 'new leadership.' ...

"Opposition officials have warned since last month that Maduro's government was handing out suitcases of cash to woo lawmakers. But they thought they had successfully countered the operation, and on Sunday, Guaidó began the day anticipating his reelection as head of the National Assembly, viewed internationally as the last democratic institution in the authoritarian South American state."

-- Masked assailants injured more than 30 students and professors at the prestigious Jawaharlal Nehru University in New Delhi. Joanna Slater and Niha Masih report: “The incident comes at a moment of high political tension in India, where hundreds of thousands of people — including many students — have participated in protests against a controversial citizenship law passed last month. The law creates an expedited path to citizenship for non-Muslim migrants from three countries, a move that critics say is discriminatory and unconstitutional. The violence at the university was not directly connected to the citizenship law but was rooted in a separate dispute roiling the campus over fees that also pitted student supporters of the government against its opponents.”

-- Rains have brought relief to Australia amid devastating fires, but the huge blazes are expected to continue. From the BBC: “Sooty rain fell down the east coast, from Sydney to Melbourne, with ‘torrential’ rain reported in some parts of New South Wales (NSW). But on Sunday night officials warned temperatures would rise by Thursday. They also said huge fires in Victoria and New South Wales could meet to create a larger ‘mega blaze.’ ‘There is no room for complacency,’ NSW state Premier Gladys Berejiklian warned on Monday morning. ‘This morning it is all about recovery, making sure people who have been displaced have somewhere safe.’ ... The weekend saw some of the worst days of the crisis so far, with hundreds more properties destroyed. Rural towns and major cities saw red skies, falling ash and smoke that clogged the air. But by Monday, there were no emergency warnings in fire-ravaged states, following the weather change.”

- A climate change study from 12 years ago warned of Australia's horrific bushfire season. (SBS News)
- South Australia's iconic Kangaroo Island could see rare species – including koalas, bees and marsupials – wiped out after the devastating fires. (ABC.net.au)

-- Russia announced a plan to “use the advantages” of climate change. From the Guardian: “The document, published on the government’s website on Saturday, outlines a plan of action and acknowledges changes to the climate are having a ‘prominent and increasing effect’ on socioeconomic development, people’s lives, health and industry. ... It lists preventive measures such as dam building or switching to more drought-resistant crops, as well as crisis preparations including emergency vaccinations or evacuations in case of a disaster. The plan says climate change poses risks to public health, endangers permafrost, and increases the likelihood of infections and natural disasters. It also can lead to species being pushed out of their usual habitats.”

-- Trump’s trade war is making lobbyists rich – sometimes by undercutting small-business owners. From ProPublica: “Overall, Trump’s tariffs have not had the effect that the self-described ‘Tariff Man’ promised. Companies have moved manufacturing out of China — and it has mostly gone to Vietnam, Taiwan and Mexico. Tariffs are chiefly behind a months-long decline in domestic manufacturing, Federal Reserve researchers have found. The total loss of jobs across the economy may be as high as 300,000. But constantly up-in-the-air trade agreements and the byzantine, opaque exclusion process has been a blessing for one set of players: Washington’s influence industry, including the firms of former Trump officials and allies like inauguration committee chief Brian Ballard, former White House chief of staff Reince Priebus and Trump fundraiser Marc Lampkin."

-- U.S. tensions with China will outlast the trade war, the New Yorker's Evan Osnos writes in a new piece on America's future with China: "Eight American Presidents, from Richard Nixon to Barack Obama, employed a strategy known as 'engagement,' based on the conviction that embracing China politically and economically would eventually make it more profitable and liberal. Despite China's flagrant abuses of intellectual property and human rights, the strategy enabled the largest trading relationship between any two countries in the world, with an estimated seventy thousand American companies doing business in China today. ... Trump wants none of that. He has always despised trade deficits. ... Trump's idea of 'uncoupling'—pushing factories to leave China, reducing the flow of students and technology— was a fringe position, found mostly in hawkish books such as 'Death by China,' by Peter Navarro, a fiery economics professor who joined Trump's campaign as an adviser. But, once Trump was in office, his confrontational approach attracted surprising bipartisan support."

Bernie Sanders speaks during a campaign event held this past weekend in Mason City, Iowa. (Patrick Semansky/AP)

2020 WATCH:

-- Former San Antonio mayor Julián Castro announced he's endorsing Warren, just days after ending his own candidacy.

Chelsea Janes reports: "In the video he released Monday, Castro, who had been the only Latino candidate in the presidential field, said he was endorsing Warren because she was 'one candidate I see who's unafraid to fight like hell to make sure America's promise will be there for everyone.' Castro, who also served as secretary of housing and urban development under [Obama], will join Warren at a town hall in Brooklyn on Tuesday."

-- The killing of Soleimani has sparked a new debate within the Democratic presidential field about how to characterize the death of the Iranian military leader. Kim and Rucker report: “Sens. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) and [Warren] have termed the killing an ‘assassination’ — a word that others in the race have avoided or even criticized more-liberal candidates for using. Speaking Sunday on CNN, former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg said he was ‘not interested in the terminology, I’m interested in the consequences’ when asked about the use of the word. But in North Carolina on Friday, former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg called the phrase ‘outrageous’ as it related to Soleimani, noting that the Iranian leader was someone ‘who had an awful lot of blood on his hands.’”

-- Joe Biden said Iran is now “in the driver’s seat” in the Middle East following Soleimani’s death and the Iraqi Parliament vote to remove U.S. forces from the country. (Des Moines Register)

-- Iowa voters aren’t pummeling the Democratic candidates with questions about Iran, David Weigel reports from Iowa: “Sen. Amy Klobuchar of Minnesota spoke to Iowans for 21 minutes before she mentioned [Soleimani]. [Sanders] kicked off the day with a speech opposing ‘this dangerous path to war with Iran,’ but by the end of the day, only one voter had asked him about it. ... During [Warren’s] first visit to Iowa in the new year, no voters asked about Iran at all. It was up to Warren, in a back-and-forth with reporters, to clarify her position: She would not have ordered the killing, which she called an ‘assassination,’ and would never have quit the Iran nuclear deal in the first place. ... At Warren’s next stop, in Dubuque, no voter asked about Iran ... The story from Iran and Iraq was moving fast, all weekend — faster than candidates could respond to, and far too fast for voters to quickly process. Further escalation could reshape the Democratic race, orienting it around the role of American power for the first time. If that were to happen, polling has consistently found that the party's voters trust [Biden] on foreign policy writ large.

Sanders and Warren have overlapping anti-interventionist stances that have rarely been debated in this primary. Until Friday, national security issues were so absent from the race that pollsters with CBS/YouGov, the first to conduct a survey of the caucuses since November, did not even ask about them.”

-- That CBS poll showed Sanders tied or at the top of the polls in both Iowa and New Hampshire: “He's in a first-place tie with [Biden] and Pete Buttigieg in Iowa. All three are at 23%, and each would get a similar number of delegates out of the caucuses if they were to take place today ... Sanders also now has a narrow edge in New Hampshire, with a two-point lead over Biden. [Warren] has slipped in New Hampshire since November, as liberal voters have moved toward Sanders instead. ... Apart from recent gains in New Hampshire, Sanders' support is still best characterized by its steadiness and strength compared to other candidates who have seen more volatility. Nearly half (47%) of his New Hampshire voters say they've definitely made up their minds. By comparison, just 15% of Biden's backers in the state describe their choice that way. In New Hampshire, 65% of Sanders' backers call themselves 'enthusiastic' about supporting him ahead of all other candidates. Sanders also leads the field on these two measures in Iowa. Forty-three percent have definitely made up their minds, and 67% feel enthusiastic in a state where enthusiasm can be an important motivator for voters to go out and caucus.”

-- If elected president, Biden would give the country a "long-overdue interval of national healing rather than a season of dramatic transformation," writes the New Republic's Walter Shapiro: "Even if his restorationist campaign proves successful, Biden would be destined to be a transitional president. Sometimes, more than anything, a democracy needs a chance to exhale. There is no shame in competence, knowing how to govern, and a faith that compromise in a post-Trump world is possible."

-- Biden secured the backing of several swing-state House Democrats, including Reps. Conor Lamb and Chrissy Houlahan (Pa.) and Elaine Luria of Virginia. (Politico)

-- Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) seems likely to miss the next debate. His Iowa supporters say it doesn't matter. Holly Bailey reports: "The New Jersey lawmaker is trudging along as several other candidates, including Sen. Kamala D. Harris (D-Calif.) and Julián Castro, have bowed out. It's not because he's seen a spike in the polls or a sudden influx of money. Rather, Booker's campaign seems buoyed by the unusually large crowd of undecided voters, along with some die-hard supporters unconcerned about electability. . . . 'I don't think it matters,' said Scott Carpenter, an Iowa City mental health advocate who decided to formally endorse Booker last month with his wife, Leslie, after it appeared he would not make the December debate. 'What matters in Iowa is relationships, your organization, your endorsements. . . . Those are the people who influence other people to go out and stand for you on a cold February night.'"

-- Here's something that's missing so far from the Democratic commercials: attacks on their rivals. From the Times: "Almost universally, the Democratic ads seek to address and quell a source of national anxiety — be it about [Trump], prescription drug costs, corruption, foreign policy or a changing economy. And they're doing it politely. ... In total, Democrats spent nearly $30 million on the airwaves in Iowa and New Hampshire in 2019, according to Advertising Analytics, an ad tracking firm. Not a single candidate has run a negative ad on television targeting other Democrats. The relatively placid ads of the 2020 Democratic campaign reflect the risk-averse primary contest, in which candidates have been loath to unleash any negativity on an opponent."

-- Judge Judy recorded an ad for Mike Bloomberg. From People:

"The judge-turned-daytime-TV-judge, whose real name is Judy Sheindlin, first announced her endorsement for Bloomberg, 77, back in October with an op-ed in USA Today, which raised some eyebrows because he hadn't yet announced he was running for president. ... Sheindlin, 77, made her endorsement doubly real on Monday morning in a new ad for Bloomberg. ... 'America is fractured,' she [said]. 'People are angry with each other because of their politics and it doesn't feel like a family anymore.' Bloomberg's time running the country's largest city and his years as a businessman were key selling points, as were some of his opinions on free speech."

-- Massachusetts Rep. Joe Kennedy III outpaced incumbent Sen. Ed Markey, who he is challenging in the Democratic primary, in fundraising during the final months of 2019. (Boston Globe)

-- Former Rhode Island governor Lincoln Chafee is taking steps to make a second run for president, this time in a bid for the Libertarian Party nomination. Chafee filed paperwork with the FEC

over the weekend, creating a Lincoln Chafee for President campaign committee based in Wyoming. (WPRI)

Graham urges impeachment rule change as Schiff says McConnell is 'in cahoots' with Trump

THE DOMESTIC AGENDA:

-- Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) suggested changing the Senate rules to begin Trump's impeachment trial within days if Pelosi continues to withhold the charges against Trump. Rachael Bade reports: "Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) was unequivocal in a Senate floor speech on Friday that 'we can't hold a trial without the articles; the Senate's own rules don't provide for that.' But Graham (R-S.C.), a close ally of Trump, floated the idea of a unilateral GOP move, saying he would work with McConnell to allow the Senate to proceed without the two charges against Trump for abuse of power and obstruction of Congress. The suggestion, while unlikely due to the high threshold of votes required for changing Senate impeachment rules, underscores the pressure some Trump allies feel as the president stewes over the impeachment delay. ‘Well, we’re not going to let Nancy Pelosi use the rules of the Senate to her advantage,’ Graham said on Fox ... ‘If we don’t get the articles this week, then we need to take matters [into] our own hands.’ ... Senate rules suggest such a move would be difficult, if not impossible. It would take 60 votes to pass a resolution on impeachment outside a trial and 67 votes to change the impeachment rules. That threshold would require Democratic support, since McConnell has only 53 Republicans — and Democrats would be loath to undercut Pelosi. The idea could be moot in a matter of days. Multiple Democratic officials expect Pelosi to transmit the articles of impeachment to the Senate as soon as this week — though Pelosi’s office said Friday that no decision has been made and declined to detail her plans.”

-- The daughter of a deceased Republican strategist made public files that the GOP wanted sealed. From NPR: “More than a year after his death, a cache of computer files saved on the hard drives of Thomas Hofeller, a prominent Republican redistricting strategist, is becoming public. Republican state lawmakers in North Carolina fought in court to keep copies of these maps, spreadsheets and other documents from entering the public record. But some files have already come to light in recent months through court filings and news reports. They have been cited as evidence of gerrymandering that got political maps thrown out in North Carolina, and they have raised questions about Hofeller's role in the Trump administration's failed push for a census citizenship question. Now more of the files are available online through a website called The Hofeller Files, where Hofeller's daughter, Stephanie Hofeller, published a link to her copy of the files on Sunday after first announcing her plans in a tweet last month. ... Her decision to put the files online herself is just the latest twist in a series of one astonishing event after another. It had been more than four years since Stephanie had spoken to her father after a family dispute involving the custody of her children landed in court. But on the last day of September in 2018, she 'had a hunch that maybe something was wrong,' according to her testimony for a lawsuit deposition. Sitting in her car parked outside a convenience store in Kentucky, she used her phone to search online for her father's name and found an obituary for Thomas Hofeller, confirming that he had died at the age of 75 more than a month earlier in August. Stephanie then reconnected with her mother, Kathleen, and visited her parents' apartment in North Carolina, where she found four external hard drives and a clear plastic bag containing 18 USB thumb drives in her father's room. Stephanie says her mother encouraged her to take the devices.”

-- U.S. regulators are mulling ordering extra simulator training for Boeing 737 Max pilots. From the Journal: “The Federal Aviation Administration months ago rejected the idea—which would entail extra costs and delays for airlines—as unnecessary. But in recent weeks, these officials said, requiring such training before returning the grounded U.S. MAX fleet to the air has gained momentum among agency and industry safety experts. ... The FAA’s formal decision isn’t expected until February or later, and the situation remains fluid. An agency spokeswoman declined to comment on specifics, saying more analysis and testing is required. ... Boeing has long maintained 737 MAX pilots don’t need supplemental simulator training beyond what pilots receive to fly other 737 models, a stance that many FAA officials now regard with increasing skepticism, according to the officials.”

-- The problems with the Max 737 may go beyond its software issues. From the Times: “As part of the work to return the Max to service, the company and regulators have scrutinized every aspect of the jet, uncovering new potential design flaws. ... Among the most pressing issues discovered were previously unreported concerns with the wiring that helps control the tail of the Max. The company is looking at whether two bundles of critical wiring are too close together and could cause a short circuit. A short in that area could lead to a crash if pilots did not respond correctly, the people said. Boeing is still trying to determine whether that scenario could actually occur on a flight and, if so, whether it would need to separate the wire bundles in the roughly 800 Max jets that have already been built. The company says that the fix, if needed, is relatively simple.”

-- An Army officer said his mother’s deportation is “completely inhumane.” From the Times: “It has been an emotional start to the new year for Rocio Rebollar Gomez and her family. On Thursday, after 31 years in the United States, a country where she had built a life and raised three children, including a son now in the United States Army, Ms. Gomez was deported to Tijuana, Mexico, where she had little family left. That son, Second Lt. Gibram Cruz, 30, who has been in the Army for five years and rushed to be with her the day after Christmas, said he was ‘shocked’ at the way his mother was treated ... Ms. Gomez, 51, was previously scheduled to self deport and that plan was known to ICE, the family’s lawyer, Tessa Cabrera, said on Friday. Instead, as the family went to an ICE office to discuss her case, Ms. Gomez was taken across the border to Tijuana without a chance to say goodbye, Ms. Cabrera said.”

-- Gun rights advocates and militia members from around the country are urging thousands of armed protesters to descend on Richmond later this month to stop Democrats from passing gun-control bills. Gregory S. Schneider and Laura Vozzella report: “What began as a handful of rural Virginia counties declaring themselves ‘Second Amendment sanctuaries’ has jumped the state’s borders and become an Internet phenomenon. Far-right websites and commenters are declaring that Virginia is the place to take a stand against what they see as a national trend of weakening gun rights. ... A Nevada-based group called the Oath Keepers said it’s sending training teams to help form posses and militia in Virginia. The leader of a Georgia militia called Three Percent Security Force has posted videos and calls to arms on Facebook, urging ‘patriots’ to converge on Richmond. The right-wing YouTuber ‘American Joe Show’ warned without evidence that Virginia will cut the power grid to stop the army of protesters — one of a host of false and exaggerated rumors spreading online. Law enforcement and public safety officials say they are monitoring the situation, including several instances of threats toward Gov. Ralph Northam (D). Even some gun enthusiasts expressed concern about the potential for violence at a rally planned for the state Capitol on Jan. 20. State police briefed Northam for two hours last week, according to one state official, and the governor plans to lead an all-staff meeting this week to go over increased security procedures.”

-- Thousands rallied in New York City in a march against anti-

Semitism following a series of attacks in the region. From the Times: “The violence has shaken the Jewish community in the New York area and underscored the startling rise of these types of hate crimes across the country: Anti-Semitic hate crimes in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago — the nation’s three largest cities — are poised to hit an 18-year peak, according to an upcoming report from the Center for the Study of Hate and Extremism at California State University, San Bernardino. ... Speaking to the crowd on Sunday, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo said that New York will increase funding for security at religious institutions and will also increase the presence of the state police force and hate crimes task force in vulnerable communities. Mr. Cuomo said he also plans to propose a new state law labeling hate crimes as domestic terrorism. ... At the rally, Senator Chuck Schumer of New York announced a proposal to increase federal funding to protect houses of worship and increase the capacity for local police groups to fight hate crimes.”

-- Disgraced movie mogul Harvey Weinstein’s sex assault trial starts today. The case against Weinstein, who has been publicly accused by more than 80 women of sexual assault and harassment, has been boiled down to five felony charges based on claims by two women. (CNN)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Democrats on the House Foreign Affairs Committee responded to Trump's Twitter "announcement":

House Foreign Affairs Committee ✓

@HouseForeign

This Media Post will serve as a reminder that war powers reside in the Congress under the United States Constitution. And that you should read the War Powers Act. And that you're not a dictator.

twitter.com/realdonaldtrum...

Donald J. Trump ✓ @realDonaldTrump

These Media Posts will serve as notification to the United States Congress that should Iran strike any U.S. person or target, the United States will quickly & fully strike back, & perhaps in a disproportionate manner. Such legal notice is not required, but is given nevertheless!

♥ 114K 10:41 PM - Jan 5, 2020

💬 43.4K people are talking about this

Trump's hawkish former national security adviser, who has been critical of the president lately, praised his Iran escalation:

John Bolton ✓

@AmbJohnBolton

Another good day. Iran rips the mask off the idea it ever fully complied with the nuclear deal, or that it made a strategic decision to forswear nuclear weapons. Now, it's on to the real job: effectively preventing the ayatollahs from getting such a capability.

♥ 22.2K 8:03 PM - Jan 5, 2020

💬 14.2K people are talking about this

From a former Republican congressman:

This appears to be Trump's modus operandi:

Here are some of the Iranian cultural sites that Trump could be threatening:

Cultural institutions have done a fantastic job in protecting it.

1/12

Sergio Beltrán-García

@ssbeltran

Several shrines are completely covered in extremely intricate geometrical cut mirrors. Going inside any of them makes you feel like Iranians have found a way to capture all of the galaxy's stars in a single building.

#IranianCulturalSites

2/12

♡ 1,815 12:47 PM - Jan 5, 2020

💬 503 people are talking about this

And Joe Biden's campaign has fully embraced the former vice president's iconic look:

Molly Nagle
@MollyNagle3

We're here at @JoeBiden's event in Grinnell, IA and the aviator aesthetic here is strong. Each pair features Biden's signature in the corner.

♡ 51 7:09 PM - Jan 5, 2020

 See Molly Nagle's other Tweets

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “I don’t think it’s too much of a stretch to say the root of much of this is Obama envy,” said Ned Price, a former CIA officer who served as an NSC spokesman under Obama, about Trump's decision to kill Soleimani. (David Nakamura)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Comedian Ricky Gervais hosted this year’s Golden Globes, and he called out celebrities for pretending to be “woke,” telling them they’re in no position to lecture the general public “about anything”:

THR The Hollywood Reporter
@THR

“If you win, come up, accept your little award, thank your agent and your God and f— off.” Host @rickygervais calls for no politics at the #GoldenGlobes
thr.cm/c3mvmy

 7,011  1:39 AM - Jan 6, 2020

 1,821 people are talking about this

Read other scathing jokes from Gervais's monologue here.

Actor Sacha Baron Cohen also used his time on the microphone to call out another powerful figure – Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg:

And "The Daily Show" looked back at some of the biggest "scandals" of Barack Obama's presidency:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Key dates to put on your calendar for 2020
Date: Monday, January 6, 2020 9:53:55 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Key dates to put on your calendar for 2020

President Trump returns to the White House on Sunday night after spending two weeks at Mar-a-Lago for the holidays. (Oliver Contreras/Pool/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: January will be dominated by three I's: Iran, impeachment and Iowa.

We don't know when or how Iran will retaliate for the strike that killed Quds Force commander Qasem Soleimani. Nor do we know for sure when Speaker Nancy Pelosi will transmit the articles of impeachment so Senate Republicans can begin their trial, and presumed acquittal, of President Trump. With the Iowa caucuses a month away, the latest polling shows a three-way tie for first place.

If the first week of the year is any indication, 2020 will be tumultuous, unpredictable and enormously consequential. With that in mind, here are some key dates for the coming trip around the sun that should be on your radar:

Jan. 11: Taiwan's elections offer a referendum on relations with China. President Tsai Ing-wen, a hardliner who has supported U.S. efforts to check Beijing's power, is up for reelection this weekend. She faces a challenge from the mayor of Kaohsiung, the island's second-largest city, who favors closer ties with the mainland.

Jan. 14: The Democrats have their final debate before Iowa votes. Only five candidates have qualified so far to appear onstage at Drake University in Des Moines next Tuesday because of higher eligibility criteria set by the Democratic National Committee. Trump has scheduled a rally in Milwaukee for that night to counterprogram the Democratic debate. There's speculation among the Democratic campaigns that their debate, scheduled to air on CNN, might get pushed back if it conflicts with the impeachment trial, potentially to the evening of Jan. 20, a federal holiday for Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

Jan. 21-24: Trump plans to return to the World Economic Forum in Davos. His administration will send a sizable delegation to the annual gathering of the global elite.

Jan. 28: Michael Flynn is scheduled to finally be sentenced. A federal judge last month rejected the former Trump national security adviser's attacks against the FBI and his request to find prosecutors in contempt. U.S. District Judge Emmet Sullivan of Washington ruled there was no basis for the retired three-star Army general's allegations that federal law enforcement officials entrapped him into accepting a plea deal from special counsel Bob Mueller for making false statements to the FBI about his Russian contacts.

Jan. 31: Brexit finally happens. The U.K. officially leaves the European Union after Prime Minister Boris Johnson's big win in last month's elections.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) knocks on doors on Sunday to speak to undecided caucus goers in Maquoketa, Iowa. (Andrew Harnik/AP)

Feb. 3: Democrats caucus in Iowa. The night after the Super Bowl takes place in Miami, up to 300,000 Iowans will gather across the state for hours of deliberation on a winter night. Starting with Jimmy Carter's win in the 1976 caucuses, which put him on a glidepath to the presidency, the top individual vote-getter in the Iowa caucuses has gone on to win the Democratic nomination seven out of nine times.

Feb. 4: Trump delivers his State of the Union. That same day is the crowded Democratic primary in the special election to succeed the late Elijah Cummings in his Baltimore district. His widow is among the candidates.

Feb. 7: The eighth Democratic debate will take place in New Hampshire. ABC will air the Friday night debate from St. Anselm College outside Manchester.

Feb. 11: The New Hampshire primary is the following Tuesday. The results will significantly winnow the field.

Feb. 19: The ninth Democratic debate will be in Las Vegas and air on NBC, three days before the caucuses in Nevada.

Feb. 20: Roger Stone's sentencing. The president's longtime political confidant was convicted in November of seven felony counts of lying to investigators, obstructing a congressional probe and witness tampering. His crimes carry a combined maximum sentence of 50 years in prison. Stone's lawyers secured a two-week extension from the judge last month to allow them to compile financial records.

Feb. 21: Iran holds its once-every-four-years parliamentary elections. The conflict with the United States will shadow these highly restricted contests. Recent protests against the regime appear to have given way, at least for now, to rallying around the flag after the strike on Soleimani.

Feb. 22: The Nevada caucuses offer Democrats their first racially diverse contest. Latinos could make the difference.

Feb. 25: The 10th Democratic debate will take place in

Charleston, S.C. CBS will air the debate, co-sponsored by the Congressional Black Caucus Institute. Will there any be any candidates of color left in the race? The DNC tentatively plans to sanction one debate in April and another in May, assuming the race continues, but the dates and sponsors have not been announced.

Feb. 29: The South Carolina Democratic primary is the final early-state contest. Joe Biden is counting on strong African American support as a firewall, but it could erode if he underperforms in the first three states.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu chairs his weekly cabinet meeting in Jerusalem on Sunday. (Ronen Zvulun/Pool via AP)

March 2: Israel has its third national election in 11

months. Neither Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu nor challenger Benny Gantz could assemble a majority coalition in the Knesset, their parliament, after the previous two elections. Talks broke down. So there will be an unprecedented third election in an effort to break the impasse.

March 3: About 40 percent of Democratic delegates will be awarded on Super Tuesday. Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont and Virginia go to the polls. California and Texas are the two biggest delegate prizes of the whole contest. The Golden State has been terrible about tabulating results in recent years so, be warned, that it could be a few days before we know for sure who got the most delegates.

An undercard to watch that night: Former attorney general Jeff Sessions is running in Alabama to win back his old Senate seat in a crowded GOP primary. The winner will be considered the favorite in the fall against Democratic incumbent Doug Jones, who beat Roy Moore in the 2017 special election. Trump has remained angry at Sessions for recusing himself from the Russia probe, but Sessions is still trying to link himself closely with the president. The big question is how involved Trump gets in the race and, more specifically, whether he endorses one of Sessions's opponents.

March 4: The Supreme Court will hear oral arguments in a challenge to the constitutionality of a Louisiana abortion law that requires doctors who perform abortions to have the right to admit patients at a nearby hospital. This is the first time that these nine justices will consider abortion restrictions, and it could lead to the rollback of Roe v. Wade.

March 5: OPEC meets in Vienna, Austria. What the cartel chooses to do with the global oil supply could become super significant for domestic gas prices if a hot war breaks out between the United States and Iran. The Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries is scheduled to gather again on June 9-10. Oil prices rose above $70 a barrel today for the first time in more than three months because of this Iran donnybrook. (March 5 also happens to be the 250th anniversary of the Boston Massacre.)

March 10: This is being called Super Tuesday II. Michigan will be the biggest prize of the night. Bernie Sanders won a big upset over

Hillary Clinton in the 2016 primary, which foretold her weakness in the Wolverine state during the general election. Democrats also vote in Idaho, Mississippi, Missouri, North Dakota and the state of Washington.

House candidate Marie Newman, challenging Rep. Dan Lipinski in the Democratic primary, campaigns in LaGrange, Ill. (Sara Burnett/AP)

March 17: Democrats have primaries in Arizona, Florida, Illinois and Ohio. If one candidate sweeps all four states, there will be pressure on everyone else to drop out and anoint that winner the presumptive nominee.

The big undercard on this night is the left-wing primary challenge to Rep. Dan Lipinski, an anti-abortion moderate in Chicago. He narrowly survived an expensive primary fight two years ago and faces a rematch against Marie Newman. Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot tweeted over the weekend that Lipinski deserves to lose. Outside money has poured in from both sides of the abortion wars.

March 24: Georgia has the day to itself for a symbolically significant primary. Will Stacey Abrams, who lost the 2018 governor's race but whose name still appears on list of potential vice-presidential nominees, endorse one of the Democrats?

March 29: Puerto Rico has a Democratic primary. Several of the candidates have campaigned in San Juan, with an emphasis on hurricane relief, over the past year.

April 1: Census Day is observed nationwide. By this day, every household in America will have received an invitation to participate in the 2020 Census. People are asked to say how many people live in their home as of April 1. In May, census takers will begin knocking on the doors of people who didn't respond. The outcome of this count will have major impacts on redistricting for the next decade.

Gerardo Parra holds the World Series trophy, with a Baby Shark stuffed animal inside, during a November parade in Washington. He will not return next season. (Evelyn Hockstein/The Washington Post)

April 2: The Nationals play their home opener. The defending World Series champions, without a few of the guys who got us there, start the new season in New York on March 26 against the Mets and then go to Miami before coming home for their first game at Nationals Park. Opening Day has been an unofficial holiday in the District since baseball came back in 2005. This year it will be doubly so, thanks to all the fans who jumped on the bandwagon during last October's magical run. Ticket prices on StubHub already reflect this.

For those of us who cannot wait until April for baseball, pitchers and catchers report for spring training the week of Feb. 10. And the Nats will play the Astros – in a Grapefruit League rematch of the World Series – at the stadium the two teams share in West Palm Beach on Feb. 22.

April 4: On this Saturday, Democrats will caucus in Alaska, Hawaii and Wyoming and vote in a Louisiana primary. All four states may be ruby red, but a not insignificant chunk of delegates will be up for grabs.

April 7: Wisconsin holds its Democratic primary. Sanders beat

Clinton there by 13 points four years ago, another warning sign of her weakness across the industrial Midwest. Much will be made of what the Badger State does in the primary.

April 15: All 300 seats in South Korea's National Assembly are on the ballot. This could turn into a referendum on Seoul's approach toward Pyongyang, and Trump's demands that the South contribute more toward its defense could become an issue. It's also Tax Day here in the United States, which will be a peg for lots of stories about how much the debt has ballooned since Trump took office.

April 22: Earth Day turns 50. Big events are planned.

April 28: Six Northeastern states hold Democratic primaries. New York and Pennsylvania are the biggest prizes. Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland and Rhode Island also have primaries.

May 2: Kansas has its primary on a Saturday.

May 5: Indiana holds its primary the following Tuesday.

Russian President Vladimir Putin and President Trump confer on the sidelines of the G-20 summit in Osaka, Japan, last June. (Kevin Lamarque/Reuters)

May 9: Russian President Vladimir Putin has invited Trump to come to Moscow for a parade to celebrate the 75th anniversary of Germany's surrender in World War II. Trump has said he's considering the invite. "I appreciate the invitation," Trump told reporters in November. "It is right in the middle of political season, so I'll see if I can do it. But I would love to go if I could."

May 12: A special House election in California to replace Katie Hill (D) could become competitive. She ousted GOP incumbent Steve Knight in 2018 in the 25th District, which includes parts of Ventura and Los Angeles counties, but she resigned this fall amid an ethics investigation into allegations that she was romantically involved with her legislative director. The former congresswoman, who identifies as bisexual, denied that. But she admitted to engaging in a consensual three-person relationship with her now-estranged husband and a woman on her campaign staff.

One of the Republicans running for the open seat is George Papadopoulos, the former Trump foreign policy adviser who pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI about his Russia-related contacts and served 12 days in federal prison in 2018. His remark to an Australian diplomat in 2016 that the Russians had “dirt” on Clinton over drinks at a bar in London, which was passed along to U.S. officials, helped ignite the FBI investigation of Trump’s campaign.

Nebraska and West Virginia have presidential primaries on May 12, as well.

May 19: Kentucky and Oregon hold primaries.

May 22: This is the first important deadline of the year on Capitol Hill for a “must-pass” bill. The expiration of funding for community health centers is being talked about by lawmakers in both parties as the only real shot at forcing a prescription drug price deal and some other changes to the health laws.

June 2: Democratic will vote in presidential primaries in D.C., Montana, New Jersey, New Mexico and South Dakota. If the delegate hunt remains close, you might have candidates going to the Virgin Islands before the Democratic caucuses there on June 6. (Count me in to cover that.)

Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell silences his phone before a Senate Banking Committee hearing. (Yuri Gripas/Reuters)

June 10: The Federal Reserve's board meets eight times a year to decide interest rates, and Fed Chairman Jay Powell holds a news conference, including on this day. But most experts agree that how the economy is doing about six months before the election has the biggest influence on the outcome. That's why this gathering is probably a key time for how the Fed describes the health of the economy and whether the board votes to add any more stimulus. Similar logic is why the June 5 jobs report will get a lot of coverage. But also keep an eye on the numbers in May and July.

June 10-12: Trump hosts the G-7 at Camp David. He initially announced that the summit of world leaders would take place at a golf resort he owns in Doral, Fla., but backed off under criticism and amid legal concerns that this could violate the Constitution's emoluments clause. One flashpoint to watch will be whether Trump follows through with his announcement from last summer's meeting that he intends to invite Putin. The Russian strongman, who has now called the shots in his country for 20 years, was kicked out of what used to be the G-8 after he invaded Ukraine and seized Crimea in 2014. Trump, however, has expressed public sympathy for Putin over his pariah status, despite credible warnings that Russia is actively trying to interfere again in the U.S. presidential election on his behalf.

June 14: Trump turns 74. He will be the oldest world leader at the G-7. Three of the leading Democratic candidates vying to challenge the president in the general are also septuagenarians. Elizabeth Warren turns 71 on June 22. Sanders turns 79 on Sept. 8. And Biden turns 78 on Nov. 20. In contrast, Pete Buttigieg – who would be the youngest American president ever if he wins – turns 38 on Jan. 19.

Mid-June: The Supreme Court's term ends. The justices are considering several cases that could lead to decisions with major political implications, including whether federal law protects LGBTQ workers from discrimination or being fired and whether the Trump administration's efforts to end the Obama-era program that protects immigrants brought to this country as children are lawful. The court could also hand down a major Second Amendment decision and decide whether a state may withhold aid to private religious schools if it offers funding to secular ones.

July 13-16: The Democratic National Convention is in Milwaukee. You'll probably read a lot of stories in the next few months about a contested convention, but Democrats haven't had one since 1968.

The new National Stadium will be the main site for the upcoming Tokyo 2020 Olympic Games. (Tomohiro Ohsumi/Getty Images)

July 24-Aug. 9: The Summer Olympics in Tokyo will overshadow politics for a few weeks. One wrinkle is that Aug. 6 is the 75th anniversary of the Enola Gay dropping the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Aug. 9, the day of the closing ceremonies, is the anniversary of the U.S. bombing Nagasaki. V-J Day came Aug. 14.

July 31-Sept. 18: Congress is scheduled to take a 38-day summer recess. Lawmakers are scheduled to leave town again on Oct. 2 to campaign for the month before the election.

Aug. 24-27: The Republican National Convention is in Charlotte during the week before Labor Day. This will likely be every bit as much a coronation as the 2012 Democratic convention was for Barack Obama in the same city.

Sept. 18: Early voting begins in the presidential election. Minnesota is the first state that will begin voting – 46 days before the general election. Several other states will begin allowing early voting the next day. Expect a record number of voters to cast their ballots in the weeks before Election Day, continuing a trend that's accelerated as more states have made it easier to vote by mail or get an absentee ballot. In 2016, 57.2 million Americans voted early, absentee or by mail – up from 24.9 million in 2004. In the last presidential race, more than half the votes were cast early in 16 states.

Sept. 29: The first presidential debate of the general election is at Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind. That's Buttigieg's hometown, where he just wrapped up eight years as mayor. One wildcard is that Trump has hinted he might refuse to debate.

Sept. 30: The government needs to be funded by this date, or there could be another shutdown. It seems most likely that both sides will want to avoid a showdown so close to the election, but Trump could use this deadline to demand appropriations for his border wall if he thinks picking a fight with Pelosi could be advantageous in the home stretch.

Donald Trump prepares for an appearance in 2005 on "Days of Our Lives" with actress Arianne Zucker. He is accompanied to the set by "Access Hollywood" host Billy Bush. The video emerged in October 2016. (Obtained by The Washington Post)

October Surprise: There always is something we don't expect. In 2016, it was the FBI reopening the Clinton email investigation and the "Access Hollywood" tape that showed Trump boasting on a hot microphone about grabbing women by the genitals and kissing them without their consent.

Oct. 5-10: The Convention on Biological Diversity meets in Kunming, China. Delegates from around the world will vote on whether to pledge to protect a third of the land and a third of the sea on Earth. The UN will convene a separate round of climate talks at some point late in the year, during which countries will declare their pledges for cutting greenhouse gas emissions over the next five years.

Oct. 7: The only vice-presidential debate is at the University of Utah in Salt Lake City. Which Democrat will Mike Pence face?

Oct. 15: The second presidential debate is at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Oct. 22: The third and final presidential debate is scheduled for Belmont University in Nashville, Tenn. This is also the day that presidential campaign committees must file their final pre-election fundraising report, which will give a last window into their financial strength for the final 12 days.

Oct. 29: The government will unveil its advance estimate of gross domestic product growth for the third quarter. This is the final read of how healthy the economy is before the election. Also, watch the stock market from Aug. 1 to Oct. 31. One of the most reliable predictors of the presidential election is whether stocks rise or fall in the three-month period. Stocks actually fell slightly during that stretch in 2016, implying a change in party control and a Trump victory.

Nov. 3: Election Day. A federal law in 1845 scheduled presidential elections for the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November so that voters in what was then an agrarian society wouldn't need to travel on Sundays and could respect the Sabbath. While all Americans will go to the polls, voters in about half a dozen battleground states will determine whether Trump secures a second term. Could he again win the electoral college while losing the popular vote? The Senate and the House are also in play.

Smoke billows as a woman wears a mask while walking in a neighborhood next to a coal-fired power plant in Shanxi, China. (Kevin Frayer/Getty Images)

Nov. 4: The United States is set to complete its withdrawal from the Paris climate accord. The Trump administration gave a required one-year notice in November. All the Democratic presidential candidates promise to rejoin if they win.

Nov. 9: The Mayflower arrived 400 years ago on this date. The Puritans would soon have what would be remembered as the first Thanksgiving in 1620, and the New World would never be the same. Expect the commemorations to be more sensitive to the impact on the indigenous peoples than past milestone anniversaries.

Nov. 21-22: The Saudis host the G-20 summit in Riyadh. Will Trump be a lame duck?

Dec. 31: This is the real Brexit deadline. The official exit date is at the end of this month, but there will be a transition period in which little changes as London and Brussels negotiate the future of the relationship. There's a fine chance they go for a major break, which will lead to British businesses getting slapped with big new taxes in their biggest market, the European Union, and an uncertain future for the millions of Brits living in Europe and Europeans living in Britain. But Johnson, the prime minister, says Britain will be fully split from the E.U. by the end of this year come hell or high water.

Heather Long, Juliet Eilperin, Robert Barnes, Michael Birnbaum, David Weigel, Paul Kane, Mike DeBonis, and Tom Hamburger contributed ideas for dates.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Tens of thousands gather in Iran for Soleimani's funeral

THE WORLD IS A TINDERBOX:

-- “Trump served a bellicose brew of threats, rebukes and contempt on Sunday as he escalated tensions in the Middle East and awaited Iran's possible retaliation for the U.S. killing of one of its top generals,” Seung Min Kim and Philip Rucker report.

“Trump projected a wartime posture as he wrapped up his holiday vacation, reiterating that if Iran took military action against the United States, he may order attacks on Iranian cultural sites, which could constitute a war crime under international law ... Trump threatened Iraq as well. He countered the Iraqi parliament's move Sunday to try to expel foreign troops, including U.S. forces, by telling reporters that he would respond by imposing ‘very big sanctions’ on the nation and demanding that Iraq reimburse the United States for the billions of dollars it had invested in a major air base there. Trump also flouted protocols at home, making a mockery of his necessity to advise

Congress of military action by writing on Twitter that his tweets would serve as official notification of strikes. ...

“The president's vow to target Iranian sites of historic and cultural significance prompted particular concern. On Twitter late Saturday, Trump said that the United States was targeting 52 Iranian sites, representing the 52 American hostages taken by Iran four decades ago, and that some of those are ‘a very high level & important to Iran & the Iranian culture.’ The 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property bans the targeting of cultural sites with military action; there is a provision that allows for a waiver due to ‘military necessity.’ Iran has 24 locations on the U.N. list of cultural world heritage sites. ... Trump’s tough talk is emblematic of a president who has flouted the tenets of international and U.S. law on war crimes. He has insisted that enhanced interrogation tactics such as waterboarding work, suggested killing terrorists’ families to fight the Islamic State and two months ago cleared three members of the U.S. armed services accused or convicted of war crimes over objections from senior military officials.”

-- Nancy Pelosi announced overnight the House will vote on a war powers resolution this week to limit Trump’s military actions against Iran. The speaker told fellow House Democrats in a letter that the strike on Soleimani was a “provocative and disproportionate military airstrike targeting high-level Iranian military officials” that endangered members of the U.S. military, diplomats and others. Pelosi said lawmakers were concerned the Trump administration acted without consulting Congress. Pelosi said the resolution would mandate that “if no further Congressional action is taken, the Administration's military hostilities with regard to Iran cease within 30 days."

"She said the House will introduce and vote on a resolution similar to one that Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) introduced in the Senate last week," Donna Cassata reports. Freshman Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.), a former CIA and Pentagon analyst specializing in Shiite militias, will spearhead the resolution in the House. The measure is likely to pass in the Democratic-controlled House and put Republicans on record on the issue, but won't go far in the GOP-led Senate."

Pompeo goes on media blitz to defend Soleimani killing

-- Soleimani's killing follows a long push from Secretary of State Mike Pompeo for aggressive action against Iran. John Hudson, Josh Dawsey, Shane Harris and Dan Lamothe report: "Pompeo had lost a similar high-stakes deliberation last summer when Trump declined to retaliate militarily against Iran after it downed a U.S. surveillance drone, an outcome that left Pompeo 'morose,' according

to one U.S. official. But recent changes to Trump's national security team and the whims of a president anxious about being viewed as hesitant in the face of Iranian aggression created an opening for Pompeo to press for the kind of action he had been advocating. The greenlighting of the airstrike near Baghdad airport represents a bureaucratic victory for Pompeo, but it also carries multiple serious risks: another protracted regional war in the Middle East; retaliatory assassinations of U.S. personnel stationed around the world; an interruption in the battle against the Islamic State; the closure of diplomatic pathways to containing Iran's nuclear program; and a major backlash in Iraq ... 'Taking out Soleimani would not have happened under [former secretary of defense Jim] Mattis,' said a senior administration official who argued that the Mattis Pentagon was risk-averse. ... Mattis declined to comment. ...

"Trump chose Pompeo to appear on all of the Sunday news shows ... But critics inside and outside the administration have questioned Pompeo's justification for the strike based on his claims that 'dozens if not hundreds' of American lives were at risk. Lawmakers left classified briefings with U.S. intelligence officials on Friday saying they heard nothing to suggest that the threat posed by the proxy forces guided by Soleimani had changed substantially in recent months. When repeatedly pressed on Sunday about the imminent nature of the threats, whether it was days or weeks away, or whether they had been foiled by the U.S. airstrike, Pompeo dismissed the questions. Some defense officials said Pompeo's claims of an imminent and direct threat were overstated, and they would prefer that he make the case based on the killing of the American contractor and previous Iranian provocations. Critics have also questioned how an imminent attack would be foiled by killing Soleimani, who would not have carried out the strike himself. ...

“Following the strike, Pompeo has held back-to-back phone calls with his counterparts around the globe but has received a chilly reception from European allies, many of whom fear that the attack puts their embassies in Iran and Iraq in jeopardy and has now eliminated the chance to keep a lid on Iran’s nuclear program. ‘We have woken up to a more dangerous world,’ said France’s Europe minister, Amelie de Montchalin. ...

“A critical moment for Pompeo is nearing as he faces growing questions about a potential Senate run, though some GOP insiders say that decision seems to have stalled. Pompeo has kept in touch with Ward Baker, a political consultant who would probably lead the operation, and others in [Mitch] McConnell’s orbit, about a bid. But Pompeo hasn’t committed one way or the other, people familiar with the conversations said. Some people close to the secretary say he has mixed feelings about becoming a relatively junior senator from Kansas after leading the State Department and CIA, but there is little doubt in Pompeo’s home state that he could win.”

How the backlash to Soleimani's killing is unfolding

-- Iran said Sunday that it is suspending its commitments under the 2015 nuclear deal and will abandon the accord's "final restrictions" on uranium enrichment and other activities unless U.S. sanctions are lifted. Erin Cunningham reports: "The government announced the move in a statement carried by state news agencies. ... It added that Iran will continue to cooperate with the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations' nuclear watchdog. ...

"Iraq's caretaker prime minister urged parliament on Sunday to take 'urgent measures' to force the withdrawal of foreign forces following the strike. In an address to the legislature, Adel Abdul Mahdi recommended that the government establish a timetable for the departure of foreign troops, including the members of the U.S.-led coalition fighting the Islamic State militant group, 'for the sake of our national sovereignty.' ... Lawmakers responded by passing a

nonbinding resolution calling on the government to end the foreign troop presence in Iraq. But Abdul Mahdi, who resigned in November and has been serving in a caretaker role, is not legally authorized to sign the bill into law. As a result, the vote Sunday did not immediately imperil the U.S. presence in Iraq, but it highlights the head winds the Trump administration faces after the strike.

-- Despite Trump's threats last night, experts believe ending America's military presence in Iraq may not be that hard. Louisa Loveluck reports: "Unlike most deployments stretching back to the aftermath the 9/11 attacks, American troops in Iraq are not operating under a conventional Status of Forces agreement approved by the Iraqi parliament ... Instead, the current military presence is based on an arrangement dating from 2014 that's less formal, and ultimately, based on the consent of an executive which yesterday told the troops to get out. So, with the stroke of a pen, the 5,000-strong force could technically be asked to leave."

-- Some of the 52 American hostages who were detained by Iran in 1979, who Trump cited when threatening to destroy the 52 Iranian sites, said they would rather not be mentioned by the president. From the Los Angeles Times: "Even though four decades have passed since Iranian protesters stormed the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and took the Americans hostage, resulting in a 444-day ordeal, those wounds continue to haunt Americans. ... William J. Daugherty, a 72-year-old former CIA case officer who lives in Georgia, said he didn't believe Iran's proxy war capability had taken a hit because of Suleimani's death. 'Suleimani has already been replaced,' Daugherty said. 'I'm not sure killing him will have any positive result.'"

-- A government website was “defaced” with pro-Iran messages and an image of a bloodied Trump. Hackers have claimed responsibility. (Allyson Chiu)

-- A former head of Iran’s Revolutionary Guard threatened to turn Israeli cities “to dust” if the U.S. attacks 52 targets in Iran. “If America takes any measures after our military response, we will turn Tel Aviv and Haifa to dust,” tweeted Mohsen Rezai, who currently heads the Expediency Council, a top state body. (Yahoo)

-- The Arab states in the Gulf, faced with the possibility of becoming Iran’s targets for retaliation against the U.S., are trying to keep tensions between Tehran and Washington from spiraling out of control From Bloomberg News: “Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman has instructed his younger brother, Deputy Defense Minister Khalid bin Salman, to travel to Washington and London in the next few days to urge restraint, the Asharq Al-Awsat newspaper reported ... The U.A.E.’s minister of state for foreign affairs, Anwar Gargash, called for ‘rational engagement’ .... In Tehran, Qatar’s foreign minister, Mohammed bin Abdulrahman Al Thani, met with Iranian President Hassan Rouhani to discuss ‘measures to maintain the security and stability of the region,’ state-run Qatar News Agency reported.”

-- The Department of Homeland Security stopped dozens of Iranian Americans and Iranians as they attempted to cross Washington state’s border with Canada. From the Times: “More than 60 of the travelers, many returning from work trips or vacations, were trying to come home to the United States on Saturday when agents at the Peace Arch Border Crossing in Blaine, Wash., held

them for additional questioning about their political views and allegiances, according to advocacy groups and accounts from travelers. Most of the travelers were released after the extra scrutiny, according to administration officials, although advocates said some were denied entry into the United States. Masih Fouladi, an executive director of the Council on American-Islamic Relations, a Muslim civil rights and advocacy organization, said some were held in a waiting room and questioned for up to 10 hours. ... When one family asked agents why they were being questioned, an officer told them, 'This is a bad time to be an Iranian,' according to Mr. Fouladi, whose group has spoken to the travelers. ... Matt Leas, a spokesman for Customs and Border Protection, disputed the accounts and reports from advocacy groups that [DHS] had issued a directive to detain those with Iranian heritage entering the country, despite their citizenship status.”

-- A woman in Portland, Ore., allegedly tried to choke a Muslim student with her own hijab. Katie Shepherd reports: “Jasmine Renee Campbell allegedly tried to choke the student, who is Muslim, with her hijab before the victim shoved the attacker away. Prosecutors said in a statement Campbell then ripped the woman’s hijab from her head. ... The affidavit also alleges Campbell mocked the victim’s religion and made fun of her hijab. The frightening encounter ended in an arrest after witnesses called the police, but left the Portland State University exchange student, who isn’t being named by law enforcement officials, afraid to wear her religious garb in public. On Friday, prosecutors obtained an arrest warrant after 23-year-old Campbell failed to appear in court for her arraignment on five misdemeanor charges.”

U.S. Air Force Staff Sgt. Devin Boyer salutes the flag during an August ceremony signifying the change from tactical to enduring operations at Camp Simba in Kenya. The al-Shabab extremist group attacked Camp Simba on Sunday. (Staff Sgt. Lexie West/U.S. Air Force/AP)

-- Al-Shabab militants launched a predawn attack Sunday on an airstrip used by the U.S. and Kenyan militaries, on Kenya's coast near the border with Somalia, killing one U.S. service member and two American private contractors. Two other American contractors were wounded and were being evacuated in stable condition, according to a U.S. military statement. Max Bearak reports from Nairobi:

“The attack marked a rare successful incursion by al-Shabab into a foreign military compound, let alone one outside its usual operating grounds in Somalia and one used by U.S. Special Forces and other defense personnel. Residents and tourists in the Lamu

region reported seeing a plume of smoke and hearing gunfire at 3:30 a.m. that continued until midmorning. It was unclear exactly how the attack unfolded, but pictures of the aftermath indicated that al-Shabab was able to detonate explosives where U.S. military equipment such as helicopters and other aircraft would have been stationed. The U.S. military statement said reports indicated damage to six 'contractor-operated civilian aircraft.' U.S. forces train Kenyan soldiers at a base attached to the airstrip known as Camp Simba, and they use the airstrip for aerial missions against al-Shabab in Somalia. ... Kenyan Defence Forces spokesman Lt. Col. Paul Njuguna said the bodies of five attackers were found. ...

"Al-Shabab, which is affiliated with al-Qaeda, has mounted a string of attacks in Kenya recently, including multiple ambushes on passenger buses traveling in the region close to the Somali border. Last Saturday, the group bombed a busy intersection in the Somali capital, Mogadishu, killing at least 80 people."

Dramatic scuffles erupt as security forces block Guaidó

-- Venezuela's last democratic institution fell after President Nicolás Maduro attempted a de facto takeover of the National Assembly in a move orchestrated to rob international credibility from Juan Guaidó, who had led the legislative body and nearly a year ago staked a rival claim as head of state. Rachelle Krygier and Anthony Faiola report: "The dramatic events marked a sharp escalation in Maduro's gambit to end Guaidó's quest to unseat him and sparked immediate condemnation by Washington, which has strongly backed the 36-year-old opposition leader. Opposition officials declared the move an effective 'parliamentary coup' meant to consolidate Maduro's near-dictatorial powers. ... Later Sunday, Guaidó sought to counter the move by gathering opposition lawmakers at the headquarters of El Nacional, a local newspaper, to cast an official vote. In a 100-to-0 tally — enough to put him over the top in a full session of the 167-seat chamber — those present reelected Guaidó as head of the legislature. Twenty-eight of the 100 were votes from stand-ins of exiled lawmakers. But Maduro, in an address to the nation, hailed what he called the National Assembly's 'new leadership.' ...

"Opposition officials have warned since last month that Maduro's government was handing out suitcases of cash to woo lawmakers. But they thought they had successfully countered the operation, and on Sunday, Guaidó began the day anticipating his reelection as head of the National Assembly, viewed internationally as the last democratic institution in the authoritarian South American state."

-- Masked assailants injured more than 30 students and professors at the prestigious Jawaharlal Nehru University in New Delhi. Joanna Slater and Niha Masih report: “The incident comes at a moment of high political tension in India, where hundreds of thousands of people — including many students — have participated in protests against a controversial citizenship law passed last month. The law creates an expedited path to citizenship for non-Muslim migrants from three countries, a move that critics say is discriminatory and unconstitutional. The violence at the university was not directly connected to the citizenship law but was rooted in a separate dispute roiling the campus over fees that also pitted student supporters of the government against its opponents.”

-- Rains have brought relief to Australia amid devastating fires, but the huge blazes are expected to continue. From the BBC: “Sooty rain fell down the east coast, from Sydney to Melbourne, with ‘torrential’ rain reported in some parts of New South Wales (NSW). But on Sunday night officials warned temperatures would rise by Thursday. They also said huge fires in Victoria and New South Wales could meet to create a larger ‘mega blaze.’ ‘There is no room for complacency,’ NSW state Premier Gladys Berejiklian warned on Monday morning. ‘This morning it is all about recovery, making sure people who have been displaced have somewhere safe.’ ... The weekend saw some of the worst days of the crisis so far, with hundreds more properties destroyed. Rural towns and major cities saw red skies, falling ash and smoke that clogged the air. But by Monday, there were no emergency warnings in fire-ravaged states, following the weather change.”

- A climate change study from 12 years ago warned of Australia's horrific bushfire season. (SBS News)
- South Australia's iconic Kangaroo Island could see rare species – including koalas, bees and marsupials – wiped out after the devastating fires. (ABC.net.au)

-- Russia announced a plan to “use the advantages” of climate change. From the Guardian: “The document, published on the government’s website on Saturday, outlines a plan of action and acknowledges changes to the climate are having a ‘prominent and increasing effect’ on socioeconomic development, people’s lives, health and industry. ... It lists preventive measures such as dam building or switching to more drought-resistant crops, as well as crisis preparations including emergency vaccinations or evacuations in case of a disaster. The plan says climate change poses risks to public health, endangers permafrost, and increases the likelihood of infections and natural disasters. It also can lead to species being pushed out of their usual habitats.”

-- Trump’s trade war is making lobbyists rich – sometimes by undercutting small-business owners. From ProPublica: “Overall, Trump’s tariffs have not had the effect that the self-described ‘Tariff Man’ promised. Companies have moved manufacturing out of China — and it has mostly gone to Vietnam, Taiwan and Mexico. Tariffs are chiefly behind a months-long decline in domestic manufacturing, Federal Reserve researchers have found. The total loss of jobs across the economy may be as high as 300,000. But constantly up-in-the-air trade agreements and the byzantine, opaque exclusion process has been a blessing for one set of players: Washington’s influence industry, including the firms of former Trump officials and allies like inauguration committee chief Brian Ballard, former White House chief of staff Reince Priebus and Trump fundraiser Marc Lampkin."

-- U.S. tensions with China will outlast the trade war, the New Yorker's Evan Osnos writes in a new piece on America's future with China: "Eight American Presidents, from Richard Nixon to Barack Obama, employed a strategy known as 'engagement,' based on the conviction that embracing China politically and economically would eventually make it more profitable and liberal. Despite China's flagrant abuses of intellectual property and human rights, the strategy enabled the largest trading relationship between any two countries in the world, with an estimated seventy thousand American companies doing business in China today. ... Trump wants none of that. He has always despised trade deficits. ... Trump's idea of 'uncoupling'—pushing factories to leave China, reducing the flow of students and technology— was a fringe position, found mostly in hawkish books such as 'Death by China,' by Peter Navarro, a fiery economics professor who joined Trump's campaign as an adviser. But, once Trump was in office, his confrontational approach attracted surprising bipartisan support."

Bernie Sanders speaks during a campaign event held this past weekend in Mason City, Iowa. (Patrick Semansky/AP)

2020 WATCH:

-- Former San Antonio mayor Julián Castro announced he's endorsing Warren, just days after ending his own candidacy.

Chelsea Janes reports: "In the video he released Monday, Castro, who had been the only Latino candidate in the presidential field, said he was endorsing Warren because she was 'one candidate I see who's unafraid to fight like hell to make sure America's promise will be there for everyone.' Castro, who also served as secretary of housing and urban development under [Obama], will join Warren at a town hall in Brooklyn on Tuesday."

-- The killing of Soleimani has sparked a new debate within the Democratic presidential field about how to characterize the death of the Iranian military leader. Kim and Rucker report: “Sens. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) and [Warren] have termed the killing an ‘assassination’ — a word that others in the race have avoided or even criticized more-liberal candidates for using. Speaking Sunday on CNN, former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg said he was ‘not interested in the terminology, I’m interested in the consequences’ when asked about the use of the word. But in North Carolina on Friday, former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg called the phrase ‘outrageous’ as it related to Soleimani, noting that the Iranian leader was someone ‘who had an awful lot of blood on his hands.’”

-- Joe Biden said Iran is now “in the driver’s seat” in the Middle East following Soleimani’s death and the Iraqi Parliament vote to remove U.S. forces from the country. (Des Moines Register)

-- Iowa voters aren’t pummeling the Democratic candidates with questions about Iran, David Weigel reports from Iowa: “Sen. Amy Klobuchar of Minnesota spoke to Iowans for 21 minutes before she mentioned [Soleimani]. [Sanders] kicked off the day with a speech opposing ‘this dangerous path to war with Iran,’ but by the end of the day, only one voter had asked him about it. ... During [Warren’s] first visit to Iowa in the new year, no voters asked about Iran at all. It was up to Warren, in a back-and-forth with reporters, to clarify her position: She would not have ordered the killing, which she called an ‘assassination,’ and would never have quit the Iran nuclear deal in the first place. ... At Warren’s next stop, in Dubuque, no voter asked about Iran ... The story from Iran and Iraq was moving fast, all weekend — faster than candidates could respond to, and far too fast for voters to quickly process. Further escalation could reshape the Democratic race, orienting it around the role of American power for the first time. If that were to happen, polling has consistently found that the party's voters trust [Biden] on foreign policy writ large. Sanders and Warren have overlapping anti-interventionist stances that have rarely been debated in this primary. Until Friday, national security issues were so absent from the race that pollsters with CBS/YouGov, the first to conduct a survey of the caucuses since November, did not even ask about them.”

-- That CBS poll showed Sanders tied or at the top of the polls in both Iowa and New Hampshire: “He's in a first-place tie with [Biden] and Pete Buttigieg in Iowa. All three are at 23%, and each would get a similar number of delegates out of the caucuses if they were to take place today ... Sanders also now has a narrow edge in New Hampshire, with a two-point lead over Biden. [Warren] has slipped in New Hampshire since November, as liberal voters have moved toward Sanders instead. ... Apart from recent gains in New Hampshire, Sanders' support is still best characterized by its steadiness and strength compared to other candidates who have seen more volatility. Nearly half (47%) of his New Hampshire voters say they've definitely made up their minds. By comparison, just 15% of Biden's backers in the state describe their choice that way. In New Hampshire, 65% of Sanders' backers call themselves 'enthusiastic' about supporting him ahead of all other candidates. Sanders also leads the field on these two measures in Iowa. Forty-three percent have definitely made up their minds, and 67% feel enthusiastic in a state where enthusiasm can be an important motivator for voters to go out and caucus.”

-- If elected president, Biden would give the country a "long-overdue interval of national healing rather than a season of dramatic transformation," writes the New Republic's Walter Shapiro: "Even if his restorationist campaign proves successful, Biden would be destined to be a transitional president. Sometimes, more than anything, a democracy needs a chance to exhale. There is no shame in competence, knowing how to govern, and a faith that compromise in a post-Trump world is possible."

-- Biden secured the backing of several swing-state House Democrats, including Reps. Conor Lamb and Chrissy Houlahan (Pa.) and Elaine Luria of Virginia. (Politico)

-- Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) seems likely to miss the next debate. His Iowa supporters say it doesn't matter. Holly Bailey reports: "The New Jersey lawmaker is trudging along as several other candidates, including Sen. Kamala D. Harris (D-Calif.) and Julián Castro, have bowed out. It's not because he's seen a spike in the polls or a sudden influx of money. Rather, Booker's campaign seems buoyed by the unusually large crowd of undecided voters, along with some die-hard supporters unconcerned about electability. . . . 'I don't think it matters,' said Scott Carpenter, an Iowa City mental health advocate who decided to formally endorse Booker last month with his wife, Leslie, after it appeared he would not make the December debate. 'What matters in Iowa is relationships, your organization, your endorsements. . . . Those are the people who influence other people to go out and stand for you on a cold February night.'"

-- Here's something that's missing so far from the Democratic commercials: attacks on their rivals. From the Times: "Almost universally, the Democratic ads seek to address and quell a source of national anxiety — be it about [Trump], prescription drug costs, corruption, foreign policy or a changing economy. And they're doing it politely. ... In total, Democrats spent nearly $30 million on the airwaves in Iowa and New Hampshire in 2019, according to Advertising Analytics, an ad tracking firm. Not a single candidate has run a negative ad on television targeting other Democrats. The relatively placid ads of the 2020 Democratic campaign reflect the risk-averse primary contest, in which candidates have been loath to unleash any negativity on an opponent."

-- Judge Judy recorded an ad for Mike Bloomberg. From People:

"The judge-turned-daytime-TV-judge, whose real name is Judy Sheindlin, first announced her endorsement for Bloomberg, 77, back in October with an op-ed in USA Today, which raised some eyebrows because he hadn't yet announced he was running for president. ... Sheindlin, 77, made her endorsement doubly real on Monday morning in a new ad for Bloomberg. ... 'America is fractured,' she [said]. 'People are angry with each other because of their politics and it doesn't feel like a family anymore.' Bloomberg's time running the country's largest city and his years as a businessman were key selling points, as were some of his opinions on free speech."

-- Massachusetts Rep. Joe Kennedy III outpaced incumbent Sen. Ed Markey, who he is challenging in the Democratic primary, in fundraising during the final months of 2019. (Boston Globe)

-- Former Rhode Island governor Lincoln Chafee is taking steps to make a second run for president, this time in a bid for the Libertarian Party nomination. Chafee filed paperwork with the FEC

over the weekend, creating a Lincoln Chafee for President campaign committee based in Wyoming. (WPRI)

Graham urges impeachment rule change as Schiff says McConnell is 'in cahoots' with Trump

THE DOMESTIC AGENDA:

-- Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) suggested changing the Senate rules to begin Trump's impeachment trial within days if Pelosi continues to withhold the charges against Trump. Rachael Bade reports: "Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) was unequivocal in a Senate floor speech on Friday that 'we can't hold a trial without the articles; the Senate's own rules don't provide for that.' But Graham (R-S.C.), a close ally of Trump, floated the idea of a unilateral GOP move, saying he would work with McConnell to allow the Senate to proceed without the two charges against Trump for abuse of power and obstruction of Congress. The suggestion, while unlikely due to the high threshold of votes required for changing Senate impeachment rules, underscores the pressure some Trump allies feel as the president stewes over the impeachment delay. ‘Well, we’re not going to let Nancy Pelosi use the rules of the Senate to her advantage,’ Graham said on Fox ... ‘If we don’t get the articles this week, then we need to take matters [into] our own hands.’ ... Senate rules suggest such a move would be difficult, if not impossible. It would take 60 votes to pass a resolution on impeachment outside a trial and 67 votes to change the impeachment rules. That threshold would require Democratic support, since McConnell has only 53 Republicans — and Democrats would be loath to undercut Pelosi. The idea could be moot in a matter of days. Multiple Democratic officials expect Pelosi to transmit the articles of impeachment to the Senate as soon as this week — though Pelosi’s office said Friday that no decision has been made and declined to detail her plans.”

-- The daughter of a deceased Republican strategist made public files that the GOP wanted sealed. From NPR: “More than a year after his death, a cache of computer files saved on the hard drives of Thomas Hofeller, a prominent Republican redistricting strategist, is becoming public. Republican state lawmakers in North Carolina fought in court to keep copies of these maps, spreadsheets and other documents from entering the public record. But some files have already come to light in recent months through court filings and news reports. They have been cited as evidence of gerrymandering that got political maps thrown out in North Carolina, and they have raised questions about Hofeller's role in the Trump administration's failed push for a census citizenship question. Now more of the files are available online through a website called The Hofeller Files, where Hofeller's daughter, Stephanie Hofeller, published a link to her copy of the files on Sunday after first announcing her plans in a tweet last month. ... Her decision to put the files online herself is just the latest twist in a series of one astonishing event after another. It had been more than four years since Stephanie had spoken to her father after a family dispute involving the custody of her children landed in court. But on the last day of September in 2018, she 'had a hunch that maybe something was wrong,' according to her testimony for a lawsuit deposition. Sitting in her car parked outside a convenience store in Kentucky, she used her phone to search online for her father's name and found an obituary for Thomas Hofeller, confirming that he had died at the age of 75 more than a month earlier in August. Stephanie then reconnected with her mother, Kathleen, and visited her parents' apartment in North Carolina, where she found four external hard drives and a clear plastic bag containing 18 USB thumb drives in her father's room. Stephanie says her mother encouraged her to take the devices.”

-- U.S. regulators are mulling ordering extra simulator training for Boeing 737 Max pilots. From the Journal: “The Federal Aviation Administration months ago rejected the idea—which would entail extra costs and delays for airlines—as unnecessary. But in recent weeks, these officials said, requiring such training before returning the grounded U.S. MAX fleet to the air has gained momentum among agency and industry safety experts. ... The FAA’s formal decision isn’t expected until February or later, and the situation remains fluid. An agency spokeswoman declined to comment on specifics, saying more analysis and testing is required. ... Boeing has long maintained 737 MAX pilots don’t need supplemental simulator training beyond what pilots receive to fly other 737 models, a stance that many FAA officials now regard with increasing skepticism, according to the officials.”

-- The problems with the Max 737 may go beyond its software issues. From the Times: “As part of the work to return the Max to service, the company and regulators have scrutinized every aspect of the jet, uncovering new potential design flaws. ... Among the most pressing issues discovered were previously unreported concerns with the wiring that helps control the tail of the Max. The company is looking at whether two bundles of critical wiring are too close together and could cause a short circuit. A short in that area could lead to a crash if pilots did not respond correctly, the people said. Boeing is still trying to determine whether that scenario could actually occur on a flight and, if so, whether it would need to separate the wire bundles in the roughly 800 Max jets that have already been built. The company says that the fix, if needed, is relatively simple.”

-- An Army officer said his mother’s deportation is “completely inhumane.” From the Times: “It has been an emotional start to the new year for Rocio Rebollar Gomez and her family. On Thursday, after 31 years in the United States, a country where she had built a life and raised three children, including a son now in the United States Army, Ms. Gomez was deported to Tijuana, Mexico, where she had little family left. That son, Second Lt. Gibram Cruz, 30, who has been in the Army for five years and rushed to be with her the day after Christmas, said he was ‘shocked’ at the way his mother was treated ... Ms. Gomez, 51, was previously scheduled to self deport and that plan was known to ICE, the family’s lawyer, Tessa Cabrera, said on Friday. Instead, as the family went to an ICE office to discuss her case, Ms. Gomez was taken across the border to Tijuana without a chance to say goodbye, Ms. Cabrera said.”

-- Gun rights advocates and militia members from around the country are urging thousands of armed protesters to descend on Richmond later this month to stop Democrats from passing gun-control bills. Gregory S. Schneider and Laura Vozzella report: “What began as a handful of rural Virginia counties declaring themselves ‘Second Amendment sanctuaries’ has jumped the state’s borders and become an Internet phenomenon. Far-right websites and commenters are declaring that Virginia is the place to take a stand against what they see as a national trend of weakening gun rights. ... A Nevada-based group called the Oath Keepers said it’s sending training teams to help form posses and militia in Virginia. The leader of a Georgia militia called Three Percent Security Force has posted videos and calls to arms on Facebook, urging ‘patriots’ to converge on Richmond. The right-wing YouTuber ‘American Joe Show’ warned without evidence that Virginia will cut the power grid to stop the army of protesters — one of a host of false and exaggerated rumors spreading online. Law enforcement and public safety officials say they are monitoring the situation, including several instances of threats toward Gov. Ralph Northam (D). Even some gun enthusiasts expressed concern about the potential for violence at a rally planned for the state Capitol on Jan. 20. State police briefed Northam for two hours last week, according to one state official, and the governor plans to lead an all-staff meeting this week to go over increased security procedures.”

-- Thousands rallied in New York City in a march against anti-

Semitism following a series of attacks in the region. From the Times: “The violence has shaken the Jewish community in the New York area and underscored the startling rise of these types of hate crimes across the country: Anti-Semitic hate crimes in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago — the nation’s three largest cities — are poised to hit an 18-year peak, according to an upcoming report from the Center for the Study of Hate and Extremism at California State University, San Bernardino. ... Speaking to the crowd on Sunday, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo said that New York will increase funding for security at religious institutions and will also increase the presence of the state police force and hate crimes task force in vulnerable communities. Mr. Cuomo said he also plans to propose a new state law labeling hate crimes as domestic terrorism. ... At the rally, Senator Chuck Schumer of New York announced a proposal to increase federal funding to protect houses of worship and increase the capacity for local police groups to fight hate crimes.”

-- Disgraced movie mogul Harvey Weinstein’s sex assault trial starts today. The case against Weinstein, who has been publicly accused by more than 80 women of sexual assault and harassment, has been boiled down to five felony charges based on claims by two women. (CNN)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Democrats on the House Foreign Affairs Committee responded to Trump's Twitter "announcement":

House Foreign Affairs Committee ✓

@HouseForeign

This Media Post will serve as a reminder that war powers reside in the Congress under the United States Constitution. And that you should read the War Powers Act. And that you're not a dictator.

twitter.com/realdonaldtrum...

Donald J. Trump ✓ @realDonaldTrump

These Media Posts will serve as notification to the United States Congress that should Iran strike any U.S. person or target, the United States will quickly & fully strike back, & perhaps in a disproportionate manner. Such legal notice is not required, but is given nevertheless!

♥ 114K 10:41 PM - Jan 5, 2020

💬 43.4K people are talking about this

John Bolton ✓

@AmbJohnBolton

Another good day. Iran rips the mask off the idea it ever fully complied with the nuclear deal, or that it made a strategic decision to forswear nuclear weapons. Now, it's on to the real job: effectively preventing the ayatollahs from getting such a capability.

♥ 22.2K 8:03 PM - Jan 5, 2020

💬 14.2K people are talking about this

Trump's hawkish former national security adviser, who has been critical of the president lately, praised his Iran escalation:

From a former Republican congressman:

This appears to be Trump's modus operandi:

Here are some of the Iranian cultural sites that Trump could be threatening:

Cultural institutions have done a fantastic job in protecting it.

1/12

Sergio Beltrán-García

@ssbeltran

Several shrines are completely covered in extremely intricate geometrical cut mirrors. Going inside any of them makes you feel like Iranians have found a way to capture all of the galaxy's stars in a single building.

#IranianCulturalSites

2/12

♡ 1,815 12:47 PM - Jan 5, 2020

💬 503 people are talking about this

And Joe Biden's campaign has fully embraced the former vice president's iconic look:

Molly Nagle
@MollyNagle3

We're here at @JoeBiden's event in Grinnell, IA and the aviator aesthetic here is strong. Each pair features Biden's signature in the corner.

♡ 51 7:09 PM - Jan 5, 2020

 See Molly Nagle's other Tweets

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “I don’t think it’s too much of a stretch to say the root of much of this is Obama envy,” said Ned Price, a former CIA officer who served as an NSC spokesman under Obama, about Trump's decision to kill Soleimani. (David Nakamura)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Comedian Ricky Gervais hosted this year’s Golden Globes, and he called out celebrities for pretending to be “woke,” telling them they’re in no position to lecture the general public “about anything”:

THR The Hollywood Reporter
@THR

“If you win, come up, accept your little award, thank your agent and your God and f— off.” Host @rickygervais calls for no politics at the #GoldenGlobes
thr.cm/c3mvmy

 7,011  1:39 AM - Jan 6, 2020

 1,821 people are talking about this

Read other scathing jokes from Gervais's monologue here.

Actor Sacha Baron Cohen also used his time on the microphone to call out another powerful figure – Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg:

And "The Daily Show" looked back at some of the biggest "scandals" of Barack Obama's presidency:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Esper's split with Trump over targeting Iranian cultural sites is a nod to 'the laws of armed conflict'
Date: Tuesday, January 7, 2020 9:32:14 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Esper's split with Trump over targeting Iranian cultural sites is a nod to 'the laws of armed conflict'

Defense Secretary Mark Esper, right, confers with Gen. Mark Milley, left, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs, during a signing ceremony with President Trump on Dec. 20 at Joint Base Andrews. Leah Esper, the secretary's wife, is between them. (Erik S Lesser/EPA-EFE/Rex)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Secretary of War Henry Stimson and President Harry Truman agreed in 1945 that the United States should not drop an atomic bomb on Kyoto. Stimson had seen the historical and cultural significance of Japan's ancient imperial capital when he visited during his honeymoon in 1893, so he overruled a committee that sought to target the city and explained his rationale directly to the president.

Stimson wrote in his diary after the conversation that Truman "was particularly emphatic in agreeing with my suggestion” that “the bitterness which would be caused by such a wanton act might make it impossible during the long post-war period to reconcile the Japanese to us in that area rather than to the Russians.”

Truman reflected on that same meeting in his own diary. “Even if the [Japanese] are savages, ruthless, merciless and fanatic,” he wrote, “we as the leader of the world for the common welfare cannot drop that terrible bomb on the old capital or the new.”

Fast forward 75 years: Secretary of Defense Mark Esper, who holds the job Stimson once did, put himself at odds with President Trump on Monday night by definitively telling reporters that the U.S. military will not target cultural sites inside Iran on his watch, even if hostilities continue to escalate in the wake of the U.S. drone strike that killed Maj. Gen. Qasem Soleimani at the Baghdad airport last week. “We will follow the laws of armed conflict,” Esper told reporters at the Pentagon. Asked if that means the U.S. military will not target cultural sites, he answered: “That’s the laws of armed conflict.”

Trump tweeted on Saturday that the United States has targeted 52 sites for possible retaliation, including “some at a very high level & important to Iran & the Iranian culture.” Speaking to reporters aboard Air Force One on Sunday night, the president doubled down in asserting his willingness to attack cultural sites: “They’re allowed to kill our people. They’re allowed to torture and maim our people. They’re allowed to use roadside bombs and blow up our people. And we’re not allowed to touch their cultural sites? It doesn’t work that way!”

Trump stands by threat on Iran's cultural sites

In fact, international law does work that way. The 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, which the United States helped facilitate in the aftermath of World War II, requires that warring parties “take all possible steps to protect cultural property,” which includes “monuments of architecture, art or history, whether religious or secular.”

A 1977 amendment to the Geneva Conventions went further. It bans “any acts of hostility directed against the historic monuments, works of art or places of worship which constitute the cultural or spiritual heritage of peoples,” and it requires that signatories neither “use such objects in support of the military effort” nor “make such objects the object of reprisals.”

To be sure, Stimson did not have a perfect record: He supported Japanese internment and the restrictive immigration quotas that limited how many Jewish refugees the United States accepted from Europe. More than 100,000 civilians also died from the atomic bombs that were dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

But even during America's last war for national survival – after the sneak attack at Pearl Harbor and relentless kamikaze suicide missions against U.S. vessels – the secretary of war understood something fundamental about the power and possibility of moral leadership in what we now remember as the American Century.

Stimson recognized not just the aesthetic and historical value of protecting irreplaceable cultural sites but the derivative national security advantages that would flow, in what became the Cold War, from Americans holding themselves to a higher standard than their enemies.

Trump has repeatedly repudiated the very concept of American Exceptionalism and espoused a variety of moral false equivalency that is deeply at odds with the republic's long bipartisan tradition. The bellicose threat to target cultural sites is just the latest example of Trump squandering the moral high ground that generations of his predecessors worked to claim, even if they fell short at key moments. In November, Trump overruled military leaders and cleared three members of the military who were either credibly accused or convicted of war crimes. He's claimed that "torture" works. He suggested during the 2016 campaign that he supported killing noncombatant family members of terrorists.

How Trump's administration defended his threat to strike Iranian cultural sites

Brett McGurk, the former U.S. envoy to the international coalition fighting the Islamic State from 2015 to 2018, characterized Trump's latest threats as "unAmerican."

"American military forces adhere to international law," he tweeted.

"They don't attack cultural sites. And they're not mercenaries.

Reckless and unprecedented words from a Commander-in-Chief."

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), a former military lawyer in the Air Force Reserve, said he urged Trump to stop threatening cultural sites during a Monday phone call. “We’re not at war with the culture of the Iranian people,” Graham told the New York Times. “We’re in a conflict with the theology, the ayatollah and his way of doing business. I think the president saying ‘we will hit you hard’ is the right message. Cultural sites is not hitting them hard; it’s creating more problems.”

“Targeting civilians and cultural sites is what terrorists do,” added Sen. Chris Murphy (D-Conn.), a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. “It’s a war crime.”

U.K. Prime Minister Boris Johnson also publicly broke with Trump on Monday, with his spokesman declaring that he will not abide Trump’s threat to target Iranian cultural sites. “Johnson is trying to perform a balancing act,” William Booth and Karla Adam report from London. “He is under pressure to support Trump and the United States, Britain’s closest ally. He very much wants a free-trade deal with Washington, to show his country that his Brexit crusade was worth the price. But Johnson is also a student of history — and remembers well how British Prime Minister Tony Blair was seen as the gullible, junior partner to President George W. Bush and his headlong rush to war in Iraq.”

• UNESCO cultural heritage site

-- Iran is home to 22 cultural UNESCO World Heritage Sites, including the ancient ruins of Persepolis. (The UNESCO web site has the full list, with pictures and descriptions of each site.)

-- Trump's saber-rattling is particularly noteworthy because America has historically led the international community in codifying restrictions on the targeting of cultural heritage. "In March 2017 — only weeks after Trump's inauguration — the U.N. Security Council, with the United States as a permanent member, unanimously adopted a resolution condemning the 'unlawful destruction of cultural heritage, inter alia destruction of religious sites and artefacts' in armed conflicts," Rick Noack reports. He looks back on the disturbing recent history that prodded the UN to act:

"Starting in 1991, Yugoslav People's Army forces besieged the historic city of Dubrovnik in Croatia, leading to the destruction of parts of its center. In the city of Sarajevo, in Bosnia, the Vijećnica city hall was set on fire in 1992, destroying its sizable library. In the aftermath, former prosecutors and researchers with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia assessed more broadly that during conflicts, ‘it is increasingly evident that cultural property is not simply at risk from incidental harm, but is being intentionally attacked as part of cultural cleansing campaigns.’ ...

“In 2016, North African militant Ahmad al-Faqi al-Mahdi was convicted by the International Criminal Court of ‘intentionally directing attacks against historic monuments and/or buildings dedicated to religion’ in the ICC’s first such trial, focusing on the destruction or damaging of cultural property. Mahdi was sentenced to nine years in prison for his role in attacking nine mausoleums and one mosque in Timbuktu, Mali, in 2012.”

Taliban destroys Bamiyan Buddha statues in 2001

-- The Post's art and architecture critic Philip Kennicott laments: "If we are to be a barbarian nation, what are our new limits? Do we have any?"

"In March 2001, the Taliban regime in Afghanistan began to dynamite the 6th-century statues of Buddha in Bamian," Kennicott writes. "The decision was both impetuous and brutal, in part an exercise in fundamentalist iconoclasm, in part an act of defiance and rage against the world at large. It was a galvanizing moment in the recent history of cultural heritage ... Fourteen years later, the Islamic State's destruction at Palmyra did much the same work of branding, defining the cruel so-called caliphate as an organization beyond all bounds. Our leadership has been imperfect and sometimes hypocritical. But when a lack of U.S. leadership led to the looting of Baghdad's antiquities museum during the 2003 Gulf War, the U.S. response wasn't to claim a basic right to destroy culture. We argued the 'fog of war.' It was defensive, muddled and wrong, but not amoral. ...

"In 2018, as part of the military budget, Congress created the position of coordinator for cultural heritage protection. A statement Sunday decrying Trump's words, signed by cultural heritage experts in anthropology, archaeology and the museum world, details recent progress during the Trump administration, including the Smithsonian Institution's plans to assist the Army in training a new corps of 'monuments men,' experts who can help the military avoid cultural destruction. ... The new line, the one we crossed this weekend, isn't between one set of cultural values vs. another; it isn't between people who speak our language and those who speak all others. It is between culture and the void, between the many and variegated ways in which different people try to live together peacefully and productively, and the pure nihilism of autocracy. The threat wasn't to Iranian cultural sites. It was to culture."

-- "The Department of Defense's Law of War manual mentions cultural property 625 times, repeatedly citing the Hague Convention," NPR notes. "Accordingly, the U.S. military educates its soldiers about their responsibilities not to target or destroy cultural property, and to help in its preservation, says Nancy Wilkie, president of the U.S. Committee of the Blue Shield. The organization is dedicated to the prevention of destruction and theft of cultural heritage. The Pentagon has even distributed playing cards with photos of cultural sites in Afghanistan and elsewhere to remind troops to safeguard heritage sites and artifacts. ... As World War II was underway in 1943, then-Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower issued an order to his commanders demanding the protection of historical monuments."

Hannah Bloch ✓

@HannahBloch

Sparing cultural sites in war is so important that the Pentagon even went to the trouble of designing/distributing decks of cards to boost awareness among troops serving in Iraq and Afghanistan. The president's comments prompted me to find the deck I was given some years back:

♥ 2,048 1:30 AM - Jan 6, 2020

💬 1,074 people are talking about this

-- Trump's threat has become a propaganda coup for the regime in Tehran. For example, Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif sub-tweeted Trump on Sunday:

-- The Trump administration has barred Zarif from entering the United States this week to address the United Nations Security Council about the Soleimani strike, Foreign Policy reports, “violating the terms of a 1947 headquarters agreement requiring Washington to permit foreign officials into the country to conduct U.N. business.”

“The Iranian government was awaiting word on the visa Monday when a Trump administration official phoned U.N. Secretary-General António Guterres to inform him that the United States would not allow Zarif into the country,” Colum Lynch and Robbie Gramer report. “But even before the current crisis, [Pompeo] in recent months had sought to restrict the ability of Zarif—a skilled debater who has studied in the United States and has extensive contacts with American journalists—to make his case to the American public during previous visits to the United States. In July, the United States restricted his movement to a few blocks in Manhattan and Queens, preventing Zarif from making his regular visits to TV studios, universities, and think tanks. Pompeo defended the decision, noting that American diplomats lack freedom to travel in Iran.”

-- Iranian leaders have long memories, dating back to American support for the shah. Iranian President Hassan Rouhani on Monday also invoked Iran Air Flight 655, a commercial jet shot down by the U.S. Navy by mistake on July 3, 1988, killing all 290 civilians and crew on board, including 66 children. “Although the incident is nearly forgotten in the United States, it is etched deeply in memory in Iran,” Gillian Brockell explains. “In 1988, the long war between Iraq and Iran was close to ending. At the time, the United States supported Iraq and its leader Saddam Hussein in its fight against Iran. ... To this day, many hard-liners in the Iranian government believe the incident was intentional.”

Soleimani's daughter warns of 'dark days' for the United States

MORE TEAM COVERAGE:

-- The burial of Soleimani has been postponed after a stampede killed at least 50 people and injured more than 200 others during massive mourning marches through his hometown of Kerman, according to Iranian state television. Erin Cunningham is anchoring our liveblog: “Iranian leaders have stepped up calls for revenge against the United States for its airstrike that killed Soleimani, with one intelligence official saying concrete retaliation plans are already being discussed. ... Security council head Ali Shamkhani said 13 scenarios for retaliation are being considered, and specifically mentioned that U.S. bases in the region were under surveillance. Iran’s Revolutionary Guard commander, Maj. Gen. Hossein Salami, hinted that Israel could be a target.”

-- The Pentagon rushed to play down reports that U.S. troops in Iraq were being repositioned in preparation for a possible withdrawal, one day after Iraqi lawmakers passed a nonbinding resolution calling for all foreign troops to leave the country. Karen DeYoung, Missy Ryan and Paul Sonne report: “‘This is a mistake,’ the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Mark A. Milley, told reporters at the Pentagon after a letter indicating a withdrawal was released to Iraqi officials by the U.S. military command in Baghdad. The letter, he said, was an unsigned planning draft discussing new deployments and ‘should not have been released.’

“A policy afterthought for the past three years, while it served as a hub for military efforts against the Islamic State and a place from which to keep a close eye on Iran, Iraq has suddenly become a problem for the United States. After bringing the Islamic

State to heel and claiming to be well on his way to stopping the 'endless wars' in the Middle East, Trump finds himself in the middle of an entirely new crisis on the same battlefield that bedeviled his two immediate predecessors. There is widespread agreement among U.S. lawmakers and close allies that [Soleimani] was responsible for years of terrorist activities ... But many worry that the administration has no strategy to deal with the likely escalation of U.S.-Iranian conflict that will follow. That concern is most acute in Iraq, where the two powers have long vied for influence. 'This administration doesn't have a policy on Iraq,' said a former senior Iraqi official ... Iraq, he said, has been a subsidiary of policies toward Israel and Iran, seen as 'baggage from the last administration.' ...

“Already, the United States has suspended counter-Islamic State operations in Iraq and Syria while the 5,000 U.S. troops in Iraq turn their attention to force protection in expectation of an Iranian response. NATO and U.S. training of Iraqi troops has also been suspended, and the U.S. government has told American civilians in Iraq to leave the country. Current and former officials said a prolonged pause in counterterrorism operations, let alone a U.S. departure, would hurt American security interests in the region. ... U.S. officials said it would be difficult if not impossible to continue the mission targeting the Islamic State in Syria, where there are 1,000 U.S. troops, without a presence in Iraq.”

-- Senior administration officials have begun drafting sanctions against Iraq after Trump publicly threatened the country with economic penalties if it proceeded to expel U.S. troops, according to three people briefed on the planning. Jeff Stein and

Josh Dawsey scoop: “The Treasury Department and White House will probably take a lead role if the sanctions are implemented ... Such a step would represent a highly unusual move against a foreign ally that the United States has spent almost two decades and hundreds of billions of dollars supporting. ... One of the officials said the plan was to wait “at least a little while” on the sanctions decision to see whether Iraqi officials followed through on their threat to push U.S. troops out of the country.”

Sen. Tim Kaine: 'We're at the brink of war'

-- "Trump, who rarely makes major moves without first calculating the ramifications for his popularity and self-image, has confided to advisers that he sees a political upside in his hard-line approach to Iran at the dawn of this year's campaign, according to two White House officials and several senior Republicans," Bob Costa and Phil Rucker report. "Trump believes he has an opportunity to expand his support among voters as a wartime commander in chief and is trying to cast his Democratic critics as soft on terrorism, they said. They added that he sees his party as more united behind him than ever, even as his impeachment trial looms in the Senate, with some Republicans now arguing that it would be irresponsible and dangerous to remove a president amid a national security crisis.

“Trump struck a harshly partisan tone Monday that foreshadowed the political battles to come. Calling into Rush Limbaugh’s nationally syndicated radio show, the president maligned Democrats for ‘trying to make’ [Soleimani] ‘sound like he was this wonderful human being’ and argued that ‘elements of that party [are] openly supporting Iran, an enemy of the United States.’ ... At his Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida over the past week, Trump privately told advisers he was surprised at how many Democrats criticized him for taking action — and he has spoken encouragingly about how his decision is being received by many Americans on social media and in news coverage, according to two White House officials ... As last week’s strike was unfolding, Trump casually discussed whether ‘Bernie or Biden’ would be easier to beat, according to conservative talk-show host Howie Carr, who published an essay about his time Thursday night at Mar-a-Lago.”

-- Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, a central figure in the Iran and impeachment stories, told Mitch McConnell that he will not run for the open Senate seat in Kansas this year. Josh Dawsey and John Hudson report: “McConnell had recruited Pompeo to run for Senate to guarantee the seat would stay in the hands of the Republican Party after the retirement of Sen. Pat Roberts. Pompeo had regularly visited Kansas and was consulting with Ward Baker, a prominent GOP strategist close to McConnell. He had fueled speculation of a bid in recent weeks by creating personal social media accounts that regularly featured him with his family dog, cheering on sporting events and even drinking beer in his kitchen. ... Aides said [Trump] wanted Pompeo to stay on as secretary of state, particularly after the strike..."

-- Attempts on Capitol Hill to limit Trump from acting militarily against Iran are shaping up to be largely partisan votes. "House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) plans to have the House vote this week to invoke its war powers and order Trump to remove U.S. troops from hostilities against Iran, while Democrats in the Senate are preparing to force a vote as early as next week on a measure from Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) that would do the same," Karoun Demirjian reports.

"Democrats seem unlikely to win the support of several key Republican figures who have backed previous efforts to check Trump's power as commander in chief but now vocally defend his decision to kill Soleimani. 'I would be very shocked if any Republican votes for this resolution,' said Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), a close Trump ally who nonetheless voted last year to curtail U.S. military operations in Yemen and block the president from waging war against Iran without Congress's express authorization. ... Sen. Mike Lee (Utah), another Republican who voted last year to require congressional authorization for Iran hostilities — and who led Senate efforts with Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) to invoke the War Powers Resolution to end U.S. military support for the Saudi-led campaign in Yemen — similarly took issue with the assertion in Kaine’s measure that the Soleimani strike constitutes ‘either hostilities or a situation where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances into which United States Armed Forces have been introduced.’”

Iran's supreme leader weeps during prayers for Soleimani

-- “How a ‘quantum change’ in missiles has made Iran a far more dangerous foe,” by Joby Warrick: “When a swarm of drones and cruise missiles attacked Saudi Arabia’s biggest oil facility on Sept. 14, an outraged Trump administration quickly blamed Iran for what it called an ‘unprecedented attack’ on global energy supplies. But the real surprise was the strike’s accuracy: Of 19 weapons used, all but two scored direct hits. When the smoke cleared, Saudi officials counted 14 holes where incoming projectiles had sliced through petroleum storage tanks. Three other critical parts of the oil-processing facility had been hit and disabled, shutting down the facility and temporarily cutting Saudi oil production in half. In subsequent reports, U.S. analysts would describe the attack as a kind of wake-up call: evidence of a vastly improved arsenal of high-precision missiles that Iran has quietly developed and shared with allies over the past decade.

“In the event of a wider war with the United States, Iran would probably deploy such weapons to inflict substantial damage on any number of targets, from U.S. military bases to oil facilities to sites in Israel, analysts say. ... U.S. and Middle Eastern officials say the upgraded missiles — some with ranges of more than 1,200 miles — are but one of several potential avenues for carrying out Iran’s promise to exact revenge ... Less impactful globally, but psychologically disruptive, would be a series of assassinations or kidnappings, conducted in such a way as to shield Iran from blame.”

-- Trump’s order to take out a top Iranian general may do what his withdrawal from the nuclear agreement did not: Kill the deal.

Anne Gearan explains: “Iran announced Sunday that it would no longer be bound by some of the deal’s most important safeguards. Iran’s announcement alone does not render the agreement moot, and at least one important element of it — U.N. inspection power — remains in force. But Iran has less incentive now to abide by the agreement, and Trump appears to have less leverage to hash out the better deal with Tehran that he says President Barack Obama failed to get. That leaves Trump in the position of owning how to deal with any attempt by Iran to build a nuclear weapon, with no clear answers about how he would do so after scrapping and deriding what world leaders believed was their best chance to keep the theocratic regime’s nuclear ambitions at bay. ...

“With its announcement, Iran could now return to stockpiling enriched uranium, the raw material for a bomb. Depending on the pace of that effort, Iran could amass nearly enough material for a bomb within a matter of several months. Pushing back the tipping point when Iran could ‘break out’ and make a quick drive for a viable weapon was the central goal of the 2015 deal. If Iran reconstitutes its abilities to roughly the status quo in place before negotiations, there is little left to save, analysts said.”

Russian President Vladimir Putin meets on Tuesday with Syrian President Bashar Assad in Damascus. (Syrian Presidency via AP)

-- “Russia stands to benefit as Middle East tensions spike after Soleimani killing,” Robyn Dixon reports from Moscow: “If the United States withdraws from Iraq as backlash over the killing widens, Russia could strengthen its foothold in the country — much as it did in Syria

after Trump ordered a troop pullout there last fall, a step that was later partly reversed. ... German Chancellor Angela Merkel will meet Putin in Moscow Saturday at his invitation, to discuss the crisis. ... A hasty U.S. departure would give Iran what it has sought for years, analysts said. But they noted that it could also create a void for Russia to exploit, although it is more likely to do so through diplomatic overtures, trade deals and arms sales than by taking up any military slack. ...

“In Syria, President Bashar al-Assad asked Putin to intervene as the Islamic State and anti-government rebels threatened his power. ... The man who argued Assad’s case to Russian defense and security officials — and convinced them the war was still winnable — was Soleimani, who traveled to Moscow in July 2015, unfurled a map of Syria on the table and explained what could be done to prevent Assad’s regime from falling ... The following April ... Soleimani met with Putin and Defense Minister Sergei Shoigu in Moscow to discuss deliveries of Russian missiles to Syria. According to media reports from 2015 to 2017, he traveled numerous times to Moscow in breach of a U.N. travel ban. ... Soleimani’s mission paid off for Russia, saving its strategic naval base in Tartus on Syria’s Mediterranean coast. Russia also expanded its military foothold on Europe’s doorstep, gaining use of the nearby Hmeimim air base and establishing what some in NATO see as an air defense zone in the region.”

-- “Why North Korea’s state media has barely mentioned U.S. killing of Iran’s Soleimani,” by Simon Denyer in Tokyo: “Between coverage of Supreme Leader Kim Jong Un’s major policy speech last week, and his visit to a fertilizer factory this week, a small report by the Korean Central News Agency on Monday noted that China and Russia condemned a U.S. strike in Baghdad. The last paragraph noted that the raid had led to the deaths of Iran's Quds Force commander and an Iraqi militia figure, without naming them or offering any real sense of Soleimani's importance. ... Experts say Pyongyang's caution stems from its fear of U.S. military action and its reluctance to acknowledge that important leaders might be eliminated — lest anyone at home start getting ideas. Its state media has a record of withholding information about the fates of former dictators targeted by the United States who ended up being killed, including Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein and Libya's Moammar Gaddafi.

"The idea that North Korea would trust a U.S. administration that had walked away from the nuclear deal with Iran, much less a nation with a history of fomenting regime change abroad, was always fanciful, experts say, but Kim made it clear that the experience of dealing with the United States over the past two years had only reinforced his convictions. ... Trump's decision to kill Soleimani may convince him to push ahead even faster in developing his country's nuclear arsenal, but it also demonstrates that the U.S. president is not all bluster when he talks of 'fire and fury.'"

-- The Soleimani fallout gives Israel's Benjamin Netanyahu a chance to shift focus from his legal woes – but not for too long. Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report from Jerusalem: "Three days after the U.S. drone strike, Netanyahu's efforts to shield himself from prosecution had returned to Israel's front pages. ... For Netanyahu, a hawk, any shift of focus from his legal woes to regional security is considered an advantage. The election campaign has been overshadowed by the corruption allegations against Netanyahu, who was indicted in November on charges of bribery, fraud and breach of trust. He has refused to resign or drop out of the race, and last week he formally requested parliamentary immunity from prosecution.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

McConnell reiterates call for mid-trial witnesses following Bolton statement

▶ 2:43

McConnell reiterates call for mid-trial witnesses following Bolton statement

IMPEACHMENT LATEST:

-- John Bolton scrambled the Senate GOP impeachment strategy by declaring his willingness to testify and upping the pressure on McConnell and his party to summon the former national security adviser as a witness in Trump's trial. Rachael Bade, Mike DeBonis, Tom Hamburger and Robert Costa report: "Bolton last fall rebuffed House impeachment investigators' entreaties to testify about his concerns about Trump's demands that Ukraine investigate his political rivals as the administration delayed military aid. Bolton's surprise announcement complicated the political calculus for McConnell's no-witness strategy and appeared to increase the likelihood of additional testimony that could embarrass the president. ... At least one Senate Republican, Mitt Romney (Utah), agreed Monday that it was imperative that Bolton testify, while Democrats insisted that Republicans' refusal to allow him to tell his story would be tantamount to a 'coverup.' Bolton has firsthand knowledge of internal White House deliberations, and according to testimony in the House probe, he reacted angrily to Trump's pressure on Ukraine to investigate former vice president Joe Biden ...

"Two moderate Senate Republicans — Susan Collins (Maine) and Lisa Murkowski (Alaska) — have said they're open to hearing from witnesses. ... Still, the same centrist Republican senators signaled that they were willing to start the trial without a deal for Bolton's testimony, keeping McConnell in firm control for now as he works to delay any decision on additional witnesses until after House Democrats present their case and the president's defense team rebuts it. ... The major question for McConnell is whether he can hold the line ... A subpoena requires a simple majority of 51 votes, and Democrats would need just four Republicans to break ranks. ... In recent months, Bolton has confided to friends that he was deeply troubled by his time at the White House and the president's behavior, but he has declined to offer many details ...

“Still, other Bolton associates have privately said that he wants a future in Republican politics and does not want to be seen as a turncoat on Trump or someone who is trying to ingratiate himself with the president's critics. They noted, for instance, that his statement Monday came from his political action committee's office as an example of how he's trying to build out his operation even as he deals with legal issues. Additionally, people close to him note that Bolton also has an expansive view of presidential power. As a result, it is unclear whether he would testify that he believes Trump overstepped his constitutional authority in his dealings with Ukraine. ... Senate Republicans appeared divided on the possibility of hearing from Bolton. Sen. John Cornyn (Tex.), who is close to McConnell, told Guy Benson, political editor for conservative Townhall.com, that Bolton's testimony could be 'helpful to the president' and that he'd like to know more about what he'd say. Other Republicans, including Sen. Marco Rubio (Fla.), suggested that the Senate should consider only the evidence gathered in the House, thereby precluding Bolton.”

-- Commentary from the opinion page:

- Ruth Marcus: “Will he or won't he? John Bolton is playing a very cagey game.”

- Jennifer Rubin: “Pelosi’s strategy pays off: Now bring in Bolton.”
- Dana Milbank: “Trump wags the hippopotamus.”

Los Angeles prosecutors charge Harvey Weinstein with two counts of sexual assault

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Disgraced Hollywood mogul Harvey Weinstein was charged with multiple sex crimes in Los Angeles on the same day his trial began in New York. Shayna Jacobs reports: “Weinstein — who is 67 but has visibly aged since his May 2018 arrest in New York — was in court with his five attorneys for a final conference before jury selection begins in his trial on rape and sexual assault allegations involving three women. He faces the possibility of life in prison in the New York case and has pleaded not guilty. The charges filed in Los Angeles should not affect plans to proceed with jury pre-screening in New York Supreme Court in Manhattan, scheduled for Tuesday morning, and a spokesperson for the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office said that Weinstein is not expected to appear in court there until his trial in New York concludes. ... Weinstein remains under investigation by authorities in Dublin and London. ... The charges in Los Angeles involve alleged encounters with two women, a day or two apart, in February 2013, authorities said. In all, eight people have come forward there to report crimes involving Weinstein, officials said. In three cases, the statute of limitations had expired, so charges were not filed. The other three remain under investigation. ... Prosecutors in Los Angeles are recommending a $5 million bail in a case for which Weinstein faces up to 28 years in prison."

-- Weinstein's publicists are sending reporters a 57-page PowerPoint presentation titled "The Proper Narrative for Addressing the Harvey Weinstein Case." From The Cut: "The document presents oppo research about Weinstein's accusers, including text messages and photographs, with the goal of vindicating him in the press. ... The document frequently shifts in tone, voice, font size, and color, and seems to include some draft notes ('[ask HW: did they actually meet? Seems possible]') and strike-throughs. It argues that some women's allegations of sexual abuse were the result of 'strong and repeated suggestions from others,' including press reports and activists. 'Given the pressures that many women today feel from the various laudatory movements against workplace imbalances, the notion that consensual relations are being reinterpreted cannot be overlooked,' it says on page 10. The document claims there is 'no objective support' for any of the women's claims because there were no witnesses and ‘no physical injuries — even scratches’; current rape law requires nothing of the sort and hasn’t for at least a half century.”

-- The Environmental Protection Agency announced that it will pursue a new industry-supported rule to cut pollution from heavy-duty trucks. Brady Dennis reports: “Heavy-duty vehicles are the largest mobile source of nitrogen oxide, a pollutant linked to heart and lung disease. They also tend to remain in service far longer than other vehicles. Still, some environmental advocates said they feared that the EPA’s proposal could preempt even more stringent rules being considered in California. At an announcement in rural Virginia, EPA Administrator Andrew Wheeler said the agency would soon move forward with its ‘Cleaner Trucks Initiative,’ aimed at further curbing highway emissions of nitrogen oxide and other pollutants from heavy-duty engines. ... Monday’s announcement received instant praise from the trucking industry, members of which stood alongside Wheeler at his announcement.”

-- The Internal Revenue Service’s personal income tax audits dropped to their lowest level in decades. From the WSJ: “The IRS audited 0.45% of personal income-tax returns in fiscal 2019, down from 0.59% in 2018 and marking the eighth straight year of decline, according to a report released on Monday. In 2010, the IRS audited 1.1% of tax returns. The report doesn’t break down audits by income category or provide details about how much revenue they generate. The steady erosion of tax enforcement has been driven by years of cuts in the agency’s budget along with a heavier workload. The result, according to tax experts, is that the Treasury is letting billions of dollars annually go uncollected, even as budget deficits rise.”

-- A bipartisan group of campaign finance lawyers urged the Trump administration and the Senate to restore a quorum at the Federal Election Commission. Michelle Ye Hee Lee reports: “The agency tasked with regulating federal campaign finance laws has long faced ideological divisions and polarization. But it lost its ability to do its official job after the August 2019 resignation of a commissioner left it to operate for the first time in 11 years without its necessary four-person quorum. While routine administrative work continues, the agency cannot enforce the law, vote on investigations, provide guidance or conduct audits — activities that are especially crucial and timely for a presidential election, which is projected to be the most expensive one to date. In a joint letter Monday, 31 attorneys across the political spectrum and whose clients are regulated by federal campaign finance law asked [Trump] and congressional leaders for ‘swift attention to this situation, which has languished for far too long.’”

-- Rep. Duncan Hunter (R-Calif.) will likely still receive his taxpayer-funded congressional pension despite pleading guilty to felony conspiracy for misusing campaign funds to finance multiple extramarital affairs, including with a female lobbyist, as well as other personal expenses. From the San Diego Union-Tribune: “The amount of money in Hunter’s congressional pension is not publicly known, and the Congressional Research Service and the Office of Personnel Management both declined to provide The San Diego Union-Tribune with information regarding the the congressman’s benefits. Hunter remains in Congress, although he said he would step down ‘shortly after the holidays.’ He is to be sentenced March 17. Based on formulas outlined in a paper released by the research service earlier this year, it is estimated that Hunter, 43, would receive an annual payment of at least $32,538 due to his congressional pension, which he can begin accessing when he turns 62.”

Punta Ventana, a popular tourist destination in Puerto Rico, was destroyed by a 5.8-magnitude earthquake on Monday. (Ricardo Arduengo/AFP/Getty Images)

-- A 6.5 magnitude earthquake hit Puerto Rico overnight after a 5.8 magnitude earthquake shook the island yesterday. From CNN: “Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority reported widespread outages across the island after its power plants activated an auto protective mechanism following the earthquake. Puerto Rico Gov. Wanda Vázquez Garced urged citizens to remain calm as the government responds to the most recent quake. ... No tsunami is expected following Tuesday's earthquakes, the US National Tsunami Warning Center said. ... All the earthquakes appear to have been foreshocks to Tuesday morning's largest quake, CNN meteorologist Pedram Javaheri said."

-- Yesterday's earthquake damaged more than a dozen homes and destroyed a natural wonder. Arelis R. Hernández reports: "An ancient Puerto Rico rock formation that adorned the background of countless vacation photos, Instagram posts and selfies tumbled into the ocean off the U.S. territory's southwestern coast."

-- American Airlines and Boeing reached a settlement for financial losses related to the worldwide grounding of the 737 Max jet. Lori Aratani reports: "While the terms are confidential, Doug Parker, American's CEO, said a portion — $30 million — will be shared with employees through the company's profit-sharing plan. American is the second U.S. carrier to reach a settlement with the company; Southwest Airlines announced it had reached a settlement with Boeing in December. ... American has removed the jet from its schedule through April 6. ... American has 24 737 Max jets in its fleet. The money is expected to be paid out to employees in March."

-- YouTube will roll out new protections for children viewing videos on the site in an effort to satisfy federal regulators who fined the company over alleged privacy violations. Greg Bensinger and Tony Romm report: "The changes, which include limitations on data collection and advertising, are a step toward addressing concerns from advocacy groups who have complained the Google-owned company has run afoul of the Children's Online Privacy Protection Act, or COPPA, which forbids tracking and targeting users

12 and under. As part of those changes, YouTube said it will seek to better distinguish which content is intended primarily for children, relying on a combination of self-identification from creators and software. That content cannot run with personalized advertisements, under the new rules that YouTube said it is instituting globally starting Monday. YouTube said it will assume any viewer of child-friendly content is underage, treating that data as subject to COPPA rules. It has been limiting other features too, such as comments on children's videos and live chats. But some privacy experts said the changes may not offer children enough protections from a company that has accrued reams of data on its users and is incentivized to compel viewers to stay on the site for as long as possible."

-- Facebook said it will ban deepfakes – computer-generated, highly manipulated videos – but the new policy may not cover a deceptively edited video altered to make Nancy Pelosi sound as if she's slurring her words. Tony Romm, Drew Harwell and Isaac Stanley-Becker report: "While these videos are still rare on the internet, they present a significant challenge for our industry and society as their use increases,' Monika Bickert, the company's vice president for global policy management, wrote in a blog post. The changes come as Bickert prepares to testify at a congressional hearing later this week on 'manipulation and deception in the digital age.' The inquiry marks the latest effort by House lawmakers to probe Facebook's digital defenses four years after Russian agents weaponized the site to stoke social unrest during the 2016 race. Going forward, Facebook intends to ban videos that are 'edited or synthesized' by technologies like artificial intelligence in a way that average users would not easily spot, the company said, including attempts to make the subject of a video say words that they never did.”

-- Russian trolls are targeting American veterans, and the Trump administration has ignored the issue, a group claims. Alex Horton reports: “American veterans and service members enjoy a high degree of social respect, and ongoing manipulation campaigns aimed at them could be weaponized to sow social discord in their communities, Vietnam Veterans of America warned officials at the Defense and Veterans Affairs departments in March 2018, among other agencies. But those agencies have brushed off VVA since they were presented with evidence that eventually became a detailed report and congressional testimony, said Kristopher Goldsmith, the veteran service organization’s chief investigator. And their plea to President Trump for help has similarly been ignored, Goldsmith said — suggesting the problem may be perceived as too complex or politically fraught for U.S. officials concerned to cross Trump, who has downplayed Russia’s role in election interference.”

-- Chelsea Clinton has made more than $9 million from sitting on a corporate board. From Barrons: “Clinton, who has been an [InterActiveCorp] director since 2011, receives an annual $50,000 retainer and $250,000 in restricted IAC stock units ... As of Dec. 31, she owned the equivalent of 35,242 IAC shares, consisting of 29,843 shares and 5,399 share units under a deferred-compensation plan, according to a form she filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Share units convert to stock when an IAC director leaves the board.”

-- Illinois shops ran out of marijuana just six days after the start of legalization. Katie Shepherd reports: “Standing in line for hours in frigid temperatures, tens of thousands have flocked to the nine dispensaries selling recreational cannabis in Chicago after Illinois’s newly legalized cannabis sales began on New Year’s Day. The numbers have been staggering: 55 dispensaries in the state sold more than $3 million in THC-imbued products on day one, matching Oregon’s record-setting opening for recreational sales in 2015. By Sunday, Illinois’s cannabis customers had bought nearly $11 million worth of recreational marijuana in the first five days, making more than 271,000 purchases. But the crush of eager buyers strained the state’s marijuana supply, leading many dispensaries in Chicago to turn away customers before the first week of sales even ended. Meanwhile, given the state’s restrictive licensing rules, some large cultivators are now rushing to expand their marijuana grows to keep up with recreational demand in a market previously designed to serve a much smaller number of medical cannabis patients.”

Friends and parents of 43 missing students from the Ayotzinapa Rural Teachers' College march in Mexico City in November, before the fifth anniversary of their disappearance. (Jose Mendez/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- More than 61,000 people have disappeared in Mexico amid the drug war, authorities said, sharply raising their estimate of those who have vanished in more than a decade of extreme violence by and among organized-crime groups. Mary Beth Sheridan reports:

“The government of President Andrés Manuel López Obrador released the new figure after an exhaustive analysis of data from state prosecutors. The previous official estimate, released in April 2018, put the number at 40,000. While hundreds of cases date to the 1960s, over 97 percent have been reported since 2006, when Mexico launched an all-out offensive targeting drug trafficking and criminal organizations. Karla Quintana, head of Mexico’s National Search Commission, which coordinates the effort to find the missing, said that at least 61,637 people had been reported disappeared and not been found. ‘These are data of horror, and behind them are stories and narratives of great pain for families,’ she said at a news conference. ... The Monday announcement highlights the toll of more than a decade of extraordinary violence in Mexico that shows no sign of abating. Last year, homicides through November topped 31,000, a record. In some regions, organized-crime groups openly battle police and soldiers. Quintana said 3,631 clandestine graves have been discovered since 2006.”

-- A 13-year-old American boy was killed in Mexico near the U.S. border while traveling with his family. From CNN: “Oscar Lopez

was shot in both legs and died in an attack Saturday night in Tamaulipas state, near the US border, said the teen's father, also named Oscar Lopez. The father said three other relatives were injured in the ambush attack: his wife, 41-year-old Juanita Lopez; their other son, 11-year-old Abio Lopez; and his brother-in-law, 48-year-old Raphael Castillo. The elder Oscar Lopez said the group was visiting relatives in the Monterrey area for the holidays, though he stayed back in the US. On Saturday night, family members in two vehicles -- both with Oklahoma license plates -- were driving on the Reynosa-Nuevo Laredo Mexican highway in Ciudad Mier, according to a statement from Tamaulipas state authorities. The family was confronted by unknown assailants. Tamaulipas officials said the family's van did not stop, so the assailants crashed into the van to force it to a halt.”

-- Mexican asylum seekers could now be deported to Guatemala as part of a deal that the Department of Homeland Security struck with the Central American nation. From the Times: “The agreement with Guatemala, which was signed in July, was described by Kevin K. McAleenan, the acting secretary of homeland security at the time, as a way to encourage families to apply for protections closer to home. The deal made migrants such as Hondurans and Salvadorans ineligible for asylum in the United States if they had traveled by land through Guatemala and did not first apply for asylum there, homeland security officials said at the time. But two homeland security officials said on Monday that asylum officers were told over the weekend that Mexican migrants were now ‘amenable’ to being sent to Guatemala under the agreement. In theory, an asylum seeker from Juárez, Mexico, could be deported from the El Paso, Texas, border crossing a mile from his home to the Guatemalan border nearly 2,000 miles away. A homeland security spokesman later confirmed that certain Mexicans could be sent to Guatemala under the agreement — a pivot from the original plan for the deal.”

-- Mexico rejected the proposal, saying it's working with American authorities to offer “better options.” (Reuters)

-- The Trump administration will seek the death penalty against an MS-13 gang member, who immigrated here from El Salvador, accused in the kidnappings and killings of two Virginia teenagers in 2016. Rachel Weiner reports: “Elmer Martinez, 27, is alleged to be the leader of the Fairfax County clique that authorities say killed a 17-year-old suspected of belonging to a rival gang and a 14-year-old who revealed that crime to the victim’s family. ... Defense attorney Robert Jenkins said he was informed by the Justice Department of its decision, a step he said he believed was taken to support the president’s stance on illegal immigration. ... Jenkins said Martinez ... did not have a violent criminal history and is not alleged to have inflicted blows in either slaying. In their filing, prosecutors said Martinez has a history of uncharged violent conduct, including assaults, stabbings and another attempt at kidnapping and homicide. While in jail awaiting trial, they say, he was twice found with a shank.”

-- The U.S. government has launched a pilot program to collect DNA from people detained at the border, which will then be turned over to the FBI. From the AP: “The information would go into a massive criminal database run by the FBI, where it would be held indefinitely. A memo outlining the program published Monday by the Department of Homeland Security said U.S. citizens and permanent residents holding a 'green card' who are detained could be subject to DNA testing, as well as asylum seekers and people entering the country without authorization. Refusing to submit DNA could lead to a misdemeanor criminal charge, the document said. ... The DHS memo acknowledged that the DNA its agents collect may not be immediately useful. Agents plan to take saliva swabs of detained people, then mail them to the FBI. By the time the results are processed, the memo said, the people in question may have already been released, deported or transferred to another federal agency.”

-- A senior employee at a for-profit immigrant detention center in Nevada was active on the neo-Nazi website Iron March and wanted to start a white nationalist chapter in his area. From Vice News:

“Travis Frey, 31, is currently employed as a captain at the Nevada Southern Detention Center, which is run by private prison behemoth CoreCivic and contracted with ICE. Frey joined Iron March in 2013, and posted at least a dozen times between 2016 and 2017 while he was working as head of security at a CoreCivic jail in Indianapolis, which was also authorized to house detainees on behalf of ICE. ... On Iron March, Frey used the screen name ‘In Hoc Signo Vincas,’ a Latin phrase that’s used by military outfits around the world, and by universities, and was the title of the American Nazi Party’s manifesto. Vice News was able to identify Frey, who served in the Marines between 2006 and 2008, through some of the personal information he provided on Iron March ... The Nevada Southern Detention Center, where Frey has worked since at least 2018, according to a now-deleted LinkedIn page, is located in Pahrump, 62 miles west of Las Vegas, and is contracted with ICE and U.S. Marshals ... In June 2017, Frey started putting out feelers about joining the ranks of the Traditionalist Workers Party (TWP), which was run by Heimbach before its demise and was a key player in the violent Unite the Right rally in Charlottesville in 2017.”

National Assembly President Juan Guaidó, Venezuela's opposition leader, is blocked by police from entering the Assembly. (Andrea Hernandez Briceño/AP)

-- Venezuelan opposition lawmakers led by Juan Guaidó vowed to retake the National Assembly after being barred from the chamber this weekend, setting up a showdown over President Nicolás Maduro’s attempt to seize control of the last democratic institution left in the nation. Rachelle Krygier and Anthony Faiola report: “The move appeared to be an attempt by Maduro to sideline Guaidó — the U.S.-backed opposition leader who has unsuccessfully sought to unseat Maduro for the past year — by preventing his reelection on Sunday as head of the assembly. That title has served as the basis of his claim to be the nation’s true interim leader, one that has been recognized by nearly 60 nations including the United States. 'The dictatorship will decide tomorrow if it will continue its farce, which no one recognizes,' Guaidó told reporters in Caracas. He suggested that if his entry was blocked, he would attempt to lead a session of the loyalist lawmakers elsewhere in the capital. 'We will take this risk because Venezuela deserves it,' he said. 'The dictatorship is now unmasked.'"

-- During a 10-minute call, Vice President Mike Pence told Guaidó that he is the "only legitimate president" of Venezuela. From the WSJ: "Mr. Pence has played a central role in the administration's campaign to elevate Mr. Guaidó. Early last year, on the night before Mr. Guaidó declared himself the country's interim president, Mr. Pence called the Venezuelan opposition leader and pledged that the U.S. would support him, setting in motion a monthslong campaign to wrest power from Mr. Maduro."

-- After nearly a year without a government, Spain ended its deadlock Tuesday with a parliamentary vote that approved a left-wing coalition led by current caretaker Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez. Pamela Rolfe and Chico Harlan report: "The vote, passing by the narrowest of margins, opens the way for a government composed of the country's traditional left-wing party, the Socialists, and its erstwhile foe, far-left Unidas Podemos. It vaults the left fully back into power in Spain at a time when other mainstream pro-European parties across the continent have struggled to combat populism or overcome disenchantment with the political status quo. But while the parliamentary vote restores a measure of clarity to Europe's fifth-largest economy, the new government will probably be fragile. It will control a minority of seats in parliament and depend on support from a constellation of smaller parties while dealing with budget issues and the Catalonia region's divisive bid for independence."

-- Australia's catastrophic fires threaten to upend the way people live. From the WSJ: "The death toll is lower than the 173 killed in the Black Saturday fires in Victoria state in 2009, but in other respects these blazes—which could persist until March—are being viewed by experts as unprecedented. The scorched area is vast, with more than 23,000 square miles burned nationwide since early November. Almost every state has been affected—thousands of people have been forced to flee their homes, and tourists visiting summer holiday spots have been trapped by advancing fires. Australia's insurance council says more than $260 million of claims have been lodged since Nov. 8, when it declared a catastrophe, but that represents a trickle of what is to come. An additional $39 million in claims were lodged before Nov. 8 for fires in September and October. ... It is still too dangerous for property owners to return to some areas, and many communities in the two worst affected regions—southern New South Wales state and eastern Victoria—have no power or telecommunications. ... The environmental toll has also been severe. A researcher from the University of Sydney has estimated that as many as 480 million animals have been killed by wildfires in New South Wales alone since September. Footage of distressed koalas—the iconic Australian bearlike marsupial—approaching people and drinking water has been widely viewed."

-- The world's oldest person broke her own record by turning

117. Lateshia Beachum reports: “Kane Tanaka is proving a person is never too old to achieve life goals. Tanaka celebrated her 117th birthday Thursday — stretching out her record as the world’s oldest woman. She has been holding on to her title as the oldest living person for nearly two years. The supercentenarian was gussied up in a gold kimono with red trimmings as she was ushered into her birthday celebration at a nursing home in Fukuoka, Japan. ... She clapped her way into her big day and stopped to kiss the hands of well wishers before singing a birthday song. ... The seventh of eight children cried tears of joy when she was handed two plaques last year for being the world’s oldest living person and the world’s oldest living woman.”

-- Japan issued an arrest warrant for Carlos Ghosn’s wife on suspicion of perjury, even as Nissan said it would continue to take legal action to hold its former boss accountable for “serious misconduct.” (Simon Denyer)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

A Republican congressman, Rep. Paul Gosar of Arizona, tweeted a fake image of Barack Obama with Iran's president. The two men never even met:

Paul Gosar  @DrPaulGosar

The world is a better place without these guys in power.

 15.2K  8:24 PM - Jan 6, 2020

 6,763 people are talking about this

Donald Trump Jr. has a new weapon that includes questionable icons:

Akil N Awan ✓

@Akil_N_Awan

Don Jr posted photos of himself brandishing a modified assault rifle with CRUSADER etched on it, lower receiver modelled after a medieval Crusader helmet & mag printed with Hillary's face.

Crusader imagery on weapons & propaganda has been used by Far-Right terrorists since Breivik

♥ 6,059 12:06 PM - Jan 6, 2020

💬 4,317 people are talking about this

History repeats itself. Fox News putting Judy Miller on the air caused flashbacks for many to her problematic reporting that gave cover for George W. Bush to invade Iraq in the first place:

Justin Baragona ✓

@justinbaragona

We're really doing this, huh?

3,360 3:11 PM - Jan 6, 2020

882 people are talking about this

Another flashback:

Peter Baker ✓

@peterbakernyt

Two decades ago, the House impeached the president even as he was bombing Iraq. His opponents accused him of wagging the dog to distract attention. His supporters accused the other party of undermining a commander in chief at a time of national security crisis. Sound familiar?

1,590 1:36 PM - Jan 6, 2020

514 people are talking about this

A former secretary of defense offered a chilling warning amid the letter mishap:

The social media conversation was dominated by questions and jokes like these:

From a former Pentagon and CIA spokesman:

DHS issued a guide on how to prepare for a potential cyberattack from Iran:

With increased tension with Iran and its proxies, facility and network defenders should consider and assess the possible impacts and threats to their organization. Today's new CISA Insights has information and precautionary measures for your organization. cisa.gov/insights

CISA INSIGHTS
Increased Geopolitical Tensions and Threats

The Threat and How to Think About It

Increased geopolitical tensions and tensions of aggression may result in cyber and physical attacks against the United States and its interests. These attacks may be directed against U.S. interests and interests abroad. Increasing tensions and aggression among nations may be a sign of increased risk of aggression against the United States. This report provides information on how to think about the threat and how to think about it.

Reduce Threat Profile and Activity

Reduce threat profile and activity by assessing for weaknesses, gaps, and vulnerabilities. This report provides information on how to think about the threat and how to think about it.

Things to do Today

- Review your organization for risk reduction by adopting a state of heightened awareness. This report...

207 12:57 AM - Jan 7, 2020

228 people are talking about this

Quotes like these, via a Times reporter, don't exactly give cause for comfort. YOLO is an acronym for "you only live once":

The White House has set a new record for days without a press briefing:

CNBC mistook Tulsi Gabbard and Andrew Yang for other people, and the other Yang took note:

Geoff Yang
@geoff_yang

Ummm. This is @geoff_yang and I am NOT running for President. twitter.com/dailycaller/st...

Daily Caller  @DailyCaller
Uhhh.....What's going on here? @CNBC

48.7K 5:55 PM - Jan 6, 2020

9,350 people are talking about this

The acting deputy secretary of Homeland Security just read a headline:

Acting Deputy Secretary Ken Cuccinelli ✓
@HomelandKen

The headline is true. I didn't read the rest of it...buzzfeednews.com/article/hameda...

The Trump Administration Will Begin Deporting Asy...

It's an expansion of a controversial plan to stop the flow of refugees and immigrants to the US southern border.

buzzfeednews.com

♥ 564 11:48 PM - Jan 6, 2020

💬 443 people are talking about this

And a New York House Democrat got a pup:

Elaine Godfrey ✓
@elainejgodfrey

WELL @AOC got a dog, and he's good

♥ 144 1:22 AM - Jan 7, 2020 · Washington, DC

💬 31 people are talking about this

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “In any other country, Joe Biden and I would not be in the same party, but in America, we are,” Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) told New York Magazine.

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

The president made 179 factual claims at his longest rally to date. Our Fact Checker team found that 67 percent were false or unsupported by evidence:

Anatomy of a Trump rally: 67 percent of claims are false or lacking evidence

Stephen Colbert was a bit on edge during his first monologue of the year:

Seth Meyers joked that it didn't take that long for 2020 to become the worst year:

Trevor Noah noted that Trump backed out of his new year's resolution very quickly:

"The Daily Show" joked that Trump may be clairvoyant:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Esper's split with Trump over targeting Iranian cultural sites is a nod to 'the laws of armed conflict'
Date: Tuesday, January 7, 2020 9:32:43 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Esper's split with Trump over targeting Iranian cultural sites is a nod to 'the laws of armed conflict'

Defense Secretary Mark Esper, right, confers with Gen. Mark Milley, left, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs, during a signing ceremony with President Trump on Dec. 20 at Joint Base Andrews. Leah Esper, the secretary's wife, is between them. (Erik S Lesser/EPA-EFE/Rex)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Secretary of War Henry Stimson and President Harry Truman agreed in 1945 that the United States should not drop an atomic bomb on Kyoto. Stimson had seen the historical and cultural significance of Japan's ancient imperial capital when he visited during his honeymoon in 1893, so he overruled a committee that sought to target the city and explained his rationale directly to the president.

Stimson wrote in his diary after the conversation that Truman "was particularly emphatic in agreeing with my suggestion” that “the bitterness which would be caused by such a wanton act might make it impossible during the long post-war period to reconcile the Japanese to us in that area rather than to the Russians.”

Truman reflected on that same meeting in his own diary. “Even if the [Japanese] are savages, ruthless, merciless and fanatic,” he wrote, “we as the leader of the world for the common welfare cannot drop that terrible bomb on the old capital or the new.”

Fast forward 75 years: Secretary of Defense Mark Esper, who holds the job Stimson once did, put himself at odds with President Trump on Monday night by definitively telling reporters that the U.S. military will not target cultural sites inside Iran on his watch, even if hostilities continue to escalate in the wake of the U.S. drone strike that killed Maj. Gen. Qasem Soleimani at the Baghdad airport last week. “We will follow the laws of armed conflict,” Esper told reporters at the Pentagon. Asked if that means the U.S. military will not target cultural sites, he answered: “That’s the laws of armed conflict.”

Trump tweeted on Saturday that the United States has targeted 52 sites for possible retaliation, including “some at a very high level & important to Iran & the Iranian culture.” Speaking to reporters aboard Air Force One on Sunday night, the president doubled down in asserting his willingness to attack cultural sites: “They’re allowed to kill our people. They’re allowed to torture and maim our people. They’re allowed to use roadside bombs and blow up our people. And we’re not allowed to touch their cultural sites? It doesn’t work that way!”

Trump stands by threat on Iran's cultural sites

In fact, international law does work that way. The 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, which the United States helped facilitate in the aftermath of World War II, requires that warring parties “take all possible steps to protect cultural property,” which includes “monuments of architecture, art or history, whether religious or secular.”

A 1977 amendment to the Geneva Conventions went further. It bans “any acts of hostility directed against the historic monuments, works of art or places of worship which constitute the cultural or spiritual heritage of peoples,” and it requires that signatories neither “use such objects in support of the military effort” nor “make such objects the object of reprisals.”

To be sure, Stimson did not have a perfect record: He supported Japanese internment and the restrictive immigration quotas that limited how many Jewish refugees the United States accepted from Europe. More than 100,000 civilians also died from the atomic bombs that were dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

But even during America's last war for national survival – after the sneak attack at Pearl Harbor and relentless kamikaze suicide missions against U.S. vessels – the secretary of war understood something fundamental about the power and possibility of moral leadership in what we now remember as the American Century.

Stimson recognized not just the aesthetic and historical value of protecting irreplaceable cultural sites but the derivative national security advantages that would flow, in what became the Cold War, from Americans holding themselves to a higher standard than their enemies.

Trump has repeatedly repudiated the very concept of American Exceptionalism and espoused a variety of moral false equivalency that is deeply at odds with the republic's long bipartisan tradition. The bellicose threat to target cultural sites is just the latest example of Trump squandering the moral high ground that generations of his predecessors worked to claim, even if they fell short at key moments. In November, Trump overruled military leaders and cleared three members of the military who were either credibly accused or convicted of war crimes. He's claimed that "torture" works. He suggested during the 2016 campaign that he supported killing noncombatant family members of terrorists.

How Trump's administration defended his threat to strike Iranian cultural sites

Brett McGurk, the former U.S. envoy to the international coalition fighting the Islamic State from 2015 to 2018, characterized Trump's latest threats as "unAmerican."

"American military forces adhere to international law," he tweeted.

"They don't attack cultural sites. And they're not mercenaries.

Reckless and unprecedented words from a Commander-in-Chief."

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), a former military lawyer in the Air Force Reserve, said he urged Trump to stop threatening cultural sites during a Monday phone call. “We’re not at war with the culture of the Iranian people,” Graham told the New York Times. “We’re in a conflict with the theology, the ayatollah and his way of doing business. I think the president saying ‘we will hit you hard’ is the right message. Cultural sites is not hitting them hard; it’s creating more problems.”

“Targeting civilians and cultural sites is what terrorists do,” added Sen. Chris Murphy (D-Conn.), a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. “It’s a war crime.”

U.K. Prime Minister Boris Johnson also publicly broke with Trump on Monday, with his spokesman declaring that he will not abide Trump’s threat to target Iranian cultural sites. “Johnson is trying to perform a balancing act,” William Booth and Karla Adam report from London. “He is under pressure to support Trump and the United States, Britain’s closest ally. He very much wants a free-trade deal with Washington, to show his country that his Brexit crusade was worth the price. But Johnson is also a student of history — and remembers well how British Prime Minister Tony Blair was seen as the gullible, junior partner to President George W. Bush and his headlong rush to war in Iraq.”

• UNESCO cultural heritage site

-- Iran is home to 22 cultural UNESCO World Heritage Sites, including the ancient ruins of Persepolis. (The UNESCO web site has the full list, with pictures and descriptions of each site.)

-- Trump's saber-rattling is particularly noteworthy because America has historically led the international community in codifying restrictions on the targeting of cultural heritage. "In March 2017 — only weeks after Trump's inauguration — the U.N. Security Council, with the United States as a permanent member, unanimously adopted a resolution condemning the 'unlawful destruction of cultural heritage, inter alia destruction of religious sites and artefacts' in armed conflicts," Rick Noack reports. He looks back on the disturbing recent history that prodded the UN to act:

"Starting in 1991, Yugoslav People's Army forces besieged the historic city of Dubrovnik in Croatia, leading to the destruction of parts of its center. In the city of Sarajevo, in Bosnia, the Vijećnica city hall was set on fire in 1992, destroying its sizable library. In the aftermath, former prosecutors and researchers with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia assessed more broadly that during conflicts, ‘it is increasingly evident that cultural property is not simply at risk from incidental harm, but is being intentionally attacked as part of cultural cleansing campaigns.’ ...

“In 2016, North African militant Ahmad al-Faqi al-Mahdi was convicted by the International Criminal Court of ‘intentionally directing attacks against historic monuments and/or buildings dedicated to religion’ in the ICC’s first such trial, focusing on the destruction or damaging of cultural property. Mahdi was sentenced to nine years in prison for his role in attacking nine mausoleums and one mosque in Timbuktu, Mali, in 2012.”

Taliban destroys Bamiyan Buddha statues in 2001

-- The Post's art and architecture critic Philip Kennicott laments: "If we are to be a barbarian nation, what are our new limits? Do we have any?"

"In March 2001, the Taliban regime in Afghanistan began to dynamite the 6th-century statues of Buddha in Bamian," Kennicott writes. "The decision was both impetuous and brutal, in part an exercise in fundamentalist iconoclasm, in part an act of defiance and rage against the world at large. It was a galvanizing moment in the recent history of cultural heritage ... Fourteen years later, the Islamic State's destruction at Palmyra did much the same work of branding, defining the cruel so-called caliphate as an organization beyond all bounds. Our leadership has been imperfect and sometimes hypocritical. But when a lack of U.S. leadership led to the looting of Baghdad's antiquities museum during the 2003 Gulf War, the U.S. response wasn't to claim a basic right to destroy culture. We argued the 'fog of war.' It was defensive, muddled and wrong, but not amoral. ...

"In 2018, as part of the military budget, Congress created the position

of coordinator for cultural heritage protection. A statement Sunday decrying Trump's words, signed by cultural heritage experts in anthropology, archaeology and the museum world, details recent progress during the Trump administration, including the Smithsonian Institution's plans to assist the Army in training a new corps of 'monuments men,' experts who can help the military avoid cultural destruction. ... The new line, the one we crossed this weekend, isn't between one set of cultural values vs. another; it isn't between people who speak our language and those who speak all others. It is between culture and the void, between the many and variegated ways in which different people try to live together peacefully and productively, and the pure nihilism of autocracy. The threat wasn't to Iranian cultural sites. It was to culture."

-- "The Department of Defense's Law of War manual mentions cultural property 625 times, repeatedly citing the Hague Convention," NPR notes. "Accordingly, the U.S. military educates its soldiers about their responsibilities not to target or destroy cultural property, and to help in its preservation, says Nancy Wilkie, president of the U.S. Committee of the Blue Shield. The organization is dedicated to the prevention of destruction and theft of cultural heritage. The Pentagon has even distributed playing cards with photos of cultural sites in Afghanistan and elsewhere to remind troops to safeguard heritage sites and artifacts. ... As World War II was underway in 1943, then-Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower issued an order to his commanders demanding the protection of historical monuments."

Hannah Bloch ✓
@HannahBloch

Sparing cultural sites in war is so important that the Pentagon even went to the trouble of designing/distributing decks of cards to boost awareness among troops serving in Iraq and Afghanistan. The president's comments prompted me to find the deck I was given some years back:

♥ 2,048 1:30 AM - Jan 6, 2020

💬 1,074 people are talking about this

-- Trump's threat has become a propaganda coup for the regime in Tehran. For example, Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif sub-tweeted Trump on Sunday:

-- The Trump administration has barred Zarif from entering the United States this week to address the United Nations Security Council about the Soleimani strike, Foreign Policy reports, “violating the terms of a 1947 headquarters agreement requiring Washington to permit foreign officials into the country to conduct U.N. business.”

“The Iranian government was awaiting word on the visa Monday when a Trump administration official phoned U.N. Secretary-General António Guterres to inform him that the United States would not allow Zarif into the country,” Colum Lynch and Robbie Gramer report. “But even before the current crisis, [Pompeo] in recent months had sought to restrict the ability of Zarif—a skilled debater who has studied in the United States and has extensive contacts with American journalists—to make his case to the American public during previous visits to the United States. In July, the United States restricted his movement to a few blocks in Manhattan and Queens, preventing Zarif from making his regular visits to TV studios, universities, and think tanks. Pompeo defended the decision, noting that American diplomats lack freedom to travel in Iran.”

-- Iranian leaders have long memories, dating back to American support for the shah. Iranian President Hassan Rouhani on Monday also invoked Iran Air Flight 655, a commercial jet shot down by the U.S. Navy by mistake on July 3, 1988, killing all 290 civilians and crew on board, including 66 children. “Although the incident is nearly forgotten in the United States, it is etched deeply in memory in Iran,” Gillian Brockell explains. “In 1988, the long war between Iraq and Iran was close to ending. At the time, the United States supported Iraq and its leader Saddam Hussein in its fight against Iran. ... To this day, many hard-liners in the Iranian government believe the incident was intentional.”

Soleimani's daughter warns of 'dark days' for the United States

MORE TEAM COVERAGE:

-- The burial of Soleimani has been postponed after a stampede killed at least 50 people and injured more than 200 others during massive mourning marches through his hometown of Kerman, according to Iranian state television. Erin Cunningham is anchoring our liveblog: “Iranian leaders have stepped up calls for revenge against the United States for its airstrike that killed Soleimani, with one intelligence official saying concrete retaliation plans are already being discussed. ... Security council head Ali Shamkhani said 13 scenarios for retaliation are being considered, and specifically mentioned that U.S. bases in the region were under surveillance. Iran’s Revolutionary Guard commander, Maj. Gen. Hossein Salami, hinted that Israel could be a target.”

-- The Pentagon rushed to play down reports that U.S. troops in Iraq were being repositioned in preparation for a possible withdrawal, one day after Iraqi lawmakers passed a nonbinding resolution calling for all foreign troops to leave the country. Karen DeYoung, Missy Ryan and Paul Sonne report: “‘This is a mistake,’ the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Mark A. Milley, told reporters at the Pentagon after a letter indicating a withdrawal was released to Iraqi officials by the U.S. military command in Baghdad. The letter, he said, was an unsigned planning draft discussing new deployments and ‘should not have been released.’

“A policy afterthought for the past three years, while it served as a hub for military efforts against the Islamic State and a place from which to keep a close eye on Iran, Iraq has suddenly become a problem for the United States. After bringing the Islamic

State to heel and claiming to be well on his way to stopping the 'endless wars' in the Middle East, Trump finds himself in the middle of an entirely new crisis on the same battlefield that bedeviled his two immediate predecessors. There is widespread agreement among U.S. lawmakers and close allies that [Soleimani] was responsible for years of terrorist activities ... But many worry that the administration has no strategy to deal with the likely escalation of U.S.-Iranian conflict that will follow. That concern is most acute in Iraq, where the two powers have long vied for influence. 'This administration doesn't have a policy on Iraq,' said a former senior Iraqi official ... Iraq, he said, has been a subsidiary of policies toward Israel and Iran, seen as 'baggage from the last administration.' ...

“Already, the United States has suspended counter-Islamic State operations in Iraq and Syria while the 5,000 U.S. troops in Iraq turn their attention to force protection in expectation of an Iranian response. NATO and U.S. training of Iraqi troops has also been suspended, and the U.S. government has told American civilians in Iraq to leave the country. Current and former officials said a prolonged pause in counterterrorism operations, let alone a U.S. departure, would hurt American security interests in the region. ... U.S. officials said it would be difficult if not impossible to continue the mission targeting the Islamic State in Syria, where there are 1,000 U.S. troops, without a presence in Iraq.”

-- Senior administration officials have begun drafting sanctions against Iraq after Trump publicly threatened the country with economic penalties if it proceeded to expel U.S. troops, according to three people briefed on the planning. Jeff Stein and

Josh Dawsey scoop: “The Treasury Department and White House will probably take a lead role if the sanctions are implemented ... Such a step would represent a highly unusual move against a foreign ally that the United States has spent almost two decades and hundreds of billions of dollars supporting. ... One of the officials said the plan was to wait “at least a little while” on the sanctions decision to see whether Iraqi officials followed through on their threat to push U.S. troops out of the country.”

Sen. Tim Kaine: 'We're at the brink of war'

-- "Trump, who rarely makes major moves without first calculating the ramifications for his popularity and self-image, has confided to advisers that he sees a political upside in his hard-line approach to Iran at the dawn of this year's campaign, according to two White House officials and several senior Republicans," Bob Costa and Phil Rucker report. "Trump believes he has an opportunity to expand his support among voters as a wartime commander in chief and is trying to cast his Democratic critics as soft on terrorism, they said. They added that he sees his party as more united behind him than ever, even as his impeachment trial looms in the Senate, with some Republicans now arguing that it would be irresponsible and dangerous to remove a president amid a national security crisis.

“Trump struck a harshly partisan tone Monday that foreshadowed the political battles to come. Calling into Rush Limbaugh’s nationally syndicated radio show, the president maligned Democrats for ‘trying to make’ [Soleimani] ‘sound like he was this wonderful human being’ and argued that ‘elements of that party [are] openly supporting Iran, an enemy of the United States.’ ... At his Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida over the past week, Trump privately told advisers he was surprised at how many Democrats criticized him for taking action — and he has spoken encouragingly about how his decision is being received by many Americans on social media and in news coverage, according to two White House officials ... As last week’s strike was unfolding, Trump casually discussed whether ‘Bernie or Biden’ would be easier to beat, according to conservative talk-show host Howie Carr, who published an essay about his time Thursday night at Mar-a-Lago.”

-- Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, a central figure in the Iran and impeachment stories, told Mitch McConnell that he will not run for the open Senate seat in Kansas this year. Josh Dawsey and John Hudson report: “McConnell had recruited Pompeo to run for Senate to guarantee the seat would stay in the hands of the Republican Party after the retirement of Sen. Pat Roberts. Pompeo had regularly visited Kansas and was consulting with Ward Baker, a prominent GOP strategist close to McConnell. He had fueled speculation of a bid in recent weeks by creating personal social media accounts that regularly featured him with his family dog, cheering on sporting events and even drinking beer in his kitchen. ... Aides said [Trump] wanted Pompeo to stay on as secretary of state, particularly after the strike..."

-- Attempts on Capitol Hill to limit Trump from acting militarily against Iran are shaping up to be largely partisan votes. "House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) plans to have the House vote this week to invoke its war powers and order Trump to remove U.S. troops from hostilities against Iran, while Democrats in the Senate are preparing to force a vote as early as next week on a measure from Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) that would do the same," Karoun Demirjian reports.

"Democrats seem unlikely to win the support of several key Republican figures who have backed previous efforts to check Trump's power as commander in chief but now vocally defend his decision to kill Soleimani. 'I would be very shocked if any Republican votes for this resolution,' said Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), a close Trump ally who nonetheless voted last year to curtail U.S. military operations in Yemen and block the president from waging war against Iran without Congress's express authorization. ... Sen. Mike Lee (Utah), another Republican who voted last year to require congressional authorization for Iran hostilities — and who led Senate efforts with Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) to invoke the War Powers Resolution to end U.S. military support for the Saudi-led campaign in Yemen — similarly took issue with the assertion in Kaine’s measure that the Soleimani strike constitutes ‘either hostilities or a situation where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances into which United States Armed Forces have been introduced.’”

Iran's supreme leader weeps during prayers for Soleimani

-- “How a ‘quantum change’ in missiles has made Iran a far more dangerous foe,” by Joby Warrick: “When a swarm of drones and cruise missiles attacked Saudi Arabia’s biggest oil facility on Sept. 14, an outraged Trump administration quickly blamed Iran for what it called an ‘unprecedented attack’ on global energy supplies. But the real surprise was the strike’s accuracy: Of 19 weapons used, all but two scored direct hits. When the smoke cleared, Saudi officials counted 14 holes where incoming projectiles had sliced through petroleum storage tanks. Three other critical parts of the oil-processing facility had been hit and disabled, shutting down the facility and temporarily cutting Saudi oil production in half. In subsequent reports, U.S. analysts would describe the attack as a kind of wake-up call: evidence of a vastly improved arsenal of high-precision missiles that Iran has quietly developed and shared with allies over the past decade.

“In the event of a wider war with the United States, Iran would probably deploy such weapons to inflict substantial damage on any number of targets, from U.S. military bases to oil facilities to sites in Israel, analysts say. ... U.S. and Middle Eastern officials say the upgraded missiles — some with ranges of more than 1,200 miles — are but one of several potential avenues for carrying out Iran’s promise to exact revenge ... Less impactful globally, but psychologically disruptive, would be a series of assassinations or kidnappings, conducted in such a way as to shield Iran from blame.”

-- Trump’s order to take out a top Iranian general may do what his withdrawal from the nuclear agreement did not: Kill the deal.

Anne Gearan explains: “Iran announced Sunday that it would no longer be bound by some of the deal’s most important safeguards. Iran’s announcement alone does not render the agreement moot, and at least one important element of it — U.N. inspection power — remains in force. But Iran has less incentive now to abide by the agreement, and Trump appears to have less leverage to hash out the better deal with Tehran that he says President Barack Obama failed to get. That leaves Trump in the position of owning how to deal with any attempt by Iran to build a nuclear weapon, with no clear answers about how he would do so after scrapping and deriding what world leaders believed was their best chance to keep the theocratic regime’s nuclear ambitions at bay. ...

“With its announcement, Iran could now return to stockpiling enriched uranium, the raw material for a bomb. Depending on the pace of that effort, Iran could amass nearly enough material for a bomb within a matter of several months. Pushing back the tipping point when Iran could ‘break out’ and make a quick drive for a viable weapon was the central goal of the 2015 deal. If Iran reconstitutes its abilities to roughly the status quo in place before negotiations, there is little left to save, analysts said.”

Russian President Vladimir Putin meets on Tuesday with Syrian President Bashar Assad in Damascus. (Syrian Presidency via AP)

-- “Russia stands to benefit as Middle East tensions spike after Soleimani killing,” Robyn Dixon reports from Moscow: “If the United States withdraws from Iraq as backlash over the killing widens, Russia could strengthen its foothold in the country — much as it did in Syria

after Trump ordered a troop pullout there last fall, a step that was later partly reversed. ... German Chancellor Angela Merkel will meet Putin in Moscow Saturday at his invitation, to discuss the crisis. ... A hasty U.S. departure would give Iran what it has sought for years, analysts said. But they noted that it could also create a void for Russia to exploit, although it is more likely to do so through diplomatic overtures, trade deals and arms sales than by taking up any military slack. ...

“In Syria, President Bashar al-Assad asked Putin to intervene as the Islamic State and anti-government rebels threatened his power. ... The man who argued Assad’s case to Russian defense and security officials — and convinced them the war was still winnable — was Soleimani, who traveled to Moscow in July 2015, unfurled a map of Syria on the table and explained what could be done to prevent Assad’s regime from falling ... The following April ... Soleimani met with Putin and Defense Minister Sergei Shoigu in Moscow to discuss deliveries of Russian missiles to Syria. According to media reports from 2015 to 2017, he traveled numerous times to Moscow in breach of a U.N. travel ban. ... Soleimani’s mission paid off for Russia, saving its strategic naval base in Tartus on Syria’s Mediterranean coast. Russia also expanded its military foothold on Europe’s doorstep, gaining use of the nearby Hmeimim air base and establishing what some in NATO see as an air defense zone in the region.”

-- “Why North Korea’s state media has barely mentioned U.S. killing of Iran’s Soleimani,” by Simon Denyer in Tokyo: “Between coverage of Supreme Leader Kim Jong Un’s major policy speech last week, and his visit to a fertilizer factory this week, a small report by the Korean Central News Agency on Monday noted that China and Russia condemned a U.S. strike in Baghdad. The last paragraph noted that the raid had led to the deaths of Iran's Quds Force commander and an Iraqi militia figure, without naming them or offering any real sense of Soleimani's importance. ... Experts say Pyongyang's caution stems from its fear of U.S. military action and its reluctance to acknowledge that important leaders might be eliminated — lest anyone at home start getting ideas. Its state media has a record of withholding information about the fates of former dictators targeted by the United States who ended up being killed, including Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein and Libya's Moammar Gaddafi.

"The idea that North Korea would trust a U.S. administration that had walked away from the nuclear deal with Iran, much less a nation with a history of fomenting regime change abroad, was always fanciful, experts say, but Kim made it clear that the experience of dealing with the United States over the past two years had only reinforced his convictions. ... Trump's decision to kill Soleimani may convince him to push ahead even faster in developing his country's nuclear arsenal, but it also demonstrates that the U.S. president is not all bluster when he talks of 'fire and fury.'"

-- The Soleimani fallout gives Israel's Benjamin Netanyahu a chance to shift focus from his legal woes – but not for too long. Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report from Jerusalem: "Three days after the U.S. drone strike, Netanyahu's efforts to shield himself from prosecution had returned to Israel's front pages. ... For Netanyahu, a hawk, any shift of focus from his legal woes to regional security is considered an advantage. The election campaign has been overshadowed by the corruption allegations against Netanyahu, who was indicted in November on charges of bribery, fraud and breach of trust. He has refused to resign or drop out of the race, and last week he formally requested parliamentary immunity from prosecution.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

McConnell reiterates call for mid-trial witnesses following Bolton statement

▶ 2:43

McConnell reiterates call for mid-trial witnesses following Bolton statement

IMPEACHMENT LATEST:

-- John Bolton scrambled the Senate GOP impeachment strategy by declaring his willingness to testify and upping the pressure on McConnell and his party to summon the former national security adviser as a witness in Trump's trial. Rachael Bade, Mike DeBonis, Tom Hamburger and Robert Costa report: "Bolton last fall rebuffed House impeachment investigators' entreaties to testify about his concerns about Trump's demands that Ukraine investigate his political rivals as the administration delayed military aid. Bolton's surprise announcement complicated the political calculus for McConnell's no-witness strategy and appeared to increase the likelihood of additional testimony that could embarrass the president. ... At least one Senate Republican, Mitt Romney (Utah), agreed Monday that it was imperative that Bolton testify, while Democrats insisted that Republicans' refusal to allow him to tell his story would be tantamount to a 'coverup.' Bolton has firsthand knowledge of internal White House deliberations, and according to testimony in the House probe, he reacted angrily to Trump's pressure on Ukraine to investigate former vice president Joe Biden ...

"Two moderate Senate Republicans — Susan Collins (Maine) and Lisa Murkowski (Alaska) — have said they're open to hearing from witnesses. ... Still, the same centrist Republican senators signaled that they were willing to start the trial without a deal for Bolton's testimony, keeping McConnell in firm control for now as he works to delay any decision on additional witnesses until after House Democrats present their case and the president's defense team rebuts it. ... The major question for McConnell is whether he can hold the line ... A subpoena requires a simple majority of 51 votes, and Democrats would need just four Republicans to break ranks. ... In recent months, Bolton has confided to friends that he was deeply troubled by his time at the White House and the president's behavior, but he has declined to offer many details ...

“Still, other Bolton associates have privately said that he wants a future in Republican politics and does not want to be seen as a turncoat on Trump or someone who is trying to ingratiate himself with the president's critics. They noted, for instance, that his statement Monday came from his political action committee's office as an example of how he's trying to build out his operation even as he deals with legal issues. Additionally, people close to him note that Bolton also has an expansive view of presidential power. As a result, it is unclear whether he would testify that he believes Trump overstepped his constitutional authority in his dealings with Ukraine. ... Senate Republicans appeared divided on the possibility of hearing from Bolton. Sen. John Cornyn (Tex.), who is close to McConnell, told Guy Benson, political editor for conservative Townhall.com, that Bolton's testimony could be 'helpful to the president' and that he'd like to know more about what he'd say. Other Republicans, including Sen. Marco Rubio (Fla.), suggested that the Senate should consider only the evidence gathered in the House, thereby precluding Bolton.”

-- Commentary from the opinion page:

- Ruth Marcus: “Will he or won't he? John Bolton is playing a very cagey game.”

- Jennifer Rubin: “Pelosi’s strategy pays off: Now bring in Bolton.”
- Dana Milbank: “Trump wags the hippopotamus.”

Los Angeles prosecutors charge Harvey Weinstein with two counts of sexual assault

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Disgraced Hollywood mogul Harvey Weinstein was charged with multiple sex crimes in Los Angeles on the same day his trial began in New York. Shayna Jacobs reports: “Weinstein — who is 67 but has visibly aged since his May 2018 arrest in New York — was in court with his five attorneys for a final conference before jury selection begins in his trial on rape and sexual assault allegations involving three women. He faces the possibility of life in prison in the New York case and has pleaded not guilty. The charges filed in Los Angeles should not affect plans to proceed with jury pre-screening in New York Supreme Court in Manhattan, scheduled for Tuesday morning, and a spokesperson for the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office said that Weinstein is not expected to appear in court there until his trial in New York concludes. ... Weinstein remains under investigation by authorities in Dublin and London. ... The charges in Los Angeles involve alleged encounters with two women, a day or two apart, in February 2013, authorities said. In all, eight people have come forward there to report crimes involving Weinstein, officials said. In three cases, the statute of limitations had expired, so charges were not filed. The other three remain under investigation. ... Prosecutors in Los Angeles are recommending a $5 million bail in a case for which Weinstein faces up to 28 years in prison."

-- Weinstein's publicists are sending reporters a 57-page PowerPoint presentation titled "The Proper Narrative for Addressing the Harvey Weinstein Case." From The Cut: "The document presents oppo research about Weinstein's accusers, including text messages and photographs, with the goal of vindicating him in the press. ... The document frequently shifts in tone, voice, font size, and color, and seems to include some draft notes ('[ask HW: did they actually meet? Seems possible]') and strike-throughs. It argues that some women's allegations of sexual abuse were the result of 'strong and repeated suggestions from others,' including press reports and activists. 'Given the pressures that many women today feel from the various laudatory movements against workplace imbalances, the notion that consensual relations are being reinterpreted cannot be overlooked,' it says on page 10. The document claims there is 'no objective support' for any of the women's claims because there were no witnesses and ‘no physical injuries — even scratches’; current rape law requires nothing of the sort and hasn’t for at least a half century.”

-- The Environmental Protection Agency announced that it will pursue a new industry-supported rule to cut pollution from heavy-duty trucks. Brady Dennis reports: “Heavy-duty vehicles are the largest mobile source of nitrogen oxide, a pollutant linked to heart and lung disease. They also tend to remain in service far longer than other vehicles. Still, some environmental advocates said they feared that the EPA’s proposal could preempt even more stringent rules being considered in California. At an announcement in rural Virginia, EPA Administrator Andrew Wheeler said the agency would soon move forward with its ‘Cleaner Trucks Initiative,’ aimed at further curbing highway emissions of nitrogen oxide and other pollutants from heavy-duty engines. ... Monday’s announcement received instant praise from the trucking industry, members of which stood alongside Wheeler at his announcement.”

-- The Internal Revenue Service’s personal income tax audits dropped to their lowest level in decades. From the WSJ: “The IRS audited 0.45% of personal income-tax returns in fiscal 2019, down from 0.59% in 2018 and marking the eighth straight year of decline, according to a report released on Monday. In 2010, the IRS audited 1.1% of tax returns. The report doesn’t break down audits by income category or provide details about how much revenue they generate. The steady erosion of tax enforcement has been driven by years of cuts in the agency’s budget along with a heavier workload. The result, according to tax experts, is that the Treasury is letting billions of dollars annually go uncollected, even as budget

deficits rise.”

-- A bipartisan group of campaign finance lawyers urged the Trump administration and the Senate to restore a quorum at the Federal Election Commission. Michelle Ye Hee Lee reports: “The agency tasked with regulating federal campaign finance laws has long faced ideological divisions and polarization. But it lost its ability to do its official job after the August 2019 resignation of a commissioner left it to operate for the first time in 11 years without its necessary four-person quorum. While routine administrative work continues, the agency cannot enforce the law, vote on investigations, provide guidance or conduct audits — activities that are especially crucial and timely for a presidential election, which is projected to be the most expensive one to date. In a joint letter Monday, 31 attorneys across the political spectrum and whose clients are regulated by federal campaign finance law asked [Trump] and congressional leaders for ‘swift attention to this situation, which has languished for far too long.’”

-- Rep. Duncan Hunter (R-Calif.) will likely still receive his taxpayer-funded congressional pension despite pleading guilty to felony conspiracy for misusing campaign funds to finance multiple extramarital affairs, including with a female lobbyist, as well as other personal expenses. From the San Diego Union-Tribune: “The amount of money in Hunter’s congressional pension is not publicly known, and the Congressional Research Service and the Office of Personnel Management both declined to provide The San Diego Union-Tribune with information regarding the the congressman’s benefits. Hunter remains in Congress, although he said he would step down ‘shortly after the holidays.’ He is to be sentenced March 17. Based on formulas outlined in a paper released by the research service earlier this year, it is estimated that Hunter, 43, would receive an annual payment of at least $32,538 due to his congressional pension, which he can begin accessing when he turns 62.”

Punta Ventana, a popular tourist destination in Puerto Rico, was destroyed by a 5.8-magnitude earthquake on Monday. (Ricardo Arduengo/AFP/Getty Images)

-- A 6.5 magnitude earthquake hit Puerto Rico overnight after a 5.8 magnitude earthquake shook the island yesterday. From CNN: “Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority reported widespread outages across the island after its power plants activated an auto protective mechanism following the earthquake. Puerto Rico Gov. Wanda Vázquez Garced urged citizens to remain calm as the government responds to the most recent quake. ... No tsunami is expected following Tuesday's earthquakes, the US National Tsunami Warning Center said. ... All the earthquakes appear to have been foreshocks to Tuesday morning's largest quake, CNN meteorologist Pedram Javaheri said."

-- Yesterday's earthquake damaged more than a dozen homes and destroyed a natural wonder. Arelis R. Hernández reports: "An ancient Puerto Rico rock formation that adorned the background of countless vacation photos, Instagram posts and selfies tumbled into the ocean off the U.S. territory's southwestern coast."

-- American Airlines and Boeing reached a settlement for financial losses related to the worldwide grounding of the 737 Max jet. Lori Aratani reports: "While the terms are confidential, Doug Parker, American's CEO, said a portion — $30 million — will be shared with employees through the company's profit-sharing plan. American is the second U.S. carrier to reach a settlement with the company; Southwest Airlines announced it had reached a settlement with Boeing in December. ... American has removed the jet from its schedule through April 6. ... American has 24 737 Max jets in its fleet. The money is expected to be paid out to employees in March."

-- YouTube will roll out new protections for children viewing videos on the site in an effort to satisfy federal regulators who fined the company over alleged privacy violations. Greg Bensinger and Tony Romm report: "The changes, which include limitations on data collection and advertising, are a step toward addressing concerns from advocacy groups who have complained the Google-owned company has run afoul of the Children's Online Privacy Protection Act, or COPPA, which forbids tracking and targeting users

12 and under. As part of those changes, YouTube said it will seek to better distinguish which content is intended primarily for children, relying on a combination of self-identification from creators and software. That content cannot run with personalized advertisements, under the new rules that YouTube said it is instituting globally starting Monday. YouTube said it will assume any viewer of child-friendly content is underage, treating that data as subject to COPPA rules. It has been limiting other features too, such as comments on children's videos and live chats. But some privacy experts said the changes may not offer children enough protections from a company that has accrued reams of data on its users and is incentivized to compel viewers to stay on the site for as long as possible.”

-- Facebook said it will ban deepfakes – computer-generated, highly manipulated videos – but the new policy may not cover a deceptively edited video altered to make Nancy Pelosi sound as if she's slurring her words. Tony Romm, Drew Harwell and Isaac Stanley-Becker report: “While these videos are still rare on the internet, they present a significant challenge for our industry and society as their use increases,’ Monika Bickert, the company's vice president for global policy management, wrote in a blog post. The changes come as Bickert prepares to testify at a congressional hearing later this week on ‘manipulation and deception in the digital age.’ The inquiry marks the latest effort by House lawmakers to probe Facebook's digital defenses four years after Russian agents weaponized the site to stoke social unrest during the 2016 race. Going forward, Facebook intends to ban videos that are ‘edited or synthesized’ by technologies like artificial intelligence in a way that average users would not easily spot, the company said, including attempts to make the subject of a video say words that they never did.”

-- Russian trolls are targeting American veterans, and the Trump administration has ignored the issue, a group claims. Alex Horton reports: “American veterans and service members enjoy a high degree of social respect, and ongoing manipulation campaigns aimed at them could be weaponized to sow social discord in their communities, Vietnam Veterans of America warned officials at the Defense and Veterans Affairs departments in March 2018, among other agencies. But those agencies have brushed off VVA since they were presented with evidence that eventually became a detailed report and congressional testimony, said Kristopher Goldsmith, the veteran service organization’s chief investigator. And their plea to President Trump for help has similarly been ignored, Goldsmith said — suggesting the problem may be perceived as too complex or politically fraught for U.S. officials concerned to cross Trump, who has downplayed Russia’s role in election interference.”

-- Chelsea Clinton has made more than $9 million from sitting on a corporate board. From Barrons: “Clinton, who has been an [InterActiveCorp] director since 2011, receives an annual $50,000 retainer and $250,000 in restricted IAC stock units ... As of Dec. 31, she owned the equivalent of 35,242 IAC shares, consisting of 29,843 shares and 5,399 share units under a deferred-compensation plan, according to a form she filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Share units convert to stock when an IAC director leaves the board.”

-- Illinois shops ran out of marijuana just six days after the start

of legalization. Katie Shepherd reports: “Standing in line for hours in frigid temperatures, tens of thousands have flocked to the nine dispensaries selling recreational cannabis in Chicago after Illinois’s newly legalized cannabis sales began on New Year’s Day. The numbers have been staggering: 55 dispensaries in the state sold more than $3 million in THC-imbued products on day one, matching Oregon’s record-setting opening for recreational sales in 2015. By Sunday, Illinois’s cannabis customers had bought nearly $11 million worth of recreational marijuana in the first five days, making more than 271,000 purchases. But the crush of eager buyers strained the state’s marijuana supply, leading many dispensaries in Chicago to turn away customers before the first week of sales even ended. Meanwhile, given the state’s restrictive licensing rules, some large cultivators are now rushing to expand their marijuana grows to keep up with recreational demand in a market previously designed to serve a much smaller number of medical cannabis patients.”

Friends and parents of 43 missing students from the Ayotzinapa Rural Teachers' College march in Mexico City in November, before the fifth anniversary of their disappearance. (Jose Mendez/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- More than 61,000 people have disappeared in Mexico amid the drug war, authorities said, sharply raising their estimate of those who have vanished in more than a decade of extreme violence by and among organized-crime groups. Mary Beth Sheridan reports:

“The government of President Andrés Manuel López Obrador released the new figure after an exhaustive analysis of data from state prosecutors. The previous official estimate, released in April 2018, put the number at 40,000. While hundreds of cases date to the 1960s, over 97 percent have been reported since 2006, when Mexico launched an all-out offensive targeting drug trafficking and criminal organizations. Karla Quintana, head of Mexico’s National Search Commission, which coordinates the effort to find the missing, said that at least 61,637 people had been reported disappeared and not been found. ‘These are data of horror, and behind them are stories and narratives of great pain for families,’ she said at a news conference. ... The Monday announcement highlights the toll of more than a decade of extraordinary violence in Mexico that shows no sign of abating. Last year, homicides through November topped 31,000, a record. In some regions, organized-crime groups openly battle police and soldiers. Quintana said 3,631 clandestine graves have been discovered since 2006.”

-- A 13-year-old American boy was killed in Mexico near the U.S. border while traveling with his family. From CNN: “Oscar Lopez

was shot in both legs and died in an attack Saturday night in Tamaulipas state, near the US border, said the teen's father, also named Oscar Lopez. The father said three other relatives were injured in the ambush attack: his wife, 41-year-old Juanita Lopez; their other son, 11-year-old Abio Lopez; and his brother-in-law, 48-year-old Raphael Castillo. The elder Oscar Lopez said the group was visiting relatives in the Monterrey area for the holidays, though he stayed back in the US. On Saturday night, family members in two vehicles -- both with Oklahoma license plates -- were driving on the Reynosa-Nuevo Laredo Mexican highway in Ciudad Mier, according to a statement from Tamaulipas state authorities. The family was confronted by unknown assailants. Tamaulipas officials said the family's van did not stop, so the assailants crashed into the van to force it to a halt.”

-- Mexican asylum seekers could now be deported to Guatemala as part of a deal that the Department of Homeland Security struck with the Central American nation. From the Times: “The agreement with Guatemala, which was signed in July, was described by Kevin K. McAleenan, the acting secretary of homeland security at the time, as a way to encourage families to apply for protections closer to home. The deal made migrants such as Hondurans and Salvadorans ineligible for asylum in the United States if they had traveled by land through Guatemala and did not first apply for asylum there, homeland security officials said at the time. But two homeland security officials said on Monday that asylum officers were told over the weekend that Mexican migrants were now ‘amenable’ to being sent to Guatemala under the agreement. In theory, an asylum seeker from Juárez, Mexico, could be deported from the El Paso, Texas, border crossing a mile from his home to the Guatemalan border nearly 2,000 miles away. A homeland security spokesman later confirmed that certain Mexicans could be sent to Guatemala under the agreement — a pivot from the original plan for the deal.”

-- Mexico rejected the proposal, saying it's working with American authorities to offer “better options.” (Reuters)

-- The Trump administration will seek the death penalty against an MS-13 gang member, who immigrated here from El Salvador, accused in the kidnappings and killings of two Virginia teenagers in 2016. Rachel Weiner reports: “Elmer Martinez, 27, is alleged to be the leader of the Fairfax County clique that authorities say killed a 17-year-old suspected of belonging to a rival gang and a 14-year-old who revealed that crime to the victim’s family. ... Defense attorney Robert Jenkins said he was informed by the Justice Department of its decision, a step he said he believed was taken to support the president’s stance on illegal immigration. ... Jenkins said Martinez ... did not have a violent criminal history and is not alleged to have inflicted blows in either slaying. In their filing, prosecutors said Martinez has a history of uncharged violent conduct, including assaults, stabbings and another attempt at kidnapping and homicide. While in jail awaiting trial, they say, he was twice found with a shank.”

-- The U.S. government has launched a pilot program to collect DNA from people detained at the border, which will then be turned over to the FBI. From the AP: “The information would go into a massive criminal database run by the FBI, where it would be held indefinitely. A memo outlining the program published Monday by the Department of Homeland Security said U.S. citizens and permanent residents holding a 'green card' who are detained could be subject to DNA testing, as well as asylum seekers and people entering the country without authorization. Refusing to submit DNA could lead to a misdemeanor criminal charge, the document said. ... The DHS memo acknowledged that the DNA its agents collect may not be immediately useful. Agents plan to take saliva swabs of detained people, then mail them to the FBI. By the time the results are processed, the memo said, the people in question may have already been released, deported or transferred to another federal agency.”

-- A senior employee at a for-profit immigrant detention center in Nevada was active on the neo-Nazi website Iron March and wanted to start a white nationalist chapter in his area. From Vice News:

“Travis Frey, 31, is currently employed as a captain at the Nevada Southern Detention Center, which is run by private prison behemoth CoreCivic and contracted with ICE. Frey joined Iron March in 2013, and posted at least a dozen times between 2016 and 2017 while he was working as head of security at a CoreCivic jail in Indianapolis, which was also authorized to house detainees on behalf of ICE. ... On Iron March, Frey used the screen name ‘In Hoc Signo Vincas,’ a Latin phrase that’s used by military outfits around the world, and by universities, and was the title of the American Nazi Party’s manifesto. Vice News was able to identify Frey, who served in the Marines between 2006 and 2008, through some of the personal information he provided on Iron March ... The Nevada Southern Detention Center, where Frey has worked since at least 2018, according to a now-deleted LinkedIn page, is located in Pahrump, 62 miles west of Las Vegas, and is contracted with ICE and U.S. Marshals ... In June 2017, Frey started putting out feelers about joining the ranks of the Traditionalist Workers Party (TWP), which was run by Heimbach before its demise and was a key player in the violent Unite the Right rally in Charlottesville in 2017.”

National Assembly President Juan Guaidó, Venezuela's opposition leader, is blocked by police from entering the Assembly. (Andrea Hernandez Briceño/AP)

-- Venezuelan opposition lawmakers led by Juan Guaidó vowed to retake the National Assembly after being barred from the chamber this weekend, setting up a showdown over President Nicolás Maduro’s attempt to seize control of the last democratic institution left in the nation. Rachelle Krygier and Anthony Faiola report: “The move appeared to be an attempt by Maduro to sideline Guaidó — the U.S.-backed opposition leader who has unsuccessfully sought to unseat Maduro for the past year — by preventing his reelection on Sunday as head of the assembly. That title has served as the basis of his claim to be the nation’s true interim leader, one that has been recognized by nearly 60 nations including the United States. 'The dictatorship will decide tomorrow if it will continue its farce, which no one recognizes,' Guaidó told reporters in Caracas. He suggested that if his entry was blocked, he would attempt to lead a session of the loyalist lawmakers elsewhere in the capital. 'We will take this risk because Venezuela deserves it,' he said. 'The dictatorship is now unmasked.'"

-- During a 10-minute call, Vice President Mike Pence told Guaidó that he is the "only legitimate president" of Venezuela. From the WSJ: "Mr. Pence has played a central role in the administration's campaign to elevate Mr. Guaidó. Early last year, on the night before Mr. Guaidó declared himself the country's interim president, Mr. Pence called the Venezuelan opposition leader and pledged that the U.S. would support him, setting in motion a monthslong campaign to wrest power from Mr. Maduro."

-- After nearly a year without a government, Spain ended its deadlock Tuesday with a parliamentary vote that approved a left-wing coalition led by current caretaker Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez. Pamela Rolfe and Chico Harlan report: "The vote, passing by the narrowest of margins, opens the way for a government composed of the country's traditional left-wing party, the Socialists, and its erstwhile foe, far-left Unidas Podemos. It vaults the left fully back into power in Spain at a time when other mainstream pro-European parties across the continent have struggled to combat populism or overcome disenchantment with the political status quo. But while the parliamentary vote restores a measure of clarity to Europe's fifth-largest economy, the new government will probably be fragile. It will control a minority of seats in parliament and depend on support from a constellation of smaller parties while dealing with budget issues and the Catalonia region's divisive bid for independence."

-- Australia's catastrophic fires threaten to upend the way people live. From the WSJ: "The death toll is lower than the 173 killed in the Black Saturday fires in Victoria state in 2009, but in other respects these blazes—which could persist until March—are being viewed by experts as unprecedented. The scorched area is vast, with more than 23,000 square miles burned nationwide since early November. Almost every state has been affected—thousands of people have been forced to flee their homes, and tourists visiting summer holiday spots have been trapped by advancing fires. Australia's insurance council says more than $260 million of claims have been lodged since Nov. 8, when it declared a catastrophe, but that represents a trickle of what is to come. An additional $39 million in claims were lodged before Nov. 8 for fires in September and October. ... It is still too dangerous for property owners to return to some areas, and many communities in the two worst affected regions—southern New South Wales state and eastern Victoria—have no power or telecommunications. ... The environmental toll has also been severe. A researcher from the University of Sydney has estimated that as many as 480 million animals have been killed by wildfires in New South Wales alone since September. Footage of distressed koalas—the iconic Australian bearlike marsupial—approaching people and drinking water has been widely viewed."

-- The world's oldest person broke her own record by turning

117. Lateshia Beachum reports: “Kane Tanaka is proving a person is never too old to achieve life goals. Tanaka celebrated her 117th birthday Thursday — stretching out her record as the world’s oldest woman. She has been holding on to her title as the oldest living person for nearly two years. The supercentenarian was gussied up in a gold kimono with red trimmings as she was ushered into her birthday celebration at a nursing home in Fukuoka, Japan. ... She clapped her way into her big day and stopped to kiss the hands of well wishers before singing a birthday song. ... The seventh of eight children cried tears of joy when she was handed two plaques last year for being the world’s oldest living person and the world’s oldest living woman.”

-- Japan issued an arrest warrant for Carlos Ghosn’s wife on suspicion of perjury, even as Nissan said it would continue to take legal action to hold its former boss accountable for “serious misconduct.” (Simon Denyer)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

A Republican congressman, Rep. Paul Gosar of Arizona, tweeted a fake image of Barack Obama with Iran's president. The two men never even met:

Paul Gosar  @DrPaulGosar

The world is a better place without these guys in power.

 15.2K  8:24 PM - Jan 6, 2020

 6,763 people are talking about this

Donald Trump Jr. has a new weapon that includes questionable icons:

Akil N Awan ✓

@Akil_N_Awan

Don Jr posted photos of himself brandishing a modified assault rifle with CRUSADER etched on it, lower receiver modelled after a medieval Crusader helmet & mag printed with Hillary's face.

Crusader imagery on weapons & propaganda has been used by Far-Right terrorists since Breivik

♥ 6,059 12:06 PM - Jan 6, 2020

💬 4,317 people are talking about this

History repeats itself. Fox News putting Judy Miller on the air caused flashbacks for many to her problematic reporting that gave cover for George W. Bush to invade Iraq in the first place:

Justin Baragona ✓

@justinbaragona

We're really doing this, huh?

3,360 3:11 PM - Jan 6, 2020

882 people are talking about this

Another flashback:

Peter Baker ✓

@peterbakernyt

Two decades ago, the House impeached the president even as he was bombing Iraq. His opponents accused him of wagging the dog to distract attention. His supporters accused the other party of undermining a commander in chief at a time of national security crisis. Sound familiar?

1,590 1:36 PM - Jan 6, 2020

514 people are talking about this

A former secretary of defense offered a chilling warning amid the letter mishap:

The social media conversation was dominated by questions and jokes like these:

From a former Pentagon and CIA spokesman:

DHS issued a guide on how to prepare for a potential cyberattack from Iran:

With increased tension with Iran and its proxies, facility and network defenders should consider and assess the possible impacts and threats to their organization. Today's new CISA Insights has information and precautionary measures for your organization. cisa.gov/insights

CISA INSIGHTS
Increased Geopolitical Tensions and Threats

The Threat and How to Think About It

Increased geopolitical tensions and tensions of aggression may result in cyber and physical attacks against the United States and its interests. Iran and its proxies are actively engaged in cyber and physical attacks against the United States and its interests. Iran and its proxies are actively engaged in cyber and physical attacks against the United States and its interests.

Checklist of Actions for Cyber Protection

1. Establish your incident response plan - Ensure your personnel will receive clear instructions on how to respond to a cyber incident. Do you have a plan? Do you have a plan? Do you have a plan?
2. Conduct a risk assessment - Assess your risk to critical systems. If information is lost, what are the consequences?
3. Review your physical security - Are you protecting your physical assets? Are you protecting your physical assets?
4. Review your network security - Are you protecting your network assets? Are you protecting your network assets?
5. Review your data security - Are you protecting your data assets? Are you protecting your data assets?
6. Review your supply chain security - Are you protecting your supply chain assets? Are you protecting your supply chain assets?
7. Review your vendor security - Are you protecting your vendor assets? Are you protecting your vendor assets?
8. Review your employee security - Are you protecting your employee assets? Are you protecting your employee assets?
9. Review your contractor security - Are you protecting your contractor assets? Are you protecting your contractor assets?
10. Review your subcontractor security - Are you protecting your subcontractor assets? Are you protecting your subcontractor assets?

Checklist of Actions for Physical Protection

1. Identify critical systems - What are the critical systems? What are the critical systems?
2. Identify critical assets - What are the critical assets? What are the critical assets?
3. Identify critical personnel - Who are the critical personnel? Who are the critical personnel?
4. Identify critical locations - Where are the critical locations? Where are the critical locations?
5. Identify critical infrastructure - What are the critical infrastructure assets? What are the critical infrastructure assets?
6. Identify critical services - What are the critical services? What are the critical services?
7. Identify critical dependencies - What are the critical dependencies? What are the critical dependencies?
8. Identify critical vulnerabilities - What are the critical vulnerabilities? What are the critical vulnerabilities?
9. Identify critical threats - What are the critical threats? What are the critical threats?
10. Identify critical risks - What are the critical risks? What are the critical risks?

207 12:57 AM - Jan 7, 2020

228 people are talking about this

Quotes like these, via a Times reporter, don't exactly give cause for comfort. YOLO is an acronym for "you only live once":

The White House has set a new record for days without a press briefing:

CNBC mistook Tulsi Gabbard and Andrew Yang for other people, and the other Yang took note:

Geoff Yang
@geoff_yang

Ummm. This is @geoff_yang and I am NOT running for President. twitter.com/dailycaller/st...

Daily Caller  @DailyCaller
Uhhh.....What's going on here? @CNBC

48.7K 5:55 PM - Jan 6, 2020

9,350 people are talking about this

The acting deputy secretary of Homeland Security just read a headline:

Acting Deputy Secretary Ken Cuccinelli ✓
@HomelandKen

The headline is true. I didn't read the rest of it...buzzfeednews.com/article/hameda...

The Trump Administration Will Begin Deporting Asy...

It's an expansion of a controversial plan to stop the flow of refugees and immigrants to the US southern border.

buzzfeednews.com

♥ 564 11:48 PM - Jan 6, 2020

💬 443 people are talking about this

And a New York House Democrat got a pup:

Elaine Godfrey ✓
@elainejgodfrey

WELL @AOC got a dog, and he's good

144 1:22 AM - Jan 7, 2020 · Washington, DC

31 people are talking about this

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “In any other country, Joe Biden and I would not be in the same party, but in America, we are,” Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) told New York Magazine.

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

The president made 179 factual claims at his longest rally to date. Our Fact Checker team found that 67 percent were false or unsupported by evidence:

Anatomy of a Trump rally: 67 percent of claims are false or lacking evidence

Stephen Colbert was a bit on edge during his first monologue of the year:

Seth Meyers joked that it didn't take that long for 2020 to become the worst year:

Trevor Noah noted that Trump backed out of his new year's resolution very quickly:

"The Daily Show" joked that Trump may be clairvoyant:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] January 7 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, January 7, 2020 11:31:57 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., January 7, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. OIL AND GAS:

Environmental justice concerns halt major pipeline permit

Federal judges have vacated a permit for constructing an Atlantic Coast pipeline compressor station, dealing another setback to the embattled natural gas project and an environmental justice win for local opponents of the project.

TOP STORIES

---

2. EPA:

Region 5 chief stepping down

3. PEOPLE TO WATCH:

5 key players at the forefront of Trump's EPA

4. INTERIOR:

Grijalva, Bernhardt spat intensifies over BLM HQ move

POLITICS

---

5. ADVOCACY:

Oil and gas industry launches climate campaign

6. EPA:

Union, agency begin contract talks

7. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

Government announces early closure

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

8. INTERIOR:

Enviros ask court to block Zinke's pro-hunting panel

9. WILDFIRES:

U.S. may send more firefighters to help in Australia

10. WILDLIFE:

Scientists unveil road map for protecting insects

11. MARINE MAMMALS:

3rd baby right whale spotted, giving conservationists hope

LAW

---

12. SUPREME COURT:

Greens ask high court to reject endangered species FOIA plea

13. PROPERTY RIGHTS:

Calif. sues billionaire over beach access

14. CLIMATE:

Calif. asks to drop parties from cap-and-trade lawsuit

ENERGY

---

15. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Fishermen ask for shipping highways through wind farms

16. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Wash. fines Hanford Site $1M for restricting info

AIR & WATER POLLUTION

---

17. CALIFORNIA:

EPA touts 'great progress' in conciliatory letter

BUSINESS

---

18. FOOD:

The other fake meat: Impossible Foods unveils pork, sausage

STATES

---

19. CALIFORNIA:

Lawmakers unveil state version of Green New Deal

20. PUERTO RICO:

Another earthquake strikes before dawn, killing 1

21. COLORADO:

Initiative to introduce gray wolves makes ballot

INTERNATIONAL

---

22. AUSTRALIA:

Crews race to contain fires as damage bill soars

23. ZIMBABWE:

Poachers drown 2 park rangers in Lake Kariba

24. SOUTH AFRICA:

Great white sighting eases fear the sharks had left for good

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] January 7 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, January 7, 2020 11:33:09 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., January 7, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. OIL AND GAS:

Environmental justice concerns halt major pipeline permit

Federal judges have vacated a permit for constructing an Atlantic Coast pipeline compressor station, dealing another setback to the embattled natural gas project and an environmental justice win for local opponents of the project.

TOP STORIES

---

2. EPA:

Region 5 chief stepping down

3. PEOPLE TO WATCH:

5 key players at the forefront of Trump's EPA

4. INTERIOR:

Grijalva, Bernhardt spat intensifies over BLM HQ move

POLITICS

---

5. ADVOCACY:

Oil and gas industry launches climate campaign

6. EPA:

Union, agency begin contract talks

7. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

Government announces early closure

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

8. INTERIOR:

Enviros ask court to block Zinke's pro-hunting panel

9. WILDFIRES:

U.S. may send more firefighters to help in Australia

10. WILDLIFE:

Scientists unveil road map for protecting insects

11. MARINE MAMMALS:

3rd baby right whale spotted, giving conservationists hope

LAW

---

12. SUPREME COURT:

Greens ask high court to reject endangered species FOIA plea

13. PROPERTY RIGHTS:

Calif. sues billionaire over beach access

14. CLIMATE:

Calif. asks to drop parties from cap-and-trade lawsuit

ENERGY

---

15. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Fishermen ask for shipping highways through wind farms

16. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Wash. fines Hanford Site $1M for restricting info

AIR & WATER POLLUTION

---

17. CALIFORNIA:

EPA touts 'great progress' in conciliatory letter

BUSINESS

---

18. FOOD:

The other fake meat: Impossible Foods unveils pork, sausage

STATES

---

19. CALIFORNIA:

Lawmakers unveil state version of Green New Deal

20. PUERTO RICO:

Another earthquake strikes before dawn, killing 1

21. COLORADO:

Initiative to introduce gray wolves makes ballot

INTERNATIONAL

---

22. AUSTRALIA:

Crews race to contain fires as damage bill soars

23. ZIMBABWE:

Poachers drown 2 park rangers in Lake Kariba

24. SOUTH AFRICA:

Great white sighting eases fear the sharks had left for good

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] January 7 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, January 7, 2020 11:37:23 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., January 7, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. OIL AND GAS:

Environmental justice concerns halt major pipeline permit

Federal judges have vacated a permit for constructing an Atlantic Coast pipeline compressor station, dealing another setback to the embattled natural gas project and an environmental justice win for local opponents of the project.

TOP STORIES

---

2. EPA:

Region 5 chief stepping down

3. PEOPLE TO WATCH:

5 key players at the forefront of Trump's EPA

4. INTERIOR:

Grijalva, Bernhardt spat intensifies over BLM HQ move

POLITICS

---

5. ADVOCACY:

Oil and gas industry launches climate campaign

6. EPA:

Union, agency begin contract talks

7. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

Government announces early closure

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

8. INTERIOR:

Enviros ask court to block Zinke's pro-hunting panel

9. WILDFIRES:

U.S. may send more firefighters to help in Australia

10. WILDLIFE:

Scientists unveil road map for protecting insects

11. MARINE MAMMALS:

3rd baby right whale spotted, giving conservationists hope

LAW

---

12. SUPREME COURT:

Greens ask high court to reject endangered species FOIA plea

13. PROPERTY RIGHTS:

Calif. sues billionaire over beach access

14. CLIMATE:

Calif. asks to drop parties from cap-and-trade lawsuit

ENERGY

---

15. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Fishermen ask for shipping highways through wind farms

16. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Wash. fines Hanford Site $1M for restricting info

AIR & WATER POLLUTION

---

17. CALIFORNIA:

EPA touts 'great progress' in conciliatory letter

BUSINESS

---

18. FOOD:

The other fake meat: Impossible Foods unveils pork, sausage

STATES

---

19. CALIFORNIA:

Lawmakers unveil state version of Green New Deal

20. PUERTO RICO:

Another earthquake strikes before dawn, killing 1

21. COLORADO:

Initiative to introduce gray wolves makes ballot

INTERNATIONAL

---

22. AUSTRALIA:

Crews race to contain fires as damage bill soars

23. ZIMBABWE:

Poachers drown 2 park rangers in Lake Kariba

24. SOUTH AFRICA:

Great white sighting eases fear the sharks had left for good

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Mike Bloomberg wants more engagement with Iran, North Korea and China
Date: Wednesday, January 8, 2020 9:45:03 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Mike Bloomberg wants more engagement with Iran, North Korea and China

Mike Bloomberg visits a coffee shop in Richmond on Tuesday. (Steve Helber/AP)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Mike Bloomberg thinks that maybe “an emergency phone” line should be installed so that Iranian and American officials can easily get in touch, like the red teletype hotline that connected the Pentagon with the Kremlin after the Cuban missile crisis. This, he hopes, could avoid misunderstandings that might lead to full-scale war.

The billionaire former mayor of New York, running for the Democratic presidential nomination, believes broadly in the value of engaging with American adversaries. “We should talk to the North Koreans. I think [President] Trump is right on that,” Bloomberg said during a half-hour interview last night. “We need China,” he added.

Bloomberg called to discuss the economic plan that he will roll out today at a community college in the South Side of Chicago, on a soybean farm in rural Minnesota and at a converted tire factory in Akron, Ohio.

But he grew most animated when discussing World War I. When I asked how he’d handle the current Iran crisis if he were in the Oval Office, Bloomberg mused at length about the “emotion” and “miscalculations” a century ago in Europe that spiraled into a four-year conflict, bringing down monarchies and forever changing the nature of combat. He said the best book he’s read in a while is “Catastrophe 1914: Europe Goes to War,” by the British journalist Max Hastings.

Bloomberg noted that most wars start over something relatively minor before spiraling out of control. “You read history, which I gather he has not done,” said the 77-year-old, referring to the president. “All of a sudden the small thing blows up.”

He recalled the Winston Churchill quote that “meeting jaw to jaw is better than war.”

“That’s why we should talk to the North Koreans,” he said. “Yes, [Trump] hasn’t gotten them to stop developing weapons or anything, but I’d still rather have contact – and the same thing with China and the same thing with all of these countries.”

Bloomberg is running an outside-the-box campaign. He is not campaigning in the first four early states, but he’s building an unmatched field operation in the states that vote on Super Tuesday in March and beyond, hoping that he can emerge from a crowded field as an electable alternative to more liberal candidates who might emerge from the Iowa caucuses.

Just six weeks after joining the race, Bloomberg is fifth in the national polling average, garnering about 6 percent among Democrats. He's hired more than 800 staffers, with 500 of them spread across field offices in more than 30 states. The effort has already spent approximately $150 million on television and radio commercials – and another $20 million or so on Facebook and Google ads.

Iraqi Kurdish security forces visit site of Iran missile strike

We spoke around the time Iran launched ballistic missiles toward two bases in Iraq that house U.S. troops but before the Pentagon confirmed the strikes and gave word that there were no casualties. “I don't know if this goes any further,” Bloomberg said. “I don't know what comes out of this. I can't read the tea leaves to know about tomorrow. But I do know that if you're making irresponsible decisions, the likelihood of bad and even calamitous results grows.”

Referring to the drone strike that killed Quds Force Commander Maj. Gen. Qasem Soleimani in Baghdad, which prompted Iran’s retaliation, Bloomberg added: “Nobody should feel sorry for the guy that was killed. He was a bad guy who killed a lot of Americans. Two presidents before President Trump looked at the opportunity to kill the guy and decided not to. ... We don't know what the intelligence is or was, and that will come out eventually. ... The problem, to me, is that we have a president who tends to make decisions irrationally and impulsively and recklessly. I don't know that he isn't doing that this time.”

Bloomberg criticized Trump for marginalizing experts and debasing the value of expertise, which has caused attrition among career professionals in the foreign service. “I know that staffs get annoying, but you do need them,” he said. “And any good businessperson, which Donald is not, ... would tell you that you don't make decisions alone. The board would throw you the hell out if that's what you said you did.”

When I noted that Bloomberg lacks the kind of traditional foreign policy experience of someone like Joe Biden, who spent 35 years in the Senate and then eight years as vice president, he emphasized not just that he was mayor of “the most international city in the world” – as home to the United Nations – but highlighted his overseas business interests.

“My company does business in almost every country in the world,” he said. “We don’t do business with Iran or North Korea or Yemen, I think, but fundamentally we do business in virtually every country. In terms of experience, internationally, I think I know what I'm doing.”

Bloomberg said the State Department’s job is “building relationships and having backdoor conversations so that we don't make a mistake and misjudge what the other side is doing.” He likened the benefits from open channels of diplomacy to the plusses of open-office floor plans, which he said foster more collaboration and cut down on leaking when he was mayor. “I’m a big believer in things like seating plans and open plans and how you treat people,” he said. “That has enormous impact on how they behave.”

Forbes magazine pegs Bloomberg as the world’s ninth-richest person, with an estimated net worth of $55.5 billion, and he’s set no cap for how much he’s willing to spend in the 2020 race. For example, he will spend \$10 million, pocket change for him, to air a 60-second spot during the Super Bowl. After Bloomberg’s campaign announced this yesterday, the Trump campaign let it be known that it too will spend that amount to run a commercial early in the game, the most-watched television event of the year.

Richmond Mayor Levar Stoney joined Bloomberg for his Tuesday campaign stop at a coffee shop in Virginia's capital. (Steve Helber/AP)

Bloomberg emphasized that 95 percent of the delegates to the Democratic convention this summer will come from places other than the four early states of Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina that vote in February.

“The other candidates, because of the system we have, think that winning one of those first early states will propel them into a world where they can then raise money and then go to the big states,” he said. “They don't have any choice, I suppose. They don't have the money. They have to show they are viable to get the money to be viable.”

He's traveling aggressively to states that vote in March. He landed in Virginia at 4 a.m. on Tuesday after a redevye on his private jet from Los Angeles, where he had a late dinner after attending an opening for one of his 10 field offices in California. After visiting Richmond, he flew to New York in the afternoon. He dropped by his foundation's office to pick up mail, stopped by his house to drop off "a jacket that a button had come off" so it could be sewn back on, went to his corporate office to "sign a couple of papers" and then headed to his campaign headquarters, where he called me. He planned to leave home around 6 a.m. today for the flight to Illinois.

Bloomberg has met the polling threshold to appear in next week's Democratic debate in Des Moines, but the Democratic National Committee also requires that candidates raise money from at least 225,000 unique donors, including a minimum of 1,000 in at least 20 states. Bloomberg, however, is not accepting any donations.

"My policy of not taking a dime from anybody shows a non-corruptibility that a lot of voters should want," he said.

"Somebody said to me the other day, 'You're spending a lot of money.' And I said, 'Yes, I'm spending an enormous amount of money trying to get rid of Donald Trump. Now, do you want me to spend more or less?' And he laughed and said, 'Oh, I had just not thought about it that way. Go spend more!'"

Rivals like Sens. Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders routinely castigate Bloomberg by name, presenting him as an avatar for the outsize influence of the billionaire class in politics. "It's an easy, cheap shot if you don't have any money to criticize people who do have money," he answered. "But I'm spending my money to try to educate the voters and make this country better and to give me the opportunity to devote what would probably be the rest of my life to helping the country that my children and grandchildren are going to live in long after I'm gone.”

Bloomberg, who unlike Trump is a self-made man, built his business empire, which employs about 20,000 people, around terminals that provide immense financial data. He also takes credit for creating half a million jobs in New York City during 12 years as mayor. While he may be freely spending his own money for this campaign, Bloomberg emphasized that he's trying to identify policies that won't drown the country deeper in red ink.

“What I want to do is to lay out concrete things that we can do – without a lot of money – that will make a difference, rather than just give a speech saying I think we should do something for the job market,” he said. “That's what the others are going to do, but they don't have any real experience in creating jobs.”

Mike Bloomberg gets a slice of Supino pizza as he opens a campaign office in Detroit on Dec. 21. (Jeff Kowalsky/AFP/Getty Images)

During his Midwestern swing today, Bloomberg will pledge to create millions of higher-paying jobs in places that he says have been “left behind” by Trump. His proposals include raising the federal minimum wage to $15 an hour, funding more public-private partnerships so that 1 million students can earn apprenticeship degrees by 2030, expanding national collective bargaining rights, piloting programs to provide more portable benefits for independent workers in the gig economy and expanding rural broadband access.

Bloomberg has been outspoken in his criticism of Trump’s tariffs on Chinese exports, which led to retaliatory tariffs against American imports. China is the biggest market for American soybeans, and farmers like those hosting Bloomberg today in Wells, Minn., have suffered because of the trade war.

But Bloomberg’s company also has significant financial interests in China. He was criticized for saying during a September television interview, amid the pro-democracy protests in Hong Kong and China’s ongoing repression of Muslim minorities, that President Xi Jinping “is not a dictator.” Xi, he explained, “has to satisfy his constituents or he’s not going to survive.”

When I asked about his relationship with Beijing last night, Bloomberg said that “every U.S. businessperson and every big company has no choice but to deal with them.”

“China is a big market for American products like soybeans,” he said. “I would recommend that you read a story in today's New York Times.”

I know it's a competitor, but you should read the story about who's actually paying the tariffs. It's virtually 100 percent the American consumer, not the Chinese.”

Bloomberg added that there are “complex” issues at play. “I have tried to urge the Chinese to adopt more democratic, with a small ‘d,’ policies,” he said. “On human rights, I think some of the things that they do are a disgrace. But we need China, if for no other reason, than to save this planet because of climate change. You cannot solve the problem without China. ... For us to walk away from China and have a battle with them when we need them to do something that's going to be in not just our interest, but our salvation, that doesn't make a lot of sense to me.”

At the end of our interview, Bloomberg reiterated his suggestion to read “Catastrophe 1914,” the book about World War I. “I know who won, but I won't spoil it for you,” he joked.

Lamenting the punitiveness of the Treaty of Versailles that ended the war, as well as the influenza pandemic after the armistice, Bloomberg said he's thought through various counterfactuals. “If we'd had Harry Truman with the Marshall Plan, we probably wouldn't have had a second war,” he said.

He also recalled walking around the trenches at the Somme battlefield during a trip to France. “Remember, the allies never set foot on German soil,” he said. “I've always thought that was one of the reasons the German military didn't care so much about stopping Hitler. Deep down inside, they thought they got sold out. Now, history would probably say when the Americans were coming in,

[surrendering] was the right thing to do. You would have gotten massacred.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE
HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by  LivelIntent

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Trump on Soleimani: 'His past was horrible'

THE LATEST ON IRAN:

-- The more than a dozen ballistic missiles that Iran launched last night targeted two Iraqi bases housing American military personnel. Karen DeYoung, Paul Sonne and Dan Lamothe report: "The president, meeting late Tuesday night with his senior national security advisers at the White House, issued his initial response on Twitter and struck a less bellicose tone. He suggested but stopped short of saying that there were no initial reports of U.S. casualties. 'All is well! Missiles launched from Iran at two military bases located in Iraq. Assessment of casualties & damages taking place now. So far, so good!' Trump wrote. 'We have the most powerful and well equipped military anywhere in the world, by far! I will be making a statement tomorrow morning.' ...

"House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), among several congressional leaders notified of the Iranian action in telephone calls from Vice President Pence, said on Twitter, 'We must ensure the safety of our servicemembers, including ending needless provocations from the Administration and demanding that Iran cease its violence. America & world cannot afford war.' ... The strikes, which took place near dawn in Iraq, were initially announced by Iranian media, which called them 'the first step . . . in revenge' for the killing of Soleimani. ...

“An IRGC statement broadcast on state television warned that any further American action would bring ‘a painful response’ ... It also threatened other countries housing U.S. bases, saying that they, too, would be hit with ‘revenge’ operations if any U.S. strikes were launched from them. ... In using ballistic missiles, Iran relied on what the Defense Department considers one of its core capabilities. In a briefing held in November, a senior analyst focused on Iran told reporters at the Pentagon that the missiles constituted a primary component of Tehran’s strategic deterrent.”

-- One of the two bases attacked, Irbil, is a major hub for U.S. and coalition military activity in Iraq. Erin Cunningham, Adam Taylor and Michael Brice-Saddler report: “Many U.S. forces pass through Irbil on their way in and out of a network of much smaller bases in Syria. During the peak of the campaign against the Islamic State in Iraq, military officials also oversaw a major battle in the nearby city of Mosul from Irbil. The city, like most of Iraqi Kurdistan, has been considered safer for U.S. personnel than other parts of Iraq.”

-- A Ukrainian passenger jet with more than 170 people on board crashed in Iran shortly after takeoff from the Tehran airport, killing all aboard. Isabelle Khurshudyan, Erin Cunningham and

Sarah Dadouch report: “In the aftermath of the crash, Ukraine has banned all flights from Iranian air space, a move also taken by several other countries in light of the rising tensions between Iran and U.S. forces in the region. The Boeing 737 likely crashed due to technical difficulties, Iranian state media quoted Ali Kahshani, a senior public relations official at the airport, as saying. Ukraine’s embassy in Iran at first concurred, issuing a statement ruling out terrorism, but then took it down without explanation. A later statement from the embassy said that a commission is investigating the causes of the crash, and that ‘any statements about the causes of the accident before the decision of the Commission are not official.’ ...

“The aircraft involved in Wednesday’s incident, a Boeing 737-800, was three years old and purchased from the manufacturer as new by Ukraine International Airlines, the carrier said in a statement. It had its last routine technical maintenance on Monday. A flight-data recorder from the plane has been recovered. ... Though the Boeing 737-800 has not been flagged for issues, the newer 737 Max was grounded worldwide last year after the crash of an Ethiopian Airlines flight on March 10.”

-- The Trump administration insisted the U.S. military would remain in Iraq, setting up a conflict with senior Iraqi officials, who want an immediate withdrawal. Dan Lamothe, Mustafa Salim and Liz Sly report: “Trump, speaking at the White House, said that withdrawing the estimated 5,000 U.S. troops would be the ‘worst thing to happen to Iraq.’ ‘At some point, we want to get out,’ Trump said. ‘But this isn’t the right point.’ ... The chaos has been highlighted by the reaction in Baghdad to a letter sent by a senior U.S. commander to Iraqi officials Monday. The document suggested that the United States may be preparing to withdraw its troops. ... Iraqi officials said Tuesday that they are interpreting the letter as notification that U.S. troops will leave. Acting prime minister Adel Abdul Mahdi said the document 'was clear' and expressed exasperation with conflicting U.S. signals. ... Defense Secretary Mark T. Esper, speaking at the Pentagon, dismissed the letter as 'a draft' that 'has no value,' and he insinuated that its release to the public in Iraq may have had ulterior motives."

-- Some NATO troops are beginning to leave Iraq. From the New York Times: "NATO is removing some of the trainers who have been working with Iraqi soldiers battling the Islamic State. ... The NATO secretary general, Jens Stoltenberg, announced on Monday that the training had been temporarily suspended."

Iranian ballistic missile ranges

Iran's arsenal of ballistic missiles can reach up to 2,000 kilometers (more than 1,200 miles). According to the Defense Intelligence Agency, the country has a substantial amount of close- and medium-range missiles at their disposal.

Source: Defense Intelligence Agency

THE WASHINGTON POST

-- The White House stumbled in its initial public response to

Soleimani's killing. David Nakamura and Josh Dawsey report:

“Trump and his top advisers have refused to provide details of what prompted the decision to strike and offered conflicting accounts over whether Soleimani was coordinating imminent attacks on U.S.

facilities in the Middle East. The lack of clear information continued

late Tuesday in Washington, after Iran said it retaliated for Soleimani's

death with missile attacks on military bases in Iraq. The White House announced Trump would make no public remarks in response Tuesday night, nor would any other senior administration officials. Hours later, Trump tweeted that he would address the nation Wednesday morning. ... Previously, Trump had caused an international uproar after threatening to attack dozens of Iranian cultural sites — only to retreat Tuesday following statements from his defense secretary and other officials dismissing such actions as illegal.

"Vice President Pence is preparing a speech slated for next week on Iran policy, one official said, in an attempt to provide a more cohesive explanation of the president's strategy. The flurry of events has led to a sense of confusion in the White House and a lack of clarity around a highly sensitive operation that the administrations of his two predecessors, Barack Obama and George W. Bush, had chosen not to take due to risks that it could spark a regional war."

-- All quiet on White House front Tuesday night? "At the White House, where the president assembled his relatively skeletal war Cabinet after nightfall, there was a vacuum of information.

Officials were tight-lipped and bleary-eyed. The press secretary did not answer questions, only briefly ducking out of her office a bit before 9 p.m. to head home for the evening. A presidential address was considered but not delivered. Trump's Twitter feed, often a pulsating applause meter during live events, at first stayed frozen in time," report Phil Rucker, Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey. "For a few hours, at least, with the United States at the dangerous precipice of a hot war with Iran, there was an outward appearance of calm at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. — or at least quiet."

-- Which is it? Some senior administration officials argue Soleimani was killed as retaliation for increasing Iranian aggression, while others insist without evidence the aim was to avert an "imminent" threat. Karoun Demirjian, Karen DeYoung and Shane Harris report: "At one end of the spectrum, national security adviser Robert O'Brien argued on 'Fox & Friends' that [Trump] authorized eliminating Soleimani because the Iranian general and his allies 'were looking to kill American diplomats and soldiers in significant numbers in the coming days.' But in comments before reporters at the State Department, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo pointed to Iran's past behavior as justification, arguing that 'the days that led up to the strike' were what made the response urgent — and that the 'continuing efforts on behalf of this terrorist to build out a network of campaign activities that were going to lead potentially to the death of many more Americans' were an additional concern. Defense Secretary Mark T. Esper split the difference, noting that there was 'exquisite intelligence' — a term of significance in spy circles — indicating that Soleimani was 'conducting preparing, planning military operations' akin to the 'terrorist activities' he had been pursuing against the United States for more than two decades.

"While some nuance is common when interpreting intelligence, the mixed messaging among Trump's top advisers ... is potentially problematic for senior officials as they begin to brief lawmakers who remain divided over the operation. ... According to Esper, only the Gang of Eight will receive the 'exquisite intelligence that ... was one of the factors that led to the decision to strike at Soleimani.' Gang of Eight lawmakers who attended the Tuesday briefing with intelligence leaders refused to comment on what they heard. But in the intelligence community, the term 'exquisite' is often applied to satellites or other highly classified reconnaissance systems that provide detailed information, including the words an individual spoke or the person's precise movements. Esper's choice of words suggested the U.S. could have intercepted communications or other intelligence that he believes revealed Soleimani's intentions."

-- House Democrats may not vote this week, after all, on a war powers resolution after Iran's attack on U.S. assets. Politico reports that the prospect of intensifying conflict in the region, and the unwillingness of Republicans to break with the president, complicates the timing: "House Democrats say they are likely to pause, if not abandon, their plans for a war powers resolution. ... In a private meeting, some Democrats pushed to add a measure from Rep. Ro Khanna (D-Calif.) that would defund any U.S. military action against Iran without first receiving congressional approval ... Moderate Democrats had their own reservations about the whole exercise, and are unwilling to draft a resolution that would hamstring the military in its response to future attacks. ... Some progressives, meanwhile, were looking to go even further. Two lawmakers, [Rep. Barbara] Lee [D-Calif.] and Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.), had been pushing their own version of a war powers resolution over the weekend."

-- Trump has cited the death of an American defense contractor as a reason for the missile strikes against Iraqi militias he ordered last month. The man has been identified as an interpreter who was born in Iraq and lived in Sacramento. Aaron C. Davis reports: “Nawres Hamid, 33, became a naturalized citizen in 2017, according to his widow. He was the father of two boys, ages 2 and 8, she said. In recent years, as an Arabic interpreter for U.S. forces in Iraq, Hamid was known to decorate his living space with pictures of the children, according to a co-worker. Hamid was killed on Dec. 27 when U.S. authorities say an Iranian-backed militia fired rockets at a military base near the northern Iraqi city of Kirkuk. The attack, which injured several coalition troops, prompted Trump to order missile strikes against Iraqi militias. ... Hamid’s death has been a rallying cry for Trump.”

-- Trump's reelection campaign is already running ads on Facebook touting Suleimani’s death. From the Times: “Thanks to the swift actions of our commander in chief, Iranian General Qassem Soleimani is no longer a threat to the United States, or to the world,” several of the Trump ads read, using an alternate spelling of the Iranian general’s name. Some featured pictures of a beaming Mr. Trump from one of his campaign rallies; others showed a stoic, finger-waving president, also in front of supporters. The ads asked voters to take the ‘Official Trump Military Survey,’ directing users to Mr. Trump’s re-election campaign website. All told, the Trump campaign has run nearly 800 distinct Facebook ads about the killing of General Suleimani, according to Acronym, a progressive digital strategy group.”

-- Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) canceled a campaign fundraiser in D.C. in light of the Iran developments. Klobuchar said she was “closely monitoring what is happening in Iraq” and backed out of the event that was to be held at the home of a former Yale classmate.

(Washington Examiner)

-- Rudy Giuliani — and his old Iranian clients — are cheering Soleimani’s death. From the Daily Beast: “The former New York City mayor has had a long-standing interest in Iranian affairs. He was once paid by organizations linked to an Iranian dissident group formally designated by the U.S. government as a terrorist organization—until Giuliani helped get the outfit off the terror list. As recently as the summer of 2018, Giuliani appeared on stage at an event for the People's Mojahedin of Iran, known by its Farsi acronym, MEK. He’s stayed in touch with the group’s U.S. lobbyists, meeting with representatives of its political arm as recently as last fall. And when Trump authorized the strike that killed [Soleimani], Giuliani jubilantly referred to the MEK in the first person. Soleimani was ‘directly responsible for killing some of my MEK people,’ he (said) in an interview on Monday afternoon. ‘We don’t like him very much.’”

-- Mike Pompeo ordered U.S. diplomats to limit any contact with Iranian opposition groups, including MEK, which has paid thousands of dollars in speaking fees to former national security adviser John Bolton in addition to retaining Giuliani. From Bloomberg News: “The directive about Mujahedeen-e-Khalq, its offshoot, the National Council of Resistance of Iran, and five other groups was delivered in a cable sent to all U.S. diplomatic outposts on Tuesday. ... It says meetings with the groups could jeopardize U.S. diplomacy with Iran. ... But it provoked displeasure from some Iran hawks, who argued the U.S. should be encouraging contacts with such groups, not discouraging them.”

-- Saudi authorities are warning of a powerful and destructive cyberattack launched on Dec. 29 that experts have tied to Iran.

From Yahoo News: “Officials in Riyadh, who nicknamed the malware ‘Dustman,’ did not directly attribute the malicious attack to Iran, according to a Saudi technical report. ... However, according to experts who reviewed the technical report and analyzed possible motivation and similarities to past attacks, Tehran is the most likely culprit. The ‘wiper’ attack, which was identified by the Saudi National Cybersecurity Authority, used malware to erase digital data belonging to unidentified targets in the Middle East.”

-- Joe Biden, facing scrutiny of his foreign policy record, sharpened his criticism of Trump’s “incompetence” on Iran. Matt

Viser reports: “Biden, blasting [Trump] as ‘dangerously incompetent’ for his handling of the crisis with Iran, said Trump’s ‘impulsive decision’ to order the killing of a top military official from that country put the United States at risk of greater international conflict. ... Biden’s comments were striking for someone who has spent much of his political career with a reputation as a foreign policy expert who has often embraced American use of power in the world. As a senator, he voted in 2002 to authorize the use of force in Iraq — a vote that has become a point of contention in the Democratic race as Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) presents himself as the true antiwar candidate in tune with rising public skepticism of drawn-out military intervention. ... Biden’s toughened rhetoric on Trump and Iran on Tuesday seemed designed to present Biden with a more nuanced position — more sharply critical of Trump’s decision than his previous comments but not as black-and-white as Sanders’s stance.”

-- Fox News's Tucker Carlson has become one of Trump's most vocal critics on Iran. Kayla Epstein reports: "Carlson has used his namesake show to criticize Trump, his military leaders and high-ranking foreign policy officials for their decision to strike. On Friday, the conservative pundit criticized 'chest-beaters' for 'making the usual warlike noises.' On Monday, he questioned why conservatives who were long suspicious of the military and intelligence community were suddenly trusting them on Iran. Carlson is not the only critic of Trump's decision, but he is one of the loudest voices on the right. ... When Carlson broke with Trump on the issue of Iran, viewers, critics and Twitter observers took notice. 'These anti-war segments from Tucker Carlson don't mean he's good now,' former Barack Obama spokesman and 'Pod Save America' host Tommy Vietor tweeted."

-- Commentary from the opinion page:

- Leon Panetta, former defense secretary and CIA director: "Trump is facing the greatest test of his presidency."
- Dana Milbank: "Trump to America: Impeachment and war are none of your business."
- Molly Roberts: "The terrible honesty of World War III memes."
- Helaine Olen: "Money for war, but not for the poor."
- Marc A. Thiessen: "Reagan would have been proud of Trump's Iran strike."
- Sen. James M. Inhofe \(R-Okla.\), chairman of the Armed Services Committee: "Iran cannot afford an all-out war."

- Alexandra Petri: “This is a draft version of this column that was circulated by mistake.”

McConnell says he has votes to begin impeachment trial

THE INVESTIGATIONS:

-- After Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) announced that he had enough votes to proceed with Trump’s impeachment trial without reaching an agreement on witnesses with Democrats, Nancy Pelosi said the impeachment articles still won’t go to the Senate until she learns more about how the trial would be conducted. Felicia Sonmez, Colby Itkowitz, John Wagner and Seung Min Kim report: “In a letter to Democratic lawmakers Tuesday night, Pelosi hinted that she would not submit the articles nor tap House impeachment managers — who will effectively serve as the prosecution in the Senate — until McConnell publicly releases the legislation that would detail the parameters and procedures for the trial. ‘Sadly, Leader McConnell has made clear that his loyalty is to the President and not the Constitution,' Pelosi wrote in the letter to colleagues. 'Leader McConnell has insisted that the approach under consideration is identical to those of the Clinton trial and that 'fair is fair.' This is simply not true. This process is not only unfair but designed to deprive Senators and the American people of crucial documents and testimony. Under the Clinton trial, witnesses were deposed.'"

-- In his announcement, McConnell said he has the votes to begin the trial in the format that he and most of his members have long envisioned: opening arguments for both the House impeachment managers and Trump's defense team, as well as time for senators to submit questions in writing. Seung Min Kim, Mike DeBonis and Rachael Bade report: "Under the majority leader's plan, a decision on whether to call witnesses would be made once that first phase of the trial is over — a move announced Tuesday to put the pressure back on Pelosi amid simmering frustration from GOP senators over the speaker's delay in sending the articles. That echoes the format of President [Bill] Clinton's trial 21 years ago, and McConnell has been able to persuade his members that Trump should be treated in the same fashion as Clinton.

"Asked if he could guarantee witnesses will be called, McConnell said that matter would be discussed after the Senate votes to proceed — not before. 'The way it works, at the risk of being redundant, is that 51 senators determine what we do, and there will be, I'm sure, an intense discussion . . . about the whole witness issue,' McConnell said. 'The people calling the witnesses won't necessarily be us; it will be the prosecution or the defense.' ... Pelosi's refusal to transmit the articles ... has also spurred a number of Republican senators to craft legislation and strategize about how they could begin the trial without the House's blessing. But McConnell, speaking privately to his members, made clear that he would not make any moves on a trial until the articles had been formally transmitted."

-- Federal prosecutors said former national security adviser Michael Flynn deserves to serve up to six months in prison, reversing their earlier recommendation that he should get probation after his attacks on the FBI and the Justice Department. Spencer S. Hsu and Rachel Weiner report: "The government revoked its request for leniency weeks after Flynn's sentencing judge categorically rejected Flynn's claims of prosecutorial misconduct and that he had been duped into pleading guilty to lying to FBI agents about his Russian contacts after the 2016 U.S. election. ... Flynn faces sentencing Jan. 28 before U.S. District Judge Emmet G. Sullivan in Washington. Flynn defense attorney Sidney Powell is scheduled to file his sentencing request Jan. 22. ... Flynn, 61, pleaded guilty Dec. 1, 2017, to lying about his communications with then-Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak during the presidential transition, becoming the highest-ranking Trump official charged and one of the first to cooperate with Mueller's office."

-- A panel of judges ruled that a defamation lawsuit, alleging Trump sexually assaulted a former "Apprentice" contestant more than a decade ago, can be heard by New York's highest state court. Joshua Partlow reports: "The decision by an appellate division of the New York Supreme Court granted Trump's legal team's request to have the case heard by the New York Court of Appeals. Trump's team has argued that he should not be subject to actions in state courts while he is in the White House. Trump had been scheduled to give a deposition by Jan. 31, but that is now on hold. A statement from the firm of Trump's lawyer, Marc Kasowitz, said, 'we are pleased' about the decision. The defamation lawsuit was brought by Summer Zervos. ... Her case has been moving slowly through the New York courts and could potentially be decided before the 2020 election."

-- A major donor to Trump's inaugural committee intends to plead guilty to obstruction of justice after federal prosecutors filed a new charge alleging that the investor backdated a check and deleted emails to hinder an investigation into where he got money he ultimately gave to the committee. Matt Zapotosky reports: "Imaad Zuberi — a venture capitalist who gave significant money to Democrats and Republicans over the years — was accused by federal prosecutors in New York of trying to hide from investigators that a $900,000 donation he made to Trump's inaugural committee was actually funded by others, court records show. Zuberi already had pleaded guilty last year in federal court in Los Angeles to an array of charges stemming from a lobbying scheme in which he arranged illegal campaign contributions, hid his work from the government and cheated on his taxes. David Kelley, Zuberi's attorney, said he had reached an agreement with federal prosecutors in New York to transfer the new matter to Los Angeles, where Zuberi intends to plead guilty. Provided the arrangement is approved by the court, he would presumably be sentenced on the West Coast in connection with both matters."

-- Rep. Duncan Hunter (R-Calif.) will resign from Congress effective Jan. 13, more than a month after he pleaded guilty in federal court to misusing campaign funds. Felicia Sonmez and Mike DeBonis report: “The six-term congressman is scheduled to be sentenced in March. He faces a maximum of five years in prison, although he is expected to serve less than one year. Hunter and his wife, Margaret, were charged in August 2018 with using more than $250,000 in campaign funds to pay for personal expenses including family vacations, theater tickets and school tuition. ... Days after his guilty plea last month, the California Republican announced that he would resign from Congress ‘shortly after the holidays.’ The move meant he would collect one last full government paycheck, as House members get paid on the last business day of each month.”

Strong earthquake leaves widespread blackout, damage in Puerto Rico

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- Powerful earthquakes in Puerto Rico have left the already fragile territory in a blackout with reports of injuries and at least one death. Cristina Corujo, Arelis R. Hernández and Samantha Schmidt report: “Powerful earthquakes this week, including a major 6.4-magnitude temblor early Tuesday morning, triggered widespread power outages and damage, leaving an already fragile Puerto Rico reeling once again. Schools, homes and churches along the southern coastline crumbled. Hospitals evacuated patients. A signature tourist attraction collapsed into the sea. At least one person died, crushed by a wall that toppled in his home. Tuesday's earthquake followed a 5.8-magnitude quake on Monday and was among numerous seismic events along an underwater fault line in recent days. All of them sent shock waves across the U.S. territory amid fears that further tremors could knock out key infrastructure. ... Gov. Wanda Vázquez Garced declared a state of emergency Tuesday and said authorities were evaluating the damage and inspecting Puerto Rico's power generation plants — all of which are located along the southern coast near the origin of the seismic activity. She also told government employees to stay home, as more aftershocks are expected. ...

“U.S. Rep. Raúl M. Grijalva (D-Ariz.), who chairs the committee that oversees U.S. territories including Puerto Rico, urged the Trump administration to release remaining federal disaster recovery funds from Hurricane Maria and deliver new aid quickly. ‘The Trump administration’s indifference and incompetence have already cost residents of Puerto Rico their lives and their livelihoods, and continuing that pattern now is completely unacceptable,’ Grijalva said in a statement. ‘I urge this administration to remember that lives are at stake and the public is watching.’”

-- Mexicans seeking refuge in the United States to escape violence in their homeland fear even worse dangers if they are sent to Guatemala under a new Trump administration plan to crack down on asylum seekers. From Reuters: “It was unclear when the United States would begin sending Mexicans to Guatemala. The Mexican government estimated that 900 Mexican asylum seekers could be affected from February, without giving a timeframe or explaining how it reached that number. Mexicans who say their homes are unsafe due to drug gang extortion said the policy leaves them few options. ‘I can’t go home, they’ve already kidnapped my brother and son,’ said Carlos, a Mexican seeking to reach the United States via the border city of Tijuana. He said he had fled criminal gangs in the southwestern state of Guerrero. ‘They’re after me. If I go back they’re sure to kill me. If I’m not safe in Mexico, I’ll be even less safe in Guatemala,’ he said, requesting his last name be withheld for security reasons. ... Sitting in a chilly camp in Ciudad Juarez, one woman from the state of Zacatecas, who declined to give her name, said she was trying to reach the United States because she had family there, and would be safe. ‘I’m not going because of the American dream, I’m going and taking my kids because we need security, we need safety,’ she said in tears, describing how she had fled a job as a scientist in a laboratory after she starting being followed and receiving phone threats. She described the new policy as pressure aimed at making people like her give up her asylum claim.”

-- The Los Angeles Police Department suspended more than a dozen officers after a boy was wrongly labeled a gang member. From the New York Times: “The Los Angeles Police Department opened an investigation early last year, when a mother in the San Fernando Valley approached a local police station to tell officers about a letter she had received saying that her son, a minor, had been identified as a gang member. She told a supervisor that he had been mislabeled, the Police Department said in a statement on Tuesday. ... When the supervisor reviewed body camera footage and car recordings, they did not match the documentation completed by an officer, according to the department. Over the following months, the investigation grew to encompass more than a dozen officers in the elite metro division who were suspected of misrepresenting information in field interview cards, the Police Department said. ... But the issues with incorrectly labeling people gang members extend far beyond falsifying field notes, according to Sean Garcia-Leys, a lawyer at the Urban Peace Institute. He said he had had dozens of clients over the past two years who had been wrongly added to CalGang.”

-- The cancer death rate in the United States fell 2.2 percent in 2017 – the biggest one-year drop ever – propelled by gains against lung cancer, the American Cancer Society said. Laurie McGinley reports: “Declines in the mortality rate for lung cancer have accelerated in recent years in response to new treatments and falling smoking rates, said Rebecca Siegel, lead author of Cancer Statistics 2020. ... Because lung cancer is the leading cause of cancer deaths, accounting for 1 in 4, any change in the mortality rate has a large effect on the overall cancer death rate, Siegel noted. She described the gains against lung cancer, and against another often deadly cancer, melanoma, as ‘exciting.’ But, she added, ‘the news this year is mixed’ because of slower progress against colorectal, breast and prostate cancers.”

-- In an internal post, Facebook executive Andrew Bosworth said the company was responsible for Trump's 2016 victory and that it may help him win again this year. But he argued executives must resist the temptation to make changes that could alter the course of legitimate political debate. Craig Timberg and Nitasha Tiku report: "The post ... reflected the combination of anguish, defensiveness and brash self-confidence that many of the company's employees have more privately expressed in the difficult aftermath of Trump's unexpected victory. Bosworth's post also shed light on the thinking within the company's highest levels as it heads into a new election year amid controversies over its reluctance to police lies by politicians or limit their ability to narrowly target small groups of voters. Critics have said that addressing both issues is key to helping stanch the flood of disinformation on the platform. ...

"Bosworth dismissed the idea that Russian efforts to manipulate U.S. voters over Facebook, a subject of extensive government investigation and journalistic scrutiny, were crucial to Trump's victory. Bosworth, who shared his post publicly after the New York Times published it, also played down the importance of the use of Facebook data by the political consultancy Cambridge Analytica, which worked for the Trump campaign and boasted of its ability to target ads using psychological profiles of voters derived from their social media posts. Rather, said Bosworth, who ran advertising at Facebook for several years, Trump 'got elected because he ran the single best digital ad campaign I've ever seen from any advertiser. Period.' Bosworth, a self-proclaimed liberal who donated heavily to 2016 Democratic Party nominee Hillary Clinton, particularly praised Trump's leading digital-advertising adviser in 2016, Brad Parscale, who is now managing Trump's reelection campaign. ...

"Citing J.R.R.'s Tolkien 'Lord of the Rings' epic, Bosworth also expressed serious concern about the possible corrupting influence of Facebook's power, comparing it to the ring carried by the hobbit Frodo Baggins. 'I find myself thinking of the Lord of the Rings at this moment. Specifically when Frodo offers the ring to Galadrial and she imagines using the power righteously, at first, but knows it will eventually corrupt her. As tempting as it is to use the tools available to us to change the outcome, I am confident we must never do that or we will become that which we fear,' [he wrote]."

-- Ivanka Trump's keynote address at CES — one of the world's largest technology conferences — sparked backlash. Cat Zakrzewski reports: "The first daughter's keynote speech at CES made a pitch for programs that would help blue-collar workers keep pace with a rapidly evolving economy and addressed strategies to re-skill workers, develop apprenticeships and invest in science and technology education programs. Trump has focused on workforce development in her work as adviser to the president, and she serves with Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross as the co-chair of the National Council for the American Worker. ... Inside the room, her comments drew applause. But the inclusion of Trump in the speaker lineup sparked some backlash in the tech industry, as critics said there are women with more technical experience who are better qualified to speak there. Hundreds of people have tweeted #boycottCES since the conference organizers announced Trump would speak at the show late last month, including on Tuesday. Some were particularly critical because the conference drew widespread criticism in both 2017 and 2018 for failing to bring in female keynote speakers, part of a longer track record.”

-- The Supreme Court ordered the Trump administration and states challenging Obamacare to respond by Friday to an appeal filed by defenders of the health-care law. From NBC News: “Such a highly abbreviated timeline — the rules normally allow a month for filing a response — gives the court the option to take up the case during its current term, which would mean a ruling on a contentious issue this spring, just as the presidential campaign heats up. Nineteen blue states, led by California, asked the Supreme Court last week for a quick decision on whether to take the case. They’re appealing last month’s ruling by a federal appeals court that said Obamacare’s individual mandate is unconstitutional and that the rest of the law cannot survive without it.”

-- Harvey Weinstein was threatened with jail for repeatedly using his cellphone while in court during the second day of his New York trial on sexual assault charges. From CNN: “At the beginning of court proceedings in New York, Judge James Burke raised his voice and reprimanded Weinstein and his defense team, specifically Arthur Aidala, for Weinstein’s use of his cell phones. ‘He was calling and texting a minute ago,’ Burke said to the defense team. Weinstein said, ‘I’m sorry’ and hung his head at one point. Donna Rotunno, another defense attorney, said she was not aware. ‘He was aware,’ the judge replied. Burke said this was an ‘ongoing issue’ and referenced warnings at previous hearings. He said he warned Aidala explicitly in ‘somewhat unrefined terms’ about Weinstein’s cell phone.

Finally, he said that if Weinstein uses his cell phone in court one more time he will be taken into custody. 'Mr. Aidala, this is on you if he blows it,' Burke said."

-- The Secret Service is investigating yet another incident at Trump's Mar-a-Lago club. From the Miami Herald: "Palm Beach police say they are conducting an 'open and active criminal investigation' at the club. ...The Secret Service is leading the investigation and no arrest has been made, according to the Palm Beach Police Department. 'During an encounter with local law enforcement, an individual made non-threatening statements about a person under Secret Service protection,' a law enforcement official with knowledge of the incident told the Miami Herald. 'As part of standard practice, Palm Beach police contacted the local Secret Service office.'"

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

As the situation with Iran escalates, it is worth remembering that many key positions in the administration remain unfilled:

Garrett M. Graff
@vermontgmg

Reminder that as this crisis escalates, we have no Director of National Intelligence, no Dep Dir, no Homeland Security Secretary, no Dep Sec, no head of CBP or ICE, no State Dept Under Sec of Arms Control, no Asst Sec for Europe, and no Navy Sec.

 61K 12:15 AM - Jan 8, 2020

 39.5K people are talking about this

Trump met with representatives of the Saudi government:

Josh Dawsey ✓

@jdawsey1

white house did not announce or readout this meeting.
twitter.com/kbsalsaud/stat...

Khalid bin Salman خالد بن سلمان ✓ @kbsalsaud

Upon directives from HRH the Crown Prince, I had the pleasure of meeting with @realDonaldTrump yesterday to deliver a message from the Crown Prince, and review aspects of our bilateral cooperation, including efforts to confront regional and international challenges.

♥ 8,864 3:31 PM - Jan 7, 2020

💬 5,095 people are talking about this

Flashback:

southpaw

@nycsouthpaw

“Khalid [bin Salman] told [Jamal] Khashoggi, a contributing columnist to The Washington Post, that he should go to the Saudi Consulate in Istanbul to retrieve the documents and gave him assurances that it would be the documents and gave him assurances that it would be safe to do so." washingtonpost.com/world/national...

twitter.com/kbsalsaud/stat...

CIA concludes Saudi crown prince ordered Jamal Kh...

Audio recordings, intercepted phone calls and other intelligence link Mohammed bin Salman to killing that washingtonpost.com

Khalid bin Salman خالد بن سلمان  @kbsalsaud

Upon directives from HRH the Crown Prince, I had the pleasure of meeting with @realDonaldTrump yesterday to deliver a message from the Crown Prince, and review aspects of our bilateral cooperation, including efforts to confront regional and international challenges.

♡ 1,296 4:19 PM - Jan 7, 2020

894 people are talking about this

When Trump eventually tweeted about the meeting, he made no mention of Jamal Khashoggi:

David Corn   @DavidCornDC

So nothing was said about Jamal Khashoggi--and his brutal murder by the Saudi government? Not a shocker. twitter.com/realDonaldTrump...

Donald J. Trump  @realDonaldTrump

Had a very good meeting with @kbsalsaud of Saudi Arabia. We discussed Trade, Military, Oil Prices, Security, and Stability in the Middle East!

 1,885  7:07 PM - Jan 7, 2020

559 people are talking about this

The U.N.'s agency for culture appeared to subtweet Trump:

UNESCO
@UNESCO

This is what is left of the Great Mosque of Aleppo, Syria.
It was one of the oldest in the world.

Nothing, we repeat, NOTHING, can justify the destruction of cultural heritage.

We must ALWAYS #ProtectHeritage.

on.unesco.org/2n7T3lk

♡ 362 5:00 AM - Jan 8, 2020

💬 188 people are talking about this

An Iranian official tweeted his nation's flag just after the strikes, mirroring Trump, who tweeted the U.S. flag after Soleimani was killed:

Geraldo Rivera said he was going to speak out against Iran escalation on Sean Hannity's show, but then he got bumped:

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

"Nazis didn't fall out of the sky in January '33. That movement is rooted in German history, and you can trace those roots back into the 19th century, and you can see a lot of strands coming together. That's true of the moment we live in. It didn't just happen yesterday or last year," Holocaust Museum director Sara Bloomfield said on the warning signs of fascism. (Rachel Manteuffel)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

A Border Patrol officer described what it was like to separate migrant children from their parents in a Frontline documentary:

This is what 2020 candidates have said about the escalating tensions with Iran:

2020 candidates speak out against escalating tensions with Iran

Trump once said he likes to obey the law, but Stephen Colbert said he isn't so sure about that:

Seth Meyers moderated a “debate” between some 2020 Democratic candidates:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Mike Bloomberg wants more engagement with Iran, North Korea and China
Date: Wednesday, January 8, 2020 9:46:12 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Mike Bloomberg wants more engagement with Iran, North Korea and China

Mike Bloomberg visits a coffee shop in Richmond on Tuesday. (Steve Helber/AP)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Mike Bloomberg thinks that maybe “an emergency phone” line should be installed so that Iranian and American officials can easily get in touch, like the red teletype hotline that connected the Pentagon with the Kremlin after the Cuban missile crisis. This, he hopes, could avoid misunderstandings that might lead to full-scale war.

The billionaire former mayor of New York, running for the Democratic presidential nomination, believes broadly in the value of engaging with American adversaries. “We should talk to the North Koreans. I think [President] Trump is right on that,” Bloomberg said during a half-hour interview last night. “We need China,” he added.

Bloomberg called to discuss the economic plan that he will roll out today at a community college in the South Side of Chicago, on a soybean farm in rural Minnesota and at a converted tire factory in Akron, Ohio.

But he grew most animated when discussing World War I. When I asked how he’d handle the current Iran crisis if he were in the Oval Office, Bloomberg mused at length about the “emotion” and “miscalculations” a century ago in Europe that spiraled into a four-year conflict, bringing down monarchies and forever changing the nature of combat. He said the best book he’s read in a while is “Catastrophe 1914: Europe Goes to War,” by the British journalist Max Hastings.

Bloomberg noted that most wars start over something relatively minor before spiraling out of control. “You read history, which I gather he has not done,” said the 77-year-old, referring to the president. “All of a sudden the small thing blows up.”

He recalled the Winston Churchill quote that “meeting jaw to jaw is better than war.”

“That’s why we should talk to the North Koreans,” he said. “Yes, [Trump] hasn’t gotten them to stop developing weapons or anything, but I’d still rather have contact – and the same thing with China and the same thing with all of these countries.”

Bloomberg is running an outside-the-box campaign. He is not campaigning in the first four early states, but he’s building an unmatched field operation in the states that vote on Super Tuesday in March and beyond, hoping that he can emerge from a crowded field as an electable alternative to more liberal candidates who might emerge from the Iowa caucuses.

Just six weeks after joining the race, Bloomberg is fifth in the national polling average, garnering about 6 percent among Democrats. He's hired more than 800 staffers, with 500 of them spread across field offices in more than 30 states. The effort has already spent approximately $150 million on television and radio commercials – and another $20 million or so on Facebook and Google ads.

Iraqi Kurdish security forces visit site of Iran missile strike

We spoke around the time Iran launched ballistic missiles toward two bases in Iraq that house U.S. troops but before the Pentagon confirmed the strikes and gave word that there were no casualties. “I don't know if this goes any further,” Bloomberg said. “I don't know what comes out of this. I can't read the tea leaves to know about tomorrow. But I do know that if you're making irresponsible decisions, the likelihood of bad and even calamitous results grows.”

Referring to the drone strike that killed Quds Force Commander Maj. Gen. Qasem Soleimani in Baghdad, which prompted Iran’s retaliation, Bloomberg added: “Nobody should feel sorry for the guy that was killed. He was a bad guy who killed a lot of Americans. Two presidents before President Trump looked at the opportunity to kill the guy and decided not to. ... We don't know what the intelligence is or was, and that will come out eventually. ... The problem, to me, is that we have a president who tends to make decisions irrationally and impulsively and recklessly. I don't know that he isn't doing that this time.”

Bloomberg criticized Trump for marginalizing experts and debasing the value of expertise, which has caused attrition among career professionals in the foreign service. “I know that staffs get annoying, but you do need them,” he said. “And any good businessperson, which Donald is not, ... would tell you that you don't make decisions alone. The board would throw you the hell out if that's what you said you did.”

When I noted that Bloomberg lacks the kind of traditional foreign policy experience of someone like Joe Biden, who spent 35 years in the Senate and then eight years as vice president, he emphasized not just that he was mayor of “the most international city in the world” – as home to the United Nations – but highlighted his overseas business interests.

“My company does business in almost every country in the world,” he said. “We don’t do business with Iran or North Korea or Yemen, I think, but fundamentally we do business in virtually every country. In terms of experience, internationally, I think I know what I'm doing.”

Bloomberg said the State Department’s job is “building relationships and having backdoor conversations so that we don't make a mistake and misjudge what the other side is doing.” He likened the benefits from open channels of diplomacy to the plusses of open-office floor plans, which he said foster more collaboration and cut down on leaking when he was mayor. “I’m a big believer in things like seating plans and open plans and how you treat people,” he said. “That has enormous impact on how they behave.”

Forbes magazine pegs Bloomberg as the world’s ninth-richest person, with an estimated net worth of $55.5 billion, and he’s set no cap for how much he’s willing to spend in the 2020 race. For example, he will spend \$10 million, pocket change for him, to air a 60-second spot during the Super Bowl. After Bloomberg’s campaign announced this yesterday, the Trump campaign let it be known that it too will spend that amount to run a commercial early in the game, the most-watched television event of the year.

Richmond Mayor Levar Stoney joined Bloomberg for his Tuesday campaign stop at a coffee shop in Virginia's capital. (Steve Helber/AP)

Bloomberg emphasized that 95 percent of the delegates to the Democratic convention this summer will come from places other than the four early states of Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina that vote in February.

“The other candidates, because of the system we have, think that winning one of those first early states will propel them into a world where they can then raise money and then go to the big states,” he said. “They don't have any choice, I suppose. They don't have the money. They have to show they are viable to get the money to be viable.”

He's traveling aggressively to states that vote in March. He landed in Virginia at 4 a.m. on Tuesday after a redevye on his private jet from Los Angeles, where he had a late dinner after attending an opening for one of his 10 field offices in California. After visiting Richmond, he flew to New York in the afternoon. He dropped by his foundation's office to pick up mail, stopped by his house to drop off "a jacket that a button had come off" so it could be sewn back on, went to his corporate office to "sign a couple of papers" and then headed to his campaign headquarters, where he called me. He planned to leave home around 6 a.m. today for the flight to Illinois.

Bloomberg has met the polling threshold to appear in next week's Democratic debate in Des Moines, but the Democratic National Committee also requires that candidates raise money from at least 225,000 unique donors, including a minimum of 1,000 in at least 20 states. Bloomberg, however, is not accepting any donations.

"My policy of not taking a dime from anybody shows a non-corruptibility that a lot of voters should want," he said.

"Somebody said to me the other day, 'You're spending a lot of money.' And I said, 'Yes, I'm spending an enormous amount of money trying to get rid of Donald Trump. Now, do you want me to spend more or less?' And he laughed and said, 'Oh, I had just not thought about it that way. Go spend more!'"

Rivals like Sens. Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders routinely castigate Bloomberg by name, presenting him as an avatar for the outsize influence of the billionaire class in politics. "It's an easy, cheap shot if you don't have any money to criticize people who do have money," he answered. "But I'm spending my money to try to educate the voters and make this country better and to give me the opportunity to devote what would probably be the rest of my life to helping the country that my children and grandchildren are going to live in long after I'm gone.”

Bloomberg, who unlike Trump is a self-made man, built his business empire, which employs about 20,000 people, around terminals that provide immense financial data. He also takes credit for creating half a million jobs in New York City during 12 years as mayor. While he may be freely spending his own money for this campaign, Bloomberg emphasized that he's trying to identify policies that won't drown the country deeper in red ink.

“What I want to do is to lay out concrete things that we can do – without a lot of money – that will make a difference, rather than just give a speech saying I think we should do something for the job market,” he said. “That's what the others are going to do, but they don't have any real experience in creating jobs.”

Mike Bloomberg gets a slice of Supino pizza as he opens a campaign office in Detroit on Dec. 21. (Jeff Kowalsky/AFP/Getty Images)

During his Midwestern swing today, Bloomberg will pledge to create millions of higher-paying jobs in places that he says have been “left behind” by Trump. His proposals include raising the federal minimum wage to $15 an hour, funding more public-private partnerships so that 1 million students can earn apprenticeship degrees by 2030, expanding national collective bargaining rights, piloting programs to provide more portable benefits for independent workers in the gig economy and expanding rural broadband access.

Bloomberg has been outspoken in his criticism of Trump’s tariffs on Chinese exports, which led to retaliatory tariffs against American imports. China is the biggest market for American soybeans, and farmers like those hosting Bloomberg today in Wells, Minn., have suffered because of the trade war.

But Bloomberg’s company also has significant financial interests in China. He was criticized for saying during a September television interview, amid the pro-democracy protests in Hong Kong and China’s ongoing repression of Muslim minorities, that President Xi Jinping “is not a dictator.” Xi, he explained, “has to satisfy his constituents or he’s not going to survive.”

When I asked about his relationship with Beijing last night, Bloomberg said that “every U.S. businessperson and every big company has no choice but to deal with them.”

“China is a big market for American products like soybeans,” he said. “I would recommend that you read a story in today's New York Times.”

I know it's a competitor, but you should read the story about who's actually paying the tariffs. It's virtually 100 percent the American consumer, not the Chinese.”

Bloomberg added that there are “complex” issues at play. “I have tried to urge the Chinese to adopt more democratic, with a small ‘d,’ policies,” he said. “On human rights, I think some of the things that they do are a disgrace. But we need China, if for no other reason, than to save this planet because of climate change. You cannot solve the problem without China. ... For us to walk away from China and have a battle with them when we need them to do something that's going to be in not just our interest, but our salvation, that doesn't make a lot of sense to me.”

At the end of our interview, Bloomberg reiterated his suggestion to read “Catastrophe 1914,” the book about World War I. “I know who won, but I won't spoil it for you,” he joked.

Lamenting the punitiveness of the Treaty of Versailles that ended the war, as well as the influenza pandemic after the armistice, Bloomberg said he's thought through various counterfactuals. “If we'd had Harry Truman with the Marshall Plan, we probably wouldn't have had a second war,” he said.

He also recalled walking around the trenches at the Somme battlefield during a trip to France. “Remember, the allies never set foot on German soil,” he said. “I've always thought that was one of the reasons the German military didn't care so much about stopping Hitler. Deep down inside, they thought they got sold out. Now, history would probably say when the Americans were coming in,

[surrendering] was the right thing to do. You would have gotten massacred.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE
HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by  LivelIntent

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Trump on Soleimani: 'His past was horrible'

THE LATEST ON IRAN:

-- The more than a dozen ballistic missiles that Iran launched last night targeted two Iraqi bases housing American military personnel. Karen DeYoung, Paul Sonne and Dan Lamothe report: "The president, meeting late Tuesday night with his senior national security advisers at the White House, issued his initial response on Twitter and struck a less bellicose tone. He suggested but stopped short of saying that there were no initial reports of U.S. casualties. 'All is well! Missiles launched from Iran at two military bases located in Iraq. Assessment of casualties & damages taking place now. So far, so good!' Trump wrote. 'We have the most powerful and well equipped military anywhere in the world, by far! I will be making a statement tomorrow morning.' ...

"House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), among several congressional leaders notified of the Iranian action in telephone calls

from Vice President Pence, said on Twitter, 'We must ensure the safety of our servicemembers, including ending needless provocations from the Administration and demanding that Iran cease its violence. America & world cannot afford war.' ... The strikes, which took place near dawn in Iraq, were initially announced by Iranian media, which called them 'the first step . . . in revenge' for the killing of Soleimani. ...

“An IRGC statement broadcast on state television warned that any further American action would bring ‘a painful response’ ... It also threatened other countries housing U.S. bases, saying that they, too, would be hit with ‘revenge’ operations if any U.S. strikes were launched from them. ... In using ballistic missiles, Iran relied on what the Defense Department considers one of its core capabilities. In a briefing held in November, a senior analyst focused on Iran told reporters at the Pentagon that the missiles constituted a primary component of Tehran’s strategic deterrent.”

-- One of the two bases attacked, Irbil, is a major hub for U.S. and coalition military activity in Iraq. Erin Cunningham, Adam Taylor and Michael Brice-Saddler report: “Many U.S. forces pass through Irbil on their way in and out of a network of much smaller bases in Syria. During the peak of the campaign against the Islamic State in Iraq, military officials also oversaw a major battle in the nearby city of Mosul from Irbil. The city, like most of Iraqi Kurdistan, has been considered safer for U.S. personnel than other parts of Iraq.”

-- A Ukrainian passenger jet with more than 170 people on board crashed in Iran shortly after takeoff from the Tehran airport, killing all aboard. Isabelle Khurshudyan, Erin Cunningham and

Sarah Dadouch report: “In the aftermath of the crash, Ukraine has banned all flights from Iranian air space, a move also taken by several other countries in light of the rising tensions between Iran and U.S. forces in the region. The Boeing 737 likely crashed due to technical difficulties, Iranian state media quoted Ali Kahshani, a senior public relations official at the airport, as saying. Ukraine’s embassy in Iran at first concurred, issuing a statement ruling out terrorism, but then took it down without explanation. A later statement from the embassy said that a commission is investigating the causes of the crash, and that ‘any statements about the causes of the accident before the decision of the Commission are not official.’ ...

“The aircraft involved in Wednesday’s incident, a Boeing 737-800, was three years old and purchased from the manufacturer as new by Ukraine International Airlines, the carrier said in a statement. It had its last routine technical maintenance on Monday. A flight-data recorder from the plane has been recovered. ... Though the Boeing 737-800 has not been flagged for issues, the newer 737 Max was grounded worldwide last year after the crash of an Ethiopian Airlines flight on March 10.”

-- The Trump administration insisted the U.S. military would remain in Iraq, setting up a conflict with senior Iraqi officials, who want an immediate withdrawal. Dan Lamothe, Mustafa Salim and Liz Sly report: “Trump, speaking at the White House, said that withdrawing the estimated 5,000 U.S. troops would be the ‘worst thing to happen to Iraq.’ ‘At some point, we want to get out,’ Trump said. ‘But this isn’t the right point.’ ... The chaos has been highlighted by the reaction in Baghdad to a letter sent by a senior U.S. commander to Iraqi officials Monday. The document suggested that the United States may be preparing to withdraw its troops. ... Iraqi officials said Tuesday that they are interpreting the letter as notification that U.S. troops will leave. Acting prime minister Adel Abdul Mahdi said the document 'was clear' and expressed exasperation with conflicting U.S. signals. ... Defense Secretary Mark T. Esper, speaking at the Pentagon, dismissed the letter as 'a draft' that 'has no value,' and he insinuated that its release to the public in Iraq may have had ulterior motives."

-- Some NATO troops are beginning to leave Iraq. From the New York Times: "NATO is removing some of the trainers who have been working with Iraqi soldiers battling the Islamic State. ... The NATO secretary general, Jens Stoltenberg, announced on Monday that the training had been temporarily suspended."

Iranian ballistic missile ranges

Iran's arsenal of ballistic missiles can reach up to 2,000 kilometers (more than 1,200 miles). According to the Defense Intelligence Agency, the country has a substantial amount of close- and medium-range missiles at their disposal.

Source: Defense Intelligence Agency

THE WASHINGTON POST

-- The White House stumbled in its initial public response to

Soleimani's killing. David Nakamura and Josh Dawsey report:

“Trump and his top advisers have refused to provide details of what prompted the decision to strike and offered conflicting accounts over whether Soleimani was coordinating imminent attacks on U.S.

facilities in the Middle East. The lack of clear information continued

late Tuesday in Washington, after Iran said it retaliated for Soleimani's

death with missile attacks on military bases in Iraq. The White House announced Trump would make no public remarks in response Tuesday night, nor would any other senior administration officials. Hours later, Trump tweeted that he would address the nation Wednesday morning. ... Previously, Trump had caused an international uproar after threatening to attack dozens of Iranian cultural sites — only to retreat Tuesday following statements from his defense secretary and other officials dismissing such actions as illegal.

"Vice President Pence is preparing a speech slated for next week on Iran policy, one official said, in an attempt to provide a more cohesive explanation of the president's strategy. The flurry of events has led to a sense of confusion in the White House and a lack of clarity around a highly sensitive operation that the administrations of his two predecessors, Barack Obama and George W. Bush, had chosen not to take due to risks that it could spark a regional war."

-- All quiet on White House front Tuesday night? "At the White House, where the president assembled his relatively skeletal war Cabinet after nightfall, there was a vacuum of information.

Officials were tight-lipped and bleary-eyed. The press secretary did not answer questions, only briefly ducking out of her office a bit before 9 p.m. to head home for the evening. A presidential address was considered but not delivered. Trump's Twitter feed, often a pulsating applause meter during live events, at first stayed frozen in time," report Phil Rucker, Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey. "For a few hours, at least, with the United States at the dangerous precipice of a hot war with Iran, there was an outward appearance of calm

at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. — or at least quiet."

-- Which is it? Some senior administration officials argue Soleimani was killed as retaliation for increasing Iranian aggression, while others insist without evidence the aim was to avert an "imminent" threat. Karoun Demirjian, Karen DeYoung and Shane Harris report: "At one end of the spectrum, national security adviser Robert O'Brien argued on 'Fox & Friends' that [Trump] authorized eliminating Soleimani because the Iranian general and his allies 'were looking to kill American diplomats and soldiers in significant numbers in the coming days.' But in comments before reporters at the State Department, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo pointed to Iran's past behavior as justification, arguing that 'the days that led up to the strike' were what made the response urgent — and that the 'continuing efforts on behalf of this terrorist to build out a network of campaign activities that were going to lead potentially to the death of many more Americans' were an additional concern. Defense Secretary Mark T. Esper split the difference, noting that there was 'exquisite intelligence' — a term of significance in spy circles — indicating that Soleimani was 'conducting preparing, planning military operations' akin to the 'terrorist activities' he had been pursuing against the United States for more than two decades.

"While some nuance is common when interpreting intelligence, the mixed messaging among Trump's top advisers ... is potentially problematic for senior officials as they begin to brief lawmakers who remain divided over the operation. ... According to Esper, only the Gang of Eight will receive the 'exquisite intelligence that ... was one of the factors that led to the decision to strike at Soleimani.' Gang of Eight lawmakers who attended the Tuesday briefing with intelligence leaders refused to comment on what they heard. But in the intelligence community, the term 'exquisite' is often applied to satellites or other highly classified reconnaissance systems that provide detailed information, including the words an individual spoke or the person's precise movements. Esper's choice of words suggested the U.S. could have intercepted communications or other intelligence that he believes revealed Soleimani's intentions."

-- House Democrats may not vote this week, after all, on a war powers resolution after Iran's attack on U.S. assets. Politico reports that the prospect of intensifying conflict in the region, and the unwillingness of Republicans to break with the president, complicates the timing: "House Democrats say they are likely to pause, if not abandon, their plans for a war powers resolution. ... In a private meeting, some Democrats pushed to add a measure from Rep. Ro Khanna (D-Calif.) that would defund any U.S. military action against Iran without first receiving congressional approval ... Moderate Democrats had their own reservations about the whole exercise, and are unwilling to draft a resolution that would hamstring the military in its response to future attacks. ... Some progressives, meanwhile, were looking to go even further. Two lawmakers, [Rep. Barbara] Lee [D-Calif.] and Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.), had been pushing their own version of a war powers resolution over the weekend."

-- Trump has cited the death of an American defense contractor as a reason for the missile strikes against Iraqi militias he ordered last month. The man has been identified as an interpreter who was born in Iraq and lived in Sacramento. Aaron C. Davis reports: “Nawres Hamid, 33, became a naturalized citizen in 2017, according to his widow. He was the father of two boys, ages 2 and 8, she said. In recent years, as an Arabic interpreter for U.S. forces in Iraq, Hamid was known to decorate his living space with pictures of the children, according to a co-worker. Hamid was killed on Dec. 27 when U.S. authorities say an Iranian-backed militia fired rockets at a military base near the northern Iraqi city of Kirkuk. The attack, which injured several coalition troops, prompted Trump to order missile strikes against Iraqi militias. ... Hamid’s death has been a rallying cry for Trump.”

-- Trump's reelection campaign is already running ads on Facebook touting Suleimani’s death. From the Times: “Thanks to the swift actions of our commander in chief, Iranian General Qassem Soleimani is no longer a threat to the United States, or to the world,” several of the Trump ads read, using an alternate spelling of the Iranian general’s name. Some featured pictures of a beaming Mr. Trump from one of his campaign rallies; others showed a stoic, finger-waving president, also in front of supporters. The ads asked voters to take the ‘Official Trump Military Survey,’ directing users to Mr. Trump’s re-election campaign website. All told, the Trump campaign has run nearly 800 distinct Facebook ads about the killing of General Suleimani, according to Acronym, a progressive digital strategy group.”

-- Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) canceled a campaign fundraiser in D.C. in light of the Iran developments. Klobuchar said she was “closely monitoring what is happening in Iraq” and backed out of the event that was to be held at the home of a former Yale classmate.

(Washington Examiner)

-- Rudy Giuliani — and his old Iranian clients — are cheering Soleimani’s death. From the Daily Beast: “The former New York City mayor has had a long-standing interest in Iranian affairs. He was once paid by organizations linked to an Iranian dissident group formally designated by the U.S. government as a terrorist organization—until Giuliani helped get the outfit off the terror list. As recently as the summer of 2018, Giuliani appeared on stage at an event for the People's Mojahedin of Iran, known by its Farsi acronym, MEK. He’s stayed in touch with the group’s U.S. lobbyists, meeting with representatives of its political arm as recently as last fall. And when Trump authorized the strike that killed [Soleimani], Giuliani jubilantly referred to the MEK in the first person. Soleimani was ‘directly responsible for killing some of my MEK people,’ he (said) in an interview on Monday afternoon. ‘We don’t like him very much.’”

-- Mike Pompeo ordered U.S. diplomats to limit any contact with Iranian opposition groups, including MEK, which has paid thousands of dollars in speaking fees to former national security adviser John Bolton in addition to retaining Giuliani. From Bloomberg News: “The directive about Mujahedeen-e-Khalq, its offshoot, the National Council of Resistance of Iran, and five other groups was delivered in a cable sent to all U.S. diplomatic outposts on Tuesday. ... It says meetings with the groups could jeopardize U.S. diplomacy with Iran. ... But it provoked displeasure from some Iran hawks, who argued the U.S. should be encouraging contacts with such groups, not discouraging them.”

-- Saudi authorities are warning of a powerful and destructive cyberattack launched on Dec. 29 that experts have tied to Iran.

From Yahoo News: “Officials in Riyadh, who nicknamed the malware ‘Dustman,’ did not directly attribute the malicious attack to Iran, according to a Saudi technical report. ... However, according to experts who reviewed the technical report and analyzed possible motivation and similarities to past attacks, Tehran is the most likely culprit. The ‘wiper’ attack, which was identified by the Saudi National Cybersecurity Authority, used malware to erase digital data belonging to unidentified targets in the Middle East.”

-- Joe Biden, facing scrutiny of his foreign policy record, sharpened his criticism of Trump’s “incompetence” on Iran. Matt

Viser reports: “Biden, blasting [Trump] as ‘dangerously incompetent’ for his handling of the crisis with Iran, said Trump’s ‘impulsive decision’ to order the killing of a top military official from that country put the United States at risk of greater international conflict. ... Biden’s comments were striking for someone who has spent much of his political career with a reputation as a foreign policy expert who has often embraced American use of power in the world. As a senator, he voted in 2002 to authorize the use of force in Iraq — a vote that has become a point of contention in the Democratic race as Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) presents himself as the true antiwar candidate in tune with rising public skepticism of drawn-out military intervention. ... Biden’s toughened rhetoric on Trump and Iran on Tuesday seemed designed to present Biden with a more nuanced position — more sharply critical of Trump’s decision than his previous comments but not as black-and-white as Sanders’s stance.”

-- Fox News's Tucker Carlson has become one of Trump's most vocal critics on Iran. Kayla Epstein reports: "Carlson has used his namesake show to criticize Trump, his military leaders and high-ranking foreign policy officials for their decision to strike. On Friday, the conservative pundit criticized 'chest-beaters' for 'making the usual warlike noises.' On Monday, he questioned why conservatives who were long suspicious of the military and intelligence community were suddenly trusting them on Iran. Carlson is not the only critic of Trump's decision, but he is one of the loudest voices on the right. ... When Carlson broke with Trump on the issue of Iran, viewers, critics and Twitter observers took notice. 'These anti-war segments from Tucker Carlson don't mean he's good now,' former Barack Obama spokesman and 'Pod Save America' host Tommy Vietor tweeted."

-- Commentary from the opinion page:

- Leon Panetta, former defense secretary and CIA director: "Trump is facing the greatest test of his presidency."
- Dana Milbank: "Trump to America: Impeachment and war are none of your business."
- Molly Roberts: "The terrible honesty of World War III memes."
- Helaine Olen: "Money for war, but not for the poor."
- Marc A. Thiessen: "Reagan would have been proud of Trump's Iran strike."
- Sen. James M. Inhofe \(R-Okla.\), chairman of the Armed Services Committee: "Iran cannot afford an all-out war."

- Alexandra Petri: “This is a draft version of this column that was circulated by mistake.”

McConnell says he has votes to begin impeachment trial

THE INVESTIGATIONS:

-- After Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) announced that he had enough votes to proceed with Trump’s impeachment trial without reaching an agreement on witnesses with Democrats, Nancy Pelosi said the impeachment articles still won’t go to the Senate until she learns more about how the trial would be conducted. Felicia Sonmez, Colby Itkowitz, John Wagner and Seung Min Kim report: “In a letter to Democratic lawmakers Tuesday night, Pelosi hinted that she would not submit the articles nor tap House impeachment managers — who will effectively serve as the prosecution in the Senate — until McConnell publicly releases the legislation that would detail the parameters and procedures for the trial. ‘Sadly, Leader McConnell has made clear that his loyalty is to the President and not the Constitution,' Pelosi wrote in the letter to colleagues. 'Leader McConnell has insisted that the approach under consideration is identical to those of the Clinton trial and that 'fair is fair.' This is simply not true. This process is not only unfair but designed to deprive Senators and the American people of crucial documents and testimony. Under the Clinton trial, witnesses were deposed.'"

-- In his announcement, McConnell said he has the votes to begin the trial in the format that he and most of his members have long envisioned: opening arguments for both the House impeachment managers and Trump's defense team, as well as time for senators to submit questions in writing. Seung Min Kim, Mike DeBonis and Rachael Bade report: "Under the majority leader's plan, a decision on whether to call witnesses would be made once that first phase of the trial is over — a move announced Tuesday to put the pressure back on Pelosi amid simmering frustration from GOP senators over the speaker's delay in sending the articles. That echoes the format of President [Bill] Clinton's trial 21 years ago, and McConnell has been able to persuade his members that Trump should be treated in the same fashion as Clinton.

"Asked if he could guarantee witnesses will be called, McConnell said that matter would be discussed after the Senate votes to proceed — not before. 'The way it works, at the risk of being redundant, is that 51 senators determine what we do, and there will be, I'm sure, an intense discussion . . . about the whole witness issue,' McConnell said. 'The people calling the witnesses won't necessarily be us; it will be the prosecution or the defense.' ... Pelosi's refusal to transmit the articles ... has also spurred a number of Republican senators to craft legislation and strategize about how they could begin the trial without the House's blessing. But McConnell, speaking privately to his members, made clear that he would not make any moves on a trial until the articles had been formally transmitted."

-- Federal prosecutors said former national security adviser Michael Flynn deserves to serve up to six months in prison, reversing their earlier recommendation that he should get probation after his attacks on the FBI and the Justice Department. Spencer S. Hsu and Rachel Weiner report: "The government revoked its request for leniency weeks after Flynn's sentencing judge categorically rejected Flynn's claims of prosecutorial misconduct and that he had been duped into pleading guilty to lying to FBI agents about his Russian contacts after the 2016 U.S. election. ... Flynn faces sentencing Jan. 28 before U.S. District Judge Emmet G. Sullivan in Washington. Flynn defense attorney Sidney Powell is scheduled to file his sentencing request Jan. 22. ... Flynn, 61, pleaded guilty Dec. 1, 2017, to lying about his communications with then-Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak during the presidential transition, becoming the highest-ranking Trump official charged and one of the first to cooperate with Mueller's office."

-- A panel of judges ruled that a defamation lawsuit, alleging Trump sexually assaulted a former "Apprentice" contestant more than a decade ago, can be heard by New York's highest state court. Joshua Partlow reports: "The decision by an appellate division of the New York Supreme Court granted Trump's legal team's request to have the case heard by the New York Court of Appeals. Trump's team has argued that he should not be subject to actions in state courts while he is in the White House. Trump had been scheduled to give a deposition by Jan. 31, but that is now on hold. A statement from the firm of Trump's lawyer, Marc Kasowitz, said, 'we are pleased' about the decision. The defamation lawsuit was brought by Summer Zervos. ... Her case has been moving slowly through the New York courts and could potentially be decided before the 2020 election."

-- A major donor to Trump's inaugural committee intends to plead guilty to obstruction of justice after federal prosecutors filed a new charge alleging that the investor backdated a check and deleted emails to hinder an investigation into where he got money he ultimately gave to the committee. Matt Zapotosky reports: "Imaad Zuberi — a venture capitalist who gave significant money to Democrats and Republicans over the years — was accused by federal prosecutors in New York of trying to hide from investigators that a $900,000 donation he made to Trump's inaugural committee was actually funded by others, court records show. Zuberi already had pleaded guilty last year in federal court in Los Angeles to an array of charges stemming from a lobbying scheme in which he arranged illegal campaign contributions, hid his work from the government and cheated on his taxes. David Kelley, Zuberi's attorney, said he had reached an agreement with federal prosecutors in New York to transfer the new matter to Los Angeles, where Zuberi intends to plead guilty. Provided the arrangement is approved by the court, he would presumably be sentenced on the West Coast in connection with both matters."

-- Rep. Duncan Hunter (R-Calif.) will resign from Congress effective Jan. 13, more than a month after he pleaded guilty in federal court to misusing campaign funds. Felicia Sonmez and Mike DeBonis report: “The six-term congressman is scheduled to be sentenced in March. He faces a maximum of five years in prison, although he is expected to serve less than one year. Hunter and his wife, Margaret, were charged in August 2018 with using more than $250,000 in campaign funds to pay for personal expenses including family vacations, theater tickets and school tuition. ... Days after his guilty plea last month, the California Republican announced that he would resign from Congress ‘shortly after the holidays.’ The move meant he would collect one last full government paycheck, as House members get paid on the last business day of each month.”

Strong earthquake leaves widespread blackout, damage in Puerto Rico

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- Powerful earthquakes in Puerto Rico have left the already fragile territory in a blackout with reports of injuries and at least one death. Cristina Corujo, Arelis R. Hernández and Samantha Schmidt report: “Powerful earthquakes this week, including a major 6.4-magnitude temblor early Tuesday morning, triggered widespread power outages and damage, leaving an already fragile Puerto Rico reeling once again. Schools, homes and churches along the southern coastline crumbled. Hospitals evacuated patients. A signature tourist attraction collapsed into the sea. At least one person died, crushed by a wall that toppled in his home. Tuesday's earthquake followed a 5.8-magnitude quake on Monday and was among numerous seismic events along an underwater fault line in recent days. All of them sent shock waves across the U.S. territory amid fears that further tremors could knock out key infrastructure. ... Gov. Wanda Vázquez Garced declared a state of emergency Tuesday and said authorities were evaluating the damage and inspecting Puerto Rico's power generation plants — all of which are located along the southern coast near the origin of the seismic activity. She also told government employees to stay home, as more aftershocks are expected. ...

“U.S. Rep. Raúl M. Grijalva (D-Ariz.), who chairs the committee that oversees U.S. territories including Puerto Rico, urged the Trump administration to release remaining federal disaster recovery funds from Hurricane Maria and deliver new aid quickly. ‘The Trump administration’s indifference and incompetence have already cost residents of Puerto Rico their lives and their livelihoods, and continuing that pattern now is completely unacceptable,’ Grijalva said in a statement. ‘I urge this administration to remember that lives are at stake and the public is watching.’”

-- Mexicans seeking refuge in the United States to escape violence in their homeland fear even worse dangers if they are sent to Guatemala under a new Trump administration plan to crack down on asylum seekers. From Reuters: “It was unclear when the United States would begin sending Mexicans to Guatemala. The Mexican government estimated that 900 Mexican asylum seekers could be affected from February, without giving a timeframe or explaining how it reached that number. Mexicans who say their homes are unsafe due to drug gang extortion said the policy leaves them few options. ‘I can’t go home, they’ve already kidnapped my brother and son,’ said Carlos, a Mexican seeking to reach the United States via the border city of Tijuana. He said he had fled criminal gangs in the southwestern state of Guerrero. ‘They’re after me. If I go back they’re sure to kill me. If I’m not safe in Mexico, I’ll be even less safe in Guatemala,’ he said, requesting his last name be withheld for security reasons. ... Sitting in a chilly camp in Ciudad Juarez, one woman from the state of Zacatecas, who declined to give her name, said she was trying to reach the United States because she had family there, and would be safe. ‘I’m not going because of the American dream, I’m going and taking my kids because we need security, we need safety,’ she said in tears, describing how she had fled a job as a scientist in a laboratory after she starting being followed and receiving phone threats. She described the new policy as pressure aimed at making people like her give up her asylum claim.”

-- The Los Angeles Police Department suspended more than a dozen officers after a boy was wrongly labeled a gang member. From the New York Times: “The Los Angeles Police Department opened an investigation early last year, when a mother in the San Fernando Valley approached a local police station to tell officers about a letter she had received saying that her son, a minor, had been identified as a gang member. She told a supervisor that he had been mislabeled, the Police Department said in a statement on Tuesday. ... When the supervisor reviewed body camera footage and car recordings, they did not match the documentation completed by an officer, according to the department. Over the following months, the investigation grew to encompass more than a dozen officers in the elite metro division who were suspected of misrepresenting information in field interview cards, the Police Department said. ... But the issues with incorrectly labeling people gang members extend far beyond falsifying field notes, according to Sean Garcia-Leys, a lawyer at the Urban Peace Institute. He said he had had dozens of clients over the past two years who had been wrongly added to CalGang.”

-- The cancer death rate in the United States fell 2.2 percent in 2017 – the biggest one-year drop ever – propelled by gains against lung cancer, the American Cancer Society said. Laurie McGinley reports: “Declines in the mortality rate for lung cancer have accelerated in recent years in response to new treatments and falling smoking rates, said Rebecca Siegel, lead author of Cancer Statistics 2020. ... Because lung cancer is the leading cause of cancer deaths, accounting for 1 in 4, any change in the mortality rate has a large effect on the overall cancer death rate, Siegel noted. She described the gains against lung cancer, and against another often deadly cancer, melanoma, as ‘exciting.’ But, she added, ‘the news this year is mixed’ because of slower progress against colorectal, breast and prostate cancers.”

-- In an internal post, Facebook executive Andrew Bosworth said the company was responsible for Trump's 2016 victory and that it may help him win again this year. But he argued executives must resist the temptation to make changes that could alter the course of legitimate political debate. Craig Timberg and Nitasha Tiku report: "The post ... reflected the combination of anguish, defensiveness and brash self-confidence that many of the company's employees have more privately expressed in the difficult aftermath of Trump's unexpected victory. Bosworth's post also shed light on the thinking within the company's highest levels as it heads into a new election year amid controversies over its reluctance to police lies by politicians or limit their ability to narrowly target small groups of voters. Critics have said that addressing both issues is key to helping stanch the flood of disinformation on the platform. ...

"Bosworth dismissed the idea that Russian efforts to manipulate U.S. voters over Facebook, a subject of extensive government investigation and journalistic scrutiny, were crucial to Trump's victory. Bosworth, who shared his post publicly after the New York Times published it, also played down the importance of the use of Facebook data by the political consultancy Cambridge Analytica, which worked for the Trump campaign and boasted of its ability to target ads using psychological profiles of voters derived from their social media posts. Rather, said Bosworth, who ran advertising at Facebook for several years, Trump 'got elected because he ran the single best digital ad campaign I've ever seen from any advertiser. Period.' Bosworth, a self-proclaimed liberal who donated heavily to 2016 Democratic Party nominee Hillary Clinton, particularly praised Trump's leading digital-advertising adviser in 2016, Brad Parscale, who is now managing Trump's reelection campaign. ...

"Citing J.R.R.'s Tolkien 'Lord of the Rings' epic, Bosworth also expressed serious concern about the possible corrupting influence of Facebook's power, comparing it to the ring carried by the hobbit Frodo Baggins. 'I find myself thinking of the Lord of the Rings at this moment. Specifically when Frodo offers the ring to Galadrial and she imagines using the power righteously, at first, but knows it will eventually corrupt her. As tempting as it is to use the tools available to us to change the outcome, I am confident we must never do that or we will become that which we fear,' [he wrote]."

-- Ivanka Trump's keynote address at CES — one of the world's largest technology conferences — sparked backlash. Cat Zakrzewski reports: "The first daughter's keynote speech at CES made a pitch for programs that would help blue-collar workers keep pace with a rapidly evolving economy and addressed strategies to re-skill workers, develop apprenticeships and invest in science and technology education programs. Trump has focused on workforce development in her work as adviser to the president, and she serves with Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross as the co-chair of the National Council for the American Worker. ... Inside the room, her comments drew applause. But the inclusion of Trump in the speaker lineup sparked some backlash in the tech industry, as critics said there are women with more technical experience who are better qualified to speak there. Hundreds of people have tweeted #boycottCES since the conference organizers announced Trump would speak at the show late last month, including on Tuesday. Some were particularly critical because the conference drew widespread criticism in both 2017 and 2018 for failing to bring in female keynote speakers, part of a longer track record.”

-- The Supreme Court ordered the Trump administration and states challenging Obamacare to respond by Friday to an appeal filed by defenders of the health-care law. From NBC News: “Such a highly abbreviated timeline — the rules normally allow a month for filing a response — gives the court the option to take up the case during its current term, which would mean a ruling on a contentious issue this spring, just as the presidential campaign heats up. Nineteen blue states, led by California, asked the Supreme Court last week for a quick decision on whether to take the case. They’re appealing last month’s ruling by a federal appeals court that said Obamacare’s individual mandate is unconstitutional and that the rest of the law cannot survive without it.”

-- Harvey Weinstein was threatened with jail for repeatedly using his cellphone while in court during the second day of his New York trial on sexual assault charges. From CNN: “At the beginning of court proceedings in New York, Judge James Burke raised his voice and reprimanded Weinstein and his defense team, specifically Arthur Aidala, for Weinstein’s use of his cell phones. ‘He was calling and texting a minute ago,’ Burke said to the defense team. Weinstein said, ‘I’m sorry’ and hung his head at one point. Donna Rotunno, another defense attorney, said she was not aware. ‘He was aware,’ the judge replied. Burke said this was an ‘ongoing issue’ and referenced warnings at previous hearings. He said he warned Aidala explicitly in ‘somewhat unrefined terms’ about Weinstein’s cell phone.

Finally, he said that if Weinstein uses his cell phone in court one more time he will be taken into custody. 'Mr. Aidala, this is on you if he blows it,' Burke said."

-- The Secret Service is investigating yet another incident at Trump's Mar-a-Lago club. From the Miami Herald: "Palm Beach police say they are conducting an 'open and active criminal investigation' at the club. ...The Secret Service is leading the investigation and no arrest has been made, according to the Palm Beach Police Department. 'During an encounter with local law enforcement, an individual made non-threatening statements about a person under Secret Service protection,' a law enforcement official with knowledge of the incident told the Miami Herald. 'As part of standard practice, Palm Beach police contacted the local Secret Service office.'"

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

As the situation with Iran escalates, it is worth remembering that many key positions in the administration remain unfilled:

Garrett M. Graff
@vermontgmg

Reminder that as this crisis escalates, we have no Director of National Intelligence, no Dep Dir, no Homeland Security Secretary, no Dep Sec, no head of CBP or ICE, no State Dept Under Sec of Arms Control, no Asst Sec for Europe, and no Navy Sec.

 61K 12:15 AM - Jan 8, 2020

 39.5K people are talking about this

Trump met with representatives of the Saudi government:

Josh Dawsey ✓

@jdawsey1

white house did not announce or readout this meeting.
twitter.com/kbsalsaud/stat...

Khalid bin Salman خالد بن سلمان ✓ @kbsalsaud

Upon directives from HRH the Crown Prince, I had the pleasure of meeting with @realDonaldTrump yesterday to deliver a message from the Crown Prince, and review aspects of our bilateral cooperation, including efforts to confront regional and international challenges.

♥ 8,864 3:31 PM - Jan 7, 2020

💬 5,095 people are talking about this

Flashback:

southpaw

@nycsouthpaw

"Khalid [bin Salman] told [Jamal] Khashoggi, a contributing columnist to The Washington Post, that he should go to the Saudi Consulate in Istanbul to retrieve the documents and gave him assurances that it would be the documents and gave him assurances that it would be safe to do so." washingtonpost.com/world/national...

twitter.com/kbsalsaud/stat...

CIA concludes Saudi crown prince ordered Jamal Kh...

Audio recordings, intercepted phone calls and other intelligence link Mohammed bin Salman to killing that washingtonpost.com

Khalid bin Salman خالد بن سلمان  @kbsalsaud

Upon directives from HRH the Crown Prince, I had the pleasure of meeting with @realDonaldTrump yesterday to deliver a message from the Crown Prince, and review aspects of our bilateral cooperation, including efforts to confront regional and international challenges.

♡ 1,296 4:19 PM - Jan 7, 2020

894 people are talking about this

When Trump eventually tweeted about the meeting, he made no mention of Jamal Khashoggi:

David Corn
@DavidCornDC

So nothing was said about Jamal Khashoggi--and his brutal murder by the Saudi government? Not a shocker.
twitter.com/realDonaldTrump...

Donald J. Trump  @realDonaldTrump
Had a very good meeting with @kbsalsaud of Saudi Arabia. We discussed Trade, Military, Oil Prices, Security, and Stability in the Middle East!

 1,885  7:07 PM - Jan 7, 2020

559 people are talking about this

The U.N.'s agency for culture appeared to subtweet Trump:

UNESCO
@UNESCO

This is what is left of the Great Mosque of Aleppo, Syria.
It was one of the oldest in the world.

Nothing, we repeat, NOTHING, can justify the destruction
of cultural heritage.

We must ALWAYS #ProtectHeritage.

on.unesco.org/2n7T3lk

♡ 362 5:00 AM - Jan 8, 2020

💬 188 people are talking about this

An Iranian official tweeted his nation's flag just after the strikes, mirroring Trump, who tweeted the U.S. flag after Soleimani was killed:

Geraldo Rivera said he was going to speak out against Iran escalation on Sean Hannity's show, but then he got bumped:

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

"Nazis didn't fall out of the sky in January '33. That movement is rooted in German history, and you can trace those roots back into the 19th century, and you can see a lot of strands coming together. That's true of the moment we live in. It didn't just happen yesterday or last year," Holocaust Museum director Sara Bloomfield said on the warning signs of fascism. (Rachel Manteuffel)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

A Border Patrol officer described what it was like to separate migrant children from their parents in a Frontline documentary:

This is what 2020 candidates have said about the escalating tensions with Iran:

2020 candidates speak out against escalating tensions with Iran

Trump once said he likes to obey the law, but Stephen Colbert said he isn't so sure about that:

Seth Meyers moderated a “debate” between some 2020 Democratic candidates:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: The ghosts of 1979 still haunt U.S. policy toward Iran and shadow Trump's response to missile strikes
Date: Thursday, January 9, 2020 9:23:54 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

The ghosts of 1979 still haunt U.S. policy toward Iran and shadow Trump's response to missile strikes

Trump's full address to the nation on the Iran missile strikes

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: President Trump didn't just dubiously blame Barack Obama's nuclear deal for Iran's retaliatory missile strikes against U.S. targets in Iraq. In his televised address on Wednesday, he also implicitly criticized six of his predecessors for being too soft on Tehran.

"For far too long, all the way back to 1979, to be exact, nations have tolerated Iran's destructive and destabilizing behavior in the Middle East and beyond," Trump said. "Those days are over."

This section of Trump's speech was overshadowed by his declaration that "Iran appears to be standing down." Because the scripted remarks were less bellicose than what the president had said in preceding days, and he is clearly looking for an offramp, pundits emphasized the conciliatory tone. Much of the cable commentary focused more on the olive branch – his stated desire to seek peace and de-escalation – than the stick, which was his announcement that the United States will impose stiffer sanctions until the regime changes its behavior.

The past few weeks have brought a flood of references to 1979. The Islamic revolution in Iran led to 52 Americans being taken hostage for 444 days at the U.S. embassy, torpedoing Jimmy Carter's reelection hopes the next year after that botched rescue operation. Many Americans of a certain age experienced fears of a redux when the U.S. Embassy in Baghdad was surrounded last week by Iran-backed militias, who pelted the fortress with rocks and flaming gasoline bombs before retreating.

But the year 1979 turned out to be a critical juncture in geopolitical history for a host of other reasons. The Soviets invaded Afghanistan, resulting in the quagmire that accelerated their consignment to the ash heap of history. Deng Xiaoping put China on a path to become a dominant world power. Margaret Thatcher's election as prime minister reoriented the United Kingdom. So much of the world as we know it today flows from events big and small that transpired 41 years ago.

Unresolved loose ends stemming from the fall of the American-backed shah in 1979 fill the air like dark clouds over the relationship with Iran. He was elevated after the United States helped orchestrate the 1953 coup to overthrow the democratically elected prime minister of Iran. The Persians remember this.

“The U.S. enmity toward Iran is not temporary. It’s inherent,” Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei said in his own televised address on Wednesday, telling his countrymen that they had delivered a slap in the face to the Americans. He added that there won’t be peace until the Americans withdraw from the Middle East. “It is a gross mistake to think if we took a step back and compromised, the United States would stop,” said Khamenei.

Iranian foreign minister: 'We did not start this process of escalation'

-- The experiences of 1979 also indelibly shaped the worldviews of multiple generations of American leaders. Consider the case of Jim Mattis. Mattis, who would become a famous general during the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, was first deployed to the Middle East that year when he was a 28-year-old Marine. “Much of the security challenge we deal with today grew out of 1979,” Mattis wrote in “Call Sign Chaos: Learning to Lead,” his 2019 memoir. “When crises arose, American naval task forces were placed on alert and sailed to the region of unrest. With the intelligence officers providing in-depth briefings, I had a ringside seat from which to observe how quickly flashpoints spread across the increasingly violent arena."

Mattis remembers sitting on an amphibious ship as Saudi Arabia eradicated a radical Sunni splinter group that had seized the Grand Mosque in Mecca that year and closely monitoring the developments in Afghanistan and Iran. "The United States was supporting Saudi Arabia's involvement in forming a counterweight to Soviet influence," he wrote. "The reverberations of these cataclysmic events were swiftly felt: within a year, Iraq President Saddam Hussein had launched an inconclusive eight-year war against Iran that would claim nearly a million lives."

During his nearly two years as Trump's first secretary of defense, Mattis – a hawk himself – quietly checked Trump's most confrontational instincts. He saw the 2015 nuclear agreement as a bad deal in many respects, but he tried unsuccessfully to convince Trump that it was better to stay in the deal than to tear it up. Mattis was clear-eyed about the threat posed by the Iranians, but he understood the risks of escalation.

In May 2017, Iranian-backed rebels in Yemen fired a ballistic missile at Riyadh as Trump was preparing to leave for Saudi Arabia on his first overseas trip as president. "The president pressed for options from the Pentagon, including striking Iranian missile factories or hitting Iranian speedboats that routinely harassed U.S. naval vessels, and a plan to kill [Qasem] Soleimani," Karen DeYoung reports in today's newspaper. "When the Pentagon, under the leadership of [Mattis], demurred, the options were not pursued. ... Events leading to the current crisis were not set in motion until May 2018, when Trump finally took action to withdraw the United States from the Iran nuclear deal.”

One reason the Pentagon relented post-Mattis in its hesitation to take out Soleimani – and risk the fallout – is Mark Esper. The new defense secretary is a longtime friend of Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, who was a classmate at West Point and has pushed for months to kill the Quds Force commander. Esper is 14 years younger than Mattis and joined the Army in 1986.

“Taking out Soleimani would not have happened under Mattis,” a senior administration official told one of my colleagues over the weekend, arguing that he was risk averse. “Mattis was opposed to all of this. It’s not a hit on Mattis. It’s just his predisposition.” Mattis declined to comment when asked if he agreed.

Referring to 1979, Mattis wrote in his book: “The reverberations of that tumultuous year continue to be felt today. As a young infantry officer sailing back to Pearl Harbor from the North Arabian Sea, I didn’t know then that these tectonic shifts would define my next 40 years.”

THE TICK TOCK:

-- "The Iranian missile strike on American facilities in Iraq was a calibrated event intended to cause minimal casualties, give the Iranians a face-saving measure and provide an opportunity for both sides to step back from the brink of war, according to senior U.S. officials in Washington and the Middle East," per Shane Harris, Josh Dawsey, Dan Lamothe and Missy Ryan. "U.S. officials said they knew by Tuesday afternoon that the Iranians intended to strike at American targets in Iraq, although it was not immediately clear exactly which they would choose. The early warning came from intelligence sources as well as from communications from Iraq that conveyed Iran's intentions to launch the strike ...

"The advance warning gave military commanders time to get U.S.

troops into safe, fortified positions at the bases. ... One official said at least some left al-Asad air base in western Iraq before the attack. ... Commanders on the ground ... also moved some service members off small bases in the region and scattered equipment and people on installations to make them harder to hit. ...

“Matt Pottinger, the deputy national security adviser, told aides in a Roosevelt Room meeting Tuesday afternoon that it would take at least two months to understand whether the U.S. strategy was working. ‘Our initial reaction has been, this was a domestic effort from the Iranians to save face, not to go to war, so we have proceeded in that vein,’ said another senior administration official with knowledge of the analysis. ... Trump had told senior military officials Tuesday evening that he wanted a path to ease tensions ... A way out appeared when Trump’s military advisers told him there was reason to believe the missile strikes were not designed to kill Americans.”

-- “Trump’s vow Wednesday to slap new sanctions on Iran probably would target a broader range of Iranian commercial institutions and government officials,” David Lynch reports. “But with the economy already convulsed by earlier U.S. enforcement actions, any new financial punishments are likely to be largely symbolic.”

Mike Lee hammers Iran briefing from Trump administration

HAPPENING TODAY:

-- The House will vote this afternoon on a war powers resolution.

It is expected to pass on a close to party-line vote but not have the force of law.

-- Two Republican senators criticized the Trump administration's handling of the drone strike that killed Soleimani after top national security officials refused to say when, if ever, they would notify Congress about future military strikes during a contentious classified briefing.

"They struggled to identify anything," said Sen. Mike Lee (R-Utah), calling this "un-American" and "unconstitutional" during an appearance with Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.).

"As a result of the briefing, Lee pledged, along with Paul, to join Democrats in backing a war powers resolution from Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) ordering the removal of forces engaged in hostilities against Iran, which could come up for a vote early next week," Karoun

Demirjian and Mike DeBonis report.

-- Stat du jour: Nearly a quarter of Americans have never experienced the U.S. in a time of peace. (Philip Bump)

Fact-checking Trump's address on the Iran missile attacks

THE LATEST ON THE DONNYBROOK:

-- From our team coverage:

- Glenn Kessler and Salvador Rizzo: “Fact-checking Trump’s address on the Iran missile attacks.”
- David Nakamura: “Trump attempts to pin some blame for missile attacks on Obama, outraging Democrats.”
- Ashley Parker and Phil Rucker: “Trump seeks to celebrate a victory, even in the wake of a foreign attack.”
- Louisa Loveluck and Mustafa Salim: “Iraqi leaders plead for calm after Iranian missile strikes on U.S. military.”
- Lauren Tierney, Adam Taylor, Chris Alcantara and Tim Meko: “A timeline of the escalation in the Middle East.”
- Rachel Siegel and Thomas Heath: “Stocks rebound after Trump addresses nation on tensions with Iran.”
- Adam Taylor: “The U.S.-Iran shadow war is not over.”
- Kim Bellware and Kayla Epstein: “Did you get ‘drafted’ by the U.S. Army via text message? It’s a hoax.”

-- Commentary from The Post's opinion pages:

- The Post’s Editorial Board: “Proclaiming Trump victorious in Iran is shortsighted and premature.”
- Max Boot: “Trump’s Iran strategy is still a failure.”
- Jennifer Rubin: “Trump’s war-mongering with Iran won’t be a political winner.”
- Michael Makovsky and Jonathan Ruhe of the Jewish

Institute for National Security of America: “The right strategy for Iran isn’t regime change. It’s regime collapse.”

- Layla M. Hashemi, managing editor of the Journal of Civil Society, and Steven L. Wilson, assistant professor of political science at the University of Nevada at Reno: “If any Iranians supported Soleimani’s killing, it would’ve been dissidents on Twitter. The opposite happened.”
- Kelly J. Shannon, associate professor of history at Florida Atlantic University: “War with Iran is not inevitable — but the U.S. must change course.”
- Moojan Momen and Jason Pack: “Why President Trump is courting disaster by not understanding Iranian culture.”

-- How it’s playing domestically:

- MSNBC: Andrea Mitchell, the veteran NBC foreign affairs correspondent, said Trump has “the worst national security team I’ve ever seen.”
- BuzzFeed News: “Fox News hosts were against a ground war with Iran. Trump listened.”
- Wired: “Did Twitter help stop war with Iran?”
- Fox News’s Andrew McCarthy: “War Powers Resolution vote against Trump is pointless. He was right to strike bad guys.”
- NPR: “Satellite photos reveal extent of damage from Iranian strike on air base in Iraq.”

- NYT: “Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren jointly urge against war with Iran.”
- The Atlantic: “Americans aren't rallying to Trump.”
- Daily Beast: “U.S. officials raise concerns Shiite militia threat might be worse without Soleimani.”

-- How it's playing overseas:

- Jerusalem Post: “Did Trump just reignite Iran v. ISIS war?”
- Haaretz: “Iran Still Wants Revenge for Soleimani's Killing. But Does It Have the Cash for It?”
- Agence France Presse: “Soleimani successor: continuity figure in uncertain times.”
- Tehran Times: “Soleimani was a ‘culture’ and a culture cannot be assassinated.”
- Der Spiegel: “The adjourned war.”
- The Guardian: “The threat of conflict in Iran is still real, and Britain must not get dragged in.”

Ukrainian airline involved in Iran crash says plane was 'one of its best'

MORE PROBLEMS FOR IRAN:

-- A probe into the crash of a Ukrainian passenger jet that killed 176 shortly after takeoff from the Tehran airport is underway, with Iran pointing to a possible aircraft malfunction and Ukraine leaving open other paths of inquiry. Isabelle Khurshudyan, Erin Cunningham and Sarah Dadouch report: "At least one U.S.-based aviation expert said it appeared the plane was 'not intact' before it hit the ground. And a former Federal Aviation Administration accident investigation chief, Jeff Guzzetti, said the crash carried 'all the earmarks of an intentional act.' ... Iranian authorities said 'technical' problems were probably behind the crash of the Ukrainian Boeing 737-800. Ukraine's embassy in Tehran initially concurred, issuing a statement ruling out terrorism and suggesting likely engine failure. It later took down the statement without explanation, raising questions about whether different scenarios — including an external cause such as a missile — were being explored as potential reasons for the crash. ... Gen. Abolfazl Shekarchi, an Iranian armed forces spokesman, said ‘rumors’ that a missile brought down the plane were ‘completely false.’ The Ukrainian Embassy said that a commission was investigating the crash and that ‘any statements about the causes of the accident before the decision of the commission are not official.’ ...

“Todd Curtis, an aviation safety analyst for the website AirSafe.com and a former Boeing safety engineer who assisted in accident investigations, said it appeared — based only on video and photos from the crash site — that the plane was coming apart before it hit the ground. ‘The wreckage pattern was very consistent with a plane that was not intact when it hit the ground,’ he said. .... This means the crash could have been caused by an in-flight breakup, in-flight explosion, midair collision, structural failure, external strike or major system malfunction with the aircraft, Curtis said. The head of Iran’s Civil Aviation Organization, Ali Abedzadeh, said that Iran would not send the recorders to the United States and that the investigation would be led by Iran, Mehr News Agency reported.”

-- A list of names and birth dates of the flight’s victims has been shared by the airline, capturing the human scale of the loss. Amanda Coletta, Jennifer Hassan and Miriam Berger report: “Some of the victims had barely begun their lives: Thirteen were younger than 10. Two were born in 2014, another in 2016 and one in 2018. Many victims shared the same last name, a sign they were probably traveling with family. Almost half of the passengers were born in 1990 or after. ... At least two couples were newlyweds. ...

The Ukrainian flight was popular among Iranians traveling to Canada because there haven't been direct flights between the two countries since 2012, when Canada broke off diplomatic relations. The route was also popular with Iranian nationals studying in Canada because they cannot catch connecting flights in the United States as a result of U.S. immigration policies, said Payman Parseyan, a member of the Iranian Canadian community in Edmonton."

-- The Boeing 737-800, unlike the 737 Max, has a relatively solid safety record. Taylor Telford and Douglas MacMillan report: "The Iran crash was the 10th fatal accident of a Boeing 737 NG plane in its commercial life ... The plane has had about 0.06 fatal events per million flights, the lowest rate among modern aircraft that have flown for several years ... The plane has faced recent regulatory scrutiny. In early October, the Federal Aviation Administration told airlines to inspect more than 1,900 Boeing jets after cracks were found in some of the aircraft's wings. Dozens of them were later grounded after cracks were found in a part of the plane that connects the wings to the fuselage."

-- Two earthquakes struck Iran near the Bushehr nuclear power plant. Brittany Shammass reports: "A 4.9-magnitude quake occurred around 9 a.m., local time, followed by a 4.5-magnitude aftershock 30 minutes later. Iranian state media reported there were no casualties and rescue teams were at the scene in the southern part of the country. The first earthquake hit at a depth of about 6 miles, according to the United States Geological Survey. People who felt the earthquake around the site reported light shaking. The nuclear plant was designed to withstand quakes up to magnitude-9. Iran is on major seismic faults and frequently experiences earthquakes. Its hard, mountainous landscape can prevent damage from mild to moderate earthquakes.”

-- And at least 19 Iranians were killed after a bus plunged into a ravine about 80 miles east of Tehran. A pregnant woman and four children under the age of 6 were among the victims, the BBC reports.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Mitch McConnell leaves a classified briefing at the Capitol on Wednesday about Iran's missile strikes. (Jacquelyn Martin/AP)

THE INVESTIGATIONS:

-- A turf war is raging behind the scenes between House and Senate Republicans over who will defend Trump during the impeachment trial. Rachael Bade, Carol D. Leonnig and Josh Dawsey report: “House GOP leaders in recent weeks have advocated for Trump’s most aggressive defenders — Republican Reps. Jim Jordan (Ohio), John Ratcliffe (Tex.) and Douglas A. Collins (Ga.) — to ... help White House counsel Pat A. Cipollone rebut the two charges that the president abused his power and obstructed Congress. Trump, partial to bare-knuckles tactics and top-rated TV performances, loves the idea, according to four administration and congressional officials. ... But Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and his fellow GOP senators have expressed concerns to Trump that a House-led defense could offend moderates, including Sens. Susan Collins (R-Maine) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska). Trump, they argue, has already won the backing of the GOP base, so he and his team need to focus on ensuring Republican unity on an acquittal.

“McConnell, who discussed the trial with the president at the White House on Wednesday, has been advising Trump and his legal team not to think of the trial as a ‘made-for-TV-type House setting.’ ... Others in the GOP have publicly suggested House Republicans may lack the right temperament to be persuasive for a Senate constituency that expects a no-nonsense trial. ‘One thing I’m not eager to do is re-create the circuslike atmosphere of the House — that’s not what we’re going to do here, if we can avoid it,’ said Sen. John Cornyn (R-Tex.), a McConnell ally. ‘So I think it seems obvious to me that if the president picks a team that does not include House members, that we’d be more likely to have the dignified process that the Constitution calls for.’ ...

“Senior administration and House GOP officials indicated Wednesday that no final decision had been made. ... ‘There are a lot of rabbits running around claiming to be the very best bunny, but the president hasn’t yet decided which set of fuzzy tails he’ll use,’ said one official. ...”

-- A growing chorus of Senate Democrats is souring on House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's strategy and demanding she transmit the articles of impeachment to the Senate. Felicia Sonmez, John Wagner and Colby Itkowitz report: “Pelosi said Wednesday evening she would not be sending the articles of impeachment to the Senate [that night] and refused to engage on when she might do so. ‘Do you listen when I speak?’ she asked when a reporter in the Capitol asked her whether she planned to send them ‘anytime soon.’ ‘I said when we saw what the arena is that we would be sending members in, then we would send over the articles,’ Pelosi said. ... ‘We haven’t seen that, so I don’t know how many more times I have to say that and how many times you want to ask it.’ ... [Cornyn] put out a news release Wednesday afternoon that highlighted a half-dozen Democratic senators who have said publicly in recent days that a trial should begin soon. The most recent among them was Sen. Dianne Feinstein (Calif.), who, according to a Bloomberg News reporter, said, ‘If we’re going to do it, she should send them over. I don’t see what good delay does.’”

House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer (D-Md.) said Democrats are holding open the option of calling in former national security adviser John Bolton to testify in the House but are waiting to see whether he will be summoned as a witness in the Senate: “Hoyer also defended Pelosi’s delay in sending the articles of impeachment to the Senate. ... He also said that the timing of the process wouldn’t be dictated by the early presidential nominating contests. Several senators could be stuck in Washington serving as jurors as their Democratic rivals campaign in the weeks ahead of caucuses and primaries.”

-- Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) makes the case for a Senate trial that includes witnesses in an op-ed for USA Today: “We are not asking for critics of the president to serve as witnesses in a trial. We are asking that the president’s men — his top advisers — tell their story, and for the Senate to have access to the documents that will shed light on the truth."

-- The State Department released additional Ukraine documents in response to a FOIA lawsuit, per American Oversight: "The production includes several heavily redacted emails from senior State Department officials. Among the documents are a letter sent to former Ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch instructing her not to testify. ... Wednesday's release is also notable for what is missing — specifically, any written record of communications between top State Department officials and Trump personal attorney Rudy Giuliani."

-- Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin is working behind the scenes to delay a Democratic effort requiring the Secret Service to disclose how much it spends protecting Trump and his family when they travel until after the 2020 election. These disclosures would highlight the millions in taxpayer dollars that have been paid out directly to Trump's private businesses, which the president still owns. Carol D. Leonnig and David A. Fahrenthold report: "The issue has emerged as a sticking point in recent weeks as Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and key senators have been negotiating draft legislation to move the Secret Service back to his department, its historic home. ... Mnuchin has agreed to Democrats' push for a requirement that the Secret Service report its travel expenses but wants such disclosures to begin after the election. ...

"During the 2016 campaign, Trump promised to 'rarely leave the White House' and cut back on what he called wasteful travel by [Obama]. Since taking office, however, Trump has made more than 50 visits to his properties outside the Washington area. ... The government spent about $96 million on travel by Obama over eight years. ... A report by the Government Accountability Office ... estimated that Trump's travel cost $13.6 million in just one month in early 2017. ... If spending continued at that pace, Trump would have exceeded Obama's total expenses before the end of his first year in office.

“The extensive international business travel and vacations of his grown children, with Secret Service agents in tow, as well as the expense the Secret Service incurs to secure numerous Trump properties, have added to the agency’s financial strain, according to its budget requests. Since their father was elected, Trump’s sons Eric and Donald Jr. have made business trips to overseas locales including Ireland, Scotland, Dubai, Uruguay and India. In 2017, Eric Trump’s visit to a Trump building under construction in Uruguay cost taxpayers $97,000.”

-- Companies interested in currying favor with Trump by buying the lease rights to his Washington hotel have until Jan. 23 to submit initial bids. Jonathan O’Connell reports: The president’s “company hired to market the hotel, JLL, emailed potential bidders with a ‘call for offers’ asking that they submit a proposed purchase price, the name of the hotel chain that would operate the hotel, names of investors and how long it would take to close a deal ... Interested buyers are also encouraged to schedule tours of the building before the deadline, according to the materials.”

People listen during a Burleigh County Commission meeting in December in Bismarck, N.D. The commission was considering whether to accept more international refugees to the county. (Will Kincaid/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- A North Dakota county accepted refugees, but the debate over the decision is far from over. Maria Sacchetti and Ann E. Marimow report: “Jim Peluso, now in his 14th year as a Burleigh County commissioner, knows which roads need fresh gravel, how to collect taxes and when to approve permits for Bingo games. He does not know much about refugees. ... They were hardly a topic of conversation here until September, when [Trump] issued an executive order saying that state and local officials must agree in writing to welcome refugees or the U.S. government would not send them. ... Deciding whether to be among the first places in the United States to deny additional refugees under Trump's new rule narrowly divided this county on the banks of the Missouri River ... Amid the uncertainty of the new rule, resettlement agencies have been scrambling to secure permission from localities, including some, like Burleigh, that have welcomed refugees for decades. The agencies must obtain approval letters by Jan. 21 if refugees are to start arriving in June. ... North Dakota's governor is among several Republicans who agreed to take refugees. But in Burleigh, home to the state capital of Bismarck, the decision degenerated into jeering, insults and heated online posts. ... The debate raged for days. Longtime residents say the county is friendly, tightknit, sometimes suspicious of newcomers and resistant to change."

-- A Mexican asylum-seeker slit his own throat on a bridge across the Rio Grande after being denied entry into the United States. From Reuters: "The man, who has not been identified, tried to enter the United States at the Pharr–Reynosa International Bridge between the Mexican border city of Reynosa and Pharr, Texas. ... Around 5 p.m. local time, the man drew a knife and cut his throat when denied access to the United States. Both officials said the man was seeking asylum. ... The attorney general's office for the Mexican state of Tamaulipas, where Reynosa lies, said it was investigating the man's death."

-- The White House wants to change environmental rules in order to speed up highway projects, pipelines and more. Juliet Eilperin and Brady Dennis report: "The proposed changes would narrow the scope of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), which requires federal agencies to assess the impact of a major project before a spade of dirt is turned and to include the public in the process. Environmental groups, tribal activists and others have used the law to delay or block a slew of infrastructure, mining, logging and drilling projects since it was signed by President Richard Nixon in 1970. Industry has long complained about the process, however, prompting [Trump] to note in a statement on NEPA's 50th anniversary on Jan. 1 that it 'can increase costs, derail important projects, and threaten jobs for American workers and labor union members.' The White House proposal will almost certainly face legal challenges."

-- Puerto Ricans, fearing more earthquakes, are fleeing damaged structures as hundreds of families find themselves homeless because of the latest natural disaster to roil the U.S.

territory. Arelis R. Hernández and Cristina Corujo report: "The help has arrived, but the uncertainty again has set in. PREPA restored electricity to about 600,000 customers — less than a third of the island's population — on Wednesday. But the progress was offset by news that damage to the island's primary generation station, Costa Sur, was worse than expected. It could be a year before it returns to full power capacity, and authorities said they were working on solutions. But as long as the earth keeps moving, problems will persist. ... The displaced townspeople are up before dawn, heading to gas stations or any open shop hoping to buy bread or something else to eat. By midmorning, people return to their homes to find more clothes, salvage belongings or reflect on what they already have lost. They pack their cars with blankets and pillows and head back to the camp by sundown for another restless night. Not every home in Guánica and Guayanilla's barrios is compromised, but until authorities can evaluate each structure and the tremors stop, few families are risking it.”

-- Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg declared that she is “cancer free,” beating the disease for the fourth time after undergoing treatment for pancreatic cancer. CNN reported that she sounded "energized" and spoke "animatedly." (Colby Itkowitz)

-- Deaths of despair: Major drugstore chains are suing doctors, claiming they are the real culprits in the opioid epidemic that continues to ravage working-class families. Lenny Bernstein reports: “CVS, Walgreen Co., Walmart, Rite Aid and other major pharmacy chains said opioid prescribers bear responsibility for the prescription narcotic crisis, but unlike the drugstores, have not been sued by Cuyahoga and Summit counties [in Ohio]. In legal papers filed Monday, they contended that doctors and other prescribers should have to pay some of the penalty if the drugstore chains are found liable at trial. ... Drug manufacturers and distributors agreed or were ordered to pay hundreds of millions of dollars in settlements and one court verdict reached in state and federal courts last year. But the big pharmacy chains have not been held liable so far.”

-- Alcohol-related deaths in this country have more than doubled over the past 20 years, according to a new government study. From Fox News: “‘Alcoholism: Clinical and Experimental Research’ found alcohol-related deaths per year shot up from 35,914 in 1999 to 72,558 in 2017. Given reports that death certificates often fail to indicate alcohol as a cause of death, the actual number is likely higher. Researchers at the National Center for Health Statistics looked at death certificates from 1999 to 2017 and found the rate of alcohol-related death increased 50.9 percent, from 16.9 to 25.5 per 100,000. This equates to nearly 1 million lives lost over the 18-year span. In 2017 alone, 2.6 percent of deaths in the United States were alcohol-related. Nearly half of the alcohol-related deaths were the result of liver disease or overdoses.”

-- Facebook won't limit political ad targeting or stop false claims under its new advertising rules. Tony Romm, Isaac Stanley-Becker and Craig Timberg report: “Facebook said it would address those concerns by giving users a choice to see fewer ads about political candidates and social issues, a policy it plans to roll out in the summer. Users can also choose to stop seeing ads from campaigns and other entities, including businesses, that target them using custom lists of data, such as their email addresses. ... Going forward, Facebook said users will be able to limit organizations — many of which they may not know by name — that help businesses and political campaigns target them with ads using the custom audiences tool. Conversely, people can choose to opt into seeing ads that were not targeted to them, Facebook said, if users think they were wrongly excluded.”

-- Teen Vogue published a bizarrely positive story about Facebook's “fight” against misinformation ahead of the 2020 presidential election. Then it removed it without explanation. Reis Thebault reports: “The ‘article,’ published online Wednesday by Teen Vogue, appeared without a byline and read more like a 2,000-word news release than a piece of journalism, prompting some to ask whether Facebook had paid to place it. In the ensuing hours, a befuddling back-and-forth followed, featuring a mysterious retraction, an apology and a pair of statements parceled out by company spokespeople. None of it clarified the article's origins, but it did begin a conversation about an online news environment where advertising and editorial content sometimes swirl together, and powerful corporations pay big to bolster their brands."

-- In a fun read, Jada Yuan speaks with several spouses of Democratic presidential candidates about playing the role, from Andrew Yang's homemaker wife to Amy Klobuchar's law professor husband: "While the candidates are competitors, the spouses are often spending long hours waiting in the wings together... It's a little like the long Oscars season, or maybe even high school, in that unlikely friendships form from frequency of exposure and the shared experience of being a plus one. ... According to Bernie Sanders's wife Jane, the vibe is far more collegial than in 2016. But, calling other spouses 'friends' is a bit of a stretch, she says. 'It's more of good acquaintances,' and there's 'often a big hug,' she says."

-- "Inside Elizabeth Warren's effort to court her vanquished rivals — and why it's worth her time," by Annie Linskey and Amy B Wang: "Warren had just finished hiking in Washington's North Cascades mountains in August when she dropped in for lunch with the state's Democratic governor, Jay Inslee, who had recently left the presidential race and whose endorsement she was seeking. After Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand of New York dropped out in late August, Warren talked to her about family leave issues over tea. When Sen. Kamala D. Harris of California ended her White House bid in December, Warren was one of the first to call. And Warren became so close with Julián Castro that they chatted over the holidays about a possible endorsement even before he officially bowed out of the race. Warren's courtship of her onetime rivals is more than just flattery. It's a quiet part of a strategy that's becoming more urgent: to craft an image as a consensus candidate. ...

“After speaking with Harris in December, Warren adopted part of her signature plan on abortion. ... Warren amended her campaign website to praise Gillibrand, calling her a ‘a tireless advocate’ on family leave. ... In the days and weeks after Inslee dropped out, Warren was among several candidates exploring a potential endorsement from him. ... Some of the candidates had perfunctory conversations with Inslee, while others reiterated broad areas of agreement without getting into details. ... [Warren] stood out by focusing on the nuances of Inslee’s plan to eliminate carbon emissions from buildings, power plants and vehicles over the course of a decade. She hired one of Inslee’s staffers who focused on climate issues, and she credited the governor when she unveiled her own policy in September. ... Inslee has not endorsed a candidate in the Democratic primary, but he does regularly praise Warren.”

-- Pete Buttigieg, who has struggled to attract support from African Americans, won his first endorsement from a black member of Congress: Rep. Anthony G. Brown of Maryland. (Chelsea Janes)

-- Six million Democratic donors gave $1 billion last year through the fundraising platform ActBlue. (Michelle Ye Hee Lee)

Prince Harry and Meghan to 'step back' from royal roles

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- In a shock announcement, Britain's Prince Harry and his wife, Meghan, the Duchess of Sussex, said they will "step back" from their roles as senior members of the royal family to become "financially independent" and split their time between Britain and North America. William Booth and Karla Adam report: "Such a move abroad, away from the strictures of Buckingham Palace and its many duties, would be bold and remarkable, signaling that two of the younger, more popular royals may be fed up with an anachronistic, cosseted life of endless ribbon-cutting and fusty, scripted engagements — and the scrutiny that comes with all of that. ... The globally famous couple ... have complained bitterly of being pursued by the British tabloids. ... In a post on their Instagram account, the couple said they made the decision to distance themselves from palace life 'after many months of reflection and internal discussions.'

... A statement from Buckingham Palace prompted speculation that the queen may not have been fully informed of the decision before the announcement.” [Literally, it's palace intrigue.]

-- How it's playing across the pond, via the Guardian of London:

“The Sun gives us the Twitter hashtag headline for the day with ‘Megxit,’ and says the Queen is upset but princes Charles and William are ‘incandescent with rage.’ ... The Daily Mail’s poster-style front page speaks of the ‘Queen’s fury’ at the revelation in its royal bombshell special issue. ... The Mirror says simply: ‘They didn’t even tell the Queen.’ It quotes a source saying: ‘They are showing complete disregard for the institution.’ ... The Telegraph says: ‘Harry and Meghan quit the Firm.’”

-- Europe and Britain are preparing to launch a fresh round of Brexit talks. William Booth and Michael Birnbaum report: “The new president of the European Commission [warned] British Prime Minister Boris Johnson that it would probably be ‘impossible’ for the two sides to complete a comprehensive divorce deal by his ‘very tight’ deadline at the end of 2020. ... Speaking before her first face-to-face meeting with the prime minister at No. 10 Downing Street in London on Wednesday, European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen said that if Johnson’s new government wanted the most favorable terms for divorce, with deep access to the largest, richest single market on the planet, then Britain should seek to align itself with E.U. rules and regulations. ... Von der Leyen, a former German defense minister, lamented that the U.K.-E.U. marriage is over. She fondly remembered her year at the London School of Economics, where she gave her speech, and recalled, too, her pleasure in exploring a multicultural London, with frequent trips to Camden Town record stores and Soho pubs. ... Von der Leyen said she hopes the two sides will be able to reach a trade deal with 'zero tariffs, zero dumping, zero quotas.'"

-- Australia's fires are putting the nation's coal-loving Prime Minister Scott Morrison to the test. Kate Shuttleworth and Joel Achenbach report: "His reputation as a coal advocate has not helped as he has struggled to project empathy for victims of the fires ... The disaster has re-energized a long-running national debate over climate change and the country's heavy investment in coal mining. Australia is one of the world's biggest exporters of coal. Global activists have accused Morrison's government of helping to scuttle progress on international climate talks late last year. Morrison skipped the climate meeting convened by the United Nations in September. Protesters plan to take to the streets in a string of Australian cities Friday in demonstrations organized by Uni Students for Climate Justice. Morrison has mocked environmentalists as 'apocalyptic' and has threatened to outlaw protests. ... Morrison and his center-right coalition government have been the focus of widespread condemnation over accusations that they failed to heed warnings from experts that this would be a devastating bush-fire season. ... In recent days, Morrison has said his government accepts the scientific consensus on climate change and the role of fossil fuels. He reaffirmed the government's commitment to meeting or exceeding goals for reducing carbon emissions. But he also emphasizes the need to protect jobs."

-- A U.S. commission led by a bipartisan group of lawmakers urged the Trump administration to enact sanctions against Chinese officials and companies for human rights abuses. Gerry Shih reports: “The Congressional-Executive Commission on China argued for tougher and more cohesive U.S. action against Beijing in a new annual report that detailed the Chinese government's crackdown against religious minorities and labor activists, its expansion of digital surveillance and censorship, and its political influence activities around the world. ... While the commission's previous reports focused on China's domestic situation, Wednesday's document contained stark new warnings about the threat of what it called China's ‘intensified use of disinformation, propaganda, economic intimidation and political influence operations.’ Congress should require U.S. universities, think tanks and nongovernmental organizations to disclose major gifts from foreign sources and expand scrutiny of Chinese government influence in American classrooms via student groups and on-campus organizations such as China's state-funded Confucius Institutes, the commission said. It warned, however, that the U.S. government's statements and policies should ‘clearly differentiate between the Chinese people and culture and the Chinese government and Communist Party’ to prevent the targeting of Chinese Americans or the Chinese diaspora.”

-- The specter of a possible new virus is emerging from central China, raising alarms across Asia. Gerry Shih and Lena H. Sun report: “Officials in Taiwan, Hong Kong, South Korea, Thailand and the Philippines said in recent days that they will begin setting up quarantine zones or scanning passengers from China for signs of fever or other pneumonialike symptoms that may indicate a new disease possibly linked to a wild animal market in Wuhan. The health commission in Wuhan, a transit and business hub, says there is no clear evidence that the unidentified disease can be transmitted between humans, and no health-care workers have been infected. Cases of fever have been reported in Hong Kong and Taiwan by travelers who recently visited Wuhan, although there is no confirmation that the illnesses are linked. Since mid-December, 59 people have been diagnosed with viral pneumonia of 'unknown cause' — including seven who are critically ill, according to Wuhan's health commission. The officials said an additional 163 people who have come into close contact with the infected have been placed under close observation. No deaths have been reported."

-- China will send its chief trade negotiator to the United States next week sign a phase-one deal meant to defuse tensions. From the WSJ: "The Chinese delegation, to be led by Vice Premier Liu He, will visit Washington from Monday to Wednesday."

-- Former auto executive Carlos Ghosn proclaimed his innocence and complained of a "corrupt" and "inhumane" justice system in Japan during his first public appearance since he escaped to Lebanon. Simon Denyer, Liz Sly and Asser Khattab report: "Ghosn complained of a 'systematic campaign by a handful of malevolent actors to destroy my reputation and impugn my character' because of his plans to deepen the alliance between Nissan and Renault. He also denounced his detention under a 'corrupt and hostile system that presumed my guilt from Day One.' But Japanese Justice Minister Masako Mori said Ghosn was propagating false information about Japan's justice system and warned that his decision to run away from a criminal trial could be a crime in itself. Ghosn says that after his arrest in November 2018, he was kept in solitary confinement in a tiny cell for 130 days, while being allowed outside for only half an hour a day and only on weekdays. He says he was 'interrogated day and night,' sometimes for up to eight hours at a time, without a lawyer present, while lights were left on round-the-clock. The system was 'anachronistic and inhumane,' he said. 'It's not very difficult to come to the conclusion that you're going to die in Japan or you have to get out.' Experts say Japan's legal system allows prosecutors to detain people without charge and subject them to relentless interrogation without the presence of defense counsel until they confess or incriminate themselves. ... Many legal experts share Ghosn's concerns about Japan's justice system, while many foreign business executives say it is unthinkable that powerful, well-connected Japanese businesspeople would have faced similar treatment by the country's legal system."

-- Russia and Turkey made a joint call for a cease-fire in Libya in an attempt to resolve a conflict that Western powers and the U.N. have struggled to end. From the Times: "Analysts say the Russians and Turks are seeking to exploit a diplomatic void left by Europe's failure to end the fighting in Libya. A German-led effort to hold an international conference on Libya has come to nothing, and the United Nations Security Council has not called for a cease-fire. The Russian and Turkish foreign ministers issued a joint statement calling for the cease-fire on Wednesday after President Vladimir V. Putin and President Recep Tayyip Erdogan met and presided over the inauguration of the TurkStream gas pipeline in Istanbul. It is not clear how much Russia and Turkey can influence events on the ground, but Mr. Putin and Mr. Erdogan have met regularly to discuss military deployments in Syria, and have declared Libya a priority.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

It was almost as if Democrats and Republicans attended a separate briefing on Iran. For the most part, lawmakers from both parties painted starkly different pictures:

Florida's Republican senator had this to say about the same briefing:

 Marco Rubio
@marcorubio

Natl Security officials gave a compelling briefing to Senators just now. They answered every important question.

Anyone who walks out & says they aren't convinced action against #Soleimani was justified is either never going to be convinced or just oppose everything Trump does.

 9,896  9:06 PM - Jan 8, 2020

---

 10.2K people are talking about this

A Democratic senator from Connecticut:

 Chris Murphy
@ChrisMurphyCT

Just left the briefing.

The bottom line is this: I did not hear evidence of a specific imminent threat that would allow an attack without congressional authorization.

With consequences as serious as these, that is unacceptable.

Congress needs to act.

 39.8K  9:33 PM - Jan 8, 2020

---

 11.1K people are talking about this

This is Georgia's newly appointed Republican senator:

KELLY Kelly Loeffler
@kloeffler

Today, I backed Sen. @tedcruz 's resolution that applauds @realDonaldTrump for eradicating Qassem Soleimani. The world can sleep better knowing this evil terrorist is dead. #gapol twitter.com/WhiteHouse/sta...

The White House  @WhiteHouse
Soleimani was a monster.
"And he's no longer a monster. He's dead."

 1,200 9:09 PM - Jan 7, 2020

 313 people are talking about this

Not all Republicans fell in line. Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.), a libertarian, did a round of interviews after the briefing:

Aaron Rugar ✓

@atrupar

Here's Rand Paul telling Wolf Blitzer that the intel the Trump admin cited to justify the Soleimani killing during today's briefing didn't go beyond "generalities" and "stuff you'd read in the newspaper"

♥ 5,875 11:53 PM - Jan 8, 2020

💬 2,228 people are talking about this

The vice president shared a Situation Room pic:

Mike Pence ✓
@Mike_Pence

Joined President @realDonaldTrump in the Situation Room last night upon reports the Islamic Republic of Iran had launched missiles on U.S. military facilities in Iraq. America is safer and stronger because of President Trump's decisive action. 🇺🇸

♥ 11.5K 11:31 PM - Jan 8, 2020

💬 3,049 people are talking about this

The chief strategist on Mitt Romney's 2012 presidential campaign reacted to a Frontline interview with a Border Patrol officer who followed Trump's orders to tear families apart at the border:

stuart stevens
@stuartpstevens

My dad was FBI agent when ordered to help round-up Japanese Americans for internment camps. He resigned, joined Navy, spent 3 years fighting in South Pacific, 28 island landings. Never regretted it. His lesson: "You can always say no." twitter.com/sifill\_ldf/sta...

Sherrilyn Ifill  @Sifill_LDF

"The Most Horrible Thing I've Ever Done": A Border Patrol Officer Who Separated Families Speaks Out | Targeting El Paso | FRONTLINE | PBS | Official Site
pbs.org/wgbh/frontline...

 7,541 3:47 PM - Jan 8, 2020

 2,199 people are talking about this

Jokes flowed after Meghan and Harry made their announcement:

Eric Nelson
@literaryeric

First time I've ever seen someone quit their family, saying it's to spend more time with their jobs.

twitter.com/nbcnews/status...

NBC News  @NBCNews

JUST IN: Harry and Meghan say they plan to step back as senior members of the British Royal family, and "carve out a progressive new role within this institution" while working "to become financially independent."

 32.6K 6:49 PM - Jan 8, 2020

 4,970 people are talking about this

Delia Cai
@delia_cai

a sitcom where Meghan teaches Harry how to do workforce things such as using TurboTax & meal prepping & filling out a W-1, please

 1,269 6:57 PM - Jan 8, 2020

 187 people are talking about this

The Chicago Tribune found the local angle:

 Chicago Tribune ✓
@chicagotribune

Northwestern graduate moving closer to home after spending time abroad trib.al/KJCbIIZ

Prince Harry, Meghan Markle 'to step back' as senio...

Britain's Prince Harry and his wife, Meghan, said they will "work to become financially independent."

chicagotribune.com

♥ 56.8K 7:10 PM - Jan 8, 2020

💬 11.9K people are talking about this

And one of Canada's most loved brands jumped in with a hard-to-beat offer:

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

"It's going to be a very long book," biographer Robert Caro told the Times of the unfinished final volume of his Lyndon Johnson biography.

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert is really glad it's not World War III:

Seth Meyers can't believe some of Trump's defenders are blaming

Obama for the current crisis:

And Trevor Noah did a dramatic reading of Trump's "All is well!" tweet:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Book Club: The most looked-up words of the decade and the authors banding together for Australia
Date: Friday, January 10, 2020 7:38:26 AM

U.S. Bank
Earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choice
With the U.S. Bank Cash+™ Visa Signature® Card, you earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choosing and 2% in an everyday category.

LEARN MORE

Powered by  LiveIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Book Club

Reviews and recommendations from critic Ron Charles.

By Ron Charles

 Email

Novelist Stephen King (AP Photo/Mark Lennihan); Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham (Photo by Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post); novelist Don Winslow (Photo by Michael Lionstar/Courtesy of Knopf)

Would you be willing to do your normal job for one hour to raise a small fortune to help sick children? Bestselling authors Stephen King and Don Winslow have pledged to give $200,000 to charity if Donald Trump's press secretary, Stephanie Grisham, holds a press conference this week. Winslow initially offered $75,000 on Twitter, and then King joined in with his own $75,000 tweet. Yesterday, they both raised the kitty to $200,000 for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, Tenn. Grisham, who replaced Court Fabulist Sarah Huckabee Sanders last July, has never held a press conference with the White House press corps. "Donald Trump walking to his helicopter and screaming out a few answers to the press is not a press briefing," Winslow tells me. "The American public has the right to have journalists ask questions on a wide range of subjects and to have the White House answer those questions truthfully." If given the chance, Winslow said he would ask the press secretary about the "children being held in cages in Trump's border prisons." He would also ask about the president's relationship with Deutsche bank, the continuing nuclear program in North Korea, the cost to U.S. taxpayers for the president's tariffs and The Washington Post's list of Trump's "15,413 false or misleading claims." CNN's Jake Tapper reports that Grisham has rejected the novelists' offer. She told Tapper, "Donations to charity should never come with strings attached." But there are worse things than strings attached when it comes to charity. In November, the president agreed to pay \$2 million in damages for misusing money from the Donald J. Trump Foundation to buy portraits of himself, pay his legal bills and support his 2016 campaign (full story). The president's charity — now closed — was initially funded with proceeds from his first book, "The Art of the Deal."

Meanwhile, while King was prodding the press secretary to do her job, he was named winner of a lifetime achievement award from the Audio Publishers Association — only the second such winner in the Audie Awards' 25-year history. The ceremony will take place on March 2 in New York. In a statement released this week, the APA notes that King has been an enthusiastic supporter of audiobooks — he's even narrated some himself — and many of his bestsellers have won or been nominated for Audies. "The most successful audiobooks," he tells me,

“are the ones where you drive three extra miles to hear another 20 minutes of a good story.” He particularly loves a 1980s-era recording of Larry McMurtry’s “Lonesome Dove” narrated by the late Wolfram Kandinsky.

A firefighter manages a controlled burn near Tomerong, Australia, in an effort to contain a larger fire nearby, Jan. 8, 2020. (AP Photo/Rick Rycroft)

The deadly fires raging across Australia are terrifying, but don't forget how quickly compassion can spread, too. On Saturday, young adult novelists Emily Gale and Nova Weetman proposed that writers raise money for Victoria's rural fire service by auctioning off signed copies of their books, writing advice and other publishing services. They set up a loosely organized campaign on Twitter using the hashtag #AuthorsForFireys. (“Fireys” is an Australian colloquialism for “firefighters.”) Their campaign quickly attracted donations from hundreds of writers around the world, including Cheryl Strayed, Viet Thanh Nguyen, Jeff VanderMeer and Liane Moriarty. Gale tells me that she and Weetman “could not have anticipated this level of participation.” But these demonstrations of generosity have been matched by expressions of outrage. Richard Flanagan, who has donated a signed copy of his Booker-winning novel, “The Narrow Road to the Deep North,” tells me, “This is a historic crime for which successive conservative governments must share guilt as they have for almost a quarter of a century done everything to subvert and set back the cause of climate action nationally and globally.” Joanne Harris, author of “Chocolat” and other delicious novels, echoes that sentiment. “A lot of us in the UK are horrified by the appalling bushfires in Australia, and ashamed by the lack of response from our government.” She has donated a manuscript critique and an hour’s feedback over Skype. “If we know anything,” Harris tells me, “it’s that stories work better than statistics in the fight to raise awareness.” (#AuthorsForFireys is set to close today at 7 p.m. EST. More details here.)

ADVERTISEMENT

U.S. Bank
Earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choice
With the U.S. Bank Cash+™ Visa Signature® Card, you earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choosing and 2% in an everyday category.

LEARN MORE

Actor Ben Miles and novelist Hilary Mantel in the sound studio. (Courtesy of Macmillan Audio)

Hilary Mantel will release “The Mirror & the Light,” the third volume of her Booker-winning Wolf Hall trilogy, on March 10. It’s sure to be one of the biggest literary novels of the year — and possibly one of the biggest audiobooks, too. Ben Miles, who played

Thomas Cromwell in the West End and Broadway productions of “Wolf Hall,” will be the narrator. In a statement, Mantel said, “Ben understands the main character from the inside. His insights from the rehearsal room helped shape the story. His voice is as close as can be to the voice that’s in my head as I write.” In a bit of Cromwellian intrigue, Miles has usurped the narrators of the previous two volumes of Wolf Hall. Simon Slater, who originally recorded the first volume, and Simon Vance, who originally recorded the second, both won Audie Awards for their Wolf Hall performances. But on March 10, Macmillan Audio will release all three books narrated by Miles. Industry insiders say the change was made to create a single narrative voice across the trilogy. Vance is taking the replacement in stride. “Many ‘jobbing’ narrators — those of us who make our livings committed to the audiobook — are finding our places on high-profile titles taken by actors who are household names,” he tells me. “I’m hoping to rectify my lack of visibility outside the audiobook world in a year or two by winning an Oscar, or similar, and so restoring my place in the pantheon of favored narrators. That’s not going so well to date, though I remain hopeful. I think Ben Miles will be a wonderful narrator (he is a favorite actor of mine, dammit) and I wish him well. (See: not... bitter... at all.)”

(Courtesy of Citymeals on Wheels)

Food and poetry have a delicious connection. Remember when William Carlos Williams apologized for eating those sweet, cold plums, which you were probably saving for breakfast? But too often we snobbily imagine that literary sustenance is a luxury not a necessity. The Poetry Society of America couldn't disagree more. Since the fall of 2018, the society has supplied poems that can be distributed with food by Meals on Wheels chapters. "We're not blind to the fact that people have material needs," says Matt Brogan, Executive Director of the Poetry Society of America. "But that is not the end-all and be-all of what folks need. The poems don't replace actual nourishment, but they provide a different kind — this emotional, intellectual element that I think people crave." He notes that the poems, printed on small cards, are intended "to break a sense of isolation between the recipients and the outside world." The society is now working with three Meals on Wheels chapters in New York and California — and is actively looking for more. Beth Shapiro, executive director of Citymeals on Wheels in New York, tells me she immediately loved the idea. "What we deliver is more than a meal," she says. "It's a check-in and it's a visit." These poems — by Walt Whitman, Sara Teasdale and contemporary poets as well — are "a great way to take the written word and bring it to people who might be hungry for it." Although she's received calls and letters of thanks, she says, "The best is to go into a meal recipient's home and see the poems on their refrigerator. It's just wonderful and warming." Give me a minute; I seem to have something in my eye.

THE

Selfies

ADVERTISEMENT

U.S. Bank
Earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choice
With the U.S. Bank Cash+™ Visa Signature® Card, you earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choosing and 2% in an everyday category.

LEARN MORE

Powered by  LiveIntent

Submissions are now open to the U.S. Selfies. Not your iPhone portraits in front of the Washington Monument — this Selfie is a new award for the best self-published novel in America. The contest, launched by Publishers Weekly and its indie authors website, BookLife, offers a $1,000 prize and a $5,000 advertising package. (Details here.) I've been deeply skeptical of self-publishing: It's really big, and it's mostly bad. For years, the industry preyed on naive writers who couldn't get real agents or publishers to accept their amateurish manuscripts. That's improving, largely because the cost of self-publishing has fallen dramatically. Also, there's now more legitimate advice available for authors who want to go their own way. But problems remain. This week, Carl Pritzkat, president of BookLife, cordially listened to my skepticism and successfully whittled some of it away. "The percentage of great self-published books is going up," he said, "because as people learn more about what it means to self-publish a book, they're also understanding that 'self-published' is a misnomer. You actually need a team of professional, quality people to help you to 'self-publish' a book. It means you have to run that team." At a minimum, you should hire an editor and a designer — not your cousin who is a big reader, but reputable professionals who are willing to tell you what you don't want to hear. I would feel better about the Selfies if it didn't require a $50 entrance fee and better still if this contest weren't co-sponsored by IngramSpark and Combined Book Exhibit — two companies that sell services to self-published authors. But maybe I'm being too old school. The inaugural Selfies Award winner will be presented at the American Library Association's conference on June 27. I hereby promise to review it.

Words of the decade

The editors of the Merriam-Webster dictionary released a wonderfully succinct, if head-spinning, survey of the last decade's most looked-up words. Below is a list of the top word (and runner-up) for each of the past ten years. Can you remember what sparked interest in these words at the time?:

- 2010: Austerity (Shellacking)
- 2011: Pragmatic (Vitriol)
- 2012: Socialism + Capitalism (Malarkey)
- 2013: Science (Cognitive)
- 2014: Culture (Insidious)
- 2015: -ism (Marriage)
- 2016: Surreal (Bigly)
- 2017: Feminism (Hurricane)
- 2018: Justice (Laurel)
- 2019: They (Impeach)

A monarch butterfly (AP Photo/Carolyn Kaster); Harper

Novelists don't just respond to climate change; they anticipate it. Kevin Sieff, The Washington Post’s Latin America correspondent, reports this week that as temperatures in the Midwest grow warmer each summer, the population of monarch butterflies could soon be decimated. I sent that story to Barbara Kingsolver because it reminded me of “Flight Behavior,” a thoughtful novel she published back in 2012 (review). “It’s beyond heartbreaking to see the wonders of the world quietly dying, while we remain completely absorbed in the rivalries of our own species,” Kingsolver responded. “I used a fictional crisis of monarch butterflies as a plot device. Now the fictional crisis is real, and the human truths in that novel are weirder but truer than ever: We stick to our routines and argue our righteousness while the house burns around us. People are some strange animal, aren’t we?”

(Knopf; One World; Penguin Press)

If you’re looking for a great new short story collection, consider the finalists for the $20,000 Story Prize, which were announced yesterday:

- “Everything Inside,” by Edwidge Danticat. Danticat, the author of “Claire of the Sea Light,” “Brother, I’m Dying” and other books, won the inaugural Story Prize for “The Dew Breaker” in 2005.
- “Sabrina & Corina,” by Kali Fajardo-Anstine. This collection, Fajardo-Anstine’s first book, was also a finalist for the National Book Award in fiction.
- “Grand Union,” by Zadie Smith (review). This is the first story collection from the author of “White Teeth” and other novels.

Last year, I served as a judge for the Story Prize, which was unusually enjoyable not only because of the fine collections I read but because of the contest’s merciful structure. Rather than bury my house in submissions, the prize founder and the prize director chose the three finalists. Then two other judges and I came in and picked the winner (“Florida,” by Lauren Groff). This year’s judges are writers Kristen Arnett and Tiphonie Yanique and publisher Andy Hunter. All three finalists will read from and discuss their work before the winner is announced at the awards ceremony on Feb. 26 at the New School in New York. For tickets ($14), click here.

The Washington Post in Washington, D.C. (Ron Charles/The Washington Post)

The Washington Post is looking for a full-time editorial aide to join Book World. The duties of this detail-oriented position include sorting mountains of book mail, sending books and payments to freelancers, keeping our book closet organized (See "Fibber McGee") and writing blurbs for the weekly bestsellers lists. Among many other things, you’ll have to deal with infuriating questions from me like, “Remember that galley with the blue spine? It might have had a tree on the cover — or maybe it was a fox? Can you get me another copy of that today?” If you’re interested, send a resume and cover letter to Book

World Editor Stephanie Merry at stephanie.merry@washpost.com by Jan. 21.

The Si-o-Se Pol bridge over the Zayandeh Rud River in Isfahan, Iran. (Photo by Atta Kenare/AFP via Getty Images)

This week's poem is by Kaveh Akbar, who was born in Tehran. He now teaches at Purdue University, Randolph College and Warren Wilson. In 2014, he founded the poetry interview site Divedapper.

Do You Speak Persian?

Some days we can see Venus in midafternoon. Then at night, stars separated by billions of miles, light travelling years to die in the back of an eye.

Is there a vocabulary for this—one to make dailiness amplify and not diminish wonder?

I have been so careless with the words I already have.

I don't remember how to say home in my first language, or lonely, or light.

I remember only
delam barat tang shodeh, I miss you, and shab bekheir, goodnight.

How is school going, Kaveh-joon?

Delam barat tang shodeh.

Are you still drinking?

Shab bekheir.

For so long every step I've taken has been from one tongue to another.

To order the world:

I need, you need, he/she/it needs.

The rest, left to a hungry jackal in the back of my brain.

Right now our moon looks like a pale cabbage rose.

Delam barat tang shodeh.

We are forever folding into the night.

Shab bekheir.

From "Calling a Wolf a Wolf," by Kaveh Akbar, Alice James Books, 2017. Used by permission of the publisher.

Let's keep in touch. If you have any questions or comments about this weekly newsletter or The Post's book coverage, contact me at ron.charles@washpost.com. And if you know someone who would enjoy this newsletter, please forward it to them. To subscribe, click here.

Reading will supposedly make you a better person. That's not the real reason to pick up a book.

By Mark Athitakis • Read more »

In ‘Cleanness,’ Garth Greenwell explores the mysteries of love and pleasure

By Ron Charles • Read more »

---

‘Long Bright River’ is that wonderful thriller that subverts your expectations till the very last page

By Maureen Corrigan • Read more »

---

A Nazi admiral secretly thwarts his superiors in Jerome Charyn’s ‘Cesare’

By Wendy Smith • Read more »

Nabokov unplugged: A new collection of his essays delivers unvarnished opinions

By Michael Dirda • Read more »

---

Some graphic novels to read in 2020

By Michael Cavanaugh • Read more »

---

We think you’ll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Book Club | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Book Club or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: It's personal for the lead sponsors of the Iran war powers resolutions
Date: Friday, January 10, 2020 10:25:08 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

It's personal for the lead sponsors of the Iran war powers resolutions

Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.) gives an interview at the Capitol. (Susan Walsh/AP)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.) is a former CIA analyst who served three tours in Iraq as one of the American government's foremost experts on Iranian-backed Shiite militias before being appointed as an assistant secretary of defense with a focus on the Middle East. But that's not the only experience that motivated Slotkin to draft the resolution limiting President Trump's ability to take additional military action against Iran without congressional approval, which passed the House last night on a mostly party-line vote.

The freshman congresswoman's son-in-law is an active-duty

Army officer stationed at the al-Asad air base in western Iraq, which the Iranians hit with 11 ballistic missiles this week in retaliation for the drone strike that killed Quds Force commander Qasem Soleimani. Slotkin's husband also served 30 years in the Army, retiring as a colonel, and her stepdaughter followed in his footsteps. She was not long ago commissioned as an active-duty Army officer.

“For me, this is not a theoretical exercise,” Slotkin explained on Thursday evening. “If our loved ones are going to be sent to fight in any protracted war, the president owes the American public a conversation. ... Congress has long abdicated its responsibility as laid out in the Constitution to make the hard decisions we owe our troops.”

Such deeply personal investment in the war effort blunts hyperbolic attacks from Republican lawmakers – especially those who have never served in uniform and don't have relatives on the battlefield – that opposing the escalation of conflict in the Middle East or supporting Congress asserting its constitutional role is somehow unpatriotic.

The debate now moves to the Senate, which could vote as early as next week, where it faces a more uncertain future. At least four Republicans need to vote for the resolution to ensure passage when it comes up, as early as next week. Whatever the Senate passes, if anything, would then need to be approved by the House before going to Trump, who has promised a veto that there would not be the votes to override.

Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.), the lead sponsor of the accompanying resolution in that chamber, isn't just a member of the Armed Services and Foreign Relations committees. Kaine's oldest son, Nat, is an active-duty Marine infantry officer who has been deployed overseas multiple times.

McCarthy continues to accuse Pelosi of 'defending Soleimani'

-- The Republican messaging machine has gone into overdrive this week, with what has felt at times like a competition among party leaders to see who could offer up the most incendiary quote questioning the motives of Democratic lawmakers concerned about the possibility of a full-scale war against Iran without congressional approval.

"This is a meaningless vote that only sends the wrong message that the House Democrats would rather stand with the socialist base than stand against Iran," House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) said at his weekly news conference on Thursday.

"Whether you mean to or not, you're empowering the enemy," said

Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, referring to lawmakers who vote for the resolution.

“They are in love with terrorists,” said Rep. Doug Collins (R-Ga.), the top Republican on the House Judiciary Committee. “We see that they mourn Soleimani more than they mourn our Gold Star families,” Collins told Lou Dobbs on Fox Business.

-- Democrats have decided not to just brush aside comments like this. “I left literal parts of my body in Iraq, where I was fighting terrorists,” said Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-Ill.), who has used a wheelchair since her Black Hawk helicopter was shot down over Iraq in 2004. “Donald Trump spent months attacking an ACTUAL Gold Star Family,” she added on Twitter. “[Collins] should be ashamed of himself for perpetuating this offensive lie.”

Duckworth is referring to when Trump, who received a deferment for “bone spurs” to avoid being drafted during the Vietnam War, mocked Khizr and Ghazala Khan. Their son Humayun was killed in action as an Army captain in Iraq. The Khans spoke out against Trump at the Democratic convention in 2016, expressing concern about his proposed ban on Muslims entering the United States.

-- Collins apologized this morning. “Let me be clear: I do not believe Democrats are in love with terrorists,” he tweeted. “As someone who served in Iraq in 2008, I witnessed firsthand the brutal death of countless soldiers who were torn to shreds by this vicious terrorist. Soleimani was nothing less than an evil mastermind who viciously killed and wounded thousands of Americans. These images will live with me for the rest of my life, but that does not excuse my response on Wednesday evening.”

-- During the Thursday evening debate on the House floor, several Democrats emphasized their credentials as they made the case for the war powers resolution. Polls suggest that Democrats have tightened their traditional gap on which party is more trusted to handle national security. They won control of the House in the 2018 midterm elections thanks, in part, to a large cohort of young military veterans in swing districts. There are 96 veterans in this Congress, including 30 Democrats and 66 Republicans.

One of those freshmen who delivered the majority is Rep. Jason Crow (D-Colo.). He defeated a GOP incumbent in the Denver suburbs by touting his Army combat experience. “I have often heard folks say that now is not the time to discuss the use of force or the decision to send our men and women to fight,” said Crow. “I heard that in 2003 when I was carrying a rifle in Baghdad. I heard it again in 2004 and 2005 when I was leading my unit through the mountains of Afghanistan. And I am hearing it again today in the halls of Congress. In the last 19 years, more than 7,000 Americans have given their lives in these conflicts, 53,000 have been wounded and we have spent over $4 trillion dollars of taxpayer money.

“Do not believe the fearmongering,” Crow concluded. “I may have laid down my rifle, but my oath to this country endures. I will fight to ensure that we are having a discussion about when to send our men and women, our sons and daughters, our sisters and brothers, into harm’s way.”

Pelosi on Iran: 'We must avoid war'

-- Slotkin left her Pentagon job to move home to Michigan after Trump took office. Then she toppled a longtime GOP incumbent the next year in the midterms. She faces a tough reelection battle this fall in a district Trump carried comfortably in 2016. The National Republican Congressional Committee has taken to calling her "pro-Iran Slotkin" in news releases. "Sit down, Elissa," one missive from the House GOP campaign arm said this week.

Rep. Liz Cheney (R-Wyo.), the former vice president's daughter, called into a news talk radio station in Slotkin's district on Thursday morning to attack her for the "appalling" resolution, which she said "will send a message to the Iranians that the country is not united behind the president." Cheney told WILS in Lansing, Mich., that Slotkin's resolution showed "there's a big difference between what she's saying at home and what she does when she gets here to Washington."

In a speech on the House floor before the vote on resolution, Slotkin pushed back forcefully on these criticisms. "Soleimani was the lead architect of much of Iran's destabilizing activities in the Middle East and throughout the world," she said. "To that end, with Iran, or with any other adversary, the United States always has the inherent right and obligation to self-defense against imminent armed attacks. Always!"

Slotkin lamented that the country has been at war for nearly two decades, but Congress has only voted twice in that time to authorize the use of military force: in 2001 and 2002. Rep. Barbara Lee (D-Calif.) was the lone member of Congress to vote against the authorization for the use of military force immediately after the 9/11 attacks, which is still being cited more than 18 years later as a legal rationale for U.S. activities in the Middle East. Only 1 in 4 House members today were in Congress back then.

That 2001 authorization has been cited dozens of times, by three different presidents now, to justify deploying American troops to a list of countries that includes Libya, Turkey, Georgia, Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, Yemen, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Djibouti, Somalia,

Kenya, the Philippines and Cuba. The language of Slotkin’s nonbinding resolution instructs Trump “to terminate the use of United States Armed Forces to engage in hostilities in or against Iran or any part of its government or military” unless Congress either formally declares war or there is “an imminent armed attack upon the United States.”

“When it comes to the matter of longer-term war, we have a constitutional responsibility to authorize the use of military force,” Slotkin reasoned. “The framers of our Constitution rightly believed that the power to declare war belongs in the Congress because this would ensure that the American people, through the legislators they elected, would weigh the most significant decision a government can make.”

Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) walks in the Capitol after casting his vote on the House floor. (Matt Rourke/AP)

-- Slotkin's resolution passed 224 to 194, with the support of three Republicans plus independent Justin Amash of Michigan and the opposition of eight Democrats. The most notable vote for the resolution came from Rep. Matt Gaetz, one of Trump's most outspoken allies on Capitol Hill. "I take a back seat to no member of this body when it comes to defending the president," he said in a floor speech shortly before the vote. "This resolution offers no criticism of the president. It doesn't criticize the president's attacks on Soleimani. As a matter of fact, this resolution doesn't even say Soleimani's name in it."

Gaetz's district includes the naval air station in Pensacola, Fla. "I represent more troops than any other member of this body," he said. "I buried one of them earlier today at Arlington, and that sergeant died a patriot and a hero. If the members of our armed services have the courage to go fight and die in these wars, as Congress we ought to have the courage to vote for them or against them. It's ludicrous to suggest that we are impairing the troops from doing their job by not doing our job articulated in the Constitution."

The other Republicans who voted for Slotkin's resolution were Rep. Francis Rooney (Fla.), who is retiring, and Rep. Tom Massie (Ky.), a libertarian-minded iconoclast.

Two of the eight Democrats who voted against it are freshmen who served in the armed forces: Reps. Elaine Luria (Va.) and Max Rose (N.Y.). And Rep. Stephanie Murphy (Fla.) was formerly a national security specialist at the Defense Department. The others who voted no are moderates from difficult-to-win districts, including

Ben McAdams (Utah), Anthony Brindisi (N.Y.), Joe Cunningham (S.C.), Kendra Horn (Okla.) and Josh Gottheimer (N.J.).

Trump trashes Adam Schiff during Ohio rally

-- Trump ripped the Slotkin resolution during a rally last night in Toledo, Ohio, insisting he doesn't need to get permission from Congress to protect America. "[Soleimani] was a bloodthirsty terrorist ... and he's no longer a terrorist. He's dead, and yet now I see ... the radical-left Democrats have expressed outrage over the termination of this horrible terrorist,” the president said. “Instead, they should be outraged by Soleimani's savage crimes and the fact that his countless victims were denied justice for so long.”

Trump singled out Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.), who as the leader of the House Intelligence Committee, is a member of the Gang of Eight that's entitled to briefings on the nation's biggest secrets.

Schiff spearheaded the investigation that led to Trump's impeachment for abuse of power and obstruction of Congress, and the congressman has clearly gotten under the president's skin. “You little pencil neck,” Trump said, referring to Schiff. Trump claimed, with no evidence whatsoever, that Schiff would have called CNN ahead of the drone strike on Soleimani to tip them off and that this would have allowed the Quds Force commander to get away. “They want us to tell them so that they can leak it to their friends in the corrupt media,” he said, referring to House Democrats.

Slotkin's resolution explicitly makes an exception for defending against “an imminent armed attack,” but Trump ignored this as he complained about Democrats trying to stop him from taking action if there's an imminent threat. “He was looking very seriously at our embassies and not just the embassy in Baghdad, but we stopped him very quickly and we stopped him cold,” the president told a crowd of nearly 8,000 supporters, referring to Soleimani. “We didn't have time to call up Nancy [Pelosi], who is not operating with a full deck.”

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

“It's not about how bad they are. It's about how good we are,” Pelosi said at her weekly news conference, referring to Iran and Soleimani. (Felicia Sonmez)

Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) heads to the Senate floor for a vote. (Shawn Thew/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

-- In the Senate, two Republicans have committed to support Kaine’s resolution: Sens. Mike Lee (Utah) and Rand Paul (Ky.). Kaine is trying to woo at least two more GOP colleagues by offering to make amendments that could get them on board. He’s actively discussing draft text with Sens. Susan Collins (Maine) and Todd Young (Ind.). Kaine has already agreed to remove any references to Trump by name to make it more palatable for Republican colleagues, and he’s willing to make more edits. “It doesn’t mean everyone I talk to will get on board, but me sitting down with them and talking them through why I’ve done it this way, it gives them some level of comfort,” Kaine told Jenna Portnoy.

Kaine vocally pushed to get Congress to authorize the use of military force in the Middle East even when his good friend Barack Obama was president. (Read my piece about it from 2015 here). In fact, Kaine refused to modulate his position even when Hillary Clinton chose him as her running mate. His longtime emphasis on this issue undermines the GOP argument that his resolution is politically motivated.

Keep an eye on Young, who happens to be chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee. I wrote a Big Idea in May about how Young's military service prompted him to focus on this issue when it looked like the United States might get drawn into a war with Venezuela.

"I understand — as a former Marine Corps intelligence officer — the real-world limitations to and the sensitivities associated with sharing certain information, even with members of Congress," Young told Seung Min Kim, referring to the closed-door briefing on Wednesday that left Lee and Paul seething. "But I left there feeling as though it would've been a lot more helpful had I gotten a little peek into some of the intel that informed the operational decisions."

U.S. believes Ukraine airliner shot down by Iran

THE LATEST ON THE IRAN CRISIS:

-- In a phone call with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Iraqi Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi asked the United States to send a delegation to Iraq to set up a mechanism for the “safe withdrawal of forces from Iraq.” Sarah Dadouch reports: “The Iraqi prime minister has repeatedly insisted that U.S. troop withdrawal was the only path toward de-escalation. ... According to a statement, Abdul Mahdi also shared his objections regarding U.S. forces entering Iraq and American aircraft flying in Iraqi airspace without the consent of the Iraqi government.”

-- The Trump administration hit Iran with more sanctions Friday in the first concrete response to the attacks on U.S. forces in Iraq this week. (Carol Morello)

-- Western officials believe an Iranian missile hit the Ukrainian plane that crashed near Tehran earlier this week in a possible unintentional firing. Ukraine's Volodymyr Zelensky is now asking Western leaders to share with him the intelligence that suggests this. Isabelle Khurshudyan and Erin Cunningham report: “Iran, meanwhile, denied the assertions that the Boeing 737, carrying 176 people from Tehran to Kyiv, was shot down early Wednesday shortly after departing from Tehran. ... Ukraine has taken an active role in investigating the crash of the jet, which was carrying 11 Ukrainians, including the crew. A team of 45 experts and search-and-rescue personnel from Ukraine, including specialists who helped investigate the July 2014 downing of Malaysia Airlines Flight 17 over Ukrainian territory, arrived in Tehran early Thursday to participate in the probe. ... Zelensky had phone conversations Thursday with heads of government from Canada, Britain, Sweden and Iran — countries that each had citizens among the passengers. While Ukraine's readouts of those calls said Zelensky intended to keep the leaders abreast of Ukraine's findings and encouraged their countries to participate in the investigation, he has now had to publicly ask to be briefed in return. ... The Ukrainian leader is expected to speak with [Pompeo] on Friday. ...

“In Washington, U.S. officials expressed ‘high confidence’ that the Boeing 737-800 was targeted by an SA-15 surface-to-air missile, part of a Russian-made air defense system also known as a Tor system, as Iranian forces were on high alert. President Trump said the downing of the aircraft was probably a ‘mistake.’ Then in Ottawa, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said intelligence analyses indicated that a surface-to-air missile hit the plane in what could have been an ‘unintentional’ act. ... A Ukrainian official ... said that Zelensky made the public request for evidence about the crash because the United States had not yet shared with Ukraine its intelligence about the missile Thursday. ...

"The Washington Post obtained a video that allegedly shows the moment the airliner was struck in midair. The video, first published by the New York Times, purportedly shows a missile intercepting the aircraft near the city of Parand, followed by a loud boom. ... Earlier Friday, the Iranian government said in a statement that it was inviting Boeing to send a representative to help examine the 'black box' containing the flight data and cockpit voice recorders. Iranian state television aired a video of an investigator opening and showing the contents of the box."

-- The tragedy mirrors the 1988 Iran Air incident, in which a passenger plane that had originated in the Iranian capital was shot down, leaving 290 dead. Adam Taylor reports: "On July 3, 1988, Iran Air Flight 655 was shot down by the U.S. military. The flight ... was flying over the Strait of Hormuz toward its destination, Dubai, when it was hit by two surface-to-air missiles. Though Pentagon officials at first denied any knowledge of the incident, it soon emerged that the plane had been targeted by the USS Vincennes, a cruiser that had been involved in a skirmish with Iranian boats in the Persian Gulf and had mistaken the passenger jet for an Iranian warplane. President Ronald Reagan expressed sympathy for the 'terrible human tragedy' but suggested that the plane had 'failed to heed repeated warnings.' However, an investigation by the International Civil Aviation Organization, a U.N. agency, found that U.S. military ships in the region did not have the equipment necessary to monitor civilian air-traffic-control frequencies.”

-- On Fox News last night, Pompeo reiterated that Soleimani planned “a series of imminent attacks.” Asked for specifics, he added: “We don’t know precisely when and we don’t know precisely where. But it was real.”

-- An Iranian military commander said the missiles fired at bases used by U.S. troops in Iraq were not intended to inflict casualties. Kareem Fahim and Sarah Dadouch report: “‘We did not intend to kill,’ said Brig. Gen. Amir Ali Hajizadeh, the head of the Revolutionary Guard’s Aerospace Force, according to Iranian state media. ‘We intended to hit the enemy’s military machinery.’ However, he repeated the government’s claim that ‘tens of people were killed or wounded.’ U.S. and Iraqi officials said the strikes caused no casualties. ... Iran tried to counter the United States on the diplomatic front Thursday after Trump called on Britain, Germany, France, Russia and China to ‘break away from the remnants’ of the 2015 nuclear deal Iran struck with world powers. ... British Prime Minister Boris Johnson, speaking with Iranian President Hassan Rouhani on Thursday, ‘underlined the UK’s continued commitment to’ the nuclear deal and ‘ongoing dialogue to avoid nuclear proliferation and reduce tensions,’ according to a British government statement. Rouhani also called European Council President Charles Michel asking for a response to U.S. sanctions, which Rouhani described as ‘economic terrorism,’ the Iranian Fars News agency reported. In a statement, Michel emphasized the need for de-escalation in the region.”

-- The U.S. strike on Soleimani’s convoy last week also killed Abu Mahdi al-Muhandis, the deputy head of an Iraqi paramilitary group, whose death could have far-reaching implications. From Middle East Eye: “Commanders of Iranian-backed armed factions in Iraq tell MEE that with the loss of the two leaders, they are now almost paralysed and would be unable to strike the Americans with real consequence. ... Muhandis, who since the 1980s has been one of America’s most wanted men over his involvement in the bombing of the US and French embassies in Kuwait, was seen by most Iraqis as Iran’s most influential man in the country. ... Although formally stripped of his financial and administrative powers, Muhandis continued to enjoy great influence over most of the Hashd al-Shaabi’s armed factions, with the government unable to regain control over the paramilitary umbrella group or force Muhandis to implement orders for fear of retaliation. ... While he frustrated the government, it was Muhandis’ strong personality, and his blatant challenge to it and the rest of his opponents, that so attracted the leaders and fighters of the armed factions and kept them revolving around him like moths to a flame, following wherever he went.”

-- The speed at which the Iran crisis unfolded shows the influence Trump’s new team of national security advisers has. From the Journal: “The group, including new Secretary of Defense Mark Esper, new chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Mark Milley and new national security adviser Robert O’Brien, along with [Pompeo], backed the president’s decision to kill the top Iranian military commander and moved swiftly to carry it out. The new team was cohesive and less inclined than its predecessors to push back against the president’s wishes, according to administration officials and others consulted by the White House. They also were less likely to consult in advance with other administration, Pentagon or State Department officials, congressional leaders or foreign allies, some of these officials said.”

-- Informants in Iraq and Syria helped the United States kill

Soleimani. From Reuters: “Soleimani arrived at the Damascus airport in a vehicle with dark-tinted glass. ... They parked near a staircase leading to a Cham Wings Airbus A320, destined for Baghdad. Neither Soleimani nor the soldiers were registered on the passenger manifesto. ... The passenger flight would be Soleimani’s last. ... Investigators have focused on how suspected informants inside the Damascus and Baghdad airports collaborated with the U.S. military to help track and pinpoint Soleimani’s position. ... The suspects include two security staffers at the Baghdad airport and two Cham Wings employees. ... The National Security agency’s investigators believe the four suspects, who have not been arrested, worked as part of a wider group of people feeding information to the U.S. military, the official said.”

-- For Trump and Iran, Twitter trolling helped escalate tensions

on the battlefield. David Nakamura reports: “A day after [Trump] signaled he would not use military force to escalate a tense standoff with Iran, that nation’s supreme leader responded with a message of his own: a doctored photo of Trump’s face imprinted with red welts from a slap to the face. The creation on the official website of Ayatollah Ali Khamenei offered a trolling visual meme to echo his previous warning that Tehran’s missile attack on two Iraqi facilities housing U.S. troops was only the first salvo in a campaign to avenge the drone killing of [Soleimani.] ... Experts called the display an example of a new era in international diplomacy in which official letters, telephone hotlines and secure video conference calls have been replaced, in some cases, by high-octane and instantaneous social media messaging.”

-- Notable commentary from The Post's opinion page:

- Jim Webb, former Democratic senator from Virginia and secretary of the Navy under Reagan: “When did it become acceptable to kill a top leader of a country we aren’t even at war with?”
- Andrew McCabe, former deputy director of the FBI: “If you think Iran is done retaliating, think again.”
- Fareed Zakaria: “Trump does not have a foreign policy. He has a series of impulses.”
- David Ignatius: “This is what a real Iran strategy would look like.”
- Eugene Robinson: “The best Iran crisis explanation? Trump’s obsession with Obama.”
- Josh Rogin: “Soleimani’s death offers a chance to fix U.S. policy on Syria.”
- Max Boot: “By claiming Democrats support terrorism, Republicans hit a new low.”
- A hilarious satire by Alexandra Petri: “Millions of Americans devastated to learn they were ardent fans of Soleimani this whole time.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Why Democrats say they're withholding the impeachment articles

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Nancy Pelosi signaled this morning in a letter to colleagues that the House will transmit the articles of impeachment to the Senate as soon as next week. “I have asked Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler to be prepared to bring to the Floor next week a resolution to appoint managers and transmit articles of impeachment to the Senate,” she wrote. (Our live blog has more.)

-- The Senate has conducted 15 impeachment trials in U.S. history. It has heard witnesses in every single one. Noah Bookbinder, executive director of Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, reviews the history: “Only 19 other individuals besides Trump have been impeached by the House of Representatives. The Senate completed a trial in 15 of those cases, and in every single one of them, it heard testimony from witnesses. Those cases include the only two prior instances in which a president was impeached.”

-- House Republicans are eyeing a push to condemn Pelosi for delaying the trial. From Politico: “GOP Rep. Bradley Byrne, who is running for an Alabama Senate seat, introduced a censure resolution on Thursday morning to rebuke Pelosi for hanging on to the articles of impeachment since December. Republicans have the option to force a floor vote on the measure though Democrats would surely move to table it, just as they did with a censure resolution against” Schiff.

-- Meanwhile, Rep. Elise Stefanik (R-N.Y.) tweeted an impeachment-related fundraising appeal that included a doctored photo of Pelosi, drawing a retweet from Trump. Felicia Sonmez reports: “The tweet marks the second time this week that a House Republican has tweeted a photo that appears to have been manipulated. On Monday, Rep. Paul Gosar (R-Ariz.) tweeted a fake

photo of Obama with Iranian President Hassan Rouhani. ... The tweet shows a close-up, red-tinted photo of Pelosi, with the lines in the House speaker's face exaggerated due to the image's unnaturally high contrast."

Matt Golsteyn is pictured in his D.C. office with his wife Julie and their infant son Henry. (Sarah L. Voisin/The Washington Post)

-- An Army general denied a request by an officer pardoned by Trump in an open murder case to have his Special Forces tab reinstated. Dan Lamothe reports: "The decoration for retired Army Maj. Mathew L. Golsteyn was denied Dec. 3 by Lt. Gen. Francis M. Beaudette, the commander of U.S. Army Special Operations Command, the Army disclosed Thursday. Beaudette's decision is not final, and the service said in a statement that it will next have an administrative panel consider whether it should reinstate the Special Forces tab and a Distinguished Service Cross — the U.S. military's second-highest valor award — and expunge a letter of reprimand Golsteyn received in connection with his case. Golsteyn was awaiting trial this year in the alleged murder of a suspected Taliban bombmaker in Marja, Afghanistan, in February 2010. ... The general's denial of Golsteyn's reinstatement request follows Trump's decision in November to pardon Golsteyn along with former 1st Lt. Clint Lorance, an Army officer who had been convicted of murder in Afghanistan. ... Golsteyn, reached for comment Thursday evening, said he had not heard about the decision until it was first reported by The Washington Post. A few minutes later, he and his lawyer, Phil Stackhouse, said they received notification from the Army in an emailed letter that had just arrived."

-- The Justice Department is winding down the Hillary Clinton-related inquiry once championed by Trump. It found nothing of consequence. Devlin Barrett and Matt Zapotosky report: "John Huber, the U.S. attorney in Utah, was tapped in November 2017 by then-Attorney General Jeff Sessions to look into concerns raised by Trump and his allies in Congress that the FBI had not fully pursued cases of possible corruption at the Clinton Foundation and during Clinton's time as secretary of state, when the U.S. government decided not to block the sale of a company called Uranium One. As a part of his review, Huber examined documents and conferred with federal law enforcement officials in Little Rock who were handling a meandering probe into the Clinton Foundation. ... Current and former officials said that Huber has largely finished and found nothing worth pursuing — though the assignment has not formally ended and no official notice has been sent to the Justice Department or to lawmakers."

-- Internal Boeing documents show employees discussing efforts to manipulate U.S. and international safety regulators. Ian

Duncan, Lori Aratani and Michael Laris report: ““Yes, I still haven’t been forgiven by god for the covering up I did last year,” said a 2018 message. Another exchange between Boeing employees, from August 2015, closes out with this: ‘I know but this is what these regulators get when they try and get in the way. they impede progress. ...’ In 2017, a Boeing employee wrote: ‘this airplane is designed by clowns, who in turn are supervised by monkeys.’

The documents were released by Boeing to congressional investigators probing how the company’s 737 Max jets were certified by the Federal Aviation Administration as safe before two crashes that killed 346 people. ...

“At issue in some of the messages was whether simulator training should be required for pilots flying the Max. Boeing went to great lengths to prevent such a requirement, in part because it would be costly for its customers, company documents show. ... In one November 2015 message, the 737 chief technical pilot, whose name is redacted in the documents, said failing to get computer-based training for one system ‘is a planet-killer for the MAX.’ ... In another email chain, from June 2017, the chief technical pilot forwarded to Boeing colleagues messages in which he persuaded an airline, which is not identified in the documents, not to require simulator training on the Max. ‘Looks like my jedi mind trick worked again!’ the pilot wrote. ‘These are not the droids you’re looking for.’ ... In a shift Tuesday, the company said that it is recommending that pilots undergo simulator training before they resume flying the 737 Max. The FAA, which will have the final say, said it will consider Boeing's recommendation."

(Read the Boeing documents for yourself here.)

-- The United States economy added 145,000 jobs in December as the unemployment rate remained at 3.5 percent. (Rachel Siegel)

-- Video from Jeffrey Epstein's first apparent suicide attempt was lost due to "technical errors," according to prosecutors. Reis Thebault reports: "Federal prosecutors said in December they were unable to locate the video, which would have showed guards finding Epstein after his first apparent suicide attempt in July. Then, just a day later, they wrote in a court filing that they had found the footage and were 'in the process of obtaining a copy' from the Metropolitan Correctional Center in New York City, where Epstein was held. But on Thursday, prosecutors reversed themselves again, saying the video 'no longer exists' because of 'technical errors.' Jail officials initially thought they had saved footage from outside Epstein's cell, when in fact the footage they preserved was from a different part of the facility, explained Assistant U.S. Attorneys Maurene Comey and Jason Swergold in the latest filing."

-- Border crossings are starting to plateau as U.S. officials report a continued decline in immigration apprehensions. Abigail Hauslohner reports: "The number of people apprehended or deemed 'inadmissible' by U.S. border authorities along the southern border fell to 40,620 last month, down 72 percent from May, when the Trump administration declared it was at the height of a border crisis. December marked the seventh straight month of decline in border crossings, but the month-to-month differences have shrunk significantly since September. Border enforcement actions last month were roughly on par with December 2017.”

-- Counties, cities and states are stepping up on their climate goals as the Trump administration steps back. Rebecca Tan reports: “Maryland’s most populous jurisdiction is promising an ambitious package of new climate initiatives in 2020, joining other liberal counties, cities and states stepping up to address what they see as the Trump administration’s resistance to protecting the planet. ... In February, Montgomery will hold a town hall on hundreds of recommendations from climate workgroups convened last year by County Executive Marc Elrich (D). And by early 2021, officials hope to unveil a comprehensive plan detailing how the county will reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 80 percent by 2027 and 100 percent by 2035.”

American sprinters Tommie Smith (center) and John Carlos (right) raise their gloved fists in a civil rights protest at the 1968 Olympic Games in Mexico City. (AP)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Gag rule alert: The International Olympic Committee warned athletes they would face sanctions, which could include the loss of medals, for participating in political protests during the Olympics in Tokyo this summer, including kneeling, political hand gestures and wearing or holding signs or armbands. Jacob Bogage reports: “The committee published a three-page document of guidelines. ... ‘We needed clarity, and they wanted clarity on the rules,' [said] Kirsty Coventry of Zimbabwe, chair of the IOC Athletes' Commission, which helped create the new document. ... The guidelines outlaw demonstrations such as those staged by Tommie Smith and John Carlos, American sprinters who raised their gloved fists on the medal stand at the 1968 Games in Mexico City, and former NFL player Colin Kaepernick, who in 2016 began kneeling during the national anthem. Both demonstrations sought to draw attention to racial injustice and have been repeated by other athletes in recent years. ...

“Ethiopian runner Feyisa Lilesa crossed his wrists at the finish line of the men’s marathon at the 2016 Games in Rio de Janeiro to show support for civil rights protesters in his home country.

Americans Race Imboden, a fencer, and hammer-thrower Gwen Berry were placed on probation by the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee in August after demonstrating on the medal stand at the Pan American Games. Imboden knelt during the national anthem, while Berry raised a fist. Athletes who protest will face discipline ‘on a case-by-case basis as necessary,’ according to the guidelines.”

-- A billion animals have been caught in Australia’s fires. Some may go extinct. Karin Brulliard and Darryl Fears report: “The mouse-size dunnart is not as iconic as the koalas or platypuses that draw tourists, but it is arguably the most special mammal on Australia’s Kangaroo Island. Now the Kangaroo Island dunnart’s days may be numbered. Before bush fires struck, it was already endangered, so rare that even researchers who studied them had never seen one. Now they fear they never will. One-third of the 1,700-square-mile island has burned, including the entire area where these dunnarts are known to live. ... More than 1 billion mammals, birds and reptiles nationwide — some of them found nowhere else on Earth — may have been affected or killed by the fires sweeping across Australia, according to a University of Sydney estimate. The potential toll is far greater when other types of animals are included. ... Individual animals might survive, but when their habitat is gone, ‘it doesn’t matter,’ Saunders said. ‘They’ll die anyway.’”

-- Disgusting: Hoaxers are using the fires to spread misinformation and profit, Brittany Shammass reports.

-- The fire crisis is fueling protests calling for bolder action on climate change. Kate Shuttleworth reports: “At rallies nationwide on Friday, thousands called for Prime Minister Scott Morrison to resign over what they say is his administration’s passivity on an issue that has hit home to millions of Australians as a clear and present danger. The conservative leader has defended his disaster response after facing criticism from victims and firefighters for its perceived inadequacy. In Melbourne, close to 10,000 people took to the streets, spurning calls from police and the state’s center-left leader, Daniel Andrews, not to risk diverting emergency resources. ... An organizer of a similar rally in Sydney, Gavin Stanbrook, said the events of recent weeks revealed a nation polarized over how to tackle the challenge. ‘We are divided between coal interests and politicians on the one side and then firefighters and volunteers on the other and the rest of us who are either impacted or our friends and family are on the front line, or in cities surrounded by smoke,’ Stanbrook said. ‘We need to come together and say that we will not accept it anymore.’”

-- Suspected Islamist militants killed 25 soldiers in Niger. Danielle

Paquette reports: “The clash unfolded in the western village of Chinegodar near the border with Mali, according to Nigerien defense officials, as fighters with ties to the Islamic State and al-Qaeda look to seize new swaths of territory. The bloodshed came about a month after gunmen ambushed a Nigerien army post in another border town, killing 71 soldiers in the deadliest strike on the nation’s forces in recent memory. The Islamic State West Africa Province asserted responsibility for that massacre two days later.”

-- In Israel, deadly floods have kept residents confined to their homes and offices even as they braced for potential spinoff attacks from rising tensions between the United States and Iran. Steve Hendrix reports: “Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Thursday beseeched citizens to take flood warnings as seriously as they do the sirens warning of imminent rocket fire that are a feature of life in many Israeli communities. ... Netanyahu also warned the adventurous not to venture out to the desert to witness the dramatic — and potentially dangerous — spectacle of dry stream beds reanimated with roaring water. ‘Watch them on television,’ he advised. ... Officials said rescue resources had been redeployed nationwide in response to the flooding, which stretched from the coastal plains along the Mediterranean to the occupied West Bank down to the Dead Sea.”

-- China identified a new strain of coronavirus as the source of its pneumonia outbreak. Gerry Shih and Lena H. Sun report: “A group of Chinese experts this week isolated and obtained the genome sequence of the new virus, which is believed to be responsible for sickening dozens of people who visited a wild-animal market last month in Wuhan, in central China, state media reported Thursday. The outbreak ahead of the Lunar New Year travel season in China has prompted health authorities across East Asia to increase screening of travelers for signs of fever, underscoring fears about its potential spread.”

-- Understatement of the year? Pope Francis said 2020 is off to a rough start, saying it “does not seem to be marked by encouraging signs.” Chico Harlan reports: “While saying that maintaining hope is essential, the pope spent the next 45 minutes talking about wars and could-be wars, exploitation, sexual abuse, Internet hate speech, international indifference to humanitarian crises, and the depressing state of the world’s fight against climate change. He called heightened tensions between the United States and Iran ‘particularly troubling,’ but his remarks amounted to a laundry list of flash points, both major and obscure, from Burkina Faso to Venezuela to Australia. ‘Certainly, hope has to be realistic,’ Francis said. ‘It demands acknowledging the many troubling issues confronting our world and the challenges lurking on the horizon. It requires that problems be called by their name and the courage be found to resolve them.’”

-- Lebanon has banned ex-Nissan chief Carlos Ghosn from traveling. Sarah Dadouch reports: “Ghosn appeared at a hearing in Lebanon on Thursday, two days after Lebanon’s caretaker justice minister, Albert Serhan, said the country’s public prosecutor had received the Interpol red notice about Ghosn and would be taking the necessary steps. He was placed under house arrest. A few days after his arrival in Lebanon’s capital, Ghosn found himself in more legal trouble: A group of lawyers last Thursday lodged a legal complaint against him for visiting Israel as chairman of Renault and later Nissan. Lebanon and Israel have been in a state of war for the past six decades, and Lebanese law considers interacting with the country's southern neighbor and sworn enemy a crime. Ali Abbas, one of the two lawyers who filed the Israel-related complaint against Ghosn, said the travel ban was a formality that usually comes after receiving Interpol notices, especially red notices, which alert police about internationally wanted fugitives but do not compel any country to arrest the fugitive."

-- Trump wished North Korean leader Kim Jung Un a happy birthday through South Korea. (AP)

-- A statue mocking Trump in Melania Trump's home country was burned down. Lateshia Beachum reports: "Firefighters in Moravce, a city in central Slovenia, tried to extinguish the bonfire, but their efforts left charred planks on the ground. The arsonists responsible for the Christmas nutcracker-like statue's ashes are reportedly still at large. The nearly 26-foot tall wooden structure that had a mechanism to open Trump's red painted mouth full of pointy teeth was constructed last year in a nation divided over the U.S. president. The statue of Trump, with the president's signature blue suit and red tie, had been under torch threats since local residents threatened to set it ablaze on Halloween ... It was relocated because of the risk."

-- London's Madame Tussauds removed its wax figures of Prince Harry and Meghan, Duchess of Sussex, from its display of Britain's royal family less than 24 hours after the couple announced they would be "stepping back" from their roles as

senior royals. Jennifer Hassan reports: “The figures will no longer stand alongside the rest of the royal family. They have been moved by the wax museum’s staff. The likenesses of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, William and Catherine, remain on display alongside figures of Queen Elizabeth II and her husband, Prince Philip. ‘As two of our most popular and well-loved figures, they will of course remain an important feature at Madame Tussauds London as we watch to see what the next chapter holds for them,’ said [Steve Davies, general manager of Madame Tussauds London].”

Vice President Pence, along with White House senior adviser Jared Kushner and his wife, Ivanka Trump, and their children, Arabella, Joseph and Theodore Kushner, attend a Hanukkah reception in the East Room of the White House last month. (Manuel Balce Ceneta/AP)

2020 WATCH:

-- Jared Kushner’s global role is shrinking as his role in the president's reelection campaign grows. From Annie Karni and Maggie Haberman in the Times: “When senior administration officials gathered in the Situation Room on Tuesday for a meeting to discuss the repercussions of the killing of [Soleimani], the White House aide whose portfolio is the Middle East was notably absent from the meeting. ... [He] was sitting for a photo shoot for a planned Time magazine cover story. ... [Kushner] is positioning himself to be the overseer of something of even greater personal interest to his father-in-law: Mr. Trump’s 2020 re-election campaign. ... [Kushner] sees no reason to involve himself as extensively in international issues now that the State Department is run by [Mike] Pompeo, whom he sees as far more competent than his predecessor, Rex W. Tillerson.”

-- Mike Bloomberg won't release the women who sued him from their nondisclosure agreements. From ABC News: “‘You can't just walk away from it,’ Bloomberg said. ‘They're legal agreements, and for all I know the other side wouldn't want to get out of it.’ Last month, ABC News reported on several lawsuits in which Bloomberg was accused of making crude remarks in the 1990s and of allegedly fostering an uncomfortable environment for women to work — allegations Bloomberg has denied. Three cases against the company remain active. ABC News has spoken with several women who expressed interest in telling their stories who were subject to confidentiality agreements, but said they feared the prospect of facing retribution from the company for speaking out.”

-- Tom Steyer appears to have qualified for the seventh Democratic debate, scheduled for next Tuesday night in Iowa, on the strength of Fox News polls that found him with double-digit

support in Nevada and South Carolina. David Weigel reports:

“Steyer, who has spent more than $115 million on his campaign so far, hit 12 percent in the network’s poll of Nevada ... and 15 percent in South Carolina. ... It came after Steyer poured more than $20 million into commercials and other advertising in these states as of this week, with $11.2 million worth of expenditures in South Carolina and $10.3 million in Nevada. He has also spent heavily to attract hundreds of thousands of small-dollar donations, which the DNC requires for debate access.”

-- The Fox News Nevada poll also shows Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders vying for the lead in the state: “Biden tops Sanders by 23-17 percent among Democratic caucusgoers, with both down one percentage point since November. [Elizabeth] Warren comes in at 12 percent, down from 18 percent — and ties with [Steyer] for third.”

-- A new Monmouth Poll shows a four-way fight in the New Hampshire Democratic primary: “Among registered New Hampshire Democrats and unaffiliated voters who are likely to participate in the February 2020 Democratic primary, 20% currently support [Pete] Buttigieg, 19% back Biden, 18% back Sanders, and 15% back Warren. ... Compared to Monmouth’s last New Hampshire poll in September, Buttigieg’s support has grown by 10 points (from 10%) and Sanders’ support has increased by 6 points (from 12%). Warren’s support has dropped by 12 points (from 27%) and Biden’s has decreased by 6 points (from 25%).”

-- Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti endorsed Biden. From the Los Angeles Times: “Garcetti will be one of Biden’s highest-profile supporters in California’s March 3 primary, but the endorsement is unlikely to have any practical effect on the highly competitive race. Dianne Feinstein, the state's senior U.S. senator, is also supporting Biden. And Long Beach Mayor Robert Garcia, who had endorsed California Sen. Kamala Harris before she dropped out of the presidential race, also announced his support for Biden on Thursday."

-- Fun read: Philadelphians looking for love on Tinder may have come across "Daddy Bernie," a profile set up for Sanders by a local man who just wants to inform people on the dating app about his favorite candidate. From the Philadelphia Inquirer: "Alex Scheinberg, 26, is not a senator from Vermont. Or any other state. He actually doesn't have a job. And he lives in his childhood home. But, Scheinberg said, that gives him more time to mix politics and pleasure in order to promote his favorite candidate in a forum that's increasingly becoming a venue for political endorsement and engagement. ... Scheinberg has his Tinder profile set to see all genders and sexual orientations, though he is straight. This way, he said, he can maximize the number of people seeing Sanders' campaign message. That's the same reason he swipes right on almost everyone, to reach as many people as possible. (For those who don't have to experience the horror show that is modern online dating, swiping right on a profile means you're interested. Swiping left, not so much.)"

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

One of Vice President Pence's children got married at the Naval Academy over the holidays:

Kate Bennett ✓
@KateBennett_DC

. @SecondLady and @VP's daughter @charlipence was married to Henry Bond at the @NavalAcademy on December 28th. She posted this photo on her Instagram account today 🎉

charlotterosepence
United States Naval Academy

♡ 68 7:01 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 22 people are talking about this

A former senior adviser to Obama made this observation about the passenger plane shot down in Iran:

A Republican senator from South Carolina had a flip response when confronted by a protester:

An alarming number of registered voters in our country cannot even place Iran on a map:

 Karl Bode ✓ @KarlBode

I'm still stuck on this. Can't stop staring at it.

Respondents were asked to identify Iran on the map

Each orange dot represents a respondent's guess. Each green dot represents a correct identification.

MORNING CONSULT

13.5K 5:44 PM - Jan 9, 2020

4,157 people are talking about this

The White House press secretary turned down an offer to support a charity in exchange for giving a news conference. In other news, irony is dead:

 Jake Tapper ✓ @jaketapper · 15h

I asked @PressSec about this offer to give $175k to @StJude if she holds a press briefing.

Her response: "If you have $200,000 to play with, why not just help children because it's a good thing to do? Donations to charity should never come with strings attached." twitter.com/donwinslow/sta...

Don Winslow  @donwinslow

To @PressSec Stephanie Grisham

I'm upping my offer to $100,000. @StephenKing has agreed to put in $75,000.

We will donate $175,000 to @StJude in your name & help a lot of kids if you will take questions from the full White House press corps for 1 HOUR in the WH briefing room.

Jake Tapper

@jaketapper

(And yes I have pointed out to Ms. Grisham that in 2012, Trump offered $5 million to the charity of President Obama's choice if he released his college and passport records.) youtu.be/l-IWv0cpCnM

 YouTube @YouTube

 5,413 6:23 PM - Jan 9, 2020

 808 people are talking about this

A Republican senator met with a Democratic colleague to talk about climate change. Both have run unsuccessfully for president, but the Democrat's campaign is still active:

Senator Mitt Romney ✓
@SenatorRomney

Climate change is a global problem that will require major breakthroughs in innovation and technology to reverse current trends. Sat down with @SenatorBennet this morning to continue dialogue with colleagues on potential bipartisan solutions to address climate change.

♡ 936 6:04 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 386 people are talking about this

Marianne Williamson, who is also still in the presidential race, called out the lack of diversity among Trump's top advisers:

Marianne Williamson ✓

@marwilliamson

This is what diversity does not look like. And the issue is not just external; it's a diversity of attitudes, of perspective, of mindset that's so lacking...and so dangerous. That is what needs to change.

♡ 657 7:33 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 218 people are talking about this

John Kerry joined Joe Biden in Iowa:

John Kerry ✓
@JohnKerry

A privilege to spend time with you, @malcolmkenyatta and @SenAkbari - you learn a lot about people when you take long bus rides through Iowa! Great to be on this journey together. @JoeBiden is lucky to have you all on the team! #TeamJoe twitter.com/ShevrinJones/s...

Shevrin Jones ✓ @ShevrinJones

I spent 24 hours with who I believe is one of the brightest minds, Secretary @JohnKerry. From his thoughts of what's happening in Iran to his stories working in the @BarackObama administration, he's living history, and I am grateful that our paths crossed.

♥ 373 4:53 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 134 people are talking about this

Billionaires are making themselves heard in the presidential race:

David Wright
@DavidWright_CNN

Total TV ad spend by 2020 candidates, through this week:

Bloomberg: $153.1 million

Steyer: $116.5 million

Sanders: $11.7 million

Buttigieg: $11.4 million

Yang: $7.3 million

Warren: $3.7 million

Biden: $3 million

Klobuchar: $2.9 million

Bennet: $1.1 million

Gabbard: $1.1 million

 4,111 3:35 PM - Jan 9, 2020

 2,260 people are talking about this

And the House majority whip, Rep. Jim Clyburn (D-S.C.), shared a touching story about his wife, who recently passed away:

James E. Clyburn ✓
@WhipClyburn

I met my wife in jail after being arrested during a civil rights march.

She brought me food and shared a hamburger with me.

Turns out, she knew who I was and had been plotting to meet me for some time.

We were married for 58 years.

twitter.com/adribbleofink/...

Aidan Moher @adribbleofink

Tell me a story about yourself the sounds like a lie but is absolutely true.

♡ 62.3K 9:40 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 8,326 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert joked that he was ruining Republican Sen. Mike Lee's political career by agreeing with him on his criticisms of the White House's Iran briefing:

Seth Meyers also went through Republican senators' comments of the Iran briefing:

Trevor Noah gave an explainer on the Australian fires:

And Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) has an impressive party trick that the other 2020 candidates probably don't:

 NowThis
@nowthisnews

Watch @AmyKlobuchar rapidly name all 50 states in 30 impressive seconds

♡ 242 9:13 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 89 people are talking about this

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: It's personal for the lead sponsors of the Iran war powers resolutions
Date: Friday, January 10, 2020 10:30:36 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

It's personal for the lead sponsors of the Iran war powers resolutions

Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.) gives an interview at the Capitol. (Susan Walsh/AP)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.) is a former CIA analyst who served three tours in Iraq as one of the American government's foremost experts on Iranian-backed Shiite militias before being appointed as an assistant secretary of defense with a focus on the Middle East. But that's not the only experience that motivated Slotkin to draft the resolution limiting President Trump's ability to take additional military action against Iran without congressional approval, which passed the House last night on a mostly party-line vote.

The freshman congresswoman's son-in-law is an active-duty

Army officer stationed at the al-Asad air base in western Iraq, which the Iranians hit with 11 ballistic missiles this week in retaliation for the drone strike that killed Quds Force commander Qasem Soleimani. Slotkin's husband also served 30 years in the Army, retiring as a colonel, and her stepdaughter followed in his footsteps. She was not long ago commissioned as an active-duty Army officer.

“For me, this is not a theoretical exercise,” Slotkin explained on Thursday evening. “If our loved ones are going to be sent to fight in any protracted war, the president owes the American public a conversation. ... Congress has long abdicated its responsibility as laid out in the Constitution to make the hard decisions we owe our troops.”

Such deeply personal investment in the war effort blunts hyperbolic attacks from Republican lawmakers – especially those who have never served in uniform and don't have relatives on the battlefield – that opposing the escalation of conflict in the Middle East or supporting Congress asserting its constitutional role is somehow unpatriotic.

The debate now moves to the Senate, which could vote as early as next week, where it faces a more uncertain future. At least four Republicans need to vote for the resolution to ensure passage when it comes up, as early as next week. Whatever the Senate passes, if anything, would then need to be approved by the House before going to Trump, who has promised a veto that there would not be the votes to override.

Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.), the lead sponsor of the accompanying resolution in that chamber, isn't just a member of the Armed Services and Foreign Relations committees. Kaine's oldest son, Nat, is an active-duty Marine infantry officer who has been deployed overseas multiple times.

McCarthy continues to accuse Pelosi of 'defending Soleimani'

-- The Republican messaging machine has gone into overdrive this week, with what has felt at times like a competition among party leaders to see who could offer up the most incendiary quote questioning the motives of Democratic lawmakers concerned about the possibility of a full-scale war against Iran without congressional approval.

"This is a meaningless vote that only sends the wrong message that the House Democrats would rather stand with the socialist base than stand against Iran," House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) said at his weekly news conference on Thursday.

"Whether you mean to or not, you're empowering the enemy," said

Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, referring to lawmakers who vote for the resolution.

“They are in love with terrorists,” said Rep. Doug Collins (R-Ga.), the top Republican on the House Judiciary Committee. “We see that they mourn Soleimani more than they mourn our Gold Star families,” Collins told Lou Dobbs on Fox Business.

-- Democrats have decided not to just brush aside comments like this. “I left literal parts of my body in Iraq, where I was fighting terrorists,” said Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-Ill.), who has used a wheelchair since her Black Hawk helicopter was shot down over Iraq in 2004. “Donald Trump spent months attacking an ACTUAL Gold Star Family,” she added on Twitter. “[Collins] should be ashamed of himself for perpetuating this offensive lie.”

Duckworth is referring to when Trump, who received a deferment for “bone spurs” to avoid being drafted during the Vietnam War, mocked Khizr and Ghazala Khan. Their son Humayun was killed in action as an Army captain in Iraq. The Khans spoke out against Trump at the Democratic convention in 2016, expressing concern about his proposed ban on Muslims entering the United States.

-- Collins apologized this morning. “Let me be clear: I do not believe Democrats are in love with terrorists,” he tweeted. “As someone who served in Iraq in 2008, I witnessed firsthand the brutal death of countless soldiers who were torn to shreds by this vicious terrorist. Soleimani was nothing less than an evil mastermind who viciously killed and wounded thousands of Americans. These images will live with me for the rest of my life, but that does not excuse my response on Wednesday evening.”

-- During the Thursday evening debate on the House floor, several Democrats emphasized their credentials as they made the case for the war powers resolution. Polls suggest that Democrats have tightened their traditional gap on which party is more trusted to handle national security. They won control of the House in the 2018 midterm elections thanks, in part, to a large cohort of young military veterans in swing districts. There are 96 veterans in this Congress, including 30 Democrats and 66 Republicans.

One of those freshmen who delivered the majority is Rep. Jason Crow (D-Colo.). He defeated a GOP incumbent in the Denver suburbs by touting his Army combat experience. “I have often heard folks say that now is not the time to discuss the use of force or the decision to send our men and women to fight,” said Crow. “I heard that in 2003 when I was carrying a rifle in Baghdad. I heard it again in 2004 and 2005 when I was leading my unit through the mountains of Afghanistan. And I am hearing it again today in the halls of Congress. In the last 19 years, more than 7,000 Americans have given their lives in these conflicts, 53,000 have been wounded and we have spent over $4 trillion dollars of taxpayer money.

“Do not believe the fearmongering,” Crow concluded. “I may have laid down my rifle, but my oath to this country endures. I will fight to ensure that we are having a discussion about when to send our men and women, our sons and daughters, our sisters and brothers, into harm’s way.”

Pelosi on Iran: 'We must avoid war'

-- Slotkin left her Pentagon job to move home to Michigan after Trump took office. Then she toppled a longtime GOP incumbent the next year in the midterms. She faces a tough reelection battle this fall in a district Trump carried comfortably in 2016. The National Republican Congressional Committee has taken to calling her “pro-Iran Slotkin” in news releases. “Sit down, Elissa,” one missive from the House GOP campaign arm said this week.

Rep. Liz Cheney (R-Wyo.), the former vice president's daughter, called into a news talk radio station in Slotkin's district on Thursday morning to attack her for the "appalling" resolution, which she said "will send a message to the Iranians that the country is not united behind the president." Cheney told WILS in Lansing, Mich., that Slotkin's resolution showed "there's a big difference between what she's saying at home and what she does when she gets here to Washington."

In a speech on the House floor before the vote on resolution, Slotkin pushed back forcefully on these criticisms. "Soleimani was the lead architect of much of Iran's destabilizing activities in the Middle East and throughout the world," she said. "To that end, with Iran, or with any other adversary, the United States always has the inherent right and obligation to self-defense against imminent armed attacks. Always!"

Slotkin lamented that the country has been at war for nearly two decades, but Congress has only voted twice in that time to authorize the use of military force: in 2001 and 2002. Rep. Barbara Lee (D-Calif.) was the lone member of Congress to vote against the authorization for the use of military force immediately after the 9/11 attacks, which is still being cited more than 18 years later as a legal rationale for U.S. activities in the Middle East. Only 1 in 4 House members today were in Congress back then.

That 2001 authorization has been cited dozens of times, by three different presidents now, to justify deploying American troops to a list of countries that includes Libya, Turkey, Georgia, Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, Yemen, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Djibouti, Somalia,

Kenya, the Philippines and Cuba. The language of Slotkin’s nonbinding resolution instructs Trump “to terminate the use of United States Armed Forces to engage in hostilities in or against Iran or any part of its government or military” unless Congress either formally declares war or there is “an imminent armed attack upon the United States.”

“When it comes to the matter of longer-term war, we have a constitutional responsibility to authorize the use of military force,” Slotkin reasoned. “The framers of our Constitution rightly believed that the power to declare war belongs in the Congress because this would ensure that the American people, through the legislators they elected, would weigh the most significant decision a government can make.”

Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) walks in the Capitol after casting his vote on the House floor. (Matt Rourke/AP)

-- Slotkin's resolution passed 224 to 194, with the support of three Republicans plus independent Justin Amash of Michigan and the opposition of eight Democrats. The most notable vote for the resolution came from Rep. Matt Gaetz, one of Trump's most outspoken allies on Capitol Hill. "I take a back seat to no member of this body when it comes to defending the president," he said in a floor speech shortly before the vote. "This resolution offers no criticism of the president. It doesn't criticize the president's attacks on Soleimani. As a matter of fact, this resolution doesn't even say Soleimani's name in it."

Gaetz's district includes the naval air station in Pensacola, Fla. "I represent more troops than any other member of this body," he said. "I buried one of them earlier today at Arlington, and that sergeant died a patriot and a hero. If the members of our armed services have the courage to go fight and die in these wars, as Congress we ought to have the courage to vote for them or against them. It's ludicrous to suggest that we are impairing the troops from doing their job by not doing our job articulated in the Constitution."

The other Republicans who voted for Slotkin's resolution were Rep. Francis Rooney (Fla.), who is retiring, and Rep. Tom Massie (Ky.), a libertarian-minded iconoclast.

Two of the eight Democrats who voted against it are freshmen who served in the armed forces: Reps. Elaine Luria (Va.) and Max Rose (N.Y.). And Rep. Stephanie Murphy (Fla.) was formerly a national security specialist at the Defense Department. The others who voted no are moderates from difficult-to-win districts, including

Ben McAdams (Utah), Anthony Brindisi (N.Y.), Joe Cunningham (S.C.), Kendra Horn (Okla.) and Josh Gottheimer (N.J.).

Trump trashes Adam Schiff during Ohio rally

-- Trump ripped the Slotkin resolution during a rally last night in Toledo, Ohio, insisting he doesn't need to get permission from Congress to protect America. "[Soleimani] was a bloodthirsty terrorist ... and he's no longer a terrorist. He's dead, and yet now I see ... the radical-left Democrats have expressed outrage over the termination of this horrible terrorist,” the president said. “Instead, they should be outraged by Soleimani's savage crimes and the fact that his countless victims were denied justice for so long.”

Trump singled out Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.), who as the leader of the House Intelligence Committee, is a member of the Gang of Eight that's entitled to briefings on the nation's biggest secrets.

Schiff spearheaded the investigation that led to Trump's impeachment for abuse of power and obstruction of Congress, and the congressman has clearly gotten under the president's skin. “You little pencil neck,” Trump said, referring to Schiff. Trump claimed, with no evidence whatsoever, that Schiff would have called CNN ahead of the drone strike on Soleimani to tip them off and that this would have allowed the Quds Force commander to get away. “They want us to tell them so that they can leak it to their friends in the corrupt media,” he said, referring to House Democrats.

Slotkin's resolution explicitly makes an exception for defending against “an imminent armed attack,” but Trump ignored this as he complained about Democrats trying to stop him from taking action if there's an imminent threat. “He was looking very seriously at our embassies and not just the embassy in Baghdad, but we stopped him very quickly and we stopped him cold,” the president told a crowd of nearly 8,000 supporters, referring to Soleimani. “We didn't have time to call up Nancy [Pelosi], who is not operating with a full deck.”

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

“It's not about how bad they are. It's about how good we are,” Pelosi said at her weekly news conference, referring to Iran and Soleimani. (Felicia Sonmez)

Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) heads to the Senate floor for a vote. (Shawn Thew/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

-- In the Senate, two Republicans have committed to support Kaine’s resolution: Sens. Mike Lee (Utah) and Rand Paul (Ky.). Kaine is trying to woo at least two more GOP colleagues by offering to make amendments that could get them on board. He’s actively discussing draft text with Sens. Susan Collins (Maine) and Todd Young (Ind.). Kaine has already agreed to remove any references to Trump by name to make it more palatable for Republican colleagues, and he’s willing to make more edits. “It doesn’t mean everyone I talk to will get on board, but me sitting down with them and talking them through why I’ve done it this way, it gives them some level of comfort,” Kaine told Jenna Portnoy.

Kaine vocally pushed to get Congress to authorize the use of military force in the Middle East even when his good friend Barack Obama was president. (Read my piece about it from 2015 here). In fact, Kaine refused to modulate his position even when Hillary Clinton chose him as her running mate. His longtime emphasis on this issue undermines the GOP argument that his resolution is politically motivated.

Keep an eye on Young, who happens to be chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee. I wrote a Big Idea in May about how Young's military service prompted him to focus on this issue when it looked like the United States might get drawn into a war with Venezuela.

"I understand — as a former Marine Corps intelligence officer — the real-world limitations to and the sensitivities associated with sharing certain information, even with members of Congress," Young told Seung Min Kim, referring to the closed-door briefing on Wednesday that left Lee and Paul seething. "But I left there feeling as though it would've been a lot more helpful had I gotten a little peek into some of the intel that informed the operational decisions."

U.S. believes Ukraine airliner shot down by Iran

THE LATEST ON THE IRAN CRISIS:

-- In a phone call with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Iraqi Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi asked the United States to send a delegation to Iraq to set up a mechanism for the “safe withdrawal of forces from Iraq.” Sarah Dadouch reports: “The Iraqi prime minister has repeatedly insisted that U.S. troop withdrawal was the only path toward de-escalation. ... According to a statement, Abdul Mahdi also shared his objections regarding U.S. forces entering Iraq and American aircraft flying in Iraqi airspace without the consent of the Iraqi government.”

-- The Trump administration hit Iran with more sanctions Friday in the first concrete response to the attacks on U.S. forces in Iraq this week. (Carol Morello)

-- Western officials believe an Iranian missile hit the Ukrainian

plane that crashed near Tehran earlier this week in a possible unintentional firing. Ukraine's Volodymyr Zelensky is now asking Western leaders to share with him the intelligence that suggests this. Isabelle Khurshudyan and Erin Cunningham report: “Iran, meanwhile, denied the assertions that the Boeing 737, carrying 176 people from Tehran to Kyiv, was shot down early Wednesday shortly after departing from Tehran. ... Ukraine has taken an active role in investigating the crash of the jet, which was carrying 11 Ukrainians, including the crew. A team of 45 experts and search-and-rescue personnel from Ukraine, including specialists who helped investigate the July 2014 downing of Malaysia Airlines Flight 17 over Ukrainian territory, arrived in Tehran early Thursday to participate in the probe. ... Zelensky had phone conversations Thursday with heads of government from Canada, Britain, Sweden and Iran — countries that each had citizens among the passengers. While Ukraine's readouts of those calls said Zelensky intended to keep the leaders abreast of Ukraine's findings and encouraged their countries to participate in the investigation, he has now had to publicly ask to be briefed in return. ... The Ukrainian leader is expected to speak with [Pompeo] on Friday. ...

“In Washington, U.S. officials expressed ‘high confidence’ that the Boeing 737-800 was targeted by an SA-15 surface-to-air missile, part of a Russian-made air defense system also known as a Tor system, as Iranian forces were on high alert. President Trump said the downing of the aircraft was probably a ‘mistake.’ Then in Ottawa, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said intelligence analyses indicated that a surface-to-air missile hit the plane in what could have been an ‘unintentional’ act. ... A Ukrainian official ... said that Zelensky made the public request for evidence about the crash because the United States had not yet shared with Ukraine its intelligence about the missile Thursday. ...

"The Washington Post obtained a video that allegedly shows the moment the airliner was struck in midair. The video, first published by the New York Times, purportedly shows a missile intercepting the aircraft near the city of Parand, followed by a loud boom. ... Earlier Friday, the Iranian government said in a statement that it was inviting Boeing to send a representative to help examine the 'black box' containing the flight data and cockpit voice recorders. Iranian state television aired a video of an investigator opening and showing the contents of the box."

-- The tragedy mirrors the 1988 Iran Air incident, in which a passenger plane that had originated in the Iranian capital was shot down, leaving 290 dead. Adam Taylor reports: "On July 3, 1988, Iran Air Flight 655 was shot down by the U.S. military. The flight ... was flying over the Strait of Hormuz toward its destination, Dubai, when it was hit by two surface-to-air missiles. Though Pentagon officials at first denied any knowledge of the incident, it soon emerged that the plane had been targeted by the USS Vincennes, a cruiser that had been involved in a skirmish with Iranian boats in the Persian Gulf and had mistaken the passenger jet for an Iranian warplane. President Ronald Reagan expressed sympathy for the 'terrible human tragedy' but suggested that the plane had 'failed to heed repeated warnings.' However, an investigation by the International Civil Aviation Organization, a U.N. agency, found that U.S. military ships in the region did not have the equipment necessary to monitor civilian air-traffic-control frequencies.”

-- On Fox News last night, Pompeo reiterated that Soleimani planned “a series of imminent attacks.” Asked for specifics, he added: “We don’t know precisely when and we don’t know precisely where. But it was real.”

-- An Iranian military commander said the missiles fired at bases used by U.S. troops in Iraq were not intended to inflict casualties. Kareem Fahim and Sarah Dadouch report: “‘We did not intend to kill,’ said Brig. Gen. Amir Ali Hajizadeh, the head of the Revolutionary Guard’s Aerospace Force, according to Iranian state media. ‘We intended to hit the enemy’s military machinery.’ However, he repeated the government’s claim that ‘tens of people were killed or wounded.’ U.S. and Iraqi officials said the strikes caused no casualties. ... Iran tried to counter the United States on the diplomatic front Thursday after Trump called on Britain, Germany, France, Russia and China to ‘break away from the remnants’ of the 2015 nuclear deal Iran struck with world powers. ... British Prime Minister Boris Johnson, speaking with Iranian President Hassan Rouhani on Thursday, ‘underlined the UK’s continued commitment to’ the nuclear deal and ‘ongoing dialogue to avoid nuclear proliferation and reduce tensions,’ according to a British government statement. Rouhani also called European Council President Charles Michel asking for a response to U.S. sanctions, which Rouhani described as ‘economic terrorism,’ the Iranian Fars News agency reported. In a statement, Michel emphasized the need for de-escalation in the region.”

-- The U.S. strike on Soleimani’s convoy last week also killed Abu Mahdi al-Muhandis, the deputy head of an Iraqi paramilitary

group, whose death could have far-reaching implications. From Middle East Eye: “Commanders of Iranian-backed armed factions in Iraq tell MEE that with the loss of the two leaders, they are now almost paralysed and would be unable to strike the Americans with real consequence. ... Muhandis, who since the 1980s has been one of America’s most wanted men over his involvement in the bombing of the US and French embassies in Kuwait, was seen by most Iraqis as Iran’s most influential man in the country. ... Although formally stripped of his financial and administrative powers, Muhandis continued to enjoy great influence over most of the Hashd al-Shaabi’s armed factions, with the government unable to regain control over the paramilitary umbrella group or force Muhandis to implement orders for fear of retaliation. ... While he frustrated the government, it was Muhandis’ strong personality, and his blatant challenge to it and the rest of his opponents, that so attracted the leaders and fighters of the armed factions and kept them revolving around him like moths to a flame, following wherever he went.”

-- The speed at which the Iran crisis unfolded shows the influence Trump’s new team of national security advisers has. From the Journal: “The group, including new Secretary of Defense Mark Esper, new chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Mark Milley and new national security adviser Robert O’Brien, along with [Pompeo], backed the president’s decision to kill the top Iranian military commander and moved swiftly to carry it out. The new team was cohesive and less inclined than its predecessors to push back against the president’s wishes, according to administration officials and others consulted by the White House. They also were less likely to consult in advance with other administration, Pentagon or State Department officials, congressional leaders or foreign allies, some of these officials said.”

-- Informants in Iraq and Syria helped the United States kill

Soleimani. From Reuters: “Soleimani arrived at the Damascus airport in a vehicle with dark-tinted glass. ... They parked near a staircase leading to a Cham Wings Airbus A320, destined for Baghdad. Neither Soleimani nor the soldiers were registered on the passenger manifesto. ... The passenger flight would be Soleimani’s last. ... Investigators have focused on how suspected informants inside the Damascus and Baghdad airports collaborated with the U.S. military to help track and pinpoint Soleimani’s position. ... The suspects include two security staffers at the Baghdad airport and two Cham Wings employees. ... The National Security agency’s investigators believe the four suspects, who have not been arrested, worked as part of a wider group of people feeding information to the U.S. military, the official said.”

-- For Trump and Iran, Twitter trolling helped escalate tensions

on the battlefield. David Nakamura reports: “A day after [Trump] signaled he would not use military force to escalate a tense standoff with Iran, that nation’s supreme leader responded with a message of his own: a doctored photo of Trump’s face imprinted with red welts from a slap to the face. The creation on the official website of Ayatollah Ali Khamenei offered a trolling visual meme to echo his previous warning that Tehran’s missile attack on two Iraqi facilities housing U.S. troops was only the first salvo in a campaign to avenge the drone killing of [Soleimani.] ... Experts called the display an example of a new era in international diplomacy in which official letters, telephone hotlines and secure video conference calls have been replaced, in some cases, by high-octane and instantaneous social media messaging.”

-- Notable commentary from The Post's opinion page:

- Jim Webb, former Democratic senator from Virginia and secretary of the Navy under Reagan: “When did it become acceptable to kill a top leader of a country we aren’t even at war with?”
- Andrew McCabe, former deputy director of the FBI: “If you think Iran is done retaliating, think again.”
- Fareed Zakaria: “Trump does not have a foreign policy. He has a series of impulses.”
- David Ignatius: “This is what a real Iran strategy would look like.”
- Eugene Robinson: “The best Iran crisis explanation? Trump’s obsession with Obama.”
- Josh Rogin: “Soleimani’s death offers a chance to fix U.S. policy on Syria.”
- Max Boot: “By claiming Democrats support terrorism, Republicans hit a new low.”
- A hilarious satire by Alexandra Petri: “Millions of Americans devastated to learn they were ardent fans of Soleimani this whole time.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Why Democrats say they're withholding the impeachment articles

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Nancy Pelosi signaled this morning in a letter to colleagues

that the House will transmit the articles of impeachment to the Senate as soon as next week. “I have asked Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler to be prepared to bring to the Floor next week a resolution to appoint managers and transmit articles of impeachment to the Senate,” she wrote. (Our live blog has more.)

-- The Senate has conducted 15 impeachment trials in U.S. history. It has heard witnesses in every single one. Noah Bookbinder, executive director of Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, reviews the history: “Only 19 other individuals besides Trump have been impeached by the House of Representatives. The Senate completed a trial in 15 of those cases, and in every single one of them, it heard testimony from witnesses. Those cases include the only two prior instances in which a president was impeached.”

-- House Republicans are eyeing a push to condemn Pelosi for delaying the trial. From Politico: “GOP Rep. Bradley Byrne, who is running for an Alabama Senate seat, introduced a censure resolution on Thursday morning to rebuke Pelosi for hanging on to the articles of impeachment since December. Republicans have the option to force a floor vote on the measure though Democrats would surely move to table it, just as they did with a censure resolution against” Schiff.

-- Meanwhile, Rep. Elise Stefanik (R-N.Y.) tweeted an impeachment-related fundraising appeal that included a doctored photo of Pelosi, drawing a retweet from Trump. Felicia Sonmez reports: “The tweet marks the second time this week that a House Republican has tweeted a photo that appears to have been manipulated. On Monday, Rep. Paul Gosar (R-Ariz.) tweeted a fake

photo of Obama with Iranian President Hassan Rouhani. ... The tweet shows a close-up, red-tinted photo of Pelosi, with the lines in the House speaker's face exaggerated due to the image's unnaturally high contrast."

Matt Golsteyn is pictured in his D.C. office with his wife Julie and their infant son Henry. (Sarah L. Voisin/The Washington Post)

-- An Army general denied a request by an officer pardoned by Trump in an open murder case to have his Special Forces tab reinstated. Dan Lamothe reports: "The decoration for retired Army Maj. Mathew L. Golsteyn was denied Dec. 3 by Lt. Gen. Francis M. Beaudette, the commander of U.S. Army Special Operations Command, the Army disclosed Thursday. Beaudette's decision is not final, and the service said in a statement that it will next have an administrative panel consider whether it should reinstate the Special Forces tab and a Distinguished Service Cross — the U.S. military's second-highest valor award — and expunge a letter of reprimand Golsteyn received in connection with his case. Golsteyn was awaiting trial this year in the alleged murder of a suspected Taliban bombmaker in Marja, Afghanistan, in February 2010. ... The general's denial of Golsteyn's reinstatement request follows Trump's decision in November to pardon Golsteyn along with former 1st Lt. Clint Lorance, an Army officer who had been convicted of murder in Afghanistan. ... Golsteyn, reached for comment Thursday evening, said he had not heard about the decision until it was first reported by The Washington Post. A few minutes later, he and his lawyer, Phil Stackhouse, said they received notification from the Army in an emailed letter that had just arrived."

-- The Justice Department is winding down the Hillary Clinton-related inquiry once championed by Trump. It found nothing of consequence. Devlin Barrett and Matt Zapposky report: "John Huber, the U.S. attorney in Utah, was tapped in November 2017 by then-Attorney General Jeff Sessions to look into concerns raised by Trump and his allies in Congress that the FBI had not fully pursued cases of possible corruption at the Clinton Foundation and during Clinton's time as secretary of state, when the U.S. government decided not to block the sale of a company called Uranium One. As a part of his review, Huber examined documents and conferred with federal law enforcement officials in Little Rock who were handling a meandering probe into the Clinton Foundation. ... Current and former officials said that Huber has largely finished and found nothing worth pursuing — though the assignment has not formally ended and no official notice has been sent to the Justice Department or to lawmakers."

-- Internal Boeing documents show employees discussing efforts to manipulate U.S. and international safety regulators. Ian

Duncan, Lori Aratani and Michael Laris report: ““Yes, I still haven’t been forgiven by god for the covering up I did last year,” said a 2018 message. Another exchange between Boeing employees, from August 2015, closes out with this: ‘I know but this is what these regulators get when they try and get in the way. they impede progress. ...’ In 2017, a Boeing employee wrote: ‘this airplane is designed by clowns, who in turn are supervised by monkeys.’

The documents were released by Boeing to congressional investigators probing how the company’s 737 Max jets were certified by the Federal Aviation Administration as safe before two crashes that killed 346 people. ...

“At issue in some of the messages was whether simulator training should be required for pilots flying the Max. Boeing went to great lengths to prevent such a requirement, in part because it would be costly for its customers, company documents show. ... In one November 2015 message, the 737 chief technical pilot, whose name is redacted in the documents, said failing to get computer-based training for one system ‘is a planet-killer for the MAX.’ ... In another email chain, from June 2017, the chief technical pilot forwarded to Boeing colleagues messages in which he persuaded an airline, which is not identified in the documents, not to require simulator training on the Max. ‘Looks like my jedi mind trick worked again!’ the pilot wrote. ‘These are not the droids you’re looking for.’ ... In a shift Tuesday, the company said that it is recommending that pilots undergo simulator training before they resume flying the 737 Max. The FAA, which will have the final say, said it will consider Boeing's recommendation."

(Read the Boeing documents for yourself here.)

-- The United States economy added 145,000 jobs in December as the unemployment rate remained at 3.5 percent. (Rachel Siegel)

-- Video from Jeffrey Epstein's first apparent suicide attempt was lost due to "technical errors," according to prosecutors. Reis Thebault reports: "Federal prosecutors said in December they were unable to locate the video, which would have showed guards finding Epstein after his first apparent suicide attempt in July. Then, just a day later, they wrote in a court filing that they had found the footage and were 'in the process of obtaining a copy' from the Metropolitan Correctional Center in New York City, where Epstein was held. But on Thursday, prosecutors reversed themselves again, saying the video 'no longer exists' because of 'technical errors.' Jail officials initially thought they had saved footage from outside Epstein's cell, when in fact the footage they preserved was from a different part of the facility, explained Assistant U.S. Attorneys Maurene Comey and Jason Swergold in the latest filing."

-- Border crossings are starting to plateau as U.S. officials report a continued decline in immigration apprehensions. Abigail Hauslohner reports: "The number of people apprehended or deemed 'inadmissible' by U.S. border authorities along the southern border fell to 40,620 last month, down 72 percent from May, when the Trump administration declared it was at the height of a border crisis. December marked the seventh straight month of decline in border crossings, but the month-to-month differences have shrunk significantly since September. Border enforcement actions last month were roughly on par with December 2017.”

-- Counties, cities and states are stepping up on their climate goals as the Trump administration steps back. Rebecca Tan reports: “Maryland’s most populous jurisdiction is promising an ambitious package of new climate initiatives in 2020, joining other liberal counties, cities and states stepping up to address what they see as the Trump administration’s resistance to protecting the planet. ... In February, Montgomery will hold a town hall on hundreds of recommendations from climate workgroups convened last year by County Executive Marc Elrich (D). And by early 2021, officials hope to unveil a comprehensive plan detailing how the county will reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 80 percent by 2027 and 100 percent by 2035.”

American sprinters Tommie Smith (center) and John Carlos (right) raise their gloved fists in a civil rights protest at the 1968 Olympic Games in Mexico City. (AP)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Gag rule alert: The International Olympic Committee warned athletes they would face sanctions, which could include the loss of medals, for participating in political protests during the Olympics in Tokyo this summer, including kneeling, political hand gestures and wearing or holding signs or armbands. Jacob Bogage reports: “The committee published a three-page document of guidelines. ... ‘We needed clarity, and they wanted clarity on the rules,' [said] Kirsty Coventry of Zimbabwe, chair of the IOC Athletes' Commission, which helped create the new document. ... The guidelines outlaw demonstrations such as those staged by Tommie Smith and John Carlos, American sprinters who raised their gloved fists on the medal stand at the 1968 Games in Mexico City, and former NFL player Colin Kaepernick, who in 2016 began kneeling during the national anthem. Both demonstrations sought to draw attention to racial injustice and have been repeated by other athletes in recent years. ...

“Ethiopian runner Feyisa Lilesa crossed his wrists at the finish line of the men’s marathon at the 2016 Games in Rio de Janeiro to show support for civil rights protesters in his home country.

Americans Race Imboden, a fencer, and hammer-thrower Gwen Berry were placed on probation by the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee in August after demonstrating on the medal stand at the Pan American Games. Imboden knelt during the national anthem, while Berry raised a fist. Athletes who protest will face discipline ‘on a case-by-case basis as necessary,’ according to the guidelines.”

-- A billion animals have been caught in Australia’s fires. Some may go extinct. Karin Brulliard and Darryl Fears report: “The mouse-size dunnart is not as iconic as the koalas or platypuses that draw tourists, but it is arguably the most special mammal on Australia’s Kangaroo Island. Now the Kangaroo Island dunnart’s days may be numbered. Before bush fires struck, it was already endangered, so rare that even researchers who studied them had never seen one. Now they fear they never will. One-third of the 1,700-square-mile island has burned, including the entire area where these dunnarts are known to live. ... More than 1 billion mammals, birds and reptiles nationwide — some of them found nowhere else on Earth — may have been affected or killed by the fires sweeping across Australia, according to a University of Sydney estimate. The potential toll is far greater when other types of animals are included. ... Individual animals might survive, but when their habitat is gone, ‘it doesn’t matter,’ Saunders said. ‘They’ll die anyway.’”

-- Disgusting: Hoaxers are using the fires to spread misinformation and profit, Brittany Shammass reports.

-- The fire crisis is fueling protests calling for bolder action on climate change. Kate Shuttleworth reports: “At rallies nationwide on Friday, thousands called for Prime Minister Scott Morrison to resign over what they say is his administration’s passivity on an issue that has hit home to millions of Australians as a clear and present danger. The conservative leader has defended his disaster response after facing criticism from victims and firefighters for its perceived inadequacy. In Melbourne, close to 10,000 people took to the streets, spurning calls from police and the state’s center-left leader, Daniel Andrews, not to risk diverting emergency resources. ... An organizer of a similar rally in Sydney, Gavin Stanbrook, said the events of recent weeks revealed a nation polarized over how to tackle the challenge. ‘We are divided between coal interests and politicians on the one side and then firefighters and volunteers on the other and the rest of us who are either impacted or our friends and family are on the front line, or in cities surrounded by smoke,’ Stanbrook said. ‘We need to come together and say that we will not accept it anymore.’”

-- Suspected Islamist militants killed 25 soldiers in Niger. Danielle

Paquette reports: “The clash unfolded in the western village of Chinegodar near the border with Mali, according to Nigerien defense officials, as fighters with ties to the Islamic State and al-Qaeda look to seize new swaths of territory. The bloodshed came about a month after gunmen ambushed a Nigerien army post in another border town, killing 71 soldiers in the deadliest strike on the nation’s forces in recent memory. The Islamic State West Africa Province asserted responsibility for that massacre two days later.”

-- In Israel, deadly floods have kept residents confined to their homes and offices even as they braced for potential spinoff attacks from rising tensions between the United States and Iran. Steve Hendrix reports: “Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Thursday beseeched citizens to take flood warnings as seriously as they do the sirens warning of imminent rocket fire that are a feature of life in many Israeli communities. ... Netanyahu also warned the adventurous not to venture out to the desert to witness the dramatic — and potentially dangerous — spectacle of dry stream beds reanimated with roaring water. ‘Watch them on television,’ he advised. ... Officials said rescue resources had been redeployed nationwide in response to the flooding, which stretched from the coastal plains along the Mediterranean to the occupied West Bank down to the Dead Sea.”

-- China identified a new strain of coronavirus as the source of its pneumonia outbreak. Gerry Shih and Lena H. Sun report: “A group of Chinese experts this week isolated and obtained the genome sequence of the new virus, which is believed to be responsible for sickening dozens of people who visited a wild-animal market last month in Wuhan, in central China, state media reported Thursday. The outbreak ahead of the Lunar New Year travel season in China has prompted health authorities across East Asia to increase screening of travelers for signs of fever, underscoring fears about its potential spread.”

-- Understatement of the year? Pope Francis said 2020 is off to a rough start, saying it “does not seem to be marked by encouraging signs.” Chico Harlan reports: “While saying that maintaining hope is essential, the pope spent the next 45 minutes talking about wars and could-be wars, exploitation, sexual abuse, Internet hate speech, international indifference to humanitarian crises, and the depressing state of the world’s fight against climate change. He called heightened tensions between the United States and Iran ‘particularly troubling,’ but his remarks amounted to a laundry list of flash points, both major and obscure, from Burkina Faso to Venezuela to Australia. ‘Certainly, hope has to be realistic,’ Francis said. ‘It demands acknowledging the many troubling issues confronting our world and the challenges lurking on the horizon. It requires that problems be called by their name and the courage be found to resolve them.’”

-- Lebanon has banned ex-Nissan chief Carlos Ghosn from traveling. Sarah Dadouch reports: “Ghosn appeared at a hearing in Lebanon on Thursday, two days after Lebanon’s caretaker justice minister, Albert Serhan, said the country’s public prosecutor had received the Interpol red notice about Ghosn and would be taking the necessary steps. He was placed under house arrest. A few days after his arrival in Lebanon’s capital, Ghosn found himself in more legal trouble: A group of lawyers last Thursday lodged a legal complaint against him for visiting Israel as chairman of Renault and later Nissan. Lebanon and Israel have been in a state of war for the past six decades, and Lebanese law considers interacting with the country's southern neighbor and sworn enemy a crime. Ali Abbas, one of the two lawyers who filed the Israel-related complaint against Ghosn, said the travel ban was a formality that usually comes after receiving Interpol notices, especially red notices, which alert police about internationally wanted fugitives but do not compel any country to arrest the fugitive."

-- Trump wished North Korean leader Kim Jung Un a happy birthday through South Korea. (AP)

-- A statue mocking Trump in Melania Trump's home country was burned down. Lateshia Beachum reports: "Firefighters in Moravce, a city in central Slovenia, tried to extinguish the bonfire, but their efforts left charred planks on the ground. The arsonists responsible for the Christmas nutcracker-like statue's ashes are reportedly still at large. The nearly 26-foot tall wooden structure that had a mechanism to open Trump's red painted mouth full of pointy teeth was constructed last year in a nation divided over the U.S. president. The statue of Trump, with the president's signature blue suit and red tie, had been under torch threats since local residents threatened to set it ablaze on Halloween ... It was relocated because of the risk."

-- London's Madame Tussauds removed its wax figures of Prince Harry and Meghan, Duchess of Sussex, from its display of Britain's royal family less than 24 hours after the couple announced they would be "stepping back" from their roles as

senior royals. Jennifer Hassan reports: “The figures will no longer stand alongside the rest of the royal family. They have been moved by the wax museum’s staff. The likenesses of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, William and Catherine, remain on display alongside figures of Queen Elizabeth II and her husband, Prince Philip. ‘As two of our most popular and well-loved figures, they will of course remain an important feature at Madame Tussauds London as we watch to see what the next chapter holds for them,’ said [Steve Davies, general manager of Madame Tussauds London].”

Vice President Pence, along with White House senior adviser Jared Kushner and his wife, Ivanka Trump, and their children, Arabella, Joseph and Theodore Kushner, attend a Hanukkah reception in the East Room of the White House last month. (Manuel Balce Ceneta/AP)

2020 WATCH:

-- Jared Kushner’s global role is shrinking as his role in the president's reelection campaign grows. From Annie Karni and Maggie Haberman in the Times: “When senior administration officials gathered in the Situation Room on Tuesday for a meeting to discuss the repercussions of the killing of [Soleimani], the White House aide whose portfolio is the Middle East was notably absent from the meeting. ... [He] was sitting for a photo shoot for a planned Time magazine cover story. ... [Kushner] is positioning himself to be the overseer of something of even greater personal interest to his father-in-law: Mr. Trump's 2020 re-election campaign. ... [Kushner] sees no reason to involve himself as extensively in international issues now that the State Department is run by [Mike] Pompeo, whom he sees as far more competent than his predecessor, Rex W. Tillerson.”

-- Mike Bloomberg won't release the women who sued him from their nondisclosure agreements. From ABC News: “‘You can't just walk away from it,’ Bloomberg said. ‘They're legal agreements, and for all I know the other side wouldn't want to get out of it.’ Last month, ABC News reported on several lawsuits in which Bloomberg was accused of making crude remarks in the 1990s and of allegedly fostering an uncomfortable environment for women to work — allegations Bloomberg has denied. Three cases against the company remain active. ABC News has spoken with several women who expressed interest in telling their stories who were subject to confidentiality agreements, but said they feared the prospect of facing retribution from the company for speaking out.”

-- Tom Steyer appears to have qualified for the seventh Democratic debate, scheduled for next Tuesday night in Iowa, on the strength of Fox News polls that found him with double-digit

support in Nevada and South Carolina. David Weigel reports:

“Steyer, who has spent more than $115 million on his campaign so far, hit 12 percent in the network’s poll of Nevada ... and 15 percent in South Carolina. ... It came after Steyer poured more than $20 million into commercials and other advertising in these states as of this week, with $11.2 million worth of expenditures in South Carolina and $10.3 million in Nevada. He has also spent heavily to attract hundreds of thousands of small-dollar donations, which the DNC requires for debate access.”

-- The Fox News Nevada poll also shows Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders vying for the lead in the state: “Biden tops Sanders by 23-17 percent among Democratic caucusgoers, with both down one percentage point since November. [Elizabeth] Warren comes in at 12 percent, down from 18 percent — and ties with [Steyer] for third.”

-- A new Monmouth Poll shows a four-way fight in the New Hampshire Democratic primary: “Among registered New Hampshire Democrats and unaffiliated voters who are likely to participate in the February 2020 Democratic primary, 20% currently support [Pete] Buttigieg, 19% back Biden, 18% back Sanders, and 15% back Warren. ... Compared to Monmouth’s last New Hampshire poll in September, Buttigieg’s support has grown by 10 points (from 10%) and Sanders’ support has increased by 6 points (from 12%). Warren’s support has dropped by 12 points (from 27%) and Biden’s has decreased by 6 points (from 25%).”

-- Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti endorsed Biden. From the Los Angeles Times: “Garcetti will be one of Biden’s highest-profile supporters in California’s March 3 primary, but the endorsement is unlikely to have any practical effect on the highly competitive race. Dianne Feinstein, the state's senior U.S. senator, is also supporting Biden. And Long Beach Mayor Robert Garcia, who had endorsed California Sen. Kamala Harris before she dropped out of the presidential race, also announced his support for Biden on Thursday."

-- Fun read: Philadelphians looking for love on Tinder may have come across "Daddy Bernie," a profile set up for Sanders by a local man who just wants to inform people on the dating app about his favorite candidate. From the Philadelphia Inquirer: "Alex Scheinberg, 26, is not a senator from Vermont. Or any other state. He actually doesn't have a job. And he lives in his childhood home. But, Scheinberg said, that gives him more time to mix politics and pleasure in order to promote his favorite candidate in a forum that's increasingly becoming a venue for political endorsement and engagement. ... Scheinberg has his Tinder profile set to see all genders and sexual orientations, though he is straight. This way, he said, he can maximize the number of people seeing Sanders' campaign message. That's the same reason he swipes right on almost everyone, to reach as many people as possible. (For those who don't have to experience the horror show that is modern online dating, swiping right on a profile means you're interested. Swiping left, not so much.)"

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

One of Vice President Pence's children got married at the Naval Academy over the holidays:

Kate Bennett ✓
@KateBennett_DC

. @SecondLady and @VP's daughter @charlipence was married to Henry Bond at the @NavalAcademy on December 28th. She posted this photo on her Instagram account today 🎉

charlotterosepence
United States Naval Academy

♡ 68 7:01 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 22 people are talking about this

A former senior adviser to Obama made this observation about the passenger plane shot down in Iran:

A Republican senator from South Carolina had a flip response when confronted by a protester:

An alarming number of registered voters in our country cannot even place Iran on a map:

 Karl Bode  @KarlBode

I'm still stuck on this. Can't stop staring at it.

Respondents were asked to identify Iran on the map

Each  represents a respondent's guess. Each  represents a correct identification.

MORNING CONSULT

poll conducted Jan. 4-6, 2020 among 1,905 registered voters with a margin of error of +/- 3%

13.5K 5:44 PM - Jan 9, 2020

4,157 people are talking about this

The White House press secretary turned down an offer to support a charity in exchange for giving a news conference. In other news, irony is dead:

 Jake Tapper  @jaketapper · 15h

I asked @PressSec about this offer to give $175k to @StJude if she holds a press briefing.

Her response: "If you have $200,000 to play with, why not just help children because it's a good thing to do? Donations to charity should never come with strings attached." twitter.com/donwinslow/sta...

Don Winslow  @donwinslow

To @PressSec Stephanie Grisham

I'm upping my offer to $100,000. @StephenKing has agreed to put in $75,000.

We will donate $175,000 to @StJude in your name & help a lot of kids if you will take questions from the full White House press corps for 1 HOUR in the WH briefing room.

Jake Tapper

@jaketapper

(And yes I have pointed out to Ms. Grisham that in 2012, Trump offered $5 million to the charity of President Obama's choice if he released his college and passport records.)youtu.be/l-IWv0cpCnM

 YouTube @YouTube

 5,413 6:23 PM - Jan 9, 2020

 808 people are talking about this

A Republican senator met with a Democratic colleague to talk about climate change. Both have run unsuccessfully for president, but the Democrat's campaign is still active:

Senator Mitt Romney ✓
@SenatorRomney

Climate change is a global problem that will require major breakthroughs in innovation and technology to reverse current trends. Sat down with @SenatorBennet this morning to continue dialogue with colleagues on potential bipartisan solutions to address climate change.

♡ 936 6:04 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 386 people are talking about this

Marianne Williamson, who is also still in the presidential race, called out the lack of diversity among Trump's top advisers:

Marianne Williamson ✓

@marwilliamson

This is what diversity does not look like. And the issue is not just external; it's a diversity of attitudes, of perspective, of mindset that's so lacking...and so dangerous. That is what needs to change.

♥ 657 7:33 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 218 people are talking about this

John Kerry joined Joe Biden in Iowa:

John Kerry ✓
@JohnKerry

A privilege to spend time with you, @malcolmkenyatta and @SenAkbari - you learn a lot about people when you take long bus rides through Iowa! Great to be on this journey together. @JoeBiden is lucky to have you all on the team! #TeamJoe twitter.com/ShevrinJones/s...

Shevrin Jones ✓ @ShevrinJones

I spent 24 hours with who I believe is one of the brightest minds, Secretary @JohnKerry. From his thoughts of what's happening in Iran to his stories working in the @BarackObama administration, he's living history, and I am grateful that our paths crossed.

♥ 373 4:53 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 134 people are talking about this

Billionaires are making themselves heard in the presidential race:

David Wright
@DavidWright_CNN

Total TV ad spend by 2020 candidates, through this week:

Bloomberg: $153.1 million

Steyer: $116.5 million

Sanders: $11.7 million

Buttigieg: $11.4 million

Yang: $7.3 million

Warren: $3.7 million

Biden: $3 million

Klobuchar: $2.9 million

Bennet: $1.1 million

Gabbard: $1.1 million

 4,111 3:35 PM - Jan 9, 2020

 2,260 people are talking about this

And the House majority whip, Rep. Jim Clyburn (D-S.C.), shared a touching story about his wife, who recently passed away:

James E. Clyburn ✓
@WhipClyburn

I met my wife in jail after being arrested during a civil rights march.

She brought me food and shared a hamburger with me.

Turns out, she knew who I was and had been plotting to meet me for some time.

We were married for 58 years.

twitter.com/adribbleofink/...

Aidan Moher @adribbleofink

Tell me a story about yourself the sounds like a lie but is absolutely true.

♡ 62.3K 9:40 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 8,326 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert joked that he was ruining Republican Sen. Mike Lee's political career by agreeing with him on his criticisms of the White House's Iran briefing:

Seth Meyers also went through Republican senators' comments of the Iran briefing:

Trevor Noah gave an explainer on the Australian fires:

And Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) has an impressive party trick that the other 2020 candidates probably don't:

NOW THIS NowThis
@nowthisnews

Watch @AmyKlobuchar rapidly name all 50 states in 30 impressive seconds

♡ 242 9:13 PM - Jan 9, 2020

💬 89 people are talking about this

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: 10 questions after Pelosi announces a Wednesday vote on transmitting the articles of impeachment
Date: Tuesday, January 14, 2020 9:54:25 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

10 questions after Pelosi announces a Wednesday vote on transmitting the articles of impeachment

Speaker Nancy Pelosi arrives this morning for a closed-door meeting with the House Democratic Caucus. (Michael Reynolds/EPA-EFE/Rex)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Speaker Nancy Pelosi's announcement this morning that the House will vote tomorrow on transmitting the two articles of impeachment to the Senate sets the stage for the trial of President Trump to begin this week.

Even presuming Trump's acquittal, this process could still play out more unpredictably than you might think. After all, this is only the third time that the Senate has held such a presidential impeachment trial in the 232 years since the Constitution was ratified. In the Trump era, it also feels like a safe bet to always brace for chaos. The fact that Pelosi has refused until now to send over the articles that passed on

Dec. 18 is a reminder of the imperative to expect the unexpected.

-- Two stories that broke overnight underscore the inherently unpredictable nature of a sprawling investigation that includes international intrigue and involves several state and non-state actors.

A cybersecurity firm released a report alleging that the GRU, Russia's military intelligence service, successfully hacked into Burisma, the Ukrainian gas company that put Hunter Biden on the board of directors when Joe Biden was vice president.

Democrats impeached Trump for abusing his power by allegedly pressuring Ukraine's president to announce an investigation of that company in exchange for a meeting at the White House and the release of hundreds of million dollars in security assistance that Congress approved but the president froze in the hours after his July 25 call with Volodymyr Zelensky.

And Lev Parnas, one of Rudy Giuliani's Soviet-born associates who says he was helping the president's personal lawyer with his work in Ukraine until getting arrested as he tried to leave the United States with a one-way plane ticket, turned over thousands of pages of documents and text messages to House investigators, some of which his lawyer says could be relevant to the impeachment trial.

-- Against this backdrop, here are 10 known unknowns as the Senate trial looms:

1) What did the Russians get from Burisma?

Area 1 Security, a California cybersecurity company, said it discovered on New Year's Eve that the GRU had launched a successful cyber "phishing" campaign against Burisma Holdings, as well as several subsidiaries and partners, so that hackers could gain access to internal email accounts. "It was not known what material the GRU gained access to, and if any of it will be released," Ellen Nakashima reports. "The GRU also targeted a media organization founded by Zelensky, the firm said." (Read Area 1's eight-page report here.)

The GRU is the entity that hacked the servers of the Democratic National Committee and Hillary Clinton's campaign chairman John Podesta in 2016, releasing their emails that summer and fall at strategically inopportune times for the victims. If the Russian government releases hacked materials from Burisma, how will the media cover it and how would politicians react compared to four years ago? What if the Russians put out fabricated emails that look like they're authentic but are intended only to sow disinformation about the son of a leading Democratic presidential candidate?

2) What did the Democrats get from Parnas?

Parnas's attorney Joseph Bondy tweeted that he traveled to Washington over the weekend to deliver the contents of an iPhone 11 to Democratic staffers on the House Intelligence Committee. Bondy also said that Parnas has provided investigators with materials from a Samsung phone, and he added that material from an iPad and another iPhone will be shared. "After our trip to DC, we worked through the night providing a trove of Lev Parnas' WhatsApp messages, text messages & images—not under protective order—to [investigators], detailing interactions with a number of individuals relevant to the impeachment inquiry,” Bondy tweeted, adding the hashtags #LetLevSpeak and #LevRemembers.

Parnas's lawyer also posted this video with pictures of his client that featured the song “U Can’t Touch This,” by MC Hammer:

Joseph A. Bondy
@josephabondy

Call the witnesses. @realDonaldTrump @RudyGiuliani
@senatemajldr @SenSchumer #LetLevSpeak
#LevRemembers

♡ 9,161 1:57 AM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 3,964 people are talking about this

The Wall Street Journal reports that the messages include exchanges not just between Parnas and Giuliani but also messages that he exchanged with former Texas congressman Pete Sessions, current Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) and former Hill columnist John Solomon. Giuliani, Parnas, Sessions and Solomon were all involved in the efforts to recall Marie Yovanovitch as the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine to replace her with someone they thought would be more pliable.

Bondy said he expects at least some of what he provided will become public and/or shared with the Senate. He told Axios that the materials “aren’t helpful” to the president and added that his client, who is currently under house arrest, wants to testify before Congress.

Journalists follow House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.) on his way into this morning's House Democratic Caucus meeting at the Capitol. (Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images)

3) Who will Pelosi pick as her impeachment floor managers?

The San Francisco Democrat did not name the floor managers during a closed-door meeting with her members this morning. These people will essentially perform the role of prosecutors during the Senate trial. It's widely expected that Pelosi will pick House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff \(D-Calif.\) and House Judiciary Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.), but there are other slots to be filled.

Some Democrats had been pushing for her to tap Rep. Justin Amash (Mich.), for example, the Republican-turned-independent who voted for impeachment. But while he'd add a nonpartisan veneer to the process, he could also be less predictable than a Pelosi loyalist like Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-Calif.), who sits on the Intelligence and Judiciary committees.

Just how close is Pelosi holding her cards to the vest? House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer, the No. 2 in Democratic leadership, told reporters last night that even he doesn't know whom she'll pick. "Do I have some ideas? Yes. But I'm not going to share them," the Marylander said. "Do I know all the names? No. By the end of the week, you're going to know."

4) Will the Senate vote on a motion to dismiss the articles of impeachment?

In a strategic shift, Trump called over the weekend for the charges against him to be promptly dismissed by the Senate as soon as they arrive instead of holding a trial. Top Senate Republicans rejected this idea yesterday, saying that they don't have the votes locked down to do so and expressing concern that it would hurt the president and vulnerable lawmakers up for reelection this fall if it looks like the GOP is short-circuiting the process.

"Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) has said that he wants the trial ... to follow the format used 21 years ago in the trial of President Bill Clinton. In that case, the Senate approved a resolution that would have allowed the Senate to vote to dismiss the charges. But senior Republicans signaled Monday that they are not inclined to include such a provision in the resolution that will kick off Trump's trial," Seung Min Kim, Mike DeBonis and Elise Viebeck report.

"Several closely watched Republican senators said Monday that they would reject immediate dismissal of the charges against Trump, including Sens. Lamar Alexander (Tenn.), Mitt Romney (Utah) and Susan Collins (Maine). ... Chatter about dismissing the charges began to ramp up last week after Sen. Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) introduced a measure to alter Senate rules to allow for dismissing articles of impeachment, but only if the House had failed to transmit them to the Senate within 25 calendar days. ...

“A senior administration official ... said the White House wants the dismissal option ‘available to the president’ and not necessarily tucked into the organizing resolution. The official also noted that a motion to dismiss could come later in the trial, once the senators have had ample time to digest opening arguments and ask questions. Any senator can move to dismiss the charges, as long as it is done in writing.”

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell gets briefed by staff as he walks from the floor to his office this morning. (Sam Corum/EPA-EFE/Rex)

5) How many Republican senators will vote to call witnesses?

“Senior White House officials ... increasingly believe that at least four Republicans, and likely more, will vote to call witnesses,” CBS News reports. “In addition to Senators Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, [Collins], [Romney] and possibly Cory Gardner of Colorado, the White House also views Rand Paul of Kentucky as a ‘wild card’ and [Alexander] as an ‘institutionalist’ who might vote to call witnesses, as one official put it.”

Collins told reporters she’s trying to ensure the process hews as closely as possible to what the Senate did for Clinton. Murkowski said she wants to make sure there’s an ability to get additional information, including witnesses, if the opening arguments don’t answer all her questions.

6) Does John Bolton testify?

The former national security adviser said last week that he would be willing to testify if he receives a Senate subpoena. At least four Republicans would need to join all the Democrats to vote for witnesses for this to happen.

Romney said yesterday that he plans to vote against early motions by Democrats to get witnesses before opening arguments, but he said he could vote to hear from witnesses later. “I presume I’ll be voting in favor of hearing from John Bolton, perhaps among others,” he told reporters yesterday. “That could change depending on what happens in the ensuing days and during those arguments, but I’m not going to be voting for witnesses prior to the opening arguments.”

A new Quinnipiac University poll finds that two-thirds of Americans want to see Bolton testify during the Senate trial. For context, the survey found that 51 percent of respondents approved of the House voting to impeach Trump.

7) How aggressively does Trump assert executive privilege?

White House spokesman Hogan Gidley suggested on Fox News this morning that the president's lawyers would probably invoke executive privilege to limit testimony, especially from Bolton. "We're happy for anyone to come forward and testify," Gidley claimed. "There are obviously rules of executive privilege that past administrations have [claimed]. We will most likely do the same thing."

8) If Bolton appears, do Republicans vote to compel Hunter Biden too?

Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) told conservative radio host Hugh Hewitt this morning that he "can't imagine" a scenario where Bolton appears but Trump allies don't try to call their own witnesses whose testimony would help the president. "I can just assure you and all your listeners that it will not be a one-sided proceeding where only the Democrats have a chance to even attempt to call witnesses," Cotton told Hewitt.

Paul threatened last night to force a vote on calling the former vice president's son if Democrats succeed in getting Bolton:

Senator Rand Paul ✓

@RandPaul

My colleagues can't have it both ways. Calling for some, while blocking others. If we are going to give a platform to witnesses the Dems demand, I look forward to forcing votes to call Hunter Biden and many more!

politico.com/news/2020/01/1...

Republicans face reckoning on impeachment witne...

Some GOP senators are at odds over how to handle a key part of Trump's trial.

politico.com

♥ 15.5K 1:55 AM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 5,640 people are talking about this

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) also held open the possibility that more witnesses can still be called:

9) Does Giuliani get his wish to defend Trump on the Senate floor?

The former New York mayor told reporters as he prepared to celebrate with the Trumps at Mar-a-Lago on New Year's Eve that he'd love to try the case.

“Giuliani, whose dealings with Ukraine are a key facet of the impeachment case, has been lobbying the President to join his legal team on the Senate floor during his upcoming trial,” CNN reported yesterday. “Giuliani has pressed Trump to make him part of the team of lawyers who will argue the case, [according to] a White House official and two sources close to the President. Giuliani has argued that he knows the case against the President inside-out. The White House declined to comment. ... Sources said they did not expect Giuliani to ultimately join the team and said Trump has been advised against tapping Giuliani because of his involvement in the key facts at the heart of the impeachment case against Trump.”

HuffPost reported that Giuliani “desperately” wants to appear on Trump’s behalf but that it’s very unlikely.

Appearing Saturday night on Fox News, Giuliani claimed that he would ask the Supreme Court to dismiss the case against Trump. This is not something they have constitutional standing to do, but the president approvingly tweeted the clip:

10) Could the State of the Union be postponed?

Trump is scheduled to address a joint session of Congress on Feb. 4. There is a precedent for this happening during an impeachment trial: Clinton delivered his State of the Union on the night of Jan. 19, 1999, after his lawyers spent that day defending the president in the Senate.

And Trump relishes this kind of showmanship. For example, his 2020 reelection campaign just announced a rally in Iowa on the Thursday night before the caucuses. It will take place at Drake University, which is also hosting tonight's Democratic debate.

But some congressional Republicans are starting to suggest that maybe Trump should hold off until after his expected acquittal so that he could take a victory lap. Rep. Jim Banks (R-Ind.) accused Pelosi this morning of delaying the articles until now so that the “impeachment cloud hangs over the president during his State of the Union address.” The congressman said the president should “tell her he'll deliver the State of the Union only after our country clears the divisive impeachment hurdle.”

“It’s not just America watching the State of the Union each year,” Banks wrote on Twitter. “Tehran is watching. Hong Kong is watching. Taipei is watching. Each have made clear in the last year they want their cities & nations to look more like USA. Trump must deliver message of peace, strength & unity to freedom-loving peoples around the globe! Getting impeachment out of the way makes that message and State of the Union address stronger!”

-- Notable commentary from The Post’s opinion page:

- Dana Milbank: “Suddenly Trump has lost enthusiasm for his trial.”
- Michael McFaul: “Be prepared to fight a dangerous new wave of disinformation during the Senate trial.”
- Henry Olsen: “Nancy Pelosi gamed the impeachment trial brilliantly.”
- Jonathan Turley: “Is an attempt to abuse power as impeachable as actually doing it?”
- Eugene Robinson: “To lie or not to lie? The answer is easy for the GOP.”

The Daily 202's BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING:

LSU quarterback Joe Burrow holds the trophy after leading his team to the college football national championship on Monday in New Orleans. (Sue Ogrocki/AP)

-- “The National Security Agency recently discovered a major flaw in Microsoft’s Windows operating system — one that could potentially expose computer users to significant breaches or surveillance — and alerted the firm of the problem rather than turn it into a hacking weapon,” Ellen Nakashima reports. “The disclosure represents a major shift in the NSA’s approach, choosing to put computer security ahead of building up its arsenal of hacking tools that allow the agency to spy on adversaries’ networks ... Microsoft plans to issue a patch for the flaw on Tuesday.”

-- Louisiana State University won an exhilarating national championship game over Clemson. Chuck Culpepper and Des Bieler report: “In becoming the second 15-0 team ever from college football’s top tier, following Clemson last year, LSU left even Clemson (14-1), that five-time College Football Playoff participant, four-time finalist and two-time champion with a 29-game win streak and a quarterback, Trevor Lawrence, who had never lost a college game, deluged in numbers. ... LSU tore through Clemson as if it had not read Clemson’s astounding recent-years CV. It went 75 yards in five plays, 87 yards in six and 95 in 11 as its halftime lead reached 28-17. It beautified the field with a stream of breathtaking football plays, mainly [Joe] Burrow passes that traveled downfield and tucked themselves precisely into the right arms and guts.”

-- In other huge sports news: The Houston Astros fired manager A.J. Hinch and general manager Jeff Luhnow an hour after the MLB suspended them for a year for their roles in an extensive sign-stealing scheme. Dave Sheinin reports: “An investigation by MLB found the Astros used cameras and video monitors to steal the signs of opposing catchers at Houston's Minute Maid Park, then signaled those signs to their hitters before pitches throughout the 2017 regular season and playoffs and at least part of the 2018 season. ... Commissioner Rob Manfred fined the team $5 million and took away its top two draft picks in both 2020 and 2021.”

Sanders denies reports claiming that he told Warren women couldn't win 2020 election

2020 WATCH:

-- Elizabeth Warren accused Bernie Sanders of telling her during a private dinner at her Washington condo last year that a woman couldn't beat Trump. "I thought a woman could win; he disagreed," Warren said in a statement last night, confirming a CNN report that landed with maximum impact on the eve of the final debate before the Iowa caucuses. "I have no interest in discussing this private meeting any further because Bernie and I have far more in common than our differences on punditry.”

Sanders said it’s ludicrous to suggest that he’d tell his colleague from Massachusetts that a woman couldn’t win at a dinner where she told him she planned to run. “What I did say that night was that Donald Trump is a sexist, a racist and a liar who would weaponize whatever he could,” the Vermont senator said in a statement. “Do I believe a woman can win in 2020? Of course! After all Hillary Clinton beat Donald Trump by 3 million votes in 2016.”

“Two people with knowledge of the conversation at the 2018 dinner at Warren’s home told The Washington Post that Warren brought up the issue by asking Sanders whether he believed a woman could win,” Annie Linskey and Sean Sullivan report. “One of the people with knowledge of the conversation said Sanders did not say a woman couldn’t win but rather that Trump would use nefarious tactics against the Democratic nominee. ... A September Washington Post poll found 23 percent of Democrats and Democratic-leaning independents said a man would be more likely than a woman to defeat Trump.” Joe Biden said during a recent event that Clinton faced “unfair” sexism during her campaign, but then he added: “That’s not going to happen with me.”

-- Pete Buttigieg is trying to stay out of the Warren vs. Sanders food fight. He's not holding gaggles so he doesn't have to weigh in. Instead, the former mayor is wooing moderates – and some Republicans – in his push to close the deal in Iowa. Chelsea Janes and Holly Bailey report: “The message he has delivered in Iowa lately makes clear overtures to disgruntled Republicans — or what he calls ‘future former Republicans’ — whom he argues he can attract.

He suggests he will be able to build bipartisan consensus. And he, more than any candidate in the field, suggests that Republicans have co-opted faith, arguing that religious Americans can find a like-minded leader in him. ... The campaign is also doubling down on its robust organizing operation in the final weeks before the vote. Though Buttigieg started far behind his Democratic rivals in building a ground game — waiting until around Labor Day to begin opening field offices — he has now assembled one of the largest operations in the state. ... But that may not be enough. In recent weeks, some county chairs have sensed shifting feelings about Buttigieg.”

-- Sanders said he's willing to release a shortlist of his potential Supreme Court picks if he becomes the Democratic nominee. He told the New York Times Editorial Board that he would only appoint judges who “100 percent” support Roe v. Wade. (Kayla Epstein)

-- Trump and his campaign have also launched their most sustained attacks yet on Sanders. Toluse Olorunnipa reports: “Trump and his allies have trained their sights on Sanders, seeking to tarnish his foreign policy credentials and commander in chief appeal. ... Trump’s allies say the president drives the campaign’s political strategy, acknowledging that he is an avid consumer of the public polling and the cable-TV punditry that has documented Sanders’s growing strength ... Trump mentioned Sanders by name 10 times during his rally last week in Ohio — more than any other candidate. He continued the attacks on Twitter over the weekend and on Monday ... Trump’s campaign has released three statements in the last week specifically attacking Sanders on foreign policy.”

Stage Order

for Jan. 14 Democratic debate

-- Tonight's Democratic debate will begin at 9 p.m. Eastern at Drake University in Des Moines. It will air on CNN and stream on the Des Moines Register's website. Andrew Yang, who was onstage in December, did not qualify. Mike Bloomberg can't qualify because he doesn't accept donations. Also not qualifying but still in the race: Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (Hawaii), Sen. Michael Bennet (Colo.), former congressman John Delaney of Maryland and former Massachusetts governor Deval Patrick.

-- The latest Monmouth University Poll shows how fluid the race in the Hawkeye State remains: Biden, Buttigieg, Sanders and Warren are all grouped near the top of the leaderboard. Most significant, though, is that 4 in 10 voters likely caucus-goers said there's at least a "moderate" chance that they will support a different candidate on caucus night. That's good news for Amy Klobuchar.

-- What's top of mind for voters in Iowa? From the Register:

“Caucusgoers in the first-in-the-nation presidential voting state have been thinking about candidates' stances on three key issues: health care, climate change and education, according to extensive Des Moines Register reporting and data from Iowa Polls of likely Democratic caucusgoers. ... Still, other news may dominate Tuesday's debate stage conversation. Although Iowans generally haven't been asking about the nuances of foreign policy at campaign events, the killing of Maj. Gen. Qasem Soleimani is expected to be a major topic of conversation, with candidates touting their foreign policy credentials. ... The issue of impeachment is also expected to loom large.” The latest episode in the Register’s podcast series, “Three Tickets,” touches on what it’s like to live in the state during a caucus year: “It’s a strange and wonderful kind of chaos.” (Listen here.)

-- “It’s make-or-break time for anyone not named ‘Biden’ or ‘Sanders,’” columnist E.J. Dionne Jr. writes in his curtain-raiser on the debate.

-- The Post has asked all the remaining Democratic candidates where they stand on more than 85 policy questions. We've created a 20-question quiz that measures which of the candidates agrees with you the most on some of the biggest flashpoints of the cycle.

-- And if you think that's cool, The Post's Opinions team has also created a simulation that lets you design your own Iowa caucus.

Sen. Cory Booker announces end of 2020 presidential bid

-- Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) dropped out of the race after failing to qualify for the debate. Amy B Wang and David Weigel report: “Booker, who recently announced he had surpassed his fourth-quarter fundraising goal, said his operation would not have the money ‘to scale up and continue building a campaign that can win,’ particularly with a Senate impeachment trial looming and because he would be absent from Tuesday’s debate. ... Booker plans to run for reelection to the Senate, his campaign said. ... Booker is the latest candidate of color to leave a Democratic field that had started out as historically diverse, exiting about two weeks after former HUD secretary and San Antonio mayor Julián Castro said he was suspending his campaign.”

- Karen Tumulty: “Booker was a candidate of grace in an ugly political climate. On the campaign trail, voters were skeptical that leading with love is the answer in 2020.”

- Eugene Scott: “There was never much ‘love’ for Cory Booker’s campaign.”

-- Booker gave an exit interview last night to Rachel Maddow on MSNBC. Asked if he’ll endorse, the senator replied: “I don’t know. I’m taking a break for a little bit.”

-- If winning the White House doesn’t work out, Mike Bloomberg says he has a fallback plan: helping defeat Trump and remaking the Democratic Party. Michael Scherer reports: “Bloomberg is running aggressively to win the Democratic nomination, but he is simultaneously building out a general election machine to defeat [Trump], with a new structure — data, field organizing, advertising and policy — that aims to elect Democrats up and down the ballot even if the party’s voters reject the former New York mayor this spring. ... The president has been monitoring Bloomberg’s campaign, impressed by his extraordinary spending and fearful of his potential rise, according to Trump confidants with whom the president has discussed Bloomberg. ... Bloomberg’s aides, in turn, have delighted in trying to find ways to get Trump’s attention and increase his anxiety.”

-- Updates from the 2020 battle for control of the House:

- Prosecutors recommend that former congressman Chris Collins (R-N.Y.), one of the first lawmakers to endorse Trump in 2016, receive nearly five years in prison for his insider trading conviction. He is scheduled to be sentenced on Friday. (Renae Merle)

- The Democratic operative who was set to manage the reelection campaign of Rep. Jeff Van Drew in New Jersey until he switched parties will now run the campaign of his Democratic challenger Amy Kennedy. (NJ.com)
- Former Trump State Department official Matt Mowers announced that he'll challenge freshman Rep. Chris Pappas (D) in New Hampshire. (WMUR)
- The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee filed an ethics complaint against its GOP counterpart for using “trackers” in House office buildings. (Felicia Sonmez)

What to know about the anger in Iran over the downing of a Ukrainian passenger jet

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- France, Britain and Germany launched a process to hold Iran accountable for violating the nuclear deal. Loveday Morris reports:

“Iran said it would not comply with any restrictions on enriching uranium after Washington’s targeted killing of [Soleimani] ... It had gradually reduced its commitments under the deal since the United States withdrew from the deal and reimposed sanctions in 2018. In a joint statement Tuesday, Britain, France and Germany ... said that they had ‘sought to persuade Iran to change course’ and ‘worked hard’ to address its concerns. However, the European countries said they now have ‘been left with no choice, given Iran’s actions, but to register today our concerns that Iran is not meeting its commitments.’ ”

The three countries said in their statement they still want to preserve the deal and are not immediately joining the Trump administration’s “maximum pressure” campaign.

-- Iran announced today that an unspecified number of arrests have been made in the Ukrainian passenger plane crash that Tehran admits was mistakenly shot down, and President Hassan Rouhani called for a special court to investigate the crash.

Kareem Fahim reports: “The world is going to watch this trial,” Rouhani said, in comments carried by the state news agency. “We should assure people it will not happen again.”

-- The announcement followed a third day of significant street protests against the regime. Erin Cunningham, Kareem Fahim and Adam Taylor report: “Videos posted on social media showed hundreds of students gathered Monday in a courtyard at Sharif University of Technology in Tehran, a wellspring of anger at the cleric-led government. The university said 13 of its students and alumni were killed when the plane was shot down. ... There were signs that the government, forced onto the defensive, was pursuing a harsher crackdown on the demonstrations. Videos from Sunday night showed demonstrators fleeing from tear gas and in one case a woman bleeding from her leg — a wound that protesters said was caused by live ammunition. In other videos posted on social media that could not immediately be verified, sounds of gunfire could be heard at protests in Azadi Square in the capital, as well as in the city of Shiraz. ... Tehran's police chief denied that police shot at protesters, saying they are under orders to show restraint.”

-- And while Trump remains muted on Hong Kong's pro-democracy demonstrations, he's showering support on the Iranian protesters. David Nakamura compares the reactions: “Trump issued a series of tweets aimed at pressuring Tehran, demanding that human rights groups be allowed in to ‘monitor and report’ on the unrest. ... Several hours later in Hong Kong, Kenneth Roth, the executive director of U.S.-based Human Rights Watch, was denied entry after landing at the airport. A Chinese government spokesman in Beijing said the ban was the nation's ‘sovereign right’ given such groups’ support of mass pro-democracy protests since last summer. Trump was silent on Roth’s plight.”

-- U.S. commanders at the Iraqi military base targeted by Iranian missiles say they believe the attack was intended to kill American personnel. Louisa Loveluck reports: “The missile barrage last week against the sprawling Ain al-Asad air base in western Iraq left deep craters and the crumpled wreckage of living quarters and a helicopter launch site. At least two soldiers were thrown through the window of a meters-high tower, and several dozen U.S. troops were later treated for concussion as a result of the missile strikes, military officials on the base said."

The Trump administration's shifting lines on Qasem Soleimani's 'imminent threat'

-- Trump's claim that Tehran was plotting to bomb four U.S. embassies is at best an unfounded theory and at worse a falsehood. Philip Rucker, John Hudson, Shane Harris and Josh Dawsey report: "At each turn in the commander in chief's rapidly evolving narrative of why he authorized the Jan. 3 drone strike that killed [Qasem Soleimani], the machinery of government scrambled to adapt and respond. The result is a credibility crisis ... Inside the Pentagon and elsewhere in the government, there was skepticism about the president's claim, as well as about Secretary of State Mike Pompeo's statement that the threat from Soleimani was 'imminent' and that hundreds of American lives were at risk. One senior administration official said the remarks from both men were unnecessary distractions from what many officials believed was a defensible policy decision. ..."

“Despite Trump’s claim that the U.S. Embassy in Baghdad was one of four facilities under threat of attack, some embassy officials there said they did not receive an alert commensurate to the threat Trump described ... Pompeo pushed back Monday against the charge that a notification was not sent, but he did not specify when or how it was transmitted. ... But there is no indication that embassy employees were warned of a credible threat, and the State Department did not respond to questions about whether the embassy in Baghdad took other measures that are typical when a specific threat is uncovered. With the question of imminence dogging the administration’s public defense of the Soleimani strike, other senior administration officials have shifted to vouching for the quality of the intelligence, rather than what it said about timing or particular targets. None of them has backed up Trump’s claim that four embassies were being targeted. Even if evidence of Trump’s claim exists, there was no interagency process or decision made to release such information or for the president to say what he said, according to a senior administration official.”

-- In a tweet, Trump claimed it “doesn’t really matter” after all whether Soleimani posed an imminent threat because of his “horrible past.” Karen DeYoung reports: “In a separate tweet, Trump emphasized Soleimani’s past actions rather than the threat of future attacks. ‘The Democrats and Fake News are trying to make terrorist Soleimani into a wonderful guy, only because I did what should have been done for 20 years,’ he wrote.”

-- Trump also retweeted a volley of incendiary tweets about Pelosi, falsely accusing the House speaker of downplaying

protests in Iran and supporting the regime. Brittany Shammas reports: “One of them, a fake photo of Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) wearing photoshopped Islamic head coverings and standing in front of the Iranian flag, drew swift condemnation. ‘DEMOCRATS 2020’ read the text below the image, which was originally tweeted by an anonymous user with the caption, ‘The corrupted Dems trying their best to come to the Ayatollah’s rescue.’ ... Schumer soon weighed in. ‘President Trump: How low can you go?’ he tweeted. ... Asked about the criticism during a Fox News appearance, White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham backed Trump’s decision to amplify the tweet. She said he did so to make a point.”

-- Pompeo has refused an invitation to discuss the Iran situation with the House Foreign Affairs Committee. “Rep. Eliot L. Engel (D-N.Y.) said that ‘each passing day raises new questions’ about the Jan. 3 drone strike,” John Wagner reports.

-- Now that Pompeo announced his decision not to run for Senate, Democrats see an opportunity to capture Kansas’s open seat. Annie Gowen reports: “Since Pompeo bowed out of the race, the leading Democratic contender, state Sen. Barbara Bollier, has announced that she raised more than $1 million in her first quarter in the contest, unprecedented for a Democratic Senate hopeful in Kansas. ... Pompeo [was courted by \[McConnell\]](#) for months and would have entered the race as a hands-down favorite for the seat. Now Republicans face a bruising primary battle between Kris Kobach, a former secretary of state and ally of [Trump] who lost the governor’s race a year ago, and a host of ho-hum establishment candidates who have not inspired confidence in the Republican leadership.”

Attorney General William Barr speaks to reporters to announce results of an investigation of the shootings at Naval Air Station Pensacola in Florida. (J. Scott Applewhite/AP)

-- Attorney General Bill Barr declared that the December shooting that killed three U.S. sailors on a Florida naval base was an act of terrorism, and he publicly called on Apple to help unlock phones for the government. Devlin Barrett and Matt Zapotosky report: “Barr said investigators had found evidence that Ahmed Mohammed al-Shamrani, a Royal Saudi Air Force member training at the base, was motivated by ‘jihadist ideology’ and had posted anti-American messages on social media about two hours before his attack. FBI Deputy Director David Bowdich said that during the attack, Shamrani fired shots at pictures of [Trump] and a past U.S. president, and witnesses at the scene said he made statements critical of American military actions overseas. Bowdich said that while Shamrani did not seem to be inspired by one specific terrorist group, he harbored anti-American and anti-Israeli views and felt ‘violence was necessary.’ Bowdich said the gunman’s social media comments echoed those of Anwar al-Awlaki, a radical Yemeni American cleric tied to the terrorist group al-Qaeda who was killed in a drone strike in 2011. ...

“Investigators have been stymied in trying to access two key pieces of evidence — the gunman’s iPhones. Standing before giant photographs of two severely damaged devices, the attorney general publicly urged Apple to act. ‘So far, Apple has not given us any substantive assistance,’ Barr said, though aides later clarified that Apple had, in fact, given investigators access to cloud data linked to the gunman. ... Barr did not say whether the Justice Department would seek a court order to force Apple’s compliance. The department filed legal papers on a similar case in 2016, but the issue was never resolved by a higher court. ... In a lengthy statement, Apple disputed the attorney general’s description of its role, saying the company began responding within hours of the first FBI request on Dec. 6, and has turned over ‘many gigabytes’ of data in the case. ... Even without the phone data, investigators were able to review Shamrani’s social media postings, which were critical to the officials’ determination. ... Justice Department officials ... said that while officials were confident Shamrani had no U.S.-based co-conspirator, they were still interested in potential interactions he might have had with those in Saudi Arabia. Barr said investigators had found evidence that 17 Saudis had through social media shared jihadist or anti-American material and 15 — including some of those who had shared anti-American material — were found to have had contact with or possessed child pornography.”

-- George Nader, a key witness in special counsel Bob Mueller’s probe of Russian interference in the 2016 election, admitted to bringing a 14-year-old boy to the United States for sex and to possessing child pornography. Rachel Weiner reports: “A wealthy Lebanese American businessman with long-standing political influence in Washington and the Middle East, Nader faces at least a decade in federal prison after his guilty plea in federal court in Alexandria, Va. While the charges carry a maximum penalty of 30 years, prosecutors in the Eastern District of Virginia agreed to recommend the mandatory minimum of 10 years. ... He already has a conviction in the same court for transporting child pornography in 1991, for which he served six months in prison. ...

“Nader still faces charges in Washington federal court of conspiring to funnel illegal campaign contributions to both Democrats and Republicans. As an adviser to the leadership of the United Arab Emirates, Nader met several times with officials and associates of [Trump] during the early days of the administration. He helped set up a January 2017 meeting between Trump associate Erik Prince and a Russian official close to Russian President Vladimir Putin that was closely scrutinized” by Mueller.

-- France’s Emmanuel Macron will deploy more soldiers to West Africa, where terrorist groups are growing. Danielle Paquette reports: “The leaders of Mali, Niger, Chad, Burkina Faso and Mauritania met their French counterpart in southwestern France, where they agreed to build a shared command structure with the European power that once colonized much of West Africa. ... France, which has roughly 4,500 troops in the region — the most of any outside nation by far — plans to deploy another 220 soldiers, Macron said alongside the West African presidents. In a joint statement, the leaders said they would keep working together to protect civilians and ‘prevent an extension of the terrorist threat.’”

-- A U.S. citizen died in an Egyptian jail after a lengthy hunger strike. Carol Morello and Kareem Fahim report: “Mustafa Kassem, who was 54, died of heart failure following his hunger strike, according to Pretrial Rights International, a nonprofit organization that represented Kassem. David Schenker, the assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern Affairs, confirmed Kassem’s death and expressed the U.S. belief that the terrorism charges against him were meritless. Schenker told reporters he was saddened at Kassem’s death in custody, calling it ‘needless, tragic and avoidable.’ He vowed to continue raising U.S. concerns about human rights abuses in Egypt and Americans detained in the country.”

-- The Syrian army is urging civilians to leave the last rebel enclave while the Russian Defense Ministry is offering them three ways out. Sarah Dadouch reports: “The warning was issued on the day that a cease-fire brokered by Turkey and Russia took effect, as Russia and its allies promised to halt airstrikes. Russia has been Syrian President Bashar al-Assad’s main ally, alongside Iran, during the war, which started in 2011 as a revolt against the government. ... The cease-fire follows a series of broken truces, and few expect the respite to last. Artillery fire continued Monday, the head of the Idlib branch of Syrian Civil Defense — a volunteer organization more commonly known as the White Helmets — told The Washington Post.”

-- The Treasury Department dropped China’s designation as a “currency manipulator,” greasing the wheels for the scheduled signing of a U.S.-China trade deal tomorrow. David J. Lynch

reports: “In a semiannual report, department officials said no countries met the standards set by Congress for the ‘manipulator’ label. But the political context for the decision was hard to miss. ... The move reversed the department’s decision in August to add China to the list.”

-- Talks are underway for Trump to visit India as early as next month, possibly during the impeachment trial. Joanna Slater

reports: “If finalized, the visit would be Trump’s first to India as president. The United States has sought to cultivate India as a partner and potential counterweight to China, and Trump has spoken of his ‘great admiration’ for Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi. ... The ‘two sides are in touch’ and ‘trying to work out a mutually convenient date,’ said one Indian official. Another said the visit could take place in February or March.”

-- Queen Elizabeth II agreed to a “period of transition” in which Harry and Meghan get to spend time in Britain and Canada. Karla Adam and William Booth

report: “In a statement, the queen wrote: ‘Although we would have preferred them to remain full-time working Members of the Royal Family, we respect and understand their wish to live a more independent life as a family while remaining a valued part of my family.’ The queen acknowledged that Harry and Meghan — she omitted their royal titles — ‘made clear that they do not want to be reliant on public funds in their new lives,' but she did not describe their new duties or ventures.”

-- Oceans are warming at the same rate as if five Hiroshima-sized atomic bombs were dropped in every second, a new study shows. From CNN: “An international team of 14 scientists examined data going back to the 1950s, looking at temperatures from the ocean surface to 2,000 meters deep. The study, which was published in the journal Advances in Atmospheric Sciences, also showed that the oceans are warming at an increasing speed. While the past decade has been the warmest on record for global ocean temperatures, the hottest five years ever recorded all came in the last five. ... The study shows that while the oceans warmed steadily between 1955 and 1986, warming has accelerated rapidly in the last few decades. Between 1987-2019, ocean warming was 450% greater than during the earlier time period.”

-- Australia is seeing sci-fi weather. Andrew Freedman and Sarah Kaplan report: “Climate change has pushed natural phenomena, such as wildfires, to mutate into more disastrous and deadly versions of themselves. Temperatures are soaring to heights scientists did not expect to see for decades. Landscapes that are usually resistant to fire — including rainforests home to rare, vulnerable species — are going up in flames. The blazes are so big they generate their own hellish weather. Fire tornadoes, formed when spinning winds generate a massive rotating column of fire, ash, vapor and debris, are impossible to control. A volunteer firefighter in New South Wales was killed on Dec. 30 when one of these twisters overturned his truck.”

-- Microscopic grains of dead stars are the oldest known material on the planet – older than the moon, Earth and the solar system itself. Ben Guarino reports: “By examining chemical clues in a meteorite’s mineral dust, researchers have determined the most ancient grains are 7 billion years old — about half as old as the universe. Rocks don’t get much more classic than this.”

Government contractors erect a section of Pentagon-funded border wall along the Colorado River in Yuma, Ariz., in September. (Matt York/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULD NOT BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- The Trump administration is planning on diverting an additional $7.2 billion in Pentagon funds for the border wall, five times what Congress authorized the president to spend on the project in the 2020 budget. Nick Miroff reports: “The Pentagon funds would be extracted, for the second year in a row, from military construction projects and counternarcotics funding. According to the plans, the funding would give the government enough money to complete about 885 miles of new fencing by spring 2022, far more than the 509 miles the administration has slated for the U.S. border with Mexico. ... The move would bring the total amount of federal funds allocated to border fencing to $18.4 billion under Trump ... The Trump administration has completed 101 miles of new barriers so far, according to the latest figures, far less than the 450 miles the president has promised to erect by the end of the year.”

-- The U.S. is putting asylum seekers on planes to Guatemala – often without telling them where they’re going. Kevin Sieff reports:

“When the migrants land in Guatemala City, they receive little information about what it means to apply for asylum in one of the hemisphere’s poorest countries. Those who don’t immediately apply are told to leave the country in 72 hours. The form is labeled ‘Voluntary Return.’ ‘In the U.S., the agents told us our cases would be transferred, but they didn’t say where. Then they lined us up to get on the plane,’ said Marta, 43, from Honduras. She sat in a migrant shelter here with her 17-year-old son, who nursed a gunshot wound in his left cheek — the work, mother and son say, of a Honduran faction of the MS-13 gang. ‘When we looked out the window, we were here,’ she said. ‘We thought, ‘Where are we? What are we supposed to do now?’”

-- Texas became the first state to take up Trump’s offer to let governors close their borders to new refugees. Columnist Catherine Rampell shares the story of an Iraqi refugee who’s resettled in a state that now wants to shut out people like her: Marwa Sabah “is one of nearly 57,000 refugees who have resettled in Texas over the past decade, of whom about 12,000 are from Iraq. Like most refugees, she didn’t want to leave behind nearly everyone and everything she knew. But facing death threats, she and her husband had no choice. They requested refuge in the United States and specifically asked to be resettled in Fort Worth. ... [On Friday], Republican Gov. Greg Abbott declared that Texas was full. ... He suggested that Texas lacks the resources to absorb additional refugees, playing into stereotypes of refugees as dangerous, destitute and typically on the dole. Perhaps if he got to know refugees such as Sabah, he’d think differently.”

-- The Trump administration’s restrictions on fetal tissue research have unsettled scientists and disrupted key studies in ways that could undermine public health. Amy Goldstein reports: “The controversial federal funding rules, announced seven months ago, are reshaping scientists’ research paths and the grants they seek from the National Institutes of Health. Graduate students cannot get training grants if their research involves fetal tissue. Senior researchers are cautioning emerging scientists to avoid this type of research. And a university program that produces and sells mice containing human fetal tissue is forgoing the federal funding it has relied on for nearly three decades, imperiling the work of scores of biomedical researchers who depend on these lab animals. The disruption is occurring, in part, because the administration has imposed an extra requirement for NIH grant applications that is not yet possible to meet. Under the rewritten rules that took effect early in the fall, a new ethics advisory board must assess all grant requests involving fetal tissue — but the board has not yet been established, and it may not be convened for many months.”

-- Trump falsely claimed, nearly 70 times through Dec. 10, that he has sought to protect patients with preexisting conditions through his various efforts to eliminate the Affordable Care Act. Fact Checker Glenn Kessler says the president’s tweets about the subject on Monday were something more — “a virtual traffic jam of false claims.”

-- Product recalls under the Trump administration have fallen to their lowest level in 16 years, but there are signs that the new head of the Consumer Product Safety Commission plans a more aggressive approach to companies selling potentially unsafe products. Todd C. Frankel reports: “The 2019 total was down 7 percent from 2018, which itself was 8 percent lower than in 2017. That’s the year that Republican Ann Marie Buerkle took over as the commission’s acting chairwoman ... Now, with a new acting chairman running the CPSC, Democrat Robert Adler, the agency is trying a different tactic to force the hand of reluctant companies. The CPSC last Wednesday issued a rare product safety alert — and made it clear the agency wanted the product taken off the market. The warning said a four-drawer dresser made by Hodedah was a tip-over risk and that the CPSC ‘intends to continue pressing the case for a recall with Hodedah.’ The notice was unusual because it acknowledged that the agency and company disagreed about the need for a recall. Negotiations over recalls normally are not revealed to the public, giving companies considerable leverage.”

-- Four gun-control bills advanced in Virginia’s newly gun-free

Capitol. In a show of opposition to the bills, gun rights activists swarmed the Capitol, but the state Senate's Judiciary Committee advanced most of the gun legislation proposed by Democrats. (Laura Vozzella and Gregory S. Schneider)

-- Lawyers allege that the California scuba boat fire that killed 34 last year was a result of safety violations and a charging station that was not up to code. (Miranda Green)

-- St. Louis's first black chief prosecutor, claiming a racist conspiracy, is suing the city under a law created to fight the Ku Klux Klan. St. Louis Circuit Attorney Kim Garden alleges that her agenda to "redress the scourge of historical inequality and rebuild trust in the criminal justice system among communities of color" has been thwarted by a campaign of "collusive conduct" aimed at removing her from office. (Antonia Noori Farzan)

-- The Supreme Court will not review the conviction of Michelle Carter, the woman who went to jail for encouraging her boyfriend to kill himself. (Ann E. Marimow)

-- An off-duty Secret Service agent shot and killed a dog on a leash in Brooklyn. The female Belgian shepherd was being walked by her owners when she startled the agent, officials said. (New York Daily News)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) weighed in on behalf of Sanders over Warren:

Mandy Moore, a star in NBC's "This is Us," showed up in Iowa last night to support Pete Buttigieg:

Mandy Moore ✓
@TheMandyMoore

About to go onstage with this guy! @PeteButtigieg

♡ 9,379 12:57 AM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 813 people are talking about this

Cory Booker joked about a headline on his departure from the presidential race:

The president's claims about Saudi Arabia on Fox News are specious:

This is how the White House press secretary defended Trump retweeting a doctored image of Democratic leaders in Islamic garb:

Aaron Rugar ✓
@atrupar

Stephanie Grisham on Trump retweeting an image mocking how Muslims dress: "I think the president is making clear that Democrats are parroting Iranian talking points and almost taking the side of terrorists and those who were out to kill Americans." 🤔

♥ 2,192 6:19 PM - Jan 13, 2020

💬 1,661 people are talking about this

Views of the Confederate flag vary widely across the South:

Catherine Rampell ✓

@crampell

Survey of people in the former Confederate states, on whether the Confederate flag stands for "heritage" or "racism" today.yougov.com/topics/politic...

Former Confederate states on whether the Confederate flag most represents heritage or racism

127 2:15 AM - Jan 14, 2020

98 people are talking about this

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "Right now we are entering a historic time," said Sen. Richard Blumenthal (D-Conn). "We have to put country above party, put aside partisanship."

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

A man whose remote cabin burned down was rescued by Alaska State Troopers after surviving subzero temperatures for 23 days:

Watch: Man stranded in Alaskan wilderness for 23 days rescued after writing 'SOS' in snow

Stephen Colbert took a look at the different explanations members of the Trump administration have given for Soleimani's killing:

Trump's team appears to be borrowing directly from George W. Bush's playbook, argued Seth Meyers:

Trevor Noah did an explainer on the scandal unraveling in England:

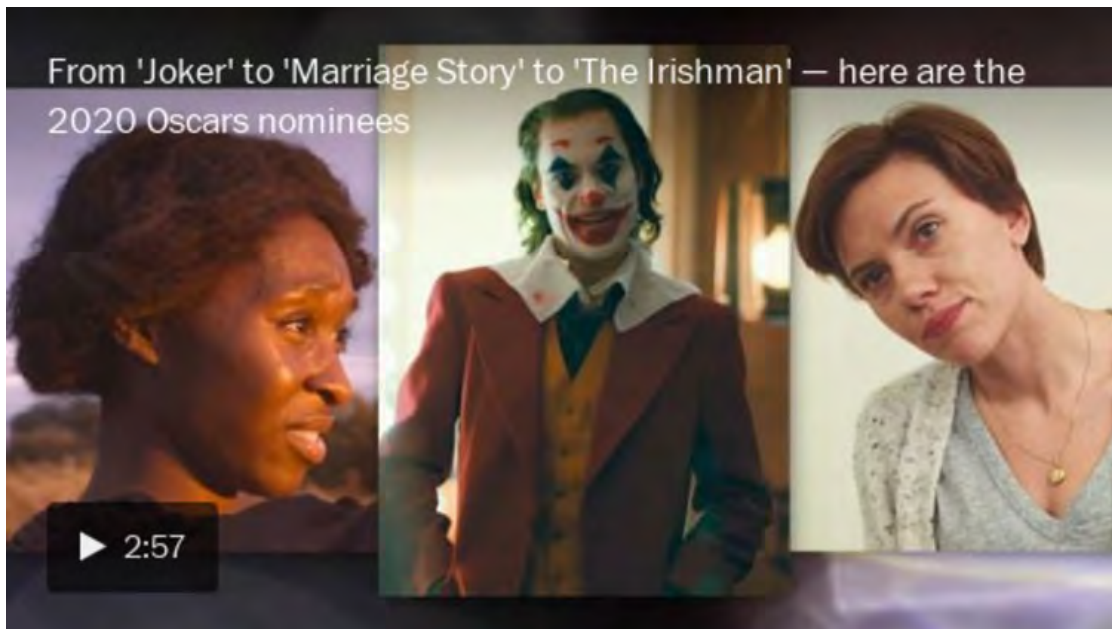

And Jimmy Kimmel pointed out that there are more minorities in Trump's Cabinet than among the Oscar nominees:

In case you missed it, here's a complete list of the Oscar nominees:

From 'Joker' to 'Marriage Story' to 'The Irishman' — here are the 2020 Oscars nominees

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: 10 questions after Pelosi announces a Wednesday vote on transmitting the articles of impeachment
Date: Tuesday, January 14, 2020 9:54:57 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

10 questions after Pelosi announces a Wednesday vote on transmitting the articles of impeachment

Speaker Nancy Pelosi arrives this morning for a closed-door meeting with the House Democratic Caucus. (Michael Reynolds/EPA-EFE/Rex)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Speaker Nancy Pelosi's announcement this morning that the House will vote tomorrow on transmitting the two articles of impeachment to the Senate sets the stage for the trial of President Trump to begin this week.

Even presuming Trump's acquittal, this process could still play out more unpredictably than you might think. After all, this is only the third time that the Senate has held such a presidential impeachment trial in the 232 years since the Constitution was ratified. In the Trump era, it also feels like a safe bet to always brace for chaos. The fact that Pelosi has refused until now to send over the articles that passed on

Dec. 18 is a reminder of the imperative to expect the unexpected.

-- Two stories that broke overnight underscore the inherently unpredictable nature of a sprawling investigation that includes international intrigue and involves several state and non-state actors.

A cybersecurity firm released a report alleging that the GRU, Russia's military intelligence service, successfully hacked into Burisma, the Ukrainian gas company that put Hunter Biden on the board of directors when Joe Biden was vice president.

Democrats impeached Trump for abusing his power by allegedly pressuring Ukraine's president to announce an investigation of that company in exchange for a meeting at the White House and the release of hundreds of million dollars in security assistance that Congress approved but the president froze in the hours after his July 25 call with Volodymyr Zelensky.

And Lev Parnas, one of Rudy Giuliani's Soviet-born associates who says he was helping the president's personal lawyer with his work in Ukraine until getting arrested as he tried to leave the United States with a one-way plane ticket, turned over thousands of pages of documents and text messages to House investigators, some of which his lawyer says could be relevant to the impeachment trial.

-- Against this backdrop, here are 10 known unknowns as the Senate trial looms:

1) What did the Russians get from Burisma?

Area 1 Security, a California cybersecurity company, said it discovered on New Year's Eve that the GRU had launched a successful cyber "phishing" campaign against Burisma Holdings, as well as several subsidiaries and partners, so that hackers could gain access to internal email accounts. "It was not known what material the GRU gained access to, and if any of it will be released," Ellen Nakashima reports. "The GRU also targeted a media organization founded by Zelensky, the firm said." (Read Area 1's eight-page report here.)

The GRU is the entity that hacked the servers of the Democratic National Committee and Hillary Clinton's campaign chairman John Podesta in 2016, releasing their emails that summer and fall at strategically inopportune times for the victims. If the Russian government releases hacked materials from Burisma, how will the media cover it and how would politicians react compared to four years ago? What if the Russians put out fabricated emails that look like they're authentic but are intended only to sow disinformation about the son of a leading Democratic presidential candidate?

2) What did the Democrats get from Parnas?

Parnas's attorney Joseph Bondy tweeted that he traveled to Washington over the weekend to deliver the contents of an iPhone 11 to Democratic staffers on the House Intelligence Committee. Bondy also said that Parnas has provided investigators with materials from a Samsung phone, and he added that material from an iPad and another iPhone will be shared. "After our trip to DC, we worked through the night providing a trove of Lev Parnas' WhatsApp messages, text messages & images—not under protective order—to [investigators], detailing interactions with a number of individuals relevant to the impeachment inquiry,” Bondy tweeted, adding the hashtags #LetLevSpeak and #LevRemembers.

Parnas's lawyer also posted this video with pictures of his client that featured the song “U Can’t Touch This,” by MC Hammer:

Joseph A. Bondy

@josephabondy

Call the witnesses. @realDonaldTrump @RudyGiuliani
@senatemajldr @SenSchumer #LetLevSpeak
#LevRemembers

9,161 1:57 AM - Jan 14, 2020

3,964 people are talking about this

The Wall Street Journal reports that the messages include exchanges not just between Parnas and Giuliani but also messages that he exchanged with former Texas congressman Pete Sessions, current Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) and former Hill columnist John Solomon. Giuliani, Parnas, Sessions and Solomon were all involved in the efforts to recall Marie Yovanovitch as the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine to replace her with someone they thought would be more pliable.

Bondy said he expects at least some of what he provided will become public and/or shared with the Senate. He told Axios that the materials “aren’t helpful” to the president and added that his client, who is currently under house arrest, wants to testify before Congress.

Journalists follow House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.) on his way into this morning's House Democratic Caucus meeting at the Capitol. (Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images)

3) Who will Pelosi pick as her impeachment floor managers?

The San Francisco Democrat did not name the floor managers during a closed-door meeting with her members this morning. These people will essentially perform the role of prosecutors during the Senate trial. It's widely expected that Pelosi will pick House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff \(D-Calif.\) and House Judiciary Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.), but there are other slots to be filled.

Some Democrats had been pushing for her to tap Rep. Justin Amash (Mich.), for example, the Republican-turned-independent who voted for impeachment. But while he'd add a nonpartisan veneer to the process, he could also be less predictable than a Pelosi loyalist like Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-Calif.), who sits on the Intelligence and Judiciary committees.

Just how close is Pelosi holding her cards to the vest? House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer, the No. 2 in Democratic leadership, told reporters last night that even he doesn't know whom she'll pick. "Do I have some ideas? Yes. But I'm not going to share them," the Marylander said. "Do I know all the names? No. By the end of the week, you're going to know."

4) Will the Senate vote on a motion to dismiss the articles of impeachment?

In a strategic shift, Trump called over the weekend for the charges against him to be promptly dismissed by the Senate as soon as they arrive instead of holding a trial. Top Senate Republicans rejected this idea yesterday, saying that they don't have the votes locked down to do so and expressing concern that it would hurt the president and vulnerable lawmakers up for reelection this fall if it looks like the GOP is short-circuiting the process.

"Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) has said that he wants the trial ... to follow the format used 21 years ago in the trial of President Bill Clinton. In that case, the Senate approved a resolution that would have allowed the Senate to vote to dismiss the charges. But senior Republicans signaled Monday that they are not inclined to include such a provision in the resolution that will kick off Trump's trial," Seung Min Kim, Mike DeBonis and Elise Viebeck report.

"Several closely watched Republican senators said Monday that they would reject immediate dismissal of the charges against Trump, including Sens. Lamar Alexander (Tenn.), Mitt Romney (Utah) and Susan Collins (Maine). ... Chatter about dismissing the charges began to ramp up last week after Sen. Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) introduced a measure to alter Senate rules to allow for dismissing articles of impeachment, but only if the House had failed to transmit them to the Senate within 25 calendar days. ...

“A senior administration official ... said the White House wants the dismissal option ‘available to the president’ and not necessarily tucked into the organizing resolution. The official also noted that a motion to dismiss could come later in the trial, once the senators have had ample time to digest opening arguments and ask questions. Any senator can move to dismiss the charges, as long as it is done in writing.”

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell gets briefed by staff as he walks from the floor to his office this morning. (Sam Corum/EPA-EFE/Rex)

5) How many Republican senators will vote to call witnesses?

“Senior White House officials ... increasingly believe that at least four Republicans, and likely more, will vote to call witnesses,” CBS News reports. “In addition to Senators Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, [Collins], [Romney] and possibly Cory Gardner of Colorado, the White House also views Rand Paul of Kentucky as a ‘wild card’ and [Alexander] as an ‘institutionalist’ who might vote to call witnesses, as one official put it.”

Collins told reporters she’s trying to ensure the process hews as closely as possible to what the Senate did for Clinton. Murkowski said she wants to make sure there’s an ability to get additional information, including witnesses, if the opening arguments don’t answer all her questions.

6) Does John Bolton testify?

The former national security adviser said last week that he would be willing to testify if he receives a Senate subpoena. At least four Republicans would need to join all the Democrats to vote for witnesses for this to happen.

Romney said yesterday that he plans to vote against early motions by Democrats to get witnesses before opening arguments, but he said he could vote to hear from witnesses later. “I presume I’ll be voting in favor of hearing from John Bolton, perhaps among others,” he told reporters yesterday. “That could change depending on what happens in the ensuing days and during those arguments, but I’m not going to be voting for witnesses prior to the opening arguments.”

A new Quinnipiac University poll finds that two-thirds of Americans want to see Bolton testify during the Senate trial. For context, the survey found that 51 percent of respondents approved of the House voting to impeach Trump.

7) How aggressively does Trump assert executive privilege?

White House spokesman Hogan Gidley suggested on Fox News this morning that the president's lawyers would probably invoke executive privilege to limit testimony, especially from Bolton. "We're happy for anyone to come forward and testify," Gidley claimed. "There are obviously rules of executive privilege that past administrations have [claimed]. We will most likely do the same thing."

8) If Bolton appears, do Republicans vote to compel Hunter Biden too?

Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) told conservative radio host Hugh Hewitt this morning that he "can't imagine" a scenario where Bolton appears but Trump allies don't try to call their own witnesses whose testimony would help the president. "I can just assure you and all your listeners that it will not be a one-sided proceeding where only the Democrats have a chance to even attempt to call witnesses," Cotton told Hewitt.

Paul threatened last night to force a vote on calling the former vice president's son if Democrats succeed in getting Bolton:

Senator Rand Paul ✓

@RandPaul

My colleagues can't have it both ways. Calling for some, while blocking others. If we are going to give a platform to witnesses the Dems demand, I look forward to forcing votes to call Hunter Biden and many more!

politico.com/news/2020/01/1...

Republicans face reckoning on impeachment witne...

Some GOP senators are at odds over how to handle a key part of Trump's trial.

politico.com

♥ 15.5K 1:55 AM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 5,640 people are talking about this

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) also held open the possibility that more witnesses can still be called:

9) Does Giuliani get his wish to defend Trump on the Senate floor?

The former New York mayor told reporters as he prepared to celebrate with the Trumps at Mar-a-Lago on New Year's Eve that he'd love to try the case.

“Giuliani, whose dealings with Ukraine are a key facet of the impeachment case, has been lobbying the President to join his legal team on the Senate floor during his upcoming trial,” CNN reported yesterday. “Giuliani has pressed Trump to make him part of the team of lawyers who will argue the case, [according to] a White House official and two sources close to the President. Giuliani has argued that he knows the case against the President inside-out. The White House declined to comment. ... Sources said they did not expect Giuliani to ultimately join the team and said Trump has been advised against tapping Giuliani because of his involvement in the key facts at the heart of the impeachment case against Trump.”

HuffPost reported that Giuliani “desperately” wants to appear on Trump’s behalf but that it’s very unlikely.

Appearing Saturday night on Fox News, Giuliani claimed that he would ask the Supreme Court to dismiss the case against Trump. This is not something they have constitutional standing to do, but the president approvingly tweeted the clip:

10) Could the State of the Union be postponed?

Trump is scheduled to address a joint session of Congress on Feb. 4. There is a precedent for this happening during an impeachment trial: Clinton delivered his State of the Union on the night of Jan. 19, 1999, after his lawyers spent that day defending the president in the Senate.

And Trump relishes this kind of showmanship. For example, his 2020 reelection campaign just announced a rally in Iowa on the Thursday night before the caucuses. It will take place at Drake University, which is also hosting tonight's Democratic debate.

But some congressional Republicans are starting to suggest that

maybe Trump should hold off until after his expected acquittal so that he could take a victory lap. Rep. Jim Banks (R-Ind.) accused Pelosi this morning of delaying the articles until now so that the “impeachment cloud hangs over the president during his State of the Union address.” The congressman said the president should “tell her he'll deliver the State of the Union only after our country clears the divisive impeachment hurdle.”

“It’s not just America watching the State of the Union each year,” Banks wrote on Twitter. “Tehran is watching. Hong Kong is watching. Taipei is watching. Each have made clear in the last year they want their cities & nations to look more like USA. Trump must deliver message of peace, strength & unity to freedom-loving peoples around the globe! Getting impeachment out of the way makes that message and State of the Union address stronger!”

-- Notable commentary from The Post’s opinion page:

- Dana Milbank: “Suddenly Trump has lost enthusiasm for his trial.”
- Michael McFaul: “Be prepared to fight a dangerous new wave of disinformation during the Senate trial.”
- Henry Olsen: “Nancy Pelosi gamed the impeachment trial brilliantly.”
- Jonathan Turley: “Is an attempt to abuse power as impeachable as actually doing it?”
- Eugene Robinson: “To lie or not to lie? The answer is easy for the GOP.”

The Daily 202's BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING:

LSU quarterback Joe Burrow holds the trophy after leading his team to the college football national championship on Monday in New Orleans. (Sue Ogrocki/AP)

-- “The National Security Agency recently discovered a major flaw in Microsoft’s Windows operating system — one that could potentially expose computer users to significant breaches or surveillance — and alerted the firm of the problem rather than turn it into a hacking weapon,” Ellen Nakashima reports. “The disclosure represents a major shift in the NSA’s approach, choosing to put computer security ahead of building up its arsenal of hacking tools that allow the agency to spy on adversaries’ networks ... Microsoft plans to issue a patch for the flaw on Tuesday.”

-- Louisiana State University won an exhilarating national championship game over Clemson. Chuck Culpepper and Des Bieler report: “In becoming the second 15-0 team ever from college football’s top tier, following Clemson last year, LSU left even Clemson (14-1), that five-time College Football Playoff participant, four-time finalist and two-time champion with a 29-game win streak and a quarterback, Trevor Lawrence, who had never lost a college game, deluged in numbers. ... LSU tore through Clemson as if it had not read Clemson’s astounding recent-years CV. It went 75 yards in five plays, 87 yards in six and 95 in 11 as its halftime lead reached 28-17. It beautified the field with a stream of breathtaking football plays, mainly [Joe] Burrow passes that traveled downfield and tucked themselves precisely into the right arms and guts.”

-- In other huge sports news: The Houston Astros fired manager A.J. Hinch and general manager Jeff Luhnow an hour after the MLB suspended them for a year for their roles in an extensive sign-stealing scheme. Dave Sheinin reports: “An investigation by MLB found the Astros used cameras and video monitors to steal the signs of opposing catchers at Houston's Minute Maid Park, then signaled those signs to their hitters before pitches throughout the 2017 regular season and playoffs and at least part of the 2018 season. ... Commissioner Rob Manfred fined the team $5 million and took away its top two draft picks in both 2020 and 2021.”

Sanders denies reports claiming that he told Warren women couldn't win 2020 election

2020 WATCH:

-- Elizabeth Warren accused Bernie Sanders of telling her during a private dinner at her Washington condo last year that a woman couldn't beat Trump. "I thought a woman could win; he disagreed," Warren said in a statement last night, confirming a CNN report that landed with maximum impact on the eve of the final debate before the Iowa caucuses. "I have no interest in discussing this private meeting any further because Bernie and I have far more in common than our differences on punditry.”

Sanders said it’s ludicrous to suggest that he’d tell his colleague from Massachusetts that a woman couldn’t win at a dinner where she told him she planned to run. “What I did say that night was that Donald Trump is a sexist, a racist and a liar who would weaponize whatever he could,” the Vermont senator said in a statement. “Do I believe a woman can win in 2020? Of course! After all Hillary Clinton beat Donald Trump by 3 million votes in 2016.”

“Two people with knowledge of the conversation at the 2018 dinner at Warren’s home told The Washington Post that Warren brought up the issue by asking Sanders whether he believed a woman could win,” Annie Linskey and Sean Sullivan report. “One of the people with knowledge of the conversation said Sanders did not say a woman couldn’t win but rather that Trump would use nefarious tactics against the Democratic nominee. ... A September Washington Post poll found 23 percent of Democrats and Democratic-leaning independents said a man would be more likely than a woman to defeat Trump.” Joe Biden said during a recent event that Clinton faced “unfair” sexism during her campaign, but then he added: “That’s not going to happen with me.”

-- Pete Buttigieg is trying to stay out of the Warren vs. Sanders food fight. He's not holding gaggles so he doesn't have to weigh in. Instead, the former mayor is wooing moderates – and some Republicans – in his push to close the deal in Iowa. Chelsea Janes and Holly Bailey report: “The message he has delivered in Iowa lately makes clear overtures to disgruntled Republicans — or what he calls ‘future former Republicans’ — whom he argues he can attract.

He suggests he will be able to build bipartisan consensus. And he, more than any candidate in the field, suggests that Republicans have co-opted faith, arguing that religious Americans can find a like-minded leader in him. ... The campaign is also doubling down on its robust organizing operation in the final weeks before the vote. Though Buttigieg started far behind his Democratic rivals in building a ground game — waiting until around Labor Day to begin opening field offices — he has now assembled one of the largest operations in the state. ... But that may not be enough. In recent weeks, some county chairs have sensed shifting feelings about Buttigieg.”

-- Sanders said he's willing to release a shortlist of his potential Supreme Court picks if he becomes the Democratic nominee. He told the New York Times Editorial Board that he would only appoint judges who “100 percent” support Roe v. Wade. (Kayla Epstein)

-- Trump and his campaign have also launched their most sustained attacks yet on Sanders. Toluse Olorunnipa reports: “Trump and his allies have trained their sights on Sanders, seeking to tarnish his foreign policy credentials and commander in chief appeal. ... Trump’s allies say the president drives the campaign’s political strategy, acknowledging that he is an avid consumer of the public polling and the cable-TV punditry that has documented Sanders’s growing strength ... Trump mentioned Sanders by name 10 times during his rally last week in Ohio — more than any other candidate. He continued the attacks on Twitter over the weekend and on Monday ... Trump’s campaign has released three statements in the last week specifically attacking Sanders on foreign policy.”

Stage Order

for Jan. 14 Democratic debate

ELECTION 2020

-- Tonight's Democratic debate will begin at 9 p.m. Eastern at Drake University in Des Moines. It will air on CNN and stream on the Des Moines Register's website. Andrew Yang, who was onstage in December, did not qualify. Mike Bloomberg can't qualify because he doesn't accept donations. Also not qualifying but still in the race: Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (Hawaii), Sen. Michael Bennet (Colo.), former congressman John Delaney of Maryland and former Massachusetts governor Deval Patrick.

-- The latest Monmouth University Poll shows how fluid the race in the Hawkeye State remains: Biden, Buttigieg, Sanders and Warren are all grouped near the top of the leaderboard. Most significant, though, is that 4 in 10 voters likely caucus-goers said there's at least a "moderate" chance that they will support a different candidate on caucus night. That's good news for Amy Klobuchar.

-- What's top of mind for voters in Iowa? From the Register:

“Caucusgoers in the first-in-the-nation presidential voting state have been thinking about candidates' stances on three key issues: health care, climate change and education, according to extensive Des Moines Register reporting and data from Iowa Polls of likely Democratic caucusgoers. ... Still, other news may dominate Tuesday's debate stage conversation. Although Iowans generally haven't been asking about the nuances of foreign policy at campaign events, the killing of Maj. Gen. Qasem Soleimani is expected to be a major topic of conversation, with candidates touting their foreign policy credentials. ... The issue of impeachment is also expected to loom large.” The latest episode in the Register’s podcast series, “Three Tickets,” touches on what it’s like to live in the state during a caucus year: “It’s a strange and wonderful kind of chaos.” (Listen here.)

-- “It’s make-or-break time for anyone not named ‘Biden’ or ‘Sanders,’” columnist E.J. Dionne Jr. writes in his curtain-raiser on the debate.

-- The Post has asked all the remaining Democratic candidates where they stand on more than 85 policy questions. We've created a 20-question quiz that measures which of the candidates agrees with you the most on some of the biggest flashpoints of the cycle.

-- And if you think that's cool, The Post's Opinions team has also created a simulation that lets you design your own Iowa caucus.

Sen. Cory Booker announces end of 2020 presidential bid

-- Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) dropped out of the race after failing to qualify for the debate. Amy B Wang and David Weigel report: “Booker, who recently announced he had surpassed his fourth-quarter fundraising goal, said his operation would not have the money ‘to scale up and continue building a campaign that can win,’ particularly with a Senate impeachment trial looming and because he would be absent from Tuesday’s debate. ... Booker plans to run for reelection to the Senate, his campaign said. ... Booker is the latest candidate of color to leave a Democratic field that had started out as historically diverse, exiting about two weeks after former HUD secretary and San Antonio mayor Julián Castro said he was suspending his campaign.”

- Karen Tumulty: “Booker was a candidate of grace in an ugly political climate. On the campaign trail, voters were skeptical that leading with love is the answer in 2020.”

- Eugene Scott: “There was never much ‘love’ for Cory Booker’s campaign.”

-- Booker gave an exit interview last night to Rachel Maddow on MSNBC. Asked if he’ll endorse, the senator replied: “I don’t know. I’m taking a break for a little bit.”

-- If winning the White House doesn’t work out, Mike Bloomberg says he has a fallback plan: helping defeat Trump and remaking the Democratic Party. Michael Scherer reports: “Bloomberg is running aggressively to win the Democratic nomination, but he is simultaneously building out a general election machine to defeat [Trump], with a new structure — data, field organizing, advertising and policy — that aims to elect Democrats up and down the ballot even if the party’s voters reject the former New York mayor this spring. ... The president has been monitoring Bloomberg’s campaign, impressed by his extraordinary spending and fearful of his potential rise, according to Trump confidants with whom the president has discussed Bloomberg. ... Bloomberg’s aides, in turn, have delighted in trying to find ways to get Trump’s attention and increase his anxiety.”

-- Updates from the 2020 battle for control of the House:

- Prosecutors recommend that former congressman Chris Collins (R-N.Y.), one of the first lawmakers to endorse Trump in 2016, receive nearly five years in prison for his insider trading conviction. He is scheduled to be sentenced on Friday. (Renae Merle)

- The Democratic operative who was set to manage the reelection campaign of Rep. Jeff Van Drew in New Jersey until he switched parties will now run the campaign of his Democratic challenger Amy Kennedy. (NJ.com)
- Former Trump State Department official Matt Mowers announced that he'll challenge freshman Rep. Chris Pappas (D) in New Hampshire. (WMUR)
- The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee filed an ethics complaint against its GOP counterpart for using “trackers” in House office buildings. (Felicia Sonmez)

What to know about the anger in Iran over the downing of a Ukrainian passenger jet

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- France, Britain and Germany launched a process to hold Iran accountable for violating the nuclear deal. Loveday Morris reports:

“Iran said it would not comply with any restrictions on enriching uranium after Washington’s targeted killing of [Soleimani] ... It had gradually reduced its commitments under the deal since the United States withdrew from the deal and reimposed sanctions in 2018. In a joint statement Tuesday, Britain, France and Germany ... said that they had ‘sought to persuade Iran to change course’ and ‘worked hard’ to address its concerns. However, the European countries said they now have ‘been left with no choice, given Iran’s actions, but to register today our concerns that Iran is not meeting its commitments.’ ”

The three countries said in their statement they still want to preserve the deal and are not immediately joining the Trump administration’s “maximum pressure” campaign.

-- Iran announced today that an unspecified number of arrests have been made in the Ukrainian passenger plane crash that Tehran admits was mistakenly shot down, and President Hassan Rouhani called for a special court to investigate the crash.

Kareem Fahim reports: “The world is going to watch this trial,” Rouhani said, in comments carried by the state news agency. “We should assure people it will not happen again.”

-- The announcement followed a third day of significant street protests against the regime. Erin Cunningham, Kareem Fahim and Adam Taylor report: “Videos posted on social media showed hundreds of students gathered Monday in a courtyard at Sharif University of Technology in Tehran, a wellspring of anger at the cleric-led government. The university said 13 of its students and alumni were killed when the plane was shot down. ... There were signs that the government, forced onto the defensive, was pursuing a harsher crackdown on the demonstrations. Videos from Sunday night showed demonstrators fleeing from tear gas and in one case a woman bleeding from her leg — a wound that protesters said was caused by live ammunition. In other videos posted on social media that could not immediately be verified, sounds of gunfire could be heard at protests in Azadi Square in the capital, as well as in the city of Shiraz. ... Tehran's police chief denied that police shot at protesters, saying they are under orders to show restraint.”

-- And while Trump remains muted on Hong Kong's pro-democracy demonstrations, he's showering support on the Iranian protesters. David Nakamura compares the reactions: “Trump issued a series of tweets aimed at pressuring Tehran, demanding that human rights groups be allowed in to ‘monitor and report’ on the unrest. ... Several hours later in Hong Kong, Kenneth Roth, the executive director of U.S.-based Human Rights Watch, was denied entry after landing at the airport. A Chinese government spokesman in Beijing said the ban was the nation’s ‘sovereign right’ given such groups’ support of mass pro-democracy protests since last summer. Trump was silent on Roth’s plight.”

-- U.S. commanders at the Iraqi military base targeted by Iranian missiles say they believe the attack was intended to kill American personnel. Louisa Loveluck reports: “The missile barrage last week against the sprawling Ain al-Asad air base in western Iraq left deep craters and the crumpled wreckage of living quarters and a helicopter launch site. At least two soldiers were thrown through the window of a meters-high tower, and several dozen U.S. troops were later treated for concussion as a result of the missile strikes, military officials on the base said."

The Trump administration's shifting lines on Qasem Soleimani's 'imminent threat'

-- Trump's claim that Tehran was plotting to bomb four U.S. embassies is at best an unfounded theory and at worse a falsehood. Philip Rucker, John Hudson, Shane Harris and Josh Dawsey report: "At each turn in the commander in chief's rapidly evolving narrative of why he authorized the Jan. 3 drone strike that killed [Qasem Soleimani], the machinery of government scrambled to adapt and respond. The result is a credibility crisis ... Inside the Pentagon and elsewhere in the government, there was skepticism about the president's claim, as well as about Secretary of State Mike Pompeo's statement that the threat from Soleimani was 'imminent' and that hundreds of American lives were at risk. One senior administration official said the remarks from both men were unnecessary distractions from what many officials believed was a defensible policy decision. ..."

“Despite Trump’s claim that the U.S. Embassy in Baghdad was one of four facilities under threat of attack, some embassy officials there said they did not receive an alert commensurate to the threat Trump described ... Pompeo pushed back Monday against the charge that a notification was not sent, but he did not specify when or how it was transmitted. ... But there is no indication that embassy employees were warned of a credible threat, and the State Department did not respond to questions about whether the embassy in Baghdad took other measures that are typical when a specific threat is uncovered. With the question of imminence dogging the administration’s public defense of the Soleimani strike, other senior administration officials have shifted to vouching for the quality of the intelligence, rather than what it said about timing or particular targets. None of them has backed up Trump’s claim that four embassies were being targeted. Even if evidence of Trump’s claim exists, there was no interagency process or decision made to release such information or for the president to say what he said, according to a senior administration official.”

-- In a tweet, Trump claimed it “doesn’t really matter” after all whether Soleimani posed an imminent threat because of his “horrible past.” Karen DeYoung reports: “In a separate tweet, Trump emphasized Soleimani’s past actions rather than the threat of future attacks. ‘The Democrats and Fake News are trying to make terrorist Soleimani into a wonderful guy, only because I did what should have been done for 20 years,’ he wrote.”

-- Trump also retweeted a volley of incendiary tweets about Pelosi, falsely accusing the House speaker of downplaying

protests in Iran and supporting the regime. Brittany Shammas reports: “One of them, a fake photo of Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) wearing photoshopped Islamic head coverings and standing in front of the Iranian flag, drew swift condemnation. ‘DEMOCRATS 2020’ read the text below the image, which was originally tweeted by an anonymous user with the caption, ‘The corrupted Dems trying their best to come to the Ayatollah’s rescue.’ ... Schumer soon weighed in. ‘President Trump: How low can you go?’ he tweeted. ... Asked about the criticism during a Fox News appearance, White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham backed Trump’s decision to amplify the tweet. She said he did so to make a point.”

-- Pompeo has refused an invitation to discuss the Iran situation with the House Foreign Affairs Committee. “Rep. Eliot L. Engel (D-N.Y.) said that ‘each passing day raises new questions’ about the Jan. 3 drone strike,” John Wagner reports.

-- Now that Pompeo announced his decision not to run for Senate, Democrats see an opportunity to capture Kansas’s open seat. Annie Gowen reports: “Since Pompeo bowed out of the race, the leading Democratic contender, state Sen. Barbara Bollier, has announced that she raised more than $1 million in her first quarter in the contest, unprecedented for a Democratic Senate hopeful in Kansas. ... Pompeo [was courted by \[McConnell\]](#) for months and would have entered the race as a hands-down favorite for the seat. Now Republicans face a bruising primary battle between Kris Kobach, a former secretary of state and ally of [Trump] who lost the governor’s race a year ago, and a host of ho-hum

establishment candidates who have not inspired confidence in the Republican leadership.”

Attorney General William Barr speaks to reporters to announce results of an investigation of the shootings at Naval Air Station Pensacola in Florida. (J. Scott Applewhite/AP)

-- Attorney General Bill Barr declared that the December shooting that killed three U.S. sailors on a Florida naval base was an act of terrorism, and he publicly called on Apple to help unlock phones for the government. Devlin Barrett and Matt Zapotosky report: “Barr said investigators had found evidence that Ahmed Mohammed al-Shamrani, a Royal Saudi Air Force member training at the base, was motivated by ‘jihadist ideology’ and had posted anti-American messages on social media about two hours before his attack. FBI Deputy Director David Bowdich said that during the attack, Shamrani fired shots at pictures of [Trump] and a past U.S. president, and witnesses at the scene said he made statements critical of American military actions overseas. Bowdich said that while Shamrani did not seem to be inspired by one specific terrorist group, he harbored anti-American and anti-Israeli views and felt ‘violence was necessary.’ Bowdich said the gunman’s social media comments echoed those of Anwar al-Awlaki, a radical Yemeni American cleric tied to the terrorist group al-Qaeda who was killed in a drone strike in 2011. ...

“Investigators have been stymied in trying to access two key pieces of evidence — the gunman’s iPhones. Standing before giant photographs of two severely damaged devices, the attorney general publicly urged Apple to act. ‘So far, Apple has not given us any substantive assistance,’ Barr said, though aides later clarified that Apple had, in fact, given investigators access to cloud data linked to the gunman. ... Barr did not say whether the Justice Department would seek a court order to force Apple’s compliance. The department filed legal papers on a similar case in 2016, but the issue was never resolved by a higher court. ... In a lengthy statement, Apple disputed the attorney general’s description of its role, saying the company began responding within hours of the first FBI request on Dec. 6, and has turned over ‘many gigabytes’ of data in the case. ... Even without the phone data, investigators were able to review Shamrani’s social media postings, which were critical to the officials’ determination. ... Justice Department officials ... said that while officials were confident Shamrani had no U.S.-based co-conspirator, they were still interested in potential interactions he might have had with those in Saudi Arabia. Barr said investigators had found evidence that 17 Saudis had through social media shared jihadist or anti-American material and 15 — including some of those who had shared anti-American material — were found to have had contact with or possessed child pornography.”

-- George Nader, a key witness in special counsel Bob Mueller’s probe of Russian interference in the 2016 election, admitted to bringing a 14-year-old boy to the United States for sex and to possessing child pornography. Rachel Weiner reports: “A wealthy Lebanese American businessman with long-standing political influence in Washington and the Middle East, Nader faces at least a decade in federal prison after his guilty plea in federal court in Alexandria, Va. While the charges carry a maximum penalty of 30 years, prosecutors in the Eastern District of Virginia agreed to recommend the mandatory minimum of 10 years. ... He already has a conviction in the same court for transporting child pornography in 1991, for which he served six months in prison. ...

“Nader still faces charges in Washington federal court of conspiring to funnel illegal campaign contributions to both Democrats and Republicans. As an adviser to the leadership of the United Arab Emirates, Nader met several times with officials and associates of [Trump] during the early days of the administration. He helped set up a January 2017 meeting between Trump associate Erik Prince and a Russian official close to Russian President Vladimir Putin that was closely scrutinized” by Mueller.

-- France’s Emmanuel Macron will deploy more soldiers to West Africa, where terrorist groups are growing. Danielle Paquette reports: “The leaders of Mali, Niger, Chad, Burkina Faso and Mauritania met their French counterpart in southwestern France,

where they agreed to build a shared command structure with the European power that once colonized much of West Africa. ... France, which has roughly 4,500 troops in the region — the most of any outside nation by far — plans to deploy another 220 soldiers, Macron said alongside the West African presidents. In a joint statement, the leaders said they would keep working together to protect civilians and ‘prevent an extension of the terrorist threat.’”

-- A U.S. citizen died in an Egyptian jail after a lengthy hunger strike. Carol Morello and Kareem Fahim report: “Mustafa Kassem, who was 54, died of heart failure following his hunger strike, according to Pretrial Rights International, a nonprofit organization that represented Kassem. David Schenker, the assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern Affairs, confirmed Kassem’s death and expressed the U.S. belief that the terrorism charges against him were meritless. Schenker told reporters he was saddened at Kassem’s death in custody, calling it ‘needless, tragic and avoidable.’ He vowed to continue raising U.S. concerns about human rights abuses in Egypt and Americans detained in the country.”

-- The Syrian army is urging civilians to leave the last rebel enclave while the Russian Defense Ministry is offering them three ways out. Sarah Dadouch reports: “The warning was issued on the day that a cease-fire brokered by Turkey and Russia took effect, as Russia and its allies promised to halt airstrikes. Russia has been Syrian President Bashar al-Assad’s main ally, alongside Iran, during the war, which started in 2011 as a revolt against the government. ... The cease-fire follows a series of broken truces, and few expect the respite to last. Artillery fire continued Monday, the head of the Idlib branch of Syrian Civil Defense — a volunteer organization more commonly known as the White Helmets — told The Washington Post.”

-- The Treasury Department dropped China’s designation as a “currency manipulator,” greasing the wheels for the scheduled signing of a U.S.-China trade deal tomorrow. David J. Lynch

reports: “In a semiannual report, department officials said no countries met the standards set by Congress for the ‘manipulator’ label. But the political context for the decision was hard to miss. ... The move reversed the department’s decision in August to add China to the list.”

-- Talks are underway for Trump to visit India as early as next month, possibly during the impeachment trial. Joanna Slater

reports: “If finalized, the visit would be Trump’s first to India as president. The United States has sought to cultivate India as a partner and potential counterweight to China, and Trump has spoken of his ‘great admiration’ for Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi. ... The ‘two sides are in touch’ and ‘trying to work out a mutually convenient date,’ said one Indian official. Another said the visit could take place in February or March.”

-- Queen Elizabeth II agreed to a “period of transition” in which Harry and Meghan get to spend time in Britain and Canada. Karla Adam and William Booth

report: “In a statement, the queen wrote: ‘Although we would have preferred them to remain full-time working Members of the Royal Family, we respect and understand their wish to live a more independent life as a family while remaining a valued part of my family.’ The queen acknowledged that Harry and Meghan — she omitted their royal titles — ‘made clear that they do not want to be reliant on public funds in their new lives,' but she did not describe their new duties or ventures.”

-- Oceans are warming at the same rate as if five Hiroshima-sized atomic bombs were dropped in every second, a new study shows. From CNN: “An international team of 14 scientists examined data going back to the 1950s, looking at temperatures from the ocean surface to 2,000 meters deep. The study, which was published in the journal Advances in Atmospheric Sciences, also showed that the oceans are warming at an increasing speed. While the past decade has been the warmest on record for global ocean temperatures, the hottest five years ever recorded all came in the last five. ... The study shows that while the oceans warmed steadily between 1955 and 1986, warming has accelerated rapidly in the last few decades. Between 1987-2019, ocean warming was 450% greater than during the earlier time period.”

-- Australia is seeing sci-fi weather. Andrew Freedman and Sarah Kaplan report: “Climate change has pushed natural phenomena, such as wildfires, to mutate into more disastrous and deadly versions of themselves. Temperatures are soaring to heights scientists did not expect to see for decades. Landscapes that are usually resistant to fire — including rainforests home to rare, vulnerable species — are going up in flames. The blazes are so big they generate their own hellish weather. Fire tornadoes, formed when spinning winds generate a massive rotating column of fire, ash, vapor and debris, are impossible to control. A volunteer firefighter in New South Wales was killed on Dec. 30 when one of these twisters overturned his truck.”

-- Microscopic grains of dead stars are the oldest known material on the planet – older than the moon, Earth and the solar system itself. Ben Guarino reports: “By examining chemical clues in a meteorite’s mineral dust, researchers have determined the most ancient grains are 7 billion years old — about half as old as the universe. Rocks don’t get much more classic than this.”

Government contractors erect a section of Pentagon-funded border wall along the Colorado River in Yuma, Ariz., in September. (Matt York/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULD NOT BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- The Trump administration is planning on diverting an additional $7.2 billion in Pentagon funds for the border wall, five times what Congress authorized the president to spend on the project in the 2020 budget. Nick Miroff reports: “The Pentagon funds would be extracted, for the second year in a row, from military construction projects and counternarcotics funding. According to the plans, the funding would give the government enough money to complete about 885 miles of new fencing by spring 2022, far more than the 509 miles the administration has slated for the U.S. border with Mexico. ... The move would bring the total amount of federal funds allocated to border fencing to $18.4 billion under Trump ... The Trump administration has completed 101 miles of new barriers so far, according to the latest figures, far less than the 450 miles the president has promised to erect by the end of the year.”

-- The U.S. is putting asylum seekers on planes to Guatemala – often without telling them where they’re going. Kevin Sieff reports:

“When the migrants land in Guatemala City, they receive little information about what it means to apply for asylum in one of the hemisphere’s poorest countries. Those who don’t immediately apply are told to leave the country in 72 hours. The form is labeled ‘Voluntary Return.’ ‘In the U.S., the agents told us our cases would be transferred, but they didn’t say where. Then they lined us up to get on the plane,’ said Marta, 43, from Honduras. She sat in a migrant shelter here with her 17-year-old son, who nursed a gunshot wound in his left cheek — the work, mother and son say, of a Honduran faction of the MS-13 gang. ‘When we looked out the window, we were here,’ she said. ‘We thought, ‘Where are we? What are we supposed to do now?’”

-- Texas became the first state to take up Trump’s offer to let governors close their borders to new refugees. Columnist Catherine Rampell shares the story of an Iraqi refugee who’s resettled in a state that now wants to shut out people like her: Marwa Sabah “is one of nearly 57,000 refugees who have resettled in Texas over the past decade, of whom about 12,000 are from Iraq. Like most refugees, she didn’t want to leave behind nearly everyone and everything she knew. But facing death threats, she and her husband had no choice. They requested refuge in the United States and specifically asked to be resettled in Fort Worth. ... [On Friday], Republican Gov. Greg Abbott declared that Texas was full. ... He suggested that Texas lacks the resources to absorb additional refugees, playing into stereotypes of refugees as dangerous, destitute and typically on the dole. Perhaps if he got to know refugees such as Sabah, he’d think differently.”

-- The Trump administration’s restrictions on fetal tissue research have unsettled scientists and disrupted key studies in ways that could undermine public health. Amy Goldstein reports: “The controversial federal funding rules, announced seven months ago, are reshaping scientists’ research paths and the grants they seek from the National Institutes of Health. Graduate students cannot get training grants if their research involves fetal tissue. Senior researchers are cautioning emerging scientists to avoid this type of research. And a university program that produces and sells mice containing human fetal tissue is forgoing the federal funding it has relied on for nearly three decades, imperiling the work of scores of biomedical researchers who depend on these lab animals. The disruption is occurring, in part, because the administration has imposed an extra requirement for NIH grant applications that is not yet possible to meet. Under the rewritten rules that took effect early in the fall, a new ethics advisory board must assess all grant requests involving fetal tissue — but the board has not yet been established, and it may not be convened for many months.”

-- Trump falsely claimed, nearly 70 times through Dec. 10, that he has sought to protect patients with preexisting conditions through his various efforts to eliminate the Affordable Care Act. Fact Checker Glenn Kessler says the president’s tweets about the subject on Monday were something more — “a virtual traffic jam of false claims.”

-- Product recalls under the Trump administration have fallen to their lowest level in 16 years, but there are signs that the new head of the Consumer Product Safety Commission plans a more aggressive approach to companies selling potentially unsafe products. Todd C. Frankel reports: “The 2019 total was down 7 percent from 2018, which itself was 8 percent lower than in 2017. That’s the year that Republican Ann Marie Buerkle took over as the commission’s acting chairwoman ... Now, with a new acting chairman running the CPSC, Democrat Robert Adler, the agency is trying a different tactic to force the hand of reluctant companies. The CPSC last Wednesday issued a rare product safety alert — and made it clear the agency wanted the product taken off the market. The warning said a four-drawer dresser made by Hodedah was a tip-over risk and that the CPSC ‘intends to continue pressing the case for a recall with Hodedah.’ The notice was unusual because it acknowledged that the agency and company disagreed about the need for a recall. Negotiations over recalls normally are not revealed to the public, giving companies considerable leverage.”

-- Four gun-control bills advanced in Virginia’s newly gun-free

Capitol. In a show of opposition to the bills, gun rights activists swarmed the Capitol, but the state Senate's Judiciary Committee advanced most of the gun legislation proposed by Democrats. (Laura Vozzella and Gregory S. Schneider)

-- Lawyers allege that the California scuba boat fire that killed 34 last year was a result of safety violations and a charging station that was not up to code. (Miranda Green)

-- St. Louis's first black chief prosecutor, claiming a racist conspiracy, is suing the city under a law created to fight the Ku Klux Klan. St. Louis Circuit Attorney Kim Garden alleges that her agenda to "redress the scourge of historical inequality and rebuild trust in the criminal justice system among communities of color" has been thwarted by a campaign of "collusive conduct" aimed at removing her from office. (Antonia Noori Farzan)

-- The Supreme Court will not review the conviction of Michelle Carter, the woman who went to jail for encouraging her boyfriend to kill himself. (Ann E. Marimow)

-- An off-duty Secret Service agent shot and killed a dog on a leash in Brooklyn. The female Belgian shepherd was being walked by her owners when she startled the agent, officials said. (New York Daily News)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) weighed in on behalf of Sanders over Warren:

Mandy Moore, a star in NBC's "This is Us," showed up in Iowa last night to support Pete Buttigieg:

Mandy Moore ✓
@TheMandyMoore

About to go onstage with this guy! @PeteButtigieg

♡ 9,379 12:57 AM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 813 people are talking about this

Cory Booker joked about a headline on his departure from the presidential race:

The president's claims about Saudi Arabia on Fox News are specious:

This is how the White House press secretary defended Trump retweeting a doctored image of Democratic leaders in Islamic garb:

Aaron Rugar ✓
@atrupar

Stephanie Grisham on Trump retweeting an image mocking how Muslims dress: "I think the president is making clear that Democrats are parroting Iranian talking points and almost taking the side of terrorists and those who were out to kill Americans." 🤔

♥ 2,192 6:19 PM - Jan 13, 2020

💬 1,661 people are talking about this

Views of the Confederate flag vary widely across the South:

Catherine Rampell ✓

@crampell

Survey of people in the former Confederate states, on whether the Confederate flag stands for "heritage" or "racism" today.yougov.com/topics/politic...

Former Confederate states on whether the Confederate flag most represents heritage or racism

♡ 127 2:15 AM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 98 people are talking about this

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "Right now we are entering a historic time," said Sen. Richard Blumenthal (D-Conn). "We have to put country above party, put aside partisanship."

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

A man whose remote cabin burned down was rescued by Alaska State Troopers after surviving subzero temperatures for 23 days:

Watch: Man stranded in Alaskan wilderness for 23 days rescued after writing 'SOS' in snow

Stephen Colbert took a look at the different explanations members of the Trump administration have given for Soleimani's killing:

Trump's team appears to be borrowing directly from George W. Bush's playbook, argued Seth Meyers:

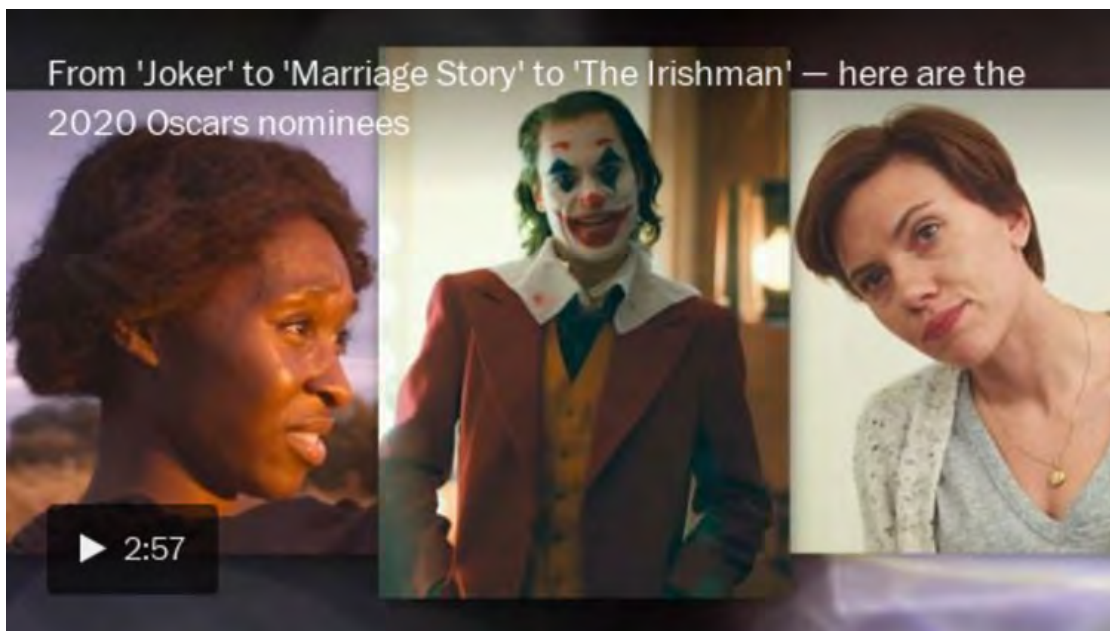

Trevor Noah did an explainer on the scandal unraveling in England:

And Jimmy Kimmel pointed out that there are more minorities in Trump's Cabinet than among the Oscar nominees:

In case you missed it, here's a complete list of the Oscar nominees:

From 'Joker' to 'Marriage Story' to 'The Irishman' — here are the 2020 Oscars nominees

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Democratic debate pits Bidenism vs. Bernieism – with the others staking out spaces in between
Date: Wednesday, January 15, 2020 9:14:08 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Democratic debate pits Bidenism vs. Bernieism – with the others staking out spaces in between

Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders exchange words as Tom Steyer looks on after the debate. (Scott Olson/Getty Images)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: What people will remember from the final debate before the Iowa caucuses is Elizabeth Warren declining to shake Bernie Sanders's outstretched hand after their brief onstage clash over whether he really told her during a one-on-one dinner more than a year ago that a woman cannot get elected president. While that made for compelling television, it also distracted from a starker ideological choice that looms for Democratic voters in the weeks ahead.

The more substantive portions of the two-hour debate at Drake University in Des Moines put in stark relief the chasm between the approaches of Sanders and Joe Biden – the two leaders in Iowa and national polling – on the biggest issues that face a president, including foreign policy, health care and trade.

It also highlighted continuing tensions between the two men over experience vs. judgment, incrementalism vs. radicalism and whether Democrats are more likely to win in November by igniting the base or appealing to disenchanted moderates who defected to Donald Trump in 2016.

Whomever is coronated at the convention in Milwaukee six months from now will chart the future of the party as its standard-bearer. In Sanders's case, he has spent decades proudly resisting pressure to register as a Democrat. He remains an independent who caucuses with the Democrats in the Senate.

Iowa looks like a jump ball, with the latest polls showing no overwhelming favorite and many voters either undecided or willing to change their minds. The next three weeks would be an unpredictable free-for-all in the Hawkeye State anyway. But the impeachment trial threatens to strand a handful of senators in Washington for days at a time with only Sundays away from the chamber.

Joe Biden cracks a smile as Bernie Sanders attacks him during the Democratic debate at Drake University in Des Moines on Tuesday night. (Scott Olson/Getty Images)

-- It is conceivable that neither Biden nor Sanders ultimately wins the Feb. 3 caucuses. Nevertheless, the two septuagenarians represent the ideological goalposts and the outer bounds – Sanders on the left and the Biden on the right (which, to be clear, is still left-of-center) – of what party regulars will abide.

“Joe and I have a fundamental disagreement here, in case you haven't noticed,” Sanders said last night during the round on trade, a salient issue in a farm state where children are taught in school that Iowa is a net exporter. The line, though, can be applied to most every other flashpoint in Democratic politics.

Just as he opposed the North American Free Trade Agreement, which Biden voted for, Sanders now opposes its replacement, the U.S.-Mexico-Canada trade deal. This iteration just passed the Democratic-controlled House and won the endorsement of the AFL-CIO. It's awaiting a vote in the Senate. "The answer is we could do much better than a Trump-led trade bill," Sanders said. "If this is passed, I think it will set us back a number of years."

Biden, who supports the new deal, accused Sanders of knee-jerk opposition to everything. "I don't know that there's any trade agreement that the senator would ever think made any sense, but the problem is that 95 percent of the customers are out there," Biden said, referring to the rest of the world. "So we better figure out how we begin to write the rules of the road, not China."

Sanders attacked Biden for voting to ratify multiple agreements over the years that he said have helped large multinational corporations at the expense of workers. Biden compared Sanders's approach to "poking our finger in the eye of all of our friends and allies" by not trying to negotiate trade agreements with the rest of the world, which he argued empowers China.

Candidates take on foreign policy, trade, electability at seventh Democratic debate

-- The trade clash was particularly interesting to watch because Sanders proudly stood alone onstage among the top-tier candidates in opposing the USMCA deal. Pete Buttigieg, Amy Klobuchar and even Warren endorsed it. Trying to show that she has a pragmatic streak, Warren called the deal imperfect but reasoned that “it will give some relief” to farmers and workers. “We get up the next day and fight for a better trade deal,” she said.

It was a reminder of the extent to which the other candidates have all sought to position themselves somewhere between the poles of Sanders and Biden, and this played out repeatedly. In theory, Biden and Sanders occupy separate “lanes,” to use the parlance of the operative class. But both men see the other as a direct threat. The Sanders team, in particular, has believed all election cycle that they’re competing for Biden voters just as much as Warren voters.

Warren also tried to distinguish herself at one point by noting that she was the only candidate onstage who has defeated a Republican incumbent in the last 30 years. She ousted Republican Scott Brown in 2012 to take back Ted Kennedy's Senate seat in Massachusetts. Sanders chimed in to say that he defeated a GOP incumbent in Vermont to win a House seat in 1990. An amused Warren, once a high school debate state champion in Oklahoma, noted that this was why she specified 30 years. Then Biden added that he won a major upset in 1972 – 48 years ago – over a Republican incumbent to win his Senate seat.

-- Biden often sounds like he's promising a return to the pre-Trump status quo, when he was vice president. "We can overcome four years of Donald Trump, but eight years of Donald Trump will be an absolute disaster and fundamentally change this nation," he said. "We have to restore America's soul, as I've said from the moment I announced."

Sanders counters that "this is the moment when we have got to think big, not small": "This is the moment when we have got to have the courage to take on the 1 percent, take on the greed and take on the corruption of the corporate elite," he said in his closing, "and create an economy and create a government that works for all of us, not just the 1 percent."

CNN's Abby Phillip also noted that Sanders identifies as a democratic socialist and pointed to a poll that showed about two-thirds of Americans don't like the idea of voting for a socialist. She wondered, "Doesn't that put your chances of beating Donald Trump at risk?" Sanders replied, "Nope, not at all." He pivoted to attack Trump, displaying the moral certitude that his supporters love but Democratic establishmentarians loathe.

Iran takes center stage at Democratic debate

-- The gulf between Sanders and Biden was apparent from the opening question of the debate. The crisis in Iran has prompted the leading candidates to re-litigate the 2002 debate over whether to go to war with Iraq. “Joe and I listened to what Dick Cheney and George Bush and [Donald] Rumsfeld had to say,” Sanders said. “I thought they were lying. I didn’t believe them for a moment. I took to the floor. I did everything I could to prevent that war. Joe saw it differently.”

Biden emphasized his work bringing troops home from Iraq as Barack Obama’s vice president. “It was a mistake to trust that they weren’t going to go to war,” he said, referring to the Bush administration. “They said they were not going to go to war. ... It was a mistake, and I acknowledge that.”

-- The well-trod debate over health care was similar, as Biden and Sanders went at it again over the price tag for Medicare-for-all and the other candidates staked out ground in between them. Phillip, one of three moderators, asked Sanders about a study that said his policy proposals would double federal spending as a share of GDP to a level not seen since World War II. “No, my plan would not bankrupt the country,” he answered. “I think you should show how you’re going to pay for things, Bernie,” replied Klobuchar.

Warren sponsored Sanders’s Medicare-for-all bill, but she moved away from it in the face of questions about how she’d implement it without raising taxes on the middle class or kicking people off their private insurance. Warren ultimately proposed a three-year transition period to Medicare-for-all, but this only led to attacks from her left and right. Last night, Warren and Buttigieg bickered about who would get covered and how much it would cost.

Fact-Checking the January Democratic debate

-- Our Fact Checker team calls out Biden and Sanders, more than the other candidates, for making multiple misleading or false statements. For example, Biden did not provide an accurate description of what Bush said before the 2002 vote that allowed for war. Biden also boasted about getting troops out of Iraq under Obama without noting that this allowed for the emergence of the Islamic State, which required the Obama-Biden administration to send combat troops back into the country. The Fact Checker team faults Sanders for claiming that Medicare-for-all will cost less than the status quo, for significantly exaggerating the number of people who go bankrupt because of medical bills and for incorrectly claiming that the United States spends twice as much per person on health care as “any other country.” It’s only true compared to the developed world.

-- Warren, Buttigieg and Klobuchar are trying to varying degrees to position themselves as unity candidates between Sanders and Biden who can win support from both sides and therefore beat Trump.

“It is easy to draw lines in the sand and sketch out grand ideological

visions that will never see the light of day,” said Klobuchar. “What is hard is bringing people together and finding common ground instead of scorched earth. ... If you are tired of the extremes in our politics and the noise and the nonsense, you have a home with me.”

“We cannot take the risk with so much on the line of trying to confront this president with the same Washington mindset and political warfare that led us to this point,” said Buttigieg. “If you are watching this at home and you are exhausted by the spectacle of division and dysfunction, I’m asking you to join me to help turn the page on our politics.”

Sanders denies he told Warren a woman couldn't win the presidency

-- Here's what you need to know about the Warren vs. Sanders kerfuffle: Sanders's campaign manager Faiz Shakir told The Post that Warren "came to raise a concern" with him after the debate. "And he said let's talk about that later," Shakir said, declining to provide further details about the conversation captured in a viral video.

“Warren said Sanders disagreed with her view that a woman could win the presidential election. Sanders contends that he merely outlined what he said would be Trump's efforts to defeat another female candidate, and in the debate, he said, ‘Of course a woman can win,’” Annie Linskey and Sean Sullivan report. “The video ... shows Sanders extending his hand as Warren approaches him onstage. Rather than shaking it, Warren clasps her hands together and speaks to Sanders. He responds, as Tom Steyer walks toward them. ... Warren and Sanders then separate. Steyer and Sanders shake hands on one side of the stage. Nearby, Warren shakes hands with [Buttigieg]. ... Representatives for the Warren campaign declined to comment. After the debate, Steyer told MSNBC’s Chris Matthews that he did not know what Warren and Sanders said to each other.”

-- Dan Balz notes that the Warren-Sanders clash was inevitable, and they remain on a collision course after last night: “For the past few months, Warren found herself looking at Buttigieg as a more immediate threat in Iowa. She took a lead in a September Iowa poll by the Des Moines Register and CNN, only to see Buttigieg overtake her in the November poll. She and the mayor seemed to be competing in Iowa for the support of more-affluent voters with college degrees. Sanders’s campaign saw that as an opening and seized it.”

New Hampshire could be even more consequential because Warren and Sanders both come from neighboring states and have invested heavily. “That gives both of them a potential edge, and whoever finishes behind the other will have suffered a significant setback,” Dan notes.

-- Warren spoke the most during the debate:

(Dan Keating and Kevin Schaul)

-- The Post's opinion columnists largely focused on Warren vs. Sanders. "Can a woman be elected president? Let's put that silly question behind us," wrote Karen Tumulty. "Sanders vs. Warren shows the difference between identifying sexism and giving in to it," declared Ruth Marcus. "There's a reason Bernie Sanders said Elizabeth Warren is lying," noted David Von Drehle. "Democratic officials have reason to hope for a happy ending," said Eugene Robinson. "The debate shows why."

-- Pundits are all over the place in their lists of winners and losers, suggesting that the muddled debate will do little to alter the trajectory of the race. The Fix's Aaron Blake considered Warren's sly attack on Sanders and Sanders's response winning moves. He said Buttigieg lost and Biden was "in the middle." CNN's Chris Cillizza thought Buttigieg, Warren and Klobuchar won, but

Biden, Sanders and Steyer lost. But Politico's campaign reporters agreed with one another that Biden had the best night. Fox News's Bret Baier said Biden's performance was lackluster and Klobuchar "actually had a really good night" while Sanders "took a lot of incoming." Vox put Sanders and Buttigieg on its winners list and named Steyer as the losing candidate. Biden was on neither. Jennifer Rubin said Klobuchar and Biden shined. "The rest, not so much," she wrote.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Pelosi announces impeachment managers

THE LATEST ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Speaker Nancy Pelosi named the seven House Democrats who will serve as impeachment managers during the Senate trial:

Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff (Calif.), Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler (N.Y.), Hakeem Jeffries (N.Y.), Sylvia Garcia (Tex.), Val Demings (Fla.), Zoe Lofgren (Calif.) and Jason Crow (Colo.). Trump's defense team is expected to be led by White House counsel Pat Cipollone. Notably, Rep. Justin Amash, the Republican-turned-independent who voted for impeachment, is not one of the managers. Lofgren worked on Richard Nixon's impeachment as a House staffer and was on the House Judiciary Committee during Bill Clinton's impeachment. (We'll update our liveblog with more news all day.)

Rudy Giuliani, the president's personal lawyer, brought Lev Parnas, left, as his guest to the state funeral service for former president George H.W. Bush at the Washington National Cathedral in December 2018. (Al Drago/Bloomberg News)

-- New materials released last night by House Democrats appear to show Ukraine's top prosecutor offering one of Rudy Giuliani's associates damaging information related to Joe Biden if the Trump administration recalled the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine. Paul Sonne, Rosalind S. Helderman and Tom Hamburger report: "The text messages and documents provided to Congress by former Giuliani associate Lev Parnas also show that before the ambassador, Marie Yovanovitch, was removed from her post, a Parnas associate now running for Congress sent menacing text messages suggesting that he had Yovanovitch under surveillance in Ukraine. A lawyer for Yovanovitch said Tuesday that the episode should be investigated. ..."

"Among the revelations in the documents released Tuesday: a message from Giuliani to Parnas saying he had involved a person he called "no 1" — possibly Trump himself — in an effort to lift a U.S. visa ban on a former Ukrainian prosecutor who was planning to come to the United States to make claims about Biden. The materials also include a letter Giuliani wrote to Ukraine's then-president-elect, Volodymyr Zelensky, requesting a May 14 meeting with the new leader in Giuliani's "capacity as personal counsel to President Trump and with his knowledge and consent." Giuliani scrapped his planned trip, and the meeting never took place. Another document released by the House investigators appears to show Parnas directly involved with efforts to get Zelensky to announce investigations related to Biden. In handwritten notes on a piece of stationery from the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Vienna, Parnas wrote, 'get Zalenksy [sic] to Annouce [sic] that the Biden case will be Investigated.' ...

"The materials show that Parnas, a Russian-speaker who helped coordinate Giuliani's outreach to Ukrainian sources, was directly communicating with an array of top Ukrainian officials. Among them was Yuri Lutsenko, at the time Ukraine's top prosecutor and a close political ally of then-Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko, who was running for reelection. Lutsenko wanted to get rid of Yovanovitch, the U.S. ambassador, in part because she had been critical of his office and supported a quasi-independent anti-corruption bureau he despised. The messages, written in Russian, show Lutsenko urging Parnas to force out Yovanovitch in exchange for cooperation regarding Biden. At one point, Lutsenko suggests he won't make any helpful public statements unless 'madam' is removed.

“The new documents also introduced a new character in the drama over the ambassador’s ouster: a Republican congressional candidate from Connecticut who asserted to Parnas in messages that he had Yovanovitch under physical and electronic surveillance. ‘Wow. Can’t believe Trumo [sic] hasn’t fired this b----,’ Robert F. Hyde wrote in an encrypted message to Parnas on March 23. ‘I’ll get right [on] that.’ Hyde described having contact with a ‘private security’ team located near the embassy that was apparently monitoring the ambassador’s movements. ‘She’s talked to three people. Her phone is off. Computer is off,’ he wrote in one message. ‘They will let me know when she’s on the move,’ he said in another. Later, he alerted Parnas that he had been told Yovanovitch would not be moved to a ‘special security unit.’ ‘They are willing to help if we/you would like a price,’ he said in one note. ‘Guess you can do anything in the Ukraine with money . . . what I was told.’ Hyde did not explain how his team might ‘help’ Parnas, who responded only with ‘lol.’ When asked for comment by The Washington Post in a text message, Hyde replied: ‘Sorry I can’t talk right now.’ Hyde is one of three Republicans running to unseat an incumbent Democrat in the 5th Congressional District in Connecticut. He frequently tweets about his support for Trump and posted photos of himself with the president.” (Review the full cache of material for yourself here.)

-- All the president's men, cont.: Former Trump national security adviser Michael Flynn asked a federal judge for permission to withdraw his guilty plea of lying to the FBI about this Russian contacts during special counsel Bob Mueller’s probe. Spencer S. Hsu reports: “The stunning reversal — more than two years after

Flynn pleaded guilty Dec. 1, 2017, and two weeks before he faces sentencing — threatens to sidetrack, if not derail, the prosecution of the highest-ranking Trump official charged and one of the first to cooperate with Mueller’s office.”

Russian Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev holds a Russian-made weapon during a visit to the Promtehnologiya firearms company in Moscow in 2013. Medvedev resigned today as part of a shake-up orchestrated by Vladimir Putin. (Dmitry Astakhov/Sputnik/AFP via Getty Images)

-- Russia’s prime minister submitted his resignation today as part of a surprise government shake-up directed by President Vladimir Putin. Isabelle Khurshudyan reports from Moscow: “Putin accepted the resignation of the prime minister, Dmitry Medvedev, and asked the members of Medvedev’s Cabinet to remain in place until a new government is formed ... The sweeping moves came shortly after Putin gave his annual address to Russia's lower house of parliament and proposed constitutional changes to boost the powers of prime ministers and Cabinet members. ... Earlier, Putin proposed sweeping changes to the constitution Wednesday, including strengthening parliament and revamping the country's state council, possibly hinting at his plans for after he leaves power in 2024. In his annual address to lawmakers, Putin again suggested limiting presidential term limits to two, indicating that 20 years after he first became president, he won't attempt to seek a third consecutive term. But Putin's plan to give constitutional status to the state council, a top advisory body to the president he created in 2000, and transfer more power to parliament, including naming the country's prime minister, could be a path for him to maintain significant influence in a different capacity once this presidential term is finished. As the Russian constitution stands now, the president has the sole power to appoint the prime minister."

'There is little or no sentiment' among GOP for dismissing Senate trial, McConnell says

-- Mitch McConnell is trying to balance the feuding factions within the Senate Republican Conference over whether to vote on calling witnesses. Seung Min Kim, Elise Viebeck and Robert Costa report: “On one end, a group of influential swing GOP senators — Sens. Susan Collins of Maine, Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, Mitt Romney of Utah and Lamar Alexander of Tennessee — are pushing to hold a vote on whether to call witnesses later in the proceedings. Democrats have vowed to exert pressure on the group to break with their party on witnesses and other issues, such as obtaining documents. At the same time, the Senate’s right flank is increasingly making the case to [McConnell] and other GOP leaders for a more aggressive posture in defense of Trump. In a private meeting with McConnell on Tuesday, Sen. Ted Cruz (Tex.) argued that if Democrats press the case for potentially damaging witnesses — such as former national security adviser John Bolton — the GOP should insist on incendiary witnesses of their own, such as Hunter Biden ... McConnell appeared receptive to Cruz’s pitch ...

“Despite their role as potential swing GOP votes in a narrowly divided Senate, the group of moderates has yet to defect in any significant fashion from party leaders ... In a nod to the moderates, there is expected to be a provision guaranteeing a vote on whether the Senate could consider subpoenaing witnesses, according to two GOP officials familiar with the matter ... GOP leaders are confident that once voting begins to set the scope of the trial — called an organizing resolution — that no Republicans will defect, with the moderates placated by a guaranteed decision on witnesses later. That calculus could change once the Senate goes through the grind of opening arguments and a litany of questions, and if key GOP senators become dissatisfied that they hadn't gotten enough information from the trial proceedings."

-- Capitol Hill reporters are protesting unexpected restrictions on their access to the Senate during the impeachment trial. Derek Hawkins, Felicia Sonmez and Fred Barbash report:

"The organization representing daily reporters on Capitol Hill is protesting restrictions expected to be imposed on the news media during the Senate impeachment trial, saying the security crackdown will severely limit access to lawmakers and stifle coverage of the proceedings. ...

Capitol security officials are [reportedly] considering measures that are all but certain to make it harder for journalists to report on the trial and question senators about their actions. A magnetometer in the Senate press gallery will require reporters to trickle into the chamber one at a time. Electronic devices will be banned, leaving reporters to scuttle in and out of the room to send tweets and emails. Reporters will be placed in pens, roping them off and restricting their ability to speak freely with senators as they enter and exit. ... Details about the nature and scope of the restrictions under consideration remained unclear, as neither the Senate sergeant at arms nor the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, which are responsible for them, has issued a formal document."

-- Trump's impeachment trial is a perilous duty for Chief Justice John Roberts because any signs of partisanship could further erode the Supreme Court's legitimacy. From the New York Times:

"The chief justice's responsibilities at the trial are fluid and ill-defined, and they will probably turn out to be largely ceremonial. ... The managers will march the articles over to the Senate chamber, touching off a series of steps that will initiate the trial. But before it can get underway Chief Justice Roberts will be sworn in as the presiding officer and, in his first official act, administer an oath to senators in which they swear to do ‘impartial justice’ in the trial, with the real work not expected to begin until Tuesday. ... Roberts has plenty on his plate already, much of it related to Mr. Trump. He is working on a Supreme Court docket crowded with divisive issues, including three cases on whether to allow release of Mr. Trump’s financial records and one on Mr. Trump’s efforts to withdraw protection from deportation for young immigrants. ... And Chief Justice Roberts has exchanged sharp remarks with Mr. Trump, laying bare a fundamental disagreement about the independence of federal judges.”

Democrats have enough Republican votes to pass war resolution, says Kaine

THE IRAN CRISIS:

-- The Senate is poised to pass a resolution limiting Trump's military authority on Iran, as four Republicans say they will vote with Democrats to assert Congress's war powers under the Constitution. Karoun Demirjian reports: "Congress cannot be sidelined on these important decisions," said [Collins] who on Tuesday declared her support for the measure. She joins Sens. Todd C. Young (R-Ind.), Mike Lee (R-Utah) and Rand Paul (R-Ky.) and all 47 Democrats. A vote could come as soon as next week. ... The resolution is 'privileged,' meaning Republicans opposed to the measure cannot block it from coming to a vote once it is 'ripe.' It also means that supporters must secure only a simple majority of the Senate, 51 votes, for it to pass. But it is almost certain that Trump will veto the measure and that Congress will not have the votes to override a veto. ... Trump's deputies and supporters said that such resolutions send a negative message to the troops and seemingly project support for the Iranian regime despite its sponsorship of terrorist activities that have led to the deaths of U.S. service members ... Supporters of the war powers measures have taken pains to say they believe [Iranian commander, Maj. Gen. Qasem] Soleimani was reprehensible as they argue that Trump cannot trample on Congress's right to declare war." (Kaine and Lee make the case for the resolution in an op-ed in today's newspaper.)

-- New video shows two Iranian missiles hit the downed Ukrainian plane last week. The Times reports: "The missiles were launched from an Iranian military site around eight miles from the plane. The new video fills a gap about why the plane's transponder stopped working, seconds before it was hit by a second missile. ... Neither strike downed the plane immediately. The new video shows the airliner on fire, circling back toward Tehran's international airport. Minutes later it exploded and crashed down, narrowly missing the village of Khalaj Abad ... The Times has confirmed that the new video was filmed by a camera on the roof of a building near the village of Bidkaneh, four miles from an Iranian military site. Amir Ali Hajizadeh, commander of the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps' airspace unit, said that missiles were launched from a base near there." (Watch the video here.)

-- The Iranian people, disturbed by the downing of the plane and the killing of Soleimani, have shown that it is possible to be angry at both their government and the United States at the same time. Erin Cunningham explains: "On Tuesday, student protesters at the University of Tehran chanted anti-government slogans as officials scrambled to find a way to quell the growing unrest. ... The efforts by senior officials to calm the public are in stark contrast to the defiant tones struck by Tehran amid an outpouring of grief this month for Soleimani at his funeral procession ... Iran is often presented 'as a monolith ... a country where all of its citizens move as one,' said Reza Akbari, a researcher of Iranian politics at the Institute for War and Peace Reporting in Washington. 'But Iranians are capable of condemning U.S. attacks against their sovereignty while protesting the gross negligence of their government,' he said. For many Iranians, Soleimani's killing in a U.S. drone strike in Baghdad was a national affront and came amid widespread resentment over harsh economic sanctions imposed on Iran by the Trump administration ... At the same time, the protests over the downed airliner, Akbari said, align with longer-term demands from the Iranian population for transparency, justice and accountability."

-- The repressive Iranian regime arrested someone for recording a video of the missile strike that brought down the plane. From the Times: “The Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps, a powerful arm of Iran’s military, said it had arrested a person it identified as having recorded a video ... which undercut the military’s initial denials that Iran was responsible. The arrest was announced by Iranian media outlets affiliated with the Guards. The contradictory messages from the president, who is elected, and the Guards, who answer to Iran’s clerical leaders, reflect the competing power centers in the Iranian government. ... In an apparent criticism of the military, [Hassan] Rouhani, a moderate, urged that an official inquiry be candid about its findings. But some hard-line lawmakers have lashed out at his administration, demanding resignations.”

-- Officials at the State and Defense departments have discussed possible cuts of $250 million in military aid to Iraq if U.S. troops are asked to leave, according to emails reviewed by the Wall Street Journal: “The emails indicate that the State Department’s Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs is working to cut all $250 million in funds under the U.S. foreign military financing program for Iraq for the current fiscal year. The bureau also plans to ask the White House Office of Management and Budget whether it can eliminate the $100 million request for fiscal year 2021, ‘due to current optics on the ground,’ according to the emails. ‘This does not preclude further congressional consideration of foreign assistance should the situation change in Iraq,’ one of the emails said. The emails assert that no final decision has been made, but top administration officials have ordered a review of what funds may be held or reallocated in the event Iraq requires the U.S. troops be removed. One of the emails said Secretary of State Mike Pompeo directed that the 2020 foreign military financing funds be repurposed, or used elsewhere.”

Gun rights protesters hold signs at a meeting of the Virginia Senate Judiciary Committee in Richmond. (Steve Helber/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) will ban guns from the grounds of the state's capitol, at least temporarily. Laura Vozzella and Gregory S. Schneider report: “The move comes just days after newly empowered Democrats banned guns from the Capitol building and an adjacent legislative office building. And it comes just ahead of a gun rights rally planned for Monday, which organizers say will draw tens of thousands to Capitol Square. The rally has drawn interest from militias and extremist groups across the country, raising security concerns in Richmond. ... Security has been unusually tight during the General Assembly session that kicked off last week, as Democrats ... consider far-reaching gun-control legislation.”

-- More than 100 billion doses of pain medication oxycodone and hydrocodone were shipped nationwide from 2006 through 2014, saturating the nation with 24 billion more doses than previously known to the public. Steven Rich, Scott Higham and Sari Horwitz report:

“The Washington Post and the company that owns the Charleston Gazette-Mail in West Virginia first obtained the data, collected by the Drug Enforcement Administration, from 2006 through 2012 after waging a year-long legal fight. In July, The Post reported that the data revealed that the nation’s drug companies had manufactured and distributed more than 76 billion pain pills. The two additional years of information — 2013 and 2014 — was recently posted by a data analytics company managed by lawyers for the plaintiffs in a massive lawsuit against the opioid industry. ... The newly released data, which traces the path of pills from manufacturers and distributors to pharmacies across the country, confirms again that six companies distributed the vast majority of the pain pills. McKesson Corp., Cardinal Health, Walgreens, AmerisourceBergen, CVS and Walmart accounted for 76 percent of the oxycodone and hydrocodone pills that were shipped between 2006 and 2014 ... Three manufacturers still accounted for 85 percent of the pills: SpecGx, a subsidiary of Mallinckrodt; Actavis Pharma; and Par Pharmaceutical, a subsidiary of Endo Pharmaceuticals.”

-- The White House's secret plan to divert $7.2 billion in Pentagon funding for Trump's border wall drew bipartisan criticism. Paul Sonne, Jeff Stein and Nick Miroff report: "Senior Republicans grumbled about the plan but mostly put the blame on Democrats, who agreed to provide $1.4 billion in border barrier funding this year — far less than the $5 billion Trump requested. 'I wish they'd get the money somewhere else, instead of defense,' said Sen. Richard C. Shelby (R-Ala.), chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. 'But I do support building the wall.' ... 'I think it's outrageous,' said Sen. Jack Reed (D-R.I.), the top Democrat on the armed services committee, who called it 'a slap to the military as well as a slap to Congress' ... Defense Secretary Mark T. Esper, asked Tuesday if he supports the continued diverting of Defense Department money to fund the border wall, said that one of the Pentagon's missions is supporting homeland defense. 'If that's what it takes, we are prepared to support' it, he said."

-- An appeals court temporarily halted the purge of more than 200,000 people from Wisconsin's voter rolls. Reis Thebault reports: "The Tuesday order came one day after the state's elections commission and its three Democratic members were found in contempt of court for not complying with a judge's previous order to cancel the registrations of roughly 6 percent of its voters. The case is largely split along partisan lines. Republicans argue that thousands of people who have changed addresses have not updated their voter registration status and should therefore be struck from the rolls to ensure election integrity, while Democrats and voting rights advocates say the move will unjustly disenfranchise swaths of the electorate ... The six-person election commission had been split evenly along partisan lines, the Republicans voting in favor of the purge and the Democrats voting against it. In a meeting on Tuesday, commissioners again disagreed — 3 to 3 — about how to respond. ... A Journal Sentinel analysis of the over 200,000 register voters targeted — all of whom were sent a letter in October seeking address confirmation — found that most lived in municipalities that supported Hillary Clinton in 2016.”

-- The Trump administration’s push to restart federal executions after nearly two decades heads back to court today. Mark Berman and Ann E. Marimow report: “Justice Department lawyers are asking the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit to reverse a judge’s order and allow the administration to move forward with four executions the administration had scheduled for December and January. U.S. District Judge Tanya S. Chutkan in November found that the government had probably exceeded its powers with the adoption of a new lethal-injection protocol to be used in those executions. The new protocol, she wrote, is inconsistent with a 1994 law that requires federal executions to be carried out ‘in the manner prescribed by the law of the State in which the sentence is imposed.’”

-- The Supreme Court will hear arguments in the “Bridgegate” scandal that shook New Jersey politics. The case could heavily impact future public corruption prosecutions. Matt Zaptosky reports: “As former New Jersey governor Chris Christie (R) looked on, the Supreme Court heard arguments Tuesday on whether to overturn the convictions against two of his ex-political allies in the ‘Bridgegate’ case, and the decision could have broad implications for how federal prosecutors pursue allegations of public corruption. The two former allies — Bridget Kelly and William E. Baroni Jr. — argue that the Justice Department reached too far in charging them with fraud for their roles in an alleged plot to back up traffic on the George Washington Bridge, the nation's busiest, as retaliation against a local mayor who declined to endorse Christie's reelection bid. ... The Justice Department counters that Kelly and Baroni are misstating what occurred and that the evidence was sufficient to support their convictions. The questioning Tuesday did not break down neatly along traditional ideological lines, and it was difficult to predict what the ultimate decision might be. Some justices who asked questions of the attorneys for Baroni and Kelly also seemed critical of some of the government's points. ... In filings to the Supreme Court, Kelly and Baroni argued that — even if they did exactly what prosecutors allege — it could not constitute a federal crime. They argued that they were essentially convicted of lying about their true political motive for a decision.”

-- Michael Avenatti, the former attorney for adult-film actress Stormy Daniels, was arrested by IRS agents for allegedly violating his bail terms a week before his federal trial. Timothy Bella reports: “Avenatti, who is accused of extorting Nike for up to $25 million and stealing millions of dollars from his clients for his own interests among other charges, was arrested while appearing before the State Bar Court in Los Angeles, in the middle of a disciplinary hearing alleging that he stole about $840,000 from a former client.”

-- Rep. Joe Kennedy III (D-Mass.) is rolling out 16 Democratic endorsements for his primary challenge against incumbent Sen. Ed Markey, including Reps. John Lewis (Ga.) and Joaquin Castro

(Tex.). From Boston Magazine: “Also on the list was co-chair of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, Congressman Mark Pocan, and the Caucus’s chair emeriti, Congressman Raul Grijalva. ... Kennedy collected endorsements from several other key groups in the House, including the co-chairs of the LGBTQ Equality Caucus, ... members of the Congressional Black Caucus ... and several members of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus ... Kennedy is also now outpacing Markey when it comes to raising campaign cash. ... Kennedy raised more than $2.4 million over the last three months of 2019, while Markey’s campaign reports raising only $1.4 million.”

-- Boeing’s new CEO pledged greater transparency in a message to employees still reeling from the two 737 Max jet crashes that killed hundreds in the last two years. Lori Aratani reports: “‘This is a crucial time for Boeing,’ [David Calhoun] wrote. ‘We have work to do to uphold our values and to build on our strengths. I see greatness in this company, but I also see opportunities to do better. Much better.’ Calhoun’s top priority will be convincing federal regulators that the 737 Max is safe to fly. The plane has been grounded worldwide since March. Boeing also is counting on Calhoun to rebuild relationships with customers, regulators and the public.”

-- A Delta flight dumped jet fuel on a playground near Los Angeles, leaving dozens with minor injuries. Justin Wm. Moyer reports: “Los Angeles County Fire Department officials said they responded to an elementary school ... after the aircraft apparently dumped the fuel while on a final approach to the airport. Twenty children and 11 adults complained of minor injuries, officials said. No one was taken to a hospital, officials said, and no evacuations were initiated. ... In a statement, Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Allen Kenitzer said Delta Air Lines Flight 89 declared an emergency after departing from the airport, then returned to the airport and ‘landed without incident.’”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Here are the candidates most tweeted about during the debate:

Klobuchar struggled during the debate to remember the name of the Democratic governor of Kansas who defeated Kris Kobach in 2018. The governor gamely replied:

The former chief strategist for Obama noted that Sanders's 2016 clashes with Hillary Clinton created the backdrop to his back-and-forth with Warren over whether he said a woman cannot win. David Axelrod also makes the good point that Sanders is being much more explicit in saying he'll support the Democratic nominee than four years ago:

Biden raised eyebrows when he said during the debate that he had to get by as a single dad on a $42,000 salary when he became a senator in 1973:

An organizational psychology professor at the Wharton School of Business suggested the Democratic candidates play a few board games instead of debating:

A Democratic congressman called out Mike Pompeo for talking to Fox

News instead of showing up to a House hearing on Iran:

Tom Malinowski ✓

@Malinowski

Pompeo talks Iran on Fox News at the very moment we're conducting a House hearing on Iran that he was too busy — or scared — to attend.

twitter.com/statedept/stat...

Department of State ✓ @StateDept

.@SecPompeo: We've engaged in an economic, a diplomatic, and now a military effort to convince the Iranian regime to behave like a normal nation. With respect to the protesters, you've seen President @realDonaldTrump speaking directly to them. We don't want any Iranian harmed.

FOX NEWS
6:14 ET

TRUMP DOCTRINE
POMPEO DEFENDS COUNTERTERRORISM STRATEGY

BREAKING TONIGHT

The Iranian Regime Must Behave Like a Normal Nation

♡ 2,618 6:13 PM - Jan 14, 2020 ⓘ

---

💬 1,411 people are talking about this >

A Daily Beast reporter shared an image of Lev Parnas with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump:

Betsy Woodruff Swan ✓
@woodruffbets

New: We obtained a photo of Lev Parnas with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump, indicating he met them at least once. thedailybeast.com/lev-parnas-ind...

♡ 12.3K 3:30 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 6,111 people are talking about this

The documents Parnas turned in to Democratic investigators include this peculiar White House menu:

southpaw
@nycsouthpaw

This menu brings to mind the WH feeding last year's national football champions fast food.

♡ 220 7:19 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 52 people are talking about this

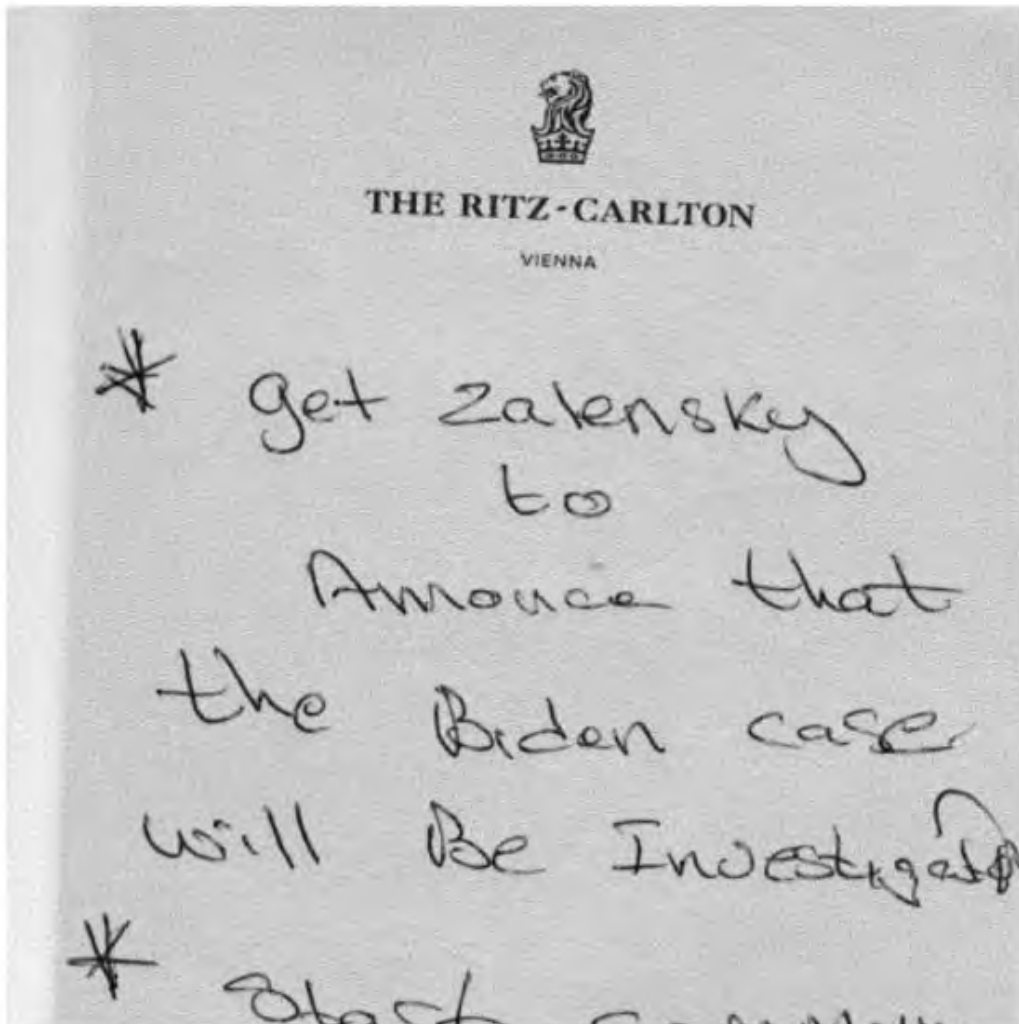

Other evidence in the hands of House Intelligence investigators includes this note:

Nicholas Wu ✓
@nicholaswu12

Among the evidence just produced by the House Intelligence Committee - a note from Parnas saying "get Zelensky to Announce that the Biden case will be investigated"

♥ 5,640 10:27 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 3,170 people are talking about this

And this email:

Katherine Faulders ✓
@KFaulders

Included in the evidence just produced by House Intel is an email from Trump's attorney Jay Sekulow to his former attorney John Dowd saying POTUS has agreed to Dowd representing Giuliani associates Parnas & Fruman (note - Dowd no longer represents the two men)

14 10:36 PM - Jan 14, 2020

See Katherine Faulders's other Tweets

Conservative lawyer George Conway, husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway, said Senate Republicans are restricting press access to the impeachment trial because they're scared and have something to hide:

A Times photographer captured Trump wearing his reading glasses last night:

Doug Mills ✓
@dougmillsnyt

.@realDonaldTrump

reads his phone as he arrives in his SUV to board Air Force One at Joint Base Andrews, Md. for a campaign trip to Milwaukee, WI.

♥ 545 10:22 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 348 people are talking about this

Warren's staff sent a pick-me-up to Cory Booker's team after the New Jersey senator dropped out of the presidential race:

Kristin Lynch
@Lyncherator

“We’re proud to continue fighting alongside you in the Senate.”

Thanks for the donuts and pick-me-up Team
@SenWarren! 🙌🙌

🤍 142 5:12 PM - Jan 14, 2020 · Office of Senator Cory Booker

See Kristin Lynch's other Tweets

And it finally rained in Melbourne:

Heavy rain, flash floods and severe thunderstorms swept over the Australian city. The very-welcome storm is expected to hit fire-affected parts of New South Wales and Victoria later this week, the Guardian reports.

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

"Lyndon Johnson was sort of a tough guy. Can you imagine his phone calls? He's probably looking down, or looking up," Trump said during his rally in Wisconsin last night, suggesting that LBJ may be in hell. (HuffPost)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert did his show live last night so he could cover the Democratic debate:

And then he wondered why Trump would talk about dishwashers during his rally in Milwaukee:

Trevor Noah opened his post-debate monologue by pointing out the demographics of the group of Democratic candidates who remain in the race:

Seth Meyers took a break from politics to introduce us all to some teen slang:

U.K. Prime Minister Boris Johnson wants Brits to pitch in and raise half a million pounds so that Big Ben can bong for Brexit:

BBC Politics
@BBCPolitics

“The bongos cost £500,000... but we’re working up a plan so that people can bung a bob for a Big Ben bong”

Boris Johnson says “we need to restore the clapper, in order to bong Big Ben on Brexit night, and that is expensive” #BBCBreakfast bbc.in/3887aKb

♥ 1,218 8:26 AM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 2,341 people are talking about this

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Democratic debate pits Bidenism vs. Bernieism – with the others staking out spaces in between
Date: Wednesday, January 15, 2020 9:15:08 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Democratic debate pits Bidenism vs. Bernieism – with the others staking out spaces in between

Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders exchange words as Tom Steyer looks on after the debate. (Scott Olson/Getty Images)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: What people will remember from the final debate before the Iowa caucuses is Elizabeth Warren declining to shake Bernie Sanders's outstretched hand after their brief onstage clash over whether he really told her during a one-on-one dinner more than a year ago that a woman cannot get elected president. While that made for compelling television, it also distracted from a starker ideological choice that looms for Democratic voters in the weeks ahead.

The more substantive portions of the two-hour debate at Drake University in Des Moines put in stark relief the chasm between the approaches of Sanders and Joe Biden – the two leaders in Iowa and national polling – on the biggest issues that face a president, including foreign policy, health care and trade.

It also highlighted continuing tensions between the two men over experience vs. judgment, incrementalism vs. radicalism and whether Democrats are more likely to win in November by igniting the base or appealing to disenchanted moderates who defected to Donald Trump in 2016.

Whomever is coronated at the convention in Milwaukee six months from now will chart the future of the party as its standard-bearer. In Sanders's case, he has spent decades proudly resisting pressure to register as a Democrat. He remains an independent who caucuses with the Democrats in the Senate.

Iowa looks like a jump ball, with the latest polls showing no overwhelming favorite and many voters either undecided or willing to change their minds. The next three weeks would be an unpredictable free-for-all in the Hawkeye State anyway. But the impeachment trial threatens to strand a handful of senators in Washington for days at a time with only Sundays away from the chamber.

Joe Biden cracks a smile as Bernie Sanders attacks him during the Democratic debate at Drake University in Des Moines on Tuesday night. (Scott Olson/Getty Images)

-- It is conceivable that neither Biden nor Sanders ultimately wins the Feb. 3 caucuses. Nevertheless, the two septuagenarians represent the ideological goalposts and the outer bounds – Sanders on the left and the Biden on the right (which, to be clear, is still left-of-center) – of what party regulars will abide.

“Joe and I have a fundamental disagreement here, in case you haven't noticed,” Sanders said last night during the round on trade, a salient issue in a farm state where children are taught in school that Iowa is a net exporter. The line, though, can be applied to most every other flashpoint in Democratic politics.

Just as he opposed the North American Free Trade Agreement, which Biden voted for, Sanders now opposes its replacement,

the U.S.-Mexico-Canada trade deal. This iteration just passed the Democratic-controlled House and won the endorsement of the AFL-CIO. It's awaiting a vote in the Senate. "The answer is we could do much better than a Trump-led trade bill," Sanders said. "If this is passed, I think it will set us back a number of years."

Biden, who supports the new deal, accused Sanders of knee-jerk opposition to everything. "I don't know that there's any trade agreement that the senator would ever think made any sense, but the problem is that 95 percent of the customers are out there," Biden said, referring to the rest of the world. "So we better figure out how we begin to write the rules of the road, not China."

Sanders attacked Biden for voting to ratify multiple agreements over the years that he said have helped large multinational corporations at the expense of workers. Biden compared Sanders's approach to "poking our finger in the eye of all of our friends and allies" by not trying to negotiate trade agreements with the rest of the world, which he argued empowers China.

Candidates take on foreign policy, trade, electability at seventh Democratic debate

-- The trade clash was particularly interesting to watch because Sanders proudly stood alone onstage among the top-tier candidates in opposing the USMCA deal. Pete Buttigieg, Amy Klobuchar and even Warren endorsed it. Trying to show that she has a pragmatic streak, Warren called the deal imperfect but reasoned that “it will give some relief” to farmers and workers. “We get up the next day and fight for a better trade deal,” she said.

It was a reminder of the extent to which the other candidates have all sought to position themselves somewhere between the poles of Sanders and Biden, and this played out repeatedly. In theory, Biden and Sanders occupy separate “lanes,” to use the parlance of the operative class. But both men see the other as a direct threat. The Sanders team, in particular, has believed all election cycle that they’re competing for Biden voters just as much as Warren voters.

Warren also tried to distinguish herself at one point by noting that she was the only candidate onstage who has defeated a Republican incumbent in the last 30 years. She ousted Republican Scott Brown in 2012 to take back Ted Kennedy's Senate seat in Massachusetts. Sanders chimed in to say that he defeated a GOP incumbent in Vermont to win a House seat in 1990. An amused Warren, once a high school debate state champion in Oklahoma, noted that this was why she specified 30 years. Then Biden added that he won a major upset in 1972 – 48 years ago – over a Republican incumbent to win his Senate seat.

-- Biden often sounds like he's promising a return to the pre-Trump status quo, when he was vice president. "We can overcome four years of Donald Trump, but eight years of Donald Trump will be an absolute disaster and fundamentally change this nation," he said. "We have to restore America's soul, as I've said from the moment I announced."

Sanders counters that "this is the moment when we have got to think big, not small": "This is the moment when we have got to have the courage to take on the 1 percent, take on the greed and take on the corruption of the corporate elite," he said in his closing, "and create an economy and create a government that works for all of us, not just the 1 percent."

CNN's Abby Phillip also noted that Sanders identifies as a democratic socialist and pointed to a poll that showed about two-thirds of Americans don't like the idea of voting for a socialist. She wondered, "Doesn't that put your chances of beating Donald Trump at risk?" Sanders replied, "Nope, not at all." He pivoted to attack Trump, displaying the moral certitude that his supporters love but Democratic establishmentarians loathe.

Iran takes center stage at Democratic debate

-- The gulf between Sanders and Biden was apparent from the opening question of the debate. The crisis in Iran has prompted the leading candidates to re-litigate the 2002 debate over whether to go to war with Iraq. “Joe and I listened to what Dick Cheney and George Bush and [Donald] Rumsfeld had to say,” Sanders said. “I thought they were lying. I didn’t believe them for a moment. I took to the floor. I did everything I could to prevent that war. Joe saw it differently.”

Biden emphasized his work bringing troops home from Iraq as Barack Obama’s vice president. “It was a mistake to trust that they weren’t going to go to war,” he said, referring to the Bush administration. “They said they were not going to go to war. ... It was a mistake, and I acknowledge that.”

-- The well-trod debate over health care was similar, as Biden and Sanders went at it again over the price tag for Medicare-for-all and the other candidates staked out ground in between them. Phillip, one of three moderators, asked Sanders about a study that said his policy proposals would double federal spending as a share of GDP to a level not seen since World War II. “No, my plan would not bankrupt the country,” he answered. “I think you should show how you’re going to pay for things, Bernie,” replied Klobuchar.

Warren sponsored Sanders’s Medicare-for-all bill, but she moved away from it in the face of questions about how she’d implement it without raising taxes on the middle class or kicking people off their private insurance. Warren ultimately proposed a three-year transition period to Medicare-for-all, but this only led to attacks from her left and right. Last night, Warren and Buttigieg bickered about who would get covered and how much it would cost.

Fact-Checking the January Democratic debate

-- Our Fact Checker team calls out Biden and Sanders, more than the other candidates, for making multiple misleading or false statements. For example, Biden did not provide an accurate description of what Bush said before the 2002 vote that allowed for war. Biden also boasted about getting troops out of Iraq under Obama without noting that this allowed for the emergence of the Islamic State, which required the Obama-Biden administration to send combat troops back into the country. The Fact Checker team faults Sanders for claiming that Medicare-for-all will cost less than the status quo, for significantly exaggerating the number of people who go bankrupt because of medical bills and for incorrectly claiming that the United States spends twice as much per person on health care as “any other country.” It’s only true compared to the developed world.

-- Warren, Buttigieg and Klobuchar are trying to varying degrees to position themselves as unity candidates between Sanders and Biden who can win support from both sides and therefore beat Trump.

“It is easy to draw lines in the sand and sketch out grand ideological

visions that will never see the light of day,” said Klobuchar. “What is hard is bringing people together and finding common ground instead of scorched earth. ... If you are tired of the extremes in our politics and the noise and the nonsense, you have a home with me.”

“We cannot take the risk with so much on the line of trying to confront this president with the same Washington mindset and political warfare that led us to this point,” said Buttigieg. “If you are watching this at home and you are exhausted by the spectacle of division and dysfunction, I’m asking you to join me to help turn the page on our politics.”

Sanders denies he told Warren a woman couldn't win the presidency

-- Here's what you need to know about the Warren vs. Sanders kerfuffle: Sanders's campaign manager Faiz Shakir told The Post that Warren "came to raise a concern" with him after the debate. "And he said let's talk about that later," Shakir said, declining to provide further details about the conversation captured in a viral video.

“Warren said Sanders disagreed with her view that a woman could win the presidential election. Sanders contends that he merely outlined what he said would be Trump's efforts to defeat another female candidate, and in the debate, he said, ‘Of course a woman can win,’” Annie Linskey and Sean Sullivan report. “The video ... shows Sanders extending his hand as Warren approaches him onstage. Rather than shaking it, Warren clasps her hands together and speaks to Sanders. He responds, as Tom Steyer walks toward them. ... Warren and Sanders then separate. Steyer and Sanders shake hands on one side of the stage. Nearby, Warren shakes hands with [Buttigieg]. ... Representatives for the Warren campaign declined to comment. After the debate, Steyer told MSNBC’s Chris Matthews that he did not know what Warren and Sanders said to each other.”

-- Dan Balz notes that the Warren-Sanders clash was inevitable, and they remain on a collision course after last night: “For the past few months, Warren found herself looking at Buttigieg as a more immediate threat in Iowa. She took a lead in a September Iowa poll by the Des Moines Register and CNN, only to see Buttigieg overtake her in the November poll. She and the mayor seemed to be competing in Iowa for the support of more-affluent voters with college degrees. Sanders’s campaign saw that as an opening and seized it.”

New Hampshire could be even more consequential because Warren and Sanders both come from neighboring states and have invested heavily. “That gives both of them a potential edge, and whoever finishes behind the other will have suffered a significant setback,” Dan notes.

-- Warren spoke the most during the debate:

(Dan Keating and Kevin Schaul)

-- The Post's opinion columnists largely focused on Warren vs. Sanders. "Can a woman be elected president? Let's put that silly question behind us," wrote Karen Tumulty. "Sanders vs. Warren shows the difference between identifying sexism and giving in to it," declared Ruth Marcus. "There's a reason Bernie Sanders said Elizabeth Warren is lying," noted David Von Drehle. "Democratic officials have reason to hope for a happy ending," said Eugene Robinson. "The debate shows why."

-- Pundits are all over the place in their lists of winners and losers, suggesting that the muddled debate will do little to alter the trajectory of the race. The Fix's Aaron Blake considered Warren's sly attack on Sanders and Sanders's response winning moves. He said Buttigieg lost and Biden was "in the middle." CNN's Chris Cillizza thought Buttigieg, Warren and Klobuchar won, but

Biden, Sanders and Steyer lost. But Politico's campaign reporters agreed with one another that Biden had the best night. Fox News's Bret Baier said Biden's performance was lackluster and Klobuchar "actually had a really good night" while Sanders "took a lot of incoming." Vox put Sanders and Buttigieg on its winners list and named Steyer as the losing candidate. Biden was on neither. Jennifer Rubin said Klobuchar and Biden shined. "The rest, not so much," she wrote.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Pelosi announces impeachment managers

THE LATEST ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Speaker Nancy Pelosi named the seven House Democrats who will serve as impeachment managers during the Senate trial:

Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff (Calif.), Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler (N.Y.), Hakeem Jeffries (N.Y.), Sylvia Garcia (Tex.), Val Demings (Fla.), Zoe Lofgren (Calif.) and Jason Crow (Colo.). Trump's defense team is expected to be led by White House counsel Pat Cipollone. Notably, Rep. Justin Amash, the Republican-turned-independent who voted for impeachment, is not one of the managers. Lofgren worked on Richard Nixon's impeachment as a House staffer and was on the House Judiciary Committee during Bill Clinton's impeachment. (We'll update our liveblog with more news all day.)

Rudy Giuliani, the president's personal lawyer, brought Lev Parnas, left, as his guest to the state funeral service for former president George H.W. Bush at the Washington National Cathedral in December 2018. (Al Drago/Bloomberg News)

-- New materials released last night by House Democrats appear to show Ukraine's top prosecutor offering one of Rudy Giuliani's associates damaging information related to Joe Biden if the Trump administration recalled the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine. Paul Sonne, Rosalind S. Helderman and Tom Hamburger report: "The text messages and documents provided to Congress by former Giuliani associate Lev Parnas also show that before the ambassador, Marie Yovanovitch, was removed from her post, a Parnas associate now running for Congress sent menacing text messages suggesting that he had Yovanovitch under surveillance in Ukraine. A lawyer for Yovanovitch said Tuesday that the episode should be investigated. ...

"Among the revelations in the documents released Tuesday: a message from Giuliani to Parnas saying he had involved a person he called "no 1" — possibly Trump himself — in an effort to lift a U.S. visa ban on a former Ukrainian prosecutor who was planning to come to the United States to make claims about Biden. The materials also include a letter Giuliani wrote to Ukraine's then-president-elect, Volodymyr Zelensky, requesting a May 14 meeting with the new leader in Giuliani's "capacity as personal counsel to President Trump and with his knowledge and consent." Giuliani scrapped his planned trip, and the meeting never took place. Another document released by the House investigators appears to show Parnas directly involved with efforts to get Zelensky to announce investigations related to Biden. In handwritten notes on a piece of stationery from the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Vienna, Parnas wrote, 'get Zalenksy [sic] to Annouce [sic] that the Biden case will be Investigated.' ...

"The materials show that Parnas, a Russian-speaker who helped coordinate Giuliani's outreach to Ukrainian sources, was directly communicating with an array of top Ukrainian officials. Among them was Yuri Lutsenko, at the time Ukraine's top prosecutor and a close political ally of then-Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko, who was running for reelection. Lutsenko wanted to get rid of Yovanovitch, the U.S. ambassador, in part because she had been critical of his office and supported a quasi-independent anti-corruption bureau he despised. The messages, written in Russian, show Lutsenko urging Parnas to force out Yovanovitch in exchange for cooperation regarding Biden. At one point, Lutsenko suggests he won't make any helpful public statements unless 'madam' is removed.

“The new documents also introduced a new character in the drama over the ambassador’s ouster: a Republican congressional candidate from Connecticut who asserted to Parnas in messages that he had Yovanovitch under physical and electronic surveillance. ‘Wow. Can’t believe Trumo [sic] hasn’t fired this b----,’ Robert F. Hyde wrote in an encrypted message to Parnas on March 23. ‘I’ll get right [on] that.’ Hyde described having contact with a ‘private security’ team located near the embassy that was apparently monitoring the ambassador’s movements. ‘She’s talked to three people. Her phone is off. Computer is off,’ he wrote in one message. ‘They will let me know when she’s on the move,’ he said in another. Later, he alerted Parnas that he had been told Yovanovitch would not be moved to a ‘special security unit.’ ‘They are willing to help if we/you would like a price,’ he said in one note. ‘Guess you can do anything in the Ukraine with money . . . what I was told.’ Hyde did not explain how his team might ‘help’ Parnas, who responded only with ‘lol.’ When asked for comment by The Washington Post in a text message, Hyde replied: ‘Sorry I can’t talk right now.’ Hyde is one of three Republicans running to unseat an incumbent Democrat in the 5th Congressional District in Connecticut. He frequently tweets about his support for Trump and posted photos of himself with the president.” (Review the full cache of material for yourself here.)

-- All the president's men, cont.: Former Trump national security adviser Michael Flynn asked a federal judge for permission to withdraw his guilty plea of lying to the FBI about this Russian contacts during special counsel Bob Mueller’s probe. Spencer S. Hsu reports: “The stunning reversal — more than two years after

Flynn pleaded guilty Dec. 1, 2017, and two weeks before he faces sentencing — threatens to sidetrack, if not derail, the prosecution of the highest-ranking Trump official charged and one of the first to cooperate with Mueller’s office.”

Russian Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev holds a Russian-made weapon during a visit to the Promtehnologiya firearms company in Moscow in 2013. Medvedev resigned today as part of a shake-up orchestrated by Vladimir Putin. (Dmitry Astakhov/Sputnik/AFP via Getty Images)

-- Russia’s prime minister submitted his resignation today as part of a surprise government shake-up directed by President Vladimir Putin. Isabelle Khurshudyan reports from Moscow: “Putin accepted the resignation of the prime minister, Dmitry Medvedev, and asked the members of Medvedev’s Cabinet to remain in place until a new government is formed ... The sweeping moves came shortly after Putin gave his annual address to Russia's lower house of parliament and proposed constitutional changes to boost the powers of prime ministers and Cabinet members. ... Earlier, Putin proposed sweeping changes to the constitution Wednesday, including strengthening parliament and revamping the country's state council, possibly hinting at his plans for after he leaves power in 2024. In his annual address to lawmakers, Putin again suggested limiting presidential term limits to two, indicating that 20 years after he first became president, he won't attempt to seek a third consecutive term. But Putin's plan to give constitutional status to the state council, a top advisory body to the president he created in 2000, and transfer more power to parliament, including naming the country's prime minister, could be a path for him to maintain significant influence in a different capacity once this presidential term is finished. As the Russian constitution stands now, the president has the sole power to appoint the prime minister."

'There is little or no sentiment' among GOP for dismissing Senate trial, McConnell says

-- Mitch McConnell is trying to balance the feuding factions within the Senate Republican Conference over whether to vote on calling witnesses. Seung Min Kim, Elise Viebeck and Robert Costa report: “On one end, a group of influential swing GOP senators — Sens. Susan Collins of Maine, Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, Mitt Romney of Utah and Lamar Alexander of Tennessee — are pushing to hold a vote on whether to call witnesses later in the proceedings. Democrats have vowed to exert pressure on the group to break with their party on witnesses and other issues, such as obtaining documents. At the same time, the Senate’s right flank is increasingly making the case to [McConnell] and other GOP leaders for a more aggressive posture in defense of Trump. In a private meeting with McConnell on Tuesday, Sen. Ted Cruz (Tex.) argued that if Democrats press the case for potentially damaging witnesses — such as former national security adviser John Bolton — the GOP should insist on incendiary witnesses of their own, such as Hunter Biden ... McConnell appeared receptive to Cruz’s pitch ...

“Despite their role as potential swing GOP votes in a narrowly divided Senate, the group of moderates has yet to defect in any significant fashion from party leaders ... In a nod to the moderates, there is expected to be a provision guaranteeing a vote on whether the Senate could consider subpoenaing witnesses, according to two GOP officials familiar with the matter ... GOP leaders are confident that once voting begins to set the scope of the trial — called an organizing resolution — that no Republicans will defect, with the moderates placated by a guaranteed decision on witnesses later. That calculus could change once the Senate goes through the grind of opening arguments and a litany of questions, and if key GOP senators become dissatisfied that they hadn't gotten enough information from the trial proceedings."

-- Capitol Hill reporters are protesting unexpected restrictions on their access to the Senate during the impeachment trial. Derek Hawkins, Felicia Sonmez and Fred Barbash report:

"The organization representing daily reporters on Capitol Hill is protesting restrictions expected to be imposed on the news media during the Senate impeachment trial, saying the security crackdown will severely limit access to lawmakers and stifle coverage of the proceedings. ...

Capitol security officials are [reportedly] considering measures that are all but certain to make it harder for journalists to report on the trial and question senators about their actions. A magnetometer in the Senate press gallery will require reporters to trickle into the chamber one at a time. Electronic devices will be banned, leaving reporters to scuttle in and out of the room to send tweets and emails. Reporters will be placed in pens, roping them off and restricting their ability to speak freely with senators as they enter and exit. ... Details about the nature and scope of the restrictions under consideration remained unclear, as neither the Senate sergeant at arms nor the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, which are responsible for them, has issued a formal document."

-- Trump's impeachment trial is a perilous duty for Chief Justice John Roberts because any signs of partisanship could further erode the Supreme Court's legitimacy. From the New York Times:

"The chief justice's responsibilities at the trial are fluid and ill-defined, and they will probably turn out to be largely ceremonial. ... The managers will march the articles over to the Senate chamber, touching off a series of steps that will initiate the trial. But before it can get underway Chief Justice Roberts will be sworn in as the presiding officer and, in his first official act, administer an oath to senators in which they swear to do ‘impartial justice’ in the trial, with the real work not expected to begin until Tuesday. ... Roberts has plenty on his plate already, much of it related to Mr. Trump. He is working on a Supreme Court docket crowded with divisive issues, including three cases on whether to allow release of Mr. Trump’s financial records and one on Mr. Trump’s efforts to withdraw protection from deportation for young immigrants. ... And Chief Justice Roberts has exchanged sharp remarks with Mr. Trump, laying bare a fundamental disagreement about the independence of federal judges.”

Democrats have enough Republican votes to pass war resolution, says Kaine

THE IRAN CRISIS:

-- The Senate is poised to pass a resolution limiting Trump's military authority on Iran, as four Republicans say they will vote with Democrats to assert Congress's war powers under the Constitution. Karoun Demirjian reports: "Congress cannot be sidelined on these important decisions," said [Collins] who on Tuesday declared her support for the measure. She joins Sens. Todd C. Young (R-Ind.), Mike Lee (R-Utah) and Rand Paul (R-Ky.) and all 47 Democrats. A vote could come as soon as next week. ... The resolution is 'privileged,' meaning Republicans opposed to the measure cannot block it from coming to a vote once it is 'ripe.' It also means that supporters must secure only a simple majority of the Senate, 51 votes, for it to pass. But it is almost certain that Trump will veto the measure and that Congress will not have the votes to override a veto. ... Trump's deputies and supporters said that such resolutions send a negative message to the troops and seemingly project support for the Iranian regime despite its sponsorship of terrorist activities that have led to the deaths of U.S. service members ... Supporters of the war powers measures have taken pains to say they believe [Iranian commander, Maj. Gen. Qasem] Soleimani was reprehensible as they argue that Trump cannot trample on Congress's right to declare war." (Kaine and Lee make the case for the resolution in an op-ed in today's newspaper.)

-- New video shows two Iranian missiles hit the downed Ukrainian plane last week. The Times reports: "The missiles were launched from an Iranian military site around eight miles from the plane. The new video fills a gap about why the plane's transponder stopped working, seconds before it was hit by a second missile. ... Neither strike downed the plane immediately. The new video shows the airliner on fire, circling back toward Tehran's international airport. Minutes later it exploded and crashed down, narrowly missing the village of Khalaj Abad ... The Times has confirmed that the new video was filmed by a camera on the roof of a building near the village of Bidkaneh, four miles from an Iranian military site. Amir Ali Hajizadeh, commander of the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps' airspace unit, said that missiles were launched from a base near there." (Watch the video here.)

-- The Iranian people, disturbed by the downing of the plane and the killing of Soleimani, have shown that it is possible to be angry at both their government and the United States at the same time. Erin Cunningham explains: "On Tuesday, student protesters at the University of Tehran chanted anti-government slogans as officials scrambled to find a way to quell the growing unrest. ... The efforts by senior officials to calm the public are in stark contrast to the defiant tones struck by Tehran amid an outpouring of grief this month for Soleimani at his funeral procession ... Iran is often presented 'as a monolith . . . a country where all of its citizens move as one,' said Reza Akbari, a researcher of Iranian politics at the Institute for War and Peace Reporting in Washington. 'But Iranians are capable of condemning U.S. attacks against their sovereignty while protesting the gross negligence of their government,' he said. For many Iranians, Soleimani's killing in a U.S. drone strike in Baghdad was a national affront and came amid widespread resentment over harsh economic sanctions imposed on Iran by the Trump administration ... At the same time, the protests over the downed airliner, Akbari said, align with longer-term demands from the Iranian population for transparency, justice and accountability."

-- The repressive Iranian regime arrested someone for recording a video of the missile strike that brought down the plane. From the Times: “The Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps, a powerful arm of Iran’s military, said it had arrested a person it identified as having recorded a video ... which undercut the military’s initial denials that Iran was responsible. The arrest was announced by Iranian media outlets affiliated with the Guards. The contradictory messages from the president, who is elected, and the Guards, who answer to Iran’s clerical leaders, reflect the competing power centers in the Iranian government. ... In an apparent criticism of the military, [Hassan] Rouhani, a moderate, urged that an official inquiry be candid about its findings. But some hard-line lawmakers have lashed out at his administration, demanding resignations.”

-- Officials at the State and Defense departments have discussed possible cuts of $250 million in military aid to Iraq if U.S. troops are asked to leave, according to emails reviewed by the Wall Street Journal: “The emails indicate that the State Department’s Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs is working to cut all $250 million in funds under the U.S. foreign military financing program for Iraq for the current fiscal year. The bureau also plans to ask the White House Office of Management and Budget whether it can eliminate the $100 million request for fiscal year 2021, ‘due to current optics on the ground,’ according to the emails. ‘This does not preclude further congressional consideration of foreign assistance should the situation change in Iraq,’ one of the emails said. The emails assert that no final decision has been made, but top administration officials have ordered a review of what funds may be held or reallocated in the event Iraq requires the U.S. troops be removed. One of the emails said Secretary of State Mike Pompeo directed that the 2020 foreign military financing funds be repurposed, or used elsewhere.”

Gun rights protesters hold signs at a meeting of the Virginia Senate Judiciary Committee in Richmond. (Steve Helber/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) will ban guns from the grounds of the state's capitol, at least temporarily. Laura Vozzella and Gregory S. Schneider report: “The move comes just days after newly empowered Democrats banned guns from the Capitol building and an adjacent legislative office building. And it comes just ahead of a gun rights rally planned for Monday, which organizers say will draw tens of thousands to Capitol Square. The rally has drawn interest from militias and extremist groups across the country, raising security concerns in Richmond. ... Security has been unusually tight during the General Assembly session that kicked off last week, as Democrats ... consider far-reaching gun-control legislation.”

-- More than 100 billion doses of pain medication oxycodone and hydrocodone were shipped nationwide from 2006 through 2014, saturating the nation with 24 billion more doses than previously known to the public. Steven Rich, Scott Higham and Sari Horwitz report:

“The Washington Post and the company that owns the Charleston Gazette-Mail in West Virginia first obtained the data, collected by the Drug Enforcement Administration, from 2006 through 2012 after waging a year-long legal fight. In July, The Post reported that the data revealed that the nation’s drug companies had manufactured and distributed more than 76 billion pain pills. The two additional years of information — 2013 and 2014 — was recently posted by a data analytics company managed by lawyers for the plaintiffs in a massive lawsuit against the opioid industry. ... The newly released data, which traces the path of pills from manufacturers and distributors to pharmacies across the country, confirms again that six companies distributed the vast majority of the pain pills. McKesson Corp., Cardinal Health, Walgreens, AmerisourceBergen, CVS and Walmart accounted for 76 percent of the oxycodone and hydrocodone pills that were shipped between 2006 and 2014 ... Three manufacturers still accounted for 85 percent of the pills: SpecGx, a subsidiary of Mallinckrodt; Actavis Pharma; and Par Pharmaceutical, a subsidiary of Endo Pharmaceuticals.”

-- The White House's secret plan to divert $7.2 billion in Pentagon funding for Trump's border wall drew bipartisan criticism. Paul Sonne, Jeff Stein and Nick Miroff report: "Senior Republicans grumbled about the plan but mostly put the blame on Democrats, who agreed to provide $1.4 billion in border barrier funding this year — far less than the $5 billion Trump requested. 'I wish they'd get the money somewhere else, instead of defense,' said Sen. Richard C. Shelby (R-Ala.), chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. 'But I do support building the wall.' ... 'I think it's outrageous,' said Sen. Jack Reed (D-R.I.), the top Democrat on the armed services committee, who called it 'a slap to the military as well as a slap to Congress' ... Defense Secretary Mark T. Esper, asked Tuesday if he supports the continued diverting of Defense Department money to fund the border wall, said that one of the Pentagon's missions is supporting homeland defense. 'If that's what it takes, we are prepared to support' it, he said."

-- An appeals court temporarily halted the purge of more than 200,000 people from Wisconsin's voter rolls. Reis Thebault reports: "The Tuesday order came one day after the state's elections commission and its three Democratic members were found in contempt of court for not complying with a judge's previous order to cancel the registrations of roughly 6 percent of its voters. The case is largely split along partisan lines. Republicans argue that thousands of people who have changed addresses have not updated their voter registration status and should therefore be struck from the rolls to ensure election integrity, while Democrats and voting rights advocates say the move will unjustly disenfranchise swaths of the electorate ... The six-person election commission had been split evenly along partisan lines, the Republicans voting in favor of the purge and the Democrats voting against it. In a meeting on Tuesday, commissioners again disagreed — 3 to 3 — about how to respond. ... A Journal Sentinel analysis of the over 200,000 register voters targeted — all of whom were sent a letter in October seeking address confirmation — found that most lived in municipalities that supported Hillary Clinton in 2016.”

-- The Trump administration’s push to restart federal executions after nearly two decades heads back to court today. Mark Berman and Ann E. Marimow report: “Justice Department lawyers are asking the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit to reverse a judge’s order and allow the administration to move forward with four executions the administration had scheduled for December and January. U.S. District Judge Tanya S. Chutkan in November found that the government had probably exceeded its powers with the adoption of a new lethal-injection protocol to be used in those executions. The new protocol, she wrote, is inconsistent with a 1994 law that requires federal executions to be carried out ‘in the manner prescribed by the law of the State in which the sentence is imposed.’”

-- The Supreme Court will hear arguments in the “Bridgegate” scandal that shook New Jersey politics. The case could heavily impact future public corruption prosecutions. Matt Zapotosky reports: “As former New Jersey governor Chris Christie (R) looked on, the Supreme Court heard arguments Tuesday on whether to overturn the convictions against two of his ex-political allies in the ‘Bridgegate’ case, and the decision could have broad implications for how federal prosecutors pursue allegations of public corruption. The two former allies — Bridget Kelly and William E. Baroni Jr. — argue that the Justice Department reached too far in charging them with fraud for their roles in an alleged plot to back up traffic on the George Washington Bridge, the nation's busiest, as retaliation against a local mayor who declined to endorse Christie's reelection bid. ... The Justice Department counters that Kelly and Baroni are misstating what occurred and that the evidence was sufficient to support their convictions. The questioning Tuesday did not break down neatly along traditional ideological lines, and it was difficult to predict what the ultimate decision might be. Some justices who asked questions of the attorneys for Baroni and Kelly also seemed critical of some of the government's points. ... In filings to the Supreme Court, Kelly and Baroni argued that — even if they did exactly what prosecutors allege — it could not constitute a federal crime. They argued that they were essentially convicted of lying about their true political motive for a decision.”

-- Michael Avenatti, the former attorney for adult-film actress Stormy Daniels, was arrested by IRS agents for allegedly violating his bail terms a week before his federal trial. Timothy Bella reports: “Avenatti, who is accused of extorting Nike for up to $25 million and stealing millions of dollars from his clients for his own interests among other charges, was arrested while appearing before the State Bar Court in Los Angeles, in the middle of a disciplinary hearing alleging that he stole about $840,000 from a former client.”

-- Rep. Joe Kennedy III (D-Mass.) is rolling out 16 Democratic endorsements for his primary challenge against incumbent Sen. Ed Markey, including Reps. John Lewis (Ga.) and Joaquin Castro

(Tex.). From Boston Magazine: “Also on the list was co-chair of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, Congressman Mark Pocan, and the Caucus’s chair emeriti, Congressman Raul Grijalva. ... Kennedy collected endorsements from several other key groups in the House, including the co-chairs of the LGBTQ Equality Caucus, ... members of the Congressional Black Caucus ... and several members of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus ... Kennedy is also now outpacing Markey when it comes to raising campaign cash. ... Kennedy raised more than $2.4 million over the last three months of 2019, while Markey’s campaign reports raising only $1.4 million.”

-- Boeing’s new CEO pledged greater transparency in a message to employees still reeling from the two 737 Max jet crashes that killed hundreds in the last two years. Lori Aratani reports: “This is a crucial time for Boeing,’ [David Calhoun] wrote. ‘We have work to do to uphold our values and to build on our strengths. I see greatness in this company, but I also see opportunities to do better. Much better.’ Calhoun’s top priority will be convincing federal regulators that the 737 Max is safe to fly. The plane has been grounded worldwide since March. Boeing also is counting on Calhoun to rebuild relationships with customers, regulators and the public.”

-- A Delta flight dumped jet fuel on a playground near Los Angeles, leaving dozens with minor injuries. Justin Wm. Moyer reports: “Los Angeles County Fire Department officials said they responded to an elementary school ... after the aircraft apparently dumped the fuel while on a final approach to the airport. Twenty children and 11 adults complained of minor injuries, officials said. No one was taken to a hospital, officials said, and no evacuations were initiated. ... In a statement, Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Allen Kenitzer said Delta Air Lines Flight 89 declared an emergency after departing from the airport, then returned to the airport and ‘landed without incident.’”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Here are the candidates most tweeted about during the debate:

Klobuchar struggled during the debate to remember the name of the Democratic governor of Kansas who defeated Kris Kobach in 2018. The governor gamely replied:

The former chief strategist for Obama noted that Sanders's 2016 clashes with Hillary Clinton created the backdrop to his back-and-forth with Warren over whether he said a woman cannot win. David Axelrod also makes the good point that Sanders is being much more explicit in saying he'll support the Democratic nominee than four years ago:

Biden raised eyebrows when he said during the debate that he had to get by as a single dad on a $42,000 salary when he became a senator in 1973:

An organizational psychology professor at the Wharton School of Business suggested the Democratic candidates play a few board games instead of debating:

A Democratic congressman called out Mike Pompeo for talking to Fox

News instead of showing up to a House hearing on Iran:

Tom Malinowski ✓

@Malinowski

Pompeo talks Iran on Fox News at the very moment we're conducting a House hearing on Iran that he was too busy — or scared — to attend.

twitter.com/statedept/stat...

Department of State ✓ @StateDept

.@SecPompeo: We've engaged in an economic, a diplomatic, and now a military effort to convince the Iranian regime to behave like a normal nation. With respect to the protesters, you've seen President @realDonaldTrump speaking directly to them. We don't want any Iranian harmed.

FOX NEWS
6:14 ET

TRUMP DOCTRINE
POMPEO DEFENDS COUNTERTERRORISM STRATEGY

BREAKING TONIGHT

The Iranian Regime Must Behave Like a Normal Nation

♡ 2,618 6:13 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 1,411 people are talking about this

A Daily Beast reporter shared an image of Lev Parnas with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump:

Betsy Woodruff Swan ✓

@woodruffbets

New: We obtained a photo of Lev Parnas with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump, indicating he met them at least once. thedailybeast.com/lev-parnas-ind...

♡ 12.3K 3:30 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 6,111 people are talking about this

The documents Parnas turned in to Democratic investigators include this peculiar White House menu:

southpaw
@nycsouthpaw

This menu brings to mind the WH feeding last year's national football champions fast food.

♡ 220 7:19 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 52 people are talking about this

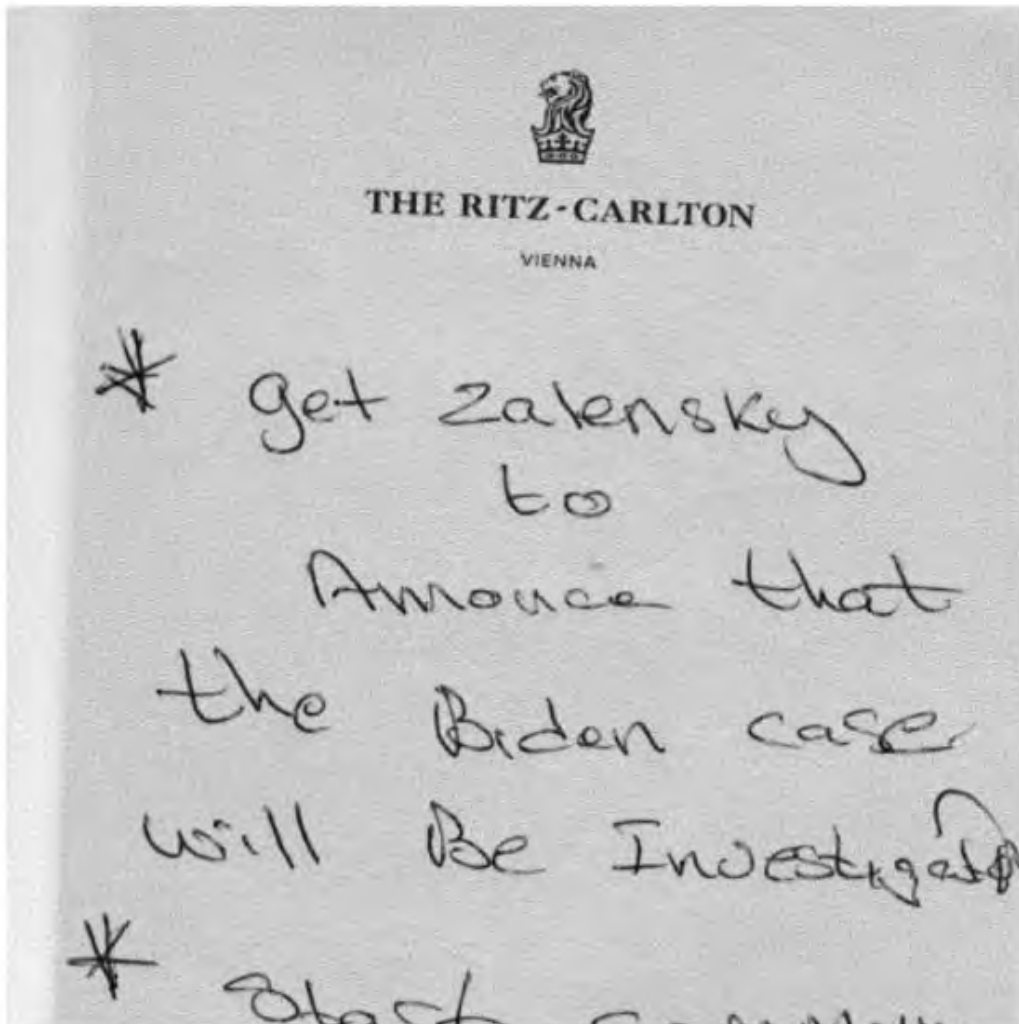

Other evidence in the hands of House Intelligence investigators includes this note:

Nicholas Wu ✓
@nicholaswu12

Among the evidence just produced by the House Intelligence Committee - a note from Parnas saying "get Zelensky to Announce that the Biden case will be investigated"

♥ 5,640 10:27 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 3,170 people are talking about this

And this email:

Katherine Faulders ✓
@KFaulders

Included in the evidence just produced by House Intel is an email from Trump's attorney Jay Sekulow to his former attorney John Dowd saying POTUS has agreed to Dowd representing Giuliani associates Parnas & Fruman (note - Dowd no longer represents the two men)

14 10:36 PM - Jan 14, 2020

See Katherine Faulders's other Tweets

Conservative lawyer George Conway, husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway, said Senate Republicans are restricting press access to the impeachment trial because they're scared and have something to hide:

A Times photographer captured Trump wearing his reading glasses last night:

Doug Mills ✓
@dougmillsnyt

.@realDonaldTrump

reads his phone as he arrives in his SUV to board Air Force One at Joint Base Andrews, Md. for a campaign trip to Milwaukee, WI.

♥ 545 10:22 PM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 348 people are talking about this

Warren's staff sent a pick-me-up to Cory Booker's team after the New Jersey senator dropped out of the presidential race:

Kristin Lynch
@Lyncherator

"We're proud to continue fighting alongside you in the Senate."

Thanks for the donuts and pick-me-up Team
@SenWarren! 🙌🙌

🤍 142 5:12 PM - Jan 14, 2020 · Office of Senator Cory Booker

See Kristin Lynch's other Tweets

And it finally rained in Melbourne:

Heavy rain, flash floods and severe thunderstorms swept over the Australian city. The very-welcome storm is expected to hit fire-affected parts of New South Wales and Victoria later this week, the Guardian reports.

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

"Lyndon Johnson was sort of a tough guy. Can you imagine his phone calls? He's probably looking down, or looking up," Trump said during his rally in Wisconsin last night, suggesting that LBJ may be in hell. (HuffPost)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert did his show live last night so he could cover the Democratic debate:

And then he wondered why Trump would talk about dishwashers during his rally in Milwaukee:

Trevor Noah opened his post-debate monologue by pointing out the demographics of the group of Democratic candidates who remain in the race:

Seth Meyers took a break from politics to introduce us all to some teen slang:

U.K. Prime Minister Boris Johnson wants Brits to pitch in and raise half a million pounds so that Big Ben can bong for Brexit:

BBC Politics
@BBCPolitics

“The bongos cost £500,000... but we’re working up a plan so that people can bung a bob for a Big Ben bong”

Boris Johnson says “we need to restore the clapper, in order to bong Big Ben on Brexit night, and that is expensive” #BBCBreakfast bbc.in/3887aKb

♡ 1,218 8:26 AM - Jan 14, 2020

💬 2,341 people are talking about this

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Lev Parnas's interviews, and documents, tie Trump more directly to the Ukraine pressure campaign
Date: Thursday, January 16, 2020 9:47:26 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Lev Parnas's interviews, and documents, tie Trump more directly to the Ukraine pressure campaign

Lev Parnas's first TV interview on Ukraine, annotated

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Documents and interviews provided by Rudy Giuliani's former associate Lev Parnas expand the available body of evidence to answer those famous questions posed by Howard Baker during Watergate: What did the president know, and when did he know it?

"President Trump knew exactly what was going on. He was aware of all my movements," Parnas told MSNBC's Rachel Maddow in an interview broadcast on Wednesday night. "I wouldn't do anything without the consent of Rudy Giuliani or the president."

Parnas faces felony campaign finance charges unrelated to President Trump's impeachment.

“I am betting my whole life that Trump knew exactly everything that was going on that Rudy Giuliani was doing in Ukraine,” Parnas told the New York Times in a separate interview.

The House Intelligence Committee released an additional 390 pages of material last night that was turned over by Parnas’s lawyer. A calendar entry shows Parnas had a scheduled breakfast with Trump in New York on Sept. 26, even after the whistleblower complaint jumpstarted the process that led to the president’s impeachment. Other photos, texts and calendar entries show Parnas exchanging messages with a top official at the pro-Trump super PAC America First Action and someone else who is close to Donald Trump Jr. “I am officially part of team trump,” Parnas texted an associate at one point.

Parnas, as a Russian speaker, helped coordinate Giuliani’s outreach to Ukrainian sources and directly communicated with an array of top Ukrainian officials. One of them was Yuri Lutsenko, at the time Ukraine’s top prosecutor and an ally of then-Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko, who would lose his bid for reelection to Volodymyr Zelensky. Ukrainian officials had “no reason to speak to me” other than the fact that they understood him to be an emissary of the American president, Parnas told Maddow: “Why would President Zelensky’s inner circle ... or President Poroshenko meet with me? Who am I? They were told to meet with me.”

The first tranche of documents released on Tuesday night by House investigators included a message from Giuliani to Parnas saying that he had involved someone he only referred to as “no 1” in efforts to lift a U.S. visa ban on a former Ukrainian prosecutor who was planning to come to the United States to make negative claims about Joe Biden. Parnas told Maddow that he understood “no 1” to be Trump himself.

Giuliani also wrote this in a May letter to President-elect Zelensky: “In my capacity as personal counsel to President Trump and with his knowledge and consent, I request a meeting with you...”

-- Evidence of the president’s hands-on role bolsters the Democratic case that Trump himself abused his power, not outside advisers who were pursuing personal interests in the president’s name. Tying the president more closely to the efforts to coerce the Ukrainian government into announcing an investigation into Hunter Biden and Burisma could help Democratic impeachment managers make the case that there was corrupt intent behind Trump’s decision to stonewall Congress’s investigation by defying subpoenas for documents and blocking aides from testifying.

President Trump meets with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky in New York on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly in September. (Saul Loeb/AFP via Getty Images)

-- In his July 25 call with Zelensky, in which Trump requested “a favor” when his Ukrainian counterpart brought up his desire to buy Javelin antitank missiles to fend off the ongoing Russian invasion of his country, the president also asked Ukraine’s president to cooperate with Giuliani. “Mr. Giuliani is a highly respected man,” Trump told Zelensky, according to the rough transcript released by the White House. “He was the mayor of New York City, a great mayor, and I would like him to call you. ... Rudy very much knows what’s happening and he is a very capable guy. If you could speak to him that would be great.”

-- This is far from the only evidence directly linking Trump himself to the pressure campaign against Ukraine. One example: “Clear direction from POTUS to continue to hold,” Mike Duffey, associate national security programs director at the Office of Management and Budget, emailed a Pentagon official on Aug. 30, according to Just Security, using the acronym for President of the United States.

-- Parnas said Giuliani told him after meeting with Trump at the White House that the message to deliver when he met with Ukrainians was that “it wasn’t just military aid, it was all aid” that would be frozen until “the announcement of the Biden investigation.” Trump has strenuously denied that he ever authorized such a quid pro quo. “It was never about corruption,” Parnas told Maddow. “It was it strictly about Burisma, which included Hunter Biden and Joe Biden.”

-- Giuliani, who remains one of the president’s personal lawyers, declined to offer specific responses to Parnas’s claims. “Who cares? Believe him at your peril,” he texted Josh Dawsey.

-- Parnas explained how they approached people in Kyiv. When he would meet with a senior Ukrainian official, he told Maddow, he would put Giuliani on the phone. “The first thing I did is to introduce myself and tell them, ‘I’m here on behalf of Rudy Giuliani and the president of the United States, and I’d like to put you on speakerphone,’” Parnas said. “We put Rudy on the phone. Rudy relayed to him basically that we were there on behalf of the president of the United States.”

-- Parnas said he knew that Giuliani wasn’t freelancing because he heard Trump talking to him on the phone. “I was with Rudy when he would speak to the president, plenty of times,” Parnas said, adding that he was “in constant contact” with Giuliani – four or five days some weeks – and that Trump phoned “a lot of times” when he and Giuliani were golfing. Parnas said Trump talks “very loudly” on the phone. That’s also what State Department Foreign Service officer David Holmes testified when he explained how he overheard part of U.S. Ambassador to the E.U. Gordon Sondland’s cellphone conversation with Trump as they ate lunch at a restaurant in Kyiv.

-- The president said after Parnas was initially indicted for unrelated campaign finance violations that he might have posed for a picture with him, but that he doesn’t know him. Parnas said Trump “lied” about this. “I mean, we’re not friends,” he said. “Me and him didn't watch football games together. We didn't eat hot dogs. But he knew exactly who we were. He knew exactly who I was, especially because I interacted with him at a lot of events."

An email from October shows counsel to the president Jay Sekulow telling former Trump attorney John Dowd that he spoke with Trump about Parnas. "The president consents to allowing your representation of Mr. Parnas and Mr. [Igor Fruman]," Sekulow wrote, referring to the other Giuliani associate who has also been indicted but has not spoken publicly. Dowd no longer represents Parnas.

Lev Parnas and Rudy Giuliani pose for a picture. (House Intelligence Committee)

-- “Everyone was in the loop,” Sondland testified in November. Parnas recalled that quote when Maddow asked about whether Vice President Pence knew what Trump and Giuliani were doing. “He couldn’t have not known,” Parnas said of Pence, who has insisted he did not know.

Parnas also said “it’s impossible” that Attorney General Bill Barr didn’t know what he and Giuliani were up to in Ukraine. “Mr. Barr absolutely knew everything,” Parnas said. “Attorney General Barr was basically on the team.” Justice Department spokeswoman Kerri Kupec called this “100% false” in a statement.

And Parnas said he worked with House Intelligence Committee ranking member Devin Nunes (R-Calif.) and one of his top aides. “He knew very well that he knew what was going on,” Parnas said of Nunes. "He knew what's happening. He knows who I am." When call logs showed that Nunes and Parnas spoke, the congressman initially claimed he "didn't really recall" talking to Parnas. On Fox News last night, the congressman said he's refreshed his memory and downplayed their conversation. "I remember that call, which was very odd, random, talking about random things," said Nunes. "And I said, 'Great, just talk to my staff,' and boom boom boom."

-- Stay tuned: Additional records that Parnas turned over to the House are still expected to be released. Investigators are reviewing them. And Parnas wants to testify during the Senate impeachment trial. "I want to get the truth out," he said. "Things happened that need to get out, and I think the world needs to know."

-- Two related stories that broke this morning:

1) The Government Accountability Office, a nonpartisan agency that reports to Congress, concluded that the White House violated federal law in its hold on security aid to Ukraine last year. Jeff Stein, Ellen Nakashima and Erica Werner report that the GAO found that the Trump administration violated a law that governs how the White House disburses money approved by Congress. "Faithful execution of the law does not permit the President to substitute his own policy priorities for those that Congress has enacted into law," the decision states. "OMB withheld funds for a policy reason, which is not permitted under the Impoundment Control Act." An OMB spokeswoman said the White House disagrees with "the GAO's opinion." (Read the eight-page legal opinion for yourself.)

2) Ukrainian authorities announced a probe into the possible

surveillance of U.S. Ambassador Marie Yovanovitch before she was dismissed from her post by the Trump administration. David Stern and Isabelle Khurshudyan report: “The statement by Ukraine’s Interior Ministry followed the disclosure [from Parnas’s files of] ... messages with Robert F. Hyde, a Connecticut Republican who is running for Congress. In those exchanges, Parnas is informed about Yovanovitch’s physical location. ... In a separate probe, Ukraine investigators said they were looking into a suspected Russian hack into computers at Ukrainian gas company Burisma, which is at the center of the impeachment inquiries. ... Interior Minister Arsen Avakov met Thursday with an FBI representative based in Ukraine and officially requested U.S. assistance in the two cases.”

Parnas told Maddow he did not take Hyde’s claims seriously, and Hyde said in a televised interview with Eric Bolling that he was joking in his messages and did not monitor her. “Hyde, who told Parnas he was with a ‘private security’ team in Kyiv, was involuntarily committed to a psychiatric hospital last year after police were called to Trump’s Doral resort outside Miami, police and court records show. Doral police said Hyde insisted his life was in danger and that he believed painters and landscape workers were trying to harm him. One week after the incident in Doral, a 34-year-old political consultant obtained a temporary protection order against Hyde because of ‘constant harassment and stalking,’ according to records in Superior Court of the District of Columbia. The consultant alleged that several incidents occurred at the Trump International Hotel in the District.”

The House sergeant at arms and clerk lead the seven impeachment managers through the Capitol Rotunda to deliver the articles of impeachment to the Senate. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

MORE ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- With pomp and circumstance, the House delivered the two articles of impeachment to the Senate last night, laying the groundwork for Trump's impeachment trial. Elise Viebeck, Rachael Bade and Seung Min Kim report: "The impeachment managers' brief ceremonial journey across the Capitol — a month after the House voted to impeach Trump — relinquished Democratic control over a process that is expected to end in the president's election-year acquittal by the Republican-led Senate. ... House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) declared that Trump was guilty of 'an assault on the Constitution of the United States' and rejected criticism that his impeachment was politically motivated. ... Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) attacked the House's inquiry as 'unprecedented and dangerous' and accused Democrats of 'pure factionalism.' ... Privately, McConnell and other senior Republicans still hope a majority of senators will think they have heard enough ... to move to a vote to determine whether Trump should be removed from office. Several closely-watched Republican senators declined to say whether they believed Hunter Biden was worthy of summoning ... Democrats were unanimous in their view that Hunter Biden's testimony would be irrelevant. ...

"The procedural formalities of the trial are expected to begin [this afternoon] with the reading of the articles; the swearing-in of Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr., who will preside; and the swearing-in of the senators as jurors. After that, the Senate is expected to recess for the weekend; the trial will begin in earnest Tuesday, according to McConnell. ... Asked whether Trump would go ahead with plans to deliver his State of the Union address on Feb. 4 even if the impeachment trial hasn't concluded by then, a senior administration official told reporters, 'I think it's extraordinarily unlikely that we'd be going beyond two weeks.'"

-- Roberts will administer an oath this afternoon to every senator that's meaningfully different from the one they took when they joined Congress. Now, they are jurors in a trial, and they are pledging to "do impartial justice." This oath is prescribed by Senate rules: "I solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that in all things appertaining to the trial of the impeachment of [Donald John Trump], now pending, I will do impartial justice according to the Constitution and laws: So help me God."

-- Trump's legal team, eyeing a swift trial, is aiming to block witnesses and cast doubt on the two charges against the president. Toluse Olorunnipa and Josh Dawsey report: "The White House, which previously supported a more expansive trial in the GOP-led Senate, has now accepted the idea that senators should make quick work of acquitting Trump. ... White House aides are also gaming out how to manage Trump during the trial, which they expect him to watch and possibly tweet about while it is underway, as he did during the House impeachment hearings ... Trump allies plan to have several surrogates on television defending the president during the trial. Republican House members, many of whom jockeyed for official roles on the defense team for the Senate trial, will instead fan out across television networks to ensure that the president's message gets out and that Trump feels he is receiving a robust defense..."

-- The diverse, seven-member team of impeachment managers picked by Pelosi is smaller than the 13-member squad of white men that made the case against Bill Clinton to the Senate in 1999, reflecting the speaker's more tightly controlled approach. Mike DeBonis reports: "All seven managers have professional backgrounds in the law. [Val] Demings, 62, is the only non-lawyer, but she is steeped in law enforcement, having served as the first female chief of the Orlando Police Department. ... Three of the seven are women. Demings and [Hakeem] Jeffries are African American; [Sylvia] Garcia is Latina. Garcia and [Jason] Crow — besides representing a historic freshman class — also bring geographic diversity to a group otherwise drawn from coastal states."

The Daily 202's BIG IDEA

▶ Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

2020 WATCH:

-- Elizabeth Warren accused Bernie Sanders of calling her a “liar on national TV” in a tense confrontation after Tuesday’s Democratic debate. Annie Linskey reports: “Their confrontation, visible to viewers, began when Warren walked toward Sanders and refused to shake his outstretched hand. ‘I think you called me a liar on national TV,’ Warren told Sanders. ‘What?’ asked Sanders. ‘I think you called me a liar on national TV,’ Warren said. ‘You know, let’s not do it right now. If you want to have that discussion, we’ll have that discussion,’ Sanders said. ‘Anytime,’ Warren said. ‘You called me a liar,’ Sanders said, adding: ‘You told me — all right, let’s not do it now.’ ... CNN reported on Monday that Sanders had told Warren a woman could not win the presidency. Sanders denied the account.”

-- Liberal leaders are panicking that the Warren-Sanders rift is going to cause their faction to lose the nomination. Annie Linskey, Sean Sullivan and Isaac Stanley-Becker report: "Social media users identifying themselves as Sanders supporters used snake icons to symbolize Warren's ostensible duplicity, played up her Republican roots and circulated a #NeverWarren hashtag. Warren's backers, while taking a less aggressive tone, nonetheless revived questions of whether many of Sanders's supporters are sexist and whether he contributed to the party's disastrous 2016 loss with a display of self-centered petulance. ... Increasingly alarmed liberal leaders scrambled to make peace. 'Many of the voices in the progressive community are warning we cannot have a knife fight in a phone booth, or a circular firing squad,' said Randi Weingarten, president of the American Federation of Teachers. That message, she said, is being sent to the Sanders and Warren camps 'privately and publicly.'"

-- Rep. Liz Cheney, the No. 3 in House GOP leadership, announced that she will not run for the open U.S. Senate seat in Wyoming, opting instead to stay in the House. (Felicia Sonmez and Mike DeBonis)

-- The Post's Opinion desk invited the Democratic presidential candidates who didn't qualify for the debate – Michael Bennet, Mike Bloomberg, John Delaney, Deval Patrick and Andrew Yang – to answer a question they wish they would have been able to if they had been onstage.

-- "There's still time to hear out Deval Patrick," inveighs the Editorial Board.

-- The two women still in the race are raising more money from women than their male opponents. (Michelle Ye Hee Lee and Anu Narayanswamy)

-- Pete Buttigieg's campaign cybersecurity chief resigned over differences with campaign leadership over how to manage information security. Buttigieg's campaign was the only Democratic 2020 team with a full-time cyber staffer. (WSJ)

-- Individual donors are now able to give over half a million dollars directly to support Trump's reelection, making a mockery of the intent of contribution limits. Michelle Ye Hee Lee reports: "Under an agreement announced Wednesday by Trump Victory, a joint fundraising committee for the Trump campaign and the Republican National Committee, a single donor can give as much as $580,600 this year to support Trump's reelection — higher than the committee's previous caps on contributions. That means the Republican National Committee's biggest contributors could end up having shelled out as much as $1.6 million to support Trump's 2020 reelection over the course of the four-year election cycle ... Trump Victory, which had been raising money for Trump 2020 and the RNC, was able to raise the top giving level by signing up 22 state parties to raise money together, which allows the committee to raise its contribution cap. The number of state parties supported through Trump Victory could expand, raising the possibility that the maximum contribution could grow even larger."

-- Justin Amash – the sole Independent in the House – hasn't committed to a presidential run. But he hasn't ruled one out, either. From the Dispatch: "With the incredible volatility in American politics over the past two decades, marked by the record-low faith in Washington and the institutions of the federal government, taking such a leap seems less crazy today than it might have just a few years ago. As Amash himself put it last week: 'Is there any better time to have a president who might be not from either party?' ... He wants to be clear that he's not abandoning his re-election bid—yet. 'Just to be clear, I am running for office as an independent for, you know, my congressional seat. And I've filed for that, and you know, we're, we're doing what it takes to, to win that race.' One more time. He begins to speak more cautiously. 'At some point you'll be at, we'll be at the point where I have to rule out, you know, running for president. And I'm not at that point yet. But, you know, we're probably getting closer to that point now.'"

-- "On ordinary legislative matters, most members of Congress don't think anymore," Amash told Rolling Stone. "I think a lot of members of Congress are used to that lifestyle and they like it. They don't want responsibility. They want the job, not the responsibility."

-- Jared Kushner, the president's senior adviser and son-in-law, is on the cover of Time magazine talking about his relationship with the president: "The portrait that emerges from interviews with Kushner, current and former White House officials, lawmakers and people close to him is of an increasingly confident operator who is learning to pull the levers of power in the White House and throughout Washington in ways that may surprise critics. Listening to Kushner describe his role makes it clear that he was never going to be the moderating force that Democrats hoped for and Trump loyalists feared. He doesn't see his job as steering Trump to a decision. He sees himself as the enabler of the President's agenda."

-- Kimberly Guilfoyle, the former Fox News personality and current girlfriend of Donald Trump Jr., will serve as a national finance chair of the Trump Victory Finance Committee. (The Hill)

President Trump and China's Vice Premier Liu sign the 'phase one' trade deal

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- A week before Germany, France and Britain formally accused Iran of breaching the 2015 nuclear deal, the Trump administration issued a private threat to the Europeans that shocked leaders in all three countries. John Hudson and Souad Mekhennet report: “If they refused to call out Tehran and initiate an arcane dispute mechanism in the deal, the United States would impose a 25 percent tariff on European automobiles ... Within days, the three countries would formally accuse Iran of violating the deal, triggering a recourse provision that could reimpose United Nations sanctions on Iran and unravel the last remaining vestiges of the Obama-era agreement. The U.S. effort to coerce European foreign policy through tariffs, a move one European official equated to 'extortion,' represents a new level of hardball tactics with the United States' oldest allies, underscoring the extraordinary tumult in the transatlantic relationship.”

-- Trump signed a partial trade deal with China. David J. Lynch reports: “The deal reflected the president’s distinctive reshaping of American trade policy, relying on government dictates rather than market forces and establishing a direct enforcement system outside the World Trade Organization. The 86-page agreement, which comes after a protracted standoff between the two nations, commits China to buy an extra $200 billion in American products over the next two years. Under a novel enforcement mechanism, the two sides have agreed to resolve any disputes through a process of direct consultations that will be backstopped by the threat of new import tariffs. ... With Chinese Vice Premier Liu He and three other senior Chinese officials standing by his side, the president complained that China had taken advantage of the United States on trade for years. ‘It was pillage,’ Trump said. ... The deal faces widespread skepticism about China’s ability to meet ambitious targets for buying $200 billion in American products over the next two years, as well as prospects for resolving compliance disputes. Robert E. Lighthizer, the president’s chief trade negotiator, said the deal contained important new Chinese commitments to protect American intellectual property, halt coercive technology transfers and refrain from using currency devaluation as a trade weapon.”

-- A former senior White House adviser concluded that Trump was “at times dangerously uninformed” about foreign affairs and history. Ashley Parker writes up some of juicy nuggets from “A Very Stable Genius,” a new book by our Post colleagues Phil Rucker and Carol Leonnig: “Trump reveals himself as woefully uninformed about the basics of geography, incorrectly telling Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, ‘It’s not like you’ve got China on your border.’ ... [T]he authors write that ‘Modi’s eyes bulged out in surprise.’ ... [O]ne Trump aide concludes Modi probably ‘left that meeting and said, ‘This is not a serious man. I cannot count on this man as a partner.’” After the meeting, the aide explains to them, “the Indians took a step back’ in their diplomatic relations with the United States.”

After Trump met Russian President Vladimir Putin in Hamburg in 2017, Trump declared himself a Russian expert and dismissed the expertise of then-Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, who had negotiated with Putin for decades as an Exxon executive: “I have had a two-hour meeting with Putin,” Trump told Tillerson, according to the book. “That’s all I need to know. ... I’ve sized it all up. I’ve got it.”

Follow the money: “In spring 2017, Trump also clashed with Tillerson when he told him he wanted his help getting rid of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, a 1977 law that prevents U.S. firms and individuals from bribing foreign officials for business deals. ‘It’s just so unfair that American companies aren’t allowed to pay bribes to get business overseas,’ Trump says, according to the book. ‘We’re going to change that.’ ... The book, the duo writes in an author’s note, is based on hundreds of hours of interviews with more than 200 sources, corroborated, when possible, by calendars, diary entries, internal memos and even private video recordings.”

-- The special inspector general for Afghanistan reconstruction told Congress that U.S. officials have routinely lied to the public during the 18-year war. Craig Whitlock reports: “‘There’s an odor of mendacity throughout the Afghanistan issue . . . mendacity and hubris,’ John F. Sopko said in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. . . . ‘We have created an incentive to almost require people to lie.’ As an example, Sopko said U.S. officials have lied in the past about the number of Afghan children enrolled in schools — a key marker of progress touted by the Obama administration — even though they ‘knew the data was bad.’ He also said U.S. officials falsely claimed major gains in Afghan life expectancy that were statistically impossible to achieve. In addition, Sopko criticized the Trump administration for classifying information that shows the war is going badly, including data on Afghan troop casualties and assessments of the Taliban’s strength. . . . The House Foreign Affairs Committee summoned Sopko to testify in response to a series of articles published last month in [The Post] that revealed how senior U.S. officials failed to tell the truth about the war.”

-- The Taliban is ready to reduce violence in exchange for a peace deal, Pakistan claims. Susannah George reports: “Shah Mahmood Qureshi said ‘a good development’ occurred Thursday and that the ‘Taliban have showed their readiness to accept the demand for reduction in violence.’ Speaking in a video statement released by the Foreign Ministry, Qureshi added, ‘I believe that this is a step forward towards the peace agreement.’ Separately, the Associated Press reported that Taliban officials said the group gave the U.S. envoy in the talks ‘a document outlining their offer for a temporary cease-fire in Afghanistan that would last between seven and 10 days.’”

-- The past decade was the hottest ever recorded on the planet, driven by an acceleration of temperature increases in the past five years. (Brady Dennis, Andrew Freedman and John Muyskens)

-- Major intrigue in the Kremlin: Three hours after Putin forced the resignation of Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev, who once served as president, he offered the post to Mikhail Mishustin, the head of the Russian tax service, who is viewed as a possible placeholder. Isabelle Khurshudyan reports from Moscow: “The broad moves came shortly after Putin gave his annual address to Russian lawmakers and proposed major constitutional changes such as transferring more power to parliament, including the ability to name the country’s prime minister. Currently, the premier is selected by the president. Putin took advantage of that by promptly nominating Mishustin, who has not been part of Russia’s top-tier leadership before.”

-- Medvedev has long been part of Putin’s St. Petersburg inner circle, but Putin dropped him like a hot rock so he could scapegoat him for the country's domestic challenges. Robyn Dixon explains: “Putin reaped popularity gains inside Russia after he annexed Crimea in 2014 and rebuilt Russian global clout in the Middle East and elsewhere. But Medvedev, as prime minister, was left as a convenient scapegoat for Russia’s domestic problems: a stagnant economy, low wages and pensions, and enduring corruption. ... One reason for [Putin’s] removal of Medvedev may have been fears that the prime minister’s unpopularity would drag Putin’s approval ratings down from their current position in the high 60s. An October opinion poll by the Levada Center found that 72 percent of Russians believed the government's interests were not aligned with those of the population, and 53 percent thought the government lived off the people and did not care how they survived.”

-- Dozens were arrested as protests resumed in Lebanon following weeks of relative calm. Sarah Dadouch reports:

“Authorities said 47 police officers were injured and 59 people were arrested during clashes on Tuesday, which came after weeks of calm. On Wednesday night, hundreds of protesters surrounded the facility where those arrested were being held. Since October, the country has been struggling with political turmoil and severe economic uncertainty.”

-- The Murdoch family's discord is playing out publicly. Sarah Ellison reports: “It took an epic natural disaster to publicly surface the long-standing tension within one of the world's wealthiest and most powerful families. In an unusual, brief statement, James and Kathryn Murdoch voiced their ‘frustration’ this week with what they see as the Murdoch family empire's role in climate change denial. The comments, while focused narrowly on the way Murdoch-owned media properties have covered the wildfires in Australia, highlighted the family's underlying discord. (The fires have claimed 27 lives and an estimated 1 billion animals.) Since James officially left the company founded by his father Rupert Murdoch — after having lost out to his older brother, Lachlan, in a succession race — James and his wife, Kathryn, have become increasingly outspoken about their views. Many of their perspectives directly contradict the editorial direction of the Murdochs' properties, including Fox News and News Corp. Australia, the most dominant force in the Australian media landscape.”

-- Prince Harry and Meghan's decision to quit their roles as senior royals has put Queen Elizabeth II in the role of crisis manager – and family brand protector – once again. William Booth reports: “Of all the thinly sourced tabloid narratives about feuding royal houses and their woes, the one with zero traction is that Elizabeth is losing it. She is the epitome of cool under pressure, able to move from one challenge to the next, said Penny Junor, a royal historian. ... It is worth noting that many of the challenges Elizabeth has faced have been generated by the family itself — through a long litany of affairs, divorces, sketchy financial dealings and drunken mischief.”

-- Europe is at risk of being torn asunder: Germany's Angela Merkel, in a warning to the E.U., says Brexit must be “a wake-up call.” From the Financial Times: “Berlin worries a post-Brexit UK that reserves the right to diverge from EU rules on goods, workers' rights, taxes and environmental standards could create a serious economic competitor on its doorstep. ... Europe must, she says, respond by upping its game, becoming ‘attractive, innovative, creative, a good place for research and education.’”

Residents who support continued refugee resettlement hold signs during a December meeting in Bismarck, N.D. (James MacPherson/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- A federal judge temporarily halted the Trump administration's policy allowing local governments to block refugees, saying it is likely "unlawful." Ann E. Marimow and Maria Sachetti report:

"Giving states and local governments the power to consent to the resettlement of refugees — which is to say veto power to determine whether refugees will be received in their midst — flies in the face of clear Congressional intent,' [District Judge Peter] Messitte wrote in a 31-page decision. The judge said the administration's grant of a veto power is 'arbitrary and capricious as well as inherently susceptible to hidden bias.”

-- “The Trump administration is moving to strengthen protections for students who want to pray or worship in public schools and proposing changes that would make it easier for religious groups that provide social services to access federal funds,” Moriah Balingit reports. “Nine federal agencies, including the Education Department, the Department of Health and Human Services and the Justice Department, are proposing rules that would reduce requirements for those religious organizations. The rules would lift an Obama-era executive order that compelled religious organizations to tell the people they serve that they can receive the same service from a secular provider. Education Secretary Betsy DeVos said her department plans to remind schools that students and teachers have a constitutional right to pray in public schools, and that student-led religious organizations should get to access public facilities just like secular ones.”

-- The Trump administration plans to impose several new requirements on billions of dollars in relief aid for Puerto Rico. Arelis R. Hernández and Jeff Stein report: “Under the parameters the Trump administration is proposing, Puerto Rico’s government will have to agree to give new oversight authority to the island’s federally mandated Fiscal Control Board — an appointed, independent government body — to receive funding for certain federal projects, officials said. Puerto Rico also will have to agree to pay federal contractors working on disaster relief less than $15 an hour, despite a recent executive order mandating the rate.”

-- The Treasury’s internal watchdog is probing the Trump administration's Opportunity Zone program. From NBC News:

“Richard LeFrak, a friend of Trump's, and the family interests of Jared Kushner, Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser, among others, could benefit from possible projects in designated opportunity zones. ... The program, which Sens. Cory Booker, D-N.J., and Tim Scott, R-S.C., added to the 2017 tax bill, was meant to spur growth in underserved areas, and it prompted the designation of 8,800 lower-income census tracts as opportunity zones where investors could reap significant tax benefits. Last October, Booker and Democratic Reps. Ron Kind of Wisconsin and Emanuel Cleaver of Missouri sent a letter to the Treasury Department's Office of Inspector General asking how the zones were chosen.”

-- Virginia ratified the Equal Rights Amendment in a historic vote. Gregory S. Schneider, Laura Vozzella and Patricia Sullivan

report: “Numerous legal hurdles still have to be cleared before the ERA, which prohibits discrimination based on sex, would become part of the Constitution. Critics say various deadlines for ratification have long since passed. But supporters were jubilant that Virginia, after years of failure, is poised to become the 38th state to approve the amendment. They pledged to mount a massive national campaign to enact it. ‘For the women of Virginia and the women of America, the resolution has finally passed,’ Del. Eileen Filler-Corn (D-Fairfax), the first female House speaker in the 401-year history of Virginia’s legislature, said in announcing the result of the House vote. ...

Republican lawmakers, who bottled up the ERA in subcommittee during their 26 years in control of the House of Delegates, tried to postpone action with parliamentary challenges. Several also said the vote was merely symbolic, because it remains unclear whether the amendment can actually be ratified so long after its initial approval.”

-- The Navy has concluded that no significant environmental harm would come from its proposed tripling of the size of a Nevada bombing range. From the AP: “Adding more than 1,000 square miles ... to the range at Naval Air Station Fallon 65 miles ... east of Reno is critical to meeting combat training needs for modern aircraft and weapons systems that have outgrown training capabilities over the past two decades, the Navy says. Critics say that in addition to adversely impacting fish and wildlife, the expansion would restrict access to public land for hunters, ATV riders and back-country explorers, including at a national wildlife refuge. The expanded range would cover an area half the size of the state of Delaware.”

-- A new lawsuit claims Jeffrey Epstein trafficked girls in the Caribbean until 2018. From the Times: “Mr. Epstein, a wealthy financier who died by suicide in a Manhattan jail last year, was bringing girls as young as 11 and 12 to his secluded estate in the Virgin Islands, known as Little Saint James, and kept a computerized database to track the availability and movements of women and girls, the lawsuit said. The lawsuit, which was filed by Denise N. George, the attorney general of the Virgin Islands, broadened the dimensions of the wrongdoing in which Mr. Epstein was said to have engaged. ... The suit was filed against Mr. Epstein’s estate and seeks the forfeiture of Little Saint James and Mr. Epstein’s second private island, Great Saint James, as well as the dissolution of numerous shell companies he established in the territory that officials have said acted as fronts for his sex trafficking enterprise.”

-- Trump will host college football national champion LSU on Friday to celebrate its perfect season. (Jacob Bogage)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

The CNN audio of Warren confronting Sanders after the debate also featured Tom Steyer saying he just wanted to say hi. The billionaire joked after the tape came out:

Someone added the theme song of HBO's "Curb Your Enthusiasm" to the footage:

Michael Schwab ✓
@michaelschwab13

Here is Tom Steyer's interaction with Sanders and Warren to Curb Your Enthusiasm #DemocraticDebate

♡ 2,192 4:50 AM - Jan 15, 2020

💬 688 people are talking about this

Sanders downplayed his clash with Warren to a CNN reporter who was assigned to stake out his office:

Rep. Ann Kuster (D-N.H.) backs Pete Buttigieg. Hers has been one of the most sought-after endorsements in the state that has the first primary:

A BBC reporter noted that there were no women at the table when Trump met with China representatives:

Tara McKelvey
@Tara_Mckelvey

The president brought me and other reporters briefly into a room at the White House before lunch with the Chinese guests. Jared Kushner and others were there. Number of men at the table: 26. Number of women: 0. (Female interpreters scooted back and helped with the conversation).

♡ 751 7:13 PM - Jan 15, 2020

💬 556 people are talking about this

Elsewhere, however, women are finally getting seats at the table:

 Alexander Nazaryan
@alexnazaryan

All 13 of the Republican managers for the Clinton impeachment trial were white men.

For the Trump impeachment trial, Speaker Pelosi named three managers who are people of color and three women. news.yahoo.com/pelosi-names-i...

 370 5:10 PM - Jan 15, 2020

 136 people are talking about this

And Virginia's first openly transgender delegate celebrated the state ratifying the Equal Rights Amendment. It's the New Dominion:

Danica Roem ✓
@pwcdanica

The Virginia House of Delegates just voted to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment as the 28th Amendment to the Constitution of United States of America.
"Equal rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of sex."

♥ 22.6K 6:22 PM - Jan 15, 2020

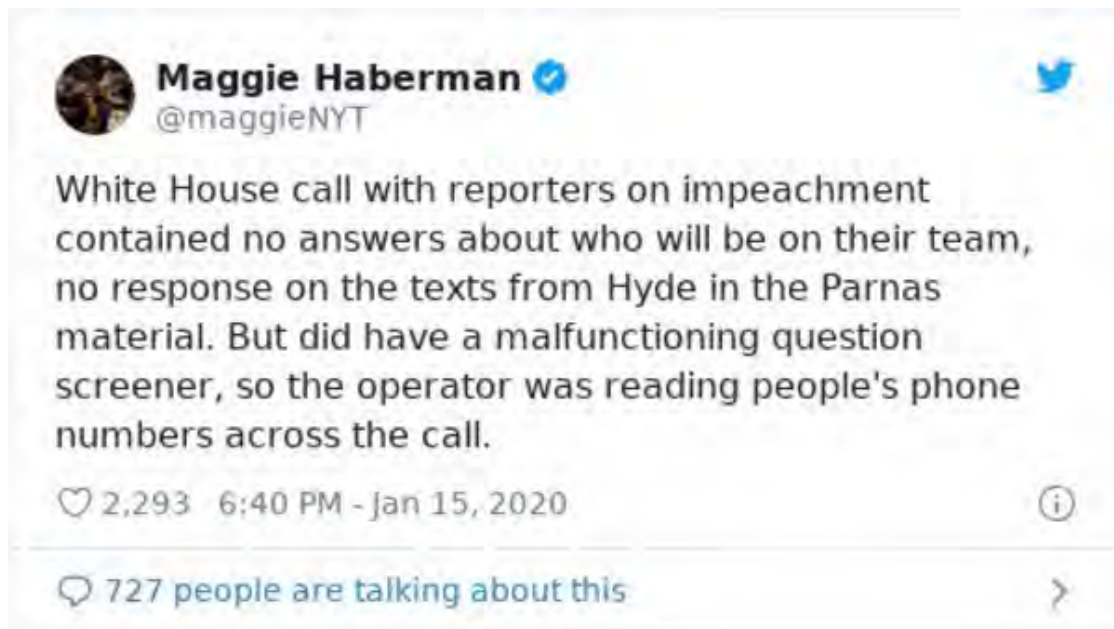

💬 5,167 people are talking about this

The White House's background press call on impeachment had some technical issues:

Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) was criticized for dismissing the Parnas bombshells:

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "It's like a foreign language," Trump said as he struggled to read aloud the Constitution early in his presidency, according to Rucker and Leonnig's new book. (Parker)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Seth Meyers went through the trove of evidence Lev Parnas turned in to Democratic investigators:

Stephen Colbert decided that the new evidence doesn't make Rudy Giuliani look good:

Sam Bee reviewed Tuesday night's debate drama:

Andrew Yang wasn't on the debate stage on Tuesday, so the "Daily Show's" Ronny Chieng invited him to their own personal debate:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Congress shows the ability to legislate through impeachment
Date: Friday, January 17, 2020 9:58:53 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Congress shows the ability to legislate through impeachment

Roberts sworn in, administers oath to senators

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Moments before the start of the third presidential impeachment trial in U.S. history on Thursday, the Senate voted 89 to 10 to approve President Trump's landmark trade deal with Canada and Mexico.

This rewrite of the 25-year-old North American Free Trade Agreement, which allows Trump to deliver on a signature campaign promise from 2016, is one of the most significant trade votes in a generation. It passed with overwhelming bipartisan support from a coalition of strange bedfellows, including the AFL-CIO and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Final passage came a day after Trump signed a partial economic deal with China, another political victory for a White House that's eager to defuse trade tensions in an election year.

The subsequent reading of the two articles of impeachment and the swearing-in of the senators as jurors soon overshadowed these hard-fought triumphs for Trump. But the trade vote nevertheless gives cover for lawmakers in both parties to reassure constituents back home that they're getting results, even amid contentious deliberations over whether the president abused the power of his office to coerce a foreign government to boost his reelection prospects by announcing an investigation of Democratic challenger Joe Biden.

Trump has boasted that the specter of impeachment, and the desire of Democrats not to look like they're doing nothing, got this deal across the finish line. Last month, one day after voting almost entirely on party lines to impeach Trump, the House also passed the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement on a lopsided vote of 385 to 41. With their eyes on the fall elections, Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) have separately pointed to the USMCA as proof that their side is focused on the pocketbook issues that voters care most about.

Sen. Pat Toomey (R-Pa.) rides the Senate subway to the Capitol. (Matt McClain/The Washington Post)

-- Eight Senate Democrats and Bernie Sanders voted against the deal. But only one Republican broke with the president: Sen. Pat Toomey (R-Pa.), perhaps the most outspoken advocate for free trade in Congress. Toomey unsuccessfully raised procedural concerns about the USMCA on the Senate floor before the vote. “I was very disturbed to see a new trade agreement that's designed in part to diminish trade – very much the wrong direction,” he explained afterward in an interview. “I felt it was important to make a stand and make the case that this certainly shouldn't be a template for future agreements.”

Toomey called me last night as he drove home to Pennsylvania for the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday weekend at the end of one of the most surreal days of his nine years in the Senate. “It's just very strange,” Toomey said. “There were moments that seemed surreal to me today in the Senate. It's just such an unusual moment.” Now sworn in as a juror, Toomey will spend the weekend at home and return for proceedings to begin in earnest on Tuesday.

He has complained that Republicans got “rolled” because the Trump administration made too many concessions to Democrats in a desire to get something done. He said “the worst provisions” in the new deal relate to automobiles. For example, there’s now a requirement that at least 30 percent of cars – and 40 percent by 2023 – must be made by workers who earn at least $16 an hour. This will raise wages in Mexico, but Toomey said it will also raise prices to buy lower-end small cars that are assembled south of the border. The deal also sunsets after 16 years, meaning that the three countries will need to go through another renegotiation process, which Toomey fears will chill business investment by introducing a cloud of uncertainty about the future terms of trade.

The USMCA was initially signed a year ago by Trump, but the requirement that it must first be ratified by the House gave Pelosi leverage to demand changes and concessions, including higher labor standards in Mexico, higher environmental standards and stronger enforcement mechanisms. A team of nine House Democrats worked with U.S. Trade Representative Bob Lighthizer and his staff for months to reach a compromise. At Pelosi’s behest, the renegotiated deal also killed a provision pushed by pharmaceutical companies that would have guaranteed them 10 years of market exclusivity for biologics, a class of drugs that are especially costly.

Pat Toomey listens as President Trump speaks about trade policy during a 2018 meeting in the Cabinet Room at the White House. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

-- Toomey isn't as flashy about it as some of his hardline colleagues who love to go on television, but the vote underscored his record as one of the most reliable fiscal conservatives in Congress. The 58-year-old served in the House for three terms until 2004. After narrowly losing a primary challenge that year against then-Republican Sen. Arlen Specter, Toomey served as president of the Club for Growth, the conservative group created to support open markets and oppose regulations. As Toomey geared up for a rematch against Specter in 2010, the incumbent changed parties after being promised Barack Obama's endorsement. But Specter lost in the Democratic primary to Joe Sestak. Toomey then won the seat that fall. He got narrowly reelected in one of the marquee races of 2016, as Trump became the first Republican presidential candidate to carry the Keystone State since 1988.

Toomey has picked his fights carefully in the Trump era. All told, he's voted with the president's position 83 percent of the time in the current Congress, according to the running tabulation by FiveThirtyEight. But he's twice supported efforts to overturn Trump's declaration of a national emergency for border wall funding, and he backed the resolution of disapproval last February for withdrawing U.S. forces from Syria.

Since Trump took office, the junior senator has voted against all the major omnibus spending bills and the bloated farm bill. He's opposed raising the debt ceiling and joined small groups of senators in voting against hurricane relief packages that weren't paid for with spending cuts elsewhere. Many Republicans insisted on this throughout Obama's presidency but have reversed their approach under Trump. Toomey has stayed consistent on these kinds of votes.

Throughout, trade has remained Toomey's signature issue. "I've been very, very candid with everyone in the administration – from the president to the vice president and the trade representative – they know exactly where I stand,” he told me. “I tried hard to persuade them of my point of view. I obviously failed, but to their credit, they always heard me out.”

Trump campaigned four years ago as a protectionist, rejecting decades of Republican orthodoxy. The president’s support for old-fashioned industrial policies and a reflexive inclination to impose tariffs on other countries – something he threatened to do against a trio of European leaders just last week if they didn’t cave to his demands on Iran – appear to be among his longest and most deeply-held beliefs.

But Toomey said he believes “there’s generally still very broad support” for the concept of free trade in his party. “If you asked the Republican senators if they consider themselves ‘free traders,’ I think the vast majority would say they do, but I acknowledge that there has always been a protectionist element,” he said. “There are protectionists among Republicans who would like to further restrict trade, and I do think it’s important for free traders to push back on that.”

McConnell said last month that the final deal was “not as good as I had hoped” but better than nothing. He and the vast majority of the GOP conference are loath to oppose Trump, especially on what he’s described as his top legislative priority.

-- Toomey’s ultimate support for the president at the end of this impeachment trial is not in doubt. But the lone holdout among Senate Republicans on the USMCA offers a timely reminder that it’s still possible to hate the sin (protectionism, in this case) but still love the sinner (Trump). “Look, I do support the president,” he said. "I'm going to fully support his reelection campaign. I'm going to campaign for him. I think his policies have generally been terrific for the economy, and I think his foreign policy has made us more secure. But I have a separate election certificate. I was elected by the people of Pennsylvania to serve them in the Senate, and I have a responsibility to reach my own judgments and conclusions about policy, so occasionally I'm going to disagree with the president. When I do, I've got an obligation to take that stand."

Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) leaves a news conference on Thursday. (Julio Cortez/AP)

-- Chuck Schumer was one of the Democrats who voted no. The minority leader seems worried about a primary challenge from his left in 2022 by someone like Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez. That also seemed to be a motivating factor for Sen. Ed Markey (Mass.), who voted no after his primary challenger Rep. Joe Kennedy III opposed the deal last month. Schumer insisted that he voted no because the deal “does not address climate change” and includes “handouts for the oil and gas industry, such as lifting tariffs on tar sands.” Markey, a sponsor of the Green New Deal, also cited environmental concerns.

Former, and perhaps future, presidential candidates Kirsten Gillibrand (N.Y.), Cory Booker (N.J.) and Kamala Harris (Calif.) had essentially boxed themselves into voting no while still in the running. The remaining three Democratic opponents were Rhode Island’s senators, Jack Reed and Sheldon Whitehouse, plus Hawaii’s Brian Schatz.

One of the most interesting clashes during the Democratic debate on Tuesday night in Des Moines was over this USMCA pact. Sanders expressed his opposition while rivals Joe Biden, Elizabeth Warren, Amy Klobuchar and Pete Buttigieg endorsed the deal, at least partly, to help Iowa farmers who have suffered from Trump’s trade wars.

Trying to sell the package to Democrats who traditionally oppose trade deals, Pelosi bragged during a closed-door meeting with her caucus last month about the concessions that her team of negotiators got. “We ate their lunch,” the Speaker said, according to multiple people in the room.

For his part, Trump boasted that he gave little away. “We left a little stuff for the union because we figured to get it signed, we will give a little bit and we did it, and then we have one great deal, and now you have the Democrats trying to take credit for this deal and that is okay,” the president said during his rally in Michigan on the night that he got impeached by the House. “Whatever it takes.”

-- Programming note: The Daily 202 will not publish on Monday in honor of MLK Day.

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei leads Friday prayers in Tehran.
(Khamenei website/via Reuters)

WHILE YOU WERE IN MORNING MEETINGS:

-- Leading Friday prayers in Iran, Iran's supreme leader said Trump is a "clown" who will push a "poisoned dagger" into the backs of the Iranian people. From the AP: Ayatollah Ali Khamenei "lashed out at Western countries, saying they are too weak to 'bring Iranians to their knees.' He said Britain, France and Germany, which this week triggered a dispute mechanism to try and bring Iran back into compliance with the unraveling 2015 nuclear agreement, were 'contemptible' governments and 'servants' of the United States."

-- The Pentagon belatedly acknowledged that 11 U.S. troops are being screened for traumatic brain injuries as a result of the Iranian missile attacks on Jan. 8 against two bases in Iraq,

according to the Wall Street Journal.

-- And the Taliban just signaled that some kind of agreement with the United States may be near. Susannah George reports: “The two sides ‘discussed the signing of the agreement and the ceremony for it,’ Taliban spokesman Suhail Shaheen tweeted Friday. It’s unclear what agreement Shaheen is referring to. Neither Shaheen nor the State Department responded to requests for comment. ... Friday’s announcement comes after statements from Pakistani and Taliban officials that the insurgent group is prepared to reduce violence in an effort to reboot stalled peace talks. But those statements lacked specifics on how long it would last, where it would apply and whether it would include the cessation of attacks on both Afghan and American forces.”

Schiff reads articles of impeachment to Senate

MORE ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Trump expanded his legal team to include Harvard emeritus law professor Alan Dershowitz, former Florida attorney general Pam Bondi and former independent counsels Ken Starr and Robert Ray. Josh Dawsey and John Wagner report: “In an interview with The Washington Post, Dershowitz said he would present arguments at the Senate trial that obstruction of Congress and abuse of power do not reach the constitutional standard to impeach a president for high crimes and misdemeanors. Starr and Ray, who investigated Bill Clinton, are also joining the team, as well as Bondi, who had been helping Trump with messaging during the impeachment proceedings. Trump wanted Dershowitz and Bondi on the team because he thinks they are talented on TV and convincing, a White House official familiar with the selections said. Starr, he thinks, gives him credence because of his role in the Clinton impeachment. Trump’s team is being led by White House counsel Pat Cipollone and also includes Jay Sekulow, a personal lawyer to the president.”

-- The trial opened yesterday with rancor over a swirl of new evidence and allegations about Trump's dealings with Ukraine brought forth by Rudy Giuliani's former associate Lev Parnas. Seung Min Kim, Rachael Bade, Mike DeBonis and Toluse Olorunnipa report: “Republican lawmakers appeared unswayed by the new information, focusing on attacking the Democratic-led investigation in the House for not uncovering the evidence before sending the impeachment articles to the Senate. ... Sen. James Lankford (R-Okla.) said it is the responsibility of the House, not the Senate, to gather evidence and present a case for impeachment. ... The chorus of Republicans unwilling to consider additional evidence served as an indication that Democrats will face an uphill climb in their attempts to further build a case ... Democrats accused their Republican colleagues of turning a blind eye to incriminating evidence and staging a political coverup ... Republicans sought to challenge his credibility by highlighting that he had been indicted on campaign finance charges last year. ...

“Roberts then asked the senators to 'solemnly swear' to 'do impartial justice according to the Constitution and laws.' While each senator said 'I do,' Democrats and Republicans immediately clashed over what constitutes a fair trial. The key point of division was whether to hear from witnesses who could shed additional light on Trump’s Ukraine dealings. ... Sen. Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.) was among a group of senators pushing the idea of ‘reciprocity’ whereby the Republican and Democratic sides would each get to call witnesses. ... Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) said it was ‘likely’ that she would vote for additional witnesses after the initial arguments. ... But some senators sought to dodge the question of witnesses altogether, aiming to avoid reporters and underscoring the tense atmosphere surrounding the case.”

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

"Hear ye! Hear ye! Here ye! All persons are commanded to keep silent, on pain of imprisonment while the House of Representatives is exhibiting to the Senate of the United States articles of impeachment against Donald John Trump, president of the United States," Senate Sergeant at Arms Michael Stenger announced as formalities began. (Felicia Sonmez)

-- The Senate trial will shape not only the president's legacy but also that of Republican senators and their party, writes Dan Balz: "Will they follow the lead of their House colleagues, who in the face of damning testimony embraced the president's explanations, that his interactions with Ukraine were 'perfect,' and that he was acting in the interests of the country rather than for personal political gain? Or will they judge him more independently, and critically, even if eventually stopping short of casting guilty votes?"

-- Parnas told CNN's Anderson Cooper last night that he and former national security adviser John Bolton "could fill in all the dots" about Trump's alleged abuse of power in Ukraine. (Colby Itkowitz)

People deny knowing Lev Parnas. Then they show up in a photo with him.

-- Parnas's attorney keeps posting images and footage of his client with Trump. One of the most recent posts features Parnas introducing former Ukrainian politician Roman Nasirov to Trump at

Mar-a-Lago three years ago. Nasirov is currently fighting abuse of office charges in Ukraine. (Paul Sonne)

-- “Trump hotel’s mix of GOP insiders and hangers-on helped give rise to impeachment episodes,” by David Fahrenthold, Josh Dawsey and Jonathan O’Connell: “They are key locations in the drama that led to [impeachment]: the steakhouse table where Trump’s private lawyer set out a nameplate, ‘Rudolph W. Giuliani, Private Office.’ The upstairs hideaway, where Giuliani’s team planned its outreach to Ukraine. And the expensive bar, where Giuliani’s team met an odd figure: Robert F. Hyde, a big-talking ex-Marine who claimed to have the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine under surveillance. ... For three years, Trump’s hotel near the White House has been a loose, anybody-welcome hangout for Republicans. ... ‘POTUS doesn’t know, or maybe doesn’t care, but that hotel is the root of many of his problems,’ said one Republican who is close to Giuliani and Trump ...

“One former Trump hotel staffer said that Giuliani was so comfortable there that he sometimes left without paying — ‘like he was at home.’ The restaurant often had to eat the bill, the former employee said ... At that table, Giuliani met repeatedly with Parnas and Igor Fruman, a pair of Soviet-born Americans who were seeking influence in Republican politics — and helping Giuliani pressure Ukraine to provide dirt on Biden. On the day Parnas and Fruman were arrested, charged with campaign-finance violations unrelated to Ukraine, they had previously had lunch at the Trump hotel.” Parnas told Maddow: “It was like a breeding ground at the Trump hotel.”

-- A federal judge’s delay may help Trump dodge a subpoena for his federal tax returns, House Democrats claim. Spencer S. Hsu reports: “U.S. District Judge Trevor N. McFadden said he would not rule in the matter until an appeals court decides whether to uphold another judge’s order that former Trump White House counsel Donald McGahn must comply with a House subpoena to testify in Congress’s impeachment probe. ... However, attorneys for the House ... strongly objected because the subpoena will expire when this term of Congress expires at the end of this year. They said the delay thwarts the House’s ability to ensure White House compliance with urgent legislative oversight, including whether Trump took inappropriate advantage of tax laws to engage in decades-long tax avoidance schemes.”

-- Vice President Pence was dangled as a bargaining chip — perhaps unwittingly — to exert leverage over a foreign government, according to Parnas. Ashley Parker, Rosalind S. Helderman and Paul Sonne report: “Parnas said he arrived for his May meeting in Kyiv with a top aide to Ukraine’s president-elect, Volodymyr Zelensky, with a clear directive from [Giuliani]: Unless Zelensky announced an investigation into [Joe Biden], his country’s relationship with the United States would sour. Among the consequences he threatened, Parnas said in interviews this week: that [Pence’s] expected attendance at Zelensky’s inauguration later that month — a high-level recognition that the Ukrainians urgently sought — would be canceled. When Ukrainians were unresponsive, Parnas said he relayed the bad news to Giuliani. ‘Okay, they’ll see,’ the president’s lawyer responded, Parnas told MSNBC. The very next day, Trump instructed Pence to cancel his trip to Ukraine for Zelensky’s inauguration, according to a whistleblower complaint and congressional testimony from one of Pence's own aides."

-- In an op-ed for today's Wall Street Journal, Pence celebrates Sen. Edmund Ross (R-Kan.) for voting against the removal of Andrew Johnson as president in 1868. Ross was a character in John F. Kennedy's book "Profiles in Courage," Pence notes. "Once Johnson was impeached, Ross was determined to render a fair judgment, resisting his own party's stampede. After he told a colleague he wouldn't let his political leanings affect his decision, word spread throughout the caucus that Ross was 'shaky.' The Republicans came down on him hard."

-- Ukrainian Prime Minister Oleksiy Honcharuk offered to resign after he criticized Zelensky in leaked audio. Isabelle Khurshudyan and David L. Stern report: "Zelensky's office tweeted that it received Honcharuk's resignation offer and 'will consider it.' ... In the recordings that leaked earlier this week, Honcharuk says in a closed-door meeting with several ministers that Zelensky 'doesn't understand how the economy works.' Honcharuk didn't deny that it's his voice in the audio, but said on Facebook that the recording was doctored from 'snippets of government meetings' to give the impression 'that I and my team do not respect the president.' ... Ukraine's Zerkalo Nedeli newspaper reported that Zelensky will reject Honcharuk's offer, citing unnamed sources in the presidential office."

The breakdown of the Warren-Sanders alliance | On the 2020 trail

2020 WATCH:

-- Being stuck in Washington for jury duty poses logistical challenges for the four senators running for president. Michael Scherer reports that Elizabeth Warren's husband and surrogates, including former housing secretary Julián Castro and Rep. Katie Porter (D-Calif.), will hold events on her behalf in Iowa during the trial. Amy Klobuchar's husband and daughter Abigail, along with Minnesota's governor Tim Walz, will stump for her. Michael Bennet, bypassing Iowa to focus on New Hampshire, plans satellite and radio interviews to keep in the mix. "I'd rather be in Iowa today," Bernie Sanders told reporters yesterday at the Capitol. "There's a caucus there in two and a half weeks. I'd rather be in New Hampshire and Nevada and so forth. But I swore a constitutional oath."

Klobuchar is the most likely to suffer because of the impeachment trial since she has a smaller organization than

Sanders and Warren. Right now, she's polling under the critical 15 percent threshold required to win delegates from Iowa. The state is next door to Minnesota, so her campaign will be functionally over if she underperforms.

Biden and Pete Buttigieg are both trying to capitalize on the absence of their rivals: "Buttigieg's campaign has argued that staying out of the polarized impeachment conversation will bolster his pitch as the candidate who can mollify partisan tensions and disrupt the traditional Washington ways of doing things. He held five events in Iowa on Thursday ... and has planned another five town halls on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week ... Biden will also host events in the state during those days. After playing defense in the early days of the impeachment saga, Biden's campaign has recently pivoted to embrace its complicated presence, arguing that the president's alleged efforts to find disparaging information on the Biden family in Ukraine is a reflection of the candidate's strength..."

We don't know how long the trial will go. Mitch McConnell says he's using the Clinton impeachment as a blueprint, forcing the senators to work every day but Sunday after taking MLK Day off. "That trial set aside three days for House prosecutors to present their case, three days for a White House defense, and three days for Senate questions and answers before debate and a vote on a motion to dismiss which took two days," Scherer notes. "If the current Senate follows the same format and votes promptly to end the proceeding, the presidential candidates would be forced to stay in Washington through Saturday, Feb. 1, two days before the Iowa caucuses.

"But Democrats, including the presidential contenders, continue to argue for the Senate to accept the testimony of new witnesses, a precedent that was followed in 1999. The vote to hear witness testimony that year led to a five-day break to take depositions, another day to prepare and present evidence, and seven more days of trial on the Senate floor. A repeat of that schedule ... could disrupt campaigning before the Feb. 11 New Hampshire primary.”

-- The rupture between Warren and Sanders over who called whom a liar has laid bare the central fight among liberals: Is the Trump era of scorched-earth politics a moment for purity or pragmatism? Annie Linskey and Sean Sullivan report: “On Thursday, as an array of left-leaning groups urged a truce, some acknowledged the difficulty of bridging the gap between two figures who, despite their shared status as liberal icons, have sharply different personalities and approaches. ... The two have not spoken since Tuesday evening, Sanders said ... and his campaign officials said the campaign sent emails to surrogates this week encouraging them not to escalate the conflict with Warren. ... Leaders of six liberal groups that have endorsed either Warren or Sanders issued a joint statement Thursday saying the senators’ campaigns and supporters ‘will need to find a way to cooperate.’ ... Similarly, on Wednesday, 18 liberal groups launched an effort that includes a pledge to ‘focus our fight for the nomination against candidates supported by the corporate wing, instead of fighting each other.’”

-- Jill Biden is trying to close the deal for her husband, one tiny Iowa town at a time. Holly Bailey reports: “Jill Biden is a relentless charm machine, with a jammed schedule of half a dozen or more events a day here as she seeks to win over voters. On a swing through rural Western Iowa this week, she spoke to small rooms of mostly undecided voters, including a group of about 10 people who had gathered inside a Mexican restaurant on a frigid Monday afternoon. ... The group, which included mostly older voters, looked embarrassed to admit to the wife of a candidate that they were still undecided, but Biden sought to reassure them."

-- The Trump campaign is trying to make inroads among women and communities of color, including blacks and Hispanics. From the AP: "The operation was in full force Thursday when the president's daughter-in-law, Lara Trump, senior campaign adviser Mercedes Schlapp and press secretary Kayleigh McEnany began a two-day 'Women for Trump' bus tour through Iowa aimed at engaging women with training sessions, round tables and panel discussions. ... Meanwhile, in must-win Florida, Vice President Mike Pence headlined a 'Latinos for Trump' event in Kissimmee at Nación de Fe, an evangelical church with a mostly Latino congregation as part of his own bus tour. ... Around the same time in battleground Pennsylvania, a few dozen people filled the pews of First Immanuel Baptist Church in Philadelphia for a 'Black Voices for Trump' discussion focused on Trump's impact on the African American community ahead of a volunteer training session. The church's pastor opened with a call to 'make Pennsylvania great again.'"

-- Fresh Washington Post-Ipsos polling, released this morning, shows how much work the president has cut out for him: More than 8 in 10 black Americans say they believe Trump is a racist and that he has made racism a bigger problem in the country:

Over 8 in 10 black Americans say Trump is a racist

Note: Responses from different questions; other response options not shown.

Source: Jan. 2-8, 2020, Washington Post-Ipsos KnowledgePanel poll of 1,088 black Americans with an error margin of +/- 3.5 percentage points

THE WASHINGTON POST

-- Evelyn Yang revealed she's a survivor of sexual assault by an OB-GYN who has been accused of abusing dozens of patients.

From CNN: "His name was Dr. Robert Hadden. ... Hadden started asking her inappropriate, unsolicited questions about sexual activity with her husband, which were unrelated to her health or the health of her unborn child. Looking back, she now believes he was prepping her for sexual abuse. ... 'The examinations became longer, more frequent, and I learned that they were unnecessary most of the time,' she recalled, but she told herself, 'I suppose I just need to trust him.' Yang says Hadden violated that trust in an unthinkable way when she was seven months pregnant. ... 'I knew it was wrong. I knew I was being assaulted,' she added. ...

"Yang found a lawyer, who discovered that the Manhattan district attorney's office had an open case against Hadden. Several other women had come forward with similar stories of being assaulted by Hadden while he was their OB-GYN. ... The office of Manhattan District Attorney Cy Vance is the same one that was lenient with Jeffrey Epstein over registering as a sex offender and had initially failed to prosecute Harvey Weinstein after allegations of sexual abuse ... In 2016, the Manhattan district attorney's office agreed to a plea deal with Hadden. He pleaded guilty to two of nine charges against him ... As part of the deal, Hadden would lose his medical license and register as the lowest-level sex offender, but he would not go to jail.”

The Virginia state Capitol building is surrounded by fencing in preparation for Monday's rally by gun rights advocates. (Dean Hoffmeyer/Richmond Times-Dispatch/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- A Circuit Court judge upheld Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam's temporary ban on firearms on the state capitol grounds ahead of Monday's gun rights rally. Gregory S. Schneider reports: "From

Friday night until Tuesday, weapons of any kind will be prohibited on the grounds of the Capitol under a state of emergency. Northam (D) said the precaution was necessary because of ‘credible intelligence’ that militias and gun rights advocates are threatening violence at the rally. ‘This is the right decision,’ Northam said in a statement about Richmond Chief Judge Joi Jeter Taylor’s ruling Thursday afternoon. ‘These threats are real — as evidenced by reports of neo-Nazis arrested this morning after discussing plans to head to Richmond with firearms.’ Gun rights groups filed an appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court on Thursday evening.”

-- Hours before the judge’s decision, the FBI arrested three alleged white supremacists believed to be headed to the pro-gun rally. From the AP: “The three men, members of The Base, were taken into custody on federal felony charges in Maryland and Delaware ... A criminal complaint charges Canadian national Patrik Jordan Mathews, 27, and Brian Mark Lemley Jr., 33, of Elkton, Maryland, with transporting a firearm and ammunition with intent to commit a felony. William Garfield Bilbrough IV, 19, of Denton, Maryland, is charged with ‘transporting and harboring aliens.’ ... In encrypted chat rooms, members of The Base have discussed committing acts of violence against blacks and Jews, ways to make improvised explosive devices, their military-style training camps and their desire to create a white ‘ethno-state,’ according to an FBI agent’s affidavit. ... Mathews illegally crossed the U.S. border near Minnesota in August and Bilbrough traveled 600 miles ... each way in a car to pick him up and bring him to Maryland, authorities said. Mathews, who appeared in court Thursday with a bushy beard, was a combat engineer in the Canadian Army Reserve.

Lemley was a 'cavalry scout' in the U.S. Army, court papers show.”

-- Bill Barr's Justice Department is investigating years-old disclosures of classified information about a Russian intelligence document, a backward-looking inquiry that appears to be targeting former FBI director Jim Comey with the goal of chilling press oversight of the government. From the Times: “Law enforcement officials are scrutinizing at least two news articles about the F.B.I. and Mr. Comey, published in The New York Times and The Washington Post in 2017, that mentioned the Russian government document ... Hackers working for Dutch intelligence officials obtained the document and provided it to the F.B.I., and both its existence and the collection of it were highly classified secrets ... The document played a key role in Mr. Comey’s decision to sideline the Justice Department and announce in July 2016 that the F.B.I. would not recommend that Hillary Clinton face charges in her use of a private email server to conduct government business while secretary of state.” Trump has previously called on his loyalists to use the levers of law enforcement to pursue his perceived enemies.

-- The House voted to overturn a Trump rule that makes loan forgiveness harder, setting the stage for a Senate fight. Danielle Douglas-Gabriel reports: “The 231-to-180 vote fell largely along party lines, with six Republicans endorsing a resolution to scrap the administration’s overhaul of a 1995 law known as ‘borrower defense to repayment.’ The law gives the Education Department authority to cancel the federal debt of students whose colleges misled them about graduation or job placement rates to get them to enroll. ... The Trump administration finalized its rewrite of the Obama rule in September, limiting the time borrowers have to apply for relief and requiring them to prove financial harm. The rule will take effect July 1.”

-- A panel of aviation safety experts assembled by the Department of Transportation defended the Federal Aviation Administration system that approved the deadly 737 Max jets. Ian Duncan and Michael Laris report: The panel dismissed “criticisms that the agency gives manufacturers too much authority to oversee their own work. Instead, the panel warned against overhauling the system the FAA uses to review new aircraft. The group, led by Lee Moak, the former head of a major pilots union, found that the current system of allowing Boeing and other manufacturers to oversee much of their own work both ‘promotes safety’ and allows ‘industry and innovation to thrive.’ ... Boeing, whose standing has been badly hurt by the crashes and subsequent internal messages, said in a statement that it appreciated the committee’s work and would study its recommendations.”

-- A coalition of 14 states and D.C. sued to stop the Trump administration’s plan to take away food stamps from 700,000 unemployed people. Spencer S. Hsu reports: “In the lawsuit, attorneys general from the District, Maryland, Virginia, New York, California and other states ... asserted the justification for the cuts were based on no evidence and ignored local labor market conditions. ... In the lawsuit, states along the northeastern U.S. corridor joined by California, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada and Oregon said their governments would face heavy new administrative and financial burdens, economic damages and increased costs from ‘the negative health effects of malnutrition and instability.’”

-- The New York Mets parted ways with Carlos Beltrán before he oversaw a single game amid the sign-stealing scandal that has roiled Major League Baseball. Dave Sheinin reports: “Beltrán, 42, was implicated Monday in the Astros’ scheme, in which players, along with then-bench coach Alex Cora, used a center field camera and a video monitor behind their dugout to steal the signs of opposing catchers. Beltrán, a designated hitter for the 2017 Astros, who won the World Series that fall, was the only player from that team named as a participant in the scheme.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Republican lobbyist Bruce Mehlman makes these five predictions in his quarterly PowerPoint presentation for clients:

2020 RECOMMENDATIONS FOR LEADERS

- 1. Disruption Is Accelerating
  - Understand what new innovations are coming and the challenges & opportunities they present for you, your stakeholders & competitors.
- 2. Political Risk Is Growing
  - Conduct scenario planning to identify and mitigate risks in a deglobalizing world; include experts in politics and policy in business considerations.
- 3. Traditional Gatekeepers Are Losing Power
  - Expand stakeholder outreach to those who can validate your brand locally and partner on your priorities because you supported theirs.
- 4. A Reform Era Is Coming
  - Identify and support policy reforms that meaningfully expand opportunity... global populism will continue rising until more citizens feel “dealt-in”.
- 5. Expect to See More Black Swans
  - Prepare for a greater number of high-impact, formerly-low-probability events to protect your license to operate and anticipate opportunities.

MEHLMAN CASTAGNIETTI
ROSEN & THOMAS

As the Senate accepted the articles, Trump tweeted an instantly iconic message:

The president seems to often turn to a county-by-county map of the 2016 election results for reassurance in difficult moments:

Dan Zak ✓
@MrDanZak

I have also spotted this there. People were carrying it around the Oval Office the day he was impeached, at dusk, & then took it on his helicopter. Seems like a security blanket? When you feel insecure about your 3-million vote deficit, & your poll numbers, just look at the red. twitter.com/betsy\_klein/st...

Betsy Klein ✓ @betsy_klein

Spotted on the resolute desk in the Oval Office during the President's event on school prayer: a map of 2016 election results by county

♥ 523 8:37 PM - Jan 16, 2020

💬 186 people are talking about this

Sen. Martha McSally (R-Ariz.) lashed out at a CNN reporter who asked her about whether witnesses should be called in the impeachment trial:

The lawmaker, who was appointed to fill John McCain's seat when he died after she lost a Senate race in 2018, shared a staffer's video of the encounter and soon after her campaign was fundraising off the controversy -- with support from the Trump campaign. "The attack on a veteran congressional reporter might have been considered out of character for McSally as recently as two years ago, when she was known as a moderate House member focused on national security matters and reticent to comment on Trump's controversial remarks," Mike DeBonis and Lateshia Beachum note. But McSally has chosen to fully hitch her horse to Trump's in a bid to win a full term this November in a state that's trending away from Republicans.

Martha McSally ✓
@SenMcSallyAZ

A) you are.

B) here's the video. twitter.com/mkraju/status/...

Manu Raju ✓ @mkraju

Sen. Martha McSally, a Republican facing a difficult election race, lashed out when I asked if she would consider new evidence as part of the Senate trial. "You're a liberal hack - I'm not talking to you. You're a liberal hack." She then walked into a hearing room.

♡ 45.7K 3:22 PM - Jan 16, 2020

💬 48.6K people are talking about this

The president's daughter-in-law talked about Trump's love for money in a room full of Iowa women:

Put into this historical perspective, the American election doesn't sound so bad:

And a presidential candidate won a push-up contest in New Hampshire:

Jean Mackin ✓
@JeanWMUR

One of those memorable New Hampshire Primary moments: @TulsiGabbard challenged to a push-up contest at a Manchester Town Hall. She wins. #nhpolitics #fitn #wmur

♡ 4,012 1:03 AM - Jan 17, 2020

💬 844 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert reviewed Parnas's evidence:

Trevor Noah went through a list of Trump's "friends":

Rep. Ayanna Pressley (D-Mass.) revealed for the first time publicly that she has alopecia:

"I'm ready now because I want to be free from the secret, and the shame that the secret carries with it," Pressley said in an interview with the Root. (Michael Brice-Saddler)

Washington Conservatory of Music piano fellow Michael Adcock talked to The Post about "Impeachment Polka," written during the impeachment of President Andrew Johnson:

'A real ear-worm': What one pianist thinks about the 'Impeachment Polka'

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Congress shows the ability to legislate through impeachment
Date: Friday, January 17, 2020 9:59:42 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Congress shows the ability to legislate through impeachment

Roberts sworn in, administers oath to senators

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Moments before the start of the third presidential impeachment trial in U.S. history on Thursday, the Senate voted 89 to 10 to approve President Trump's landmark trade deal with Canada and Mexico.

This rewrite of the 25-year-old North American Free Trade Agreement, which allows Trump to deliver on a signature campaign promise from 2016, is one of the most significant trade votes in a generation. It passed with overwhelming bipartisan support from a coalition of strange bedfellows, including the AFL-CIO and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Final passage came a day after Trump signed a partial economic deal with China, another political victory for a White House that's eager to defuse trade tensions in an election year.

The subsequent reading of the two articles of impeachment and the swearing-in of the senators as jurors soon overshadowed these hard-fought triumphs for Trump. But the trade vote nevertheless gives cover for lawmakers in both parties to reassure constituents back home that they're getting results, even amid contentious deliberations over whether the president abused the power of his office to coerce a foreign government to boost his reelection prospects by announcing an investigation of Democratic challenger Joe Biden.

Trump has boasted that the specter of impeachment, and the desire of Democrats not to look like they're doing nothing, got this deal across the finish line. Last month, one day after voting almost entirely on party lines to impeach Trump, the House also passed the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement on a lopsided vote of 385 to 41. With their eyes on the fall elections, Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) have separately pointed to the USMCA as proof that their side is focused on the pocketbook issues that voters care most about.

Sen. Pat Toomey (R-Pa.) rides the Senate subway to the Capitol. (Matt McClain/The Washington Post)

-- Eight Senate Democrats and Bernie Sanders voted against the deal. But only one Republican broke with the president: Sen. Pat Toomey (R-Pa.), perhaps the most outspoken advocate for free trade in Congress. Toomey unsuccessfully raised procedural concerns about the USMCA on the Senate floor before the vote. “I was very disturbed to see a new trade agreement that's designed in part to diminish trade – very much the wrong direction,” he explained afterward in an interview. “I felt it was important to make a stand and make the case that this certainly shouldn't be a template for future agreements.”

Toomey called me last night as he drove home to Pennsylvania for the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday weekend at the end of one of the most surreal days of his nine years in the Senate. “It's just very strange,” Toomey said. “There were moments that seemed surreal to me today in the Senate. It's just such an unusual moment.” Now sworn in as a juror, Toomey will spend the weekend at home and return for proceedings to begin in earnest on Tuesday.

He has complained that Republicans got “rolled” because the Trump administration made too many concessions to Democrats in a desire to get something done. He said “the worst provisions” in the new deal relate to automobiles. For example, there’s now a requirement that at least 30 percent of cars – and 40 percent by 2023 – must be made by workers who earn at least $16 an hour. This will raise wages in Mexico, but Toomey said it will also raise prices to buy lower-end small cars that are assembled south of the border. The deal also sunsets after 16 years, meaning that the three countries will need to go through another renegotiation process, which Toomey fears will chill business investment by introducing a cloud of uncertainty about the future terms of trade.

The USMCA was initially signed a year ago by Trump, but the requirement that it must first be ratified by the House gave Pelosi leverage to demand changes and concessions, including higher labor standards in Mexico, higher environmental standards and stronger enforcement mechanisms. A team of nine House Democrats worked with U.S. Trade Representative Bob Lighthizer and his staff for months to reach a compromise. At Pelosi’s behest, the renegotiated deal also killed a provision pushed by pharmaceutical companies that would have guaranteed them 10 years of market exclusivity for biologics, a class of drugs that are especially costly.

Pat Toomey listens as President Trump speaks about trade policy during a 2018 meeting in the Cabinet Room at the White House. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

-- Toomey isn't as flashy about it as some of his hardline colleagues who love to go on television, but the vote underscored his record as one of the most reliable fiscal conservatives in Congress. The 58-year-old served in the House for three terms until 2004. After narrowly losing a primary challenge that year against then-Republican Sen. Arlen Specter, Toomey served as president of the Club for Growth, the conservative group created to support open markets and oppose regulations. As Toomey geared up for a rematch against Specter in 2010, the incumbent changed parties after being promised Barack Obama's endorsement. But Specter lost in the Democratic primary to Joe Sestak. Toomey then won the seat that fall. He got narrowly reelected in one of the marquee races of 2016, as Trump became the first Republican presidential candidate to carry the Keystone State since 1988.

Toomey has picked his fights carefully in the Trump era. All told, he's voted with the president's position 83 percent of the time in the current Congress, according to the running tabulation by FiveThirtyEight. But he's twice supported efforts to overturn Trump's declaration of a national emergency for border wall funding, and he backed the resolution of disapproval last February for withdrawing U.S. forces from Syria.

Since Trump took office, the junior senator has voted against all the major omnibus spending bills and the bloated farm bill. He's opposed raising the debt ceiling and joined small groups of senators in voting against hurricane relief packages that weren't paid for with spending cuts elsewhere. Many Republicans insisted on this throughout Obama's presidency but have reversed their approach under Trump. Toomey has stayed consistent on these kinds of votes.

Throughout, trade has remained Toomey's signature issue. "I've been very, very candid with everyone in the administration – from the president to the vice president and the trade representative – they know exactly where I stand,” he told me. “I tried hard to persuade them of my point of view. I obviously failed, but to their credit, they always heard me out.”

Trump campaigned four years ago as a protectionist, rejecting decades of Republican orthodoxy. The president’s support for old-fashioned industrial policies and a reflexive inclination to impose tariffs on other countries – something he threatened to do against a trio of European leaders just last week if they didn’t cave to his demands on Iran – appear to be among his longest and most deeply-held beliefs.

But Toomey said he believes “there’s generally still very broad support” for the concept of free trade in his party. “If you asked the Republican senators if they consider themselves ‘free traders,’ I think the vast majority would say they do, but I acknowledge that there has always been a protectionist element,” he said. “There are protectionists among Republicans who would like to further restrict trade, and I do think it’s important for free traders to push back on that.”

McConnell said last month that the final deal was “not as good as I had hoped” but better than nothing. He and the vast majority of the GOP conference are loath to oppose Trump, especially on what he’s described as his top legislative priority.

-- Toomey’s ultimate support for the president at the end of this impeachment trial is not in doubt. But the lone holdout among Senate Republicans on the USMCA offers a timely reminder that it’s still possible to hate the sin (protectionism, in this case) but still love the sinner (Trump). “Look, I do support the president,” he said. "I'm going to fully support his reelection campaign. I'm going to campaign for him. I think his policies have generally been terrific for the economy, and I think his foreign policy has made us more secure. But I have a separate election certificate. I was elected by the people of Pennsylvania to serve them in the Senate, and I have a responsibility to reach my own judgments and conclusions about policy, so occasionally I'm going to disagree with the president. When I do, I've got an obligation to take that stand."

Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) leaves a news conference on Thursday. (Julio Cortez/AP)

-- Chuck Schumer was one of the Democrats who voted no. The minority leader seems worried about a primary challenge from his left in 2022 by someone like Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez. That also seemed to be a motivating factor for Sen. Ed Markey (Mass.), who voted no after his primary challenger Rep. Joe Kennedy III opposed the deal last month. Schumer insisted that he voted no because the deal “does not address climate change” and includes “handouts for the oil and gas industry, such as lifting tariffs on tar sands.” Markey, a sponsor of the Green New Deal, also cited environmental concerns.

Former, and perhaps future, presidential candidates Kirsten Gillibrand (N.Y.), Cory Booker (N.J.) and Kamala Harris (Calif.) had essentially boxed themselves into voting no while still in the running. The remaining three Democratic opponents were Rhode Island’s senators, Jack Reed and Sheldon Whitehouse, plus Hawaii’s Brian Schatz.

One of the most interesting clashes during the Democratic debate on Tuesday night in Des Moines was over this USMCA pact. Sanders expressed his opposition while rivals Joe Biden, Elizabeth Warren, Amy Klobuchar and Pete Buttigieg endorsed the deal, at least partly, to help Iowa farmers who have suffered from Trump’s trade wars.

Trying to sell the package to Democrats who traditionally oppose trade deals, Pelosi bragged during a closed-door meeting with her caucus last month about the concessions that her team of negotiators got. “We ate their lunch,” the Speaker said, according to multiple people in the room.

For his part, Trump boasted that he gave little away. “We left a little stuff for the union because we figured to get it signed, we will give a little bit and we did it, and then we have one great deal, and now you have the Democrats trying to take credit for this deal and that is okay,” the president said during his rally in Michigan on the night that he got

impeached by the House. “Whatever it takes.”

-- Programming note: The Daily 202 will not publish on Monday in honor of MLK Day.

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei leads Friday prayers in Tehran.
(Khamenei website/via Reuters)

WHILE YOU WERE IN MORNING MEETINGS:

-- Leading Friday prayers in Iran, Iran's supreme leader said Trump is a "clown" who will push a "poisoned dagger" into the backs of the Iranian people. From the AP: Ayatollah Ali Khamenei "lashed out at Western countries, saying they are too weak to 'bring Iranians to their knees.' He said Britain, France and Germany, which this week triggered a dispute mechanism to try and bring Iran back into compliance with the unraveling 2015 nuclear agreement, were 'contemptible' governments and 'servants' of the United States."

-- The Pentagon belatedly acknowledged that 11 U.S. troops are being screened for traumatic brain injuries as a result of the Iranian missile attacks on Jan. 8 against two bases in Iraq,

according to the Wall Street Journal.

-- And the Taliban just signaled that some kind of agreement with the United States may be near. Susannah George reports: “The two sides ‘discussed the signing of the agreement and the ceremony for it,’ Taliban spokesman Suhail Shaheen tweeted Friday. It’s unclear what agreement Shaheen is referring to. Neither Shaheen nor the State Department responded to requests for comment. ... Friday’s announcement comes after statements from Pakistani and Taliban officials that the insurgent group is prepared to reduce violence in an effort to reboot stalled peace talks. But those statements lacked specifics on how long it would last, where it would apply and whether it would include the cessation of attacks on both Afghan and American forces.”

Schiff reads articles of impeachment to Senate

MORE ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Trump expanded his legal team to include Harvard emeritus law professor Alan Dershowitz, former Florida attorney general Pam Bondi and former independent counsels Ken Starr and Robert Ray. Josh Dawsey and John Wagner report: “In an interview with The Washington Post, Dershowitz said he would present arguments at the Senate trial that obstruction of Congress and abuse of power do not reach the constitutional standard to impeach a president for high crimes and misdemeanors. Starr and Ray, who investigated Bill Clinton, are also joining the team, as well as Bondi, who had been helping Trump with messaging during the impeachment proceedings. Trump wanted Dershowitz and Bondi on the team because he thinks they are talented on TV and convincing, a White House official familiar with the selections said. Starr, he thinks, gives him credence because of his role in the Clinton impeachment. Trump’s team is being led by White House counsel Pat Cipollone and also includes Jay Sekulow, a personal lawyer to the president.”

-- The trial opened yesterday with rancor over a swirl of new evidence and allegations about Trump's dealings with Ukraine brought forth by Rudy Giuliani's former associate Lev Parnas. Seung Min Kim, Rachael Bade, Mike DeBonis and Toluse Olorunnipa report: “Republican lawmakers appeared unswayed by the new information, focusing on attacking the Democratic-led investigation in the House for not uncovering the evidence before sending the impeachment articles to the Senate. ... Sen. James Lankford (R-Okla.) said it is the responsibility of the House, not the Senate, to gather evidence and present a case for impeachment. ... The chorus of Republicans unwilling to consider additional evidence served as an indication that Democrats will face an uphill climb in their attempts to further build a case ... Democrats accused their Republican colleagues of turning a blind eye to incriminating evidence and staging a political coverup ... Republicans sought to challenge his credibility by highlighting that he had been indicted on campaign finance charges last year. ...

“Roberts then asked the senators to 'solemnly swear' to 'do impartial justice according to the Constitution and laws.' While each senator said 'I do,' Democrats and Republicans immediately clashed over what constitutes a fair trial. The key point of division was whether to hear from witnesses who could shed additional light on Trump’s Ukraine dealings. ... Sen. Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.) was among a group of senators pushing the idea of ‘reciprocity’ whereby the Republican and Democratic sides would each get to call witnesses. ... Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) said it was ‘likely’ that she would vote for additional witnesses after the initial arguments. ... But some senators sought to dodge the question of witnesses altogether, aiming to avoid reporters and underscoring the tense atmosphere surrounding the case.”

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

"Hear ye! Hear ye! Here ye! All persons are commanded to keep silent, on pain of imprisonment while the House of Representatives is exhibiting to the Senate of the United States articles of impeachment against Donald John Trump, president of the United States," Senate Sergeant at Arms Michael Stenger announced as formalities began. (Felicia Sonmez)

-- The Senate trial will shape not only the president's legacy but also that of Republican senators and their party, writes Dan Balz: "Will they follow the lead of their House colleagues, who in the face of damning testimony embraced the president's explanations, that his interactions with Ukraine were 'perfect,' and that he was acting in the interests of the country rather than for personal political gain? Or will they judge him more independently, and critically, even if eventually stopping short of casting guilty votes?"

-- Parnas told CNN's Anderson Cooper last night that he and former national security adviser John Bolton "could fill in all the dots" about Trump's alleged abuse of power in Ukraine. (Colby Itkowitz)

People deny knowing Lev Parnas. Then they show up in a photo with him.

-- Parnas's attorney keeps posting images and footage of his client with Trump. One of the most recent posts features Parnas introducing former Ukrainian politician Roman Nasirov to Trump at

Mar-a-Lago three years ago. Nasirov is currently fighting abuse of office charges in Ukraine. (Paul Sonne)

-- “Trump hotel’s mix of GOP insiders and hangers-on helped give rise to impeachment episodes,” by David Fahrenthold, Josh Dawsey and Jonathan O’Connell: “They are key locations in the drama that led to [impeachment]: the steakhouse table where Trump’s private lawyer set out a nameplate, ‘Rudolph W. Giuliani, Private Office.’ The upstairs hideaway, where Giuliani’s team planned its outreach to Ukraine. And the expensive bar, where Giuliani’s team met an odd figure: Robert F. Hyde, a big-talking ex-Marine who claimed to have the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine under surveillance. ... For three years, Trump’s hotel near the White House has been a loose, anybody-welcome hangout for Republicans. ... ‘POTUS doesn’t know, or maybe doesn’t care, but that hotel is the root of many of his problems,’ said one Republican who is close to Giuliani and Trump ...

“One former Trump hotel staffer said that Giuliani was so comfortable there that he sometimes left without paying — ‘like he was at home.’ The restaurant often had to eat the bill, the former employee said ... At that table, Giuliani met repeatedly with Parnas and Igor Fruman, a pair of Soviet-born Americans who were seeking influence in Republican politics — and helping Giuliani pressure Ukraine to provide dirt on Biden. On the day Parnas and Fruman were arrested, charged with campaign-finance violations unrelated to Ukraine, they had previously had lunch at the Trump hotel.” Parnas told Maddow: “It was like a breeding ground at the Trump hotel.”

-- A federal judge’s delay may help Trump dodge a subpoena for

his federal tax returns, House Democrats claim. Spencer S. Hsu reports: “U.S. District Judge Trevor N. McFadden said he would not rule in the matter until an appeals court decides whether to uphold another judge’s order that former Trump White House counsel Donald McGahn must comply with a House subpoena to testify in Congress’s impeachment probe. ... However, attorneys for the House ... strongly objected because the subpoena will expire when this term of Congress expires at the end of this year. They said the delay thwarts the House’s ability to ensure White House compliance with urgent legislative oversight, including whether Trump took inappropriate advantage of tax laws to engage in decades-long tax avoidance schemes.”

-- Vice President Pence was dangled as a bargaining chip — perhaps unwittingly — to exert leverage over a foreign government, according to Parnas. Ashley Parker, Rosalind S. Helderman and Paul Sonne report: “Parnas said he arrived for his May meeting in Kyiv with a top aide to Ukraine’s president-elect, Volodymyr Zelensky, with a clear directive from [Giuliani]: Unless Zelensky announced an investigation into [Joe Biden], his country’s relationship with the United States would sour. Among the consequences he threatened, Parnas said in interviews this week: that [Pence’s] expected attendance at Zelensky’s inauguration later that month — a high-level recognition that the Ukrainians urgently sought — would be canceled. When Ukrainians were unresponsive, Parnas said he relayed the bad news to Giuliani. ‘Okay, they’ll see,’ the president’s lawyer responded, Parnas told MSNBC. The very next day, Trump instructed Pence to cancel his trip to Ukraine for Zelensky’s inauguration, according to a whistleblower

complaint and congressional testimony from one of Pence's own aides."

-- In an op-ed for today's Wall Street Journal, Pence celebrates Sen. Edmund Ross (R-Kan.) for voting against the removal of Andrew Johnson as president in 1868. Ross was a character in John F. Kennedy's book "Profiles in Courage," Pence notes. "Once Johnson was impeached, Ross was determined to render a fair judgment, resisting his own party's stampede. After he told a colleague he wouldn't let his political leanings affect his decision, word spread throughout the caucus that Ross was 'shaky.' The Republicans came down on him hard."

-- Ukrainian Prime Minister Oleksiy Honcharuk offered to resign after he criticized Zelensky in leaked audio. Isabelle Khurshudyan and David L. Stern report: "Zelensky's office tweeted that it received Honcharuk's resignation offer and 'will consider it.' ... In the recordings that leaked earlier this week, Honcharuk says in a closed-door meeting with several ministers that Zelensky 'doesn't understand how the economy works.' Honcharuk didn't deny that it's his voice in the audio, but said on Facebook that the recording was doctored from 'snippets of government meetings' to give the impression 'that I and my team do not respect the president.' ... Ukraine's Zerkalo Nedeli newspaper reported that Zelensky will reject Honcharuk's offer, citing unnamed sources in the presidential office."

The breakdown of the Warren-Sanders alliance | On the 2020 trail

2020 WATCH:

-- Being stuck in Washington for jury duty poses logistical challenges for the four senators running for president. Michael Scherer reports that Elizabeth Warren's husband and surrogates, including former housing secretary Julián Castro and Rep. Katie Porter (D-Calif.), will hold events on her behalf in Iowa during the trial. Amy Klobuchar's husband and daughter Abigail, along with Minnesota's governor Tim Walz, will stump for her. Michael Bennet, bypassing Iowa to focus on New Hampshire, plans satellite and radio interviews to keep in the mix. "I'd rather be in Iowa today," Bernie Sanders told reporters yesterday at the Capitol. "There's a caucus there in two and a half weeks. I'd rather be in New Hampshire and Nevada and so forth. But I swore a constitutional oath."

Klobuchar is the most likely to suffer because of the impeachment trial since she has a smaller organization than

Sanders and Warren. Right now, she's polling under the critical 15 percent threshold required to win delegates from Iowa. The state is next door to Minnesota, so her campaign will be functionally over if she underperforms.

Biden and Pete Buttigieg are both trying to capitalize on the absence of their rivals: "Buttigieg's campaign has argued that staying out of the polarized impeachment conversation will bolster his pitch as the candidate who can mollify partisan tensions and disrupt the traditional Washington ways of doing things. He held five events in Iowa on Thursday ... and has planned another five town halls on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week ... Biden will also host events in the state during those days. After playing defense in the early days of the impeachment saga, Biden's campaign has recently pivoted to embrace its complicated presence, arguing that the president's alleged efforts to find disparaging information on the Biden family in Ukraine is a reflection of the candidate's strength..."

We don't know how long the trial will go. Mitch McConnell says he's using the Clinton impeachment as a blueprint, forcing the senators to work every day but Sunday after taking MLK Day off. "That trial set aside three days for House prosecutors to present their case, three days for a White House defense, and three days for Senate questions and answers before debate and a vote on a motion to dismiss which took two days," Scherer notes. "If the current Senate follows the same format and votes promptly to end the proceeding, the presidential candidates would be forced to stay in Washington through Saturday, Feb. 1, two days before the Iowa caucuses.

"But Democrats, including the presidential contenders, continue to argue for the Senate to accept the testimony of new witnesses, a precedent that was followed in 1999. The vote to hear witness testimony that year led to a five-day break to take depositions, another day to prepare and present evidence, and seven more days of trial on the Senate floor. A repeat of that schedule ... could disrupt campaigning before the Feb. 11 New Hampshire primary.”

-- The rupture between Warren and Sanders over who called whom a liar has laid bare the central fight among liberals: Is the Trump era of scorched-earth politics a moment for purity or pragmatism? Annie Linskey and Sean Sullivan report: “On Thursday, as an array of left-leaning groups urged a truce, some acknowledged the difficulty of bridging the gap between two figures who, despite their shared status as liberal icons, have sharply different personalities and approaches. ... The two have not spoken since Tuesday evening, Sanders said ... and his campaign officials said the campaign sent emails to surrogates this week encouraging them not to escalate the conflict with Warren. ... Leaders of six liberal groups that have endorsed either Warren or Sanders issued a joint statement Thursday saying the senators’ campaigns and supporters ‘will need to find a way to cooperate.’ ... Similarly, on Wednesday, 18 liberal groups launched an effort that includes a pledge to ‘focus our fight for the nomination against candidates supported by the corporate wing, instead of fighting each other.’”

-- Jill Biden is trying to close the deal for her husband, one tiny Iowa town at a time. Holly Bailey reports: “Jill Biden is a relentless charm machine, with a jammed schedule of half a dozen or more events a day here as she seeks to win over voters. On a swing through rural Western Iowa this week, she spoke to small rooms of mostly undecided voters, including a group of about 10 people who had gathered inside a Mexican restaurant on a frigid Monday afternoon. ... The group, which included mostly older voters, looked embarrassed to admit to the wife of a candidate that they were still undecided, but Biden sought to reassure them."

-- The Trump campaign is trying to make inroads among women and communities of color, including blacks and Hispanics. From the AP: "The operation was in full force Thursday when the president's daughter-in-law, Lara Trump, senior campaign adviser Mercedes Schlapp and press secretary Kayleigh McEnany began a two-day 'Women for Trump' bus tour through Iowa aimed at engaging women with training sessions, round tables and panel discussions. ... Meanwhile, in must-win Florida, Vice President Mike Pence headlined a 'Latinos for Trump' event in Kissimmee at Nación de Fe, an evangelical church with a mostly Latino congregation as part of his own bus tour. ... Around the same time in battleground Pennsylvania, a few dozen people filled the pews of First Immanuel Baptist Church in Philadelphia for a 'Black Voices for Trump' discussion focused on Trump's impact on the African American community ahead of a volunteer training session. The church's pastor opened with a call to 'make Pennsylvania great again.'"

-- Fresh Washington Post-Ipsos polling, released this morning, shows how much work the president has cut out for him: More than 8 in 10 black Americans say they believe Trump is a racist and that he has made racism a bigger problem in the country:

Over 8 in 10 black Americans say Trump is a racist

Note: Responses from different questions; other response options not shown.

Source: Jan. 2-8, 2020, Washington Post-Ipsos KnowledgePanel poll of 1,088 black Americans with an error margin of +/- 3.5 percentage points

THE WASHINGTON POST

-- Evelyn Yang revealed she's a survivor of sexual assault by an OB-GYN who has been accused of abusing dozens of patients.

From CNN: "His name was Dr. Robert Hadden. ... Hadden started asking her inappropriate, unsolicited questions about sexual activity with her husband, which were unrelated to her health or the health of her unborn child. Looking back, she now believes he was prepping her for sexual abuse. ... 'The examinations became longer, more frequent, and I learned that they were unnecessary most of the time,' she recalled, but she told herself, 'I suppose I just need to trust him.' Yang says Hadden violated that trust in an unthinkable way when she was seven months pregnant. ... 'I knew it was wrong. I knew I was being assaulted,' she added. ...

"Yang found a lawyer, who discovered that the Manhattan district attorney's office had an open case against Hadden. Several other women had come forward with similar stories of being assaulted by Hadden while he was their OB-GYN. ... The office of Manhattan District Attorney Cy Vance is the same one that was lenient with Jeffrey Epstein over registering as a sex offender and had initially failed to prosecute Harvey Weinstein after allegations of sexual abuse ... In 2016, the Manhattan district attorney's office agreed to a plea deal with Hadden. He pleaded guilty to two of nine charges against him ... As part of the deal, Hadden would lose his medical license and register as the lowest-level sex offender, but he would not go to jail.”

The Virginia state Capitol building is surrounded by fencing in preparation for Monday's rally by gun rights advocates. (Dean Hoffmeyer/Richmond Times-Dispatch/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- A Circuit Court judge upheld Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam's temporary ban on firearms on the state capitol grounds ahead of Monday's gun rights rally. Gregory S. Schneider reports: "From

Friday night until Tuesday, weapons of any kind will be prohibited on the grounds of the Capitol under a state of emergency. Northam (D) said the precaution was necessary because of ‘credible intelligence’ that militias and gun rights advocates are threatening violence at the rally. ‘This is the right decision,’ Northam said in a statement about Richmond Chief Judge Joi Jeter Taylor’s ruling Thursday afternoon. ‘These threats are real — as evidenced by reports of neo-Nazis arrested this morning after discussing plans to head to Richmond with firearms.’ Gun rights groups filed an appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court on Thursday evening.”

-- Hours before the judge’s decision, the FBI arrested three alleged white supremacists believed to be headed to the pro-gun rally. From the AP: “The three men, members of The Base, were taken into custody on federal felony charges in Maryland and Delaware ... A criminal complaint charges Canadian national Patrik Jordan Mathews, 27, and Brian Mark Lemley Jr., 33, of Elkton, Maryland, with transporting a firearm and ammunition with intent to commit a felony. William Garfield Bilbrough IV, 19, of Denton, Maryland, is charged with ‘transporting and harboring aliens.’ ... In encrypted chat rooms, members of The Base have discussed committing acts of violence against blacks and Jews, ways to make improvised explosive devices, their military-style training camps and their desire to create a white ‘ethno-state,’ according to an FBI agent’s affidavit. ... Mathews illegally crossed the U.S. border near Minnesota in August and Bilbrough traveled 600 miles ... each way in a car to pick him up and bring him to Maryland, authorities said. Mathews, who appeared in court Thursday with a bushy beard, was a combat engineer in the Canadian Army Reserve.

Lemley was a 'cavalry scout' in the U.S. Army, court papers show.”

-- Bill Barr's Justice Department is investigating years-old disclosures of classified information about a Russian intelligence document, a backward-looking inquiry that appears to be targeting former FBI director Jim Comey with the goal of chilling press oversight of the government. From the Times: “Law enforcement officials are scrutinizing at least two news articles about the F.B.I. and Mr. Comey, published in The New York Times and The Washington Post in 2017, that mentioned the Russian government document ... Hackers working for Dutch intelligence officials obtained the document and provided it to the F.B.I., and both its existence and the collection of it were highly classified secrets ... The document played a key role in Mr. Comey’s decision to sideline the Justice Department and announce in July 2016 that the F.B.I. would not recommend that Hillary Clinton face charges in her use of a private email server to conduct government business while secretary of state.” Trump has previously called on his loyalists to use the levers of law enforcement to pursue his perceived enemies.

-- The House voted to overturn a Trump rule that makes loan forgiveness harder, setting the stage for a Senate fight. Danielle Douglas-Gabriel reports: “The 231-to-180 vote fell largely along party lines, with six Republicans endorsing a resolution to scrap the administration’s overhaul of a 1995 law known as ‘borrower defense to repayment.’ The law gives the Education Department authority to cancel the federal debt of students whose colleges misled them about graduation or job placement rates to get them to enroll. ... The Trump administration finalized its rewrite of the Obama rule in September, limiting the time borrowers have to apply for relief and requiring them to prove financial harm. The rule will take effect July 1.”

-- A panel of aviation safety experts assembled by the Department of Transportation defended the Federal Aviation Administration system that approved the deadly 737 Max jets. Ian Duncan and Michael Laris report: The panel dismissed “criticisms that the agency gives manufacturers too much authority to oversee their own work. Instead, the panel warned against overhauling the system the FAA uses to review new aircraft. The group, led by Lee Moak, the former head of a major pilots union, found that the current system of allowing Boeing and other manufacturers to oversee much of their own work both ‘promotes safety’ and allows ‘industry and innovation to thrive.’ ... Boeing, whose standing has been badly hurt by the crashes and subsequent internal messages, said in a statement that it appreciated the committee’s work and would study its recommendations.”

-- A coalition of 14 states and D.C. sued to stop the Trump administration’s plan to take away food stamps from 700,000 unemployed people. Spencer S. Hsu reports: “In the lawsuit, attorneys general from the District, Maryland, Virginia, New York, California and other states ... asserted the justification for the cuts were based on no evidence and ignored local labor market conditions. ... In the lawsuit, states along the northeastern U.S. corridor joined by California, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada and Oregon said their governments would face heavy new administrative and financial burdens, economic damages and increased costs from ‘the negative health effects of malnutrition and instability.’”

-- The New York Mets parted ways with Carlos Beltrán before he oversaw a single game amid the sign-stealing scandal that has roiled Major League Baseball. Dave Sheinin reports: “Beltrán, 42, was implicated Monday in the Astros’ scheme, in which players, along with then-bench coach Alex Cora, used a center field camera and a video monitor behind their dugout to steal the signs of opposing catchers. Beltrán, a designated hitter for the 2017 Astros, who won the World Series that fall, was the only player from that team named as a participant in the scheme.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Republican lobbyist Bruce Mehlman makes these five predictions in his quarterly PowerPoint presentation for clients:

2020 RECOMMENDATIONS FOR LEADERS

- 1. Disruption Is Accelerating
  - Understand what new innovations are coming and the challenges & opportunities they present for you, your stakeholders & competitors.
- 2. Political Risk Is Growing
  - Conduct scenario planning to identify and mitigate risks in a deglobalizing world; include experts in politics and policy in business considerations.
- 3. Traditional Gatekeepers Are Losing Power
  - Expand stakeholder outreach to those who can validate your brand locally and partner on your priorities because you supported theirs.
- 4. A Reform Era Is Coming
  - Identify and support policy reforms that meaningfully expand opportunity... global populism will continue rising until more citizens feel “dealt-in”.
- 5. Expect to See More Black Swans
  - Prepare for a greater number of high-impact, formerly-low-probability events to protect your license to operate and anticipate opportunities.

MEHLMAN CASTAGNIETTI
ROSEN & THOMAS

As the Senate accepted the articles, Trump tweeted an instantly iconic message:

The president seems to often turn to a county-by-county map of the 2016 election results for reassurance in difficult moments:

Dan Zak ✓
@MrDanZak

I have also spotted this there. People were carrying it around the Oval Office the day he was impeached, at dusk, & then took it on his helicopter. Seems like a security blanket? When you feel insecure about your 3-million vote deficit, & your poll numbers, just look at the red. twitter.com/betsy\_klein/st...

Betsy Klein ✓ @betsy_klein

Spotted on the resolute desk in the Oval Office during the President's event on school prayer: a map of 2016 election results by county

♥ 523 8:37 PM - Jan 16, 2020

💬 186 people are talking about this

Sen. Martha McSally (R-Ariz.) lashed out at a CNN reporter who asked her about whether witnesses should be called in the impeachment trial:

The lawmaker, who was appointed to fill John McCain's seat when he died after she lost a Senate race in 2018, shared a staffer's video of the encounter and soon after her campaign was fundraising off the controversy -- with support from the Trump campaign. "The attack on a veteran congressional reporter might have been considered out of character for McSally as recently as two years ago, when she was known as a moderate House member focused on national security matters and reticent to comment on Trump's controversial remarks," Mike DeBonis and Lateshia Beachum note. But McSally has chosen to fully hitch her horse to Trump's in a bid to win a full term this November in a state that's trending away from Republicans.

Martha McSally ✓
@SenMcSallyAZ

A) you are.

B) here's the video. twitter.com/mkraju/status/...

Manu Raju ✓ @mkraju

Sen. Martha McSally, a Republican facing a difficult election race, lashed out when I asked if she would consider new evidence as part of the Senate trial. "You're a liberal hack - I'm not talking to you. You're a liberal hack." She then walked into a hearing room.

♡ 45.7K 3:22 PM - Jan 16, 2020

💬 48.6K people are talking about this

The president's daughter-in-law talked about Trump's love for money in a room full of Iowa women:

Put into this historical perspective, the American election doesn't sound so bad:

And a presidential candidate won a push-up contest in New Hampshire:

Jean Mackin ✓
@JeanWMUR

One of those memorable New Hampshire Primary moments: @TulsiGabbard challenged to a push-up contest at a Manchester Town Hall. She wins. #nhpolitics #fitn #wmur

♡ 4,012 1:03 AM - Jan 17, 2020

💬 844 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert reviewed Parnas's evidence:

Trevor Noah went through a list of Trump's "friends":

Rep. Ayanna Pressley (D-Mass.) revealed for the first time publicly that she has alopecia:

"I'm ready now because I want to be free from the secret, and the shame that the secret carries with it," Pressley said in an interview with the Root. (Michael Brice-Saddler)

Washington Conservatory of Music piano fellow Michael Adcock talked to The Post about "Impeachment Polka," written during the impeachment of President Andrew Johnson:

'A real ear-worm': What one pianist thinks about the 'Impeachment Polka'

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Senators plead for volunteers in Iowa to step up as the impeachment trial pulls them away
Date: Tuesday, January 21, 2020 10:51:51 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Senators plead for volunteers in Iowa to step up as the impeachment trial pulls them away

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) holds a town hall meeting on Monday night in Mason City, Iowa. (Ivan Alvarado/Reuters)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

WAUKEE, Iowa – Sen. Amy Klobuchar’s political hero is Paul Wellstone. Her campaign bus is green because his campaign bus was green, for example. When Wellstone was facing a tough fight in Minnesota to keep his Senate seat in 2002 after voting against the Iraq War, Klobuchar was unopposed for reelection as the district attorney for the county that includes Minneapolis. That allowed her to travel around the state with him. You probably remember that Wellstone died in a tragic plane crash weeks before the election, but he was also diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in that final year of his life.

“He would always run back and forth in parades, but that last year of his life he couldn’t run anymore because of the M.S.,” Klobuchar recalled during a town hall meeting here on Sunday night. “He would just stand on the back of his bus and wave. Here’s the amazing thing: He had energized so many people in those green shirts to run around that bus, hundreds of people, that you didn’t even notice that he wasn’t running himself. That’s what I’m asking you to do for me.”

Klobuchar asked the crowd of 140 people to do that for her because the Minnesota senator needed to leave Iowa to serve as a juror in the impeachment trial of President Trump. With some momentum, and an impressive list of endorsements, Klobuchar said she “would like nothing more” than to keep barnstorming the state. “But it is my lot in life,” she said.

All four of the senators still seeking the Democratic presidential nomination scrambled over the three-day holiday weekend to talk with as many voters as possible. They each campaigned in Iowa on Monday before flying to Washington, where they’re required to be for the impeachment trial. Proceedings commence this afternoon, with a floor fight over Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell’s proposed ground rules for the trial.

The 100 senators won’t be sequestered in a hotel for this jury duty, but they’ll be functionally stranded in the capital six days a week – they get Sundays off – until, potentially, even beyond the Iowa caucuses on Feb. 3.

“I’m going to be stuck in Washington for God knows how long so we need you to take my place,” Sen. Bernie Sanders told 750 supporters on Monday night at the end of a 50-minute speech at the State Historical Museum of Iowa in Des Moines. “Give two-hour speeches like I do, you know,” he joked. “Do whatever you can do!”

The independent senator from Vermont hoped he might be able to fly back to Iowa tomorrow night for a late-night rally at the University of Northern Iowa after the trial wrapped up for the day, but McConnell’s proposed rules mean that arguments could drag on past midnight, so the campaign just announced that it’s nixed that event. Instead, Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) will headline events on Sanders’s behalf later in the week.

Sanders noted that “Us, not me” has been his 2020 slogan. “Ironically, the ‘us, not me,’ is becoming very much of a reality in the last two weeks of this campaign because I am not going to be able to be here as much as I would like, so you guys are going to have to carry the ball,” he said.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) takes the stage on Monday afternoon for a town hall meeting in Grimes, Iowa. (Brian Snyder/Reuters)

It's undeniably terrible timing for jury duty, and Chief Justice John Roberts wouldn't excuse the senators, even if they asked.

To be sure, none of the four would dream of making such a request. They all insist that their day jobs, and sworn oaths, are their top priorities.

"There are things that are more important than politics," Sen. Elizabeth Warren said when initially asked about impeachment on Sunday afternoon at Weeks Middle School in Des Moines, repeating a talking point she's used for weeks. When asked again, after finishing her 106th town hall in Iowa, the senator from Massachusetts took a wistful turn as she mused about how her time on the ground here has "changed" her. The former law professor said she'll miss fielding questions from everyday people.

“I’ll also miss the babies and the pinkie promises,” Warren said.

“I really have loved this part of the campaign. And I hope I’ll be able to come back more to Iowa. ... They talk about the issues that matter to them. This is the give-and-take that should really be at the heart of our democracy. We can’t have a democracy that’s all about TV ads and billionaires and sucking up to billionaires. We need a democracy like the kind I’ve been able to experience with the people of Iowa in the last year. It’s really important. It’s changed me. And it’s really strengthened my faith in what we can do in a democracy. So I hope we’re going to be able to keep this movement going, even if I have to be in D.C. I’ll do my best.”

Polls show impeachment is not top of mind for most caucusgoers. All the Democratic candidates are on the same page that Trump should be removed from office, so there’s no contrast to highlight. But that does not mean voters don’t care or aren’t paying close attention. Michael Marcheck, 31, a grad student who wants to become a social studies teacher, drove from Nebraska to volunteer for Warren. He wore a button at her rally that said “Merry Impeachmas” with a picture of Speaker Nancy Pelosi clapping at Trump during last year’s State of the Union. “Please let everyone in the East know that we do care about impeachment here in the Midwest,” he said.

Later in the day, Warren used a candidate forum to emphasize her pledge that she would not appoint anyone as an ambassador who contributes to her campaign. She singled out Gordon Sondland as the poster boy for why. Trump picked the Oregon hotelier to be U.S. ambassador to the European Union after a million-dollar contribution to the president's inauguration committee. Sondland became one of "the three amigos" in Trump's campaign to allegedly coerce Ukraine to announce an investigation into Joe Biden. "Ambassadorships should not be for sale," Warren said. "It's Washington corruption at its worst."

Warren's closing argument is that she's the candidate most committed to, and capable of, fighting political "corruption," which she says is at the heart of every problem in Washington. She's promised for over a year to enact the biggest set of ethics overhauls since Watergate, but she's put extra emphasis on the theme as the impeachment issue ripened over the past few months. Warren's campaign has aired two anti-corruption ads in Iowa, including one that features clips of Sondland testifying before the House Intelligence Committee in November.

Warren unveiled her latest plan this morning, pegged to the impeachment trial, to address "the corruption and incompetence of the Trump administration." In it, she says she will ask for the immediate resignations of all Trump political appointees on the day she becomes president, including U.S. attorneys. Warren proposes the establishment of a Justice Department task force that would have "independent authority" to "investigate corruption during the Trump administration and to hold government officials accountable for illegal activity." She pledges to review the performance of independent agencies in order to "remove leading officials for cause where there is justification to do so." And she promises an investigation into "federal contracting arrangements that arose as a result of corruption in the Trump administration – and end them." (Read Warren's eight-page proposal here.)

---

Content from API

We're working together on climate solutions.

CO2 emission levels are the lowest in a generation, thanks to clean natural gas and the partnerships we've made to reduce emissions. Learn how we're making progress together at EnergyForProgress.org.

---

Amy Klobuchar boards her bus in Des Moines on Sunday after a candidate forum. (Andrew Harnik/AP)

Klobuchar declines to rule out giving ambassadorships to her major donors, but she often cites Marie Yovanovitch on the stump as a model for the kind of person she'll appoint to top jobs if she wins. Trump allegedly recalled Yovanovitch, a career Foreign Service officer, as ambassador to Ukraine at the behest of his personal attorney Rudy Giuliani, an episode at the heart of the impeachment trial. "I personally know her and got to spend time with her out in Ukraine," Klobuchar said.

The Minnesotan has perhaps the most to lose in Iowa from impeachment. She needs to garner 15 percent in a precinct to be considered "viable" enough to receive delegates. Klobuchar is straddling that threshold in the polls, trailing in fifth place behind Warren, Sanders, Biden and former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg.

Klobuchar is a grinder. During a recent three-day stretch, she visited 27 counties. "I would love to do 10 counties a day, but I am going to be there," she said, referring to Washington.

Her town hall in this Des Moines suburb had a somber vibe. Bob Dylan's downbeat "Girl from the North Country" played before she took the stage, far from the typical musical fare at political events. She began her remarks by noting that the Green Bay Packers were getting blown out in the NFC Championship game. "But as a Vikings fan, I can relate," she said.

Speaking at an "innovation center" in an office park, with an icy parking lot and subzero temperatures outside, Klobuchar expressed confidence she can still campaign while serving as a juror. “I always tell people that I’m a mom, and I can do two things at once,” she said, adding that her daughter will hold events on her behalf. “You will enjoy her.”

In the coming days, Klobuchar promises to push hard for the Senate to call witnesses. “If they are not going to allow us to have witnesses, we may as well give the president a crown and a scepter,” Klobuchar said, repeating one of her lines from last week’s Democratic debate.

Supporters hope that Klobuchar can use the national platform to bolster her standing. “I have mixed feelings about it,” said Klobuchar supporter Margo Marks, 74, of Waukee. “How much it would help her to be here, I don’t know. But I’m glad to have her out there as a juror. She’s a great representative who will ask the right questions and hopefully influence people.”

Dan Looker, 72, said after listening to Klobuchar’s speech that he will heed her call for help and sign up for extra door-knocking shifts over the next two weeks. The retired business editor of Successful Farming magazine, who lives in Des Moines, has believed Klobuchar was presidential timber since she questioned Brett Kavanaugh about his drinking. Looker thinks the senior senator from Minnesota proved her mettle by not getting rattled when Trump’s Supreme Court nominee – fighting allegations of sexual assault – asked her if she’s ever been blackout drunk. Kavanaugh subsequently apologized for his emotional outburst. “I’m sure impeachment is an added challenge for her, but anyone who lives in Iowa has seen lots of ads for all the candidates,” he said. “If she can afford to run ads, I think she’ll be okay.”

Sen. Michael Bennet (D-Colo.) answers questions on Monday during the 2020 Iowa Brown & Black Democratic Presidential Forum in Des Moines. All four senators running for president took questions about race-related issues on Martin Luther King Jr. Day. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Sen. Michael Bennet has mostly focused on New Hampshire, but he was in Iowa on Monday for a Brown and Black Forum that drew all the major candidates. The senator from Colorado said he's not raised enough money to pay for the private planes that give the top-tier candidates more scheduling flexibility. "If they'll let me get on their charters, I might go with them, but I can't afford one myself," Bennet joked after the forum. "We all have an important constitutional responsibility to fulfill, and I feel like we've got to make sure we take the time to take it seriously and we cannot let the campaigning distract us."

Bennet emphasized that he'll "mostly" be in the Granite State when the trial is not going on, which is easier to fly to than Iowa. “Whatever it takes, we’ll make it work,” he said. “I hope this may turn into a more interesting trial than people thought it would be.”

Before he headed to the airport yesterday afternoon, I asked Bennet how impeachment shapes his closing message. “Some people say, ‘Well, if you know the guy’s going to be acquitted, why would you go through this?’ First of all, we don’t know that he’s going to be acquitted. It’s likely, but we don’t know that,” he answered. “Second, I think this is a real opportunity for us to reestablish a standard of what we expect out of the president of the United States and our elected leadership generally, and I think he’s failed that test miserably.”

To be sure, being absent from Iowa is not necessarily a death knell. Consider the inverse: No Democratic candidate has spent more time in the Hawkeye State this cycle than former Maryland congressman John Delaney, who continues to register at zero percent in the polls. As Delaney spoke during that forum, almost all the reporters in the filing room got up to go ask questions of Andrew Yang, the entrepreneur who has never held public office and whose big idea is to give every American a thousand-dollar check each month. Yang didn’t qualify for the last debate, but he’s planning a bus tour to take him all over Iowa. He expressed condolences to the senators who are waylaid by impeachment. “I feel bad for my competitors because I wish they were out campaigning too, sharing their visions, but the circumstances are what they are,” Yang said.

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) speaks during a rally on Monday night at the State Historical Museum of Iowa in Des Moines. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Impeachment is shaping up to be an early test of Sanders's theory of the case for 2020, which is that he can expand the electorate by exciting millions of people, thereby engaging them in the political process, who won't support an establishment candidate.

On Martin Luther King Jr. Day, Sanders recalled taking a bus from Chicago to Washington in 1963 to watch King deliver his “I have a dream” speech. “Sometimes the media kind of sanitizes what Dr. King was all about,” Sanders said. “He was a political revolutionary. ... In the spirit of Dr. King, what this campaign is about and what makes this campaign different than other campaigns, is that we are not just here to defeat Donald Trump. We are here to transform the United States of America. That’s what political revolution is.”

Sanders’s microphone cut out a dozen times during his stump speech at the historical museum. After the seventh time, he quipped: “Donald Trump stops at nothing!” Perturbed, the senator kept talking without the speakers on. His supporters quieted, straining to listen as the senator raised his voice to promise he will disrupt the power structure. “As president, I intend to not only be the commander-in-chief of the military,” he said. “I intend to be organizer-in-chief, as well.”

He emphasized that his volunteers have a duty to step up in his absence because the future of their “revolution” depends on it. “If we win here in Iowa, and with your help I believe we can, then I think we’re going to win in New Hampshire,” Sanders said. “And if we win in New Hampshire, we’re going to win in Nevada. And if we win in Nevada, we’re going to do very well in South Carolina. And then we’re going to win in California. ... Four years ago, Iowa started the revolution. Let’s complete the revolution in Iowa.”

Shari Hawk, a retired nurse who lives in the suburb of Ankeny, will be a precinct captain for Sanders on caucus night. She’s

been door-knocking, phone-banking and even got asked to leave a shopping center a few days ago where she was canvassing for Sanders. Hawk told me with great pride that she converted a handful of undecided voters into Sanders supporters before management told her to skedaddle. She acknowledged feeling some stress that the trial will keep Sanders away, but she said that the drawbacks of his absence are obviated somewhat by the work she and other volunteers have done over the past five years, dating to the 2016 campaign, to build up a winning organization in the state. “It still bothers me, though, because nobody excites people like Bernie himself does,” said Hawk, 69. “We all know that. But we also know his surrogates can raise the roof.”

Brit Voss, 30, is less worried about the politics of the impeachment trial than the bottom line. She and her girlfriend live in New Mexico but follow Sanders around the country to sell merchandise at his events. She said they give some of their proceeds as a donation to the campaign. “Impeachment will affect our sales because he’s not able to have rallies,” Voss said. “It means we’re not going to have rallies to go sell our merchandise, so it is affecting us financially. I want Trump to be impeached, but what does that mean? At this point, it seems like it’s all kind of a facade because Republicans are never going to remove him from office. So, personally, I feel like it’s just a waste of time.”

The Daily 202's BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

The House impeachment managers make their way to the Senate for a walk-through of the Senate floor in preparation for the impeachment trial. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

THE LATEST ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Trump's defense team is working behind the scenes with Senate GOP allies to ensure former national security adviser John Bolton does not testify publicly if Democrats win enough votes to force witnesses. Robert Costa and Rachael Bade report: "One option being discussed, according to a senior administration official, would be to move Bolton's testimony to a classified setting because of national security concerns, ensuring that it is not public. To receive the testimony in a classified session, Trump's attorneys would have to request such a step, according to one official, adding that it would probably need the approval of 51 senators. But that proposal, discussed among some Senate Republicans in recent days, is seen as a final tool against Bolton becoming an explosive figure in the trial. First, Republicans involved in the discussions said, would come a fierce battle in the courts. ... Trump has said he would assert executive privilege if Bolton were called to testify ... And the White House has indicated in conversations with Republican lawmakers that it could appeal to federal courts for an injunction that would stop Bolton if he refuses to go along with their instructions."

-- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) didn't release the draft ground rules that will guide proceedings until late yesterday afternoon, and they're clearly written to wrap up the trial as quickly as possible. Seung Min Kim and Karoun Demirjian report: "McConnell's organizing resolution ... offers each side 24 hours to make its opening arguments, starting on Wednesday but compressed into two session days. It is unclear whether Democrats would press to use all their time, which could push testimony

past midnight. After the House managers and Trump's lawyers make their case, senators will be allowed 16 hours to question the opposing sides. After that, the sides will debate for a maximum of four hours on whether to consider subpoenaing witnesses or documents at all, followed by a vote on whether to do so. If a majority of senators agree, then there will probably be motions from both sides to call various witnesses, with subsequent votes on issuing subpoenas.

“The resolution also allows Trump’s team to move to dismiss the charges at any time — although it is not explicitly mentioned in the four-page measure — because doing so is allowed under standard impeachment trial rules. The Senate trial also won’t automatically admit evidence from the House process, according to GOP officials, a key difference from the impeachment trial of President Bill Clinton ... Though the material will be printed and made available to senators, it won’t be automatically admissible unless a majority of senators approve it. The resolution infuriated Democratic senators, with Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) calling the document a ‘national disgrace’ and accusing McConnell of shrouding testimony and rushing the trial. ...

“The proceedings Tuesday will formally begin with a debate over the McConnell resolution. The impeachment managers and the president’s lawyers will have an opportunity to debate the proposed rules, while Schumer is expected to offer changes to the measure that would allow the Senate to call several witnesses desired by Democrats at the outset. Democrats could also push for more than one vote on witnesses and documents. But all 53 Republican senators are expected to support the rules as written by McConnell. Once those parameters are set, the formal arguments will begin."

-- A CNN poll finds that 69 percent of Americans want to hear from witnesses during the trial. A slight 51 percent majority says the Senate should vote to convict and remove Trump from office, with 45 percent say senators should vote against conviction and removal.

-- An NPR poll shows that 51 percent of Americans think Trump has personally encouraged election interference in 2020.

Additionally, 41 percent said they believed the United States is not very prepared or not prepared at all to keep November's election safe and secure.

-- Dueling filings: Trump's legal team argued in a 171-page legal brief that the two articles of impeachment are "structurally deficient" and urged senators for an acquittal in a "rigged process." In their own 111-page brief, the House's seven impeachment managers laid out their case against Trump. The White House says there was no underlying crime. Democrats point to the Government Accountability Office opinion last week that Trump withholding aid appropriated by Congress broke the law. The new Republican talking point is that senators should only pay attention to evidence the House had when it voted to impeach on Dec. 18.

-- Both sides did walk-throughs of the Senate chamber on Monday, and the White House announced the names of eight House Republicans who will be part of Trump's defense. They will make his case on cable news, not the Senate floor, but as official representatives of the president: Reps. Doug Collins (Ga.), Mike Johnson (La.), Jim Jordan (Ohio), Debbie Lesko (Ariz.), Mark

Meadows (N.C.), John Ratcliffe (Tex.), Elise Stefanik (N.Y.) and Lee Zeldin (N.Y.).

-- A lawyer for Rudy Giuliani's former associate Lev Parnas said Attorney General Bill Barr has a conflict of interest and should recuse himself from Parnas's criminal case. Joseph Bondy cites references to the attorney general in Trump's July 25 phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky. (Shayna Jacobs)

-- The trove of messages released in recent days from Parnas reveal his wide reach among Ukraine's oligarchs and political elites. Robyn Dixon, David L. Stern and Natalie Gryvnyak report: "The connections read like a who's who of Ukraine's political elite: members of [Zelensky's] inner circle, the country's head police officer, the chief of security services, two former top prosecutors and one of Ukraine's richest men. Parnas's messages showed how he ping-ponged around the globe, jetting to Warsaw, Kyiv, Vienna, Israel, Paris and Madrid, always, he has claimed, with Giuliani's consent and Trump's knowledge ... At times, Parnas showed frustration when efforts to get Zelensky officials to cooperate stumbled. Giuliani and Parnas struggled and failed to get a meeting between Giuliani and Zelensky in April and May. When his texts to members of Zelensky's administration went unanswered, Parnas, left hanging, responded with double question marks."

-- Trump made 16,241 false or misleading claims during his first three years in the White House, according to the running tally from The Post's Fact Checker team.

Gun rights activists descend on Virginia capital

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Thousands of gun rights advocates descended upon the Virginia Capitol carrying weapons, flags and threats of insurrection. But no violence erupted. Greg Schneider, Laura Vozzella, Patricia Sullivan and Michael Miller report: "Armed militias carrying assault-style weapons marched in formation until the crowds grew too thick. Protesters without firearms filed through 17 metal detectors at a single entrance to Capitol Square, where Gov. Ralph Northam had temporarily banned weapons, and cheered fiery speeches about the Second Amendment. ... Intelligence from law enforcement about outside threats had put Virginia officials on edge and led to a massive police presence. The crackdown also made Northam (D) a symbol of the country's cultural and political divide — as evidenced by harsh signs Monday depicting him as a 'tyrant,' 'radical Ralph' and photoshopped into a Nazi uniform. ... Inside the white-columned Capitol, the halls were strangely quiet as lawmakers went about their business. Young pages had the day off for safety; there was a skeleton staff but a beefed-up police presence. ...

“Public safety officials said there were about 16,000 people, based on how many blocks of street and sidewalk were filled, while rally organizers said they believed there were twice that many. Authorities reported no major incidents and only a single arrest — of a 21-year-old woman charged with wearing a mask in public — despite the presence of numerous out-of-state militia and extremist groups that had threatened violence online and in social media. ... Officers did remove a homemade guillotine that had been set up on the street, inscribed with the words: 'The penalty for treason is death.' ... Militia members began arriving from other states the night before the rally, with more than 100 gathering for dinner and prayers in a remote part of Henrico County. Vehicles in the parking lot bore license plates from Texas, Oklahoma, Florida, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New Jersey and more. ... There were almost no signs of counterprotesters. In a rare clash, a man who said he was a shooting survivor confronted a teen carrying an oversize long gun.

‘Why do you need to have that gun?’ the man demanded. A small contingent watched the two argue; they eventually shook hands and walked off peacefully.”

-- The rally followed a weekend of gun violence across the nation:

- In Hawaii, a shooting left two officers dead at a Honolulu home that went up in flames with several others, leaving the suspect and two others unaccounted for, officials said. (Marisa Iati and Hannah Knowles)
- In San Antonio, an assailant shot and killed two people and wounded five others inside a club. A 19-year-old suspect was later arrested and will be charged with murder, police said. (Michael Brice-Saddler)
- In Kansas City, Mo., a gunman opened fire on a line of people outside a bar, killing a woman and wounding 15 others before an armed security guard shot and killed him. (Michael Brice-Saddler and Reis Thebault)

-- As Virginia grapples with the gun control proposals that drew such crowds to its capitol, Maryland is quietly trying to further tighten regulations that are already some of the strictest in the nation. Bills that face favorable prospects include a ban on untraceable “ghost guns” and a requirement for all private sales of rifles and shotguns to be subject to background checks. (Erin Cox)

-- Secretary of the Navy nominee Kenneth Braithwaite may have had an undisclosed contract with Cambridge Analytica, documents suggest. From CBS News: “Braithwaite ... made no mention of an agreement in his required government disclosure form, and says he never entered one. Braithwaite was required to disclose every paid and unpaid position he held outside government within the two prior calendar years before the Senate confirmed him to be ambassador.”

-- The religious-schools case is heading to the Supreme Court, testing the constitutionality of state laws that exclude religious organizations from the government funding available to others and further escalating the debate on school choice. Robert Barnes reports: “The issue rests on whether a scholarship fund supported by tax-deductible donations can help children attending the state’s private schools, most of which are religious. Arguments are scheduled for Wednesday. ... Montana told the court that, as in 37 other states, it is reasonable for its constitution to prohibit direct or indirect aid to religious organizations. ... But Montana is being called before a Supreme Court increasingly skeptical of such stark lines between church and state. A majority of justices in 2017 said Missouri could not ban a church school from requesting a grant from a state program that rehabilitated playgrounds. ... The Montana case is prompted by a 2015 decision by the state’s legislature to create a tax-credit program for those who wanted to donate to a scholarship fund.”

-- State senators in Oklahoma want “Make America Great Again” license plates, a move that could violate federal campaign finance rules. The Trump-themed licenses would, if approved by the state legislature, be added to a list of 98 other specialty designs Oklahoma drivers can choose to purchase for $35. Of that amount, $20 goes to the designated organization that matches the theme of the plate, although two senators claim the money collected from the 'MAGA' plates would not go directly to the president's reelection bid but would instead be split between two veterans groups. The Oklahoma Tax Commission, which handles the plates, would enter a licensing agreement with a corporation designated by Trump. (Katie Mettler)

Central American migrants cross river into Mexico

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- U.S.-bound Central American migrants clashed with Mexican forces at the Guatemala border after Mexico's authorities rejected their request to transit north. Kevin Sieff reports: "Mexican National Guard troops deployed along the banks of the river tried to repel those who waded across and pursued others who reached Mexican soil. The caravan, which formed last week in Honduras, presented a new test for the Mexican government, which promised the Trump administration last year that it would step up enforcement, even as President Andrés Manuel López Obrador said he would respect the rights of migrants. ... The group waiting at the border on Monday appeared to be the largest in more than a year, and its size has posed a particular challenge for Mexican security forces."

-- Trump arrived in Davos overnight and immediately took a victory lap, taking credit for a soaring stock market, low unemployment and a "blue collar boom" in jobs and income. Heather Long reports: "Trump ran through economic statistics with a salesman's delivery, crowing about growth during his three years in office that he said bested his predecessors and defied his skeptics. .. Trump, who has called climate change a hoax, did not directly address the theme during his 30-minute address here, though he did call for rejecting 'the perennial prophets of doom and their predictions of the apocalypse.' He also made no mention of impeachment or U.S. politics, though he took a swipe at 'radical socialism,' his term for Democratic ideas about health care, education and other issues. ... Forum founder and chairman Klaus Schwab thanked Trump 'for injecting optimism' into the discussion. ... Trump got a polite but not enthusiastic reception in the hall, though a few in the audience slipped out well before he wrapped up."

-- The global economy is likely to rebound in 2020, but the International Monetary Fund warned of eerie parallels to the 1920s. Long reports: "Global growth is expected to hit 3.3 percent this year, the IMF predicted. That is up from 2.9 percent last year, which was the worst year for the world economy since the Great Recession. ... But [at the World Economic Forum], as top business and political leaders gather in this ski chalet town in the Swiss Alps, uncertainty remains high ... [IMF Managing Director Kristalina] Georgieva warned that the record or near-record levels of wealth inequality in the United States, United Kingdom and many other parts of the world, combined with the rapid advancement of technology, feels a lot like the 1920s, which ultimately led to financial disaster. ... The IMF is urging countries to use this time now, while unemployment is low and growth is decent, to address bigger problems in the economy.”

-- Sanders and Warren are not attending the annual gathering of global elites and billionaires at Davos, but the two are hot discussion topics. So is climate change. Long reports: “Leaders of large corporations are eager to show they are doing something about the world’s biggest problems and do not need the sweeping policy changes that Sanders and Warren are proposing. ... For the first time, ‘climate action failure’ was the No. 1 risk in the World Economic Forum’s Global Risk Report, which is based on a survey of more than 1,000 key business and political figures. ... As candidates like Sanders and Warren keep the spotlight on billionaires and protesters take to the streets in Switzerland holding signs that say ‘Eat the Rich,’ there’s an awareness that giving to foundations and charities is no longer enough. But few here are committing to concrete solutions.”

-- At Davos, teenage climate activist Greta Thunberg said “pretty much nothing has been done” to tackle climate change. “Without treating this as a real crisis we cannot solve it,” she said. “It will require much more than this, this is just the very beginning.”

(Bloomberg News)

-- Huawei chief financial officer Meng Wanzhou, facing extradition to the United States, argued that the charges against her aren't crimes in Canada. Amanda Coletta reports: Under Canadian law, to 'commit' Meng for extradition, the allegations must meet the test of 'double criminality,' meaning that the charges of which she is accused in the United States must also be considered crimes in Canada. Meng's legal team told Associate Chief Justice Heather Holmes that the alleged misrepresentations do not amount to fraud, and that the case is really about the United States trying to enforce its sanctions against Iran — sanctions that did not exist in Canada at the time Canadian officials agreed to begin extradition.”

-- Iran has asked the U.S. and French authorities for equipment to download information from the black boxes of the Ukrainian airliner that was downed nearly two weeks ago. (Reuters)

-- The Brexit deal has received a setback in the House of Lords after three amendments to Prime Minister Boris Johnson's bill were passed. (The Guardian)

-- China is trying to close the city at the center of a mystery virus that has claimed six lives. Chinese officials have confirmation that the pneumonialike coronavirus can be spread from person to person, so they're trying to limit travel in and out of the city of Wuhan, where the vast majority of disease cases have been reported. (Anna Fifield)

-- Norway Prime Minister Erna Solberg lost her parliamentary majority after the right-wing Progress Party withdrew its ministers from the government coalition. Rick Noack reports: “The right-wing protest move came in response to the controversial repatriation of a suspected Islamic State member and her children from a Syrian camp. ... The unnamed 29-year-old suspect was arrested upon her return but is denying the accusations ... If prosecutors are unable to prove she had ties to the Islamic State, it could put Solberg’s government at further risk of accusations that she handled the case recklessly, as right-wing critics allege.”

-- Seven members of a hiking group are still missing after an avalanche hit the Himalayas, and 200 others have been rescued. Hannah Knowles reports: “Military and government officials have joined tourism groups, locals and others to look for the four South Korean hikers and their three Nepali guides, and to bring scores of others ‘whose lives were in jeopardy’ to safety, Nepal’s tourism department said in a statement. But avalanches and heavy snowfall have thwarted those operations ... Poor conditions kept a military helicopter with rescue teams from landing Monday...”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Trump’s legal team took a tour of the impeachment battleground:

Frank Thorp V
@frankthorp

The WH defense team leaves the Capitol after a final walk-through ahead of tomorrow's Senate impeachment trial:

 103 8:35 PM - Jan 20, 2020

 83 people are talking about this

Alan Dershowitz, the liberal lawyer Trump tapped for his defense team, didn't represent Clinton 21 years ago because he was too toxic:

andrew kaczynski 🤔 ✓
@KFILE

From 1999:

CNN: How would you conduct defending Bill Clinton in the Senate if you were in charge of it?

Dershowitz: "Well, the first thing I would do is say, 'Fire Dershowitz.' We don't want to get involved with people saying, 'O.J.'s lawyer is representing the president.'"

♡ 2,965 10:38 PM - Jan 20, 2020

💬 1,152 people are talking about this

The Office of Legal Counsel has become more politicized than ever under Barr, coming up with often dubious justifications for Trump's most brazen conduct. Many lawyers noticed that Trump's team wasn't particularly careful about details in its brief:

southpaw @nycsouthpaw · 13h

Make OLC reform a campaign issue.
twitter.com/andygrewal/sta...

Andy Grewal @AndyGrewal

White House brief has 37-page OLC memo, dated yesterday, in its appendix. It concludes that subpoenas issued prior to 10/31/19 are invalid because there was not a formal impeachment inquiry vote.

 Max Kennerly ✓
@MaxKennerly

The Trump / Barr OLC doesn't even bother with the pretense of lawfulness. OLC's memo, dated yesterday, supposedly "memorializes" how in Sept, Oct, & Nov 2019 they advised Trump to ignore subpoenas based upon... Judge Rao's dissent in an unrelated case issued on Dec 13, 2019. 😞

716 10:48 PM - Jan 20, 2020 ⓘ

479 people are talking about this >

A former House speaker warned fellow Republicans to take Klobuchar's candidacy seriously:

 Newt Gingrich ✓
@newtgingrich

Senator Amy Klobuchar is the most dangerous candidate for the GOP. She is calm, pleasant, rational and has a history of working with Republicans. The NYTimes endorsement means much more to her than the joint endorsement means to Elizabeth Warren.

7,485 2:42 PM - Jan 20, 2020 ⓘ

2,193 people are talking about this >

Joe Biden didn't get the Times endorsement, but his campaign highlighted the support he received from an African American woman in the elevator on his way to sit down with their editorial board:

Joe Biden (Text Join to 30330) ✓
@JoeBiden

Honored to have won Jacquelyn's endorsement.

7,571 likes 8:08 PM - Jan 20, 2020

1,960 people are talking about this

The FBI shared a message honoring MLK, prompting a CNN anchor to recall the bureau's not-always-great history:

Jake Tapper ✓
@jaketapper

The FBI under J. Edgar Hoover had a completely different approach to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., of course.

It smeared him, wiretapped him (signed off by Attorney General Robert Kennedy), and encouraged him to commit suicide. twitter.com/FBI/status/121...

FBI ✓ @FBI

Today, the FBI honors the life and work of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. A quote from Dr. King is etched in stone at the FBI Academy's reflection garden in Quantico as a reminder to all students and FBI employees: "The time is always right to do what is right." #MLKDay

14.6K 4:37 PM - Jan 20, 2020

5,071 people are talking about this

Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio) could have been one of the contenders in Iowa this weekend if he had run for president. Instead, he went shopping in the snow of Ohio. From his wife:

 Connie Schultz
@ConnieSchultz

He's off to Washington, but yesterday my guy was all about the Costco.

 3,746  1:26 AM - Jan 21, 2020

 192 people are talking about this

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "It was awful because it was my life's work and I'm good at it, and there's no reason in the world that the president shouldn't trust me," said Sue Gordon, the former deputy director of national intelligence, of her dismissal by the president. (InStyle)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Trump received a mixed reaction when he visited the MLK memorial:

Trump receives cheers, boos during MLK Jr. memorial visit

Stephen Colbert broke down Trump's lawyers' appearances on the Sunday shows:

And he sat down with Tom Steyer:

Seth Meyers took a look at the Lev Parnas evidence:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Senators plead for volunteers in Iowa to step up as the impeachment trial pulls them away
Date: Tuesday, January 21, 2020 10:52:30 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Senators plead for volunteers in Iowa to step up as the impeachment trial pulls them away

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) holds a town hall meeting on Monday night in Mason City, Iowa. (Ivan Alvarado/Reuters)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

WAUKEE, Iowa – Sen. Amy Klobuchar’s political hero is Paul Wellstone. Her campaign bus is green because his campaign bus was green, for example. When Wellstone was facing a tough fight in Minnesota to keep his Senate seat in 2002 after voting against the Iraq War, Klobuchar was unopposed for reelection as the district attorney for the county that includes Minneapolis. That allowed her to travel around the state with him. You probably remember that Wellstone died in a tragic plane crash weeks before the election, but he was also diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in that final year of his life.

“He would always run back and forth in parades, but that last year of his life he couldn’t run anymore because of the M.S.,” Klobuchar recalled during a town hall meeting here on Sunday night. “He would just stand on the back of his bus and wave. Here’s the amazing thing: He had energized so many people in those green shirts to run around that bus, hundreds of people, that you didn’t even notice that he wasn’t running himself. That’s what I’m asking you to do for me.”

Klobuchar asked the crowd of 140 people to do that for her because the Minnesota senator needed to leave Iowa to serve as a juror in the impeachment trial of President Trump. With some momentum, and an impressive list of endorsements, Klobuchar said she “would like nothing more” than to keep barnstorming the state. “But it is my lot in life,” she said.

All four of the senators still seeking the Democratic presidential nomination scrambled over the three-day holiday weekend to talk with as many voters as possible. They each campaigned in Iowa on Monday before flying to Washington, where they’re required to be for the impeachment trial. Proceedings commence this afternoon, with a floor fight over Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell’s proposed ground rules for the trial.

The 100 senators won’t be sequestered in a hotel for this jury duty, but they’ll be functionally stranded in the capital six days a week – they get Sundays off – until, potentially, even beyond the Iowa caucuses on Feb. 3.

“I’m going to be stuck in Washington for God knows how long so we need you to take my place,” Sen. Bernie Sanders told 750 supporters on Monday night at the end of a 50-minute speech at the State Historical Museum of Iowa in Des Moines. “Give two-hour speeches like I do, you know,” he joked. “Do whatever you can do!”

The independent senator from Vermont hoped he might be able to fly back to Iowa tomorrow night for a late-night rally at the University of Northern Iowa after the trial wrapped up for the day, but McConnell’s proposed rules mean that arguments could drag on past midnight, so the campaign just announced that it’s nixed that event. Instead, Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) will headline events on Sanders’s behalf later in the week.

Sanders noted that “Us, not me” has been his 2020 slogan. “Ironically, the ‘us, not me,’ is becoming very much of a reality in the last two weeks of this campaign because I am not going to be able to be here as much as I would like, so you guys are going to have to carry the ball,” he said.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) takes the stage on Monday afternoon for a town hall meeting in Grimes, Iowa. (Brian Snyder/Reuters)

It's undeniably terrible timing for jury duty, and Chief Justice John Roberts wouldn't excuse the senators, even if they asked.

To be sure, none of the four would dream of making such a request. They all insist that their day jobs, and sworn oaths, are their top priorities.

"There are things that are more important than politics," Sen. Elizabeth Warren said when initially asked about impeachment on Sunday afternoon at Weeks Middle School in Des Moines, repeating a talking point she's used for weeks. When asked again, after finishing her 106th town hall in Iowa, the senator from Massachusetts took a wistful turn as she mused about how her time on the ground here has "changed" her. The former law professor said she'll miss fielding questions from everyday people.

“I’ll also miss the babies and the pinkie promises,” Warren said.

“I really have loved this part of the campaign. And I hope I’ll be able to come back more to Iowa. ... They talk about the issues that matter to them. This is the give-and-take that should really be at the heart of our democracy. We can’t have a democracy that’s all about TV ads and billionaires and sucking up to billionaires. We need a democracy like the kind I’ve been able to experience with the people of Iowa in the last year. It’s really important. It’s changed me. And it’s really strengthened my faith in what we can do in a democracy. So I hope we’re going to be able to keep this movement going, even if I have to be in D.C. I’ll do my best.”

Polls show impeachment is not top of mind for most caucusgoers. All the Democratic candidates are on the same page that Trump should be removed from office, so there’s no contrast to highlight. But that does not mean voters don’t care or aren’t paying close attention. Michael Marcheck, 31, a grad student who wants to become a social studies teacher, drove from Nebraska to volunteer for Warren. He wore a button at her rally that said “Merry Impeachmas” with a picture of Speaker Nancy Pelosi clapping at Trump during last year’s State of the Union. “Please let everyone in the East know that we do care about impeachment here in the Midwest,” he said.

Later in the day, Warren used a candidate forum to emphasize her pledge that she would not appoint anyone as an ambassador who contributes to her campaign. She singled out Gordon Sondland as the poster boy for why. Trump picked the Oregon hotelier to be U.S. ambassador to the European Union after a million-dollar contribution to the president's inauguration committee. Sondland became one of "the three amigos" in Trump's campaign to allegedly coerce Ukraine to announce an investigation into Joe Biden. "Ambassadorships should not be for sale," Warren said. "It's Washington corruption at its worst."

Warren's closing argument is that she's the candidate most committed to, and capable of, fighting political "corruption," which she says is at the heart of every problem in Washington. She's promised for over a year to enact the biggest set of ethics overhauls since Watergate, but she's put extra emphasis on the theme as the impeachment issue ripened over the past few months. Warren's campaign has aired two anti-corruption ads in Iowa, including one that features clips of Sondland testifying before the House Intelligence Committee in November.

Warren unveiled her latest plan this morning, pegged to the impeachment trial, to address "the corruption and incompetence of the Trump administration." In it, she says she will ask for the immediate resignations of all Trump political appointees on the day she becomes president, including U.S. attorneys. Warren proposes the establishment of a Justice Department task force that would have "independent authority" to "investigate corruption during the Trump administration and to hold government officials accountable for illegal activity." She pledges to review the performance of independent agencies in order to "remove leading officials for cause where there is justification to do so." And she promises an investigation into "federal contracting arrangements that arose as a result of corruption in the Trump administration – and end them." (Read Warren's eight-page

proposal here.)

---

Content from API

We're working together on climate solutions.

CO2 emission levels are the lowest in a generation, thanks to clean natural gas and the partnerships we've made to reduce emissions. Learn how we're making progress together at EnergyForProgress.org.

---

Amy Klobuchar boards her bus in Des Moines on Sunday after a candidate forum. (Andrew Harnik/AP)

Klobuchar declines to rule out giving ambassadorships to her major donors, but she often cites Marie Yovanovitch on the stump as a model for the kind of person she'll appoint to top jobs if she wins. Trump allegedly recalled Yovanovitch, a career Foreign Service officer, as ambassador to Ukraine at the behest of his personal attorney Rudy Giuliani, an episode at the heart of the impeachment trial. "I personally know her and got to spend time with her out in Ukraine," Klobuchar said.

The Minnesotan has perhaps the most to lose in Iowa from impeachment. She needs to garner 15 percent in a precinct to be considered "viable" enough to receive delegates. Klobuchar is straddling that threshold in the polls, trailing in fifth place behind Warren, Sanders, Biden and former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg.

Klobuchar is a grinder. During a recent three-day stretch, she visited 27 counties. "I would love to do 10 counties a day, but I am going to be there," she said, referring to Washington.

Her town hall in this Des Moines suburb had a somber vibe. Bob Dylan's downbeat "Girl from the North Country" played before she took the stage, far from the typical musical fare at political events. She began her remarks by noting that the Green Bay Packers were getting blown out in the NFC Championship game. "But as a Vikings fan, I can relate," she said.

Speaking at an "innovation center" in an office park, with an icy parking lot and subzero temperatures outside, Klobuchar expressed confidence she can still campaign while serving as a juror. “I always tell people that I’m a mom, and I can do two things at once,” she said, adding that her daughter will hold events on her behalf. “You will enjoy her.”

In the coming days, Klobuchar promises to push hard for the Senate to call witnesses. “If they are not going to allow us to have witnesses, we may as well give the president a crown and a scepter,” Klobuchar said, repeating one of her lines from last week’s Democratic debate.

Supporters hope that Klobuchar can use the national platform to bolster her standing. “I have mixed feelings about it,” said Klobuchar supporter Margo Marks, 74, of Waukee. “How much it would help her to be here, I don’t know. But I’m glad to have her out there as a juror. She’s a great representative who will ask the right questions and hopefully influence people.”

Dan Looker, 72, said after listening to Klobuchar’s speech that he will heed her call for help and sign up for extra door-knocking shifts over the next two weeks. The retired business editor of Successful Farming magazine, who lives in Des Moines, has believed Klobuchar was presidential timber since she questioned Brett Kavanaugh about his drinking. Looker thinks the senior senator from Minnesota proved her mettle by not getting rattled when Trump’s Supreme Court nominee – fighting allegations of sexual assault – asked her if she’s ever been blackout drunk. Kavanaugh subsequently apologized for his emotional outburst. “I’m sure impeachment is an added challenge for her, but anyone who lives in Iowa has seen lots of ads for all the candidates,” he said. “If she can afford to run ads, I think she’ll be okay.”

Sen. Michael Bennet (D-Colo.) answers questions on Monday during the 2020 Iowa Brown & Black Democratic Presidential Forum in Des Moines. All four senators running for president took questions about race-related issues on Martin Luther King Jr. Day. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Sen. Michael Bennet has mostly focused on New Hampshire, but he was in Iowa on Monday for a Brown and Black Forum that drew all the major candidates. The senator from Colorado said he's not raised enough money to pay for the private planes that give the top-tier candidates more scheduling flexibility. "If they'll let me get on their charters, I might go with them, but I can't afford one myself," Bennet joked after the forum. "We all have an important constitutional responsibility to fulfill, and I feel like we've got to make sure we take the time to take it seriously and we cannot let the campaigning distract us."

Bennet emphasized that he'll "mostly" be in the Granite State when

the trial is not going on, which is easier to fly to than Iowa. “Whatever it takes, we’ll make it work,” he said. “I hope this may turn into a more interesting trial than people thought it would be.”

Before he headed to the airport yesterday afternoon, I asked Bennet how impeachment shapes his closing message. “Some people say, ‘Well, if you know the guy’s going to be acquitted, why would you go through this?’ First of all, we don’t know that he’s going to be acquitted. It’s likely, but we don’t know that,” he answered. “Second, I think this is a real opportunity for us to reestablish a standard of what we expect out of the president of the United States and our elected leadership generally, and I think he’s failed that test miserably.”

To be sure, being absent from Iowa is not necessarily a death knell. Consider the inverse: No Democratic candidate has spent more time in the Hawkeye State this cycle than former Maryland congressman John Delaney, who continues to register at zero percent in the polls. As Delaney spoke during that forum, almost all the reporters in the filing room got up to go ask questions of Andrew Yang, the entrepreneur who has never held public office and whose big idea is to give every American a thousand-dollar check each month. Yang didn’t qualify for the last debate, but he’s planning a bus tour to take him all over Iowa. He expressed condolences to the senators who are waylaid by impeachment. “I feel bad for my competitors because I wish they were out campaigning too, sharing their visions, but the circumstances are what they are,” Yang said.

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) speaks during a rally on Monday night at the State Historical Museum of Iowa in Des Moines. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Impeachment is shaping up to be an early test of Sanders's theory of the case for 2020, which is that he can expand the electorate by exciting millions of people, thereby engaging them in the political process, who won't support an establishment candidate.

On Martin Luther King Jr. Day, Sanders recalled taking a bus from Chicago to Washington in 1963 to watch King deliver his “I have a dream” speech. “Sometimes the media kind of sanitizes what Dr. King was all about,” Sanders said. “He was a political revolutionary. ... In the spirit of Dr. King, what this campaign is about and what makes this campaign different than other campaigns, is that we are not just here to defeat Donald Trump. We are here to transform the United States of America. That’s what political revolution is.”

Sanders’s microphone cut out a dozen times during his stump speech at the historical museum. After the seventh time, he quipped: “Donald Trump stops at nothing!” Perturbed, the senator kept talking without the speakers on. His supporters quieted, straining to listen as the senator raised his voice to promise he will disrupt the power structure. “As president, I intend to not only be the commander-in-chief of the military,” he said. “I intend to be organizer-in-chief, as well.”

He emphasized that his volunteers have a duty to step up in his absence because the future of their “revolution” depends on it. “If we win here in Iowa, and with your help I believe we can, then I think we’re going to win in New Hampshire,” Sanders said. “And if we win in New Hampshire, we’re going to win in Nevada. And if we win in Nevada, we’re going to do very well in South Carolina. And then we’re going to win in California. ... Four years ago, Iowa started the revolution. Let’s complete the revolution in Iowa.”

Shari Hawk, a retired nurse who lives in the suburb of Ankeny, will be a precinct captain for Sanders on caucus night. She’s

been door-knocking, phone-banking and even got asked to leave a shopping center a few days ago where she was canvassing for Sanders. Hawk told me with great pride that she converted a handful of undecided voters into Sanders supporters before management told her to skedaddle. She acknowledged feeling some stress that the trial will keep Sanders away, but she said that the drawbacks of his absence are obviated somewhat by the work she and other volunteers have done over the past five years, dating to the 2016 campaign, to build up a winning organization in the state. “It still bothers me, though, because nobody excites people like Bernie himself does,” said Hawk, 69. “We all know that. But we also know his surrogates can raise the roof.”

Brit Voss, 30, is less worried about the politics of the impeachment trial than the bottom line. She and her girlfriend live in New Mexico but follow Sanders around the country to sell merchandise at his events. She said they give some of their proceeds as a donation to the campaign. “Impeachment will affect our sales because he’s not able to have rallies,” Voss said. “It means we’re not going to have rallies to go sell our merchandise, so it is affecting us financially. I want Trump to be impeached, but what does that mean? At this point, it seems like it’s all kind of a facade because Republicans are never going to remove him from office. So, personally, I feel like it’s just a waste of time.”

The Daily 202's BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

The House impeachment managers make their way to the Senate for a walk-through of the Senate floor in preparation for the impeachment trial. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

THE LATEST ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Trump's defense team is working behind the scenes with Senate GOP allies to ensure former national security adviser John Bolton does not testify publicly if Democrats win enough votes to force witnesses. Robert Costa and Rachael Bade report: "One option being discussed, according to a senior administration official, would be to move Bolton's testimony to a classified setting because of national security concerns, ensuring that it is not public. To receive the testimony in a classified session, Trump's attorneys would have to request such a step, according to one official, adding that it would probably need the approval of 51 senators. But that proposal, discussed among some Senate Republicans in recent days, is seen as a final tool against Bolton becoming an explosive figure in the trial. First, Republicans involved in the discussions said, would come a fierce battle in the courts. ... Trump has said he would assert executive privilege if Bolton were called to testify ... And the White House has indicated in conversations with Republican lawmakers that it could appeal to federal courts for an injunction that would stop Bolton if he refuses to go along with their instructions."

-- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) didn't release the draft ground rules that will guide proceedings until late yesterday afternoon, and they're clearly written to wrap up the trial as quickly as possible. Seung Min Kim and Karoun Demirjian report: "McConnell's organizing resolution ... offers each side 24 hours to make its opening arguments, starting on Wednesday but compressed into two session days. It is unclear whether Democrats would press to use all their time, which could push testimony

past midnight. After the House managers and Trump's lawyers make their case, senators will be allowed 16 hours to question the opposing sides. After that, the sides will debate for a maximum of four hours on whether to consider subpoenaing witnesses or documents at all, followed by a vote on whether to do so. If a majority of senators agree, then there will probably be motions from both sides to call various witnesses, with subsequent votes on issuing subpoenas.

“The resolution also allows Trump’s team to move to dismiss the charges at any time — although it is not explicitly mentioned in the four-page measure — because doing so is allowed under standard impeachment trial rules. The Senate trial also won’t automatically admit evidence from the House process, according to GOP officials, a key difference from the impeachment trial of President Bill Clinton ... Though the material will be printed and made available to senators, it won’t be automatically admissible unless a majority of senators approve it. The resolution infuriated Democratic senators, with Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) calling the document a ‘national disgrace’ and accusing McConnell of shrouding testimony and rushing the trial. ...

“The proceedings Tuesday will formally begin with a debate over the McConnell resolution. The impeachment managers and the president’s lawyers will have an opportunity to debate the proposed rules, while Schumer is expected to offer changes to the measure that would allow the Senate to call several witnesses desired by Democrats at the outset. Democrats could also push for more than one vote on witnesses and documents. But all 53 Republican senators are expected to support the rules as written by McConnell. Once those parameters are set, the formal arguments will begin."

-- A CNN poll finds that 69 percent of Americans want to hear from witnesses during the trial. A slight 51 percent majority says the Senate should vote to convict and remove Trump from office, with 45 percent say senators should vote against conviction and removal.

-- An NPR poll shows that 51 percent of Americans think Trump has personally encouraged election interference in 2020.

Additionally, 41 percent said they believed the United States is not very prepared or not prepared at all to keep November's election safe and secure.

-- Dueling filings: Trump's legal team argued in a 171-page legal brief that the two articles of impeachment are "structurally deficient" and urged senators for an acquittal in a "rigged process." In their own 111-page brief, the House's seven impeachment managers laid out their case against Trump. The White House says there was no underlying crime. Democrats point to the Government Accountability Office opinion last week that Trump withholding aid appropriated by Congress broke the law. The new Republican talking point is that senators should only pay attention to evidence the House had when it voted to impeach on Dec. 18.

-- Both sides did walk-throughs of the Senate chamber on Monday, and the White House announced the names of eight House Republicans who will be part of Trump's defense. They will make his case on cable news, not the Senate floor, but as official representatives of the president: Reps. Doug Collins (Ga.), Mike Johnson (La.), Jim Jordan (Ohio), Debbie Lesko (Ariz.), Mark

Meadows (N.C.), John Ratcliffe (Tex.), Elise Stefanik (N.Y.) and Lee Zeldin (N.Y.).

-- A lawyer for Rudy Giuliani's former associate Lev Parnas said Attorney General Bill Barr has a conflict of interest and should recuse himself from Parnas's criminal case. Joseph Bondy cites references to the attorney general in Trump's July 25 phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky. (Shayna Jacobs)

-- The trove of messages released in recent days from Parnas reveal his wide reach among Ukraine's oligarchs and political elites. Robyn Dixon, David L. Stern and Natalie Gryvnyak report: "The connections read like a who's who of Ukraine's political elite: members of [Zelensky's] inner circle, the country's head police officer, the chief of security services, two former top prosecutors and one of Ukraine's richest men. Parnas's messages showed how he ping-ponged around the globe, jetting to Warsaw, Kyiv, Vienna, Israel, Paris and Madrid, always, he has claimed, with Giuliani's consent and Trump's knowledge ... At times, Parnas showed frustration when efforts to get Zelensky officials to cooperate stumbled. Giuliani and Parnas struggled and failed to get a meeting between Giuliani and Zelensky in April and May. When his texts to members of Zelensky's administration went unanswered, Parnas, left hanging, responded with double question marks."

-- Trump made 16,241 false or misleading claims during his first three years in the White House, according to the running tally from The Post's Fact Checker team.

Gun rights activists descend on Virginia capital

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Thousands of gun rights advocates descended upon the Virginia Capitol carrying weapons, flags and threats of insurrection. But no violence erupted. Greg Schneider, Laura Vozzella, Patricia Sullivan and Michael Miller report: "Armed militias carrying assault-style weapons marched in formation until the crowds grew too thick. Protesters without firearms filed through 17 metal detectors at a single entrance to Capitol Square, where Gov. Ralph Northam had temporarily banned weapons, and cheered fiery speeches about the Second Amendment. ... Intelligence from law enforcement about outside threats had put Virginia officials on edge and led to a massive police presence. The crackdown also made Northam (D) a symbol of the country's cultural and political divide — as evidenced by harsh signs Monday depicting him as a 'tyrant,' 'radical Ralph' and photoshopped into a Nazi uniform. ... Inside the white-columned Capitol, the halls were strangely quiet as lawmakers went about their business. Young pages had the day off for safety; there was a skeleton staff but a beefed-up police presence. ...

“Public safety officials said there were about 16,000 people, based on how many blocks of street and sidewalk were filled, while rally organizers said they believed there were twice that many. Authorities reported no major incidents and only a single arrest — of a 21-year-old woman charged with wearing a mask in public — despite the presence of numerous out-of-state militia and extremist groups that had threatened violence online and in social media. ... Officers did remove a homemade guillotine that had been set up on the street, inscribed with the words: 'The penalty for treason is death.' ... Militia members began arriving from other states the night before the rally, with more than 100 gathering for dinner and prayers in a remote part of Henrico County. Vehicles in the parking lot bore license plates from Texas, Oklahoma, Florida, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New Jersey and more. ... There were almost no signs of counterprotesters. In a rare clash, a man who said he was a shooting survivor confronted a teen carrying an oversize long gun.

‘Why do you need to have that gun?’ the man demanded. A small contingent watched the two argue; they eventually shook hands and walked off peacefully.”

-- The rally followed a weekend of gun violence across the nation:

- In Hawaii, a shooting left two officers dead at a Honolulu home that went up in flames with several others, leaving the suspect and two others unaccounted for, officials said. (Marisa Iati and Hannah Knowles)
- In San Antonio, an assailant shot and killed two people and wounded five others inside a club. A 19-year-old suspect was later arrested and will be charged with murder, police said. (Michael Brice-Saddler)
- In Kansas City, Mo., a gunman opened fire on a line of people outside a bar, killing a woman and wounding 15 others before an armed security guard shot and killed him. (Michael Brice-Saddler and Reis Thebault)

-- As Virginia grapples with the gun control proposals that drew such crowds to its capitol, Maryland is quietly trying to further tighten regulations that are already some of the strictest in the nation. Bills that face favorable prospects include a ban on untraceable “ghost guns” and a requirement for all private sales of rifles and shotguns to be subject to background checks. (Erin Cox)

-- Secretary of the Navy nominee Kenneth Braithwaite may have had an undisclosed contract with Cambridge Analytica, documents suggest. From CBS News: “Braithwaite ... made no mention of an agreement in his required government disclosure form, and says he never entered one. Braithwaite was required to disclose every paid and unpaid position he held outside government within the two prior calendar years before the Senate confirmed him to be ambassador.”

-- The religious-schools case is heading to the Supreme Court, testing the constitutionality of state laws that exclude religious organizations from the government funding available to others and further escalating the debate on school choice. Robert Barnes reports: “The issue rests on whether a scholarship fund supported by tax-deductible donations can help children attending the state’s private schools, most of which are religious. Arguments are scheduled for Wednesday. ... Montana told the court that, as in 37 other states, it is reasonable for its constitution to prohibit direct or indirect aid to religious organizations. ... But Montana is being called before a Supreme Court increasingly skeptical of such stark lines between church and state. A majority of justices in 2017 said Missouri could not ban a church school from requesting a grant from a state program that rehabilitated playgrounds. ... The Montana case is prompted by a 2015 decision by the state’s legislature to create a tax-credit program for those who wanted to donate to a scholarship fund.”

-- State senators in Oklahoma want “Make America Great Again” license plates, a move that could violate federal campaign finance rules. The Trump-themed licenses would, if approved by the state legislature, be added to a list of 98 other specialty designs Oklahoma drivers can choose to purchase for $35. Of that amount, $20 goes to the designated organization that matches the theme of the plate, although two senators claim the money collected from the 'MAGA' plates would not go directly to the president's reelection bid but would instead be split between two veterans groups. The Oklahoma Tax Commission, which handles the plates, would enter a licensing agreement with a corporation designated by Trump. (Katie Mettler)

Central American migrants cross river into Mexico

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- U.S.-bound Central American migrants clashed with Mexican forces at the Guatemala border after Mexico's authorities rejected their request to transit north. Kevin Sieff reports: "Mexican National Guard troops deployed along the banks of the river tried to repel those who waded across and pursued others who reached Mexican soil. The caravan, which formed last week in Honduras, presented a new test for the Mexican government, which promised the Trump administration last year that it would step up enforcement, even as President Andrés Manuel López Obrador said he would respect the rights of migrants. ... The group waiting at the border on Monday appeared to be the largest in more than a year, and its size has posed a particular challenge for Mexican security forces."

-- Trump arrived in Davos overnight and immediately took a victory lap, taking credit for a soaring stock market, low unemployment and a "blue collar boom" in jobs and income. Heather Long reports: "Trump ran through economic statistics with a salesman's delivery, crowing about growth during his three years in office that he said bested his predecessors and defied his skeptics. .. Trump, who has called climate change a hoax, did not directly address the theme during his 30-minute address here, though he did call for rejecting 'the perennial prophets of doom and their predictions of the apocalypse.' He also made no mention of impeachment or U.S. politics, though he took a swipe at 'radical socialism,' his term for Democratic ideas about health care, education and other issues. ... Forum founder and chairman Klaus Schwab thanked Trump 'for injecting optimism' into the discussion. ... Trump got a polite but not enthusiastic reception in the hall, though a few in the audience slipped out well before he wrapped up."

-- The global economy is likely to rebound in 2020, but the International Monetary Fund warned of eerie parallels to the 1920s. Long reports: "Global growth is expected to hit 3.3 percent this year, the IMF predicted. That is up from 2.9 percent last year, which was the worst year for the world economy since the Great Recession. ... But [at the World Economic Forum], as top business and political leaders gather in this ski chalet town in the Swiss Alps, uncertainty remains high ... [IMF Managing Director Kristalina] Georgieva warned that the record or near-record levels of wealth inequality in the United States, United Kingdom and many other parts of the world, combined with the rapid advancement of technology, feels a lot like the 1920s, which ultimately led to financial disaster. ... The IMF is urging countries to use this time now, while unemployment is low and growth is decent, to address bigger problems in the economy.”

-- Sanders and Warren are not attending the annual gathering of global elites and billionaires at Davos, but the two are hot discussion topics. So is climate change. Long reports: “Leaders of large corporations are eager to show they are doing something about the world’s biggest problems and do not need the sweeping policy changes that Sanders and Warren are proposing. ... For the first time, ‘climate action failure’ was the No. 1 risk in the World Economic Forum’s Global Risk Report, which is based on a survey of more than 1,000 key business and political figures. ... As candidates like Sanders and Warren keep the spotlight on billionaires and protesters take to the streets in Switzerland holding signs that say ‘Eat the Rich,’ there’s an awareness that giving to foundations and charities is no longer enough. But few here are committing to concrete solutions.”

-- At Davos, teenage climate activist Greta Thunberg said “pretty much nothing has been done” to tackle climate change. “Without treating this as a real crisis we cannot solve it,” she said. “It will require much more than this, this is just the very beginning.”

(Bloomberg News)

-- Huawei chief financial officer Meng Wanzhou, facing extradition to the United States, argued that the charges against her aren't crimes in Canada. Amanda Coletta reports: Under Canadian law, to 'commit' Meng for extradition, the allegations must meet the test of 'double criminality,' meaning that the charges of which she is accused in the United States must also be considered crimes in Canada. Meng's legal team told Associate Chief Justice Heather Holmes that the alleged misrepresentations do not amount to fraud, and that the case is really about the United States trying to enforce its sanctions against Iran — sanctions that did not exist in Canada at the time Canadian officials agreed to begin extradition.”

-- Iran has asked the U.S. and French authorities for equipment to download information from the black boxes of the Ukrainian airliner that was downed nearly two weeks ago. (Reuters)

-- The Brexit deal has received a setback in the House of Lords after three amendments to Prime Minister Boris Johnson's bill were passed. (The Guardian)

-- China is trying to close the city at the center of a mystery virus that has claimed six lives. Chinese officials have confirmation that the pneumonialike coronavirus can be spread from person to person, so they're trying to limit travel in and out of the city of Wuhan, where the vast majority of disease cases have been reported. (Anna Fifield)

-- Norway Prime Minister Erna Solberg lost her parliamentary majority after the right-wing Progress Party withdrew its

ministers from the government coalition. Rick Noack reports: “The right-wing protest move came in response to the controversial repatriation of a suspected Islamic State member and her children from a Syrian camp. ... The unnamed 29-year-old suspect was arrested upon her return but is denying the accusations ... If prosecutors are unable to prove she had ties to the Islamic State, it could put Solberg’s government at further risk of accusations that she handled the case recklessly, as right-wing critics allege.”

-- Seven members of a hiking group are still missing after an avalanche hit the Himalayas, and 200 others have been rescued. Hannah Knowles reports: “Military and government officials have joined tourism groups, locals and others to look for the four South Korean hikers and their three Nepali guides, and to bring scores of others ‘whose lives were in jeopardy’ to safety, Nepal’s tourism department said in a statement. But avalanches and heavy snowfall have thwarted those operations ... Poor conditions kept a military helicopter with rescue teams from landing Monday...”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Trump’s legal team took a tour of the impeachment battleground:

Frank Thorp V
@frankthorp

The WH defense team leaves the Capitol after a final walk-through ahead of tomorrow's Senate impeachment trial:

 103 8:35 PM - Jan 20, 2020

 83 people are talking about this

Alan Dershowitz, the liberal lawyer Trump tapped for his defense team, didn't represent Clinton 21 years ago because he was too toxic:

andrew kaczynski 🤔 ✓
@KFILE

From 1999:

CNN: How would you conduct defending Bill Clinton in the Senate if you were in charge of it?

Dershowitz: "Well, the first thing I would do is say, 'Fire Dershowitz.' We don't want to get involved with people saying, 'O.J.'s lawyer is representing the president.'"

♡ 2,965 10:38 PM - Jan 20, 2020

💬 1,152 people are talking about this

The Office of Legal Counsel has become more politicized than ever under Barr, coming up with often dubious justifications for Trump's most brazen conduct. Many lawyers noticed that Trump's team wasn't particularly careful about details in its brief:

southpaw @nycsouthpaw · 13h

Make OLC reform a campaign issue.
twitter.com/andygrewal/sta...

Andy Grewal @AndyGrewal

White House brief has 37-page OLC memo, dated yesterday, in its appendix. It concludes that subpoenas issued prior to 10/31/19 are invalid because there was not a formal impeachment inquiry vote.

 Max Kennerly ✓
@MaxKennerly

The Trump / Barr OLC doesn't even bother with the pretense of lawfulness. OLC's memo, dated yesterday, supposedly "memorializes" how in Sept, Oct, & Nov 2019 they advised Trump to ignore subpoenas based upon... Judge Rao's dissent in an unrelated case issued on Dec 13, 2019. 😞

716 10:48 PM - Jan 20, 2020 ⓘ

479 people are talking about this >

A former House speaker warned fellow Republicans to take Klobuchar's candidacy seriously:

 Newt Gingrich ✓
@newtgingrich

Senator Amy Klobuchar is the most dangerous candidate for the GOP. She is calm, pleasant, rational and has a history of working with Republicans. The NYTimes endorsement means much more to her than the joint endorsement means to Elizabeth Warren.

7,485 2:42 PM - Jan 20, 2020 ⓘ

2,193 people are talking about this >

Joe Biden didn't get the Times endorsement, but his campaign highlighted the support he received from an African American woman in the elevator on his way to sit down with their editorial board:

Joe Biden (Text Join to 30330) ✓
@JoeBiden

Honored to have won Jacquelyn's endorsement.

7,571 likes 8:08 PM - Jan 20, 2020

1,960 people are talking about this

The FBI shared a message honoring MLK, prompting a CNN anchor to recall the bureau's not-always-great history:

Jake Tapper ✓
@jaketapper

The FBI under J. Edgar Hoover had a completely different approach to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., of course.

It smeared him, wiretapped him (signed off by Attorney General Robert Kennedy), and encouraged him to commit suicide. twitter.com/FBI/status/121...

FBI ✓ @FBI

Today, the FBI honors the life and work of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. A quote from Dr. King is etched in stone at the FBI Academy's reflection garden in Quantico as a reminder to all students and FBI employees: "The time is always right to do what is right." #MLKDay

14.6K 4:37 PM - Jan 20, 2020

5,071 people are talking about this

Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio) could have been one of the contenders in Iowa this weekend if he had run for president. Instead, he went shopping in the snow of Ohio. From his wife:

 Connie Schultz
@ConnieSchultz

He's off to Washington, but yesterday my guy was all about the Costco.

 3,746  1:26 AM - Jan 21, 2020

 192 people are talking about this

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "It was awful because it was my life's work and I'm good at it, and there's no reason in the world that the president shouldn't trust me," said Sue Gordon, the former deputy director of national intelligence, of her dismissal by the president. (InStyle)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Trump received a mixed reaction when he visited the MLK memorial:

Trump receives cheers, boos during MLK Jr. memorial visit

Stephen Colbert broke down Trump's lawyers' appearances on the Sunday shows:

And he sat down with Tom Steyer:

Seth Meyers took a look at the Lev Parnas evidence:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Codes Enclosed -- January 22 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Wednesday, January 22, 2020 5:38:35 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

This email is an alert that the full edition of Energywire was just published. When prompted, enter your trial access codes (both are case sensitive):

Username: (b) (5)

Password: (b) (5)

Ready to subscribe? Click here.

ENERGYWIRE — Wed., January 22, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. SUPREME COURT:

Coal export battle hinges on commerce clause

A pair of energy-producing states may face ideological challenges in their quest for a high court review of Washington state's blockade against the last major coal export project on the West Coast.

TOP STORIES

2. GRID:

EV firm backs first-of-a-kind energy storage program

3. ELECTRICITY:

States, groups fight FERC changes to largest grid market

4. ENERGY TRANSITIONS:

Ind. to close large coal plant

FEDERAL AGENCIES

5. OIL AND GAS:

EPA, Colo. company reach deal to cut emissions

6. OIL AND GAS:

Trump admin, groups push court to nix Blackfeet lease

ELECTRICITY

7. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Calif. launches its biggest locally run solar project

TECHNOLOGY

---

8. BUSINESS:

Energy executives back carbon capture at Davos forum

9. SECURITY:

India plans to mandate cyber protections for power grids

OIL AND GAS

---

10. ENERGY MARKETS:

Belarus imports oil from Norway after Russia halts supplies

11. OIL:

Libyan fields remain shut, testing peace summit

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden talks Ukraine, but not impeachment, in Iowa – as the Senate trial complicates his messaging
Date: Wednesday, January 22, 2020 10:15:12 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Joe Biden talks Ukraine, but not impeachment, in Iowa – as the Senate trial complicates his messaging

Joe Biden fields questions from voters on Tuesday afternoon in Ames, Iowa. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

AMES, Iowa – “There are people being killed in Ukraine by Russian soldiers right now, as I speak to you,” Joe Biden said at a campaign event here on Tuesday afternoon. “As I speak to you!”

Also as the former vice president spoke at Iowa State University, the Senate debated the rules for the trial of President Trump. The president was impeached by the House for his alleged efforts to coerce the Ukrainian government into announcing an investigation into Joe and Hunter Biden by freezing hundreds of millions of dollars in military aid that Congress approved to help fend off Russia's ongoing occupation of the Donbas region.

The Democratic presidential candidate brought up Ukraine to criticize Trump for appeasing Vladimir Putin and not supporting allies, which Biden says emboldens the revanchist Russians. "Look at what's happening in Hungary," Biden continued, firing himself up. "When you live next to the bear, and the Americans don't look like they're going to take care of you, what happens? You make accommodations with the bear! It's just like in the Cold War."

Biden never mentioned impeachment during his hour-long, town hall-style meeting, and no one in the audience asked about it, but the issue hovered. "One of the things that is on the ballot here is basically the abuse of power," he said. "We've never seen a time, in my view, in modern history where we've seen such an abuse of power by a president of the United States of America, disregarding the truth and using the following tactic: If you lie enough ... and you repeat it, repeat it, repeat it, repeat it and repeat it, eventually the notion is that a number of people are going to think it's true."

The split-screen between the impeachment trial and Biden's event showcased a paradox that the next few weeks may put in even starker relief. The centerpiece of Biden's pitch is that he can bridge the partisan divides and work with Republican senators to get big things done, yet those very Republican senators voted in lockstep on Tuesday with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to block witnesses and subpoenas, just as they banded together to block Merrick Garland from even getting a hearing four years ago when

Barack Obama nominated him to fill a Supreme Court vacancy. Biden's much ballyhooed relationships did no good then, even when Obama picked a moderate judge he believed would appeal to Republicans.

Biden nodded to how discordant it might seem for him to talk about being able to work with the other side amid all the acrimony. He joked that his opponents have called him too old and too naive. "I thought they were contradictory notions," Biden said, before rejecting the idea that he cannot work with the modern GOP. "I know this new Republican Party better than anybody. I've been the object of their affection for some time now," he continued, drawing laughter. "I fully understand the way they try to malign my only surviving son and the way they've gone after my family, even my grandkids."

He explained that he doesn't hold grudges, which he said is the key to compromise and even the survival of the republic. "Look, one of the things a president has to do is you have to be a fighter and a competitor, but a president also needs to be a healer," Biden continued. "I can't keep a grudge in terms of the way they've gone after me. But it's not about me. It's about you. It's about the American people. We've got to heal the country. ... I'm convinced that it can be done. I've done it my whole career."

Biden takes a selfie with Susan Klein of Ames, Iowa. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

-- I interviewed a dozen Biden supporters after the rally, and all of them cited without prompting either his ability to work with Republican lawmakers or appeal to traditional GOP voters as one of the reasons they're planning to caucus for him on Feb. 3. "He's the one Trump fears the most, so that's why he's been targeted," said Bob Lorr, 82, of Ames. "Also, to straighten out this mess, Democrats are going to have to appeal to independents and Never Trumpers, and Joe is moderate enough that he can do that better than any of the other candidates."

-- To be sure, the Biden campaign remains on edge about the Ukraine topic generally and Trump's allegations specifically. When an Iowa voter accused Biden last month of "selling access" by getting his son a job he wasn't qualified for, he angrily called the questioner “a damn liar” and said he had nothing to do with the Ukrainian energy company Burisma. The testy exchange overshadowed John Kerry’s endorsement at the same event.

As proceedings began yesterday, Biden’s rapid response director, Andrew Bates, posted a four-minute video on YouTube of himself drinking a beer at a Philadelphia bar as he argues, sometimes with profanity, that his boss did nothing wrong by trying to remove Viktor Shokin as Ukraine’s top prosecutor. While his father was vice president, Hunter served on the board of Burisma, Ukraine’s largest private gas company, whose owner came under scrutiny by Ukrainian prosecutors for possible abuse of power and unlawful enrichment. Trump and his personal lawyer Rudy Giuliani have promoted an unfounded allegation that Biden pushed for Shokin’s ouster to stop a corruption investigation into Burisma to protect his son. Hunter, 49, is no longer on the board and was not accused of wrongdoing.

Biden alluded to his children multiple times during the event, though he never mentioned Hunter by name. He often name-checks his son Beau, who died of brain cancer in his 40s, as he did again on Tuesday to express how proud he is that there’s a freeway named for him in Kosovo. Explaining why he opposes tuition-free college, Biden said he doesn’t think it would have been fair to make taxpayers foot the bill for his son to go Yale Law School. Hunter graduated from there in 1996.

---

Content from API

We’re working together on climate solutions.

CO2 emission levels are the lowest in a generation, thanks to clean natural gas and the partnerships we've made to reduce emissions. Learn how we're making progress together at EnergyForProgress.org.

---

Biden greets supporters after his Ames event. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

-- As Biden talked in Ames, White House counsel Pat Cipollone took digs at the four senators running for president who needed to report to the Capitol for jury duty. "Some of you are upset because you should be in Iowa right now,” he said on the floor, prompting several senators to glance toward Bernie Sanders.

The trial meant that Biden had Central Iowa to himself. This swelled the media throng that usually follows him. About 180 voters came to see Biden speak while 70 journalists, including 14 television cameramen, observed from a press pen. “You all have the keys to the kingdom here in Iowa,” Biden told the voters. The 77-year-old wears a full suit and tie on the trail, more formal than his Democratic rivals, and he tends to draw older crowds than his opponents.

-- The U.S. Capitol is 1,034 miles east of Ames, and Davos, Switzerland, is another 4,000 miles beyond that. Trump is there for the World Economic Forum. In an interview with CNBC this morning, Trump was asked which Democrat he’d prefer to face in November. After declaring that Mike Bloomberg has no chance of winning the party’s nod, the president ripped Biden. “I don’t know if Joe’s going to limp across the line,” Trump said. “He can’t put together a sentence, but it could be him. And it could be Crazy Bernie. I don’t know who it’s going to be. Whoever it is, I’m ready.”

-- A national CNN poll published this morning finds Sanders overtaking Biden, 27 percent to 24 percent. This is first time that the network’s survey has not had the former vice president in first place nationally. Elizabeth Warren is a distant third with 14 percent, followed by Pete Buttigieg at 11 percent, Bloomberg at 5 percent and Amy Klobuchar and Andrew Yang at 4 percent.

-- An Iowa poll released Monday put Biden in the lead with 25

percent among likely caucusgoers, followed by Warren with 17 percent, Buttigieg with 16 percent, Sanders with 14 percent and Klobuchar with 11 percent. The quarterly survey, conducted by a Democratic pollster for Focus on Rural America, also asked which candidate is “best equipped” to handle the tensions with Iran “and other global hot spots.” Biden led with 42 percent. The survey, in the field during the three days after last week’s debate, is different than the Des Moines Register poll, which put Sanders in the lead in this state.

-- Polls show that Biden’s foreign policy experience is one of his biggest selling points in the nominating contest, despite his vote for the Iraq War, so he’s leaning into it. He’s delivering a foreign policy speech this afternoon in Osage, Iowa. And the super PAC supporting Biden yesterday launched a new ad in the state called “The Storm” that shows footage of a choppy ocean as text appears onscreen that says Biden is “A President to Right the Ship” and “The Democrat Who Can Lead Through the Storm.”

-- On Capitol Hill, meanwhile, several Senate Democrats are privately discussing the possibility of calling Republicans' bluff on witnesses by offering to trade the testimony of Hunter for the testimony of former national security adviser John Bolton or another senior Trump administration official. "The discussions about the Bidens are being closely held, and the issue is fraught for Democrats, due to the differing levels of support for Biden in a chamber stocked with presidential candidates and the clashing views on impeachment strategy," Rachael Bade, Bob Costa and Seung Min Kim report. "In private conversations in recent days, there has been much loathing of the Republicans' spotlight on the Bidens among Senate Democrats, but also a fear that unless a witness deal is eventually struck, the trial could proceed without witnesses ... That predicament has led to discussions ... For now, Senate Democrats are being advised by their leadership to reject the idea of a trade-off out of hand, keeping the focus instead on the GOP's refusal to subpoena key administration officials ...

"Inside Biden's 2020 operation, there is little interest in publicly engaging with what Biden's advisers and friends dismiss as 'a stupid Republican talking point,' said a person familiar with the campaign's stance on the issue ... Democrats interested in a possible deal said they would want an assurance from the president that he would not assert executive privilege over Bolton or whichever witness they choose. Most acknowledge that an agreement seems unlikely, even as they insist it isn't off the table.

“One Democrat argued it could be risky for the Biden campaign but said it could also give them a chance to steal the microphone from Trump. Additionally, some Democrats privately say Hunter, with his well-chronicled struggle with addiction, could come across as a sympathetic figure under GOP attacks. One idea that has been informally floated, according to two people close to the Biden campaign, is to instead offer testimony from Joe Biden in exchange for testimony from Trump.”

Delaware’s two Democratic senators, both Biden backers, are taking different tacks: “If you want to give Joe Biden an opportunity to sit in the well of the Senate and answer the question, ‘Do you think the president acted appropriately?’ go right ahead,” said Chris Coons, who holds Biden’s seat. “I can’t imagine a person more comfortable in the well of the Senate than a man who spent 36 years here as a United States senator.”

“Hunter Biden is not accused of withholding $391 million of congressional authorized defense spending for one of our allies who’s under attack by Russia. Donald Trump is,” said Tom Carper, who served alongside Biden for many years. “We need to keep that in mind.”

Democratic candidates walk arm-in-arm on Monday during the Martin Luther King Jr. Day Parade in Columbia, S.C. (Randall Hill/Reuters)

-- Biden doesn't just have to worry about Trump. He's been feuding for days with Sanders, fending off attacks from his left. Law professor Zephyr Teachout, a Sanders supporter who has lost races in New York for governor and Congress, accused Biden of having "a big corruption problem" that "makes him a weak candidate"

in an op-ed for the Guardian on Monday. “I know it seems crazy, but a lot of the voters we need – independents and people who might stay home – will look at Biden and Trump and say: ‘They’re all dirty,’” Teachout wrote.

The “corruption” piece didn’t mention Ukraine, but a Sanders campaign staffer blasted it out to the press list. Sanders then publicly disavowed the op-ed. The senator from Vermont told CBS News that he doesn’t think Biden is corrupt. Biden said Sanders even made a point to personally apologize to him backstage during the Brown & Black Forum in Des Moines on Monday afternoon. “He said, ‘Joe, I’m sorry. I don’t subscribe to that. I don’t think that’s true,’” Biden recalled to WHO, the local NBC affiliate, after his event in Ames.

-- But the two campaigns were attacking each other again last night, releasing dueling videos on Social Security:

Joe Biden (Text Join to 30330) ✓

@JoeBiden

I've been fighting to protect — and expand — Social Security for my whole career. Any suggestion otherwise is just flat-out wrong.

♥ 8,617 1:07 AM - Jan 22, 2020

💬 8,632 people are talking about this

Bernie Sanders ✓
@BernieSanders

Let's be honest, Joe. One of us fought for decades to cut Social Security, and one of us didn't. But don't take it from me. Take it from you.

78.1K 2:53 AM - Jan 22, 2020

26.6K people are talking about this

-- “The Sanders style of campaigning has increasingly grated on Biden and his campaign, who view his tactics as unfair and out of bounds,” Matt Viser reports. “Some Democrats lamented that Sanders has not faced enough scrutiny, even as he has been repeatedly underestimated by some party leaders.”

-- “Before Biden entered the race last year, some rivals were quietly whispering about the bad optics of his son getting lucrative contracts based on family connections,” Politico’s Marc Caputo reports. “Some Democratic campaigns released opposition research about Hunter Biden, saying it was part of a pattern of him profiting off his father's position as vice president and, before that, a senator. But then news of Trump's efforts to leverage Ukraine broke ... And Democrats quickly backed away from saying anything critical ... 'That line of attack is just off the table,' said one Democratic consultant with one of the rival campaigns. 'No one wants to look like Trump's messenger boy. Trump screwed it all up.'"

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

A blue banner with a play button icon and text promoting a podcast.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE
HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by LivelIntent

An advertisement featuring a woman holding a baby, with text promoting a more equitable health care system and a call to action to pass the omnibus bill.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Nadler and Cipollone went off on each other. Then Chief Justice Roberts admonished both.

THE LATEST ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- In the 1 a.m. hour today, Chief Justice John Roberts rebuked House impeachment managers and Trump's defense lawyers over their decorum. “I think it is appropriate at this point for me to admonish both the House managers and president’s counsel in equal terms to remember that they are addressing the world’s greatest deliberative body,” the chief justice said. “One reason it has earned that title is because its members avoid speaking in a manner and using language that is not conducive to civil discourse.”

His comment came after an acrimonious exchange between House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.) and Trump lawyers Pat Cipollone and Jay Sekulow. Roberts noted that a House manager was admonished for using the phrase “pettifogging” during a 1905 impeachment trial of a federal judge. Pettifogging is an archaic term that means placing undue emphasis on petty details. “I don’t think we need to aspire to that high of standard,” he quipped, “but I do think those addressing the Senate should remember where they are.” (Paul Kane and Elise Viebeck)

-- Speaking to reporters this morning, Trump said he’d like for some of his closest advisers – including Secretary of State Mike Pompeo – to testify, but claimed that allowing them to do so would likely become a national security issue. The president said his former secretary of energy, Rick Perry, was very interested in testifying, but Trump wouldn’t allow him to do so for the same reason. Trump also told reporters he didn’t believe Bill Clinton should’ve been impeached and suggested that Rudy Giuliani couldn’t be a part of his defense team because “it could be that he’d have a conflict.”

-- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell was forced to revise his ground rules for the trial to avert a rebellion among Republicans. Seung Min Kim, Felicia Sonmez and Mike DeBonis report: “In the end, the final parameters of the [trial were] approved on strictly partisan lines, but the measure passed only after revisions [to placate Republicans.] ... Now, both the Democratic impeachment managers and Trump’s defense team will have up to three days each to make their case, and evidence from the House will be entered automatically unless there is an objection. The changes were so last-minute that there were handwritten scribbles in the legislation marking the revisions.” After those tweaks, the rules now largely mirror what the Senate used for Bill Clinton’s trial in 1999.

“One of the senators most upset about the initial provisions was Susan Collins (R-Maine), who will be a key swing vote on procedural matters during the trial. But the concerns spread beyond a closely watched core of potential GOP swing senators, with Rob Portman (R-Ohio) also among those voicing objections in the closed-door lunch about the two-day timetable. That provision didn't please Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), either. ... Democrats seized on the changes as proof that a small clutch of GOP senators facing public opposition to any component of the highly contentious trial could force McConnell to reverse course, though the Republican leader ultimately won all 53 GOP votes in favor of his measure. ...

“On other issues, Republicans killed attempts from Democrats to modify the parameters of the proceedings to allow for an assortment of documents and a slate of witnesses at the outset

... Earlier in the debate, Schumer and Senate Democrats forced an attempt to subpoena documents kept by the White House — including the National Security Council — as well as separate efforts to obtain records from the State Department, the Pentagon and the Office of Management and Budget. Democrats also pushed to summon [John] Bolton, acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney and other administration witnesses that Democrats had demanded for weeks. All were rejected on party-line votes.”

-- A new Monmouth University poll found that a 57 percent majority of Americans believe that House managers should be able to introduce new evidence during Trump's trial. Another 37 percent think the impeachment managers should be limited to sharing only what was revealed during the initial inquiry. In the poll, 53 percent said the House was correct to impeach Trump.

-- House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) said

intelligence agencies are withholding key evidence related to the Ukraine affair on “the instruction of others, or with the advice of others.” (CBS News)

-- The argument from Trump’s legal team that abuse of power is not an impeachable offense has been overwhelmingly rejected not just by constitutional scholars but also Attorney General Bill Barr. From the Times: “In summer 2018, when he was still in private practice, Mr. Barr wrote a confidential memo for the Justice Department and Mr. Trump’s legal team to help the president get out of a problem. The special counsel, Robert S. Mueller III, was pressuring him to answer questions about whether he had illegally impeded the Russia investigation. Mr. Trump should not talk to investigators about his actions as president, even under a subpoena, Mr. Barr wrote in his 19-page memo... Mr. Barr based his advice on a sweeping theory of executive power under which obstruction of justice laws do not apply to presidents ... Even without the possibility of criminal penalties, he wrote, a check is in place on presidents who abuse their discretionary power to control the executive branch of government — impeachment.”

-- Slumber claimed its first impeachment victim – Sen. James Risch (R-Idaho). “Shortly after 5:30 p.m., Risch — chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which oversees the State Department — could be seen from the press gallery motionless, with his eyes closed and head slumped against his right hand,” DeBonis and Karoun Demirjian report.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: For senators, the trial means no coffee, no cellphones and no talking. The lack of caffeine is already causing Sen. Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.) some discomfort. "I drink coffee from the minute I wake up until bedtime," Cramer told the Wall Street Journal. "It's the only drug that I use or abuse, with the exception of occasional ibuprofen. So my biggest challenge is to drink enough coffee to stay awake, but not drink so much that I, you know, that I'm, ah, uncomfortable in the chamber."

-- Impeachment witnesses from the State Department face staggering legal bills that they're forced to pay out of their own pocket. Six witnesses told the New Yorker's Robin Wright that they have accrued as much as half a million dollars in bills that are not being covered by the government. The diplomats and senior officials involved – most of whom have spent a lifetime earning modest government salaries – have had to tap into personal-liability insurance or relied on the generosity of friends and fellow diplomats who've built legal funds for them. The State Department will reimburse witnesses' lawyers for only about a quarter of the charges for a single lawyer versed in government issues at a Washington firm. But key witnesses have each required teams of several lawyers to represent them in the past months.

-- Sen. Martin Heinrich (D-N.M.) voiced “extreme concern and discomfort” about restrictions placed on members of the press covering the trial. In a letter to Senate Sergeant at Arms Michael Stenger, who imposed the new security requirements, Heinrich said, “to place limitations on the press is to place limitations on the American people's ability to learn about the character and conduct of their elected leaders.” (Michael Brice-Saddler)

-- Thomas Railsback, an Illinois Republican congressman who helped draw up articles of impeachment against Richard Nixon in 1974 as a member of the House Judiciary Committee, died on Monday at age 87. All the obituaries lead with his role in Watergate, a timely reminder that many lawmakers' legacies will be defined by how they conduct themselves during this process. From the AP's obit: “Railsback credited Nixon with getting him elected to Congress in 1966 by campaigning for him in western Illinois. ‘I feel badly about what happened to Nixon,’ Railsback told the Idaho Statesman in 2012. ‘On the other hand, after listening to the (White House) tapes and seeing all the evidence, it was something we had to do because the evidence was there.’ ... Railsback said he believes he lost his seat in the 1982 Republican primary ... in part due to his impeachment vote.”

-- Commentary from The Post's opinion page:

- The Post's Editorial Board: “Trump's impeachment defense is designed to destroy guardrails on presidential power.”
- David Ignatius: “What does impeachment show the world? America's stability.”
- Dana Milbank: “And the White House defense is ... well, there isn't one.”
- Hugh Hewitt: “Anything other than a rapid acquittal will deeply damage the presidency.”
- Greg Sargent: “Memo to vulnerable GOP senators: You're already on video, and it's bad.”
- Gary Abernathy: “Impeachment is a race to the bottom. And no one really wins.”
- Henry Olsen: “And so begins an impeachment trial that will change no one's mind.”
- Marc Thiessen: “Democrats are hoping John Bolton will bring down Trump. Good luck with that.”

What you need to know about the deadly coronavirus found in the U.S.

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Chinese health authorities are trying to impose a quasi-quarantine around the hotspot of a mystery pneumonia-like virus that has claimed nine lives in China and has been confirmed in the United States for the first time. Anna Fifield, Lena H. Sun and Lenny Bernstein report: "The U.S. case — a man in his 30s under observation in Washington state — had links to the area of most concern in China: the commercial center of Wuhan about halfway between Beijing and Hong Kong. In an attempt to contain the virus, Chinese authorities advised people in the city of 11 million not to leave. But the U.S. case showed how far the virus has moved beyond the Wuhan region. ... The Geneva-based World Health Organization said it would hold an emergency meeting Wednesday to decide whether to designate the outbreak as an international public health emergency."

-- U.S. officials added the Chicago and Atlanta international airports to the list of places where passengers arriving from Wuhan, China, will be screened for the coronavirus. Lori Aratani and Lena H. Sun report: "Enhanced screening is already taking place at John F. Kennedy, Los Angeles and San Francisco international airports. More than 1,200 travelers have been screened, but no one has been found to have the virus or been hospitalized through the screenings."

-- North Korea shut its borders to foreign tourists in an attempt to keep out the coronavirus. (Miriam Berger and Simon Denyer)

-- In Davos, Trump renewed his threat to put hefty tariffs on European goods, deepening the rift with longtime U.S. allies. Heather Long reports: "As part of this push Tuesday, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin warned Italy and Britain could face U.S. tariffs if they pursue taxes on large technology companies such as Facebook and Alphabet's Google. French President Emmanuel Macron agreed in recent days to delay a similar tax to avoid Trump's tariffs."

-- More U.S. troops left Iraq for medical treatment following Iran's missile attack on military facilities there. Dan Lamothe reports: "The Pentagon said Friday that 11 service members required medical treatment outside Iraq. U.S. military officials declined to say Tuesday how many more are receiving care but said 'additional' personnel had been sent to Landstuhl Regional Medical Center in Germany. The officials left open the possibility that the number could increase in coming days."

-- When asked about this story during his presser in Davos, Trump told reporters he'd heard they had suffered headaches and "a couple of other things" but insisted that "it's not very serious." The president added that he was not told about the injuries until "numerous days later." "I've seen people with no legs and with no arms, and I've seen people who were horribly, horribly Injured," he added, referring to improvised explosive devices. "I consider them to be really bad injuries."

-- Iran confirmed that two Russian-made missiles downed the Ukrainian passenger plane. Paul Schemm reports: "While Iran's Revolutionary Guard had previously admitted it shot down the plane, the report marked the first official acknowledgment that two missiles struck the aircraft, matching amateur videos that surfaced after the Boeing 737-800 went down. The report by Iran's Civil Aviation Organization did not immediately say the Tor M-1 missiles caused the crash but only that 'the impact of these missiles on the accident and the analysis of this action are under investigation.' Russia announced the delivery of the Tor M-1 system — also known as SA-15 — to Iran in 2007."

-- The Saudi crown prince has been implicated in the hack of Jeff Bezos, Amazon founder and owner of The Post. Marc Fisher and Steven Zeitchik report: "A United Nations investigation to be released Wednesday will report that [Bezos's] cellphone was hacked in 2018 after he got a WhatsApp message that came from an account purportedly belonging to Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman ... The Guardian newspaper, which first reported Mohammed's alleged involvement Tuesday, said Bezos and the prince ... were engaged in a friendly chat on WhatsApp on May 1, 2018, when Mohammed sent Bezos an apparently infected video file. It was unclear Tuesday whether the United Nations conducted its own forensic investigation or relied on work done by a consultant hired by Bezos or someone else.”

-- Lebanon formed a new Hezbollah-backed government amid mounting unrest. Liz Sly and Suzan Haldamous report: “The dominant role in the government’s formation played by Iranian-allied Hezbollah, which proposed the candidacy of Prime Minister Hassan Diab in December and has pushed forcefully in recent days for his lineup of ministers, risks alienating some of Lebanon’s traditional Western allies, including the United States, at a time when Lebanon’s collapsing economy urgently needs international assistance. ... Supporters of the new government are hoping that Diab, a relative unknown, can win over the protesters and convince foreign donors that he represents a new breed of politician capable of implementing reforms.”

-- An architect of the CIA's brutal interrogation and detention program defended the agency and its practices. From the AP: “James Mitchell ... is facing questions now because lawyers for the five men accused of planning and providing logistical support for the Sept. 11 attacks are seeking to prevent the government from using statements the defendants gave to the FBI as evidence against them in a war crimes trial scheduled to start next January at the U.S. base in Cuba. ... The five defendants, who include the self-proclaimed mastermind of the Sept. 11 hijacking plot, were subjected to waterboarding and other methods now widely regarded as torture.

Mitchell, who helped develop the program with another private contractor and others, insisted the CIA feared ‘another catastrophic attack,’ possibly involving nuclear weapons, and was trying to stop it.”

-- Mexico confirmed that 2019 was its most murderous year in recent history as homicides ticked up 2.7 percent. The National System of Public Security said that 35,588 people were victims of homicide last year. That includes 1,006 women targeted in “femicides.” (Mary Beth Sheridan)

-- American journalist Glenn Greenwald was charged with cybercrimes in Brazil for his role in bringing to light cellphone messages that have embarrassed prosecutors. From the Times: “Mr. Greenwald, an ardent critic of Brazil’s far-right president, Jair Bolsonaro, is a deeply polarizing figure in Brazil, where his work is lionized by leftists and condemned as partisan and heavy handed by officials in the Bolsonaro administration. The news organization Mr. Greenwald co-founded, The Intercept Brasil, published articles last year based on the leaked cellphone messages that raised questions about the integrity and the motives of key members of Brazil’s justice system.”

Supreme Court punts Affordable Care Act appeal

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- The Supreme Court denied a motion to fast-track a challenge to the Affordable Care Act, punting a decision on the issue until after the 2020 election. Robert Barnes reports: “Without comment, the justices turned down a motion by the House of Representatives and Democratic-led states to expedite review of a decision last month by a panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit. The panel struck down the law’s mandate that individuals buy health insurance but sent back to a lower court the question of whether the rest of the statute can stand without it. But the lower courts have kept the Affordable Care Act in place as appeals continue, and a practical effect of the Supreme Court’s action is that it will stay that way at least through the November elections.”

-- The Trump administration has drafted plans that would make it more difficult for pregnant women from foreign countries to obtain tourist visas. From BuzzFeed News: “A draft rule and draft guidance drawn up for State Department officers at embassies across the world would make it so anyone attempting to travel on a tourist visa to the US while they could give birth would be forced to clear an additional hurdle: convincing a consular officer they have another legitimate reason to come to the US. ... Consular officers would be directed to determine whether the applicant will be traveling to the US for the primary purpose of giving birth ... The officers can have reason to believe this may be the case if the applicant states this in a form or in an interview. Officers, however, are told not to ask as a matter of course whether the applicant is pregnant or intends to become pregnant, or require an applicant to provide evidence that they are not pregnant.”

-- The White House also plans on expanding travel restrictions for people from seven countries. The nations being considered for the new rules are Belarus, Eritrea, Kyrgyzstan, Myanmar, Sudan, Tanzania and Nigeria, Africa’s most populous country. (WSJ)

-- An Iranian student who was set to attend Northeastern University in Boston was deported Monday night. From the Boston Globe: “Mohammad Shahab Dehghani Hossein Abadi, a 24-year-old undergraduate student, had been detained by Customs and Border Protection at Logan after arriving Sunday. [His] lawyers filed an emergency petition to block his removal Monday night, and Judge Allison D. Burroughs ordered a 48-hour stay. But before a hearing took place, [he] was flown to France — in defiance of the judge’s order. ... At the scheduled hearing Tuesday morning, Judge Richard Stearns said the case was now moot, since the student was already out of the country.”

-- Harvey Weinstein’s defense team will cite “loving” email exchanges with some of his accusers in opening statements. Shayna Jacobs reports: “The contents of the emails are expected to be key to Weinstein’s defense that encounters with women who say he forced them into sexual acts were actually consensual. His attorneys have also suggested that women sought to advance their careers by getting involved with Weinstein sexually. ... The email-related ruling Tuesday was something of a victory for Weinstein’s team. [Defense attorney Damon] Cheronis, out of the gate, will get to give jurors a preview of what is to come. He referred to the email exchanges as ‘devastating’ and said the accusers not only contradict their own claims but ‘bragged’ about their affairs with Weinstein.”

-- Most Americans want abortion to remain legal, but back some state restrictions, according to a new Kaiser Family Foundation poll. Ariana Eujung Cha and Emily Guskin report: “A majority of Americans (59 percent) said abortion should be legal in most or all cases, and about 7 in 10 said that Roe v. Wade should not be overturned ... A clear majority (69 percent) of the public supports laws requiring abortions to be performed by doctors who have hospital admitting privileges, similar to the requirements in a Louisiana law challenged in a case that goes before the Supreme Court this term. Majorities of Americans also support laws that require women to wait 24 hours between meeting a health-care provider and getting an abortion (66 percent) and laws requiring doctors to show and describe ultrasound images to them (57 percent).”

-- Michael Avenatti was jailed in an isolation unit that once held El Chapo ahead of his trial on extortion charges. The warden said it's “for his own safety.” The pugnacious lawyer has been in custody since last week, when a federal judge in California revoked his bail in a separate case. He was to stand trial this week in New York. (Shayna Jacobs)

-- The Virginia Senate advanced a measure that will replace Lee-Jackson Day with an Election Day holiday. (Laura Vozzella)

-- The Boeing 737 Max probably will not be allowed to fly again until mid-2020, the company announced. (Lori Aratani)

-- So close: Derek Jeter fell one vote shy of becoming baseball's second unanimous Hall of Fame selection. Jeter, a 14-time all-star, was polling at 100 percent in vote-tracking of publicly available ballots this week, but one voter, unidentified as of Tuesday evening, apparently saw something lacking in Jeter's record. (Dave Sheinin)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Trump tweeted dozens of times before the sun rose over Davos this morning, focusing mostly on the impeachment trial and reposting statements made by several of his Republican defenders and sharing this video from the National Republican Senatorial Committee multiple times:

"The flurry of impeachment talk at Davos belied White House efforts to project Trump as detached from the increasingly partisan impeachment fight and more focused on delivering results for the country," write Toluse Olorunnipa and Anne Gearan.

Hillary Clinton announced she will support whoever the Democrats nominate, trying to tamp down a day of backlash from the left for trashing Bernie Sanders in an interview with the Hollywood Reporter and declining to commit to support him:

The president of the College and Young Democrats of Iowa urged party elders to stop relitigating the Sanders v. Clinton fights of 2016:

Democratic senators lashed out on Twitter when Republicans voted against calling witnesses:

From a former U.S. ambassador to Russia under Obama:

A top official at the National Republican Senatorial Committee embraced new nicknames for Mitch McConnell, who functionally controls the party's campaign arm:

Matt Whitlock ✓
@matt diz whitlock

On CNN earlier @GloriaBorger referred to Mitch McConnell as "Machiavelli Mitch."

Another excellent nickname. H/t @ltthompso

♥ 218 9:53 PM - Jan 21, 2020

💬 69 people are talking about this

Matt Whitlock ✓
@matt diz whitlock

Even if they changed the rules so the Democrats could go to bed early, he'll still be #MidnightMitch to us.

♥ 116 6:58 PM - Jan 21, 2020

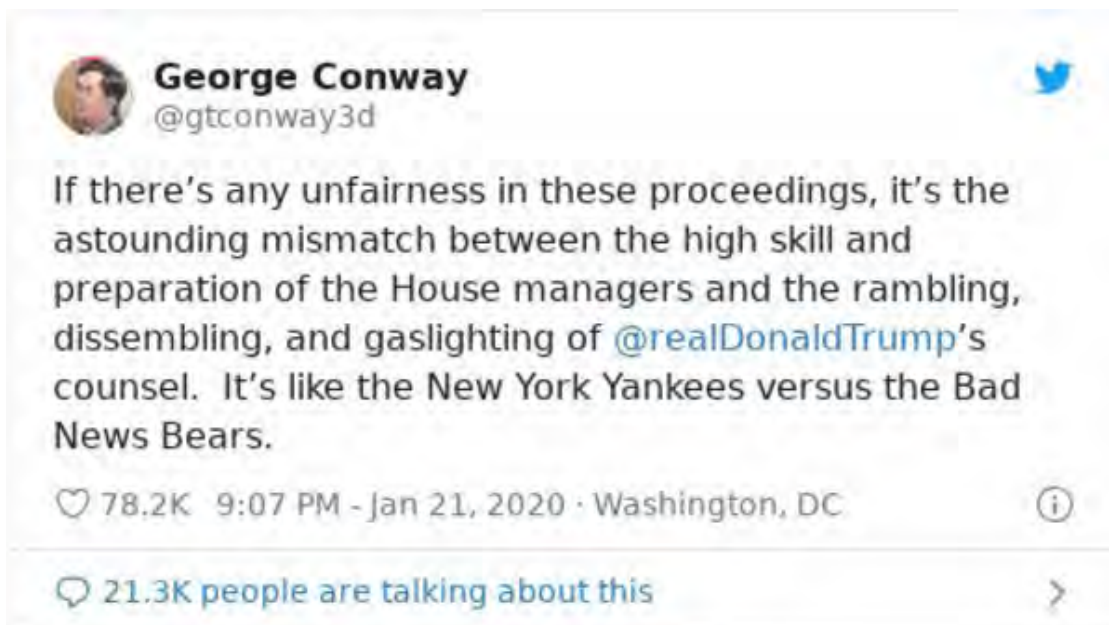

💬 25 people are talking about this

A former prosecutor noted that the chief justice's hands are mostly tied on procedure:

Conservative lawyer and Never Trumper George Conway, husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway, was not impressed by the president's legal team's opening arguments:

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert joked that the Senate was getting to decide whether breaking the law is illegal, adding that the odds don't look great:

Jimmy Kimmel went out and asked the public for their thoughts on impeachment:

And Katie Sowers of the 49ers is the NFL's first female and openly gay Super Bowl-bound assistant coach:

Meet Katie Sowers, the NFL's first female and openly gay Super Bowl-bound coach

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden talks Ukraine, but not impeachment, in Iowa – as the Senate trial complicates his messaging
Date: Wednesday, January 22, 2020 10:17:49 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  Liventent

Joe Biden talks Ukraine, but not impeachment, in Iowa – as the Senate trial complicates his messaging

Joe Biden fields questions from voters on Tuesday afternoon in Ames, Iowa. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

AMES, Iowa – “There are people being killed in Ukraine by Russian soldiers right now, as I speak to you,” Joe Biden said at a campaign event here on Tuesday afternoon. “As I speak to you!”

Also as the former vice president spoke at Iowa State University, the Senate debated the rules for the trial of President Trump. The president was impeached by the House for his alleged efforts to coerce the Ukrainian government into announcing an investigation into Joe and Hunter Biden by freezing hundreds of millions of dollars in military aid that Congress approved to help fend off Russia's ongoing occupation of the Donbas region.

The Democratic presidential candidate brought up Ukraine to criticize Trump for appeasing Vladimir Putin and not supporting allies, which Biden says emboldens the revanchist Russians. "Look at what's happening in Hungary," Biden continued, firing himself up. "When you live next to the bear, and the Americans don't look like they're going to take care of you, what happens? You make accommodations with the bear! It's just like in the Cold War."

Biden never mentioned impeachment during his hour-long, town hall-style meeting, and no one in the audience asked about it, but the issue hovered. "One of the things that is on the ballot here is basically the abuse of power," he said. "We've never seen a time, in my view, in modern history where we've seen such an abuse of power by a president of the United States of America, disregarding the truth and using the following tactic: If you lie enough ... and you repeat it, repeat it, repeat it, repeat it and repeat it, eventually the notion is that a number of people are going to think it's true."

The split-screen between the impeachment trial and Biden's event showcased a paradox that the next few weeks may put in even starker relief. The centerpiece of Biden's pitch is that he can bridge the partisan divides and work with Republican senators to get big things done, yet those very Republican senators voted in lockstep on Tuesday with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to block witnesses and subpoenas, just as they banded together to block Merrick Garland from even getting a hearing four years ago when

Barack Obama nominated him to fill a Supreme Court vacancy. Biden's much ballyhooed relationships did no good then, even when Obama picked a moderate judge he believed would appeal to Republicans.

Biden nodded to how discordant it might seem for him to talk about being able to work with the other side amid all the acrimony. He joked that his opponents have called him too old and too naive. "I thought they were contradictory notions," Biden said, before rejecting the idea that he cannot work with the modern GOP. "I know this new Republican Party better than anybody. I've been the object of their affection for some time now," he continued, drawing laughter. "I fully understand the way they try to malign my only surviving son and the way they've gone after my family, even my grandkids."

He explained that he doesn't hold grudges, which he said is the key to compromise and even the survival of the republic. "Look, one of the things a president has to do is you have to be a fighter and a competitor, but a president also needs to be a healer," Biden continued. "I can't keep a grudge in terms of the way they've gone after me. But it's not about me. It's about you. It's about the American people. We've got to heal the country. ... I'm convinced that it can be done. I've done it my whole career."

Biden takes a selfie with Susan Klein of Ames, Iowa. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

-- I interviewed a dozen Biden supporters after the rally, and all of them cited without prompting either his ability to work with Republican lawmakers or appeal to traditional GOP voters as one of the reasons they're planning to caucus for him on Feb. 3. "He's the one Trump fears the most, so that's why he's been targeted," said Bob Lorr, 82, of Ames. "Also, to straighten out this mess, Democrats are going to have to appeal to independents and Never Trumpers, and Joe is moderate enough that he can do that better than any of the other candidates."

-- To be sure, the Biden campaign remains on edge about the Ukraine topic generally and Trump's allegations specifically. When an Iowa voter accused Biden last month of "selling access" by getting his son a job he wasn't qualified for, he angrily called the questioner “a damn liar” and said he had nothing to do with the Ukrainian energy company Burisma. The testy exchange overshadowed John Kerry’s endorsement at the same event.

As proceedings began yesterday, Biden’s rapid response director, Andrew Bates, posted a four-minute video on YouTube of himself drinking a beer at a Philadelphia bar as he argues, sometimes with profanity, that his boss did nothing wrong by trying to remove Viktor Shokin as Ukraine’s top prosecutor. While his father was vice president, Hunter served on the board of Burisma, Ukraine’s largest private gas company, whose owner came under scrutiny by Ukrainian prosecutors for possible abuse of power and unlawful enrichment. Trump and his personal lawyer Rudy Giuliani have promoted an unfounded allegation that Biden pushed for Shokin’s ouster to stop a corruption investigation into Burisma to protect his son. Hunter, 49, is no longer on the board and was not accused of wrongdoing.

Biden alluded to his children multiple times during the event, though he never mentioned Hunter by name. He often name-checks his son Beau, who died of brain cancer in his 40s, as he did again on Tuesday to express how proud he is that there’s a freeway named for him in Kosovo. Explaining why he opposes tuition-free college, Biden said he doesn’t think it would have been fair to make taxpayers foot the bill for his son to go Yale Law School. Hunter graduated from there in 1996.

---

Content from API

We’re working together on climate solutions.

CO2 emission levels are the lowest in a generation, thanks to clean natural gas and the partnerships we've made to reduce emissions. Learn how we're making progress together at EnergyForProgress.org.

---

Biden greets supporters after his Ames event. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

-- As Biden talked in Ames, White House counsel Pat Cipollone took digs at the four senators running for president who needed to report to the Capitol for jury duty. "Some of you are upset

because you should be in Iowa right now,” he said on the floor, prompting several senators to glance toward Bernie Sanders.

The trial meant that Biden had Central Iowa to himself. This swelled the media throng that usually follows him. About 180 voters came to see Biden speak while 70 journalists, including 14 television cameramen, observed from a press pen. “You all have the keys to the kingdom here in Iowa,” Biden told the voters. The 77-year-old wears a full suit and tie on the trail, more formal than his Democratic rivals, and he tends to draw older crowds than his opponents.

-- The U.S. Capitol is 1,034 miles east of Ames, and Davos, Switzerland, is another 4,000 miles beyond that. Trump is there for the World Economic Forum. In an interview with CNBC this morning, Trump was asked which Democrat he’d prefer to face in November. After declaring that Mike Bloomberg has no chance of winning the party’s nod, the president ripped Biden. “I don’t know if Joe’s going to limp across the line,” Trump said. “He can’t put together a sentence, but it could be him. And it could be Crazy Bernie. I don’t know who it’s going to be. Whoever it is, I’m ready.”

-- A national CNN poll published this morning finds Sanders overtaking Biden, 27 percent to 24 percent. This is first time that the network’s survey has not had the former vice president in first place nationally. Elizabeth Warren is a distant third with 14 percent, followed by Pete Buttigieg at 11 percent, Bloomberg at 5 percent and Amy Klobuchar and Andrew Yang at 4 percent.

-- An Iowa poll released Monday put Biden in the lead with 25

percent among likely caucusgoers, followed by Warren with 17 percent, Buttigieg with 16 percent, Sanders with 14 percent and Klobuchar with 11 percent. The quarterly survey, conducted by a Democratic pollster for Focus on Rural America, also asked which candidate is “best equipped” to handle the tensions with Iran “and other global hot spots.” Biden led with 42 percent. The survey, in the field during the three days after last week’s debate, is different than the Des Moines Register poll, which put Sanders in the lead in this state.

-- Polls show that Biden’s foreign policy experience is one of his biggest selling points in the nominating contest, despite his vote for the Iraq War, so he’s leaning into it. He’s delivering a foreign policy speech this afternoon in Osage, Iowa. And the super PAC supporting Biden yesterday launched a new ad in the state called “The Storm” that shows footage of a choppy ocean as text appears onscreen that says Biden is “A President to Right the Ship” and “The Democrat Who Can Lead Through the Storm.”

-- On Capitol Hill, meanwhile, several Senate Democrats are privately discussing the possibility of calling Republicans' bluff on witnesses by offering to trade the testimony of Hunter for the testimony of former national security adviser John Bolton or another senior Trump administration official. "The discussions about the Bidens are being closely held, and the issue is fraught for Democrats, due to the differing levels of support for Biden in a chamber stocked with presidential candidates and the clashing views on impeachment strategy," Rachael Bade, Bob Costa and Seung Min Kim report. "In private conversations in recent days, there has been much loathing of the Republicans' spotlight on the Bidens among Senate Democrats, but also a fear that unless a witness deal is eventually struck, the trial could proceed without witnesses ... That predicament has led to discussions ... For now, Senate Democrats are being advised by their leadership to reject the idea of a trade-off out of hand, keeping the focus instead on the GOP's refusal to subpoena key administration officials ...

"Inside Biden's 2020 operation, there is little interest in publicly engaging with what Biden's advisers and friends dismiss as 'a stupid Republican talking point,' said a person familiar with the campaign's stance on the issue ... Democrats interested in a possible deal said they would want an assurance from the president that he would not assert executive privilege over Bolton or whichever witness they choose. Most acknowledge that an agreement seems unlikely, even as they insist it isn't off the table.

“One Democrat argued it could be risky for the Biden campaign but said it could also give them a chance to steal the microphone from Trump. Additionally, some Democrats privately say Hunter, with his well-chronicled struggle with addiction, could come across as a sympathetic figure under GOP attacks. One idea that has been informally floated, according to two people close to the Biden campaign, is to instead offer testimony from Joe Biden in exchange for testimony from Trump.”

Delaware’s two Democratic senators, both Biden backers, are taking different tacks: “If you want to give Joe Biden an opportunity to sit in the well of the Senate and answer the question, ‘Do you think the president acted appropriately?’ go right ahead,” said Chris Coons, who holds Biden’s seat. “I can’t imagine a person more comfortable in the well of the Senate than a man who spent 36 years here as a United States senator.”

“Hunter Biden is not accused of withholding $391 million of congressional authorized defense spending for one of our allies who’s under attack by Russia. Donald Trump is,” said Tom Carper, who served alongside Biden for many years. “We need to keep that in mind.”

Democratic candidates walk arm-in-arm on Monday during the Martin Luther King Jr. Day Parade in Columbia, S.C. (Randall Hill/Reuters)

-- Biden doesn't just have to worry about Trump. He's been feuding for days with Sanders, fending off attacks from his left. Law professor Zephyr Teachout, a Sanders supporter who has lost races in New York for governor and Congress, accused Biden of having "a big corruption problem" that "makes him a weak candidate"

in an op-ed for the Guardian on Monday. “I know it seems crazy, but a lot of the voters we need – independents and people who might stay home – will look at Biden and Trump and say: ‘They’re all dirty,’” Teachout wrote.

The “corruption” piece didn’t mention Ukraine, but a Sanders campaign staffer blasted it out to the press list. Sanders then publicly disavowed the op-ed. The senator from Vermont told CBS News that he doesn’t think Biden is corrupt. Biden said Sanders even made a point to personally apologize to him backstage during the Brown & Black Forum in Des Moines on Monday afternoon. “He said, ‘Joe, I’m sorry. I don’t subscribe to that. I don’t think that’s true,’” Biden recalled to WHO, the local NBC affiliate, after his event in Ames.

-- But the two campaigns were attacking each other again last night, releasing dueling videos on Social Security:

Joe Biden (Text Join to 30330) ✓

@JoeBiden

I've been fighting to protect — and expand — Social Security for my whole career. Any suggestion otherwise is just flat-out wrong.

♥ 8,617 1:07 AM - Jan 22, 2020

💬 8,632 people are talking about this

Bernie Sanders ✓
@BernieSanders

Let's be honest, Joe. One of us fought for decades to cut Social Security, and one of us didn't. But don't take it from me. Take it from you.

78.1K 2:53 AM - Jan 22, 2020

26.6K people are talking about this

-- “The Sanders style of campaigning has increasingly grated on Biden and his campaign, who view his tactics as unfair and out of bounds,” Matt Viser reports. “Some Democrats lamented that Sanders has not faced enough scrutiny, even as he has been repeatedly underestimated by some party leaders.”

-- “Before Biden entered the race last year, some rivals were quietly whispering about the bad optics of his son getting lucrative contracts based on family connections,” Politico’s Marc Caputo reports. “Some Democratic campaigns released opposition research about Hunter Biden, saying it was part of a pattern of him profiting off his father's position as vice president and, before that, a senator. But then news of Trump's efforts to leverage Ukraine broke ... And Democrats quickly backed away from saying anything critical ... 'That line of attack is just off the table,' said one Democratic consultant with one of the rival campaigns. 'No one wants to look like Trump's messenger boy. Trump screwed it all up.'"

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross BlueShield Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by LivelIntent

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Nadler and Cipollone went off on each other. Then Chief Justice Roberts admonished both.

THE LATEST ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- In the 1 a.m. hour today, Chief Justice John Roberts rebuked House impeachment managers and Trump's defense lawyers over their decorum. “I think it is appropriate at this point for me to admonish both the House managers and president’s counsel in equal terms to remember that they are addressing the world’s greatest deliberative body,” the chief justice said. “One reason it has earned that title is because its members avoid speaking in a manner and using language that is not conducive to civil discourse.”

His comment came after an acrimonious exchange between House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.) and Trump lawyers Pat Cipollone and Jay Sekulow. Roberts noted that a House manager was admonished for using the phrase “pettifogging” during a 1905 impeachment trial of a federal judge. Pettifogging is an archaic term that means placing undue emphasis on petty details. “I don’t think we need to aspire to that high of standard,” he quipped, “but I do think those addressing the Senate should remember where they are.” (Paul Kane and Elise Viebeck)

-- Speaking to reporters this morning, Trump said he’d like for some of his closest advisers – including Secretary of State Mike Pompeo – to testify, but claimed that allowing them to do so would likely become a national security issue. The president said his former secretary of energy, Rick Perry, was very interested in testifying, but Trump wouldn’t allow him to do so for the same reason. Trump also told reporters he didn’t believe Bill Clinton should’ve been impeached and suggested that Rudy Giuliani couldn’t be a part of his defense team because “it could be that he’d have a conflict.”

-- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell was forced to revise his ground rules for the trial to avert a rebellion among Republicans. Seung Min Kim, Felicia Sonmez and Mike DeBonis report: “In the end, the final parameters of the [trial were] approved on strictly partisan lines, but the measure passed only after revisions [to placate Republicans.] ... Now, both the Democratic impeachment managers and Trump’s defense team will have up to three days each to make their case, and evidence from the House will be entered automatically unless there is an objection. The changes were so last-minute that there were handwritten scribbles in the legislation marking the revisions.” After those tweaks, the rules now largely mirror what the Senate used for Bill Clinton’s trial in 1999.

“One of the senators most upset about the initial provisions was Susan Collins (R-Maine), who will be a key swing vote on procedural matters during the trial. But the concerns spread beyond a closely watched core of potential GOP swing senators, with Rob Portman (R-Ohio) also among those voicing objections in the closed-door lunch about the two-day timetable. That provision didn't please Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), either. ... Democrats seized on the changes as proof that a small clutch of GOP senators facing public opposition to any component of the highly contentious trial could force McConnell to reverse course, though the Republican leader ultimately won all 53 GOP votes in favor of his measure. ...

“On other issues, Republicans killed attempts from Democrats to modify the parameters of the proceedings to allow for an assortment of documents and a slate of witnesses at the outset

... Earlier in the debate, Schumer and Senate Democrats forced an attempt to subpoena documents kept by the White House — including the National Security Council — as well as separate efforts to obtain records from the State Department, the Pentagon and the Office of Management and Budget. Democrats also pushed to summon [John] Bolton, acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney and other administration witnesses that Democrats had demanded for weeks. All were rejected on party-line votes.”

-- A new Monmouth University poll found that a 57 percent majority of Americans believe that House managers should be able to introduce new evidence during Trump's trial. Another 37 percent think the impeachment managers should be limited to sharing only what was revealed during the initial inquiry. In the poll, 53 percent said the House was correct to impeach Trump.

-- House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) said

intelligence agencies are withholding key evidence related to the Ukraine affair on “the instruction of others, or with the advice of others.” (CBS News)

-- The argument from Trump’s legal team that abuse of power is not an impeachable offense has been overwhelmingly rejected not just by constitutional scholars but also Attorney General Bill Barr. From the Times: “In summer 2018, when he was still in private practice, Mr. Barr wrote a confidential memo for the Justice Department and Mr. Trump’s legal team to help the president get out of a problem. The special counsel, Robert S. Mueller III, was pressuring him to answer questions about whether he had illegally impeded the Russia investigation. Mr. Trump should not talk to investigators about his actions as president, even under a subpoena, Mr. Barr wrote in his 19-page memo... Mr. Barr based his advice on a sweeping theory of executive power under which obstruction of justice laws do not apply to presidents ... Even without the possibility of criminal penalties, he wrote, a check is in place on presidents who abuse their discretionary power to control the executive branch of government — impeachment.”

-- Slumber claimed its first impeachment victim – Sen. James Risch (R-Idaho). “Shortly after 5:30 p.m., Risch — chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which oversees the State Department — could be seen from the press gallery motionless, with his eyes closed and head slumped against his right hand,” DeBonis and Karoun Demirjian report.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: For senators, the trial means no coffee, no cellphones and no talking. The lack of caffeine is already causing Sen. Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.) some discomfort. "I drink coffee from the minute I wake up until bedtime," Cramer told the Wall Street Journal. "It's the only drug that I use or abuse, with the exception of occasional ibuprofen. So my biggest challenge is to drink enough coffee to stay awake, but not drink so much that I, you know, that I'm, ah, uncomfortable in the chamber."

-- Impeachment witnesses from the State Department face staggering legal bills that they're forced to pay out of their own pocket. Six witnesses told the New Yorker's Robin Wright that they have accrued as much as half a million dollars in bills that are not being covered by the government. The diplomats and senior officials involved – most of whom have spent a lifetime earning modest government salaries – have had to tap into personal-liability insurance or relied on the generosity of friends and fellow diplomats who've built legal funds for them. The State Department will reimburse witnesses' lawyers for only about a quarter of the charges for a single lawyer versed in government issues at a Washington firm. But key witnesses have each required teams of several lawyers to represent them in the past months.

-- Sen. Martin Heinrich (D-N.M.) voiced “extreme concern and discomfort” about restrictions placed on members of the press covering the trial. In a letter to Senate Sergeant at Arms Michael Stenger, who imposed the new security requirements, Heinrich said, “to place limitations on the press is to place limitations on the American people's ability to learn about the character and conduct of their elected leaders.” (Michael Brice-Saddler)

-- Thomas Railsback, an Illinois Republican congressman who helped draw up articles of impeachment against Richard Nixon in 1974 as a member of the House Judiciary Committee, died on Monday at age 87. All the obituaries lead with his role in Watergate, a timely reminder that many lawmakers' legacies will be defined by how they conduct themselves during this process. From the AP's obit: “Railsback credited Nixon with getting him elected to Congress in 1966 by campaigning for him in western Illinois. ‘I feel badly about what happened to Nixon,’ Railsback told the Idaho Statesman in 2012. ‘On the other hand, after listening to the (White House) tapes and seeing all the evidence, it was something we had to do because the evidence was there.’ ... Railsback said he believes he lost his seat in the 1982 Republican primary ... in part due to his impeachment vote.”

-- Commentary from The Post's opinion page:

- The Post's Editorial Board: “Trump's impeachment defense is designed to destroy guardrails on presidential power.”
- David Ignatius: “What does impeachment show the world? America's stability.”
- Dana Milbank: “And the White House defense is ... well, there isn't one.”
- Hugh Hewitt: “Anything other than a rapid acquittal will deeply damage the presidency.”
- Greg Sargent: “Memo to vulnerable GOP senators: You're already on video, and it's bad.”
- Gary Abernathy: “Impeachment is a race to the bottom. And no one really wins.”
- Henry Olsen: “And so begins an impeachment trial that will change no one's mind.”
- Marc Thiessen: “Democrats are hoping John Bolton will bring down Trump. Good luck with that.”

What you need to know about the deadly coronavirus found in the U.S.

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Chinese health authorities are trying to impose a quasi-quarantine around the hotspot of a mystery pneumonia-like virus that has claimed nine lives in China and has been confirmed in the United States for the first time. Anna Fifield, Lena H. Sun and Lenny Bernstein report: "The U.S. case — a man in his 30s under observation in Washington state — had links to the area of most concern in China: the commercial center of Wuhan about halfway between Beijing and Hong Kong. In an attempt to contain the virus, Chinese authorities advised people in the city of 11 million not to leave. But the U.S. case showed how far the virus has moved beyond the Wuhan region. ... The Geneva-based World Health Organization said it would hold an emergency meeting Wednesday to decide whether to designate the outbreak as an international public health emergency."

-- U.S. officials added the Chicago and Atlanta international airports to the list of places where passengers arriving from Wuhan, China, will be screened for the coronavirus. Lori Aratani and Lena H. Sun report: "Enhanced screening is already taking place at John F. Kennedy, Los Angeles and San Francisco international airports. More than 1,200 travelers have been screened, but no one has been found to have the virus or been hospitalized through the screenings."

-- North Korea shut its borders to foreign tourists in an attempt to keep out the coronavirus. (Miriam Berger and Simon Denyer)

-- In Davos, Trump renewed his threat to put hefty tariffs on European goods, deepening the rift with longtime U.S. allies. Heather Long reports: "As part of this push Tuesday, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin warned Italy and Britain could face U.S. tariffs if they pursue taxes on large technology companies such as Facebook and Alphabet's Google. French President Emmanuel Macron agreed in recent days to delay a similar tax to avoid Trump's tariffs."

-- More U.S. troops left Iraq for medical treatment following Iran's missile attack on military facilities there. Dan Lamothe reports: "The Pentagon said Friday that 11 service members required medical treatment outside Iraq. U.S. military officials declined to say Tuesday how many more are receiving care but said 'additional' personnel had been sent to Landstuhl Regional Medical Center in Germany. The officials left open the possibility that the number could increase in coming days."

-- When asked about this story during his presser in Davos, Trump told reporters he'd heard they had suffered headaches and "a couple of other things" but insisted that "it's not very serious." The president added that he was not told about the injuries until "numerous days later." "I've seen people with no legs and with no arms, and I've seen people who were horribly, horribly Injured," he added, referring to improvised explosive devices. "I consider them to be really bad injuries."

-- Iran confirmed that two Russian-made missiles downed the Ukrainian passenger plane. Paul Schemm reports: "While Iran's Revolutionary Guard had previously admitted it shot down the plane, the report marked the first official acknowledgment that two missiles struck the aircraft, matching amateur videos that surfaced after the Boeing 737-800 went down. The report by Iran's Civil Aviation Organization did not immediately say the Tor M-1 missiles caused the crash but only that 'the impact of these missiles on the accident and the analysis of this action are under investigation.' Russia announced the delivery of the Tor M-1 system — also known as SA-15 — to Iran in 2007."

-- The Saudi crown prince has been implicated in the hack of Jeff Bezos, Amazon founder and owner of The Post. Marc Fisher and Steven Zeitchik report: "A United Nations investigation to be released Wednesday will report that [Bezos's] cellphone was hacked in 2018 after he got a WhatsApp message that came from an account purportedly belonging to Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman ... The Guardian newspaper, which first reported Mohammed's alleged involvement Tuesday, said Bezos and the prince ... were engaged in a friendly chat on WhatsApp on May 1, 2018, when Mohammed sent Bezos an apparently infected video file. It was unclear Tuesday whether the United Nations conducted its own forensic investigation or relied on work done by a consultant hired by Bezos or someone else.”

-- Lebanon formed a new Hezbollah-backed government amid mounting unrest. Liz Sly and Suzan Haldamous report: “The dominant role in the government’s formation played by Iranian-allied Hezbollah, which proposed the candidacy of Prime Minister Hassan Diab in December and has pushed forcefully in recent days for his lineup of ministers, risks alienating some of Lebanon’s traditional Western allies, including the United States, at a time when Lebanon’s collapsing economy urgently needs international assistance. ... Supporters of the new government are hoping that Diab, a relative unknown, can win over the protesters and convince foreign donors that he represents a new breed of politician capable of implementing reforms.”

-- An architect of the CIA's brutal interrogation and detention program defended the agency and its practices. From the AP: “James Mitchell ... is facing questions now because lawyers for the five men accused of planning and providing logistical support for the Sept. 11 attacks are seeking to prevent the government from using statements the defendants gave to the FBI as evidence against them in a war crimes trial scheduled to start next January at the U.S. base in Cuba. ... The five defendants, who include the self-proclaimed mastermind of the Sept. 11 hijacking plot, were subjected to waterboarding and other methods now widely regarded as torture.

Mitchell, who helped develop the program with another private contractor and others, insisted the CIA feared ‘another catastrophic attack,’ possibly involving nuclear weapons, and was trying to stop it.”

-- Mexico confirmed that 2019 was its most murderous year in recent history as homicides ticked up 2.7 percent. The National System of Public Security said that 35,588 people were victims of homicide last year. That includes 1,006 women targeted in “femicides.” (Mary Beth Sheridan)

-- American journalist Glenn Greenwald was charged with cybercrimes in Brazil for his role in bringing to light cellphone messages that have embarrassed prosecutors. From the Times: “Mr. Greenwald, an ardent critic of Brazil’s far-right president, Jair Bolsonaro, is a deeply polarizing figure in Brazil, where his work is lionized by leftists and condemned as partisan and heavy handed by officials in the Bolsonaro administration. The news organization Mr. Greenwald co-founded, The Intercept Brasil, published articles last year based on the leaked cellphone messages that raised questions about the integrity and the motives of key members of Brazil’s justice system.”

Supreme Court punts Affordable Care Act appeal

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- The Supreme Court denied a motion to fast-track a challenge to the Affordable Care Act, punting a decision on the issue until after the 2020 election. Robert Barnes reports: “Without comment, the justices turned down a motion by the House of Representatives and Democratic-led states to expedite review of a decision last month by a panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit. The panel struck down the law’s mandate that individuals buy health insurance but sent back to a lower court the question of whether the rest of the statute can stand without it. But the lower courts have kept the Affordable Care Act in place as appeals continue, and a practical effect of the Supreme Court’s action is that it will stay that way at least through the November elections.”

-- The Trump administration has drafted plans that would make it more difficult for pregnant women from foreign countries to obtain tourist visas. From BuzzFeed News: “A draft rule and draft guidance drawn up for State Department officers at embassies across the world would make it so anyone attempting to travel on a tourist visa to the US while they could give birth would be forced to clear an additional hurdle: convincing a consular officer they have another legitimate reason to come to the US. ... Consular officers would be directed to determine whether the applicant will be traveling to the US for the primary purpose of giving birth ... The officers can have reason to believe this may be the case if the applicant states this in a form or in an interview. Officers, however, are told not to ask as a matter of course whether the applicant is pregnant or intends to become pregnant, or require an applicant to provide evidence that they are not pregnant.”

-- The White House also plans on expanding travel restrictions for people from seven countries. The nations being considered for the new rules are Belarus, Eritrea, Kyrgyzstan, Myanmar, Sudan, Tanzania and Nigeria, Africa’s most populous country. (WSJ)

-- An Iranian student who was set to attend Northeastern University in Boston was deported Monday night. From the Boston Globe: “Mohammad Shahab Dehghani Hossein Abadi, a 24-year-old undergraduate student, had been detained by Customs and Border Protection at Logan after arriving Sunday. [His] lawyers filed an emergency petition to block his removal Monday night, and Judge Allison D. Burroughs ordered a 48-hour stay. But before a hearing took place, [he] was flown to France — in defiance of the judge’s order. ... At the scheduled hearing Tuesday morning, Judge Richard

Stearns said the case was now moot, since the student was already out of the country.”

-- Harvey Weinstein’s defense team will cite “loving” email exchanges with some of his accusers in opening statements. Shayna Jacobs reports: “The contents of the emails are expected to be key to Weinstein’s defense that encounters with women who say he forced them into sexual acts were actually consensual. His attorneys have also suggested that women sought to advance their careers by getting involved with Weinstein sexually. ... The email-related ruling Tuesday was something of a victory for Weinstein’s team. [Defense attorney Damon] Cheronis, out of the gate, will get to give jurors a preview of what is to come. He referred to the email exchanges as ‘devastating’ and said the accusers not only contradict their own claims but ‘bragged’ about their affairs with Weinstein.”

-- Most Americans want abortion to remain legal, but back some state restrictions, according to a new Kaiser Family Foundation poll. Ariana Eujung Cha and Emily Guskin report: “A majority of Americans (59 percent) said abortion should be legal in most or all cases, and about 7 in 10 said that Roe v. Wade should not be overturned ... A clear majority (69 percent) of the public supports laws requiring abortions to be performed by doctors who have hospital admitting privileges, similar to the requirements in a Louisiana law challenged in a case that goes before the Supreme Court this term. Majorities of Americans also support laws that require women to wait 24 hours between meeting a health-care provider and getting an abortion (66 percent) and laws requiring doctors to show and describe ultrasound images to them (57 percent).”

-- Michael Avenatti was jailed in an isolation unit that once held El Chapo ahead of his trial on extortion charges. The warden said it's “for his own safety.” The pugnacious lawyer has been in custody since last week, when a federal judge in California revoked his bail in a separate case. He was to stand trial this week in New York. (Shayna Jacobs)

-- The Virginia Senate advanced a measure that will replace Lee-Jackson Day with an Election Day holiday. (Laura Vozzella)

-- The Boeing 737 Max probably will not be allowed to fly again until mid-2020, the company announced. (Lori Aratani)

-- So close: Derek Jeter fell one vote shy of becoming baseball's second unanimous Hall of Fame selection. Jeter, a 14-time all-star, was polling at 100 percent in vote-tracking of publicly available ballots this week, but one voter, unidentified as of Tuesday evening, apparently saw something lacking in Jeter's record. (Dave Sheinin)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Trump tweeted dozens of times before the sun rose over Davos this morning, focusing mostly on the impeachment trial and reposting statements made by several of his Republican defenders and sharing this video from the National Republican Senatorial Committee multiple times:

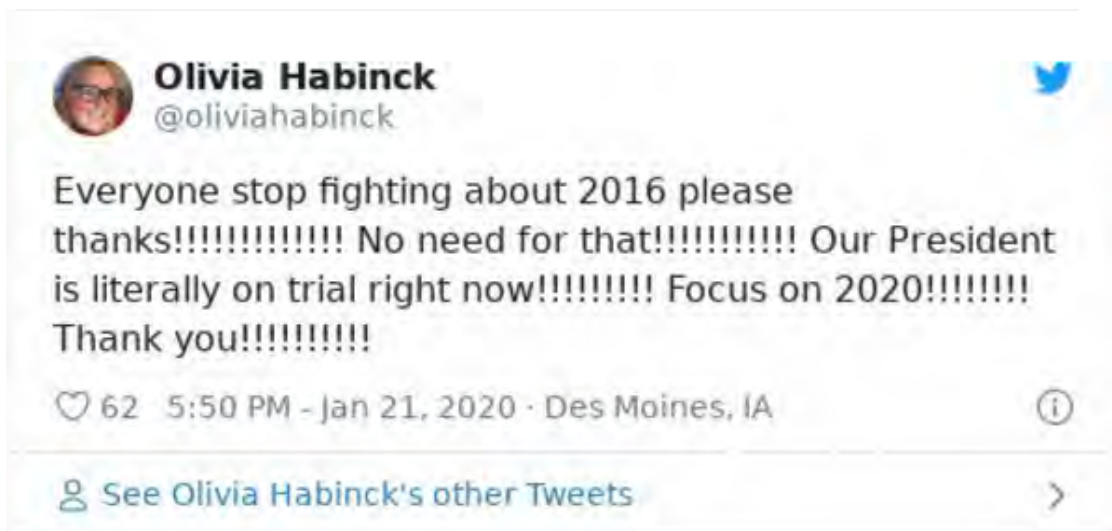

"The flurry of impeachment talk at Davos belied White House efforts to project Trump as detached from the increasingly partisan impeachment fight and more focused on delivering results for the country," write Toluse Olorunnipa and Anne Gearan.

Hillary Clinton announced she will support whoever the Democrats nominate, trying to tamp down a day of backlash from the left for trashing Bernie Sanders in an interview with the Hollywood Reporter and declining to commit to support him:

The president of the College and Young Democrats of Iowa urged party elders to stop relitigating the Sanders v. Clinton fights of 2016:

Democratic senators lashed out on Twitter when Republicans voted against calling witnesses:

From a former U.S. ambassador to Russia under Obama:

A top official at the National Republican Senatorial Committee embraced new nicknames for Mitch McConnell, who functionally controls the party's campaign arm:

Matt Whitlock ✓
@matt diz whitlock

On CNN earlier @GloriaBorger referred to Mitch McConnell as "Machiavelli Mitch."

Another excellent nickname. H/t @ltthompso

♡ 218 9:53 PM - Jan 21, 2020

💬 69 people are talking about this

Matt Whitlock ✓
@matt diz whitlock

Even if they changed the rules so the Democrats could go to bed early, he'll still be #MidnightMitch to us.

♥ 116 6:58 PM - Jan 21, 2020

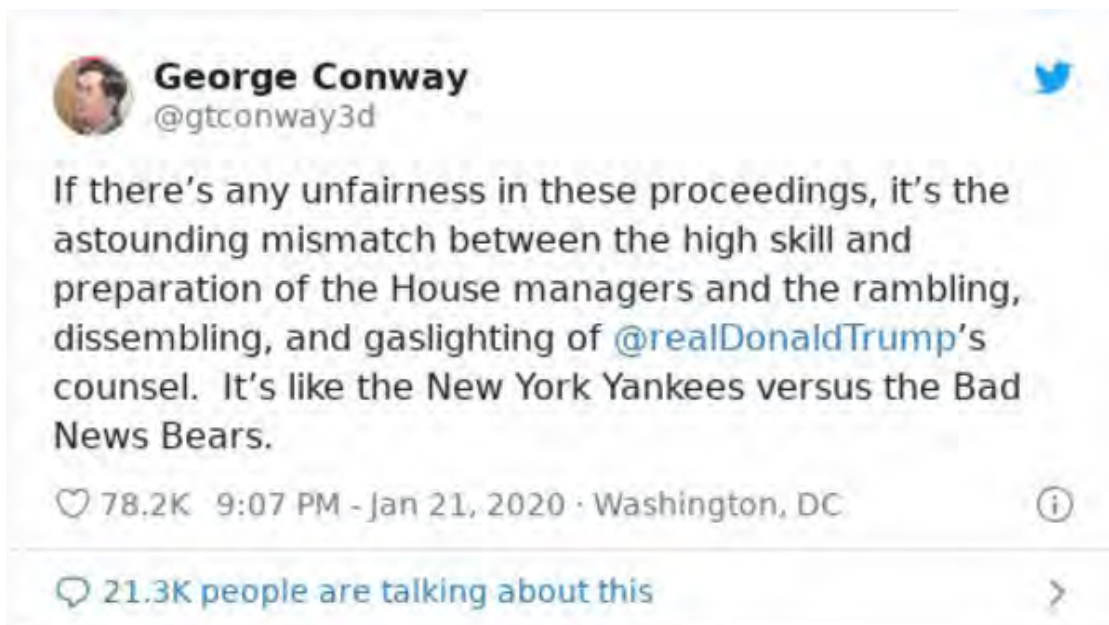

💬 25 people are talking about this

A former prosecutor noted that the chief justice's hands are mostly tied on procedure:

Conservative lawyer and Never Trumper George Conway, husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway, was not impressed by the president's legal team's opening arguments:

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert joked that the Senate was getting to decide whether breaking the law is illegal, adding that the odds don't look great:

Jimmy Kimmel went out and asked the public for their thoughts on impeachment:

And Katie Sowers of the 49ers is the NFL's first female and openly gay Super Bowl-bound assistant coach:

Meet Katie Sowers, the NFL's first female and openly gay Super Bowl-bound coach

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post

To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov

Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: 'Right matters.' Adam Schiff quotes Alexander Vindman in plea to unmoved GOP senators.
Date: Friday, January 24, 2020 10:24:48 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

'Right matters.' Adam Schiff quotes Alexander Vindman in plea to unmoved GOP senators.

'Because in America, right matters': Watch Schiff's passionate closing remarks in Senate trial

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Lead House impeachment manager Adam Schiff has repeatedly held up Army Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman as the model of courage that Senate Republicans should follow during President Trump's trial.

The House Intelligence chairman fought back emotion late last night as he recalled Vindman's November appearance before his committee. Vindman was born in the Soviet Union, but his father brought him here when he was a young boy. The director of European Affairs on the National Security Council, who received a Purple Heart after he was injured in Iraq, said that his father worried when he told him he would testify. But he reassured him. "This is America,"

Vindman recalled telling his dad. “Here, right matters.” The audience broke into spontaneous applause.

“Here, right is supposed to matter,” Schiff told senators last night in the 10 p.m. hour, wrapping up day two of his case against Trump, which he will conclude Friday afternoon. “It’s what’s made us the greatest nation on Earth. No Constitution can protect us if right doesn’t matter anymore. You know you can’t trust this president to do what’s right for this country. You can trust that he will do what’s right for Donald Trump. He’ll do it now. He’ll do it for the next several months. He’ll do it in the election if he’s allowed to. This is why, if you find him guilty, you must find that he should be removed. Because right matters. Because right matters. And the truth matters. Otherwise we are lost.”

The Democrat from California has repeatedly praised Vindman and others for “sticking their necks out” to answer questions about the president’s alleged Ukraine coercion campaign when his former bosses, including ex-national security adviser John Bolton, refused to come before the House. “I have such admiration for the fact they did,” Schiff said on Wednesday. “But what would really vindicate that leap of faith ... is if we show the same courage. They risked everything—their careers—and, yes, I know what you are asked to decide may risk yours too, but if they could show the courage, so can we.”

Over the course of several hours earlier in the afternoon, Schiff had laid out 10 separate arguments for why Trump’s push to get Ukraine to announce an investigation of Joe and Hunter Biden was intended for the president’s personal benefit and not to advance the national interest. “When we’re done, we believe that we will have made the case overwhelmingly that the president is guilty,” Schiff said. “Is there really any doubt about this? I mean, do we really have any doubt about the facts here? Does anybody really question whether the president is capable of what he’s charged with? No one is really making the argument Donald Trump would never do such a thing ... because, of course, we know that he would.”

Vindman remains assigned to the White House, something that has drawn the continuing ire of pro-Trump commentators. Schiff thanked senators last night for “keeping an open mind about all of the issues we are presenting.” But, after Schiff spoke, Senate Republican leaders privately expressed growing confidence that they can win the vote next week to block additional witnesses from being summoned to testify. It’s not clear whether Schiff’s calls for courage have pushed any Republican senators toward breaking with the president and their party leaders on the key votes coming up next week surrounding summoning witnesses or subpoenaing documents.

-- Schiff spoke a few hours after Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-Tenn.), one of the jurors, questioned Vindman’s patriotism by propagating an unsubstantiated conspiracy theory from the fever swamps of the dark corners of the pro-Trump fringe Internet. Blackburn claimed that Vindman once badmouthed the United States to Russians while serving overseas. “Adam Schiff is hailing Alexander Vindman as an American patriot,” she tweeted. “How patriotic is it to badmouth and ridicule our great nation in front of Russia, America’s greatest enemy?”

Vindman’s lawyer, former ambassador David Pressman, accused Blackburn of defaming his client. “That a member of the Senate — at a moment when the Senate is undertaking its most solemn responsibility — would choose to take to Twitter to spread slander about a member of the military is a testament to cowardice,” Pressman emailed. “While Senator Blackburn fires off defamatory tweets, Lieutenant Colonel Vindman will continue to do what he has always done: serve our country dutifully and with honor.”

Blackburn isn't backing down and tweeted another attack around 8 p.m. Trump himself retweeted her this morning. The senator, who won Bob Corker's seat after he retired in 2018, has also accused Vindman of being a “handler” for the whistleblower who filed the complaint. Vindman testified before Schiff's committee that he spoke with an intelligence community official about Trump's July 25 call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, but he declined to identify the official on the advice of counsel because he said he didn't want to blow someone's cover. But no public evidence exists that he was a source for the whistleblower.

Schiff lists 10 reasons Ukraine investigations were for Trump's personal gain

-- Schiff, a mild-mannered former federal prosecutor, has emerged as a surprisingly polarizing figure. Perhaps it's because the president has accused him of committing treason, in addition to calling him "pencil neck" and "liddle." Trump has now tweeted about Schiff hundreds of times. Schiff's boosters say the right only loathes him because he's so effective.

-- The president's allies at Fox News have elevated Schiff this week into perhaps the biggest boogeyman for their audience. Arguably he's a bigger target of their vitriol right now than Nancy Pelosi, Bernie Sanders or even the four minority women in the Squad. If you've watched the network for even a few minutes this week, especially in primetime, you've probably seen hosts and guests attacking the man from Burbank.

Tucker Carlson continued his mockery last night of the man he's taken to calling "Saint Adam," a nickname intended to convey what he portrays as the congressman's sanctimoniousness. "Say what you will, but as a piece of theater, it had literally everything," Carlson said after playing a video clip of Schiff talking on the Senate floor about how Trump's approach to Ukraine has played into Russian President Vladimir Putin's hands.

"Adam Schiff has amnesia," Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows (R-N.C.) told Laura Ingraham.

"They accused us of doing nefarious things with this Lev Parnas character," House Intelligence Committee ranking member Devin Nunes (R-Calif.) told Sean Hannity. "The truth is Adam Schiff and the Democrats have been doing nefarious things with Parnas!”

“Adam's ordinarily not that stupid, but when you tell the jury, the Senate, on one day that they're corrupt, and then you tell the American people they cannot be trusted to pick the commander in chief, that's just a wildly stupid trial strategy,” former congressman Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.) told Bret Baier.

-- Rudy Giuliani appeared on “Fox & Friends” this morning to attack the Democratic managers. “It’s a complete show on the part of the Democrats, and they should be sued for conspiracy to defraud the United States, and they should pay for that hearing,” he said. “I’m going to present over the next two to three weeks shocking crimes at the highest levels of both governments while the Senate is listening to a totally phony group of stories about non-impeachable offenses.”

Giuliani has been promising for a while now to release said evidence. It has not been forthcoming, so take such claims with more than a grain of salt. The president’s lawyer also said for months that he was going to release a lengthy report rebutting former special counsel Bob Mueller’s findings on Russian interference and whether Trump obstructed justice. He never did.

-- There has been some hyperbole from the left, as well. Esquire’s Charlie Pierce calls Schiff the Daniel Webster of our time. Walter Dellinger, who was acting U.S. solicitor general under Bill Clinton, said Schiff offered “one of the most impressive performances by a lawyer I have ever seen.” MSNBC legal commentator Jason Johnson called Schiff’s opening statement on Wednesday “a speech that kids will be giving in 2060 at university projects.” Actress and activist Alyssa

Milano, who has been attending the trial, said “it felt like you were watching a one-man show on Broadway.”

Stephen Colbert offered an early valentine to Schiff during his show. “It was gratifying to see someone taking the constitutional responsibility of their office seriously,” the comedian told his viewers on CBS. Breaking out of character, he said that Schiff spoke “clearly, passionately, cogently, and, I believe, courageously.”

-- Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) called Schiff “well spoken” and said “did a good job of creating a tapestry.” But other Republican senators have told reporters that Schiff was overly “smooth” or “slick,” which they meant as negatives. “In a way I do feel like I’m introducing myself to a number of the senators,” Schiff told the Associated Press, adding that they’re “finding I’m not the demon that I’m portrayed as on Fox.”

-- Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) expressed hope that four Republicans still might be persuaded to vote for witnesses. “Just about every Republican’s eyes were glued on Mr. Schiff,” he said. “It was a powerful rendition.”

---

Content from API

Net oil imports are at 50-year lows. How did we do it?

America's natural gas and oil companies have been working together to reduce dependence on foreign oil. Learn how we're powering a bright future for our country together at EnergyForProgress.org.

---

Schumer: Republicans' 'nothing new' argument 'rings hollow'

WITNESS WATCH:

-- All eyes are on Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.). "Privately, senior Senate Republicans expect the vote to seek witness testimony to fail, but they are watching Alexander and several other Republicans closely. And wherever Alexander comes down is almost sure to be the majority position in the Senate,” Politico reports. “He’s a retiring defender of the Senate as an institution who’s occasionally bucked his party, but he also counts Mitch McConnell as a longtime ally. He’s more hesitant to criticize Trump than are some other Republicans, but he also has said it was ‘inappropriate’ for Trump to ask foreign governments to investigate his political opponents. ... [Democrats] are holding out hope that Alexander will be their hero in the mold of the late Sen. John McCain, whose extraordinary vote derailed the GOP’s effort to repeal Obamacare.”

-- Trump is keeping his distance from the Republicans who might vote to call witnesses after White House advisers warned the president that outreach wouldn’t help his cause. Democrats are also giving them space. Mike DeBonis and Josh Dawsey report: “Democrats say there is no serious effort to privately lobby the Republicans, with the party relying instead on public opinion and the House prosecutors to squeeze them into breaking ranks.”

-- Sens. Richard Burr (R-N.C.) and Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) played with blue and purple fidget spinners. These are popular toys for children. In contrast, Sens. Susan Collins (R-Maine) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), who will potentially cast decisive votes on witnesses, almost never moved from their second-row desks. “Collins is a furious note taker, while Murkowski just stares intensely at the speaker,” Paul Kane reports.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “I am one pooped puppy,” Murkowski said last night after Schiff’s speech. She added that she was too tired to discuss the substance of the Democratic presentation right then. She said she might go home to draw a bath and enjoy a glass of wine. (Kane)

-- Collins sent a handwritten note to Roberts before his admonishment of the lawyers for both sides in the wee hours of Wednesday morning. The senior senator for Maine, facing a tough reelection fight, told WCSH-TV in her state that the debate had become “too personal,” and she said she got mad when House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler accused Senate Republicans of being part of a coverup. “I had heard both sides impugn the integrity of one another and also cast aspersions on the Senate,” Collins said. “That is just not appropriate.” Collins said she’s undecided on witnesses but added that the Nadler comments won’t affect her decision.

-- Fresh polling shows most Americans overwhelmingly think witnesses should testify. An AP-NORC poll shows that 7 in 10 Americans say Trump should allow his top aides to appear before the Senate, including most Republicans. The same survey found that 45 percent think Trump should be convicted, 40 percent said he should not be and 14 percent said they don’t know enough to have an opinion.

-- But, but, but: “Mitch McConnell doesn’t care what you think,” Ben Terris writes in a new profile of the majority leader. “He just wants to win.”

-- A growing number of Republican senators are pointing to Trump's threat to invoke executive privilege as an excuse to vote against even trying to call witnesses, CNN reports: “GOP senators are privately and publicly raising concerns that issuing subpoenas -- to top officials like acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney and former national security adviser John Bolton and for documents blocked by the White House -- will only serve to drag out the proceedings. Plus, many say there's little appetite for such a time-consuming fight, given that legal battles may ultimately not be successful and could force the courts to rule on hugely consequential constitutional issues about the separation of powers between the branches of government.”

Senate trial: Republicans hint that Bidens could become the focus of defense

MORE FROM THE TRIAL:

-- Democrats used a significant chunk of time on Thursday to preemptively defend the Bidens, who they expect Trump's lawyers to attack when they get the floor: "Rep. Sylvia Garcia (D-Tex.), another impeachment manager, sought to debunk the allegations that Joe Biden did anything nefarious in his dealings with Ukraine," Seung Min Kim, John Wagner and Karoun Demirjian report. "But Republican senators said the focus on the Bidens by Democrats made the former vice president and his son fair game for Trump's defense team. ... Garcia noted that Trump and Republicans didn't focus on Biden's actions toward Ukraine until 2019 ... She also referenced a letter from Sens. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.), Rob Portman (R-Ohio) ... and other senators in the Ukraine Caucus to argue that Biden's desire to see [prosecutor Viktor] Shokin removed reflected official U.S. policy ... As Garcia spoke, a visibly upset and red-faced Johnson rose from his seat, approached Portman and whispered in his ear. Portman reacted impassively, but his comments did not appear to calm Johnson, who departed the floor for the Republican cloakroom moments later. Johnson, a fierce ally of Trump, said in October that he did not recall signing the letter. ..."

"Before the trial officially began Thursday afternoon, dozens of senators from both parties entered a secure facility in the Senate basement to view a classified document provided by Jennifer Williams, a national security adviser to Vice President Pence. ... The document had been previously submitted to the House Intelligence Committee. Some senators spent only a few minutes in the facility; others stayed for the better part of an hour. Several Democrats emerged to say they didn't understand why the document had been classified. 'I don't believe it's being withheld from the public for national security reasons. It may be withheld for political security reasons,' said Sen. Richard J. Durbin (D-Ill.)."

-- The favorite talking point for most Senate Republicans continues to be that they're learning nothing new because House managers are repeating themselves. Sen. John Barrasso (R-Wyo.) told reporters during last night's dinner break that it felt like "Groundhog Day in the Senate." Ironically, he had repeated throughout the day that it felt like "Groundhog Day." He said the same thing to CNN in the morning.

"For them to say they're bored, it has a lot to do with them not wanting to hear evidence," countered Sen. Mazie Hirono (D-Hawaii). "They don't want to hear that this president who they're so busy supporting did these things. As I put it, the truth hurts."

-- Tomorrow's timing: Senate Majority Whip John Thune (R-S.D.) tells reporters that Saturday's session will likely start and end earlier than the past few days. Party leaders are still trying to negotiate a deal to start the day as early as 8 a.m. so they can wrap up by noon. This would allow Democratic presidential candidates to fly to Iowa for campaign events. The trial has started at 1 p.m. during the week so that Chief Justice John Roberts can participate in pre-scheduled Supreme Court oral arguments before crossing the street to preside over the trial in the Capitol.

-- Pelosi may be half a world away from the Senate floor, but that doesn't mean the speaker doesn't have the trial under control. From the Times: “Even in her absence from the Capitol this week, as the speaker traveled through Poland and Israel ... she had her hand firmly on the tiller. ... In many ways, Ms. Pelosi is the eighth, largely unseen manager of the Democrats’ case. ... Ms. Pelosi has dispatched her handpicked House general counsel to sit at the table inside the Senate chamber, with the prosecutors acting as her eyes and ears. She reviewed all the managers’ written briefs before they were filed.”

Schiff begins impeachment proceedings with a quote from Alexander Hamilton

THE LEGALITY QUESTION:

-- A core argument from Democrats yesterday was that the framers didn't believe a president needed to break the law in order to warrant impeachment. “The Constitution is not a suicide pact,” said Nadler, one of the managers. “It does not leave us stuck with presidents who abuse their power in unforeseen ways that threaten our security and democracy. Until recently, it did not occur to me that our president would call a foreign leader and demand a sham investigation meant to kneecap his political opponents, all in exchange for releasing vital military aid that the president was already required by law to provide.”

-- The House’s lawyers filed a motion with an appeals court last night that says Trump’s defense lawyers have contradicted, and therefore undermined, the Department of Justice’s position on subpoenas. Ann Marimow reports: “The lawyers for [Pelosi] asked the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit to rule quickly on the pair of separation-of-powers cases, which they said could affect the Senate proceedings. House Democrats went to court seeking testimony from former White House counsel Donald McGahn and access to secret grand jury evidence from former special counsel Robert S. Mueller III’s Russia investigation. Justice Department attorneys have urged the appeals court to stay out of what they say are political disputes between Congress and the White House.” But the president’s team is now telling the Senate that these are matters more properly left to the courts.

-- The White House also stonewalled the Government Accountability Office when the independent congressional watchdog requested information about the freeze on Ukraine aid. From Politico: “The White House responded to the [GAO’s] inquiry with a one-page letter on Dec. 20, citing a legal memo from the Office of Management and Budget that defended the hold on military aid as necessary to ensure spending the funds wouldn’t ‘conflict with the President’s foreign policy.’ ... The correspondence is part of what led GAO to ... conclude last week that Trump’s decision to withhold military aid violated federal law.”

-- Follow the money: The documents turned over by Lev Parnas, Giuliani’s former associate, provide details about the web of dark money that helped fund Trump’s Ukrainian gambit. From

Bloomberg News: “Money flowed to Giuliani and his cohorts from home loans, friends, relative strangers and wealthy businessmen, some with interests in the gas and energy sector. It even came from a lawyer for an embattled Ukrainian energy tycoon fighting extradition to the U.S. on a conspiracy charge. ... The travel arrangements could brush up against campaign finance laws. While Giuliani [and Parnas] can volunteer as much of their time as they want for a campaign, any subsidy for such work by third parties would generally need to be reported as a contribution, and money from foreign individuals would be illegal.”

Opinion | Jonathan Turley: Trump's impeachment defense could create a dangerous precedent

-- Commentary from The Post's opinion pages:

- House GOP star witness Jonathan Turley: "Trump's impeachment defense could create a dangerous precedent."
- Dana Milbank: "John Roberts comes face to face with the mess he made."
- Ruth Marcus: "A more assertive John Roberts would be a bad idea."
- Brenda Wineapple, author of a book on Andrew Johnson's impeachment: "If John Roberts is seeking a role model, let's hope it's not Salmon Chase."
- Michael Gerson: "Republicans aren't serving the country, or even the president. Just themselves."
- Eugene Robinson: "Senate Republicans' defense of Trump is as mushy as apple pie."
- Josh Rogin: "Trump's lawyers don't understand how foreign aid works."
- Jen Rubin: "House managers deliver a constitutional lesson."
- Garret Graff, founding director of the Aspen Institute's Cyber & Technology Program: "Trump won't protect our elections, so private companies are doing it."
- Dan Drezner: "When American political institutions give up: After three years of Trump, there have been some unhealthy adjustments."

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross BlueShield Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by LiveIntent

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.
Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Regional talk radio is Republicans' secret weapon to reelecting Trump

2020 WATCH:

-- Regional radio hosts across the country have found themselves showered with attention by senior Trump officials, who have made accessibility to local conservative talking heads a central part of the president's reelection strategy. Sarah Ellison reports: "Pouring attention on regional talk-radio hosts is a classic Trumpworld move: giving relatively unknown characters proximity to the White House has paid off with a disproportionate amount of attention and praise lavished on the president and his agenda. ... The strategy has been particularly powerful as Trump and his team have engaged in what [Steve] Bannon calls 'information warfare' over the impeachment fight..."

-- Kamala "that-little-girl-was-me" Harris is weighing an endorsement of Joe Biden to boost her standing in the veepstakes. From the New York Times: "Such a move could lift Mr.

Biden's campaign and perhaps do even more to enhance Ms. Harris's chances of becoming vice president, but it could also anger her liberal base in California. An endorsement by Ms. Harris, if she wades into the primary race at all, would be unlikely to happen until after the Senate impeachment trial ... She and [Biden] have remained in contact since she exited the race and had a long conversation in the immediate aftermath of her departure."

-- Anita Hill told an Iowa crowd last night that it's too late for Biden to apologize for the way he mistreated and diminished her when she testified against Clarence Thomas in 1991. "The statute of limitations for his apology is up," Hill said in response to a question from the audience at the University of Iowa, where she gave a lecture on ending sexual harassment. "What are you going to do about it? What are you going to do today? Will you promise as leader of this country ... to use all of your energy to address the problem as it happened and to prevent it from happening to another generation? That's what I want to hear. And I not only want to hear from him, I want to hear from every one of them who want to be the leader of this country." (BuzzFeed News)

-- Bernie Sanders asked his supporters to cool it – but they don't always listen. Sean Sullivan reports: "Campaign officials have been pressing surrogates and other allies not to escalate combustible disputes that have recently become more personal, ... including a tense fight with Joe Biden, a separate altercation with [Elizabeth Warren] and a renewed schism with Hillary Clinton. ... But many Sanders supporters, and even some campaign aides, are inclined to take a more aggressive approach that they say will highlight important differences. ... Some close Sanders allies acknowledged the difficulty of balancing the passions of his loyal backers, inspired by his calls for a political revolution and his staunchly liberal platform, with the need to demonstrate a broader unity.”

-- Sanders’s rise in the polls means he’ll be talking more about his electability than a revolution. While speeches he’s made over the past two weeks still feature his signature call to action, he’s spending more time explaining to voters how policies like Medicare-for-all would work in their daily lives, as well as how he could beat Trump. (Bloomberg News)

-- One in five women doubt that a woman can win the presidency, according to a new CNN poll. What’s telling about this news is that just 9 percent of men said the same. (Eugene Scott)

-- Mike Bloomberg may be lagging behind his Democratic competitors in the polls, but he’s attracted the president’s obsessive attention by baiting him with constant attack ads. Josh Dawsey and Michael Scherer report: “The president has repeatedly attacked Bloomberg on Twitter, calling him ‘Mini Mike’ to insult his small stature, and frequently focused on him in conversations with campaign advisers and White House officials. ‘It’s very clear that the ads we are running have gotten under his skin because they are effective,’ said Howard Wolfson, a senior Bloomberg aide ... Wolfson said to expect more blistering ads against the president in coming months. ... Bloomberg campaign manager Kevin Sheekey debuted a new ad on ‘Fox & Friends’ on Thursday that cited a new book by two Washington Post reporters, who chronicle how Trump lashed out at U.S. military leaders, characterizing them as ‘dopes and babies.’

Trump responded shortly after the spot aired.”

-- Former top supporters of Cory Booker accused Pete

Buttigieg’s campaign of “chasing ambulances.” From BuzzFeed

News: “The phone calls to Amy Nielsen came around two hours apart. It was last Monday around 12 p.m., not long after the news broke, when her phone lit up with his name. By then, Nielsen considered Cory Booker ‘part of [her] family.’ ... So the end of his campaign felt ... like ‘a death.’ ... The next call came around 2:30 p.m., this time from an unknown number. It was Pete Buttigieg, calling to seek Nielsen’s support now that her candidate had made the decision to ‘step aside.’ ... ‘It was a gut punch — like, really? He did not ‘step aside’ for you,’ she said. ‘Like, wow, that’s some nerve right there.’ Later that night, she said, Nielsen heard from one of Booker’s field organizers who said she had already been contacted by the Buttigieg campaign to go door-knock.”

-- Twelve years ago, Buttigieg spent the final week before the 2008 caucuses in rural southwest Iowa, trying to turn out voters for Barack Obama in one of the most conservative towns in the state. Holly Bailey spoke with him about what he learned: “This was a new experience to really talk to people like this,’ Buttigieg recalled. ‘And what I found was, first of all, you can’t assume where somebody is going to be. We were in an area where a lot of people weren’t Democrats to begin with, and those who were were more likely to be for [John] Edwards. But they would hear us out when we were talking about Obama. And sometimes, as you do when you go door-to-door, somebody, because you represent a presidential campaign, would just pour out everything that was on their mind, everything they were upset about."

-- Early voting means that millions are already eligible to cast their ballot. From the AP: "In Minnesota, in-person early voting began Jan. 17. Vermont's deadline to mail out its absentee ballots was the same day. Many of the 14 Super Tuesday states will offer some form of early voting between now and mid-February."

-- Howard County saw a bigger swing from Obama in 2012 to Trump in 2016 than any other in Iowa. The Wall Street Journal's John McCormick took the pulse for 2020: "Recent interviews with dozens of voters here suggest that most of Mr. Trump's 2016 supporters ... plan to stick with him, even though some said they have grown weary of his personal behavior and trade fights. Among those who previously voted for Mr. Obama and Mr. Trump, many said they are reserving judgment until they see who wins the Democratic nomination. ... What such swing voters do in 2020 will have national implications. Before Mr. Trump, Howard County hadn't backed a Republican for president since Ronald Reagan in 1984. It is one of the 31 counties in Iowa—the most of any state—that backed Mr. Obama twice and then switched to Mr. Trump. The president won in 2016 partly because he ran up huge victories in small, heavily rural counties. While he is likely to win such areas again, margins could matter. If Democrats can keep him from racking up the kind of gains he did in places like Howard County in 2016, that could help determine whether he will again carry battleground states such as Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan and Pennsylvania."

-- A new Iowa caucus app is sparking election security concerns. From NBC News: "The app will be used in Iowa and Nevada by caucus managers — local registered Democrats who sign up to organize and run the caucus process in each location — to expedite the process, calculate and assign delegates and report results back quickly. The app will also be used in satellite voting locations across the country and overseas. But questions about the app remain unanswered, including who developed it and whether it has been subjected to independent security testing. Security experts say that the app is a potential target for early election interference, particularly since it is downloaded on to the personal phones of the caucus managers. Party officials say operational security prevents them from disclosing specifics about the app.”

-- Big-money groups aligned with the Senate GOP raised $68.3 million in 2019, an off-year record. Michelle Ye Hee Lee reports:

“The majority of the money raised in 2019 came in the latter half of the year, particularly in the final two months, largely driven by the House Democrats’ impeachment inquiry.”

Activists, scientists and others rally on the Mall in 2018 at the March for Science. (Marvin Joseph/The Washington Post)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- The ranks of scientists are growing thin in the Trump administration. Annie Gowen, Juliet Eilperin, Ben Guarino and Andrew Ba Tran report: “Dozens of government computers sit in a nondescript building [in Kansas City, Mo.], able to connect to a data model that could help farmers manage the impact of a changing climate on their crops. But no one in this federal agency would know how to access the model, or, if they did, what to do with the data. That’s because the ambitious federal researcher who created it in Washington quit rather than move when the Agriculture Department relocated his agency to an office park here last fall. He is one of hundreds of scientists across the federal government who have been forced out, sidelined or muted since President Trump took office. ... In the first two years of the Trump administration, more than 1,600 federal scientists left government, according to Office of Personnel Management employment data ... That represents a 1.5 percent drop, compared with the 8 percent increase during the same period in the Obama administration.”

-- The Justice Department conceded that it had “insufficient” cause to continue monitoring a former Trump campaign adviser during the Russia probe. Matt Zapotosky reports: “The concession was revealed in an order posted on the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court’s website. In December, according to the order, the department told the court it had come to believe that in at least two of the four applications to monitor the former adviser, Carter Page, ‘there was insufficient predication to establish probable cause’ to believe he was acting as a Russian agent.”

-- The Trump administration will create additional new hurdles for pregnant foreign women seeking U.S. tourist visas. The administration said it's trying to crack down on what it calls “birth tourism,” trying to reduce what conservatives call “anchor babies,” by instructing consular officers to assess whether women requesting tourist visas are hoping to give birth on U.S. soil, which would effectively grant their children American citizenship. Starting today, the State Department will no longer issue temporary visitor visas to women hoping to travel to the country with the stated purpose of having a child. Foggy Bottom said consular officers cannot require pregnancy tests to make the determination but wouldn’t rule out a woman’s physical appearance when making the decision, per Abigail Hauslohner and Maria Sacchetti.

-- Trump's "national public health emergency" declaration on the opioid crisis expired because his people at the Department of Health and Human Services forgot to renew it. An HHS spokesperson said the nine-day lapse had been corrected and blamed a clerical error. The emergency status, first announced in 2017 as a measure deemed necessary to direct more resources toward the drug overdose crisis, needs to be renewed every 90 days. (Politico)

-- Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin said teenage climate activist Greta Thunberg, 17, needs to study economics before offering her thoughts on climate change. Heather Long reports from Davos: "Thunberg and Mnuchin are both attending the World Economic Forum this week. ... At a news conference on Thursday, Mnuchin was asked for his reaction to Thunberg's insistence on fossil fuel divestment. 'Who is she?' he tried to joke to reporters before taking a jab at Thunberg, suggesting she didn't understand what she was talking about. ... 'Is she the chief economist or who is she? I'm confused. ... After she goes and studies economics in college she can go back and explain that to us.'"

-- Actress Annabella Sciorra, who played Gloria in "The Sopranos," testified that Harvey Weinstein raped her more than 25 years ago. Shayna Jacobs reports: "'I was punching him. I was kicking him. I was just trying to get him away from me, and he took my hands and put them over my head,' Sciorra told the jury in Weinstein's sexual assault trial, her eyes welling up with tears and her voice breaking. ... Weinstein, who had been watching her from the defense table, turned his gaze away from his accuser as she emotionally detailed the encounter. ... In her five hours of testimony, she described freezing after the attack, adding that 'It was just so disgusting that my body started to shake.' She said she had no romantic interest in Weinstein. The film producer arrived at her Manhattan apartment uninvited one night."

How China is reacting to the deadly coronavirus outbreak

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- "A young, healthy man from Wuhan and a person living 1,500 miles from the epicenter of the coronavirus are among the latest victims of the outbreak, which has incited fear and anger across China as the important Spring Festival gets underway," Anna Fifield reports from Beijing. "Reports of eight new deaths from the pneumonia-like virus, taking the total to 26, came as authorities enforced a lockdown across large parts of the province of Hubei, population 59 million. But they also came as the medical system clearly struggled to cope with the outbreak, with reports of crowded hospitals, stressed doctors and dwindling supplies. Adding to the stress, Friday marked the official start of ... when China celebrates the arrival of the new lunar year. Authorities around the country, including in the capital Beijing, have canceled the temple fairs and festivals that accompany the holiday to avoid having large public gatherings where the airborne virus could be spread. ...The Forbidden City in Beijing, which can admit 80,000 people a day and was already entirely sold out for the holiday, has been closed until further notice. Production companies have postponed the release of seven blockbuster films that were to be released over the holiday, leading Chinese cinema companies to close the country's 70,000 movie theaters. ...

“The National Health Commission reported Friday that there are now more than 830 confirmed cases of infection, and reports of new cases continued to roll in from around the country: from Xinjiang in the west to Shandong in the east, from Inner Mongolia in the north to Hainan in the south. A total of 8,420 were reported to be under observation. South Korean authorities confirmed Friday that a second person tested positive for the new coronavirus. ... Japan also confirmed a second case, a man in his 40s from Wuhan who arrived in Japan on Sunday on a flight through Hong Kong. Other countries to have reported infections including Thailand, Singapore, Vietnam and the United States. In addition to a confirmed case in Washington state, Texas has reported a potential case of coronavirus in Brazos County, about 100 miles northwest of Houston. The patient contracted a respiratory illness within two weeks of traveling in Wuhan and is being isolated at home, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said.

“Some details about the latest deaths in China have raised concerns about the virus’s spread. Until now, the vast majority of the people had been older than 60 and almost all of them had existing health conditions. All of them had been in Hubei province ... But the latest announcement said that 36-year-old man from Wuhan, identified only by his family name, Li, died on Thursday. He had no chronic diseases or other existing health conditions, and had been treated with anti-virus medication and antibiotics since being admitted to a hospital on Jan. 9.”

-- Wall Street stumbled yesterday amid fears that efforts to curtail the virus could further disrupt the global economy. (David Lynch)

-- The U.S. has officially refused to extradite Anne Sacoolas, the diplomat’s wife who fled the U.K. to avoid facing charges for killing a British teen by driving on the wrong side of the road. A State Department spokesman said extraditing Sacoolas would “set an extraordinarily troubling precedent” but did not elaborate. (Meagan Flynn)

-- Trump’s sanctions on Iran are fueling a new refugee crisis – in Turkey. Erin Cunningham and Mohammad Mahdi Sultani report: “Decades ago, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan prompted thousands of people to flee to neighboring Iran. Now, many of these refugees are once again seeking a new home in a new land, Turkey, desperate to escape the dire economic conditions fueled by U.S. sanctions on Tehran. ... Turkish authorities are grappling with nearly 4 million refugees. This is the world’s largest population of displaced people, according to the United Nations, including more than 170,000 registered Afghan refugees. Turkey has struggled to contain the influx even as aid agencies say the number of arrivals from Iran is on the rise.”

-- A critic of the Saudi Arabian government said a suspected Saudi agent tried to kidnap him on U.S. soil, a claim backed up by multiple U.S. and foreign sources familiar with the episode. From the Daily Beast: “Abdulrahman Almutairi is a 27-year-old comedian and former student at the University of San Diego with a big social-media presence. After Almutairi used social media to criticize the powerful Crown Prince Mohammad bin Salman over the October 2018 murder and dismemberment of Washington Post contributor [Jamal] Khashoggi, an unidentified Saudi man accompanied Almutairi’s father on a flight to collect Almutairi against his will and bring him back to Saudi Arabia...”

-- The Trump administration has missed the deadline, established by law, to turn over to Congress an unclassified report on Khashoggi's murder and the role played by the regime in Riyadh. From BuzzFeed News: “In December, lawmakers passed a sweeping defense bill that included a provision ordering the director of national intelligence to send Congress an unclassified report identifying those responsible for Khashoggi’s death at a Saudi Arabian consulate in 2018. The legislation set the deadline for the report at 30 days, which passed earlier this week.”

-- A small team of FBI agents spent years trying to solve a stubborn mystery – whether officials from Saudi Arabia were involved in the Sept. 11 attacks. A team of ProPublica and NYT Magazine reporters tell their story: “The FBI has disputed the idea that foreign-policy considerations significantly influenced its investigation. In interviews, current and former bureau officials and federal prosecutors insisted to us that they never would have hesitated to pursue any Saudi who could have been solidly linked to the 9/11 plot ... But others who worked on the matter, including some at the FBI's highest levels, say that the United States' complex and often-troubled relationship with the Saudi regime was an unavoidable fact throughout their investigations. Even as the Saudi authorities became more cooperative with the United States in fighting al-Qaida after 2003, they were minimally and grudgingly helpful when it came to the 9/11 inquiry. According to current and former officials, requests for assistance that might rattle the Saudi security agencies were frequently balanced against FBI and CIA needs for Saudi help against continuing terror threats.”

-- Trump will host Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his political rival, Benny Gantz, next week to discuss his Middle East peace plan. The meeting comes amid Trump's trial, as well as Netanyahu and Gantz's own troubles at home, where they've both failed to form a government. (ABC News)

-- Hundreds of thousands reportedly protested the American troop presence in Iraq. Families and children marched along signs that read “no, no to America,” as the White House ignores Iraq's parliament's vote to expel U.S. troops from the country. (CNN)

-- The top U.S. commander in the Middle East said the recent troop surge there may not end soon, despite what the president said. “You're here because I requested that you come,” Marine Gen. Frank McKenzie told sailors and Marines aboard the USS Bataan amphibious assault ship. “I’m not sure how long you’re going to stay in the theater. We’ll work that out as we go ahead. Could be quite a while, could be less than that, just don’t know right now.” (AP)

-- Some Mexicans believe the Central American caravans might soon come to an end as the nation’s authorities strengthen their anti-migrant operations at the Guatemalan border. From the AP:

“From the roadside stand where his family sells mole, barbecue and chicken stew, Miguel Ángel Vázquez has seen all the caravans of Central American migrants and asylum seekers stream past his front door in recent years... After watching armored National Guard troops and immigration agents break up the latest one right on his doorstep, loading men, women and wailing children onto buses and hauling them off to a detention center in the nearby city of Tapachula, he’s sure of one thing. ‘I can see that these caravans are no longer going to pass,’ said Vázquez, 56.”

-- East Africa is suffering its worst invasion of desert locusts in 25 years. (CNN)

-- Climate change will disrupt the global economy, but central banks aren’t ready. From the Times: “A report issued this week by an umbrella organization for the world’s central banks argued that ... central bankers lack tools to deal with what it says could be one of the biggest economic dislocations of all time. The book-length report, published by the Bank for International Settlements, in Basel, Switzerland, signals what could be the overriding theme for central banks in the decade to come.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Mitch McConnell made lots of eye contact with Adam Schiff:

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.) suggested a drinking game:

Trump's vanquished 2016 rival also refused to answer questions from reporters at CNN and the Times about whether Trump's July 25 call was "perfect":

Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-Tenn.) tried to troll House impeachment managers during their presentation by reading this book on the Senate floor:

Sen. Marsha Blackburn ✓

@MarshaBlackburn

First - I'm reading Resistance (At All Costs) by Kim Strassel. Read the chapter on obstruction. It provides good insights into today's proceedings.

Second - busy mamas are the best at multi-tasking. Try it. twitter.com/JRubinBlogger/...

Jennifer Rubin ✓ @JRubinBlogger

Replying to @GarrettHaake and 3 others

@MarshaBlackburn might improve her understanding of the facts and law if she paid attention. This is shameful

♥ 2,023 8:28 PM - Jan 23, 2020

💬 3,022 people are talking about this

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) assured supporters that she can both do her day job and run for president:

 Amy Klobuchar
@amyklobuchar

Last night I spoke to 12,000 Iowans on our statewide tele-town hall to discuss how we'll get our country back on the path of progress. Like I said, I can do two things (and be in two places) at once!
twitter.com/kyunglahcnn/st...

Kyung Lah  @KyungLahCNN
Replying to @KyungLahCNN

The campaign just said "there are 12,000 people on the call right now." @amyklobuchar tele town hall to #IAcaucus statewide crowd

 2,435  11:31 PM - Jan 23, 2020

 463 people are talking about this

Marianne Williamson, who dropped out of the presidential race earlier this month, said her appearance with Andrew Yang in Iowa does not constitute an endorsement:

 Marianne Williamson
@marwilliamson

I am not endorsing any presidential candidate at this time; I support all the progressive candidates. I'm appearing with Andrew Yang in Fairfield because I know the institutional obstructions to his candidacy and I want to see him continue in the race past Iowa.

 8,138  3:21 PM - Jan 23, 2020

 1,546 people are talking about this

Bernie Sanders hit back at the JPMorgan Chase CEO after he criticized socialism:

Pete Buttigieg launched his campaign one year ago yesterday. A senior adviser marveled at how far he's come:

Lis Smith ✓
@Lis_Smith

One year ago today- @petebuttigieg had 88k followers on @twitter. 7k fewer than I currently have and...2k fewer than his dogs' twitter account currently has. 🐕
@firstdogsSB twitter.com/kevinstine/sta...

Kevin Stine @KevinStine

Not a bad year for @PeteButtigieg. @Lis_Smith #TeamPete

1 YEAR AGO

AND NOW

Pete Buttigieg ✓

@PeteButtigieg

@JohnFetterman, @OregonPatrick, and 15 others follow
Just launched a presidential exploratory committee. Afghanistan vet, musician, businessman, husband to Chasten and South Bend's "Mayor Pete." (BOOT-edge-edge)

South Bend, Indiana peteforamerica.com

Joined December 2010

2,557 Following 88.6K Followers

Tweets Tweets & replies Media Likes

Pin Pinned Tweet

Pete Buttigieg ✓ @PeteButtigieg · 5h

I launched a presidential exploratory committee because it is a season for boldness and it is time to focus on the future. Are you ready to walk away from the politics of the past?

Join the team at peteforamerica.com

Pete Buttigieg ✓

@PeteButtigieg

Afghanistan veteran, South Bend's Mayor Pete, husband. Running for president to rally Americans together to meet our urgent challenges: Boot-Edge-Edge. (he/him)

South Bend, Indiana peteforamerica.com

Joined December 2010

2,588 Following 1.5M Followers

Followed by @joshbryson, James@Frankenburg, Tolcan@Real, and 50 others

Tweets Tweets & replies Media Likes

Pete Buttigieg ✓ @PeteButtigieg · 17m

Reflecting on this past year, I'm more hopeful than ever in our nation's ability to come together and turn the page toward a better future.

Let's get to work.

692 7:25 PM - Jan 23, 2020

124 people are talking about this

Mike Bloomberg's commercials are breaking through:

And Trump continued to tweet up a storm, sharing this picture that a supporter posted:

Donald J. Trump ✓
@realDonaldTrump

That is a real fan. Thank you!

♥ 189K 9:50 PM - Jan 23, 2020

💬 49.5K people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

We looked at the different effects Trump's immigration policies have had on migrant populations:

From child separation to DNA sampling: The impact of Trump's other immigration 'barriers'

Stephen Colbert reviewed the many ways senators have distracted themselves during the trial:

And Seth Meyers listed a few times when the Senate wasn't the "world's greatest deliberative body":

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post

To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov

Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: 'Right matters.' Adam Schiff quotes Alexander Vindman in plea to unmoved GOP senators.
Date: Friday, January 24, 2020 10:25:35 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

'Right matters.' Adam Schiff quotes Alexander Vindman in plea to unmoved GOP senators.

'Because in America, right matters': Watch Schiff's passionate closing remarks in Senate trial

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Lead House impeachment manager Adam Schiff has repeatedly held up Army Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman as the model of courage that Senate Republicans should follow during President Trump's trial.

The House Intelligence chairman fought back emotion late last night as he recalled Vindman's November appearance before his committee. Vindman was born in the Soviet Union, but his father brought him here when he was a young boy. The director of European Affairs on the National Security Council, who received a Purple Heart after he was injured in Iraq, said that his father worried when he told him he would testify. But he reassured him. "This is America,"

Vindman recalled telling his dad. “Here, right matters.” The audience broke into spontaneous applause.

“Here, right is supposed to matter,” Schiff told senators last night in the 10 p.m. hour, wrapping up day two of his case against Trump, which he will conclude Friday afternoon. “It’s what’s made us the greatest nation on Earth. No Constitution can protect us if right doesn’t matter anymore. You know you can’t trust this president to do what’s right for this country. You can trust that he will do what’s right for Donald Trump. He’ll do it now. He’ll do it for the next several months. He’ll do it in the election if he’s allowed to. This is why, if you find him guilty, you must find that he should be removed. Because right matters. Because right matters. And the truth matters. Otherwise we are lost.”

The Democrat from California has repeatedly praised Vindman and others for “sticking their necks out” to answer questions about the president’s alleged Ukraine coercion campaign when his former bosses, including ex-national security adviser John Bolton, refused to come before the House. “I have such admiration for the fact they did,” Schiff said on Wednesday. “But what would really vindicate that leap of faith ... is if we show the same courage. They risked everything—their careers—and, yes, I know what you are asked to decide may risk yours too, but if they could show the courage, so can we.”

Over the course of several hours earlier in the afternoon, Schiff had laid out 10 separate arguments for why Trump’s push to get Ukraine to announce an investigation of Joe and Hunter Biden was intended for the president’s personal benefit and not to advance the national interest. “When we’re done, we believe that we will have made the case overwhelmingly that the president is guilty,” Schiff said. “Is there really any doubt about this? I mean, do we really have any doubt about the facts here? Does anybody really question whether the president is capable of what he’s charged with? No one is really making the argument Donald Trump would never do such a thing ... because, of course, we know that he would.”

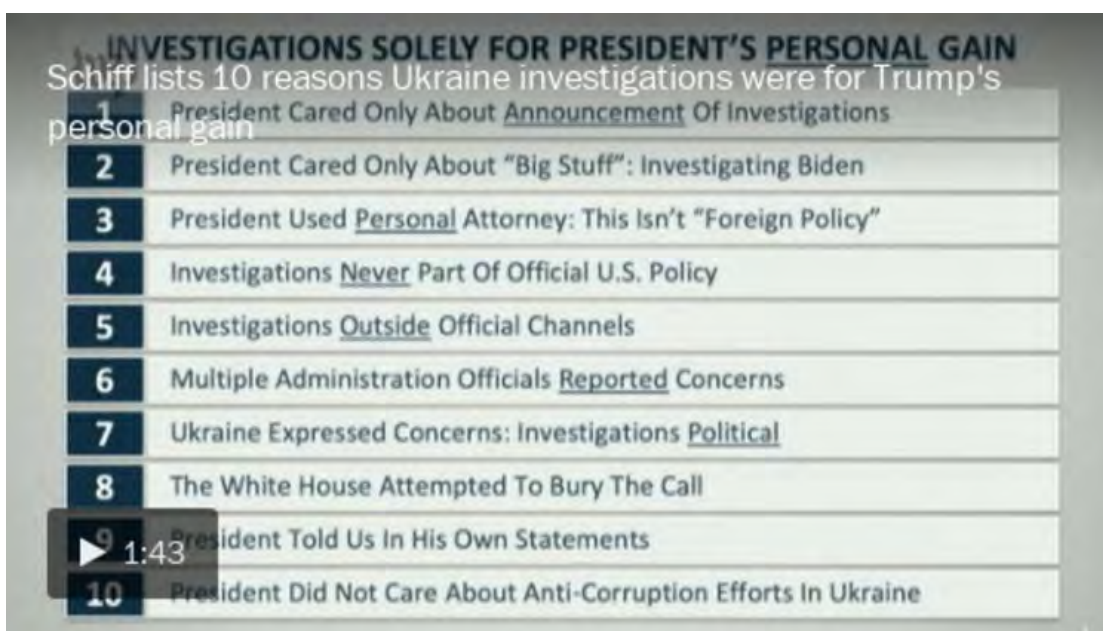

Vindman remains assigned to the White House, something that has drawn the continuing ire of pro-Trump commentators. Schiff thanked senators last night for “keeping an open mind about all of the issues we are presenting.” But, after Schiff spoke, Senate Republican leaders privately expressed growing confidence that they can win the vote next week to block additional witnesses from being summoned to testify. It’s not clear whether Schiff’s calls for courage have pushed any Republican senators toward breaking with the president and their party leaders on the key votes coming up next week surrounding summoning witnesses or subpoenaing documents.

-- Schiff spoke a few hours after Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-Tenn.), one of the jurors, questioned Vindman’s patriotism by propagating an unsubstantiated conspiracy theory from the fever swamps of the dark corners of the pro-Trump fringe Internet. Blackburn claimed that Vindman once badmouthed the United States to Russians while serving overseas. “Adam Schiff is hailing Alexander Vindman as an American patriot,” she tweeted. “How patriotic is it to badmouth and ridicule our great nation in front of Russia, America’s greatest enemy?”

Vindman’s lawyer, former ambassador David Pressman, accused Blackburn of defaming his client. “That a member of the Senate — at a moment when the Senate is undertaking its most solemn responsibility — would choose to take to Twitter to spread slander about a member of the military is a testament to cowardice,” Pressman emailed. “While Senator Blackburn fires off defamatory tweets, Lieutenant Colonel Vindman will continue to do what he has always done: serve our country dutifully and with honor.”

Blackburn isn't backing down and tweeted another attack around 8 p.m. Trump himself retweeted her this morning. The senator, who won Bob Corker's seat after he retired in 2018, has also accused Vindman of being a “handler” for the whistleblower who filed the complaint. Vindman testified before Schiff's committee that he spoke with an intelligence community official about Trump's July 25 call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, but he declined to identify the official on the advice of counsel because he said he didn't want to blow someone's cover. But no public evidence exists that he was a source for the whistleblower.

Schiff lists 10 reasons Ukraine investigations were for Trump's personal gain

-- Schiff, a mild-mannered former federal prosecutor, has emerged as a surprisingly polarizing figure. Perhaps it's because the president has accused him of committing treason, in addition to calling him "pencil neck" and "liddle." Trump has now tweeted about Schiff hundreds of times. Schiff's boosters say the right only loathes him because he's so effective.

-- The president's allies at Fox News have elevated Schiff this week into perhaps the biggest boogeyman for their audience. Arguably he's a bigger target of their vitriol right now than Nancy Pelosi, Bernie Sanders or even the four minority women in the Squad. If you've watched the network for even a few minutes this week, especially in primetime, you've probably seen hosts and guests attacking the man from Burbank.

Tucker Carlson continued his mockery last night of the man he's taken to calling "Saint Adam," a nickname intended to convey what he portrays as the congressman's sanctimoniousness. "Say what you will, but as a piece of theater, it had literally everything," Carlson said after playing a video clip of Schiff talking on the Senate floor about how Trump's approach to Ukraine has played into Russian President Vladimir Putin's hands.

"Adam Schiff has amnesia," Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows (R-N.C.) told Laura Ingraham.

"They accused us of doing nefarious things with this Lev Parnas character," House Intelligence Committee ranking member Devin Nunes (R-Calif.) told Sean Hannity. "The truth is Adam Schiff and the Democrats have been doing nefarious things with Parnas!”

“Adam's ordinarily not that stupid, but when you tell the jury, the Senate, on one day that they're corrupt, and then you tell the American people they cannot be trusted to pick the commander in chief, that's just a wildly stupid trial strategy,” former congressman Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.) told Bret Baier.

-- Rudy Giuliani appeared on “Fox & Friends” this morning to attack the Democratic managers. “It’s a complete show on the part of the Democrats, and they should be sued for conspiracy to defraud the United States, and they should pay for that hearing,” he said. “I’m going to present over the next two to three weeks shocking crimes at the highest levels of both governments while the Senate is listening to a totally phony group of stories about non-impeachable offenses.”

Giuliani has been promising for a while now to release said evidence. It has not been forthcoming, so take such claims with more than a grain of salt. The president’s lawyer also said for months that he was going to release a lengthy report rebutting former special counsel Bob Mueller’s findings on Russian interference and whether Trump obstructed justice. He never did.

-- There has been some hyperbole from the left, as well. Esquire’s Charlie Pierce calls Schiff the Daniel Webster of our time. Walter Dellinger, who was acting U.S. solicitor general under Bill Clinton, said Schiff offered “one of the most impressive performances by a lawyer I have ever seen.” MSNBC legal commentator Jason Johnson called Schiff’s opening statement on Wednesday “a speech that kids will be giving in 2060 at university projects.” Actress and activist Alyssa

Milano, who has been attending the trial, said “it felt like you were watching a one-man show on Broadway.”

Stephen Colbert offered an early valentine to Schiff during his show. “It was gratifying to see someone taking the constitutional responsibility of their office seriously,” the comedian told his viewers on CBS. Breaking out of character, he said that Schiff spoke “clearly, passionately, cogently, and, I believe, courageously.”

-- Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) called Schiff “well spoken” and said “did a good job of creating a tapestry.” But other Republican senators have told reporters that Schiff was overly “smooth” or “slick,” which they meant as negatives. “In a way I do feel like I’m introducing myself to a number of the senators,” Schiff told the Associated Press, adding that they’re “finding I’m not the demon that I’m portrayed as on Fox.”

-- Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) expressed hope that four Republicans still might be persuaded to vote for witnesses. “Just about every Republican’s eyes were glued on Mr. Schiff,” he said. “It was a powerful rendition.”

---

Content from API

Net oil imports are at 50-year lows. How did we do it?

America's natural gas and oil companies have been working together to reduce dependence on foreign oil. Learn how we're powering a bright future for our country together at EnergyForProgress.org.

---

Schumer: Republicans' 'nothing new' argument 'rings hollow'

WITNESS WATCH:

-- All eyes are on Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.). "Privately, senior Senate Republicans expect the vote to seek witness testimony to fail, but they are watching Alexander and several other Republicans closely. And wherever Alexander comes down is almost sure to be the majority position in the Senate,” Politico reports. “He’s a retiring defender of the Senate as an institution who’s occasionally bucked his party, but he also counts Mitch McConnell as a longtime ally. He’s more hesitant to criticize Trump than are some other Republicans, but he also has said it was ‘inappropriate’ for Trump to ask foreign governments to investigate his political opponents. ... [Democrats] are holding out hope that Alexander will be their hero in the mold of the late Sen. John McCain, whose extraordinary vote derailed the GOP’s effort to repeal Obamacare.”

-- Trump is keeping his distance from the Republicans who might vote to call witnesses after White House advisers warned the president that outreach wouldn’t help his cause. Democrats are also giving them space. Mike DeBonis and Josh Dawsey report: “Democrats say there is no serious effort to privately lobby the Republicans, with the party relying instead on public opinion and the House prosecutors to squeeze them into breaking ranks.”

-- Sens. Richard Burr (R-N.C.) and Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) played with blue and purple fidget spinners. These are popular toys for children. In contrast, Sens. Susan Collins (R-Maine) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), who will potentially cast decisive votes on witnesses, almost never moved from their second-row desks. “Collins is a furious note taker, while Murkowski just stares intensely at the speaker,” Paul Kane reports.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “I am one pooped puppy,” Murkowski said last night after Schiff’s speech. She added that she was too tired to discuss the substance of the Democratic presentation right then. She said she might go home to draw a bath and enjoy a glass of wine. (Kane)

-- Collins sent a handwritten note to Roberts before his admonishment of the lawyers for both sides in the wee hours of Wednesday morning. The senior senator for Maine, facing a tough reelection fight, told WCSH-TV in her state that the debate had become “too personal,” and she said she got mad when House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler accused Senate Republicans of being part of a coverup. “I had heard both sides impugn the integrity of one another and also cast aspersions on the Senate,” Collins said. “That is just not appropriate.” Collins said she’s undecided on witnesses but added that the Nadler comments won’t affect her decision.

-- Fresh polling shows most Americans overwhelmingly think witnesses should testify. An AP-NORC poll shows that 7 in 10 Americans say Trump should allow his top aides to appear before the Senate, including most Republicans. The same survey found that 45 percent think Trump should be convicted, 40 percent said he should not be and 14 percent said they don’t know enough to have an opinion.

-- But, but, but: “Mitch McConnell doesn’t care what you think,” Ben Terris writes in a new profile of the majority leader. “He just wants to win.”

-- A growing number of Republican senators are pointing to Trump's threat to invoke executive privilege as an excuse to vote against even trying to call witnesses, CNN reports: “GOP senators are privately and publicly raising concerns that issuing subpoenas -- to top officials like acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney and former national security adviser John Bolton and for documents blocked by the White House -- will only serve to drag out the proceedings. Plus, many say there's little appetite for such a time-consuming fight, given that legal battles may ultimately not be successful and could force the courts to rule on hugely consequential constitutional issues about the separation of powers between the branches of government.”

Senate trial: Republicans hint that Bidens could become the focus of defense

MORE FROM THE TRIAL:

-- Democrats used a significant chunk of time on Thursday to preemptively defend the Bidens, who they expect Trump's lawyers to attack when they get the floor: "Rep. Sylvia Garcia (D-Tex.), another impeachment manager, sought to debunk the allegations that Joe Biden did anything nefarious in his dealings with Ukraine," Seung Min Kim, John Wagner and Karoun Demirjian report. "But Republican senators said the focus on the Bidens by Democrats made the former vice president and his son fair game for Trump's defense team. ... Garcia noted that Trump and Republicans didn't focus on Biden's actions toward Ukraine until 2019 ... She also referenced a letter from Sens. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.), Rob Portman (R-Ohio) ... and other senators in the Ukraine Caucus to argue that Biden's desire to see [prosecutor Viktor] Shokin removed reflected official U.S. policy ... As Garcia spoke, a visibly upset and red-faced Johnson rose from his seat, approached Portman and whispered in his ear. Portman reacted impassively, but his comments did not appear to calm Johnson, who departed the floor for the Republican cloakroom moments later. Johnson, a fierce ally of Trump, said in October that he did not recall signing the letter. ..."

"Before the trial officially began Thursday afternoon, dozens of senators from both parties entered a secure facility in the Senate basement to view a classified document provided by Jennifer Williams, a national security adviser to Vice President Pence. ... The document had been previously submitted to the House Intelligence Committee. Some senators spent only a few minutes in the facility; others stayed for the better part of an hour. Several Democrats emerged to say they didn't understand why the document had been classified. 'I don't believe it's being withheld from the public for national security reasons. It may be withheld for political security reasons,' said Sen. Richard J. Durbin (D-Ill.)."

-- The favorite talking point for most Senate Republicans continues to be that they're learning nothing new because House managers are repeating themselves. Sen. John Barrasso (R-Wyo.) told reporters during last night's dinner break that it felt like "Groundhog Day in the Senate." Ironically, he had repeated throughout the day that it felt like "Groundhog Day." He said the same thing to CNN in the morning.

"For them to say they're bored, it has a lot to do with them not wanting to hear evidence," countered Sen. Mazie Hirono (D-Hawaii). "They don't want to hear that this president who they're so busy supporting did these things. As I put it, the truth hurts."

-- Tomorrow's timing: Senate Majority Whip John Thune (R-S.D.) tells reporters that Saturday's session will likely start and end earlier than the past few days. Party leaders are still trying to negotiate a deal to start the day as early as 8 a.m. so they can wrap up by noon. This would allow Democratic presidential candidates to fly to Iowa for campaign events. The trial has started at 1 p.m. during the week so that Chief Justice John Roberts can participate in pre-scheduled Supreme Court oral arguments before crossing the street to preside over the trial in the Capitol.

-- Pelosi may be half a world away from the Senate floor, but that doesn't mean the speaker doesn't have the trial under control. From the Times: “Even in her absence from the Capitol this week, as the speaker traveled through Poland and Israel ... she had her hand firmly on the tiller. ... In many ways, Ms. Pelosi is the eighth, largely unseen manager of the Democrats’ case. ... Ms. Pelosi has dispatched her handpicked House general counsel to sit at the table inside the Senate chamber, with the prosecutors acting as her eyes and ears. She reviewed all the managers’ written briefs before they were filed.”

Schiff begins impeachment proceedings with a quote from Alexander Hamilton

THE LEGALITY QUESTION:

-- A core argument from Democrats yesterday was that the framers didn't believe a president needed to break the law in order to warrant impeachment. “The Constitution is not a suicide pact,” said Nadler, one of the managers. “It does not leave us stuck with presidents who abuse their power in unforeseen ways that threaten our security and democracy. Until recently, it did not occur to me that our president would call a foreign leader and demand a sham investigation meant to kneecap his political opponents, all in exchange for releasing vital military aid that the president was already required by law to provide.”

-- The House’s lawyers filed a motion with an appeals court last night that says Trump’s defense lawyers have contradicted, and therefore undermined, the Department of Justice’s position on subpoenas. Ann Marimow reports: “The lawyers for [Pelosi] asked the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit to rule quickly on the pair of separation-of-powers cases, which they said could affect the Senate proceedings. House Democrats went to court seeking testimony from former White House counsel Donald McGahn and access to secret grand jury evidence from former special counsel Robert S. Mueller III’s Russia investigation. Justice Department attorneys have urged the appeals court to stay out of what they say are political disputes between Congress and the White House.” But the president’s team is now telling the Senate that these are matters more properly left to the courts.

-- The White House also stonewalled the Government Accountability Office when the independent congressional watchdog requested information about the freeze on Ukraine aid. From Politico: “The White House responded to the [GAO’s] inquiry with a one-page letter on Dec. 20, citing a legal memo from the Office of Management and Budget that defended the hold on military aid as necessary to ensure spending the funds wouldn’t ‘conflict with the President’s foreign policy.’ ... The correspondence is part of what led GAO to ... conclude last week that Trump’s decision to withhold military aid violated federal law.”

-- Follow the money: The documents turned over by Lev Parnas, Giuliani’s former associate, provide details about the web of dark money that helped fund Trump’s Ukrainian gambit. From Bloomberg News: “Money flowed to Giuliani and his cohorts from home loans, friends, relative strangers and wealthy businessmen, some with interests in the gas and energy sector. It even came from a lawyer for an embattled Ukrainian energy tycoon fighting extradition to the U.S. on a conspiracy charge. ... The travel arrangements could brush up against campaign finance laws. While Giuliani [and Parnas] can volunteer as much of their time as they want for a campaign, any subsidy for such work by third parties would generally need to be reported as a contribution, and money from foreign individuals would be illegal.”

Opinion | Jonathan Turley: Trump's impeachment defense could create a dangerous precedent

-- Commentary from The Post's opinion pages:

- House GOP star witness Jonathan Turley: "Trump's impeachment defense could create a dangerous precedent."
- Dana Milbank: "John Roberts comes face to face with the mess he made."
- Ruth Marcus: "A more assertive John Roberts would be a bad idea."
- Brenda Wineapple, author of a book on Andrew Johnson's impeachment: "If John Roberts is seeking a role model, let's hope it's not Salmon Chase."
- Michael Gerson: "Republicans aren't serving the country, or even the president. Just themselves."
- Eugene Robinson: "Senate Republicans' defense of Trump is as mushy as apple pie."
- Josh Rogin: "Trump's lawyers don't understand how foreign aid works."
- Jen Rubin: "House managers deliver a constitutional lesson."
- Garret Graff, founding director of the Aspen Institute's Cyber & Technology Program: "Trump won't protect our elections, so private companies are doing it."
- Dan Drezner: "When American political institutions give up: After three years of Trump, there have been some unhealthy adjustments."

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross BlueShield Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by LiveIntent

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Regional talk radio is Republicans' secret weapon to reelecting Trump

2020 WATCH:

-- Regional radio hosts across the country have found themselves showered with attention by senior Trump officials, who have made accessibility to local conservative talking heads a central part of the president's reelection strategy. Sarah Ellison reports: "Pouring attention on regional talk-radio hosts is a classic Trumpworld move: giving relatively unknown characters proximity to the White House has paid off with a disproportionate amount of attention and praise lavished on the president and his agenda. ... The strategy has been particularly powerful as Trump and his team have engaged in what [Steve] Bannon calls 'information warfare' over the impeachment fight..."

-- Kamala "that-little-girl-was-me" Harris is weighing an endorsement of Joe Biden to boost her standing in the veepstakes. From the New York Times: "Such a move could lift Mr.

Biden's campaign and perhaps do even more to enhance Ms. Harris's chances of becoming vice president, but it could also anger her liberal base in California. An endorsement by Ms. Harris, if she wades into the primary race at all, would be unlikely to happen until after the Senate impeachment trial ... She and [Biden] have remained in contact since she exited the race and had a long conversation in the immediate aftermath of her departure."

-- Anita Hill told an Iowa crowd last night that it's too late for Biden to apologize for the way he mistreated and diminished her when she testified against Clarence Thomas in 1991. "The statute of limitations for his apology is up," Hill said in response to a question from the audience at the University of Iowa, where she gave a lecture on ending sexual harassment. "What are you going to do about it? What are you going to do today? Will you promise as leader of this country ... to use all of your energy to address the problem as it happened and to prevent it from happening to another generation? That's what I want to hear. And I not only want to hear from him, I want to hear from every one of them who want to be the leader of this country." (BuzzFeed News)

-- Bernie Sanders asked his supporters to cool it – but they don't always listen. Sean Sullivan reports: "Campaign officials have been pressing surrogates and other allies not to escalate combustible disputes that have recently become more personal, ... including a tense fight with Joe Biden, a separate altercation with [Elizabeth Warren] and a renewed schism with Hillary Clinton. ... But many Sanders supporters, and even some campaign aides, are inclined to take a more aggressive approach that they say will highlight important differences. ... Some close Sanders allies acknowledged the difficulty of balancing the passions of his loyal backers, inspired by his calls for a political revolution and his staunchly liberal platform, with the need to demonstrate a broader unity.”

-- Sanders’s rise in the polls means he’ll be talking more about his electability than a revolution. While speeches he’s made over the past two weeks still feature his signature call to action, he’s spending more time explaining to voters how policies like Medicare-for-all would work in their daily lives, as well as how he could beat Trump. (Bloomberg News)

-- One in five women doubt that a woman can win the presidency, according to a new CNN poll. What’s telling about this news is that just 9 percent of men said the same. (Eugene Scott)

-- Mike Bloomberg may be lagging behind his Democratic competitors in the polls, but he’s attracted the president’s obsessive attention by baiting him with constant attack ads. Josh Dawsey and Michael Scherer report: “The president has repeatedly attacked Bloomberg on Twitter, calling him ‘Mini Mike’ to insult his small stature, and frequently focused on him in conversations with campaign advisers and White House officials. ‘It’s very clear that the ads we are running have gotten under his skin because they are effective,’ said Howard Wolfson, a senior Bloomberg aide ... Wolfson said to expect more blistering ads against the president in coming months. ... Bloomberg campaign manager Kevin Sheekey debuted a new ad on ‘Fox & Friends’ on Thursday that cited a new book by two Washington Post reporters, who chronicle how Trump lashed out at U.S. military leaders, characterizing them as ‘dopes and babies.’

Trump responded shortly after the spot aired.”

-- Former top supporters of Cory Booker accused Pete

Buttigieg’s campaign of “chasing ambulances.” From BuzzFeed

News: “The phone calls to Amy Nielsen came around two hours apart. It was last Monday around 12 p.m., not long after the news broke, when her phone lit up with his name. By then, Nielsen considered Cory Booker ‘part of [her] family.’ ... So the end of his campaign felt ... like ‘a death.’ ... The next call came around 2:30 p.m., this time from an unknown number. It was Pete Buttigieg, calling to seek Nielsen’s support now that her candidate had made the decision to ‘step aside.’ ... ‘It was a gut punch — like, really? He did not ‘step aside’ for you,’ she said. ‘Like, wow, that’s some nerve right there.’ Later that night, she said, Nielsen heard from one of Booker’s field organizers who said she had already been contacted by the Buttigieg campaign to go door-knock.”

-- Twelve years ago, Buttigieg spent the final week before the 2008 caucuses in rural southwest Iowa, trying to turn out voters for Barack Obama in one of the most conservative towns in the state. Holly Bailey spoke with him about what he learned: “This was a new experience to really talk to people like this,’ Buttigieg recalled. ‘And what I found was, first of all, you can’t assume where somebody is going to be. We were in an area where a lot of people weren’t Democrats to begin with, and those who were were more likely to be for [John] Edwards. But they would hear us out when we were talking about Obama. And sometimes, as you do when you go door-to-door, somebody, because you represent a presidential campaign, would just pour out everything that was on their mind, everything they were upset about."

-- Early voting means that millions are already eligible to cast their ballot. From the AP: "In Minnesota, in-person early voting began Jan. 17. Vermont's deadline to mail out its absentee ballots was the same day. Many of the 14 Super Tuesday states will offer some form of early voting between now and mid-February."

-- Howard County saw a bigger swing from Obama in 2012 to Trump in 2016 than any other in Iowa. The Wall Street Journal's John McCormick took the pulse for 2020: "Recent interviews with dozens of voters here suggest that most of Mr. Trump's 2016 supporters ... plan to stick with him, even though some said they have grown weary of his personal behavior and trade fights. Among those who previously voted for Mr. Obama and Mr. Trump, many said they are reserving judgment until they see who wins the Democratic nomination. ... What such swing voters do in 2020 will have national implications. Before Mr. Trump, Howard County hadn't backed a Republican for president since Ronald Reagan in 1984. It is one of the 31 counties in Iowa—the most of any state—that backed Mr. Obama twice and then switched to Mr. Trump. The president won in 2016 partly because he ran up huge victories in small, heavily rural counties. While he is likely to win such areas again, margins could matter. If Democrats can keep him from racking up the kind of gains he did in places like Howard County in 2016, that could help determine whether he will again carry battleground states such as Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan and Pennsylvania."

-- A new Iowa caucus app is sparking election security concerns. From NBC News: "The app will be used in Iowa and Nevada by caucus managers — local registered Democrats who sign up to organize and run the caucus process in each location — to expedite the process, calculate and assign delegates and report results back quickly. The app will also be used in satellite voting locations across the country and overseas. But questions about the app remain unanswered, including who developed it and whether it has been subjected to independent security testing. Security experts say that the app is a potential target for early election interference, particularly since it is downloaded on to the personal phones of the caucus managers. Party officials say operational security prevents them from disclosing specifics about the app.”

-- Big-money groups aligned with the Senate GOP raised $68.3 million in 2019, an off-year record. Michelle Ye Hee Lee reports:

“The majority of the money raised in 2019 came in the latter half of the year, particularly in the final two months, largely driven by the House Democrats’ impeachment inquiry.”

Activists, scientists and others rally on the Mall in 2018 at the March for Science. (Marvin Joseph/The Washington Post)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- The ranks of scientists are growing thin in the Trump administration. Annie Gowen, Juliet Eilperin, Ben Guarino and Andrew Ba Tran report: "Dozens of government computers sit in a nondescript building [in Kansas City, Mo.], able to connect to a data model that could help farmers manage the impact of a changing climate on their crops. But no one in this federal agency would know how to access the model, or, if they did, what to do with the data. That's because the ambitious federal researcher who created it in Washington quit rather than move when the Agriculture Department relocated his agency to an office park here last fall. He is one of hundreds of scientists across the federal government who have been forced out, sidelined or muted since President Trump took office. ... In the first two years of the Trump administration, more than 1,600 federal scientists left government, according to Office of Personnel Management employment data ... That represents a 1.5 percent drop, compared with the 8 percent increase during the same period in the Obama administration.”

-- The Justice Department conceded that it had “insufficient” cause to continue monitoring a former Trump campaign adviser during the Russia probe. Matt Zapotosky reports: “The concession was revealed in an order posted on the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court’s website. In December, according to the order, the department told the court it had come to believe that in at least two of the four applications to monitor the former adviser, Carter Page, ‘there was insufficient predication to establish probable cause’ to believe he was acting as a Russian agent.”

-- The Trump administration will create additional new hurdles for pregnant foreign women seeking U.S. tourist visas. The administration said it's trying to crack down on what it calls “birth tourism,” trying to reduce what conservatives call “anchor babies,” by instructing consular officers to assess whether women requesting tourist visas are hoping to give birth on U.S. soil, which would effectively grant their children American citizenship. Starting today, the State Department will no longer issue temporary visitor visas to women hoping to travel to the country with the stated purpose of having a child. Foggy Bottom said consular officers cannot require pregnancy tests to make the determination but wouldn’t rule out a woman’s physical appearance when making the decision, per Abigail Hauslohner and Maria Sacchetti.

-- Trump's "national public health emergency" declaration on the opioid crisis expired because his people at the Department of Health and Human Services forgot to renew it. An HHS spokesperson said the nine-day lapse had been corrected and blamed a clerical error. The emergency status, first announced in 2017 as a measure deemed necessary to direct more resources toward the drug overdose crisis, needs to be renewed every 90 days. (Politico)

-- Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin said teenage climate activist Greta Thunberg, 17, needs to study economics before offering her thoughts on climate change. Heather Long reports from Davos: "Thunberg and Mnuchin are both attending the World Economic Forum this week. ... At a news conference on Thursday, Mnuchin was asked for his reaction to Thunberg's insistence on fossil fuel divestment. 'Who is she?' he tried to joke to reporters before taking a jab at Thunberg, suggesting she didn't understand what she was talking about. ... 'Is she the chief economist or who is she? I'm confused. ... After she goes and studies economics in college she can go back and explain that to us.'"

-- Actress Annabella Sciorra, who played Gloria in "The Sopranos," testified that Harvey Weinstein raped her more than 25 years ago. Shayna Jacobs reports: "'I was punching him. I was kicking him. I was just trying to get him away from me, and he took my hands and put them over my head,' Sciorra told the jury in Weinstein's sexual assault trial, her eyes welling up with tears and her voice breaking. ... Weinstein, who had been watching her from the defense table, turned his gaze away from his accuser as she emotionally detailed the encounter. ... In her five hours of testimony, she described freezing after the attack, adding that 'It was just so disgusting that my body started to shake.' She said she had no romantic interest in Weinstein. The film producer arrived at her Manhattan apartment uninvited one night."

How China is reacting to the deadly coronavirus outbreak

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- "A young, healthy man from Wuhan and a person living 1,500 miles from the epicenter of the coronavirus are among the latest victims of the outbreak, which has incited fear and anger across China as the important Spring Festival gets underway," Anna Fifield reports from Beijing. "Reports of eight new deaths from the pneumonia-like virus, taking the total to 26, came as authorities enforced a lockdown across large parts of the province of Hubei, population 59 million. But they also came as the medical system clearly struggled to cope with the outbreak, with reports of crowded hospitals, stressed doctors and dwindling supplies. Adding to the stress, Friday marked the official start of ... when China celebrates the arrival of the new lunar year. Authorities around the country, including in the capital Beijing, have canceled the temple fairs and festivals that accompany the holiday to avoid having large public gatherings where the airborne virus could be spread. ...The Forbidden City in Beijing, which can admit 80,000 people a day and was already entirely sold out for the holiday, has been closed until further notice. Production companies have postponed the release of seven blockbuster films that were to be released over the holiday, leading Chinese cinema companies to close the country's 70,000 movie theaters. ...

“The National Health Commission reported Friday that there are now more than 830 confirmed cases of infection, and reports of new cases continued to roll in from around the country: from Xinjiang in the west to Shandong in the east, from Inner Mongolia in the north to Hainan in the south. A total of 8,420 were reported to be under observation. South Korean authorities confirmed Friday that a second person tested positive for the new coronavirus. ... Japan also confirmed a second case, a man in his 40s from Wuhan who arrived in Japan on Sunday on a flight through Hong Kong. Other countries to have reported infections including Thailand, Singapore, Vietnam and the United States. In addition to a confirmed case in Washington state, Texas has reported a potential case of coronavirus in Brazos County, about 100 miles northwest of Houston. The patient contracted a respiratory illness within two weeks of traveling in Wuhan and is being isolated at home, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said.

“Some details about the latest deaths in China have raised concerns about the virus’s spread. Until now, the vast majority of the people had been older than 60 and almost all of them had existing health conditions. All of them had been in Hubei province ... But the latest announcement said that 36-year-old man from Wuhan, identified only by his family name, Li, died on Thursday. He had no chronic diseases or other existing health conditions, and had been treated with anti-virus medication and antibiotics since being admitted to a hospital on Jan. 9.”

-- Wall Street stumbled yesterday amid fears that efforts to curtail the virus could further disrupt the global economy. (David Lynch)

-- The U.S. has officially refused to extradite Anne Sacoolas, the diplomat’s wife who fled the U.K. to avoid facing charges for killing a British teen by driving on the wrong side of the road. A State Department spokesman said extraditing Sacoolas would “set an extraordinarily troubling precedent” but did not elaborate. (Meagan Flynn)

-- Trump’s sanctions on Iran are fueling a new refugee crisis – in Turkey. Erin Cunningham and Mohammad Mahdi Sultani report: “Decades ago, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan prompted thousands of people to flee to neighboring Iran. Now, many of these refugees are once again seeking a new home in a new land, Turkey, desperate to escape the dire economic conditions fueled by U.S. sanctions on Tehran. ... Turkish authorities are grappling with nearly 4 million refugees. This is the world’s largest population of displaced people, according to the United Nations, including more than 170,000 registered Afghan refugees. Turkey has struggled to contain the influx even as aid agencies say the number of arrivals from Iran is on the rise.”

-- A critic of the Saudi Arabian government said a suspected Saudi agent tried to kidnap him on U.S. soil, a claim backed up by multiple U.S. and foreign sources familiar with the episode. From the Daily Beast: “Abdulrahman Almutairi is a 27-year-old comedian and former student at the University of San Diego with a big social-media presence. After Almutairi used social media to criticize the powerful Crown Prince Mohammad bin Salman over the October 2018 murder and dismemberment of Washington Post contributor [Jamal] Khashoggi, an unidentified Saudi man accompanied Almutairi’s father on a flight to collect Almutairi against his will and bring him back to Saudi Arabia...”

-- The Trump administration has missed the deadline, established by law, to turn over to Congress an unclassified report on Khashoggi's murder and the role played by the regime in Riyadh. From BuzzFeed News: “In December, lawmakers passed a sweeping defense bill that included a provision ordering the director of national intelligence to send Congress an unclassified report identifying those responsible for Khashoggi’s death at a Saudi Arabian consulate in 2018. The legislation set the deadline for the report at 30 days, which passed earlier this week.”

-- A small team of FBI agents spent years trying to solve a stubborn mystery – whether officials from Saudi Arabia were involved in the Sept. 11 attacks. A team of ProPublica and NYT Magazine reporters tell their story: “The FBI has disputed the idea that foreign-policy considerations significantly influenced its investigation. In interviews, current and former bureau officials and federal prosecutors insisted to us that they never would have hesitated to pursue any Saudi who could have been solidly linked to the 9/11 plot ... But others who worked on the matter, including some at the FBI's highest levels, say that the United States' complex and often-troubled relationship with the Saudi regime was an unavoidable fact throughout their investigations. Even as the Saudi authorities became more cooperative with the United States in fighting al-Qaida after 2003, they were minimally and grudgingly helpful when it came to the 9/11 inquiry. According to current and former officials, requests for assistance that might rattle the Saudi security agencies were frequently balanced against FBI and CIA needs for Saudi help against continuing terror threats.”

-- Trump will host Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his political rival, Benny Gantz, next week to discuss his Middle East peace plan. The meeting comes amid Trump's trial, as well as Netanyahu and Gantz's own troubles at home, where they've both failed to form a government. (ABC News)

-- Hundreds of thousands reportedly protested the American troop presence in Iraq. Families and children marched along signs that read “no, no to America,” as the White House ignores Iraq's parliament's vote to expel U.S. troops from the country. (CNN)

-- The top U.S. commander in the Middle East said the recent troop surge there may not end soon, despite what the president said. “You're here because I requested that you come,” Marine Gen. Frank McKenzie told sailors and Marines aboard the USS Bataan amphibious assault ship. “I’m not sure how long you’re going to stay in the theater. We’ll work that out as we go ahead. Could be quite a while, could be less than that, just don’t know right now.” (AP)

-- Some Mexicans believe the Central American caravans might soon come to an end as the nation’s authorities strengthen their anti-migrant operations at the Guatemalan border. From the AP:

“From the roadside stand where his family sells mole, barbecue and chicken stew, Miguel Ángel Vázquez has seen all the caravans of Central American migrants and asylum seekers stream past his front door in recent years... After watching armored National Guard troops and immigration agents break up the latest one right on his doorstep, loading men, women and wailing children onto buses and hauling them off to a detention center in the nearby city of Tapachula, he’s sure of one thing. ‘I can see that these caravans are no longer going to pass,’ said Vázquez, 56.”

-- East Africa is suffering its worst invasion of desert locusts in 25 years. (CNN)

-- Climate change will disrupt the global economy, but central banks aren’t ready. From the Times: “A report issued this week by an umbrella organization for the world’s central banks argued that ... central bankers lack tools to deal with what it says could be one of the biggest economic dislocations of all time. The book-length report, published by the Bank for International Settlements, in Basel, Switzerland, signals what could be the overriding theme for central banks in the decade to come.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Mitch McConnell made lots of eye contact with Adam Schiff:

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.) suggested a drinking game:

Trump's vanquished 2016 rival also refused to answer questions from reporters at CNN and the Times about whether Trump's July 25 call was "perfect":

Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-Tenn.) tried to troll House impeachment managers during their presentation by reading this book on the Senate floor:

Sen. Marsha Blackburn ✓

@MarshaBlackburn

First - I'm reading Resistance (At All Costs) by Kim Strassel. Read the chapter on obstruction. It provides good insights into today's proceedings.

Second - busy mamas are the best at multi-tasking. Try it. twitter.com/JRubinBlogger/...

Jennifer Rubin ✓ @JRubinBlogger

Replying to @GarrettHaake and 3 others

@MarshaBlackburn might improve her understanding of the facts and law if she paid attention. This is shameful

♥ 2,023 8:28 PM - Jan 23, 2020

💬 3,022 people are talking about this

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) assured supporters that she can both do her day job and run for president:

 Amy Klobuchar
@amyklobuchar

Last night I spoke to 12,000 Iowans on our statewide tele-town hall to discuss how we'll get our country back on the path of progress. Like I said, I can do two things (and be in two places) at once!
twitter.com/kyunglahcnn/st...

Kyung Lah  @KyungLahCNN
Replying to @KyungLahCNN

The campaign just said "there are 12,000 people on the call right now." @amyklobuchar tele town hall to #IAcaucus statewide crowd

 2,435  11:31 PM - Jan 23, 2020

 463 people are talking about this

Marianne Williamson, who dropped out of the presidential race earlier this month, said her appearance with Andrew Yang in Iowa does not constitute an endorsement:

 Marianne Williamson
@marwilliamson

I am not endorsing any presidential candidate at this time; I support all the progressive candidates. I'm appearing with Andrew Yang in Fairfield because I know the institutional obstructions to his candidacy and I want to see him continue in the race past Iowa.

 8,138  3:21 PM - Jan 23, 2020

 1,546 people are talking about this

Bernie Sanders hit back at the JPMorgan Chase CEO after he criticized socialism:

Pete Buttigieg launched his campaign one year ago yesterday. A senior adviser marveled at how far he's come:

Lis Smith ✓
@Lis_Smith

One year ago today- @petebuttigieg had 88k followers on @twitter. 7k fewer than I currently have and...2k fewer than his dogs' twitter account currently has. 🐕
@firstdogsSB twitter.com/kevinstine/sta...

Kevin Stine @KevinStine

Not a bad year for @PeteButtigieg. @Lis_Smith #TeamPete

1 YEAR AGO

AND NOW

Pete Buttigieg ✓

@PeteButtigieg

@JohnFetterman, @OregonPatrick, and 15 others follow
Just launched a presidential exploratory committee. Afghanistan vet, musician, businessman, husband to Chasten and South Bend's "Mayor Pete." (BOOT-edge-edge)

South Bend, Indiana peteforamerica.com

Joined December 2010

2,557 Following 88.6K Followers

Tweets Tweets & replies Media Likes

Pin Pinned Tweet

Pete Buttigieg ✓ @PeteButtigieg · 5h

I launched a presidential exploratory committee because it is a season for boldness and it is time to focus on the future. Are you ready to walk away from the politics of the past?

Join the team at peteforamerica.com

Pete Buttigieg ✓

@PeteButtigieg

Afghanistan veteran, South Bend's Mayor Pete, husband. Running for president to rally Americans together to meet our urgent challenges: Boot-Edge-Edge. (he/him)

South Bend, Indiana peteforamerica.com

Joined December 2010

2,588 Following 1.5M Followers

Followed by @joshbryson, James@Penderburg, Tolson Reed, and 58 others

Tweets Tweets & replies Media Likes

Pete Buttigieg ✓ @PeteButtigieg · 17m

Reflecting on this past year, I'm more hopeful than ever in our nation's ability to come together and turn the page toward a better future.

Let's get to work.

692 7:25 PM - Jan 23, 2020

124 people are talking about this

Mike Bloomberg's commercials are breaking through:

And Trump continued to tweet up a storm, sharing this picture that a supporter posted:

Donald J. Trump ✓
@realDonaldTrump

That is a real fan. Thank you!

♥ 189K 9:50 PM - Jan 23, 2020

💬 49.5K people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

We looked at the different effects Trump's immigration policies have had on migrant populations:

From child separation to DNA sampling: The impact of Trump's other immigration 'barriers'

Stephen Colbert reviewed the many ways senators have distracted themselves during the trial:

And Seth Meyers listed a few times when the Senate wasn't the "world's greatest deliberative body":

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Morning Mix: 'Time to say goodbye': Kobe Bryant's poetic farewell to basketball is unbearably heartbreaking now
Date: Monday, January 27, 2020 5:33:32 AM

2022
THE CLIMATE
FROM The Washington Post

Inside the politics of climate change
This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives and the climate-curious alike.

Sign up

Powered by  LiveIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Morning Mix

Stories from all over.

(Harry How/Getty Images)

‘Time to say goodbye’: Kobe Bryant’s poetic farewell to basketball is unbearably heartbreaking now

“This has been absolutely beautiful,” Bryant said after his final game in April 2016. “I can’t believe it’s come to an end. You guys will always be in my heart.”

By Allyson Chiu and Katie Shepherd • Read more »

‘My story began in this town’: Kobe Bryant mourned in Italy, where he learned to play basketball

A look back at Kobe Bryant's childhood in Italy, where "my dream began."

By Meagan Flynn • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

THE CLIMATE 202

Inside the politics of climate change.

A new daily newsletter from Maxine Joselow.

The Washington Post

Sign up

Powered by  LivelIntent

John Altobelli, coach killed with family in helicopter crash, was ‘Kobe of the junior college baseball world’

A celebrated sports figure in his own right, the longtime baseball coach of the Orange County College Pirates had grown close to Kobe Bryant as their daughters played basketball together.

By Teo Armus • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

THE CLIMATE 202

Inside the politics of climate change.

A new daily newsletter from Maxine Joselow.

The Washington Post

Sign up

Powered by  LiveIntent

Trump denies telling Bolton that Ukraine aid was tied to investigations as explosive book claiming otherwise leaks

The president's tweet, just after midnight Monday, was his first reaction to an explosive report about the manuscript of his former national security adviser's forthcoming book.

By Fred Barbash • Read more »

Democrats have a new impeachment hero: Fox News analyst Andrew Napolitano

"What is required for removal of the president?" Napolitano wrote in an op-ed. "A demonstration of presidential commission of high crimes and misdemeanors, of which in Trump's case the evidence is ample and uncontradicted."

By Allyson Chiu • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Morning Mix | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Morning Mix or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: John Bolton's book undercuts the Trump defense team's claims that there are no firsthand witnesses
Date: Monday, January 27, 2020 7:57:58 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

John Bolton's book undercuts the Trump defense team's claims that there are no firsthand witnesses

Trump's impeachment defense details 6 pieces of evidence they say exonerate the president

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Revelations about former national security adviser John Bolton's forthcoming memoir have shattered a central argument advanced by President Trump's defense lawyers during his impeachment trial.

"Not a single witness testified that the president himself said that there was any connection between any investigations and security assistance, a presidential meeting or anything else," deputy White House counsel Michael Purpura told senators on Saturday.

"There was no firsthand witnesses that actually said the president did anything wrong," Rep. Doug Collins (R-Ga.) repeated Sunday morning on Fox News.

Then the New York Times reported Sunday night that Bolton discloses – in a manuscript submitted to the White House last month for a classification review – that Trump told him directly last August that he wanted to continue freezing $391 million in security assistance to Ukraine until officials there helped with investigations into Democrats, including Joe and Hunter Biden.

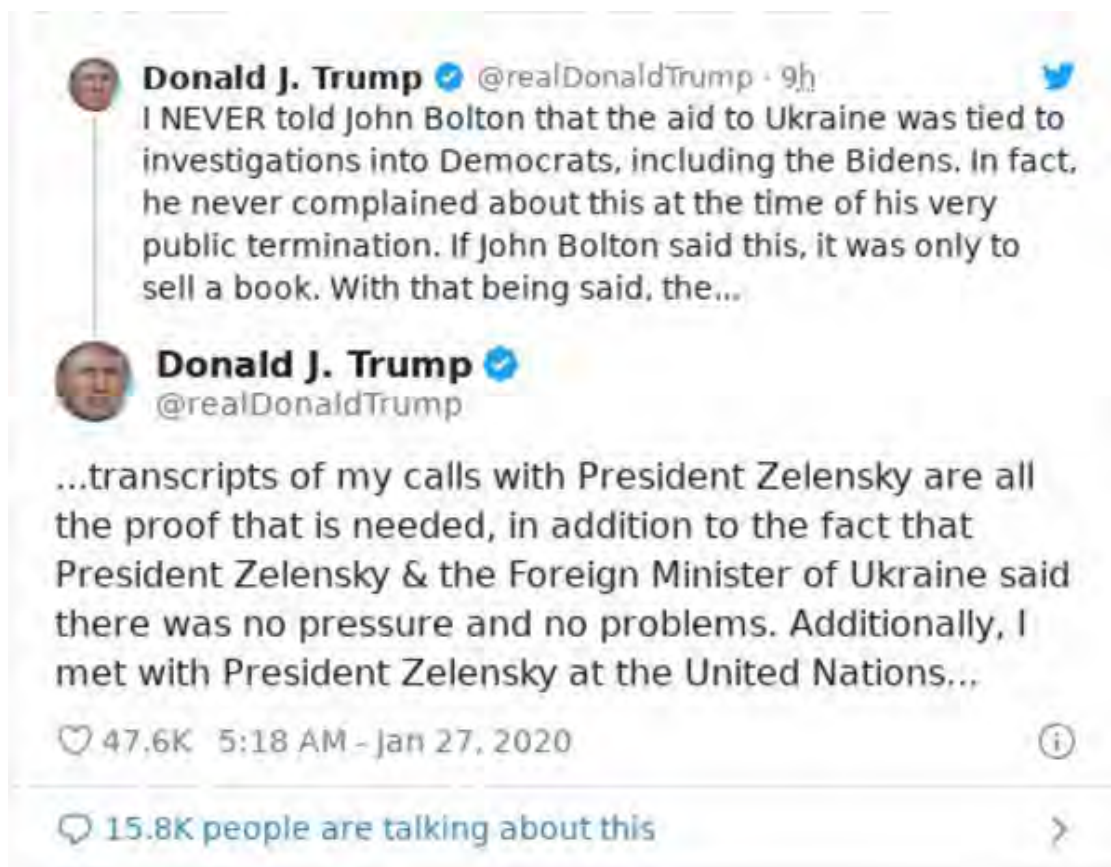

This erodes Trump’s insistence that there was never a quid pro quo, but it also adds to the body of evidence, including documents and sworn testimony, that the president was directly involved in the alleged scheme to coerce an ally, under attack from Russia, to announce an investigation of a leading 2020 challenger in exchange for delivering support that had been approved by Congress. Bolton aides testified during the House hearings that the then-national security adviser had referred to what was being cooked up vis-a-vis Ukraine as a “drug deal” that he didn’t want any part of. Bolton directed deputies such as Fiona Hill to raise their concerns with White House lawyers.

-- Over dozens of pages in his draft, Bolton reportedly offers new details that implicate senior administration officials who have refused to testify as having firsthand knowledge. For example, Bolton writes that acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney was present for at least one phone call where the president and his personal attorney Rudy Giuliani discussed then-Ambassador Marie Yovanovitch. “Mr. Mulvaney has told associates he would always step away when the president spoke with his lawyer to protect their attorney-client privilege,” Maggie Haberman and Michael Schmidt report.

According to their story, Bolton also says that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo acknowledged to him privately that there was no basis to Giuliani's claims that Yovanovitch was corrupt. He also allegedly believed Giuliani may have been acting on behalf of other clients. "Mr. Bolton also said that after the president's July phone call with the president of Ukraine, he raised with Attorney General William P. Barr his concerns about Mr. Giuliani, who was pursuing a shadow Ukraine policy encouraged by the president, and told Mr. Barr that the president had mentioned him on the call," per the Times. "A spokeswoman for Mr. Barr denied that he learned of the call from Mr. Bolton."

-- Two people familiar with the manuscript confirm to The Washington Post that Bolton details how Trump tied Ukraine aid to the desire for Biden probes and that he recounts conversations with other senior officials.

-- Trump denied Bolton's allegations on Twitter this morning:

This is another moment when it would be politically advantageous if the president had not squandered his credibility with a flood of falsehoods. Trump made 16,241 demonstrably false or misleading claims during his first three years as president, our Fact Checker team tabulated last week.

-- These revelations have injected a jolt of unpredictability into an otherwise scripted trial. Bolton has said that he would testify if subpoenaed by the Senate. In conversations last night, senior Senate Republican aides told me that Bolton testifying would increase pressure for Mulvaney and others to answer questions. They worry that additional testimony might further undercut the absolutist insistence of Trump's defense team that "the president did absolutely nothing wrong," as White House Counsel Pat Cipollone told senators on Saturday. A vote to call Bolton would also ratchet up pressure from Trump's allies to subpoena Hunter Biden, which could drag the process out.

Mulvaney confirms Ukraine quid pro quo

-- Notably, Trump's defense lawyers never mentioned Mulvaney during their opening day of arguments on Saturday. The Democratic House managers last week played the footage from October of Mulvaney in the White House briefing room. The acting chief of staff admitted that Trump had "absolutely" mentioned to him concerns about “the corruption related to the DNC server.”

“And that's why we held up the money,” Mulvaney said.

“What you just described is a quid pro quo,” a reporter replied.

“We do that all the time with foreign policy,” Mulvaney responded.

He later issued a statement trying to walk this back, but he’s refused to answer any subsequent questions or participate in the congressional inquiries.

-- The White House could still attempt to delay the publication of Bolton’s book, scheduled for March 17, or block some of its contents by claiming that they’re classified. Bolton’s memoir will be entitled “The Room Where It Happened,” an apparent play on the song from “Hamilton,” and the cover art puts those words inside an oval, an apparent reference to the Oval Office. The 528-page book, which became available for preorder on Amazon last night, covers all 519 days that Bolton served as national security adviser.

-- Complicating attacks from the Trump team: They can call him disgruntled, but Bolton is no squish. The 71-year-old hawk held senior national security jobs under Ronald Reagan, George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush before Trump brought him into the White House. A graduate of Yale Law School, he’s been known for decades as a skilled bureaucratic knife fighter.

-- The president’s allies quickly complained about the timing of the disclosure, but Bolton’s lawyer and spokeswoman contend that someone in the White House leaked to the Times, not anyone in their camp.

-- The White House has had a copy of Bolton's draft manuscript since Dec. 30. Bolton's lawyer Charles Cooper shared a cover letter that he sent to the National Security Council's records management division that day for a standard review process, including a request that it not be shared widely. "It is clear, regrettably, from The New York Times article published today that the prepublication review process has been corrupted and that information has been disclosed by persons other than those properly involved in reviewing the manuscript," Cooper said in a statement. Bolton spokeswoman Sarah Tinsley added: "The ambassador has not passed the draft manuscript to anyone else. Period."

Bolstering their arguments, the Times story cites two sources saying that the submission of the manuscript to the White House "intensified concerns among some of [Trump's] advisers that they needed to block Mr. Bolton from testifying."

John Bolton watches President Trump meet with Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban in the Oval Office last May. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

-- Democrats have been demanding four witnesses. In addition to Bolton and Mulvaney, they want to call Michael Duffey and Robert Blair. “Clear direction from POTUS to continue to hold,” Duffey emailed the Pentagon’s acting comptroller on Aug. 30, according to Just Security. Duffey was formerly executive director of the Republican Party of Wisconsin until he got a patronage job at the Office of Management and Budget. Blair was a top aide to Mulvaney.

-- Four Republican senators need to join the Democrats to vote for summoning Bolton as a witness. The quartet seen as most likely to favor testimony are Susan Collins (Maine), Lisa Murkowski (Alaska), Mitt Romney (Utah) and Lamar Alexander (Tenn.). “Romney and Collins have already indicated that they are likely to support hearing from witnesses and getting more evidence, and Romney has also said that he would like to hear from Bolton,” per Seung Min Kim, Felicia Sonmez and Josh Dawsey.

Even if they don’t ultimately vote to hear from Bolton, the allegations in the manuscript will generate a fresh round of pressure on vulnerable GOP incumbents who are facing tough reelection fights, such as Iowa’s Joni Ernst, Colorado’s Cory Gardner and North Carolina’s Thom Tillis.

Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) reupped his push to call the witnesses “with direct knowledge” of Trump’s actions. “John Bolton has the evidence,” he tweeted. “It’s up to four Senate Republicans to ensure that John Bolton, Mick Mulvaney, and the others testify.”

-- A joint statement from the seven House impeachment managers said the “explosive revelation ... confirms what we already know”: “There can be no doubt now that Mr. Bolton directly contradicts the heart of the President’s defense and therefore must be called as a witness,” the Democratic lawmakers said. “The Senate trial must seek the full truth and Mr. Bolton has vital information to provide. There is no defensible reason to wait until his book is published, when the information he has to offer is critical to the most important decision Senators must now make — whether to convict the President of impeachable offenses.”

The House managers emphasized that Bolton didn’t testify during their investigation after the White House instructed him not to do so. “The President knows how devastating his testimony would be, and, according to the report, the White House has had a draft of his manuscript for review,” they wrote. “President Trump’s cover-up must come to an end. Americans know that a fair trial must include both the documents and witnesses blocked by the President — that starts with Mr. Bolton.”

-- If the Senate votes not to call Bolton, the trial could end with Trump’s acquittal as early as this week.

Sen. Doug Jones (D), facing a difficult reelection race in Alabama, suggested that the Senate should subpoena the manuscript:

 Doug Jones ✓
@DougJones

The Senate needs to hear from Bolton. The American people deserve to hear from Bolton. If we can't get Bolton let's get a subpoena for the book! #subpoenathebook #ImpartialJustice twitter.com/nytimes/status...

The New York Times ✓ @nytimes
Breaking News: President Trump said he wanted to keep aid to Ukraine frozen until its officials helped him with investigations into Democrats, John Bolton wrote in an unpublished manuscript of a new book nyti.ms/2vk9mjq

6,289 12:37 AM - Jan 27, 2020

2,417 people are talking about this

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross BlueShield Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by  LiveIntent

From a former Republican congressman who is waging a long-shot bid against Trump for the GOP nomination:

A former GOP congressman from Florida, who has been critical of Trump, warned his former colleagues:

The Michigan congressman who left the GOP after endorsing impeachment said the president's excuses for not wanting Bolton to testify don't pass the smell test:

Justin Amash ✓
@justinamash

Try to hold your laughter.

President Trump on why he doesn't want Bolton to testify:

"What happens if he reveals what I think about a certain leader and it's not very positive?"

twitter.com/nytimes/status...

The New York Times ✓ @nytimes

Breaking News: President Trump said he wanted to keep aid to Ukraine frozen until its officials helped him with investigations into Democrats, John Bolton wrote in an unpublished manuscript of a new book nyti.ms/2vk9mjq

♥ 21.8K 11:50 PM - Jan 26, 2020

💬 6,243 people are talking about this

A chorus of Democrats also warned of "a cover-up," including the speaker of the House:

Nancy Pelosi ✓
@SpeakerPelosi

Amb. Bolton reportedly heard directly from Trump that aid for Ukraine was tied to political investigations.

The refusal of the Senate to call for him, other relevant witnesses, and documents is now even more indefensible.

The choice is clear: our Constitution, or a cover-up.
twitter.com/maggienny/stat...

Maggie Haberman ✓ @maggieNYT

SCOOP: Bolton book draft, circulated to associates and sent to WH for review process, describes a convo w POTUS where he says he doesn't want to release withheld aid till Ukraine turned over material related to investigations @nytmike and me nytimes.com/2020/01/26/us/...

55.2K 12:14 AM - Jan 27, 2020

22.7K people are talking about this

A Harvard Law professor who held senior legal jobs in the George W. Bush administration said that draft manuscripts like Bolton's are often widely circulated, even though technically they are supposed to be closely held:

Jack Goldsmith ✓
@jackgoldsmith

From personal experience I can attest that, despite 28 CFR 17.18(h), the exec branch often circulates manuscripts submitted for prepub review widely, including to political officials, & it often asks for deletions for reasons having nothing to do w/ disclosure of classified info. twitter.com/nytmike/status...

Michael S. Schmidt  @nytmike

Letter Bolton's lawyer, Chuck Cooper, sent to WH on Dec 30 for pre publication review.

2,028 2:12 AM - Jan 27, 2020

837 people are talking about this

Trump this morning retweeted several attacks on both Bolton and the Times from his loyalists in the conservative media ecosystem:

Lou Dobbs ✓

@LouDobbs

Rejected Neocon, Failing NYTimes, Deep State's Last Desperate Act After @POTUS Attorneys Destroy Radical Dems, Schiff and Pelosi Charges: NYTimes says Bolton Book Claims @realDonaldTrump Trump tied Ukraine Aid to Biden Probe thegatewaypundit.com/2020/01/perfec...
#MAGA #AmericaFirst

Perfect Timing: Anonymous Sources Claim Bolton B...

Several anonymous sources have reportedly told The New York Times that a book manuscript by Ambassador John thegatewaypundit.com

♥ 11.1K 3:27 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 6,204 people are talking about this

Dan Bongino ✓
@dbongino

Regarding Bolton:

- 1) Nobody cares
- 2) The aid was delivered
- 3) The Ukrainians aren't victims (just ask them)
- 4) The Democrats' corruption in Ukraine is real
- 5) Nobody cares

♡ 55.8K 2:13 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 20K people are talking about this

Joe Gooding 100 🇺🇸
@joegooding

This "Bolton Bombshell" from The NY Times (hardly a reliable source on @POTUS @realDonaldTrump reporting) seems to have dropped at an orchestrated opportunity. Totally manufactured. #NextRevFNC

NY TIMES: BOLTON'S UNPUBLISHED BOOK SAYS TRUMP TIED UKRAINE AID TO BIDEN & OTHER INVESTIGATIONS

FOX NEWS ALERT

MARICOPA COUNTY IS THE FIFTH U.S. CASE OF CORONAVIRUS FROM CHINA ... CHINESE OFFICIALS SAY

♡ 9,260 2:49 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 4,501 people are talking about this

MORE ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Former acting ambassador to Ukraine Bill Taylor rebuked Secretary of State Mike Pompeo for suggesting to NPR that Americans don't care about Ukraine. From his op-ed in today's New York Times: “Ukraine is defending itself and the West against Russian attack. If Ukraine succeeds, we succeed. The relationship between the United States and Ukraine is key to our national security... Russia is fighting a hybrid war against Ukraine, Europe and the United States. This war has many components: armed military aggression, energy supply, cyber attacks, disinformation and election interference. On each of these battlegrounds, Ukraine is the front line. ... The United States and our allies support Ukraine in this war by providing the Ukrainian armed forces with weapons, training and support. American security assistance to Ukraine regularly receives broad, bipartisan support in Congress; the importance of that assistance to Ukraine — and to U.S. national security — is not at issue. ...

“The Kremlin is attacking the rules that have guided relations among nations since World War II, rules that kept the peace among major European powers for 70 years. ... Until Russia withdraws from Ukraine — both Donbas and Crimea — and recognizes that Ukraine is an independent, sovereign nation, other nations cannot be secure. Until Russia recommits to a rules-based international order, Western nations are in jeopardy. Ukraine is the front line.”

-- Pompeo claimed an NPR host lied when setting up an interview with him, but email records support the journalist’s account of how the exchange came to be. Paul Farhi reports: “The emails ...

indicate that Pompeo's staff was aware that NPR's Mary Louise Kelly would ask Pompeo about several topics in the interview and raised no objections, contrary to Pompeo's characterization. In an extraordinary statement issued on State Department letterhead on Saturday, Pompeo blasted Kelly for repeatedly asking him why he refused to express support for the former U.S. ambassador to Ukraine, Marie Yovanovitch. Kelly said afterward Pompeo berated her using profanity and challenged her to locate Ukraine on an unmarked map, which Kelly said she did. ... Pompeo's statement implied that Kelly had agreed before the interview to confine her questions to developments in Iran and that he would not be asked about other subjects. ... But emails between Kelly and Pompeo's press aide, Katie Martin, a day before the interview show that there was no such agreement and that Kelly made clear her intention to question Pompeo about other topics."

After GOP previews Trump's impeachment defense, lawmakers clash over what's next

-- Trump stepped up his attacks against House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff on Sunday, tweeting that the lead House manager “has not paid the price, yet, for what he has done to our Country!” Schiff (D-Calif.) said on NBC's "Meet the Press" that he believes the post was "intended" as a threat. White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham said on Fox News that it was “ridiculous” for Schiff to claim that. “I think he means ... [Schiff] hasn't yet paid the price with the voters,” she said. “I mean, it seems he's having a little bit of a mental issue when you sit on the floor for hours and hours and hours. He's obsessed with this president and trying to take him down.” (Felicia Sonmez and Elise Viebeck report)

-- House Judiciary Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.) disclosed that his wife, Joyce, was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer last month shortly after his committee voted to send two articles of impeachment to the full House. “She has undergone surgery and is taking further steps to address the spread of the cancer,” Nadler said in a statement. “On Monday, I will be in New York with her to meet with doctors, determine a path forward, and begin her treatment. I am sorry to miss some of the Senate Impeachment Trial, which is of critical importance to our democracy. I plan to return to Washington late Monday and appreciate the support of my colleagues and staff as I take this time to be with my wife and begin the long fight against her cancer.”

-- Trump lawyer Alan Dershowitz once said that Trump, now his client, was “destabilizing and unpredictable.” The quote comes from a 2016 book entitled “Electile Dysfunction.” (NBC News)

-- Former Republican senator Slade Gorton (Wash.) encouraged senators to honor their oaths by voting to call witnesses the way that he did during Bill Clinton's trial. "I worry that the Senate is falling short of its responsibility," he writes in an op-ed for USA Today. "Indeed, the impeachment trial has dawned with a series of party line votes, as was the case in the House. To be clear, the Senate is not the House. It's supposed to be an institution where — particularly on issues of process, if not ideology — common ground is identified through careful compromise.... Senators have the chance to affirm what the framers envisioned and — even if it doesn't change anyone's mind — secure all relevant evidence and make an informed decision to defend the Constitution and the republic. ... In any trial, the decision-makers need to hear from witnesses and see the evidence in order to reach the best possible verdict. And they can't hear witnesses who have been blocked or read evidence that has been hidden."

-- Commentary from The Post's opinion page:

- Editorial page editor Fred Hiatt: "The White House offers senators a false, and poisonous, choice."
- Max Boot: "Every day that Pompeo stays in office, he makes Tillerson look better by comparison"
- E.J. Dionne Jr.: "Trump's selfishness harms you, too."
- Dana Milbank: "Trump's lawyers are absolutely entitled to their own facts."

-- Reality check: Many Americans are paying little attention. From the AP: "Voters in several states said ... they're only casually following the Senate trial, or avoiding it altogether — too busy to pay close attention, bored of the legal arguments, convinced the outcome is preordained or just plain tired of the whole partisan saga. ... 'I've been watching some really odd stuff just to avoid it,' said Kim Ashford, 50, a court-appointed advocate for foster children from Gilbert, Arizona. 'In my circle, everybody's tired of hearing about it. There's nobody budging. Let's just agree to disagree.' ... The six major networks drew about 11.8 million viewers on the first day of the Senate trial ...

Combined viewership plummeted to fewer than 9 million people on the trial's second day ... By comparison, an estimated 13.8 million people watched the first day of the House impeachment hearings last fall.

Around the time of the House impeachment vote last month, stories about impeachment averaged about 20 million page views each day.

Last week, impeachment stories drew about 15 million page views daily, according to digital advertising and web tracking company Taboola. Google searches on impeachment have also declined since the House vote.”

-- Spiking the football? Trump and top White House aides are discussing how he should celebrate his presumed acquittal, Politico reports, including “whether he should deliver a rare Oval Office address to mark the occasion.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Bernie Sanders speaks on Sunday to volunteers, alongside Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.), at his field office in Ankeny, Iowa. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

2020 WATCH:

-- Trump is in a much more competitive position to get reelected than he was last fall, according to a new Washington Post-ABC News poll. "The state of the economy and perceptions of Trump's handling of it pose a challenge for Democratic presidential candidates," Scott Clement and Dan Balz report. "Despite Americans' concerns that the economic system favors the wealthy, the latest Post-ABC poll finds fewer than half are worried about maintaining their own standard of living ... Just over 10 months until Election Day, Americans see Trump as a slight favorite for reelection, with 49 percent expecting him to win and 43 percent predicting that his Democratic challenger will prevail. But those expectations are highly partisan, with 87 percent of Republicans saying they believe Trump will win reelection while a somewhat smaller 78 percent majority of Democrats say they believe their party's nominee will win.

"The national Post-ABC poll tested Trump in six potential general election matchups and finds that registered voters nationwide are roughly split between supporting the president and backing the Democratic candidates. Neither Trump nor Democrats hold a statistically significant advantage in any matchup ... given the poll's four-point margin of sampling error among registered voters. ... The close matchups between Trump and Democrats among registered voters represent a contrast with an October Post-ABC poll in which [Joe] Biden, [Bernie] Sanders, [Elizabeth] Warren and [Pete] Buttigieg all held double-digit advantages over the incumbent. ...

"The shift coincides with a rise in Trump's approval rating from 38 percent to 44 percent among the public overall, with 51 percent currently disapproving. ... Trump's improved standing ... owes in part to political independents. Trump receives between 47 percent and 52 percent support among voters in this group depending on his Democratic opponent, an improvement from October when he got between 39 percent and 42 percent support. ... The Post-ABC poll also finds 56 percent approve of Trump's handling of the economy, up 10 percentage points from last fall and the highest rating on this issue of his presidency. The difference of 12 points between Trump's economic approval rating and his overall approval is an indication of how public opinion on other aspects of Trump's performance have been a drag on his popularity."

POLL Washington Post-ABC News Poll

In general election matchups, no clear advantage for Trump or potential Democratic nominees

Q: If the 2020 presidential election were being held today, and the candidates were Donald Trump, the Republican and _____, the Democrat, for whom would you vote? Would you lean toward Trump or _____?

Note: Other/No opinion not shown

Source: Jan. 20-23, 2020, Washington Post-ABC News poll of 880 registered voters with an error margin of +/- 4 percentage points.

THE WASHINGTON POST

-- Sanders is facing a barrage of attacks from his rivals, as polls show him surging in the early states. Chelsea Janes and Sean Sullivan report: "Sanders could be the nominee," the campaign of

Pete Buttigieg declared in an ominous-sounding fundraising message to supporters Saturday. ... The focus on Sanders represents a shift from much of the past year in which the top candidates largely ignored the senator ... Several new public polls have shown Sanders on the rise, particularly in Iowa and New Hampshire, where he appears to have taken the lead. ... Much of the intensifying debate over Sanders over the weekend centered on his ability — or lack thereof — to beat Trump. ... [Amy Klobuchar told] ABC News that Sanders's Medicare-for-all plan puts him out of step with voters in many more moderate or conservative parts of the country that might be open to voting Democratic in November. ... Rep. Cindy Axne (D-Iowa), who offered her high-profile endorsement to Biden on Saturday, said a 'pragmatic' platform is key to fostering victories like hers in down-ballot races ...

“A more cutting critique came Sunday from another candidate, former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg, who seemed to mock Sanders's political ideology during a South Florida speech to Jewish voters. 'I know I'm not the only Jewish candidate running for president. But I am the only one who doesn't want to turn America into a kibbutz,' he said, a reference to the socialism shared by Sanders and the Israeli collective farm where Sanders worked decades ago. ... After Sanders was criticized for promoting the endorsement of podcast host Joe Rogan, who has made disrespectful remarks about the transgender community, Biden tweeted Saturday: 'Transgender equality is the civil rights issue of our time. There is no room for compromise when it comes to basic human rights.' ...

“Sanders has sought to turn the sudden hostility he is facing into a battle cry that he hopes will energize his base to turn out in large numbers on caucus night. 'The big-money interests are getting very nervous,' he said, prompting cheers. 'They're looking at recent polls in New Hampshire and in Iowa, and they're saying, 'Oh, my god, Sanders can win.'"

-- An example of the mounting scrutiny for Sanders: CNN unearthed a 1994 video of the Vermont liberal offering support for the controversial Biden crime bill, arguing that the country needed "some more jails." Sanders has recently described the bill as "terrible" and apologized for voting for it, adding that his view at the time was that the bill wasn't perfect but that he viewed it as a major step "in controlling and preventing crime."

-- Iowans have been through a long and bruising hunt for a candidate to love. Jenna Johnson beautifully tells the story of one family: "When Tanya Keith and her teenage daughter Aviva Jotzke learned that their favorite Democratic presidential candidate, Sen. Cory Booker of New Jersey, had dropped out of the race a few weeks before the Iowa caucuses, they cried and mourned with fellow supporters. Then they began to assess their options. Over the next seven days, they would attend three campaign events for different candidates, have numerous conversations with each other and friends who had committed to other candidates, and endure what seemed a never-ending weighing and reweighing of what issues and leadership traits matter most to them. ... Their desire to commit early is rare this caucus season. Iowans always feel a special responsibility in kick-starting primary voting, but that sentiment has been heightened this year by the party's determination to defeat [Trump]." The mother and daughter decide at the end of the story to caucus for Warren.

-- It's still fluid: A new poll from Suffolk University and USA Today shows Biden leading in Iowa with 25 percent, followed by Sanders at 19 percent. Buttigieg is at 18 percent, Warren gets 13 percent and Klobuchar is at 6 percent.

-- Buttigieg made an electability pitch during a town hall on Fox News last night. "This network is known for having a lot more conservative viewers, but I don't think you have to be a Democrat to see what is wrong with this president," the former mayor said.
(Politico)

-- Entrepreneur Andrew Yang qualified for the February debate in New Hampshire after missing out on this month's Des Moines debate. The candidate qualified after a CNN-University of New Hampshire poll pegged him at five percent in the Granite State.

Hear from residents inside the sealed-off city off Wuhan, China

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Reports of coronavirus infections and deaths are soaring in China, and a fifth case has now been confirmed in the United States. Gerry Shih, David J. Lynch, Simon Denyer and Brittany Shammas report: “The government in Beijing broadened an extraordinary quarantine to more than 50 million people — roughly equal to the population of Spain — enforcing a travel ban on 16 cities in central Hubei province, where the lethal virus first appeared. In the United States, health officials confirmed three new cases — one in Arizona and two in California — bringing the total to five. The patients — in Southern California, Chicago, Arizona and Washington state — had traveled from Wuhan, officials with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said. All are hospitalized. As of midafternoon Sunday, the CDC has been investigating 100 people in 26 states, including the five who were confirmed infected. Of those, 25 people have been tested and are not infected with the virus. ... Chinese officials, however, say the worst is yet to come. Health Minister Ma Xiaowei said Sunday that the virus is developing the ability to spread more easily, while the vice minister of industry, Wang Jiangping, said demand for medical supplies is overwhelming China's ability to produce them. ...

“China's national health commission reported that 2,744 people across 30 provinces had been infected as of Sunday. Eighty deaths have been reported, including in major metropolitan areas such as Shanghai. Several doctors in Beijing, the capital, also reported being infected. Patients also have been confirmed in France, South Korea, Japan, Nepal, Thailand, Singapore, Vietnam, Taiwan and Australia. ... The galloping virus, which has crimped travel, shuttered movie theaters and idled factories, will further depress

[economic] growth. ... The virus will also imperil China's ability to meet the targets for additional purchases of U.S. goods contained in the trade deal President Trump signed earlier this month.” (Our graphics team has mapped out the spread of the coronavirus, illustrating why officials are so worried.)

-- Worries are growing that the quarantine in China won't be enough. Gerry and Simon report: “Widespread suspicions on Chinese social media that government officials mishandled the early stages of the crisis were fanned dramatically on Monday by an unlikely player: the Wuhan mayor himself. In a remarkable interview with Chinese state broadcaster CCTV, Zhou [Xianwang] acknowledged that his city did not release ‘timely and satisfactory’ information at the start of the epidemic, and he appeared to blame higher-ups in his chain of command. ‘I hope everyone can understand that this is an infectious disease, and infectious diseases must be disclosed according to law,’ he said. ‘We can only disclose information after we receive authorization.’”

-- China has banned the trade of wild animals until the epidemic is under control, as evidence mounts the disease was transmitted to humans through snake meat sold at a market in Wuhan. The new restrictions ban the transport and sale of wild animals. Experts believe the country is paying a heavy price after the government failed to learn one of the critical lessons from the SARS epidemic 17 years ago: Diseases can mutate easily and spread to humans in markets where different species of live animals live in close and unhygienic proximity. (Simon and Lyric Li)

-- Three rockets crashed into the U.S. Embassy compound in

Baghdad, wounding one. Louisa Loveluck reports: “The strike Sunday was the first known direct hit inside the U.S. Embassy’s heavily fortified compound. One missile hit the dining facility, while two others landed close by, officials said. The identity and nationality of the wounded individual was not made public Monday, but U.S. officials ... said that the person had suffered a non-life-threatening injury and that a small fire had been extinguished.”

-- Jared Kushner’s Middle East peace plan will finally be released publicly tomorrow, Axios reports: The deal’s details have been closely guarded by the president’s son-in-law and his small team, which includes Ambassador to Israel David Friedman. Palestinian leadership has already preemptively rejected Kushner’s effort and has been left totally out of the loop after cutting off contact with the administration after Trump recognized Jerusalem as Israel’s capital.

-- One of Brexit’s biggest impacts may be the end of freedom of movement. Karla Adam and William Booth report: “For a generation, for more than four decades, Londoners have been able to pack off to Lisbon, Berliners to Birmingham, Mancunians to Milan. No paperwork, no visas, no job offer needed on the other side — just buy a ticket and go. ... But Brexit campaigners pushed the notion that Britain needed to ‘take back control’ of its borders. Europeans, the Brexiteers claimed — looking pointedly at the poorer countries on the eastern edge of the bloc — took British jobs and strained British social services. E.U. citizens will be able to continue to move here freely through the Brexit transition period, until at least December. But afterward, they will need to apply — and will no longer get preference over applicants from other continents.”

-- In an attempt to attract one group of foreigners it doesn't want to lose, the U.K. has launched a new visa to lure researchers, mathematicians and scientists. From Politico: “The so-called Global Talent scheme will replace the Tier 1 visa program for ‘exceptional talents’ and is set to go live on February 20. It will not have a cap on the number of applicants allowed in and will enable recognized U.K.-based research projects to recruit talent from abroad without hurdles ... [U]p to 2,500 academics have left Scotland since the Brexit referendum, sparking fears of a post-Brexit brain drain.”

-- The Kremlin is struggling to control cyberspace at home, despite it being notorious for global meddling online. Isabelle Khurshudyan reports: “Russia so far has tread relatively carefully in its censorship efforts. Still, Internet-freedom monitors in Russia fear its new ‘sovereign Internet’ law could one day rival Chinese and Iranian online oversight. The London-based rights monitor Freedom House ranked Russia 51st out of 65 countries on its Internet-freedom rating last year. The legislation came into force in November, but it could be a year before the technology is in place. It aims to route Russian Web traffic and data through points controlled by state authorities and to build a national domain name system. This, supporters claim, would give Russia greater control of Internet content and traffic. ... But critics see it as the government’s way of further cracking down on one of the few free sources of information remaining in the country.”

Kobe Bryant killed in helicopter crash

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- The nation was shocked after NBA star Kobe Bryant and his 13-year-old daughter Gianna were killed in a helicopter crash. The five-time NBA champion and two-time Olympic gold medalist was 41. Ben Golliver and Miranda Green report: The Bryants were “riding in an S-76 helicopter Sunday when it crashed just before 10 a.m. into a hillside near Calabasas, Calif., roughly 30 miles northwest of Los Angeles. The flight manifest listed nine people on board — one pilot and eight passengers — and there were no survivors ... The smooth shooting guard, who patterned his game after Michael Jordan, entered the NBA straight out of high school in 1996. ... By his fourth season, he had teamed with Shaquille O’Neal to win the first of three consecutive championships. ...

“Bryant, who retired as the NBA’s third-all-time leading scorer

with 33,643 points, was expected to be inducted to the Naismith Basketball Hall of Fame on the first ballot this summer. ... Orange Coast College baseball coach John Altobelli; his wife, Keri; and his daughter Alyssa were also passengers on the helicopter ... In retirement, Bryant wrote children's books and produced animated stories, while also pursuing assorted media and business projects with his Gravity Studios. In 2018, he won an Academy Award for best animated short film for 'Dear Basketball,' his love letter to the sport. Bryant and Gianna shared a love for basketball, with Bryant serving as her coach and occasionally taking her to Lakers games. Just last month, they sat courtside for the Lakers' victory over the Dallas Mavericks..."

-- Remembrances flooded the Internet. Athletes and fans, including politicians and celebrities, struggled to process the tragedy. (Rick Maese and Cindy Boren)

-- Bryant was a tireless competitor who became a global sports icon, writes columnist Kent Babb: "The journey had begun on his family's driveway in Philadelphia, where on snowy days Mr. Bryant's mother would ask him to clear the driveway. He would do so just enough to shoot hoops, sometimes putting up hundreds of shots per day as he perfected a form that would become internationally famous."

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "We never know when our time here will be over, so we all need to make the most of every minute we have," Kobe wrote in a 2001 piece for Newsweek.

Highlights from the 2020 Grammy Awards

-- The Grammys celebrated Bryant's life in a touching memorial at the Staples Center, home of the Lakers, as thousands of fans mourned outside. Elahe Izadi reports: "Host Alicia Keys stepped to the stage and tried to make sense of the moment. 'Here we are, together, on music's biggest night, celebrating the artists that do it best,' she said. 'But to be honest with you, we're all feeling crazy sadness right now because earlier today, Los Angeles, America, and the whole wide world lost a hero and we're literally standing here heartbroken in the house that Kobe Bryant built.'"

-- Billie Eilish picked up the top four awards at the show, which was saturated with tension over the ouster of Recording Academy chief executive Deborah Dugan. Chris Richards reports: "Dugan was dismissed from her post just 10 days before Sunday night's national telecast on CBS. Then, five days after her removal, Dugan filed a discrimination complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission — one that includes accusations of sexual misconduct by the Academy’s former chairman and current general counsel Joel Katz, as well as claims of a rigged voting process that Dugan said had been poisoned by a boys-club atmosphere. (Katz has denied the allegations.) But Sunday’s show somehow went on — slowly and exhaustingly, for nearly four hours, without anyone mentioning the elephant in the room. Instead, the big surprise was Eilish’s dramatic sweep in the top four categories. The 18-year-old pop prodigy won album of the year for her intimate and innovative debut ... song and record of the year for her sauntering hit ‘Bad Guy’; and best new artist. In the final moments of the show, Eilish’s acceptance speech for record of the year was simply a bewildered, ‘Bye!’ ”

-- Trump’s longtime spiritual adviser Paula White called for “all satanic pregnancies to miscarry” during a sermon that has gone viral. Derek Hawkins and Angela Fritz report: “We declare that anything that’s been conceived in satanic wombs, that it will miscarry, it will not be able to carry forth any plan of destruction, any plan of harm,’ White said before an auditorium of congregants. ... White’s words are largely being interpreted literally — that she wishes for evil women to have miscarriages — but she shared a rare response to the criticism in which she explained that she was speaking in metaphor, praying for evil plans to be foiled in her congregants’ lives.”

-- The New Orleans Saints football organization asked a court to conceal from the public hundreds of emails that allegedly show team executives helping do damage control for the area’s

Catholic archdiocese to contain the fallout from a sexual abuse crisis. Attorneys for about two dozen men suing the church claim that 276 documents obtained during discovery show that the NFL team advised the Archdiocese of New Orleans on “messaging” to downplay revelations of abuse. (AP)

-- A site known for anti-Semitic remarks – including a claim by its founder that impeachment is a “Jew coup” – received press credentials to cover Trump's trip to Davos. From the Times: “Five employees of TruNews, which is based in Florida, received formal credentials from the White House to cover the president’s trip, [Rick] Wiles said in an interview last week from his hotel room in Switzerland — a room in a ski lodge reserved by the Trump administration for traveling members of the American press. (Like other media organizations, TruNews paid for its flights and lodging.) ... Mr. Wiles’s ability to secure credentials after his anti-Semitic remarks — which prompted a formal rebuke from two members of Congress — has left civil rights groups deeply troubled. ... TruNews was not granted special access to the president in Davos, nor did its members travel on Air Force One. But one of Mr. Wiles’s colleagues, Edward Szall, asked a question of the president’s daughter Ivanka Trump during a news conference.”

-- Amazon employees launched a mass defiance of the company’s communications policy in support of colleagues who were warned they would be fired if they criticized the company’s climate policies. Jay Greene reports: “Amazon Employees for Climate Justice, a group of workers concerned about the company’s business with the oil and gas industry as well as its carbon footprint, published quotes from 357 workers in a post on Medium. The comments, all of which are attributed to Amazon workers by name, are a mass defiance of company rules that bar workers from commenting publicly on its business without corporate justification and approval from executives. (Amazon founder and chief executive Jeff Bezos owns The Washington Post.)”

-- Michelle Obama can now add “Grammy winner” to her long list of achievements. The former first lady took home the trophy for the Best Spoken Word Album category last night for her audiobook recording of her memoir “Becoming.” (Entertainment Weekly)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Many took to Twitter to mourn Kobe Bryant:

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar ✓

@kaj33

Most people will remember Kobe as the magnificent athlete who inspired a whole generation of basketball players. But I will always remember him as a man who was much more than an athlete.

♥ 366K 9:22 PM - Jan 26, 2020

💬 84.9K people are talking about this

How it's playing in Kobe's adopted hometown:

The legend's last tweet led to reflection, including from the wife of a college basketball coach:

Seven other people died alongside the Bryants, including a mother, father and daughter from Orange County:

Geoff Bennett ✓
@GeoffRBennett

Lift up this family, too. twitter.com/complex/status...

Complex ✓ @Complex

Orange County baseball coach John Altobelli, his daughter Alyssa and wife Keri died in helicopter crash along with Kobe Bryant.

More: cmplx.co/oZYu7KV

♡ 165K 12:51 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 37.1K people are talking about this

Schiff expressed support for Jerry Nadler:

Adam Schiff ✓
@RepAdamSchiff

There is nothing more important than family. Thinking of my friend and colleague @RepJerryNadler and his wife during this difficult time. His leadership has been crucial.

Jerry, we're keeping you and Joyce in our prayers as we continue our important work together.

twitter.com/repjerryadler...

(((Rep. Nadler))) ✓ @RepJerryNadler

Read my statement on missing part of the Senate Impeachment Trial on Monday because of a family health matter:

Washington, D.C. - Today, House Judiciary Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-NY), one of the designated House Managers for the Senate Impeachment Trial of President Trump, issued the following statement:

"In December, following the House Judiciary Committee markup of the Articles of Impeachment against President Donald J. Trump, my wife was admitted to the hospital where she was diagnosed with Pancreatic Cancer. She has undergone surgery and is taking further steps to address the spread of the cancer. On Monday, I will be in New York with her to meet with doctors, determine a path forward, and begin her treatment. I am sorry to miss some of the Senate Impeachment Trial, which is of critical importance to our democracy. I plan to return to Washington late Monday and appreciate the support of my colleagues and staff as I take this time to be with my wife and begin the long fight against her cancer."

***

♥ 54.5K 1:34 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 10.3K people are talking about this

Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.), who is retiring, will cast the first vote on witnesses later this week:

Louise Linton, the wife of the Treasury secretary, posted and then deleted a picture on Instagram in which she sided with Greta Thunberg over her own husband:

Olivia Nuzzi

@Olivianuzzi

🇺🇸 Louise Linton comes out against her own husband, Steve Mnuchin, to side with Greta Thunberg 🇺🇸

Earlier this week, Mnuchin said Thunberg could explain climate change, "after she goes and studies economics in college."

louiselinton

55 likes

🤍 9,937 9:13 PM - Jan 25, 2020

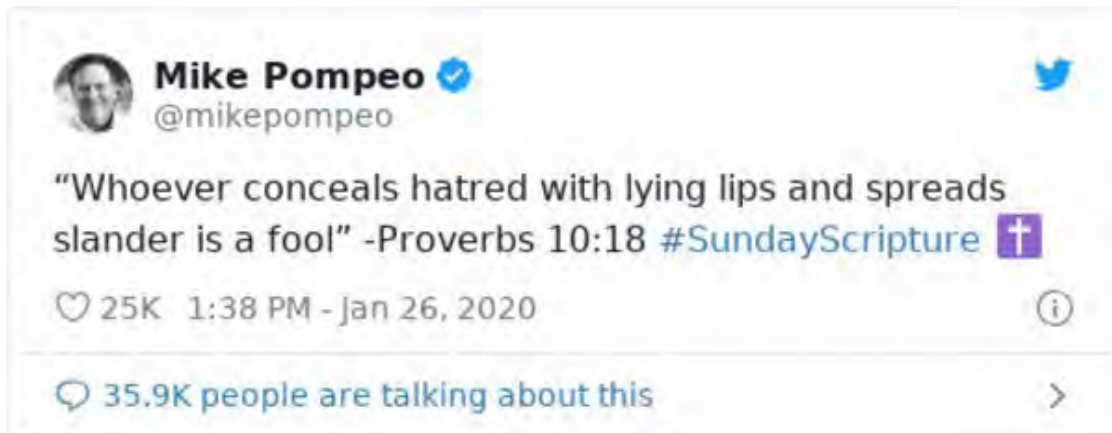

💬 2,469 people are talking about this

And the secretary of state used scripture to send a thinly veiled message to his critics:

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Kobe recalled the first time he saw his Team USA uniform in this tear-jerking interview from 2008:

Nick Zaccardi

@nzaccardi

A moment from NBC's coverage of the 2008 Olympics that I will always remember. Kobe Bryant telling Cris Collinsworth about the first time he received his USA uniform.

♡ 2,572 8:43 PM - Jan 26, 2020

💬 947 people are talking about this

A video of Bryant and his daughter Gigi breaking down an NBA game went viral:

neontaster
@neontaster

This video is all over the place and I just realized that he's explaining something to her and she finishes the sentence for him. When she starts speaking, they are mouth the same words. You can tell he's impressed.

♡ 31.8K 3:02 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 4,345 people are talking about this

In case you missed it, "Satan" interviewed "Trump's attorney Alan Dershowitz," played by Jon Lovitz, for the cold open of

"Saturday Night Live":

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: John Bolton's book undercuts the Trump defense team's claims that there are no firsthand witnesses
Date: Monday, January 27, 2020 7:58:39 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

John Bolton's book undercuts the Trump defense team's claims that there are no firsthand witnesses

Trump's impeachment defense details 6 pieces of evidence they say exonerate the president

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Revelations about former national security adviser John Bolton's forthcoming memoir have shattered a central argument advanced by President Trump's defense lawyers during his impeachment trial.

"Not a single witness testified that the president himself said that there was any connection between any investigations and security assistance, a presidential meeting or anything else," deputy White House counsel Michael Purpura told senators on Saturday.

"There was no firsthand witnesses that actually said the president did anything wrong," Rep. Doug Collins (R-Ga.) repeated Sunday morning on Fox News.

Then the New York Times reported Sunday night that Bolton discloses – in a manuscript submitted to the White House last month for a classification review – that Trump told him directly last August that he wanted to continue freezing $391 million in security assistance to Ukraine until officials there helped with investigations into Democrats, including Joe and Hunter Biden.

This erodes Trump's insistence that there was never a quid pro quo, but it also adds to the body of evidence, including documents and sworn testimony, that the president was directly involved in the alleged scheme to coerce an ally, under attack from Russia, to announce an investigation of a leading 2020 challenger in exchange for delivering support that had been approved by Congress. Bolton aides testified during the House hearings that the then-national security adviser had referred to what was being cooked up vis-a-vis Ukraine as a "drug deal" that he didn't want any part of. Bolton directed deputies such as Fiona Hill to raise their concerns with White House lawyers.

-- Over dozens of pages in his draft, Bolton reportedly offers new details that implicate senior administration officials who have refused to testify as having firsthand knowledge. For example, Bolton writes that acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney was present for at least one phone call where the president and his personal attorney Rudy Giuliani discussed then-Ambassador Marie Yovanovitch. "Mr. Mulvaney has told associates he would always step away when the president spoke with his lawyer to protect their attorney-client privilege," Maggie Haberman and Michael Schmidt report.

According to their story, Bolton also says that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo acknowledged to him privately that there was no basis to Giuliani's claims that Yovanovitch was corrupt. He also allegedly believed Giuliani may have been acting on behalf of other clients. "Mr. Bolton also said that after the president's July phone call with the president of Ukraine, he raised with Attorney General William P. Barr his concerns about Mr. Giuliani, who was pursuing a shadow Ukraine policy encouraged by the president, and told Mr. Barr that the president had mentioned him on the call," per the Times. "A spokeswoman for Mr. Barr denied that he learned of the call from Mr. Bolton."

-- Two people familiar with the manuscript confirm to The Washington Post that Bolton details how Trump tied Ukraine aid to the desire for Biden probes and that he recounts conversations with other senior officials.

-- Trump denied Bolton's allegations on Twitter this morning:

This is another moment when it would be politically advantageous if the president had not squandered his credibility with a flood of falsehoods. Trump made 16,241 demonstrably false or misleading claims during his first three years as president, our Fact Checker team tabulated last week.

-- These revelations have injected a jolt of unpredictability into an otherwise scripted trial. Bolton has said that he would testify if subpoenaed by the Senate. In conversations last night, senior Senate Republican aides told me that Bolton testifying would increase pressure for Mulvaney and others to answer questions. They worry that additional testimony might further undercut the absolutist insistence of Trump's defense team that "the president did absolutely nothing wrong," as White House Counsel Pat Cipollone told senators on Saturday. A vote to call Bolton would also ratchet up pressure from Trump's allies to subpoena Hunter Biden, which could drag the process out.

Mulvaney confirms Ukraine quid pro quo

-- Notably, Trump's defense lawyers never mentioned Mulvaney during their opening day of arguments on Saturday. The Democratic House managers last week played the footage from October of Mulvaney in the White House briefing room. The acting chief of staff admitted that Trump had "absolutely" mentioned to him concerns about “the corruption related to the DNC server.”

“And that's why we held up the money,” Mulvaney said.

“What you just described is a quid pro quo,” a reporter replied.

“We do that all the time with foreign policy,” Mulvaney responded.

He later issued a statement trying to walk this back, but he’s refused to answer any subsequent questions or participate in the congressional inquiries.

-- The White House could still attempt to delay the publication of Bolton’s book, scheduled for March 17, or block some of its contents by claiming that they’re classified. Bolton’s memoir will be entitled “The Room Where It Happened,” an apparent play on the song from “Hamilton,” and the cover art puts those words inside an oval, an apparent reference to the Oval Office. The 528-page book, which became available for preorder on Amazon last night, covers all 519 days that Bolton served as national security adviser.

-- Complicating attacks from the Trump team: They can call him disgruntled, but Bolton is no squish. The 71-year-old hawk held senior national security jobs under Ronald Reagan, George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush before Trump brought him into the White House. A graduate of Yale Law School, he’s been known for decades as a skilled bureaucratic knife fighter.

-- The president’s allies quickly complained about the timing of the disclosure, but Bolton’s lawyer and spokeswoman contend that someone in the White House leaked to the Times, not anyone in their camp.

-- The White House has had a copy of Bolton's draft manuscript since Dec. 30. Bolton's lawyer Charles Cooper shared a cover letter that he sent to the National Security Council's records management division that day for a standard review process, including a request that it not be shared widely. "It is clear, regrettably, from The New York Times article published today that the prepublication review process has been corrupted and that information has been disclosed by persons other than those properly involved in reviewing the manuscript," Cooper said in a statement. Bolton spokeswoman Sarah Tinsley added: "The ambassador has not passed the draft manuscript to anyone else. Period."

Bolstering their arguments, the Times story cites two sources saying that the submission of the manuscript to the White House "intensified concerns among some of [Trump's] advisers that they needed to block Mr. Bolton from testifying."

John Bolton watches President Trump meet with Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban in the Oval Office last May. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

-- Democrats have been demanding four witnesses. In addition to Bolton and Mulvaney, they want to call Michael Duffey and Robert Blair. “Clear direction from POTUS to continue to hold,” Duffey emailed the Pentagon’s acting comptroller on Aug. 30, according to Just Security. Duffey was formerly executive director of the Republican Party of Wisconsin until he got a patronage job at the Office of Management and Budget. Blair was a top aide to Mulvaney.

-- Four Republican senators need to join the Democrats to vote for summoning Bolton as a witness. The quartet seen as most likely to favor testimony are Susan Collins (Maine), Lisa Murkowski (Alaska), Mitt Romney (Utah) and Lamar Alexander (Tenn.). “Romney and Collins have already indicated that they are likely to support hearing from witnesses and getting more evidence, and Romney has also said that he would like to hear from Bolton,” per Seung Min Kim, Felicia Sonmez and Josh Dawsey.

Even if they don’t ultimately vote to hear from Bolton, the allegations in the manuscript will generate a fresh round of pressure on vulnerable GOP incumbents who are facing tough reelection fights, such as Iowa’s Joni Ernst, Colorado’s Cory Gardner and North Carolina’s Thom Tillis.

Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) reupped his push to call the witnesses “with direct knowledge” of Trump’s actions. “John Bolton has the evidence,” he tweeted. “It’s up to four Senate Republicans to ensure that John Bolton, Mick Mulvaney, and the

others testify.”

-- A joint statement from the seven House impeachment managers said the “explosive revelation ... confirms what we already know”: “There can be no doubt now that Mr. Bolton directly contradicts the heart of the President’s defense and therefore must be called as a witness,” the Democratic lawmakers said. “The Senate trial must seek the full truth and Mr. Bolton has vital information to provide. There is no defensible reason to wait until his book is published, when the information he has to offer is critical to the most important decision Senators must now make — whether to convict the President of impeachable offenses.”

The House managers emphasized that Bolton didn’t testify during their investigation after the White House instructed him not to do so. “The President knows how devastating his testimony would be, and, according to the report, the White House has had a draft of his manuscript for review,” they wrote. “President Trump’s cover-up must come to an end. Americans know that a fair trial must include both the documents and witnesses blocked by the President — that starts with Mr. Bolton.”

-- If the Senate votes not to call Bolton, the trial could end with Trump’s acquittal as early as this week.

Sen. Doug Jones (D), facing a difficult reelection race in Alabama, suggested that the Senate should subpoena the manuscript:

 Doug Jones ✓
@DougJones

The Senate needs to hear from Bolton. The American people deserve to hear from Bolton. If we can't get Bolton let's get a subpoena for the book! #subpoenathebook #ImpartialJustice twitter.com/nytimes/status...

The New York Times ✓ @nytimes
Breaking News: President Trump said he wanted to keep aid to Ukraine frozen until its officials helped him with investigations into Democrats, John Bolton wrote in an unpublished manuscript of a new book nyti.ms/2vk9mjq

6,289 12:37 AM - Jan 27, 2020

2,417 people are talking about this

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross BlueShield Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by  LiveIntent

From a former Republican congressman who is waging a long-shot bid against Trump for the GOP nomination:

A former GOP congressman from Florida, who has been critical of Trump, warned his former colleagues:

The Michigan congressman who left the GOP after endorsing impeachment said the president's excuses for not wanting Bolton to testify don't pass the smell test:

Justin Amash ✓
@justinamash

Try to hold your laughter.

President Trump on why he doesn't want Bolton to testify:

"What happens if he reveals what I think about a certain leader and it's not very positive?"

twitter.com/nytimes/status...

The New York Times ✓ @nytimes

Breaking News: President Trump said he wanted to keep aid to Ukraine frozen until its officials helped him with investigations into Democrats, John Bolton wrote in an unpublished manuscript of a new book nyti.ms/2vk9mjq

♥ 21.8K 11:50 PM - Jan 26, 2020

💬 6,243 people are talking about this

A chorus of Democrats also warned of "a cover-up," including the speaker of the House:

Nancy Pelosi ✓
@SpeakerPelosi

Amb. Bolton reportedly heard directly from Trump that aid for Ukraine was tied to political investigations.

The refusal of the Senate to call for him, other relevant witnesses, and documents is now even more indefensible.

The choice is clear: our Constitution, or a cover-up.
twitter.com/maggienny/stat...

Maggie Haberman ✓ @maggieNYT

SCOOP: Bolton book draft, circulated to associates and sent to WH for review process, describes a convo w POTUS where he says he doesn't want to release withheld aid till Ukraine turned over material related to investigations @nytmike and me nytimes.com/2020/01/26/us/...

♥ 55.2K 12:14 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 22.7K people are talking about this

A Harvard Law professor who held senior legal jobs in the George W. Bush administration said that draft manuscripts like Bolton's are often widely circulated, even though technically they are supposed to be closely held:

Jack Goldsmith ✓
@jackgoldsmith

From personal experience I can attest that, despite 28 CFR 17.18(h), the exec branch often circulates manuscripts submitted for prepub review widely,

including to political officials, & it often asks for deletions for reasons having nothing to do w/ disclosure of classified info. twitter.com/nytmike/status...

Michael S. Schmidt  @nytmike

Letter Bolton's lawyer, Chuck Cooper, sent to WH on Dec 30 for pre publication review.

Trump this morning retweeted several attacks on both Bolton and the Times from his loyalists in the conservative media ecosystem:

Lou Dobbs ✓

@LouDobbs

Rejected Neocon, Failing NYTimes, Deep State's Last Desperate Act After @POTUS Attorneys Destroy Radical Dems, Schiff and Pelosi Charges: NYTimes says Bolton Book Claims @realDonaldTrump Trump tied Ukraine Aid to Biden Probe thegatewaypundit.com/2020/01/perfec...
#MAGA #AmericaFirst

Perfect Timing: Anonymous Sources Claim Bolton B...

Several anonymous sources have reportedly told The New York Times that a book manuscript by Ambassador John thegatewaypundit.com

♥ 11.1K 3:27 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 6,204 people are talking about this

Dan Bongino ✓
@dbongino

Regarding Bolton:

- 1) Nobody cares
- 2) The aid was delivered
- 3) The Ukrainians aren't victims (just ask them)
- 4) The Democrats' corruption in Ukraine is real
- 5) Nobody cares

♡ 55.8K 2:13 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 20K people are talking about this

Joe Gooding 100 🇺🇸
@joegooding

This "Bolton Bombshell" from The NY Times (hardly a reliable source on @POTUS @realDonaldTrump reporting) seems to have dropped at an orchestrated opportunity. Totally manufactured. #NextRevFNC

NY TIMES: BOLTON'S UNPUBLISHED BOOK SAYS TRUMP TIED UKRAINE AID TO BIDEN & OTHER INVESTIGATIONS

FOX NEWS ALERT

MARICOPA COUNTY IS THE FIFTH U.S. CASE OF CORONAVIRUS FROM CHINA ... CHINESE OFFICIALS SAY

♡ 9,260 2:49 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 4,501 people are talking about this

MORE ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Former acting ambassador to Ukraine Bill Taylor rebuked Secretary of State Mike Pompeo for suggesting to NPR that Americans don't care about Ukraine. From his op-ed in today's New York Times: “Ukraine is defending itself and the West against Russian attack. If Ukraine succeeds, we succeed. The relationship between the United States and Ukraine is key to our national security... Russia is fighting a hybrid war against Ukraine, Europe and the United States. This war has many components: armed military aggression, energy supply, cyber attacks, disinformation and election interference. On each of these battlegrounds, Ukraine is the front line. ... The United States and our allies support Ukraine in this war by providing the Ukrainian armed forces with weapons, training and support. American security assistance to Ukraine regularly receives broad, bipartisan support in Congress; the importance of that assistance to Ukraine — and to U.S. national security — is not at issue. ...

“The Kremlin is attacking the rules that have guided relations among nations since World War II, rules that kept the peace among major European powers for 70 years. ... Until Russia withdraws from Ukraine — both Donbas and Crimea — and recognizes that Ukraine is an independent, sovereign nation, other nations cannot be secure. Until Russia recommits to a rules-based international order, Western nations are in jeopardy. Ukraine is the front line.”

-- Pompeo claimed an NPR host lied when setting up an interview with him, but email records support the journalist’s account of how the exchange came to be. Paul Farhi reports: “The emails ...

indicate that Pompeo's staff was aware that NPR's Mary Louise Kelly would ask Pompeo about several topics in the interview and raised no objections, contrary to Pompeo's characterization. In an extraordinary statement issued on State Department letterhead on Saturday, Pompeo blasted Kelly for repeatedly asking him why he refused to express support for the former U.S. ambassador to Ukraine, Marie Yovanovitch. Kelly said afterward Pompeo berated her using profanity and challenged her to locate Ukraine on an unmarked map, which Kelly said she did. ... Pompeo's statement implied that Kelly had agreed before the interview to confine her questions to developments in Iran and that he would not be asked about other subjects. ... But emails between Kelly and Pompeo's press aide, Katie Martin, a day before the interview show that there was no such agreement and that Kelly made clear her intention to question Pompeo about other topics."

After GOP previews Trump's impeachment defense, lawmakers clash over what's next

-- Trump stepped up his attacks against House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff on Sunday, tweeting that the lead House manager “has not paid the price, yet, for what he has done to our Country!” Schiff (D-Calif.) said on NBC's "Meet the Press" that he believes the post was "intended" as a threat. White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham said on Fox News that it was “ridiculous” for Schiff to claim that. “I think he means ... [Schiff] hasn't yet paid the price with the voters,” she said. “I mean, it seems he's having a little bit of a mental issue when you sit on the floor for hours and hours and hours. He's obsessed with this president and trying to take him down.” (Felicia Sonmez and Elise Viebeck report)

-- House Judiciary Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.) disclosed that his wife, Joyce, was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer last month shortly after his committee voted to send two articles of impeachment to the full House. “She has undergone surgery and is taking further steps to address the spread of the cancer,” Nadler said in a statement. “On Monday, I will be in New York with her to meet with doctors, determine a path forward, and begin her treatment. I am sorry to miss some of the Senate Impeachment Trial, which is of critical importance to our democracy. I plan to return to Washington late Monday and appreciate the support of my colleagues and staff as I take this time to be with my wife and begin the long fight against her cancer.”

-- Trump lawyer Alan Dershowitz once said that Trump, now his client, was “destabilizing and unpredictable.” The quote comes from a 2016 book entitled “Electile Dysfunction.” (NBC News)

-- Former Republican senator Slade Gorton (Wash.) encouraged senators to honor their oaths by voting to call witnesses the way that he did during Bill Clinton's trial. "I worry that the Senate is falling short of its responsibility," he writes in an op-ed for USA Today. "Indeed, the impeachment trial has dawned with a series of party line votes, as was the case in the House. To be clear, the Senate is not the House. It's supposed to be an institution where — particularly on issues of process, if not ideology — common ground is identified through careful compromise.... Senators have the chance to affirm what the framers envisioned and — even if it doesn't change anyone's mind — secure all relevant evidence and make an informed decision to defend the Constitution and the republic. ... In any trial, the decision-makers need to hear from witnesses and see the evidence in order to reach the best possible verdict. And they can't hear witnesses who have been blocked or read evidence that has been hidden."

-- Commentary from The Post's opinion page:

- Editorial page editor Fred Hiatt: "The White House offers senators a false, and poisonous, choice."
- Max Boot: "Every day that Pompeo stays in office, he makes Tillerson look better by comparison"
- E.J. Dionne Jr.: "Trump's selfishness harms you, too."
- Dana Milbank: "Trump's lawyers are absolutely entitled to their own facts."

-- Reality check: Many Americans are paying little attention. From the AP: "Voters in several states said ... they're only casually following the Senate trial, or avoiding it altogether — too busy to pay close attention, bored of the legal arguments, convinced the outcome is preordained or just plain tired of the whole partisan saga. ... 'I've been watching some really odd stuff just to avoid it,' said Kim Ashford, 50, a court-appointed advocate for foster children from Gilbert, Arizona. 'In my circle, everybody's tired of hearing about it. There's nobody budging. Let's just agree to disagree.' ... The six major networks drew about 11.8 million viewers on the first day of the Senate trial ...

Combined viewership plummeted to fewer than 9 million people on the trial's second day ... By comparison, an estimated 13.8 million people watched the first day of the House impeachment hearings last fall.

Around the time of the House impeachment vote last month, stories about impeachment averaged about 20 million page views each day.

Last week, impeachment stories drew about 15 million page views daily, according to digital advertising and web tracking company Taboola. Google searches on impeachment have also declined since the House vote.”

-- Spiking the football? Trump and top White House aides are discussing how he should celebrate his presumed acquittal, Politico reports, including “whether he should deliver a rare Oval Office address to mark the occasion.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Bernie Sanders speaks on Sunday to volunteers, alongside Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.), at his field office in Ankeny, Iowa. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

2020 WATCH:

-- Trump is in a much more competitive position to get reelected than he was last fall, according to a new Washington Post-ABC News poll. "The state of the economy and perceptions of Trump's handling of it pose a challenge for Democratic presidential candidates," Scott Clement and Dan Balz report. "Despite Americans'

concerns that the economic system favors the wealthy, the latest Post-ABC poll finds fewer than half are worried about maintaining their own standard of living ... Just over 10 months until Election Day, Americans see Trump as a slight favorite for reelection, with 49 percent expecting him to win and 43 percent predicting that his Democratic challenger will prevail. But those expectations are highly partisan, with 87 percent of Republicans saying they believe Trump will win reelection while a somewhat smaller 78 percent majority of Democrats say they believe their party's nominee will win.

"The national Post-ABC poll tested Trump in six potential general election matchups and finds that registered voters nationwide are roughly split between supporting the president and backing the Democratic candidates. Neither Trump nor Democrats hold a statistically significant advantage in any matchup ... given the poll's four-point margin of sampling error among registered voters. ... The close matchups between Trump and Democrats among registered voters represent a contrast with an October Post-ABC poll in which [Joe] Biden, [Bernie] Sanders, [Elizabeth] Warren and [Pete] Buttigieg all held double-digit advantages over the incumbent. ...

"The shift coincides with a rise in Trump's approval rating from 38 percent to 44 percent among the public overall, with 51 percent currently disapproving. ... Trump's improved standing ... owes in part to political independents. Trump receives between 47 percent and 52 percent support among voters in this group depending on his Democratic opponent, an improvement from October when he got between 39 percent and 42 percent support. ... The Post-ABC poll also finds 56 percent approve of Trump's handling of the economy, up 10 percentage points from last fall and the highest rating on this issue of his presidency. The difference of 12 points between Trump's economic approval rating and his overall approval is an indication of how public opinion on other aspects of Trump's performance have been a drag on his popularity."

POLL Washington Post-ABC News Poll

In general election matchups, no clear advantage for Trump or potential Democratic nominees

Q: If the 2020 presidential election were being held today, and the candidates were Donald Trump, the Republican and _____, the Democrat, for whom would you vote? Would you lean toward Trump or _____?

Note: Other/No opinion not shown

Source: Jan. 20-23, 2020, Washington Post-ABC News poll of 880 registered voters with an error margin of +/- 4 percentage points.

THE WASHINGTON POST

-- Sanders is facing a barrage of attacks from his rivals, as polls show him surging in the early states. Chelsea Janes and Sean Sullivan report: "Sanders could be the nominee," the campaign of

Pete Buttigieg declared in an ominous-sounding fundraising message to supporters Saturday. ... The focus on Sanders represents a shift from much of the past year in which the top candidates largely ignored the senator ... Several new public polls have shown Sanders on the rise, particularly in Iowa and New Hampshire, where he appears to have taken the lead. ... Much of the intensifying debate over Sanders over the weekend centered on his ability — or lack thereof — to beat Trump. ... [Amy Klobuchar told] ABC News that Sanders's Medicare-for-all plan puts him out of step with voters in many more moderate or conservative parts of the country that might be open to voting Democratic in November. ... Rep. Cindy Axne (D-Iowa), who offered her high-profile endorsement to Biden on Saturday, said a 'pragmatic' platform is key to fostering victories like hers in down-ballot races ...

“A more cutting critique came Sunday from another candidate, former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg, who seemed to mock Sanders's political ideology during a South Florida speech to Jewish voters. 'I know I'm not the only Jewish candidate running for president. But I am the only one who doesn't want to turn America into a kibbutz,' he said, a reference to the socialism shared by Sanders and the Israeli collective farm where Sanders worked decades ago. ... After Sanders was criticized for promoting the endorsement of podcast host Joe Rogan, who has made disrespectful remarks about the transgender community, Biden tweeted Saturday: 'Transgender equality is the civil rights issue of our time. There is no room for compromise when it comes to basic human rights.' ...

“Sanders has sought to turn the sudden hostility he is facing into a battle cry that he hopes will energize his base to turn out in large numbers on caucus night. 'The big-money interests are getting very nervous,' he said, prompting cheers. 'They're looking at recent polls in New Hampshire and in Iowa, and they're saying, 'Oh, my god, Sanders can win.'"

-- An example of the mounting scrutiny for Sanders: CNN unearthed a 1994 video of the Vermont liberal offering support for the controversial Biden crime bill, arguing that the country needed "some more jails." Sanders has recently described the bill as "terrible" and apologized for voting for it, adding that his view at the time was that the bill wasn't perfect but that he viewed it as a major step "in controlling and preventing crime."

-- Iowans have been through a long and bruising hunt for a candidate to love. Jenna Johnson beautifully tells the story of one family: "When Tanya Keith and her teenage daughter Aviva Jotzke learned that their favorite Democratic presidential candidate, Sen. Cory Booker of New Jersey, had dropped out of the race a few weeks before the Iowa caucuses, they cried and mourned with fellow supporters. Then they began to assess their options. Over the next seven days, they would attend three campaign events for different candidates, have numerous conversations with each other and friends who had committed to other candidates, and endure what seemed a never-ending weighing and reweighing of what issues and leadership traits matter most to them. ... Their desire to commit early is rare this caucus season. Iowans always feel a special responsibility in kick-starting primary voting, but that sentiment has been heightened this year by the party's determination to defeat [Trump]." The mother and daughter decide at the end of the story to caucus for Warren.

-- It's still fluid: A new poll from Suffolk University and USA Today shows Biden leading in Iowa with 25 percent, followed by Sanders at 19 percent. Buttigieg is at 18 percent, Warren gets 13 percent and Klobuchar is at 6 percent.

-- Buttigieg made an electability pitch during a town hall on Fox News last night. "This network is known for having a lot more conservative viewers, but I don't think you have to be a Democrat to see what is wrong with this president," the former mayor said.
(Politico)

-- Entrepreneur Andrew Yang qualified for the February debate in New Hampshire after missing out on this month's Des Moines debate. The candidate qualified after a CNN-University of New Hampshire poll pegged him at five percent in the Granite State.

Hear from residents inside the sealed-off city off Wuhan, China

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Reports of coronavirus infections and deaths are soaring in China, and a fifth case has now been confirmed in the United States. Gerry Shih, David J. Lynch, Simon Denyer and Brittany Shammas report: “The government in Beijing broadened an extraordinary quarantine to more than 50 million people — roughly equal to the population of Spain — enforcing a travel ban on 16 cities in central Hubei province, where the lethal virus first appeared. In the United States, health officials confirmed three new cases — one in Arizona and two in California — bringing the total to five. The patients — in Southern California, Chicago, Arizona and Washington state — had traveled from Wuhan, officials with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said. All are hospitalized. As of midafternoon Sunday, the CDC has been investigating 100 people in 26 states, including the five who were confirmed infected. Of those, 25 people have been tested and are not infected with the virus. ... Chinese officials, however, say the worst is yet to come. Health Minister Ma Xiaowei said Sunday that the virus is developing the ability to spread more easily, while the vice minister of industry, Wang Jiangping, said demand for medical supplies is overwhelming China's ability to produce them. ...

“China's national health commission reported that 2,744 people across 30 provinces had been infected as of Sunday. Eighty deaths have been reported, including in major metropolitan areas such as Shanghai. Several doctors in Beijing, the capital, also reported being infected. Patients also have been confirmed in France, South Korea, Japan, Nepal, Thailand, Singapore, Vietnam, Taiwan and Australia. ... The galloping virus, which has crimped travel, shuttered movie theaters and idled factories, will further depress

[economic] growth. ... The virus will also imperil China's ability to meet the targets for additional purchases of U.S. goods contained in the trade deal President Trump signed earlier this month.” (Our graphics team has mapped out the spread of the coronavirus, illustrating why officials are so worried.)

-- Worries are growing that the quarantine in China won't be enough. Gerry and Simon report: “Widespread suspicions on Chinese social media that government officials mishandled the early stages of the crisis were fanned dramatically on Monday by an unlikely player: the Wuhan mayor himself. In a remarkable interview with Chinese state broadcaster CCTV, Zhou [Xianwang] acknowledged that his city did not release ‘timely and satisfactory’ information at the start of the epidemic, and he appeared to blame higher-ups in his chain of command. ‘I hope everyone can understand that this is an infectious disease, and infectious diseases must be disclosed according to law,’ he said. ‘We can only disclose information after we receive authorization.’”

-- China has banned the trade of wild animals until the epidemic is under control, as evidence mounts the disease was transmitted to humans through snake meat sold at a market in Wuhan. The new restrictions ban the transport and sale of wild animals. Experts believe the country is paying a heavy price after the government failed to learn one of the critical lessons from the SARS epidemic 17 years ago: Diseases can mutate easily and spread to humans in markets where different species of live animals live in close and unhygienic proximity. (Simon and Lyric Li)

-- Three rockets crashed into the U.S. Embassy compound in

Baghdad, wounding one. Louisa Loveluck reports: “The strike Sunday was the first known direct hit inside the U.S. Embassy’s heavily fortified compound. One missile hit the dining facility, while two others landed close by, officials said. The identity and nationality of the wounded individual was not made public Monday, but U.S. officials ... said that the person had suffered a non-life-threatening injury and that a small fire had been extinguished.”

-- Jared Kushner’s Middle East peace plan will finally be released publicly tomorrow, Axios reports: The deal’s details have been closely guarded by the president’s son-in-law and his small team, which includes Ambassador to Israel David Friedman. Palestinian leadership has already preemptively rejected Kushner’s effort and has been left totally out of the loop after cutting off contact with the administration after Trump recognized Jerusalem as Israel’s capital.

-- One of Brexit’s biggest impacts may be the end of freedom of movement. Karla Adam and William Booth report: “For a generation, for more than four decades, Londoners have been able to pack off to Lisbon, Berliners to Birmingham, Mancunians to Milan. No paperwork, no visas, no job offer needed on the other side — just buy a ticket and go. ... But Brexit campaigners pushed the notion that Britain needed to ‘take back control’ of its borders. Europeans, the Brexiteers claimed — looking pointedly at the poorer countries on the eastern edge of the bloc — took British jobs and strained British social services. E.U. citizens will be able to continue to move here freely through the Brexit transition period, until at least December. But afterward, they will need to apply — and will no longer get preference over applicants from

other continents.”

-- In an attempt to attract one group of foreigners it doesn't want to lose, the U.K. has launched a new visa to lure researchers, mathematicians and scientists. From Politico: “The so-called Global Talent scheme will replace the Tier 1 visa program for ‘exceptional talents’ and is set to go live on February 20. It will not have a cap on the number of applicants allowed in and will enable recognized U.K.-based research projects to recruit talent from abroad without hurdles ... [U]p to 2,500 academics have left Scotland since the Brexit referendum, sparking fears of a post-Brexit brain drain.”

-- The Kremlin is struggling to control cyberspace at home, despite it being notorious for global meddling online. Isabelle Khurshudyan reports: “Russia so far has tread relatively carefully in its censorship efforts. Still, Internet-freedom monitors in Russia fear its new ‘sovereign Internet’ law could one day rival Chinese and Iranian online oversight. The London-based rights monitor Freedom House ranked Russia 51st out of 65 countries on its Internet-freedom rating last year. The legislation came into force in November, but it could be a year before the technology is in place. It aims to route Russian Web traffic and data through points controlled by state authorities and to build a national domain name system. This, supporters claim, would give Russia greater control of Internet content and traffic. ... But critics see it as the government’s way of further cracking down on one of the few free sources of information remaining in the country.”

Kobe Bryant killed in helicopter crash

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- The nation was shocked after NBA star Kobe Bryant and his 13-year-old daughter Gianna were killed in a helicopter crash. The five-time NBA champion and two-time Olympic gold medalist was 41. Ben Golliver and Miranda Green report: The Bryants were “riding in an S-76 helicopter Sunday when it crashed just before 10 a.m. into a hillside near Calabasas, Calif., roughly 30 miles northwest of Los Angeles. The flight manifest listed nine people on board — one pilot and eight passengers — and there were no survivors ... The smooth shooting guard, who patterned his game after Michael Jordan, entered the NBA straight out of high school in 1996. ... By his fourth season, he had teamed with Shaquille O’Neal to win the first of three consecutive championships. ...

“Bryant, who retired as the NBA’s third-all-time leading scorer

with 33,643 points, was expected to be inducted to the Naismith Basketball Hall of Fame on the first ballot this summer. ... Orange Coast College baseball coach John Altobelli; his wife, Keri; and his daughter Alyssa were also passengers on the helicopter ... In retirement, Bryant wrote children's books and produced animated stories, while also pursuing assorted media and business projects with his Gravity Studios. In 2018, he won an Academy Award for best animated short film for 'Dear Basketball,' his love letter to the sport. Bryant and Gianna shared a love for basketball, with Bryant serving as her coach and occasionally taking her to Lakers games. Just last month, they sat courtside for the Lakers' victory over the Dallas Mavericks..."

-- Remembrances flooded the Internet. Athletes and fans, including politicians and celebrities, struggled to process the tragedy. (Rick Maese and Cindy Boren)

-- Bryant was a tireless competitor who became a global sports icon, writes columnist Kent Babb: "The journey had begun on his family's driveway in Philadelphia, where on snowy days Mr. Bryant's mother would ask him to clear the driveway. He would do so just enough to shoot hoops, sometimes putting up hundreds of shots per day as he perfected a form that would become internationally famous."

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "We never know when our time here will be over, so we all need to make the most of every minute we have," Kobe wrote in a 2001 piece for Newsweek.

Highlights from the 2020 Grammy Awards

-- The Grammys celebrated Bryant's life in a touching memorial at the Staples Center, home of the Lakers, as thousands of fans mourned outside. Elahe Izadi reports: "Host Alicia Keys stepped to the stage and tried to make sense of the moment. 'Here we are, together, on music's biggest night, celebrating the artists that do it best,' she said. 'But to be honest with you, we're all feeling crazy sadness right now because earlier today, Los Angeles, America, and the whole wide world lost a hero and we're literally standing here heartbroken in the house that Kobe Bryant built.'"

-- Billie Eilish picked up the top four awards at the show, which was saturated with tension over the ouster of Recording Academy chief executive Deborah Dugan. Chris Richards reports: "Dugan was dismissed from her post just 10 days before Sunday night's national telecast on CBS. Then, five days after her removal, Dugan filed a discrimination complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission — one that includes accusations of sexual misconduct by the Academy’s former chairman and current general counsel Joel Katz, as well as claims of a rigged voting process that Dugan said had been poisoned by a boys-club atmosphere. (Katz has denied the allegations.) But Sunday’s show somehow went on — slowly and exhaustingly, for nearly four hours, without anyone mentioning the elephant in the room. Instead, the big surprise was Eilish’s dramatic sweep in the top four categories. The 18-year-old pop prodigy won album of the year for her intimate and innovative debut ... song and record of the year for her sauntering hit ‘Bad Guy’; and best new artist. In the final moments of the show, Eilish’s acceptance speech for record of the year was simply a bewildered, ‘Bye!’ ”

-- Trump’s longtime spiritual adviser Paula White called for “all satanic pregnancies to miscarry” during a sermon that has gone viral. Derek Hawkins and Angela Fritz report: “We declare that anything that’s been conceived in satanic wombs, that it will miscarry, it will not be able to carry forth any plan of destruction, any plan of harm,’ White said before an auditorium of congregants. ... White’s words are largely being interpreted literally — that she wishes for evil women to have miscarriages — but she shared a rare response to the criticism in which she explained that she was speaking in metaphor, praying for evil plans to be foiled in her congregants’ lives.”

-- The New Orleans Saints football organization asked a court to conceal from the public hundreds of emails that allegedly show team executives helping do damage control for the area’s

Catholic archdiocese to contain the fallout from a sexual abuse crisis. Attorneys for about two dozen men suing the church claim that 276 documents obtained during discovery show that the NFL team advised the Archdiocese of New Orleans on “messaging” to downplay revelations of abuse. (AP)

-- A site known for anti-Semitic remarks – including a claim by its founder that impeachment is a “Jew coup” – received press credentials to cover Trump's trip to Davos. From the Times: “Five employees of TruNews, which is based in Florida, received formal credentials from the White House to cover the president’s trip, [Rick] Wiles said in an interview last week from his hotel room in Switzerland — a room in a ski lodge reserved by the Trump administration for traveling members of the American press. (Like other media organizations, TruNews paid for its flights and lodging.) ... Mr. Wiles’s ability to secure credentials after his anti-Semitic remarks — which prompted a formal rebuke from two members of Congress — has left civil rights groups deeply troubled. ... TruNews was not granted special access to the president in Davos, nor did its members travel on Air Force One. But one of Mr. Wiles’s colleagues, Edward Szall, asked a question of the president’s daughter Ivanka Trump during a news conference.”

-- Amazon employees launched a mass defiance of the company’s communications policy in support of colleagues who were warned they would be fired if they criticized the company’s climate policies. Jay Greene reports: “Amazon Employees for Climate Justice, a group of workers concerned about the company’s business with the oil and gas industry as well as its carbon footprint, published quotes from 357 workers in a post on Medium. The comments, all of which are attributed to Amazon workers by name, are a mass defiance of company rules that bar workers from commenting publicly on its business without corporate justification and approval from executives. (Amazon founder and chief executive Jeff Bezos owns The Washington Post.)”

-- Michelle Obama can now add “Grammy winner” to her long list of achievements. The former first lady took home the trophy for the Best Spoken Word Album category last night for her audiobook recording of her memoir “Becoming.” (Entertainment Weekly)

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Many took to Twitter to mourn Kobe Bryant:

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar ✓

@kaj33

Most people will remember Kobe as the magnificent athlete who inspired a whole generation of basketball players. But I will always remember him as a man who was much more than an athlete.

♥ 366K 9:22 PM - Jan 26, 2020

💬 84.9K people are talking about this

How it's playing in Kobe's adopted hometown:

The legend's last tweet led to reflection, including from the wife of a college basketball coach:

Seven other people died alongside the Bryants, including a mother, father and daughter from Orange County:

Geoff Bennett ✓
@GeoffRBennett

Lift up this family, too. twitter.com/complex/status...

Complex ✓ @Complex

Orange County baseball coach John Altobelli, his daughter Alyssa and wife Keri died in helicopter crash along with Kobe Bryant.

More: cmplx.co/oZYu7KV

♡ 165K 12:51 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 37.1K people are talking about this

Schiff expressed support for Jerry Nadler:

Adam Schiff ✓
@RepAdamSchiff

There is nothing more important than family. Thinking of my friend and colleague @RepJerryNadler and his wife during this difficult time. His leadership has been crucial.

Jerry, we're keeping you and Joyce in our prayers as we continue our important work together.

twitter.com/repjerryadler...

(((Rep. Nadler))) ✓ @RepJerryNadler

Read my statement on missing part of the Senate Impeachment Trial on Monday because of a family health matter:

Washington, D.C. - Today, House Judiciary Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-NY), one of the designated House Managers for the Senate Impeachment Trial of President Trump, issued the following statement:

"In December, following the House Judiciary Committee markup of the Articles of Impeachment against President Donald J. Trump, my wife was admitted to the hospital where she was diagnosed with Pancreatic Cancer. She has undergone surgery and is taking further steps to address the spread of the cancer. On Monday, I will be in New York with her to meet with doctors, determine a path forward, and begin her treatment. I am sorry to miss some of the Senate Impeachment Trial, which is of critical importance to our democracy. I plan to return to Washington late Monday and appreciate the support of my colleagues and staff as I take this time to be with my wife and begin the long fight against her cancer."

***

♥ 54.5K 1:34 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 10.3K people are talking about this

Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.), who is retiring, will cast the first vote on witnesses later this week:

Louise Linton, the wife of the Treasury secretary, posted and then deleted a picture on Instagram in which she sided with Greta Thunberg over her own husband:

Olivia Nuzzi

@Olivianuzzi

🇺🇸 Louise Linton comes out against her own husband, Steve Mnuchin, to side with Greta Thunberg 🇺🇸

Earlier this week, Mnuchin said Thunberg could explain climate change, "after she goes and studies economics in college."

louiselinton

55 likes

🤍 9,937 9:13 PM - Jan 25, 2020

💬 2,469 people are talking about this

And the secretary of state used scripture to send a thinly veiled message to his critics:

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Kobe recalled the first time he saw his Team USA uniform in this tear-jerking interview from 2008:

Nick Zaccardi

@nzaccardi

A moment from NBC's coverage of the 2008 Olympics that I will always remember. Kobe Bryant telling Cris Collinsworth about the first time he received his USA uniform.

♡ 2,572 8:43 PM - Jan 26, 2020

💬 947 people are talking about this

A video of Bryant and his daughter Gigi breaking down an NBA game went viral:

neontaster
@neontaster

This video is all over the place and I just realized that he's explaining something to her and she finishes the sentence for him. When she starts speaking, they are mouth the same words. You can tell he's impressed.

♡ 31.8K 3:02 AM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 4,345 people are talking about this

In case you missed it, "Satan" interviewed "Trump's attorney Alan Dershowitz," played by Jon Lovitz, for the cold open of

"Saturday Night Live":

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Morning Mix: A tech company gave doctors free software — rigged to encourage them to prescribe opioids, prosecutors say
Date: Tuesday, January 28, 2020 5:31:16 AM

2020
THE CLIMATE
FROM The Washington Post

Inside the politics of climate change
This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives and the climate-curious alike.

Sign up

Powered by  LiveIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Morning Mix

Stories from all over.

NOxycodone pain pills prescribed for a patient with chronic pain lie on display.

A tech company gave doctors free software — rigged to encourage them to prescribe opioids, prosecutors say

Practice Fusion accepted $1 million in kickbacks from a major opioid manufacturer in exchange for boosting their sales, according to court documents filed Monday.

By Antonia Farzan • Read more »

A GOP lawmaker, the son of an Auschwitz survivor, compared doctors treating transgender children to Nazis. He regrets it.

Deutsch told The Washington Post late Monday that he did not intend to equate those crimes with the medical practices that would be affected by South Dakota House Bill 1057.

By Katie Shepherd • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

Earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choice

U.S. Bank

LEARN MORE

Powered by  LivelIntent

‘Vile man’: Mother of viral meme star orders Rep. Steve King to stop using her

son's image in campaign ad

Laney Griner, who's son is the popular meme "Success Kid," sent a cease-and-desist letter to King and his campaign Monday.

By Allyson Chiu • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

THE CLIMATE 2022

Inside the politics of climate change.

A new daily newsletter from Maxine Joselow.

The Washington Post

Sign up

Powered by LiveIntent

A cooler in the water led investigators to an alleged 'serial' baby-killer, now charged in five deaths over 9 years

Police say Paul Allen Perez killed five infants between 1992 and 2001, going entirely undetected until a fisherman's grim discovery put investigators on his trail.

By Meagan Flynn • Read more »

John Altobelli, coach killed with family and Bryant in helicopter crash, was 'Kobe of the junior college baseball world'

A celebrated sports figure in his own right, the longtime baseball coach of the Orange County College Pirates had grown close to Kobe Bryant as their daughters played basketball together.

By Teo Armus • Read more »

---

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Trailer for news and insight on political campaigns around the country, from David Weigel. 435 districts. 50 states. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Morning Mix | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Morning Mix or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Five reasons Trump is poised to get acquitted — but Watergate brought down Nixon
Date: Tuesday, January 28, 2020 9:54:57 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Five reasons Trump is poised to get acquitted — but Watergate brought down Nixon

Ken Starr says 'impeachment is hell'

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Ken Starr said Monday that “the rank criminality of the Nixon administration” necessitated the 37th president’s impeachment.

Speaking on the Senate floor in his capacity as President Trump’s defense lawyer, Starr held up the proceedings against Richard Nixon – not the Bill Clinton impeachment he’ll always be remembered for – as the gold standard.

He contrasted the House’s 410-to-4 vote authorizing a formal impeachment inquiry against Nixon in 1974 with the fact that no Republican lawmakers supported the Trump impeachment inquiry in October or his impeachment in December. Starr quoted Peter Rodino, the Democratic chairman of the House Judiciary Committee back then, saying that impeachment must be bipartisan to be accepted by the American people.

Trump's emissary added that the article of impeachment charging Nixon with abuse of power laid out "a deeply troubling story of numerous crimes – not one, not two, numerous crimes – carried out at the direction of the president himself." In contrast, Starr said, the article of impeachment charging Trump with abuse of power does not accuse him of breaking any specific statutes. Nixon resigned before the full House could impeach him, so he never faced a Senate trial.

"Importantly, President Nixon's own party was slowly but inexorably moving toward favoring the removal of their chosen leader from the nation's highest office – who had just won reelection by a landslide," Starr told the senators in a 54-minute presentation. "It bears emphasis: This was the first presidential impeachment in over 100 years. It also bears emphasis: It was powerfully bipartisan.

"Like war, impeachment is hell," he continued. "Those of us who lived through the Clinton impeachment, including members of this body, full well understand that a presidential impeachment is tantamount to domestic war. ... But it's filled with acrimony and it divides the country like nothing else. ... I respectfully submit that the Senate should close this chapter, this idiosyncratic chapter, on this increasingly disruptive act."

Democrats have hoped this process would become a Watergate redux. Lead House impeachment manager Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) has wondered aloud why GOP lawmakers aren't turning on the president. "Where," he's asked, "is Howard Baker?" Reacting to news about

John Bolton's book manuscript, Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) declared yesterday that this trial is unfolding "a little bit" like Watergate. "Every few days, there's another revelation and another revelation and another revelation, and the case gets stronger and stronger," he said yesterday afternoon during a break.

Thanks partly to the influence of longtime confidants like Roger Stone – who literally has a Nixon tattoo – Trump historically has appeared to identify more with Nixon than other Republican presidents, including Ronald Reagan and both Bushes. After all, Trump paid to run full-page ads in The Washington Post attacking Reagan's foreign policy in 1987.

But even the president's strongest critics in the Capitol, who argue that his alleged abuses are more egregious than Nixon's, concede privately that Trump will almost certainly be acquitted in a matter of days or weeks. I talked to several historians and veterans of that era, from the White House and Congress, about some of the differences. In addition to what Starr said, here are five other key differences between then and now:

Nixon and Trump. (AP and Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

1) Nixon didn't have Fox News.

“Nixon never would have been forced to resign if you existed in your current state back in 1972, '73, '74,” Fox News personality Geraldo Rivera told Fox News host Sean Hannity in 2018 amid Bob Mueller’s probe. “It’s too bad for Nixon because nobody like you existed then. I say that because I believe that our prime responsibility now is to unshackle the 45th president of the United States.”

It’s a worthwhile counterfactual to consider, especially as Fox’s morning show and prime-time hosts stayed almost unflappably loyal no matter how bad the news. The late Roger Ailes, who founded Fox News, was Nixon’s media consultant and created the channel as an alternative to the mainstream media that he felt had been too harsh on Nixon.

“There are other cultural and social factors, but our current media landscape is one of the key differences between the Nixon era and today,” said New York University’s Michael Koncewicz, the author of “They Said No to Nixon: Republicans Who Stood Up to the President’s Abuses of Power.”

“Nixon always told his advisers that they needed to build a ‘new establishment,’ and that included media,” Koncewicz explained. “For many Nixon loyalists, the lesson of Watergate was that they didn’t have the media on their side. Conservative media has played a crucial role in making sure that politicians and voters are loyal to Trump.”

Last night alone brought several fresh illustrations of just how much air cover Fox News provides for Trump, even after the kind of development that might have doomed previous presidents. For a moment, try to imagine the fallout if a former national security adviser in any previous White House wrote a book accusing the sitting president of linking military aid with investigations of his political challenger.

At the top of his show, Hannity declared that Trump’s defense team had obliterated the case against the president. “The Democrats’ pathetic case is getting blown to pieces,” he said. “They should be embarrassed. ... It’s time to put this to an end. It’s a charade.”

Then House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) came on and told Hannity that no witnesses need to be called because the July 25 rough transcript totally vindicates Trump.

During his show, Tucker Carlson likened Bolton to a snake for his “betrayal” of the president. “Will John Bolton testify? Who knows? Either way, it won't change the outcome: Trump will be acquitted,” Carlson reassured his viewers. “It's a totally stupid sideshow. We'll be embarrassed about it later.”

House Intelligence Committee ranking Republican Devin Nunes told Laura Ingraham that the National Security Council staff should be “quarantined across the Potomac” until damaging leaks for the president stop.

Lara Trump, the president's daughter-in-law, told Martha McCallum earlier in the evening that Democrats impeached Trump because of his economic success.

“The Five” co-host Greg Gutfeld claimed with a straight face that Bolton's book “vindicates Trump” because it shows he cares about corruption. “It's nothing,” Gutfeld said of the latest bombshell.

It's like this every day. There are several very serious journalists at the network, especially Chris Wallace, but they occasionally find themselves at loggerheads with pundits.

Koncewicz, who previously worked for the National Archives at the Nixon presidential library, pointed to some of the modern conservative media figures, including at Fox, who have defended Nixon, including Carlson. “There's definitely a split,” he said on Monday after watching Starr eviscerate Nixon. “Some are willing to throw him under the bus, but others view him as a martyr for the cause. I think a part of the conservative movement believed that Watergate was a political hit job against a president who won a landslide victory in 1972. That part of the movement has been emboldened by the similarities between Nixon and Trump.”

2) Nixon didn't have an economy this strong.

Ken Khachigian was a deputy special assistant to Nixon in the White House from 1970 until the end, and he stayed loyal to help the former president write his memoirs. When I asked if Nixon might have survived with Fox News, Khachigian said that's just part of the story.

“You're right on point, we would have had a much better chance of survival with a different media environment,” he emailed. “We were stuck, basically, with three networks, wires, newspapers, etc., with no safety valves to release our side of the story in counterpoint with any volume. If there had been the equivalent of Fox, as well as talk radio, social networking PLUS a majority in the Senate, we would have had more national leverage to get our message across. We had plenty of ammo, but fewer guns.”

But Khachigian noted that they had “other obstacles” – “namely poor timing by defending Israel in the Yom Kippur War, inflaming the Arab states resulting in the Arab Oil embargo. Gasoline prices shot up; there were gas lines, shortages resulting in basic nightmares that affected voters every day beginning in the fall of '73 through the winter. Finally, America was exhausted after the long and divisive domestic battles over the Vietnam War – with Nixon getting the brunt. And we, in the White House -- after slogging through the culture wars defending the unpopular policies of a wartime president, faced with the recession caused by international events, topped by Watergate and impeachment -- were weary of the battle as well. Many in the staff didn't have the stomach for it, and without the proper level of legal defense, there was little hope – adding it all up – of having staying power. There's more, but that's my elevator version.”

The new Washington Post-ABC News poll published yesterday shows Trump is in a much stronger position to get reelected than he was in the fall, and the economy is a big part of why. This president’s approval rating has gone up during the impeachment process.

Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) speaks to reporters on Aug. 7, 1974, after GOP leaders staged an intervention with Richard Nixon at the White House to push him to resign. The 1964 GOP nominee is flanked by Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott, left, and House GOP leader John Rhodes. Nixon announced his resignation the next day. (AP)

3) Nixon would have faced a much less loyal Senate if he had gone to trial.

Republicans were in the minority, but the institution was different back then.

“The rise of Fox News and its powerful hold on the Republican base is certainly an important factor in our increasingly tribal politics. But in my view, this Senate impeachment trial, and the failure of Republican senators to step up to their responsibility, reflects the long decline of the Senate, which has become an accelerating downward spiral in the last decade,” said Ira Shapiro, who served 12 years in senior Democratic staff roles in the Senate before serving as a trade negotiator in the Clinton administration. “If Nixon had been impeached, his trial would have occurred in a strong Senate that operated on the basis on bipartisanship, mutual respect and trust. ... Republicans would not have been blind defenders of the president; nor would they have simply fallen in line behind any Senate Republican leader.”

Shapiro wrote “The Last Great Senate: Courage and Statesmanship in Times of Crisis” about what the chamber was like in the 1970s. He said the Senate was eager to reassert its power against the “imperial presidencies” of both Lyndon Johnson and Nixon. He also notes that Majority Leader Mitch McConnell maintains much stronger control over his conference than Hugh Scott ever could have in 1974.

Shapiro has been most surprised during this trial about how retiring Republican senators who will never face voters again, besides Lamar Alexander (Tenn.), have not appeared to waver thus far on voting to call witnesses. “My fear has always been that the broken Senate would weaken to the point where it could not perform its ultimate responsibility: checking a corrupt and dangerous president who threatened our constitutional system and our democracy,” said Shapiro. “That nightmare scenario is upon us. It would only take a few Senate Republicans to prevent it.”

4) Lordy, there aren't tapes this time.

Presidential historian Tim Naftali, who as the director of the Nixon presidential library created the first objective exhibit on Watergate at the accompanying museum, said “the key variable” is the tapes.

“It is the damning nature of the White House tapes,” said Naftali, who wrote a chapter in “Impeachment: An American History,” an excellent summary of when the process has been used. “In August [1974], after he knew he would have to turn over the June 23, 1972 tape eventually, the president still delayed his resignation on the off chance that his defenders would swallow the revelation of the ‘smoking gun’ tape. But they didn't. I don't see that, even if they had had a friendly outlet at their disposal, their anger at being deceived would have been any less strong. This is not to say that relentless, shameless spin doesn't matter in shaping the pressures on elected officials, but even President ‘read-the-transcript’ Trump knows that his defenders like to believe that their faith in him is based on something.”

Acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, standing next to personal aide to the president Nicholas Luna, listens as Trump meets in November with the prime minister of Bulgaria in the Oval Office. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

5) Trump’s acting White House chief of staff is stonewalling to protect him.

“Al Haig was not looking out for Nixon the way Mick Mulvaney is looking out for Trump,” said Ray Locker, the author of “Haig’s Coup” and “Nixon’s Gamble.”

Locker says “one huge difference” is that the Trump White House is even less cooperative about requests for testimony and records than Nixon’s. “The Nixon White House did a terrible job of defending him,” he said. “You look at what they talked about during that time. They were not really hammering away. They made a half-hearted attempt to rebut John Dean when he testified. ... They just weren’t going after these people the way that Trump is. They cooperated more. Haig was giving them documents.”

In a statement yesterday, the attorney for Mulvaney, Bob Driscoll, dismissed the charges in Bolton’s book concerning the acting chief of staff’s knowledge about alleged actions taken toward Ukraine as having “more to do with publicity than the truth.”

“John Bolton never informed Mick Mulvaney of any concerns surrounding Bolton’s purported August conversation with the president,” Driscoll claimed. “Nor did Mr. Mulvaney ever have a conversation with the president or anyone else indicating that Ukrainian military aid was withheld in exchange for a Ukrainian investigation of Burisma, the Bidens, or the 2016 election.”

Senate trial: Trump's legal team continues defense

MORE FROM THE TRIAL:

-- Trump and his team are still trying to contain the damage from Bolton's book. Defense lawyer Alan Dershowitz dismissed the kerfuffle over the manuscript during a speech last night on the Senate floor. "Nothing in the Bolton revelations, even if true, would rise to the level of an abuse of power or an impeachable offense," he said.

-- Defense lawyer Jane Raskin said Rudy Giuliani was doing what every defense lawyer is supposed to do when he pursued leads in Ukraine to help the president. "Mr. Giuliani is just a minor player, that shiny object designed to distract you," she told senators. "You may not like his style, but one might argue that he is everything Clarence Darrow said: A defense lawyer must be outrageous, irreverent, blasphemous, a rogue, a renegade."

-- Defense lawyer Jay Sekulow argued that Democrats are really trying to remove Trump over policy differences, not for abusing power. "If the bar of impeachment has now reached that level, then for the sake of the republic, the danger that puts not just this body but our entire constitutional framework in is unmanageable," he said.

-- Starr's lecture to Senate Democrats about how presidential impeachments are terrible for democracy bewildered Democrats, via Mike DeBonis:

“He has given new meaning to the term irony — maybe even hypocrisy,” said Sen. Dick Blumenthal (D-Conn.). “It was really incredibly surreal to see him talking about impeachment as something that should be done with solemnity and restraint. If they had chosen a worse spokesman on that topic, they would have had to search very hard.”

-- Who is paying all these defense attorneys? Ann Marimow, Beth Reinhard and Josh Dawsey report:

“The Republican National Committee is picking up the tab for at least two of Trump's private attorneys [Sekulow and Raskin] in the ongoing trial, an arrangement that differs from the legal fund then-president Bill Clinton set up, only to see it fail to raise enough to cover his millions of dollars in bills before he left office. ... Because Trump is on trial as a result of his status as an officeholder or candidate, election law allows him to dip into campaign or party funds for his legal bills. ... [Dershowitz] said he will not accept payment for his work ... Starr declined to talk about his legal fees ... Bondi did not respond to request for comment about her salary.”

-- Over the past four months, congressional Republicans have floated no fewer than 29 defenses of Trump's actions on Ukraine. (JM Rieger rounds them up.)

-- “This is all a game,” Joe Biden told reporters last night in Iowa after the president's attorneys attacked him and his son. “Even if they bring me up — no one has said I've done anything that was wrong, period. What is there to defend?” (ABC)

Attorney General Bill Barr, left, and Noel Francisco, the solicitor general, wave from a Justice Department balcony to antiabortion activists marching toward the Supreme Court last Friday during the March for Life. (Jose Luis Magana/AP)

-- The bigger picture: Bolton’s book adds to the mounting evidence that the pressure Trump and his aides put on Ukraine was driven by a focus on his political rivals. (Paul Sonne and Roz Helderman connect the dots.)

-- The latest: Bolton reveals in the draft of his book that he expressed concern directly to Attorney General Bill Barr last year that Trump was effectively granting personal favors to the autocratic leaders of Turkey and China, the New York Times scoops: “Mr. Barr responded by pointing to a pair of Justice Department investigations of companies in those countries and said he was worried that Mr. Trump had created the appearance that he had undue influence over what would typically be independent inquiries, according to the manuscript. ... Mr. Bolton's account underscores the fact that the unease about Mr. Trump's seeming embrace of authoritarian leaders, long expressed by experts and his opponents, also existed among some of the senior cabinet officers entrusted by the president to carry out his foreign policy and national security agendas. ...

“Mr. Bolton wrote in the manuscript that Mr. Barr singled out Mr. Trump's conversations with [Xi Jinping] about the Chinese telecommunications firm ZTE, which agreed in 2017 to plead guilty and pay heavy fines for violating American sanctions on doing business with North Korea, Iran and other countries. A year later, Mr. Trump lifted the sanctions over objections from his own advisers and Republican lawmakers.

“Mr. Barr also cited remarks Mr. Trump made to [Recep Tayyip Erdogan] in 2018 about the investigation of Halkbank, Turkey's second-largest state-owned bank. The Justice Department was scrutinizing Halkbank on fraud and money-laundering charges for helping Iran evade sanctions imposed by the Treasury Department. Mr. Erdogan had been making personal appeals to Mr. Trump to use his authority to halt any additional enforcement against the bank. ... For months, it looked as though the unusual lobbying effort might succeed; but in October, the Justice Department indicted the bank for aiding Iran. The charges were seen in part as an attempt by the administration to show that it was taking a tough line on Turkey.”

-- Bolton, his publisher and his literary agency said

“categorically” in a joint statement that they did not leak the manuscript to the Times. The Times says it does not discuss sources and methods. Justice Department spokeswoman Kerri Kupec responded to the Times story: “There was no discussion of 'personal favors' or 'undue influence' on investigations, nor did Attorney General Barr state that the president's conversations with foreign leaders was improper.”

Venezuela's socialist president, Nicolás Maduro, waves a flag after delivering a speech from a balcony at his palace in Caracas last Thursday. (Carlos Becerra/Bloomberg News)

-- Follow the money: “An ally of Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro has hired a Washington lobbyist whose business has boomed under the Trump administration as part of a $12.5 million effort to ease sanctions and reset bilateral relations as the U.S.-backed campaign to oust the socialist leader stalls,” the

AP reports: “The Maduro government’s top lawyer, Inspector General Reinaldo Muñoz, hired lobbyist Robert Stryk’s Sonoran Policy Group as part of a larger contract he signed with Foley & Lardner, a law firm with offices in Washington. ... Muñoz’s contract with Foley, for a flat fee of $12.5 million, extends until May 10. Stryk’s share of the deal, as a consultant, is $2 million. Stryk, a winemaker and former Republican aide who unsuccessfully ran for mayor of Yountville, California, is one of the top lobbyists in Trump’s Washington.

“A former unpaid Trump campaign adviser on the West Coast, his firm, Sonoran Policy Group, had no reported lobbying from 2013 to 2016 but has billed more than $10.5 million to foreign clients since the start of 2017. Like Venezuela, many of the clients have bruised reputations in Washington or are under U.S. sanctions, such as the governments of Somalia, the Democratic Republic of Congo and Saudi Arabia’s Ministry of Interior, which signed a $5.4 million contract in May 2017. He also represents the scandal-plagued Isabel dos Santos, Africa’s richest woman, who is fighting allegations that she accumulated vast wealth through state loans brokered by her father, Angola’s former president.

“This month, Stryk’s name showed up in handwritten notes released by the House Intelligence Committee as part of the impeachment inquiry into Trump. [Lev Parnas] wrote a note to himself on stationery from the Ritz-Carlton hotel in Vienna saying ‘hire Robert Stryk lobbyist.’ ... One of Giuliani’s clients, Venezuelan businessman Alejandro Betancourt, hosted Trump’s personal attorney and Parnas at his castle outside Madrid last summer. ... Stryk did not immediately return a phone call requesting comment.”

Romney: It's 'increasingly likely' Republicans will call Bolton to testify

-- Notable commentary from The Post's opinion page:

- Barbara McQuade, University of Michigan law professor and former U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of Michigan: "Trump waived executive privilege when he called Bolton a liar."
- George Conway, conservative lawyer and husband to counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway: "Bolton's testimony would be devastating. Not even Republicans could look away."
- The Post's Editorial Board: "If senators fail to call Bolton, their trial is a farce."
- Jonathan Turley: "The revelations about Bolton's book may not be so devastating for Trump."
- Michael Gerson on Bolton: "Trump has finally met his match."

- Eugene Robinson: “If John Bolton doesn’t testify, it’s a coverup, not a trial.”
- Dana Milbank: “Trump’s lawyers suffer from Bolton-induced amnesia.”
- Catherine Rampell: “Our expectations for Republican senators are so low it’s astonishing.”
- Max Boot: “Republicans’ lack of outrage — even after Bolton’s smoking-gun evidence — is outrageous.”
- Jennifer Rubin: “Trump’s defense is irrelevant. Only Bolton matters now.”
- Harry Litman: “Why ‘too much delay’ is such a bogus argument against bringing in John Bolton.”
- Paul Waldman: “The Trump team’s latest impeachment strategy: Trolling.”

A blue banner with a white play button icon on the left. The text reads: "The Daily 202's BIG IDEA" in large white letters, followed by "Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player." in smaller white text.

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Netanyahu to Trump: 'I look forward to making history with you tomorrow'

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Trump's Middle East peace plan is expected to offer conditional statehood for Palestinians. Anne Gearan, Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report: "Trump described his proposals for Middle East peace in private meetings Monday with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and the veteran Israeli leader's challenger in upcoming elections, Benny Gantz. No Palestinians attended the White House preview of what is described as a highly detailed proposal for resolving the Israeli-Palestinian conflict that dates from Israel's founding in 1948. ... The package is expected to propose a redrawn border between Israel and the West Bank that would incorporate large Jewish settlements into Israel proper, while continuing some forms of Israeli security control over the territory Israel seized in 1967 and has occupied since. ... It is expected to offer limited autonomy to Palestinians in the West Bank and East Jerusalem that would increase over about a three-year timeline if Palestinian leadership undertook new political measures, renounced violence and took other steps in negotiation with Israel.”

-- Bibi withdrew his request for immunity from prosecution on corruption charges hours before parliamentary proceedings on the issue were set to begin. From the AP: “The Knesset was widely expected to reject Netanyahu’s immunity request, which would have dealt a massive blow to the prime minister ahead of the March 2 parliamentary elections — the third in less than a year. Netanyahu’s Likud party was planning to boycott Tuesday’s Knesset session. Netanyahu’s retraction paves the way for legal proceedings against him to go forward. He was indicted on counts of fraud, breach of trust and bribery in November in three separate cases.”

-- As fear over the spread of the coronavirus grows, the U.S. warned Americans to avoid all nonessential travel to China. Gerry Shih, Lena Sun, Simon Denyer and Joel Achenbach report: “In a rare public mea culpa, a Chinese official said Monday that the government had mishandled the early stages of the crisis, which has claimed at least 100 lives and infected more than 4,400 people. Wuhan Mayor Zhou Xianwang, speaking with Chinese state broadcaster CCTV, said his city did not release ‘timely and satisfactory’ information at the start of the epidemic, and he appeared to blame higher-ups in his chain of command. ... The mayor said 5 million people have already left his city, some before and some after the official quarantine. ...

“Late Monday, a top U.S. health official criticized Chinese authorities for not inviting U.S. and other international investigative agencies to join them in researching the new virus.

While China has been more transparent than it was during the 2003 SARS outbreak, U.S. officials are still getting their information through press briefings rather than from direct transfer of scientific data, said Anthony S. Fauci, director of the U.S. National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. Fauci pointed out that China's health minister, Ma Xiaowei, said publicly Sunday that the virus could be transmitted by an infected person even before symptoms appear. ... This could affect how the U.S. screens people traveling from China. ...

“Amid growing alarm about the disease’s fast spread, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is boosting staffing at 20 U.S. airports that have quarantine facilities. ...

Epidemiologists around the globe raced to understand how the virus spreads, how long it incubates before making a person ill, whether it can be contagious even when the person is asymptomatic, and how lethal it is. They said the public should not assume the worst about this outbreak. This virus does not appear to be as deadly as SARS or MERS, two similar coronaviruses that made the jump from animals to humans earlier this century and that were ultimately contained. ... In the United States, 110 people in 26 states are being tested for possible infection, but only five so far ... are confirmed to have the infection.”

-- Hong Kong and Russia announced dramatic restrictions on travel to and from China as governments across Asia struggle with an increasingly difficult dilemma: choosing between public health or economic vitality. Shih and Denyer report: “Do they stop people from traveling to their countries for business or vacation and risk a major hit to their economies or should they hope increased border screenings will prevent the epidemic from spreading further?

... But China's government can't afford to shut the economy down indefinitely — not least because its political legitimacy and its expensive system of societal control rest squarely on economic growth and tax revenue. ... Global stock markets took a sharp downturn Monday as investors grew increasingly anxious about the swift spread of the coronavirus beyond China. The Dow Jones industrial average plunged 454 points, or about 1.6 percent.”

-- A U.S. military plane crashed in Taliban territory in Afghanistan. Sayed Salahuddin and Susannah George report: “It was unknown how many people were on board or whether there were survivors. ... Taliban spokesman Zabiullah Mujahid claimed on Twitter that an ‘enemy intelligence aircraft’ crashed and subsequently told The Post that ‘our mujahideen [fighters] tactically crashed the plane.’ He did not explain what tactics were purportedly used to bring down the plane.”

-- U.S.-backed Afghan forces have been unable to reach the site of the crash. Afghan officials said bad weather and heavily mined roads have prevented forces from reaching the site more than 24 hours after the crash was first reported. U.S. officials have not said how many people were on board or whether there were survivors. (Sharif Hassan and Susannah George)

-- The U.S. dropped more munitions on Afghanistan last year than at any other time over the past decade. (Task & Purpose)

-- Syrian government forces launched a new attack against the final rebel-held pocket in northwestern Syria following a short- lived cease-fire. Sarah Dadouch and Asser Khattab report:

“Government troops started pushing westward this week from near the city of Aleppo, prompting panic and flight among residents on the rebel-held side of the province living in what they considered a relatively safe area. ... Various Turkish-backed rebel factions and Islamist groups have fortified themselves in Syria’s northwestern corner. These groups oppose Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, whose forces, backed by Russia and Iran, have been retaking territory across Syria. ... Syria’s official news agency SANA said Monday that the Syrian army had expanded its operations into western Aleppo in retaliation for ‘repeated assaults by terrorist organizations’ on residential neighborhoods in government-held Aleppo, which SANA said resulted in dozens of deaths and injuries.”

-- The State Department removed an NPR reporter from a trip with Mike Pompeo days after the secretary of state got into a dispute with another reporter from the news organization. Carol Morello reports:

“Michele Kelemen, a veteran State Department correspondent for NPR, was scheduled to be one of a handful of reporters flying on Pompeo’s plane to report on his week-long trip to Europe and Central Asia starting Wednesday. It was Kelemen’s turn in a rotation for a ‘pool’ seat on the plane representing radio reporters, and she got the needed visas. But ... Kelemen was notified Sunday that she would not accompany Pompeo on his trip to five countries including Ukraine. ... Kelemen was given no formal reason for being kicked off. ... She was dropped after Pompeo got into a contentious exchange with NPR host Mary Louise Kelly and issued a statement accusing her of lying to him.”

Radar shows fatal flight path of helicopter that killed Kobe Bryant

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- "The helicopter pilot flying Kobe Bryant, the basketball star's daughter and six other passengers Sunday grappled with poor weather, asking at one point for special permission to fly by sight in worse-than-normal visibility, but he displayed no signs of concern in his communications with air traffic controllers," Ian Duncan, Luz Lazo, Justin George and Rick Maese report. "Shortly after he got special clearance to continue through controlled airspace, he veered from Highway 101 below and crashed into the Calabasas, Calif., hills. ... On Monday, the investigation got underway, with a team from the National Transportation Safety Board arriving at a crash site guarded against curious eyes by sheriff's deputies on horseback. ... In air traffic control records reviewed by The Washington Post, the pilot requested permission to fly under the special conditions near Burbank Airport. [National Transportation Safety Board board member Jennifer] Homendy said the pilot circled for 12 minutes until the approval came. On the records reviewed by The Post, the Burbank controller responds that it will be a few moments and asks the pilot to hold. Seconds later, the controller tells the pilot that he can plan to transition to the north side of Van Nuys Airport. ...

“Ara Zobayan, the pilot at the controls, was experienced at flying in the area and served as Bryant’s pilot for a number of years, according to the director of a Los Angeles aviation trade group.

Zobayan had held a commercial license since 2007 and was qualified to fly in bad weather under regulations known as instrument flight rules, according to FAA records. He was also qualified to teach people to fly in those conditions, indicating that he had significant experience.”

-- The U.S. attorney in Manhattan said that prosecutors and FBI officials handling the Jeffrey Epstein sex abuse investigation had reached out to Britain’s Prince Andrew, but the royal who has faced allegations related to Epstein had so far provided “zero cooperation.” Matt Zapotosky and William Booth report: “U.S.

Attorney Geoffrey Berman made the assertion outside of Epstein’s New York City mansion at a news conference meant to raise awareness about a state law that provides a window for those sexually abused as children to sue their abuser even if the statute of limitations has expired. In response to questions from reporters, Berman said the investigation into Epstein’s abuse and those who might have facilitated it was ongoing — even though he killed himself while in federal custody on sex trafficking charges last year. As a part of that case, Berman said investigators had reached out to Prince Andrew. One of Epstein's accusers, Virginia Roberts Giuffre, claims she was paid by Epstein for sexual encounters with the prince when she was 17 years old. Buckingham Palace did not immediately comment on the developments."

-- A second Harvey Weinstein accuser took the witness stand to describe an alleged 2006 sexual assault. Shayna Jacobs reports:

"Mimi Haleyi, 42, said Weinstein forced her into his bedroom after she accepted what she thought was a friendly social invitation to meet at his condominium in New York's SoHo neighborhood on July 10, 2006. ... Haleyi, who said she rejected prior advances by the powerful movie producer, testified that the visit quickly became a nightmare. ...

Defense lawyer Damon Cheronis suggested Haleyi was trying to exploit a relationship with Weinstein to help her career. She sent him her friends' scripts and pitched him her own production called 'Trash TV,' while checking in with him periodically about whether he had any production gigs for her. ... Weinstein is charged with a criminal sex act for allegedly forcing oral sex on Haleyi. He also faces rape charges related to aspiring actress Jessica Mann, who says Weinstein assaulted her at a Doubletree Hotel in Manhattan in 2013."

-- The Supreme Court allowed the Trump administration to begin implementing "wealth test" rules making it easier to deny immigrants residency or U.S. entry based on whether they have used or could use public-assistance programs. Robert Barnes and Maria Sacchetti report: Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. "was joined by conservative Justices Clarence Thomas, Samuel A. Alito Jr., Neil M. Gorsuch and Brett M. Kavanaugh in lifting the injunction. All four of the court's liberal justices — Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Stephen G. Breyer, Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan — noted their disagreement. ... Under the new policy, immigrants would be suspect if they are in the United States legally and use public benefits — such as Medicaid, food stamps or housing assistance — too often or are deemed likely to someday rely on them. The new criteria provide 'positive' and 'negative' factors for immigration officials to weigh as they decide on green-card applications. Negative factors include if a person is unemployed, dropped out of high school or is not fluent in English.”

-- Immigration judges are quitting or retiring early because of the Trump administration. From the Los Angeles Times: “Immigration Judge Charles Honeyman was nearing retirement, but he vowed not to leave while Trump was president and risk being replaced by an ideologue with an anti-immigration agenda. ... He tried to ignore demands to speed through cases without giving them the consideration he believed the law required. But as the pressure from Washington increased, Honeyman started having stomach pains and thinking, ‘There are a lot of cases I’m going to have to deny that I’ll feel sick over.’ This month, after 24 years on the bench, the 70-year-old judge called it quits. Dozens of other judges concerned about their independence have done the same. ... The precise number of judges who have quit under duress is unclear. Kathryn Mattingly, a spokeswoman for the courts, said a total of 45 left their positions in the fiscal year that ended last September, but she declined to provide a breakdown of how many of those were deaths, planned retirements or promotions to the immigration appeals board. More information may become available Wednesday, when a House judiciary subcommittee is scheduled to hear testimony on the state of judicial independence and due process in the country's 68 immigration courts."

-- A British man became the fifth immigrant to die in ICE custody since October. The 39-year-old man died at the Baker County Detention Center in Florida, and officials said the preliminary cause of death appeared to be "self-inflicted strangulation." The case, however, remains under investigation. (BuzzFeed News)

-- An Iranian PhD student who planned on studying at Michigan State University was deported after being detained by Customs and Border Protection officers at the Detroit airport. Alireza Yazdani's removal comes a week after another Iranian who'd arrived on a student visa was deported in Boston. (CNN)

-- Wolfgang Halbig, a notorious tormentor of the parents of the Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting victims, was arrested in Florida. From the NYT: "Halbig, a former contributor to Infowars, the online and radio show hosted by the far-right provocateur Alex Jones, has spread false claims for years that the [shooting] was an elaborate government hoax aimed at confiscating Americans' firearms. When challenged or confronted by Sandy Hook families, Mr. Halbig has released their personal information, taunted them or emailed them photographs of what he claimed were their dead children 'all grown up.' ... [Halbig] was arrested after a complaint filed by Leonard Pozner, whose son Noah, 6, died in the shooting. The arrest affidavit said that Mr. Halbig repeatedly emailed Mr. Pozner's Social Security number, date of birth and other information to a long list of recipients. ... Mr. Halbig was released after posting a $5,000 cash bond and will appear in court in late February. The charge carries a maximum penalty of a year in prison.”

Elizabeth Warren waits to speak at a gala hosted by the Scott County Democrats in Bettendorf, Iowa, on Saturday. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

2020 WATCH:

-- Elizabeth Warren bet big on Iowa. Will it be enough? Annie Linskey and Holly Bailey report: “Warren officials appear to be lowering expectations for Iowa. Campaign manager Roger Lau issued a memo Friday warning against ‘breathless media narratives’ emerging from the caucuses. ... In urban areas, her team assigned one organizer to a single county, while in rural regions, each organizer oversaw two or three counties at most. Meanwhile, staff members for other candidates were sometimes assigned as many as a dozen counties. ... Although Pete Buttigieg, the former mayor of South Bend, Ind., is employing a similar type of one-on-one organizing, Democrats not affiliated with either campaign say Warren's organizers have simply been at it longer. ... Still, all this attention to detail has not defused the biggest question Warren faces as a candidate.

Organizers mounting door-to-door efforts or reaching out to voters in remote locations regularly hear questions about whether she could beat Trump.”

-- A group of Democratic operatives are scrambling to fund an effort to attack Bernie Sanders should he win Iowa and New Hampshire.

From the Daily Beast: “Big money Democrats have shown reluctance at funding such an effort, which could consist of ads attacking Sanders, and institutions associated with Democratic politics have largely shied away from being part of any campaign that goes after the senator, either out of fear over the backlash or growing acceptance at the prospect of him becoming the party's nominee. ... According to FEC records, the sum total of reported independent expenditures opposing Sanders—directly and by name—was just $32.72 as of Monday. And that was spent by Club for Growth, a conservative group that has also run digital ads that seem designed to actually boost Sanders among liberals and which supplemented those spots with a TV ad on Monday. That may very well change in the coming days. The organization Democratic Majority for Israel, which is run by pollster Mark Mellman, is buying tens of thousands of dollars in airtime in Iowa, according to documents filed with the [FCC] on Monday. ... The group's ads, it told the FCC, will focus on ‘electability in the General Election of potential Democratic nominee’—a common [charge] lobbied against the Vermonter.”

-- Impeachment and Iowa mean New Hampshire has largely been ignored by the Democratic candidates lately. In recent days, voters have been more likely to see a campaign surrogate than the actual candidates stumping in the state. Other than Buttigieg, most of the candidates in the top tier have had five or fewer events in New Hampshire since the start of the year. (AP)

-- Rep. Doug Collins (R-Ga.) will wage a primary challenge against appointed GOP Sen. Kelly Loeffler. Rachael Bade reports: The move will probably trigger “an intraparty Republican brawl between a top defender of [Trump] and a business executive who was appointed to the post by Gov. Brian Kemp. Collins, a four-term Republican from northern Georgia, had lobbied hard for the position when Sen. Johnny Isakson announced his retirement last year. Kemp, however, chose Loeffler, against the advice of Trump, who backed Collins for the job. ... The news comes as Democrats are eyeing Georgia as a top 2020 target in their bid to retake the Senate. Since the race would constitute a special election to finish Isakson’s last two years in office, it would not include a primary, allowing multiple candidates of both parties to run for the position.”

-- Everytown for Gun Safety, a gun-control group co-founded by Mike Bloomberg, announced a $60 million spending plan for the 2020 elections that targets Trump and other officials who have resisted new gun regulations. Michael Scherer reports: “A memo laying out plans for the spending names North Carolina Gov. Roy Cooper and Pennsylvania Attorney General Josh Shapiro, both Democrats, as allies whom the group will defend. It names two Republican senators, Cory Gardner (Colo.) and Martha McSally (Ariz.), as targets for defeat.”

-- A local fissure in Pennsylvania politics is highlighting a national dilemma for the Democratic Party as it tries to address the environmental demands of the liberal activists while reaching out to voters who rely on the manufacturing industry. Tim Craig reports: “The hulking petrochemical plant is being constructed 30 miles from his city, but Pittsburgh Mayor Bill Peduto worries it's just the sort of polluting industry that could threaten residents' health and drive away the white-collar jobs of the future. ... But here near the developing complex on the banks of the Ohio River, local Democratic official Earl ‘Butch’ Shamp looks downstream at Peduto and sees the kind of politician he says is killing the Democratic Party in large swaths of southwestern Pennsylvania. ... The petrochemical plant has become a political crucible. ... Peduto said he is leaning toward Bloomberg and Buttigieg because the energy policy positions of [Sanders] and [Warren] — who support a ban on fracking — ‘would be devastating to the Rust Belt.’ Conversely, Biden’s positions, he said, ‘are more like Donald Trump’s than they are a pragmatic approach toward the middle.’ ... In Beaver County, Shamp said Democratic residents feel Peduto cares more about ‘building bike lanes’ than workers’ ability to feed their families. ‘Democrats have just gone way, way too far to the left,’ said Shamp, 61, who voted for Trump in 2016 and probably will again.”

-- Rapid change is roiling Virginia’s Republicans. Gregory Schneider reports: “One Republican delegate warns that Virginia is splitting in two. Another would support returning liberal Arlington and Alexandria to the District of Columbia. Lawmakers in West Virginia have offered to annex rural Frederick County, outside Winchester, to liberate it from its rapidly urbanizing home. ...

There are 'dramatically different values' in Arlington and Alexandria than other parts of Virginia, [Republican Del. David A.] LaRock said. ... But the problem for Republicans is that the values LaRock sees in Arlington and Alexandria have spread throughout the state."

-- A federal court ruled that Arizona's ban on mail-in ballots is illegal and appeared to be part of an effort to suppress black, Hispanic and Native American votes. From the Guardian: "Four years ago, Arizona Republicans made it a felony, punishable by prison time, for third-party groups to collect mail-in ballots during elections — a process often called 'ballot harvesting.' ... 'The adverse impact on minority communities is substantial. Without 'access to reliable and secure mail services,' and without reliable transportation, many minority voters 'prefer instead to give their ballots to a volunteer', ' the court said. And Hispanics and Native Americans make up nearly 37% of the state's population — promising to be a key demographic in this year's presidential election."

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

There was much discussion on social media about Starr's sartorial choices:

Doug Mills ✓
@dougmillsnyt

Kenneth Starr, attorney for President Donald Trump, arrives in the Capitol as the Impeachment trial continues.

♥ 508 6:04 PM - Jan 27, 2020

💬 596 people are talking about this

And many pointed to the glaring hypocrisy between Starr in 1999 and Starr in 2020:

 Ari Melber
@AriMelber

Starr vs. Starr - I'd say we made this, but really he did

6,208 12:26 AM - Jan 28, 2020

2,942 people are talking about this

From a former Republican National Committee chairman:

 Michael Steele
@MichaelSteele

Right now even GOP Senators are looking at Ken Starr and thinking "WTF?!"

29.1K 6:42 PM - Jan 27, 2020

5,799 people are talking about this

Seemingly trying to bolster her standing as Doug Collins prepared a primary bid, Georgia's newly appointed senator ripped Mitt Romney for seeking witnesses. This is notable because, among other things, Loeffler was one of Romney's major donors when he ran for president in 2012:

Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-Tenn.), who spent last week attacking a Purple Heart recipient, endorsed Loeffler over Collins:

Sen. Joni Ernst (R-Iowa) said the quiet part out loud and suggested that the Trump attacks on Biden could hurt him in her state's caucuses:

 Glenn Kessler
@GlennKesslerWP

Maybe read a few fact checks first. Much of this stuff was debunked months ago. twitter.com/alanhe/status/...

Alan He  @alanhe

ERNST: "IA caucuses are this next Monday evening. And I'm really interested to see how this discussion today informs and influences the Iowa caucus voters, those Demcaucus goers. Will they be supporting VP Biden at this point?"

H/T @JaxAlemany

 130 12:33 AM - Jan 28, 2020

 56 people are talking about this

And a Kentucky Republican appeared to forget that Trump blocked

Bolton from testifying before the House:

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “In the business world, when I was back in the business world, when a deal was tough, people would jokingly refer to it as, ‘This is tougher than Israel and the Palestinians getting together,’ ” Trump joked as he welcomed Benjamin Netanyahu for an Oval Office briefing on his Middle East peace plan. (Anne Gearan, Steve Hendrix, Ruth Eglash)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

A 90-year-old Auschwitz survivor returned to the camp 75 years after its liberation:

Ninety-year-old survivor returns to Auschwitz 75 years later

Seth Meyers reviewed the accumulating evidence against the president:

Riffing off Bolton's book, Trevor Noah said the president seems to have many "disgruntled" former employees and wondered why no one ever seems to leave the White House feeling "gruntled":

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Senate Republicans move the goal posts again after Bolton's book and Dershowitz's defense of Trump
Date: Wednesday, January 29, 2020 9:47:51 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Senate Republicans move the goal posts again after Bolton's book and Dershowitz's defense of Trump

Trump defense attorney Alan Dershowitz departs the East Room of the White House on Tuesday after President Trump unveiled his Middle East peace plan proposal. (Joshua Roberts/Reuters)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: After Alan Dershowitz helped convince a jury to find him not guilty on two murder charges, O.J. Simpson wrote a book entitled “If I Did It.” The former football star outlined a “hypothetical” account of the fatal stabbings of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and Ron Goldman. “No matter how I write this, hypothetical or not, I’m aware that people are going to believe what they want to believe,” Simpson said in an interview for a special on Fox.

As a member of President Trump’s defense team at the impeachment trial, Dershowitz used some variation of “even if” 10 separate times during his presentation to senators on Monday night. The emeritus professor at Harvard Law School – who has also defended clients like Jeffrey Epstein, Mike Tyson and Michael Milken – used that “even if” construction as he advanced provocative legal theories that are outside the mainstream of constitutional jurisprudence. Most notably, Dershowitz argued that it would not constitute abuse of power even if the House impeachment managers proved that Trump directly conditioned the delivery of military aid to Ukraine and a White House meeting for Volodymyr Zelensky on Kiev authorities announcing an investigation into Joe and Hunter Biden. Dershowitz did this while dismissing the forthcoming book by former national security adviser John Bolton, in which he reportedly writes that Trump told him of just such a linkage.

“Nothing in the Bolton revelations – even if true – would rise to the level of an abuse of power or an impeachable offense,” Dershowitz declared. “Even if the president, any president, were to demand a quid pro quo as a condition for sending aid to a foreign country – obviously a highly disputed matter in this case – that would not by itself constitute an abuse of power,” he continued. “Quid pro quo alone is not a basis for abuse of power. It’s part of the way foreign policy has been operated by presidents since the beginning of time.”

After months of repeating over and over that there was “no quid pro quo,” a chorus of Republican lawmakers are now parroting Dershowitz’s line of defense. The GOP conference seems increasingly prepared to stipulate that there might have been a quid pro quo as a rationale to vote against calling Bolton as a witness. After all, if there was a quid pro quo but that's not impeachable, or even inappropriate, then Bolton's testimony might be considered moot.

"For the sake of argument, one could assume everything attributable to John Bolton is accurate and still the House case would fall well below the standards to remove a president from office," Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) said in a statement this morning.

Compare that to what Graham told Axios in October. "If you could show me that, you know, Trump actually was engaging in a quid pro quo, outside the phone call, that would be very disturbing," he said then.

"It would be troubling if any president did a quid pro quo with tax dollars," Sen. Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.) said on Oct. 23 after then-acting ambassador to Ukraine Bill Taylor testified, "but so far we don't have evidence that's happened."

Asked about Bolton's book yesterday, Cramer told reporters: "I think he sounds like a lot of the other witnesses, frankly. I don't know that he's got a lot new to add to it."

What GOP senators have said about John Bolton testifying

There was a very similar moving of the goal posts during special counsel Bob Mueller's probe of Russian interference in the 2016 election, as Trump defenders went from insisting that there were no Trump campaign Russian contacts to arguing that there was nothing wrong with talking to the Russians.

"What I can say is that Professor Dershowitz said last night that even if the president asked for the aid to be delayed for, you know, the fact that he wanted an investigation of corruption, that's not an impeachable offense," Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) told Wolf Blitzer on CNN. Paul added that it doesn't matter if the investigation Trump demanded was into the Bidens or anyone else. "They think that rules should be written, that OK, you're allowed to investigate corruption, you're allowed to withhold the aid for corruption, unless that corruption involves a Democrat," Paul said. "No one could write a rule that way. That would be saying to the local Republican sheriff, you're allowed to go after crime, unless your Democratic opponent's son commits the crime.”

Fox News anchor Neil Cavuto asked this question to Sen. John Cornyn (R-Tex.): “If the president did tell John Bolton that, indeed, there was a relationship between getting that information on the Bidens and aid to the country, that wouldn't be enough for you to say, let's look into this more?”

“No,” Cornyn answered. “Presidents always leverage foreign aid, particularly here, where there's concerns about corruption. ... We basically know what the facts are. That's what the House managers said: They said the facts are uncontested.”

“In my view, additional witnesses are not necessary,” said fellow Texas Republican Sen. Ted Cruz. “The president was entirely justified in asking for an investigation of corruption concerning Ukraine and potentially Hunter Biden and Joe Biden.”

-- When acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney made a similar argument in the fall, essentially saying that presidents do quid pro quos all the time, he quickly walked it back. Mulvaney hasn't been back to the briefing room since then. He refused to comply with a subsequent subpoena, citing an order from Trump, one of the grounds for the second article of impeachment pertaining to obstruction of Congress.

-- Dershowitz also posited during his spirited defense of Trump that impeachment requires the president to violate a specific criminal statute. “Now, here I'm making, I think, a very important point: Even if the Senate were to conclude that a technical crime is not required for impeachment, the critical question remains,” Dershowitz said. “Do abuse of power and obstruction of Congress constitute impeachable offenses? The relevant history answers that question clearly in the negative.”

-- “Lawyers and academics strongly disagreed with Dershowitz,” Rachael Bade, Karoun Demirjian, Mike DeBonis and Ann Marimow report. “Frank O. Bowman, a University of Missouri law professor and author of the book ‘High Crimes and Misdemeanors,’ said Dershowitz’s view is out of step with mainstream constitutional scholars and historians. ‘In making this argument, Alan is essentially alone, and I mean alone,’ Bowman said Tuesday, accusing Republicans of seizing on Dershowitz’s argument because it gives them cover not to convict a president in their own party. ‘What Dershowitz did yesterday was stand up and be a guy with Harvard attached to his name and spout complete nonsense that’s totally unsupported by any scholarship, anywhere.’

“Indeed, a statutory crime has never been required for impeachment, dating back to the 14th century, when the British Parliament invented the procedure as a mechanism for dealing with abuses of royal power. The American framers wrote ‘high crimes and misdemeanors’ into the U.S. Constitution, he noted, to include noncriminal abuses of power, and since then, federal judges and a U.S. senator have been impeached for noncriminal conduct.”

What Alan Dershowitz and Ken Starr used to say about impeachment

-- The Trump team is asserting an extraordinarily far-reaching view of the presidential prerogative. It fits with a pattern: Trump himself has repeatedly said Article II of the Constitution lets him do whatever he wants. It doesn't, of course.

Trump's surrogates said Tuesday on television that abuse of power and obstruction of Congress are not impeachable offenses. "It does not make any difference at the end of the day, as Professor Dershowitz explained so well yesterday,” said Rep. Mike Johnson (R-La.), a member of Trump's impeachment defense team. “Abuse of power and obstruction of Congress are not impeachable offenses, and it doesn't really matter what anybody says.” CNN’s Jake Tapper pushed back, noting that they were considered impeachable offenses during the impeachment proceedings against Richard Nixon and Bill Clinton, but Johnson was unbowed.

There are major implications of what these senators are saying vis-a-vis Ukraine – and the precedent this will set. They’re saying abusing power is not grounds to remove a president from office, which effectively green lights this and future presidents to leverage their public powers for private political benefit.

-- Trump’s other defense attorneys took other tacks as they wrapped up their arguments. Jay Sekulow dismissed Bolton’s “unpublished manuscript” as “unsourced,” even though the source is Bolton. “If you want to call that evidence — I don’t know what you’d call that — I’d call it inadmissible,” he said. Sekulow maintains that “the president at all times acted with perfect, legal, authority.” White House Counsel Pat Cipollone suggested that, even if senators think Trump abused his office, the decision should be left to voters since this is an election year. “The election is only months away,” he said. “The American people are entitled to choose their president.”

But the rest of the defense team has also joined Dershowitz out on the limb he’s climbed out on. The White House hosted a conference call for reporters last night to discuss trial strategy. When “a source on the president’s legal team” – as they are required to be identified – was asked about witnesses, this person answered: “Well, I don't think that anything that we've said strengthens the case for witnesses. In fact, Professor Dershowitz made it very clear last night that even if everything that came out in the New York Times article were true, there would not be an impeachable offense there.”

Jay Sekulow says John Bolton manuscript 'inadmissible' in impeachment trial

WITNESS WATCH:

-- In a closed-door meeting after Trump's defense wrapped up, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) told colleagues he doesn't yet have the votes to block witnesses. But he and his leadership team feel they're making progress toward that goal. Erica Werner, Seung Min Kim and Rachael Bade report: “Just four GOP senators would have to join with Democrats ... An initial vote to allow witnesses, expected Friday, does not ensure witnesses would actually be called, since the Senate would have to subsequently hold separate votes on summoning each individual witness. And Trump's ultimate acquittal still remains all but assured, since a two-thirds vote in the GOP-run Senate would be required to remove him. ... Democrats strongly oppose calling either of the Bidens or agreeing to any witness 'trade,' as suggested by some Republicans. Other plans floated by GOP senators have drawn similar Democratic resistance, including the idea of getting the White House to release Bolton's manuscript for senators to review. ...

“Several Republican senators up for reelection this November and facing tough campaigns — including Sens. Cory Gardner (R-Colo.) and Thom Tillis (R-N.C.) — indicated during the meeting that they were ready to vote against witnesses and proceed to the final vote ... The defense rested at 2:54 p.m. But a few senators lingered [in the chamber], and those huddles showed the tension still left in the room. In chairs in the back, reserved for staffers, Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.) sat with freshman Sen. Kyrsten Sinema (D-Ariz.), a moderate not prone to listening to leadership. Joe Manchin III (W.Va.), a Democrat always in the mix, first huddled with moderate Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) before moving on to a long one-on-one discussion with Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), another key moderate who had previously been talking with Sen. Pat Roberts (R-Kan.). And, finally, Collins walked over to join a Republican scrum led by Sen. Rob Portman (R-Ohio), whose back-row desk has long been seen as a pivotal place, given his Bush-era political lineage.”

-- Three moderate Democrats – Manchin, Sinema and Alabama's Doug Jones – are considering voting to acquit Trump but each supports witnesses. Politico reports: “All three senators remain undecided ... But they could end up with a creative solution. One or more senators may end up splitting their votes, borrowing a move from Rep. Jared Golden \(D-Maine\), who voted for the abuse of power charge but against the one on obstruction of Congress. ... Manchin insisted Tuesday he hasn't figured out where he will come down. And won't until the trial ends. ... There's no chatter in the caucus about anyone other than Jones, Sinema or Manchin ... although a number of other Democratic senators say they are still undecided."

-- Manchin said this morning that Hunter Biden could be a relevant witness. "I think so, I really do," the West Virginia Democrat said on MSNBC's "Morning Joe."

-- The Des Moines Register's editorial board rips Sen. Joni Ernst (R-Iowa) for her conduct during the trial and calls on her to vote for witnesses: "She might want to contemplate whether the process, and her comments, will influence Iowa voters when they go to the polls in November to decide whether she deserves a second term. Then there was her response in mid-January after the nonpartisan Government Accountability Office determined the White House violated the law when it withheld nearly $400 million in assistance to Ukraine ... Ernst dismissed the GAO findings as 'moot' because the White House did eventually provide the aid to Ukraine. ... The message from the junior senator seems to be: It's OK to break the law as long as you later abide by it."

Fox News' shifting tone on John Bolton

HAPPENING TODAY:

-- Putting the lawyers on trial: Senators plan to use their chance to pose written questions to press the counsels from both sides about their personal involvement at pivotal moments in the process. Karoun Demirjian, Seung Min Kim and Rachael Bade preview what to expect: “Senators have up to 16 hours, divided over two days beginning Wednesday, to pose questions to either the House managers or the Trump defense team. The lawyers will be given up to five minutes to respond to each query. Each side faces a balancing act in its allotted time. Senate Republicans must weigh the desires of moderates, who want to ask factual questions that could help determine whether to vote to call witnesses, against those of Trump loyalists, who want to pose questions that will allow defense lawyers to double down on attacks against Democrats ...

“For Democrats, the chief objective is ensuring that their questions create an opportunity for House managers to respond to the Trump team’s arguments. ... But many Democrats also want to use their time to challenge Trump’s team on what they believe are a series of misrepresentations — including how much his lawyers knew about Bolton’s assertions that Trump held up Ukraine aid to secure an investigation of the Biden family, when they were claiming there was no quid pro quo. ... Senators may direct questions at representatives on either side, but they cannot select which manager from the prosecution or lawyer from the defense answers them ... But part of the allure of turning the spotlight on lawyers is that neither side has at their disposal the testimony of fact witnesses they believe are central to the case.”

-- Former Rudy Giuliani associate Lev Parnas cannot attend the trial because his ankle monitor prevents him from getting through security. Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) gave Parnas tickets to the proceeding, but he won’t go after a federal judge denied his request to remove his monitor. (Shayna Jacobs)

-- Giuliani told CBS News that he’d love to testify during the trial

if he can get clearance from the White House. Don't hold your breath. The president's personal lawyer also said Bolton never told him he had a problem with the way he was doing business with Ukraine. "He's a personal friend, I thought," Giuliani said. "This is the only conclusion I can come to and it's a harsh one and I feel very bad about it: He's a backstabber."

-- Oleksandr Danylyuk, the former chairman of Ukraine's National Security and Defense Council, tells the Daily Beast that Bolton was the only person in the Trump administration he trusted to help secure a path forward between the two countries. Danylyuk claims to have maintained constant contact with Bolton in an attempt to secure a meeting between Zelensky and Trump – conversations that he says included reassurances that the U.S. would not freeze aid to Ukraine.

-- The Energy Department released a trove of documents related to former secretary Rick Perry's Ukraine dealings. The documents show the department applauding Ukraine for its handling of corruption last May. But the new records don't cover how Trump allegedly began pushing Perry in a different direction: to work with Giuliani to pursue a deal with Ukraine that would help the president politically. (CNN)

Senate trial: Trump's legal team finishes defense

-- Trump's legal team spent very little time trying to vouch for the legitimacy of the Ukraine conspiracy theories that the president pressed Zelensky to investigate. Aaron Blake calls this a gaping hole in Trump's defense: "To the extent that Trump's team tried to argue that the investigations were legitimate, it focused mostly on the idea that Hunter Biden's employment at a Ukrainian gas company was problematic. It spent considerably less time arguing for the theory that Trump actually raised ... on their July 25 phone call: that [Joe Biden] sought to help his son by pushing out Ukraine's top prosecutor. Ditto the other investigation Trump sought. In fact, Trump's legal team spent literally zero time talking about the one involving the cybersecurity firm CrowdStrike and a server that was supposedly in Ukraine. Trump's team didn't utter the word 'CrowdStrike' once in three days."

-- House Democrats are using Ken Starr's arguments to challenge the Trump administration's position that Congress is not entitled to grand jury records. Ann Marimow reports: “On Monday, Starr, the former independent counsel who is part of Trump’s team, reminded senators they do not sit as jurors and are in fact a ‘court.’ ... Trump administration lawyers have been arguing the opposite in a pending lawsuit, House lawyers told the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit in a new filing Tuesday. In court, the Justice Department has argued that a Senate impeachment trial is not a ‘judicial proceeding’ and therefore not exempt from secrecy rules that shield grand jury materials from disclosure. ‘That argument has now been contradicted by the president’s counsel’s statements to the Senate, which confirm that the Senate sits as a ‘court’ rather than a ‘legislative chamber’ during an impeachment trial,’ according to the filing.”

-- Bolton has become a target of the pro-Trump Internet. Isaac Stanley-Becker dissects the anatomy of a smear: “The vilification of Bolton — branding him as a traitor and member of the ‘deep state’... — made use of misleading text as well as eye-catching memes. It moved from anonymous Twitter accounts with a few dozen followers to prime-time hosts on Fox News with an audience of hundreds of thousands. Finally, it made its way to Capitol Hill, when [Rand Paul] described the eyewitness to activity at the heart of the president’s impeachment trial as a ‘disgruntled, fired employee who now has a motive, a multimillion-dollar motive, to inflame the situation.’”

-- Notable commentary from The Post’s opinion page:

- Kathryn Railsback, the oldest daughter of the late Thomas Railsback: “Senators confronting impeachment can learn from my father's example in Watergate.”

- Dana Milbank: “Trump’s defense, lost in space.”
- Stephen Stromberg: “Trump’s lawyers only have self-defeating arguments on the Bolton bombshell.”
- Jennifer Rubin: “Republicans are trapped, thanks to Nancy Pelosi.”
- Kathleen Parker: “Bolton isn’t just selling books. He’s saving his legacy.”
- Alexandra Petri: “I’m very worried about this president. Buy my book to find out why!”
- Marc Thiessen: “Senate Republicans will set a dangerous precedent if they vote to hear from Bolton.”
- Erik Wemple: “The comical hypocrisy of Sean Hannity.”
- Greg Sargent: “Sekulow makes a strong case for hearing from Bolton.”
- David Lay Williams, political science professor: “The founders worried that a republic would fail without ‘virtue.’ Today, we don’t.”

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “If John Bolton says that in the book, I believe John Bolton,” said former Trump White House chief of staff John Kelly, a retired four-star Marine general. (Herald Tribune)

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

2020 WATCH:

-- A super PAC aligned with the Democratic establishment is launching a $680,000 ad buy to attack Bernie Sanders during the final five days before the caucuses. Among other hits, the commercial highlights his heart attack. From the Times: "While Democratic Majority for Israel is focused on raising support for Israel within the party, its spot targets the dominant concern among many Democrats in Iowa and elsewhere: beating [Trump]. Featuring six Iowa voters, the ad argues that Mr. Sanders would be unable to defeat Mr. Trump in the November general election, citing the senator's heart attack last year and his left-wing ideology as evidence that he would be too risky ... The group made its ad reservations on Monday, booking ... a significant level of saturation over a short span ... The buy is heavily weighted toward Cedar Rapids and Des Moines markets, and the group is also airing the ad on cable, including on CNN, MSNBC and ESPN."

-- Sanders takes the 11th-hour attack seriously enough that he tweeted a straight-to-camera response: "The billionaire class is getting nervous, and they should," he said. "Under our administration, the wealthy and the powerful will begin paying their fair share in taxes. ... The big-money interests can run all the negative ads they want, but it's not going to work."

-- While top Democrats are increasingly alarmed that Sanders could gain unstoppable momentum from the early states, they also fear that any anti-Sanders effort would backfire, and that has sidelined a more significant stop-Sanders effort for now. Matt Viser and Annie Linskey report: "Even the hint of an organized anti-Sanders movement would risk alienating the Vermont senator's sometimes belligerent supporters and play into claims that the process is 'rigged,' many Democrats say privately. Democratic House candidates in swing districts say they are nervous about running on the same ticket as Sanders, but they, too, are reluctant to say so publicly.”

-- Joe Biden's team pitched Amy Klobuchar's advisers on a possible alliance during next Monday night's Iowa caucuses, but the Klobuchar team dismissed the offer as not serious. The New York Times reports the plan would involve a pledge to help each other in precincts where one of them doesn't meet the threshold of 15 percent support required to win delegates. People in both campaigns played down the conversation after word leaked.

-- A change to the byzantine caucus rules could leave uncommitted Iowans stuck in a viable group, which is panicking campaigns. From the Des Moines Register: “Democratic operatives are encouraging Iowa caucusgoers to declare support for a candidate in the beginning of the caucus-night process — even if they may not intend to see that candidate through to the end — to prevent the uncommitted group from securing viability. At a Democratic caucus, Iowans begin by breaking up into groups based on their candidate preference. Due to a new rule change outlined in the Iowa Democratic Party's 74-page Delegate Selection Plan, if a group gains viability — reaches 15 percent of attendees' support and earns a delegate for the county convention — those caucusgoers are locked in and unable to switch to another group.”

-- Biden wouldn't say whether he thinks Sanders could unify the party if he wins the nomination. From the AP: “‘We have to unite,’ Biden told reporters in Muscatine, six days before the Iowa caucuses. ‘I'm not going to make judgments now. I just think that it depends upon how we treat one another between now and the time we have a nominee.’ Biden has previously promised to support the Democratic nominee, regardless of who it is. ... The Biden campaign said Tuesday afternoon that the former vice president would support the eventual nominee.”

-- “Trump advisers and supporters are split over whether to wage an effort to bolster Sanders,” Politico reports. "While proponents think Sanders would be an ideal opponent, others are wary that the liberal firebrand could make for a dynamic challenger — with the ability to make inroads in the Rust Belt states likely to decide the outcome of the election. ... Among those pushing for a pro-Sanders offensive is the anti-tax Club for Growth. On Monday, the pro-Trump group launched a TV ad in Iowa that attacks Sanders but does so in ways that could help him with Democrats. The commercial calls Sanders ‘too liberal’ [and] compares Sanders to Democratic heroes Barack Obama and Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and says he would spend trillions to combat climate change. The Trump reelection effort, meanwhile, has spent much of the last several weeks focusing its attacks on Sanders — a gambit that two people close to the campaign described as a deliberate effort to draw attention to the Vermont senator. The campaign has used its Twitter account as an anti-Sanders messaging machine and urged prominent surrogates to train their fire on him. Their working assumption is that the presidential attention will only boost his standing among anti-Trump Democratic voters.”

-- “Running [Bernie] against Trump would be an act of insanity,” New York Magazine liberal columnist Jonathan Chait writes in a piece generating a lot of buzz among Democratic elites. “In the months leading up to the 2018 midterm elections, the Democratic Party was the subject of bitter and widespread criticism from its left wing. The party's strategy was to flip the House by recruiting moderate candidates who would avoid controversial left-wing positions and instead focus attention on Trump's agenda, especially his effort to eliminate Obamacare. The left predicted the strategy would fail — only an inspiring progressive agenda could mobilize enough voters to win back the House. ... Democrats flipped 40 seats. Tellingly, while progressives managed to nominate several candidates in red districts — Kara Eastman in Nebraska, Richard Ojeda in West Virginia, and many others — any one of whose victory they would have cited as proof that left-wing candidates can win Trump districts, not a single one of them prevailed in November.”

-- New data from Quinnipiac shows that Elizabeth Warren is the top second choice for Democratic primary voters nationally, even as she has faded in the horse race. Biden is the top choice, followed by Sanders. If first and second picks are combined, Warren matched Sanders in the poll. (Philip Bump)

-- Klobuchar has faced less media scrutiny over the past several months than anyone else in the top tier. That will change quickly if she performs well in Iowa. The Associated Press offers a taste of what's to come: She often talks about her role prosecuting the case stemming from a little girl who was struck by a stray bullet, which ended with the imprisonment of black teenager Myon Burrell. But the wire service uncovered new evidence and multiple inconsistencies in the police investigation: “With no gun, no DNA, no fingerprints, the case against Burrell revolved around a teen rival who gave conflicting accounts of the shooting. Later, police turned to jailhouse informants, some of whom say they were coached and have since recanted. Alibis were not questioned. Key evidence has gone missing or was never obtained, including a convenience store surveillance tape that Burrell and others say would have cleared him. And the chief homicide detective was caught on camera offering cash for information -- even if it was just hearsay. Burrell, now 33, has maintained his innocence.” Klobuchar's campaign defended her decision-making.

-- 2024 watch: Sen. Rick Scott (R-Fla.) will spend $19,000 to air a Biden attack ad in Iowa ahead of the caucuses. He accuses Democrats of impeaching Trump as part of a "coverup." The senator says to the camera: "Biden got away with it, and his son got paid."
(WSJ)

-- The GOP won a closely watched Texas special election last night. From the AP: “The victory by Republican Gary Gates, who put more than $1.5 million of his own money into his run for state House District 28, is sure to bring a sigh of relief for the GOP in a race that was being tracked far beyond Texas. By the final weeks, the race had escalated into the first big special election of 2020. In final unofficial results, Gates polled 58% of the vote to 42% for Democrat Eliz Markowitz. [Biden and Warren] had endorsed Markowitz, and outside groups flooded the race with six-figure checks and television ads. Beto O’Rourke practically made the district a second home after ending his own presidential campaign in November, spending weekends knocking on doors in Katy’s affluent neighborhoods.”

-- Democrats are preparing for a “hostile” Trump transition. From Politico: “At least one outside group that works with the 2020 Democratic campaigns has quietly launched a transition-related effort designed to offer an early look at the landscape that awaits them if they oust Trump. ... That Democrats are making transition-related moves more than nine months before Election Day underscores not only their distrust of Trump but also the reality that taking over the U.S. government is a mammoth task with high stakes. ... Every transition is tricky given the thousands of positions that need to be filled and the array of policy priorities a new team wants to pursue. But several Democrats attached to different 2020 campaigns mentioned very specific concerns about what a Trump departure could mean ... The Democrats said they worry that Trump's political appointees won't meet with the incoming team, that there will be little, if any, paperwork left behind to guide them, and that what documents are shared will not be trustworthy."

-- A super PAC supporting Senate Democrats announced that it raised $61 million last year. The Senate Majority PAC haul is more than twice the amount its Republican counterpart reported raising in the same time, which is wild because the GOP controls the majority. (Michelle Ye Hee Lee)

-- House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy, alarmed by these and other numbers, warned donors of a fundraising crisis. "They are kicking our a--," the California Republican fumed at the Capitol Hill Club. (Politico)

-- Some lighter fare: An unexpected political matchup has shaken the Vermont town of Fair Haven. Incumbent honorary mayor Lincoln – a Nubian goat – has been challenged for her seat by Sammy, a German Shepherd police dog. (AP)

Xi says China will defeat 'devil' coronavirus

NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- “As the total number of people in mainland China infected by the new coronavirus surpasses those stricken by the 2002-3 SARS epidemic, Beijing has shut down schools indefinitely,” Simon Denyer and David Crawshaw report on a special live blog: “The World Health Organization said Tuesday that China had agreed to allow global health experts into the country and a top U.S. health official said he had offered to send a team from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to China to help with the coronavirus outbreak. ... The death toll has risen to 132 in China, with 6,078 confirmed cases of infection as of Wednesday evening local time — a day-over-day increase of more than 1,000.

“Other countries in the region also are reporting more people infected — nearly all of them tourists from China. North Korea is calling the fight against the coronavirus a matter of ‘national existence’ amid fears over what an outbreak would do to a country with a rudimentary health infrastructure and a malnourished population. The UAE has reported its first cases — the first in the Middle East — members of a family traveling from Wuhan. Germany reported three new cases late Tuesday, while Thailand confirmed six more. Hong Kong reported two new cases Wednesday. ... Two more coronavirus cases have been reported in Australia, bringing to seven the number of people in the country confirmed as having the virus that originated in central China. ...

“Researchers with the Peter Doherty Institute for Infection and Immunity in Melbourne announced on Wednesday that they have grown the coronavirus from a patient sample, potentially paving the way for more scientific breakthroughs. It was the first time such an experiment had succeeded outside of China, the scientists said. They hope that the sample — set to be shared with laboratories around the world — will help to speed up efforts to develop a vaccine and to diagnose the virus in patients without symptoms. ... China has [also] handed over the genome of the coronavirus to Russia in a joint effort between the two countries to create a vaccine...”

A plane carrying as many as 240 American evacuees from the Chinese city of Wuhan landed overnight in the United States. David reports: “The U.S. government chartered the aircraft to retrieve American diplomats and others from the central Chinese city that is at the heart of the deadly coronavirus outbreak. The plane made a refueling stop in Alaska, where the passengers [will] undergo health screening, and would then head for southern California, the Associated Press reported. The aircraft is expected to land at March Air Reserve Base in California's Riverside County, instead of at Ontario International Airport as originally planned."

The White House warned airline executives the U.S. government may suspend all flights to and from China if the coronavirus outbreak become a bigger public health threat. Luz Lazo reports:

"White House officials said they are not banning flights just yet, but said the U.S. government will assess the situation daily, leaving open the possibility of a ban on all flights from China ... Airlines in recent days have already canceled hundreds of flights scheduled from China's Wuhan International Airport, giving U.S. health officials a brief respite as they focused on the logistics of rerouting U.S.-bound travelers from the region to one of five airports for special screening. Travelers are being funneled to airports in Atlanta, Chicago, Los Angeles, New York and San Francisco, where they are being screened for the virus. If cleared, they are allowed to continue to their final destination." British Airways also indefinitely suspended direct flights today to Beijing and Shanghai.

Officials at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, have called off two college basketball games after administrators announced two students who had recently traveled to China were being tested for coronavirus. Reis Thebault reports: "One of the students visited the campus health center on Monday and exhibited flulike symptoms, prompting staff to test him and his travel companion, a university statement said. The two students are now isolated in their off-campus residences while they await their test results from the CDC."

-- Experts still can't say whether efforts to limit the spread of the virus will succeed. Lena H. Sun and Lenny Bernstein report: "Some early signs are discouraging: Six countries, including China, have confirmed human-to-human transmission of the infection. Those include four cases in Germany connected to a single person ... Cases in China continue to multiply, and five million residents of Wuhan, where the virus originated, have left the city, some of them surely carrying the disease. ... Public health officials said Tuesday that they are grappling with a long list of unknowns that will determine how successful they are in limiting the toll of the widening outbreak. Those questions include how lethal the virus may be, how contagious it is, whether it is transmitted by people who are infected but show no symptoms, and whether it can be largely contained in its country of origin.”

-- Has Trump's isolationist mentality hindered the U.S.

government's response? When a group of business leaders in Davos last week asked about the coronavirus crisis, the president suggested the matter was a world away from the United States, CNN reports: “Some of the assembled chief executives asked how Trump planned to confront the Wuhan coronavirus, which threatened to affect their global supply chains and spread into some of the world's most populous urban centers. Trump shrugged off their concerns, according to a person familiar with the conversation.”

-- Trump's Israeli-Palestinian peace proposal was quickly criticized for granting Israel most of what it has sought over decades of conflict while establishing a disjointed Palestinian state. Anne Gearan, Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report: “Trump touted the plan as the potential solution to decades of bloody strife, but his administration did little to solicit the support of Palestinian leaders who had rejected it sight unseen and played no role in its drafting. The president presented the proposal as the best Palestinians could hope to get during a ceremony where he stood beside Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, who eagerly embraced both the president and what he presented. ... The plan would grant Israel vast license to incorporate Jewish settlements and maintain a yoke of security on land it now occupies — proposals that could have immediate consequences. Netanyahu plans to move forward with annexing the Jewish settlements in the West Bank and parts of the Jordan Valley as soon as this weekend... The detailed proposal offers a four-year window for Palestinians to begin negotiations for what would amount to a smaller, weaker version of statehood than envisioned by past U.S. presidents. But the conditional sovereignty is still more than Palestinians have now, and more than many of Trump's critics thought he would offer.”

-- U.S. forces recovered the bodies of two American service members from the site of a surveillance plane crash in Taliban territory in Afghanistan. The cause of the crash is still under investigation, but there are “no indications that the crash was caused by enemy fire,” the U.S. military command in Kabul said. (Susannah George and Missy Ryan)

-- The Pentagon now acknowledges 50 troops have been diagnosed with concussions and traumatic brain injuries as a result of the Iranian missile attack on U.S. forces in Iraq. “That's an increase of 16 from late last week when the Pentagon said 34 cases had been diagnosed,” CNN reports. “Several Pentagon officials [said] that the number of diagnosed cases is likely to continue to change. Approximately 200 people who were in the blast zone at the time of the attack have been screened for symptoms. ... Last week Trump said he does not consider potential brain injuries to be as serious as physical combat wounds, downplaying the severity of the injuries suffered in Iraq. ... 'I heard that they had headaches, and a couple of other things, but I would say, and I can report, it's not very serious,' Trump [said]." Pentagon spokesman Lt. Col. Thomas Campbell sends this statement: "Of these 50, 31 total service members were treated in Iraq and returned to duty, including 15 of the additional service members who have been diagnosed since the previous report. 18 service members have been transported to Germany for further evaluation and treatment."

-- A 7.7 magnitude earthquake struck between Jamaica and Cuba, one of the strongest on record for the Caribbean. Initial reports of damage in the region have been spotty. (Matthew Cappucci and Jason Samenow)

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo waves after Trump acknowledged him during a White House event on the Middle East peace plan. (Alex Brandon/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- America is drowning in red ink: The federal budget deficit will eclipse $1 trillion in 2020, the Congressional Budget Office said, and the 13-figure shortfall is largely due to the Trump tax cuts. Jeff Stein reports: “A combination of the 2017 tax cuts and a surge in new spending has pushed the deficit wider. This year would mark the first time since 2012 that the deficit breached $1 trillion, a threshold that has alarmed some budget experts because deficits typically contract — not expand — during periods of sustained economic growth. Overall, the CBO projected that the federal government will spend $4.6 trillion in the fiscal year that ends Sept. 30 and bring in $3.6 trillion in tax revenue. ... The CBO also projected the economy would grow by 2.2 percent in 2020, which represents a healthy clip but falls short of the 3 percent target set by the Trump administration. The projections were contained in the CBO’s annual budget and economic outlook.”

-- The Trump administration is inviting states to convert part of Medicaid into a block grant, a conservative goal Congress rejected more than two years ago. Amy Goldstein reports: “A letter to every state Medicaid director, to be dispatched Thursday, will offer the possibility of trading away an entitlement program that expands and contracts depending on how many poor people need the government health coverage. In exchange, for able-bodied adults in the program, states could apply to receive a fixed federal payment and freedom from many of the program's rules, according to several individuals familiar with the plans. ... Proponents and critics alike expect the block grant guidance will also face court challenges.

... Allowing block grants in Medicaid has been a prime objective for [administrator of the federal Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Seema] Verma since she arrived in Washington three years ago from a role as an Indiana-based health-care consultant whose clients included several states' Medicaid programs. Within the administration, Verma has consistently argued for states to be allowed greater flexibility in running Medicaid, which is a joint responsibility of the federal government and the states.”

-- Trump will sign the new U.S.-Mexico-Canada trade agreement during a ceremony at the White House today for about 400 guests, but he chose not to invite any of the key Democrats who shepherded the deal through Congress. “Guests invited to the South Lawn signing include lawmakers from around the country, workers, farmers, and CEOs, as well as officials from Mexico and Canada,” Reuters reports. “Not invited were House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal and other Democrats who negotiated for months to expand the pact's labor, environmental and enforcement provisions and ensure the approval of the Democratically-controlled House.”

-- A lack of a “black box” could hinder the NTSB investigation into Kobe Bryant’s helicopter crash. Ian Duncan and Luz Lazo report: “While airliners and some other aircraft are required to have the recorders, which can gather technical data as well as audio and video recordings, many helicopters are not. The Federal Aviation Administration says it's difficult to make the economic case for requiring the devices because they don't prevent crashes. ... NTSB investigators continued their work Tuesday, sifting through the crash wreckage, trying to understand what happened and beginning interviews with witnesses. The Los Angeles County Medical Examiner-Coroner said it had recovered all nine bodies from the crash scene, three of which had been recovered Sunday afternoon. Four of the people on board, including Bryant, were formally identified by fingerprints."

-- Retired Navy SEAL Eddie Gallagher – who was accused of war crimes but championed by Trump – struck back at the active-duty SEALs who testified against him by highlighting their faces in a video published on social media. From the San Diego Union-Tribune: "In a three-minute video posted to his Facebook page and Instagram account ... Gallagher, 40, referred to some members of his former platoon as 'cowards' and highlighted names, photos and — for those still on active duty — their duty status and current units, something former SEALs say places those men — and the Navy's mission — in jeopardy. ... [A] former SEAL from the platoon said publicizing the faces of active-duty SEALs — including one assigned to the elite Development Group, or SEAL Team 6 — could put the lives of the men and their families in danger. ... The video appears to be a trailer for an unspecified future project. Tim Parlatore, one of Gallagher's attorneys, declined to say Monday what that project is or when it will be published."

-- Another Navy SEAL has been promoted four months after he admitted to choking a Green Beret to death. From the Daily Beast: Chief Petty Officer Tony DeDolph “was formally charged in November 2018 with felony murder, conspiracy, obstruction of justice, burglary, hazing, and involuntary manslaughter in the strangulation death of Army Staff Sgt. Logan Melgar, a Special Forces soldier assigned to the 3rd Special Forces Group. ... Days after Melgar was strangled, DeDolph, at the time a petty officer first class, was sent back to his base in Virginia Beach under suspicion of murder. Despite that, DeDolph found himself on the promotion list for chief petty officer in August 2017.”

-- Meanwhile, Special Operations forces are stretched dangerously thin as the president’s interference in Gallagher’s case and two others comes with a cost to military ethics and discipline, writes columnist David Ignatius. "Special Operations Command (SOCOM) took an important step Tuesday to protect the integrity of its forces with the release of a comprehensive review of the 'culture and ethics' of these elite units. ... But the thrust of the report is clear: Special Operations forces (SOF) are badly frayed by nearly 20 years of war."

-- Lawyers for Dylann Roof, who was sentenced to death for killing nine black parishioners in a 2015 mass shooting, appealed the decision, arguing that the trial was “tainted” by mental health issues. (Katie Shepherd)

-- Trump praised Mike Pompeo for his ugly attacks on NPR journalist Mary Louise Kelly. “You did a good job on her,” the president told his secretary of state at the White House. Colby Itkowitz reports: “Trump, alongside [Netanyahu] for an event on the [Middle East peace proposal] acknowledged Pompeo in the audience. Pompeo received a round of applause. 'Very impressive, Mike,' Trump said, jovially. 'That reporter couldn't have done too good a job on you yesterday. I think you did a good job on her, actually.' Trump was referencing a confrontation Pompeo had with [Kelly] after an interview in which she asked him why he did not do more to defend Marie Yovanovitch, the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine ... [Pompeo] proceeded to curse and yell at Kelly for asking about Ukraine ... [He] did not apologize for his treatment of Kelly."

-- In an op-ed for today's Times, NPR's Mary Louise Kelly said Secretary of State Mike Pompeo falsely calling her a liar wasn't the worst part of their contentious interview. She said the kerfuffle has diverted attention away from Pompeo's comments about Iran: "Here's the relevant portion of the interview: KELLY: How do you stop Iran from getting a nuclear weapon? POMPEO: We'll stop them. KELLY: How? Sanctions? POMPEO: We'll stop them. He did not offer specifics. Nor did he elaborate, when pressed on how to square his resolve with what [the Iranian foreign minister] had just told me — that all limits on Iran's centrifuge program have been suspended. 'Yeah,' Mr. Pompeo said. 'He's blustering.' ... The point is that recently the risk of miscalculation — of two old adversaries misreading each other and accidentally escalating into armed confrontation — has felt very real. It occurs to me that swapping insults through interviews with journalists such as me might, terrifyingly, be as close as the top diplomats of the United States and Iran came to communicating this month."

-- Human-trafficking groups refuse to attend Ivanka Trump's

White House summit. Jessica Contrera reports: “Their decision comes after months of anguish over what they describe as an act of public deception. They say that although the president frequently invokes human trafficking, his administration is actively endangering a significant portion of trafficking victims: immigrants. ‘We have such a chasm between rhetoric and reality,’ said Martina Vandenberg, the founder of the Human Trafficking Legal Center, a network of attorneys who take on trafficking cases. ‘This administration is undermining protections carefully built for trafficking victims over two decades.’ The advocates are especially alarmed by increased scrutiny of T visas, which provide temporary legal status for immigrants who can prove they were trafficked while in the United States. At least eight organizations declined invitations to the summit because of their opposition to the administration’s policies.”

-- Senators expressed a fresh round of frustration that Trump officials are so persistently unwilling to engage with Congress on military decisions. Karoun Demirjian reports: Senators blasted “State Department officials for holding a closed-door session when none of the information they shared was classified. ... In the weeks since Trump ordered the strike in Baghdad that killed Qasem Soleimani, lawmakers in the House and Senate have rallied around measures to restrain the president’s ability to conduct hostilities against Iran absent explicit congressional authorization. ... In the weeks since the strike that killed Soleimani, administration officials have given conflicting reasons for why they believed they had legal basis to carry it out absent congressional approval ... Administration officials also did not commit to being more forthcoming with Congress, in deference to its war powers, than they have been in the weeks since the Soleimani strike.”

-- A Maryland police officer was charged with murder after, police said, he fired seven shots at a man who was handcuffed in the front seat of a cruiser with his hands behind his back. Rachel Chanson, Dan Morse and Justin Jovenal report: “Police Chief Hank Stawinski announced the charges less than a day after the incident, following the department’s investigation. Stawinski said bringing such serious charges against an officer within 24 hours of an incident is ‘unprecedented’ for the department. ... He identified the victim as William Green, 43, of Southeast Washington. Green was killed while sitting in the passenger side of a police cruiser in the Temple Hills area. ... Cpl. Michael Owen Jr. is in custody and awaiting a bond hearing, Stawinski said. He is charged with second-degree murder, manslaughter and associated weapons charges.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Trump lashed out at Bolton on Twitter this morning as he pleaded with Republicans not to go along with calling witnesses who could testify against him:

Donald J. Trump  @realDonaldTrump · 3h

For a guy who couldn't get approved for the Ambassador to the U.N. years ago, couldn't get approved for anything since, "begged" me for a non Senate approved job, which I gave him despite many saying "Don't do it, sir," takes the job, mistakenly says "Libyan Model" on T.V., and..

Donald J. Trump

@realDonaldTrump

....many more mistakes of judgement, gets fired because frankly, if I listened to him, we would be in World War Six by now, and goes out and IMMEDIATELY writes a nasty & untrue book. All Classified National Security. Who would do this?

 48.2K 12:28 PM - Jan 29, 2020

 23.3K people are talking about this

Donald J. Trump

@realDonaldTrump

Why didn't John Bolton complain about this "nonsense" a long time ago, when he was very publicly terminated. He said, not that it matters, NOTHING!

 81.2K 5:07 AM - Jan 29, 2020

 34.2K people are talking about this

McConnell's former chief of staff and campaign manager predicted that Hunter Biden will wind up testifying if Democrats get Bolton:

Josh Holmes ✓
@Holmesjosh

Not sure about this. I'm still betting that if you see the whites of John Bolton's eyes in the Senate, you'll see the glassy gaze of Hunter Biden's alongside of him. I don't think they're going to vote to launch this Hindenburg. At least not yet. twitter.com/hotlinejosh/st...

Josh Kraushaar ✓ @Hotlinejosh

Big WSJ scoop: McConnell tells R senators he *doesn't* have votes to block witnesses.

John Bolton, come on down ... wsj.com/articles/trump...

♡ 450 11:01 PM - Jan 28, 2020

💬 182 people are talking about this

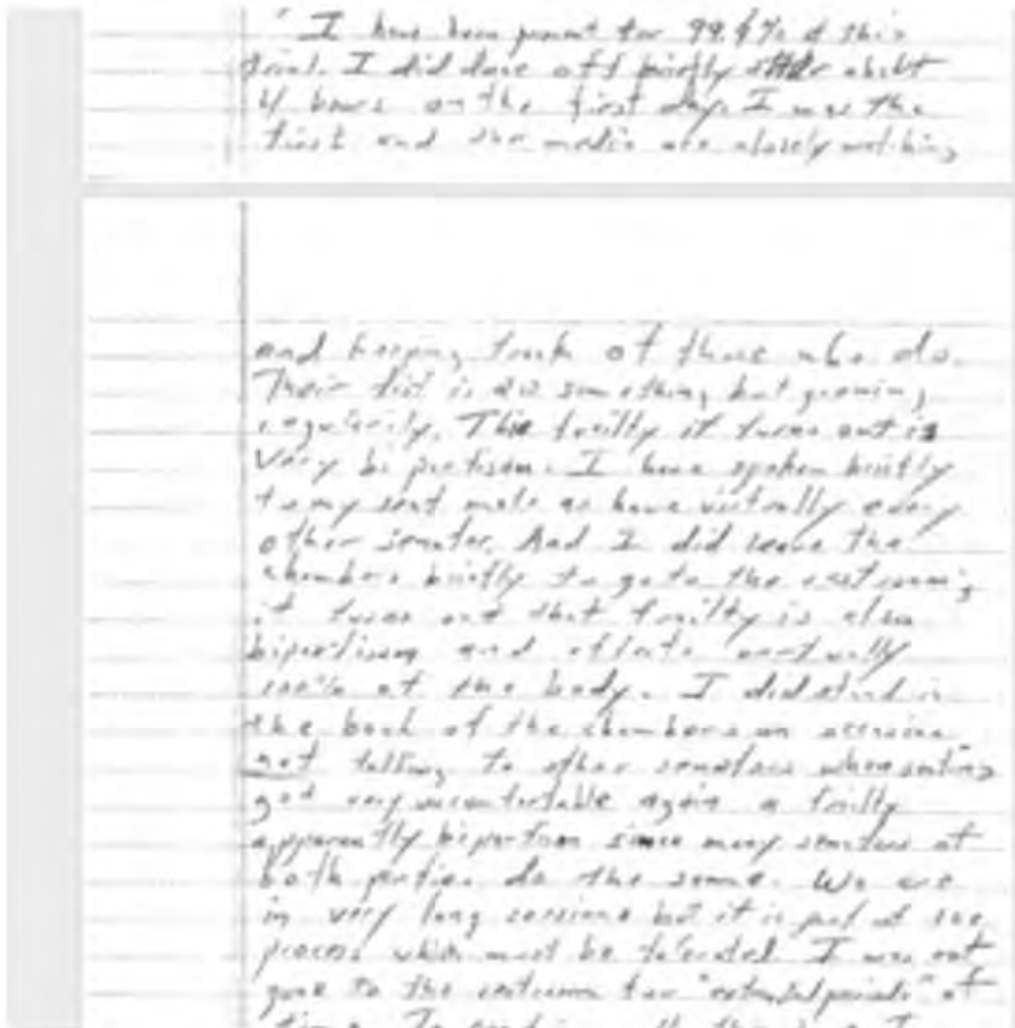

Sen. Jim Risch (R-Idaho) sent a handwritten letter to his local paper to explain why he dozed off during jury duty:

Lauren Fox ✓
@FoxReports

In a handwritten, five-page letter to the Idaho Statesman, Sen. Jim Risch explains to the paper what it is like to be in the chamber and why he is not the only senator to get up occasionally or doze off.

31 8:37 PM - Jan 28, 2020

44 people are talking about this

One of the more colorful moments from Tuesday's proceedings was when Mitt Romney showed up on the Senate floor with some chocolate milk:

There's so much footage of Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) espousing the opposite of what he says now back when he was an impeachment manager making the case against Bill Clinton in 1998:

andrew kaczynski 🙄 ✓
@KFILE

"I think witnesses probably will be essential before it's all over with...will be judged in history, just not for the political moment, my only advice to Senate is let's have a trial that will withstand historical scrutiny." twitter.com/LindseyGrahamS...

Lindsey Graham ✓ @LindseyGrahamSC

I'm increasingly optimistic this ends Friday. ...The defense team destroyed the House case.

Check out my conversation with @marthamaccallum tonight about the latest on impeachment, including the call for witnesses. youtu.be/oA4bW65cG\_A

♡ 96 1:39 AM - Jan 29, 2020

💬 54 people are talking about this

The former Republican congressman who left the party after endorsing impeachment replied to Graham's new argument against witnesses:

Justin Amash  @justinamash

Sen. Graham believes the traditional process for discovering all relevant facts in a trial is a "lousy idea."
twitter.com/mkraju/status/...

Manu Raju  @mkraju

"One witness would probably lead to a lot of witnesses," Sen. Lindsey Graham said, adding it would be a "lousy idea for the country" to go down that route

15.1K 4:04 AM - Jan 29, 2020

4,322 people are talking about this

Here's a fun tidbit from the Clinton trial as Q&A begins later today:

Ross Garber  @rossgarber

In the Clinton impeachment trial Q&A, White House Counsel Charles Ruff used a secret signal to tell the Senate Democratic leader that he had something to say and wanted to be asked an open-ended question.

23 8:10 PM - Jan 28, 2020

See Ross Garber's other Tweets

From the Virginia congressional district once represented by Eric

Cantor, here's a fresh illustration of how Trump has completely taken over the GOP:

 Jonathan Martin
@jmartNYT

A particularly vivid illustration of how the main GOP litmus test is fealty to Trump: every would-be challenger to @RepSpanberger dons red MAGA hat.

Spanberger, of course, won her seat in part bc of suburban backlash to Trump.
starexponent.com/news/state/gop...

GOP's Spanberger challengers turn out in force in C...
Republicans showed their strength Saturday in Culpeper, massing the candidates who wish to take on Rep. Abigail starexponent.com

 239 12:57 PM - Jan 28, 2020

 196 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert broke down Pompeo's attacks on NPR:

Biden crashed a reporter's live shot during a town hall in Iowa:

Norah O'Donnell
@NorahODonnell

That's live TV for you!

Former VP @JoeBiden makes a surprise appearance with @edokeefe on the @CBSEveningNews

♡ 2,495 11:48 PM - Jan 28, 2020

💬 696 people are talking about this

And it looks like Mike Bloomberg forgot that dogs are really good at shaking hands:

Christopher J. Hale ✓
@chrisjollyhale

I regret to inform you that Mike Bloomberg attempted to shake a dog's mouth.

♥ 18.1K 8:38 PM - Jan 28, 2020

💬 4,734 people are talking about this

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Trump's defense lawyers refused to answer two important questions related to the president's intent
Date: Thursday, January 30, 2020 8:16:40 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Trump's defense lawyers refused to answer two important questions related to the president's intent

Trump lawyer defends accepting foreign information in an election

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Sometimes what's not said turns out be most revealing.

Senators posed 93 written questions from 1 p.m. until a little after 11 p.m. on Wednesday as part of President Trump's impeachment trial.

Sens. Susan Collins (R-Maine) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), two potential swing votes on whether to call witnesses, teamed up to ask a straightforward question of fact to the president's defense team: Did Trump ever mention Joe and Hunter Biden in connection with corruption when he spoke to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky's predecessor -- "or other Ukrainian officials, President Trump's Cabinet members, or top aides or others"?

This could shed light on whether the president's motives were entirely partisan when he pressed his counterpart in Kyiv to look at the former vice president's son on July 25 – three months after Joe Biden announced his candidacy against Trump. Theoretically, it could help the president's case if Trump had brought up the Bidens and corruption to then-Ukrainian president Petro Poroshenko when it was still unclear whether he'd run.

But Deputy White House Counsel Patrick Philbin refused to answer. He said he would only talk about issues that were already in the record. "I'm limited to what's in the record, and what's in the record is determined by what the House of Representatives saw," Philbin said. "So I can't point to something in the record that shows President Trump at an earlier time mentioning specifically something related to Joe or Hunter Biden."

This is a lawyerly tactic for evading questions, but it was a particularly dubious excuse because another of the president's defense lawyers had introduced a new Daily Beast article into the record just minutes earlier.

Philbin also dodged when Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah), possibly another key vote, asked Trump's lawyers what specific date the president first ordered the hold on military aid to Ukraine and what his reasoning was at the time he did so. "I don't think there is evidence in the record of a specific date," Philbin said.

Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.), the lead House impeachment manager, called Philbin's dodges disingenuous. "You're not confined to the record in the House, nor is the president," Schiff told the White House lawyer in front of all 100 senators. “The president could call witnesses if they existed. There’s nothing to prevent them from saying, ‘As a matter of fact, tomorrow we’re going to call such-and-such, and they’re going to testify that indeed, Donald Trump brought up Hunter Biden to President Poroshenko!’”

Refusing to provide any new information is just the latest illustration of the stonewalling that’s been the centerpiece of the White House strategy to save Trump since word of the whistleblower complaint got out. The White House has not complied with any House subpoenas for witnesses or documents related to the Ukraine affair.

Trump perhaps felt emboldened to forcefully defy congressional subpoenas because of his experience with Bob Mueller. The president paid no discernable political price for refusing to give an interview to the then-special counsel. Eventually, he agreed to answer a limited number of written questions about episodes that occurred before he took office. Remember, Trump’s July 25 with Zelensky call came one day after Mueller testified before Congress.

Later in the evening, Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.) reupped the Collins and Murkowski query. He sent this question to the president’s lawyers: “Could you please give an accurate and truthful answer to the senators’ question?”

“So I can’t,” Philbin replied. “I’m not in a position to go back into things that the president might have said in private, so I can’t go telling now about things that the president might have said to Cabinet members.”

President Trump talks about health care during a 2017 event at the White House with Susan Collins and Lisa Murkowski. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

Trump defense attorney Alan Dershowitz then took it to the next level. In response to a separate question, the emeritus Harvard Law professor referred to what Collins and Murkowski asked. Then he argued that it doesn't matter even if Trump only became interested in Ukraine investigating Biden after the Democrat announced a challenge against him. "His candidacy is a very good reason for upping the interest in his son: If he wasn't running for president, he's a has-been," Dershowitz said. "He's the former vice president of the United States, okay? Big deal. But if he's running for president, that's an enormous big deal."

Dershowitz has overshadowed the rest of Trump's defense team because he has such a flair for the dramatic and because his over-the-top arguments are so far outside the mainstream of constitutional jurisprudence. But the soft-spoken Philbin, 52, more subtly staked out a series of startlingly low standards for acceptable presidential conduct during the first day of questions.

For example, Philbin said a president asking Russia and China to look into his political opponents – as Trump has done publicly – would not violate campaign finance laws that make it illegal to accept or solicit a “thing of value” from foreign sources.

“Mere information is not something that would violate the campaign finance laws,” Philbin said in response to a question from Sen. Chris Coons (D-Del.). “If there is credible information, credible information of wrongdoing by someone who is running for a public office, it’s not campaign interference for credible information about wrongdoing to be brought to light.”

This is consistent with Trump’s claim in June that “there isn’t anything wrong” with accepting “oppo research” from foreigners. The president told ABC News at the time – a month before his July 25 call – that he feels no obligation to alert the FBI if his campaign is approached again by foreign agents in 2020 with dirt on a Democrat, as the Russians did ahead of the June 2016 meeting at Trump Tower with Donald Trump Jr., Jared Kushner and Paul Manafort.

Democrats fumed. “Apparently it’s okay for the president to get information from foreign governments in an election — that’s news to me,” said Rep. Zoe Lofgren (D-Calif.), one of the House managers, responding to Philbin. “As we go forward in this trial itself, we are creating additional dangers to the nation by suggesting that things that have long been prohibited are now suddenly going to be okay because they've been asserted in the president's defense."

Philbin asserted earlier in the afternoon that that it "cannot possibly be the basis for an impeachable offense" if the president had multiple motivations for pushing Ukraine to announce an investigation of the Bidens – even if one motive was helping his 2020 reelection campaign.

"All elected officials to some extent have in mind how their conduct, how their decisions, their policy decisions will affect the next election," Philbin said. "There's always some personal interest in the electoral outcome of policy."

The 16 hours allotted for Q&A will continue this afternoon, starting at 1 p.m. They'll wrap sometime this evening. The Senate is on track to vote on witnesses tomorrow.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and his lieutenants feel increasingly confident they can twist enough arms to block former national security adviser John Bolton from testifying under oath about Trump's role in the alleged Ukrainian coercion campaign.

"Trump is set to deliver his State of the Union address Feb. 4, and Republicans would like to have the impeachment trial behind them by that point," Erica Werner, Karoun Demirjian and Elise Viebeck report. "My sense is we will get there," said Sen. John Cornyn (R-Tex.), a key McConnell ally. ... For his part, Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) sounded glum about the prospect ... 'The president and Mitch McConnell put huge pressure on these folks,' Schumer told reporters ... 'It's an uphill fight. Is it more likely than not? Probably no. But is it a decent, good chance? Yes.'"

With the notable exception of Collins, the Republican senators who face tough reelection fights in November are falling in line with leadership. Sen. Cory Gardner (Colo.) said he does “not believe we need to hear from an 18th witness.” “I have heard enough,” said appointed Sen. Martha McSally (Ariz.). “It is time to vote.” We’ve heard similar statements from Sens. Thom Tillis (N.C.) and Joni Ernst (Iowa).

Democrats say the lack of candor in response to questions from Collins, Murkowski and Romney is all the more reason to call Bolton and other witnesses, such as acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, who could speak to Trump’s motives. “The Senate can get to the truth by calling witnesses,” said Rep. Hakeem Jeffries (D-N.Y.).

Dershowitz: Quid pro quo in Trump's political interest is not impeachable

MORE FROM THE TRIAL:

-- Chief Justice John Roberts's role in the trial may soon become less like a substitute teacher's and more like an actual judge. Robert Barnes reports: "Wednesday marked a new phase of the impeachment inquiry, one more likely to reveal what Roberts believes it means for the chief justice of the United States to 'preside' over an impeachment trial of the president. He displayed no inclination to play a more active role. It is largely uncharted territory — only two chief justices in the nation's history have been put in such a position. There is disagreement among those who have studied impeachment over such basic questions as whether he can break a tie vote, much less call witnesses on his own volition. ... Roberts continued to play it straight. He quietly turned down a question from Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) that might have named the alleged whistleblower in the case, but he otherwise did not question premises or point out what might be inaccuracies. ... Other questions from senators seemed almost designed to put into the chief justice's mouth the most explosive charges about [the Bidens] or some of the most controversial comments from Trump."

-- "Democrats are casting a nervous eye on a small group of publicly undecided senators in their ranks as Republicans target ... a bipartisan acquittal," Mike DeBonis reports. "Under the spotlight are two centrist mavericks who won election last year — Sens. Joe Manchin III (D-W.Va.) and Kyrsten Sinema (D-Ariz.) — as well as Sen. Doug Jones (D-Ala.), who will face voters this year after a long-shot win in a special election in 2017."

-- "Dershowitz — my professor at Harvard Law School — is flat-out wrong in his assertion that abuse of power is not a basis for impeachment," former congresswoman Elizabeth Holtzman (D-N.Y.) writes in an op-ed for today's newspaper. "His position contradicts his own prior views, as well as the views of almost all legal scholars, something that Dershowitz himself admits. Just as important, his assertion flies in the face of the articles of impeachment voted against President Richard M. Nixon by the House Judiciary Committee — of which I was a member — in 1974. These articles did not charge Nixon with a crime, a fact Dershowitz willfully ignores."

-- The Post's opinion page is full of additional commentary on this theme:

- The Editorial Board: "Republicans' damaging new line of defense."
- George F. Will: "There is more utility than futility in the impeachment trial.”

- Joe Scarborough: “Trump’s confederacy of dunces.”
- Harry Litman: “Trump’s mixed-motive defense is a lousy argument dressed up in plausible legalese.”

-- Dershowitz told Esquire for a new magazine profile that working for Trump’s defense has led to more blowback than any of his previous clients: “Worse than Harry Reems. Worse than von Bülow. Worse than O.J. ‘No question,’ he says. ‘My life was a lot happier before I did this than now. I had a lot more friends. I got a lot of grief during the O.J. case. I defended that guy for murder, but it was nothing like this. This is much worse.’ Is Trump held in lower esteem than O.J. was? Dershowitz shrugs. ‘In the O.J. case, people disagreed with what I did,’ he says. ‘Here, people disagree with who I am.’”

What is John Bolton trying to achieve?

-- Bolton’s lawyer said his book does not contain classified material and asked the White House for an expedited review of the draft chapter about Ukraine in case he's called to testify. Tom Hamburger, Josh Dawsey and Karen DeYoung report: “The Jan. 24 email to the White House from Bolton’s lawyer, Charles Cooper, was in response to a letter from the National Security Council a day earlier warning that the manuscript contained ‘significant amounts’ of classified material that could not be disclosed publicly. ... Ellen J. Knight, the security council’s senior director for records, access and information security management, said Bolton would be breaking his nondisclosure agreement with the U.S. government if he published the book without deleting the classified material. ... Bolton’s team expects a lengthy fight over the issue.”

-- The bigger picture: Trump demands fealty from those closest to him while inspiring very little. Former aides, advisers and associates turn on the president with thrumming regularity, Ashley Parker observes: “They are, en masse, all the president’s disloyal men and women — an unofficial club that includes Rex Tillerson, Trump’s former secretary of state, Omarosa Manigault Newman, a former White House senior adviser, and Michael Cohen, the president’s former personal attorney and fixer ... The culture, of course, is set from the top, with an Oval Office occupant who requires abject fealty but rarely returns it. Trump is known for his petty cruelty, for berating aides publicly and privately and for presiding over an intentionally gladiatorial West Wing, where advisers seem to expect to be betrayed at some point — and behave accordingly.”

-- Rudy Giuliani’s indicted former associate Lev Parnas is unable to enter the Senate chamber to observe the impeachment trial because of his ankle bracelet monitor. That doesn't mean he couldn't make himself its star anyway. Maura Judkis and Avi Selk report: “Around 10:45 a.m. Wednesday, ... [Parnas] took a stroll from Union Station to the Capitol building. ... If he couldn't say it in front of the Senate, he could say it here, in front of the Union Station Ladurée macaron shop: ‘The president knew everything that was going on in Ukraine,’ Parnas said. ‘There was many quid pro quos.’ ... Both [Parnas and his lawyer Joseph Bondy] wore gray suits. Both had American flag pins on their lapels. The pair were swarmed by TV camera crews. ‘I’m not here to make a circus,’ said Bondy, but most circuses start with a parade ... ‘I felt like a Kardashian for a few minutes,’ a law student accompanying the legal team remarked. ... ‘Thank you, Lev!’ called out Jennifer Chartrand, 55, of Rockville. She was wearing a knitted pink pussy hat. ‘Thanks for speaking truth!’”

-- The Trump administration just issued new sanctions on top Russian-backed officials in Crimea. Carol Morello reports: “The sanctions targeting seven officials and a railway company connecting Russia with Crimea were handed down by the Treasury Department two days before Secretary of State Mike Pompeo is scheduled to meet with officials in Ukraine. The United States has never recognized Moscow’s seizure of Crimea and still considers it a part of Ukraine. ... Treasury Secretary Stephen Mnuchin said the U.S. action ‘reiterates our unwavering support for restoring free and fair democratic political processes in Crimea.’ ... The action gave a subtle cold shoulder to the Crimean officials, preceding each one’s title with ‘so-called.’ Among them was Yuri Gotsanyuk, the ‘so-called Prime Minister of the so-called Republic of Crimea.’”

-- Ukraine's precarious attempt to balance Russian authoritarianism and Western democracy makes American attention critical to politicians there. For the Ukrainian president, the holy grail is a White House meeting, which is why Volodymyr Zelensky remains so focused on getting that one-on-one with the president. With Pompeo due to meet Zelensky tomorrow, Ukraine's leadership is looking for a signal on its standing with Trump, Natalie Gryvnyak and Robyn Dixon report. "But the signs for Ukraine are worrying. [Former U.S. special envoy to Ukraine Kurt] Volker has not been replaced since his resignation in September. There has been no new U.S. ambassador appointed to replace Marie Yovanovitch ... And a disquieting silence has descended over U.S.-Ukraine relations amid [impeachment]. ... Even if Pompeo does deliver Zelensky a White House meeting, as Volker suggested, attention will inevitably turn to whether Zelensky offered something helpful to Trump in return."

-- "The United States last year resettled more nationals from Ukraine, a country that barely registers in the United Nations' assessments of the global refugee crisis, than it did almost any other nationality," Abigail Hauslohner reports. "Only people fleeing widespread violence and unrest in Congo and Myanmar outnumber the flow of Ukrainian refugees to the United States." There is no indication that Trump's special interest in Ukraine played a role in this rise. "But the demographic shift does appear to be the byproduct of Trump administration policies that have restricted access [from other countries] to the U.S. refugee program, experts said. ... The 4,451 Ukrainians who arrived in the United States during fiscal 2019 made up 15 percent of the 30,000 total refugees who resettled in the country. In 2016, Ukrainians accounted for just 3 percent.”

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “I’m no fan of John Bolton, although I like him a little more than I used to,” Schiff joked as he made the case for witnesses.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Iowa caucus 2020: A step-by-step guide

2020 WATCH:

-- Allies for Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders have spoken to Andrew Yang's campaign about cooperation in Iowa on caucus night. And Tom Steyer's campaign was contacted by a representative from Pete Buttigieg's campaign to feel out whether they could work together in some way. Annie Linskey and Dan Balz report: "With just five days to go before the Iowa caucuses, several of the top Democratic campaigns and operatives are eyeing one another as potential, and limited, allies in their battle to win convention delegates. ... Candidates who do not earn support from at least 15 percent of those in the room are not considered viable, and they do not earn delegates. Their backers are free to leave or to align with another candidate. That can lead to negotiations between campaigns over the fate of the supporters of nonviable candidates. ... Those specific deals would be harder for campaigns to use this year because candidates who reach 15 percent aren't able to shed voters. That potentially offers more power to less popular candidates. Some suggested that it was far-fetched to think an Iowa committed enough to attend the caucuses would be likely to make their second choice based on the recommendation of a campaign staffer. ...

“Biden’s campaign has also been courting endorsements from two candidates who have left the race — [Kamala] Harris and Cory Booker ... Yet those discussions have been complicated by the Senate impeachment trial. Booker and Harris have appeared reluctant to make any endorsements while the hearings are ongoing, particularly when Biden is a focus in the proceedings and could still be subpoenaed to testify. ... [Elizabeth] Warren’s staff made an early bet that they could identify Iowans who view her as a second choice, with an eye toward making a direct pitch to those people on caucus night if their first choice doesn’t have enough support. Warren’s campaign declined to speak about caucus night strategy. Yang spoke frankly on Wednesday about caucus strategy but also acknowledged the limitations of sharing supporters.”

-- Figuring out who won the Iowa caucuses could actually be kind of hard. Philip Bump explains: “We’re used to knowing who won a race by looking at who got more votes. ... Iowa won’t be that simple. Nor is the state Democratic Party making things easier. It will release not one number on Monday but four.

1. The results of the first alignment (which, in our example, Sanders won).
2. The results of the final alignment (which we had Biden winning).

3. The number of state-delegate equivalents each candidate earned.
4. And, a bit later, the estimated number of national delegates each candidate won.

That's four numbers all aimed at measuring the same thing — whom Iowa Democrats want to be the next president. It's likely that all four metrics will point to the same candidate. But if there's a candidate who's the second choice for a lot of voters, it's easy to see how the first two numbers could be in conflict. Add in the wonkiness of the calculations ... and you can see how the other two numbers could throw another name into the mix, especially if the race is close."

-- Biden will deliver a closing argument in Iowa today doubling as a forceful rebuke of Trump as impeachment tensions grow. The former vice president's campaign shares this sneak peek at the speech: "Health care. Climate. Guns. National Security. All these issues and more are on the ballot. But something else is on the ballot. Something even more important. Character is on the ballot. America's character. I don't believe we're the dark, angry nation we see in Donald Trump's tweets. I don't believe we're a nation that rips babies out of their mothers' arms. I don't believe we're a nation that builds walls and whips up hysteria over immigrant invasions. I don't believe we're a nation that embraces white supremacists and hate groups. I don't believe we're a nation that defers to Vladimir Putin. ...

"The American people are a good and decent people," Biden plans to say. "They deserve a president who tells them the truth – not lie after lie after lie. They deserve a president who will put the country's interest first – not his own self-interest. They deserve a president who appeals to the best in us – not the worst. They deserve a president who will bring us together – not pull us apart.”

-- But, but, but: Biden’s ground game in Iowa is unsteady in some areas, which could hurt him on caucus night. Trip Gabriel reports in the New York Times: “According to nearly a dozen county Democratic chairs and Biden activists around the state, Mr. Biden’s ground game has weak spots that threaten him with underperforming his polling in Iowa, where he has consistently been at or near the top.... In Des Moines County in eastern Iowa, Tom Courtney, the Democratic co-chairman, said last week he knew of ‘only a few’ Biden precinct captains in his 16 precincts. Asked about the likelihood that a candidate’s supporters would materialize on their own without an organizing staff, Mr. Courtney said, ‘I’ve not seen it before.’ His wife, Nancy Courtney, who is a Biden activist, said there was a ‘slim chance’ Mr. Biden wouldn’t reach viability in some caucuses, meaning his support would fall below a 15 percent threshold needed to earn delegates. ‘A lot of the campaigns have really good staffers and we only have one staffer in Des Moines County,’ she said. ‘That worries me.’”

-- After a super PAC aligned with the Democratic establishment launched a $680,000 ad buy against Sanders, the senator’s supporters responded by chipping in $1.3 million in a day. In an email to supporters on Tuesday, Sanders’s campaign warned that he was being targeted and alluded to an “outside spending group.” (NYT)

-- Documents show that Sanders’s team is preparing dozens of potential executive orders on a wide range of domestic policy issues, including immigration, the environment and prescription drugs. Jeff Stein and Sean Sullivan report: “Aides have presented Sanders with a list of possible executive actions, including more than a dozen options for reversing [Trump’s] immigration policy, such as lifting the cap on the number of refugees accepted into the United States and immediately halting border wall construction. Another option is the reinstatement of an Obama-era program that granted legal status to undocumented immigrants brought to America as children. ... The list of potential executive orders includes unilaterally allowing the United States to import prescription drugs from Canada; directing the Justice Department to legalize marijuana; and declaring climate change a national emergency while banning the exportation of crude oil. Other options cited in the document include canceling federal contracts for firms paying less than $15 an hour and reversing federal rules blocking U.S. funding to organizations that provide abortion counseling. ... The senator is reviewing the list of possible executive orders but has not signed off on when they would be released or their scope.”

-- D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser will endorse Mike Bloomberg today, joining more than two dozen other current and former mayors. Paul Schwartzmann reports: “The second-term mayor is choosing the billionaire businessman [over Biden], who worked closely with the District during the Obama administration and whom she has praised in the past ... In a statement provided by the Bloomberg campaign, Bowser touted Bloomberg as ‘the only candidate who will unify the country and defeat Donald Trump.’”

-- Hillary Clinton refuses to be served with the defamation lawsuit by Rep. Tulsi Gabbard’s (D-Hawaii). Gabbard’s attorney said

Clinton has now twice snubbed a process server attempting to deliver court papers. (New York Post)

-- “Progressives and moderates: Don’t destroy each other,” columnist E.J. Dionne writes in an essay previewing his new book “Code Red”: “Judging from the tone of the Democratic primary on the eve of the Iowa caucuses, feuding seems to be winning. Some of this contention is inevitable; each of these candidates wants to win. The danger lies in fostering the idea that the divides between progressives and moderates are more important than their intense and shared opposition with [Trump] and a right-wing version of Republicanism that seeks to undo our nation’s advances since the New Deal. The triumph of this view would be — let’s not mince words — a social catastrophe. ...

"Like so many of the binaries in politics, the restoration/transformation optic captures something important but is also a false choice. The country can’t simply pick up where it left off before Trump took office. The radicalized conservatism that dominates the Republican Party will not go away even if he is defeated. The inequalities of class and race that helped fueled Trump’s rise have deepened during his presidency. You might say restoring the norms that Trump threatens requires transformation. And the majority that opposes Trump is clearly seeking a combination of restoration and transformation. They want to bring back things they believe have been lost as a prelude to moving forward. What they want most to restore is progress. Progressives and moderates need to realize that at this moment in history, they share a commitment to what public life can achieve and the hope that government can be decent again.”

-- Warren called for criminal penalties for spreading false information about voting online. From CNBC: “Warren proposed to combat disinformation by holding big tech companies like Facebook, Twitter and Google responsible for spreading misinformation designed to suppress voters from turning out. ... It’s part of a broader policy to stop disinformation, requiring tech companies and the government to come together to solve the problem.”

-- Twitter users can now report tweets with misleading information about the election as well as voter suppression. The reports will be reviewed against Twitter’s terms of service, and offenders could face penalties. (Politico)

-- Trump allies are handing out tens of thousands of dollars to black voters at events where organizers lavish praise on the president. From Politico: “The first giveaway took place last month in Cleveland, where recipients whose winning tickets were drawn from a bin landed cash gifts in increments of several hundred dollars, stuffed into envelopes. ... Trump’s campaign has been investing its own money to make inroads with black voters and erode Democrats’ overwhelming advantage with them. But the cash giveaways are organized under the auspices of an outside charity, the Urban Revitalization Coalition, permitting donors to remain anonymous and make tax-deductible contributions. The organizers say the events are run by the book and intended to promote economic development in inner cities. But the group behind the cash giveaways is registered as a 501(c)3 charitable organization. One leading legal expert on nonprofit law said the arrangement raises questions about the group's tax-exempt status, because it does not appear to be vetting the recipients of its money for legitimate charitable need."

 Simon Denyer
@simondenyer

Doug Perez and his Labrador puppy Chubby prepare to venture onto the streets of Wuhan for a walk.

 2 5:47 AM - Jan 30, 2020

 See Simon Denyer's other Tweets

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- The death toll from the coronavirus has risen to 170 in China, with more than 7,700 confirmed cases of infection — an increase of more than 1,500 on the previous day. Simon Denyer and Paul Schemm report: “About 100 cases have been recorded outside of mainland China, and four other countries have reported person-to-person transmission of the virus. ... India and the Philippines reported their first cases on Thursday.” The World Health Organization will reconvene its emergency committee today.

-- “Stranded in Wuhan, frustrated Americans wait to be evacuated — or just hunker down,” Simon reports: “Doug Perez has a Chinese girlfriend and a Labrador puppy, and he is not leaving the virus-hit city of Wuhan without them. But other Americans in Wuhan are increasingly frustrated as they wait for their government to fly them out. ‘Many Americans do feel kind of abandoned,’ he said in a Skype interview from his home in the city. ... The Chinese government imposed a total travel lockdown on Wuhan last week, leaving 9 million people ... trapped in a city where the virus is raging, and hospitals are overflowing. Already 129 people have died in Wuhan with 2,261 confirmed cases and thousands more suspected of carrying the virus, official figures show, but experts say the real number could be much higher.” But hundreds of Americans remain in Wuhan with little information, a growing sense of unease and, they say, inadequate communication from the consulate there.

“Perez, his girlfriend, her brother, and Chubby, the Labrador, are holed up in their two-floor apartment ... He’s been watching ‘The Sopranos,’ reading, and learning computer programming. Wearing a face mask and rubber gloves, he takes the dog for a walk on the largely deserted streets, steering clear of the few other people about. Even Chubby has a mask, although he does not like wearing it ... They venture out occasionally to stock up on supplies at local stores. ... 'We went to the grocery store and they were testing everyone's temperature at the door,' he said. 'There was one guy panicking, he kept on touching his forehead.' Perez said he kept his distance."

-- The State Department announced this morning that it will arrange extra flights for private citizens to evacuate Wuhan, beginning on Monday. Those traveling would be subject to screening, health observations and monitoring.

-- University officials here in the States are scrambling to prepare for the arrival of the virus on their campuses. Schools like Arizona State University, where a member of the community tested positive for the virus, are issuing travel restrictions to China, and some with campuses in and near Shanghai have been forced to delay the start of their spring semester. Several schools, including Baylor University and Miami University in Ohio, have tested students, isolating them in some cases. (Susan Svrluga and Nick Anderson)

-- Trump has had little to say in public about the growing virus, except to downplay its danger to the United States. From the AP: "We're very much involved with them, right now, on the virus that's going around," Trump said yesterday at the White House. He said he discussed the situation with Chinese President Xi Jinping and added that the two countries are "working very closely."

-- In Brazil, days of deadly floods have left thousands homeless and the nation's prevailing social inequality has only helped drive the number of casualties. Terrence McCoy reports: “The death toll rose to 62 on Wednesday after another round of battering rains and landslides across the states of Espírito Santo and Minas Gerais, where waves of mud have knocked houses off cliffs and buried dozens of people alive. Belo Horizonte, the Minas Gerais state capital, has been hit particularly hard. More than 100 municipalities have announced states of emergency. ... Descendants of slaves and other poor migrants, unable to find housing in the cities, have historically been shunted into the communities known as favelas. ... This feature of urban life has aggravated the annual scourge of deadly landslides, especially in the country’s heavily populated southeast, where studies have shown the threat of mudslides is greatest. ... The government also plays a role. News reports show state and federal governments have consistently failed to meet funding goals to help mitigate the damage wrought by the annual problem.”

-- Israel is rushing to capitalize on Trump’s peace plan after Palestinians condemned it as hopelessly biased. Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report: “Even before the parties had finished poring over the map that described a possible Palestinian state on 70 percent of the West Bank, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu made clear he would immediately take steps to annex the other 30 percent — the location of more than 150 Jewish settlements — along with the Jordan Valley. ... The dizzying pace of events left all sides scrambling to assess what was changing and what remained of the dogged status quo. ...

“Groups of protesters turned out only in parts of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and in nearby Amman, Jordan. There were scenes of isolated rock-throwing and burning posters of President Trump and Netanyahu. More-serious clashes occurred in the West Bank on Wednesday, according to Israeli media reports, including the wounding of three protesters by Israeli security forces near Ramallah. ... Israeli settlers were also sorting through the deal's particulars, with mixed responses. They stood to achieve a long-cherished dream of having their hilltop towns and cities become normalized Israeli communities — patrolled by police instead of soldiers — but many balked at the price: a four-year freeze on building and the prospect of a Palestinian state.”

-- Netanyahu claimed another diplomatic victory after Vladimir Putin pardoned an Israeli backpacker. Ruth Eglash and Isabelle

Khrushudyan report: “The pit stop in Russia immediately drew widespread speculation that he would return home with Na’ama Issachar, 27, who was sentenced by a Russian court last October to 7½ years in prison for drug smuggling. ... Issachar had been returning to Israel from India via Moscow last spring when Russian police discovered less than a third of an ounce of hashish in her checked luggage. Since her case came to light last summer, Netanyahu, who often boasts about his warm ties with Putin, has faced mounting pressure to make a special plea to the Russian leader for her release. ... Issachar’s mother arrived in Moscow on Tuesday, but authorities denied her request to visit her daughter, apparently in a bid to delay the pardon until Netanyahu’s detour through Russia on Thursday.”

A construction crew works yesterday to clean up a fallen section of the U.S.-Mexico border wall as seen from Mexicali in Baja California. Newly installed panels fell over in high winds. (Stringer/AFP/Getty Images)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- High winds blew over newly installed panels of Trump's border wall, landing on trees on the Mexican side of the border. A

Customs and Border Patrol spokesman said the sections in Calexico, Calif., that fell had recently been laid so the concrete had not set.

\(CNN\)

-- U.S. life expectancy is ticking up as the number of fatal drug overdoses declines and cancer deaths drop. Joel Achenbach reports: “A decline in the death rate from cancer is the single largest driver of the small increase in life expectancy, the CDC reported. Five of the other nine leading causes of death also showed declines in death rates, including the top cause, heart disease, as well as unintentional injuries (which include overdoses), chronic lower respiratory diseases, stroke and Alzheimer's disease. Two more, diabetes and kidney disease, were essentially unchanged. Deaths from suicide and influenza and pneumonia increased. Despite the encouraging elements of the CDC mortality report, the broader pattern for American health remains sobering. Life expectancy improved by the tiniest of increments, from 78.6 to 78.7 years. That figure remains lower than the peak in U.S. life expectancy, at 78.9 years, in 2014."

-- Two former aspiring actresses testified that Harvey Weinstein sexually assaulted them in the mid-2000s. The women – model Tarale Wulff, who testified that Weinstein raped her in his apartment, and Dawn Dunning, who said Weinstein assaulted her and months later offered movie roles in exchange for sex – aren't officially named as victims in the case because of the statute of limitations, but both were allowed to serve as witnesses to corroborate the stories of the other women. The Manhattan District Attorney's Office is planning on calling a third supporting accuser, who is the subject of a case against Weinstein in Los Angeles. (Shayna Jacobs)

-- The South Dakota House passed a bill restricting medical treatments for transgender youths. This is the first state to take action on the flurry of bills nationwide that would restrict medical interventions for transgender children. (Emily Wax-Thibodeaux and Samantha Schmidt)

-- House Democrats unveiled a $760 billion infrastructure package that's an ambitious and at times detailed attempt at getting Trump to back a long-awaited bipartisan priority. Michael

Laris reports: The plan “came with a glaring — and strategic — omission: They avoided saying how the vast majority of it should be paid for, arguing that Trump should be out front on that issue. ... A spokesman for [McConnell] referred to comments the senator made in April about the possibility of passing a $2 trillion infrastructure bill ... He said an idea raised by Senate Democrats — paying for new infrastructure by rolling back some of the tax cuts — was a ‘non-starter.’ ... House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard E. Neal (D-Mass.) said he thinks a bipartisan deal is possible — and that holding back Democratic declarations on how to fund infrastructure will help that process along.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Alabama Senate candidate Jeff Sessions, fired by Trump as attorney general, attacked Bolton for speaking out about the president's conduct:

 Jeff Sessions  @jeffsessions · 8h
With regard to the @AmbJohnBolton situation, let me just say this: I did not write a book or go on CNN or criticize @realDonaldTrump for 3 VERY IMPORTANT REASONS...

 Jeff Sessions  @jeffsessions

FIRST - I don't believe it is the honorable thing to do. You are there to serve his agenda, not your own. He was elected, not you.

 6,941 10:57 PM - Jan 29, 2020

 1,840 people are talking about this

 Jeff Sessions  @jeffsessions · 8h
Replying to @jeffsessions
SECOND - It is an act of disloyalty to the administration one serves, and tends to undermine the unity and teamwork needed to reach the highest level of effectiveness.

 Jeff Sessions  @jeffsessions

THIRD - it sets a very damaging and dangerous precedent. A President must have the ability to have candid conversations with his National Security Advisor, his AG, his SOS, etc., without fear that those conversations will end up in a book or a newspaper.

 8,332 10:59 PM - Jan 29, 2020

 2,675 people are talking about this

A former Justice Department inspector general cried foul as the Trump White House sought to censor Bolton:

Michael R. Bromwich  @mrbromwich · 12h

The idea that Bolton would draft a manuscript that contains “significant amounts of classified information” is ridiculous. He knows what’s classified and what’s not. This is tampering with the pre-publication process to intimidate and achieve political ends. twitter.com/jaketapper/sta...

Jake Tapper  @jaketapper

WH letter to Bolton warning him against publication of his book as it is right now

NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20504

January 23, 2020

Charles J. Cooper
Cooper & Kirk
1525 New Hampshire Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20036

SENT VIA ELECTRONIC MAIL TO C.COOPER@COOPERKIRK.COM

Dear Mr. Cooper:

Thank you for speaking yesterday by telephone. As we discussed, the National Security Council (NSC) Access Management directorate has been provided the manuscript submitted by your client, former Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs John Bolton, for prepublication review. Based on our preliminary review, the manuscript appears to contain significant amounts of classified information. It also appears that some of this classified information is at the TOP SECRET level, which is defined by Executive Order 13526 as information that “reasonably could be expected to cause exceptionally grave harm to the national security” of the United States if disclosed without authorization. Under federal law and the nondisclosure agreements your client signed as a condition for gaining access to classified information, the manuscript may not be published or otherwise disclosed without the deletion of this classified information.

The manuscript remains under review in order for us to do our best to assist your client by identifying the classified information within the manuscript, while at the same time ensuring that publication does not harm the national security of the United States. We will do our best to work with you to ensure your client’s ability to tell his story in a manner that protects U.S. national security. We will be in touch with you shortly with additional, more detailed guidance regarding next steps that should enable you to revise the manuscript and move forward as expeditiously as possible.

Sincerely,

Ellen J. Knight
Senior Director for Records, Access, and
Information Security Management

Michael R. Bromwich

@mrbromwich

What a coincidence that @LindseyGrahamSC et al. yesterday suggested reviewing the manuscript in a classified setting, and today the WH claims it contains classified info. This is a drug deal concocted by the WH and GOP members to avoid testimony from Bolton and GOP senators to avoid testimony from Bolton.

1,299 6:46 PM - Jan 29, 2020

488 people are talking about this

A former lawyer for the National Security Agency, who is now at Brookings and runs Lawfare, reviewed Bolton's options:

Susan Hennessey @Susan_Hennessey · 9h

The smartest thing John Bolton could do for his book at this point is to sit down tonight with a journalist and verbally go on the record with the Ukraine story.

Susan Hennessey

@Susan_Hennessey

The best outcome for Bolton is to be called to testify, which resolves nearly all of his pre-publication review issues. An interview is his best chance of forcing the question.

3,389 9:23 PM - Jan 29, 2020

598 people are talking about this

Rep. Ted Lieu (D-Calif.) mocked Dershowitz's arguments:

Ted Lieu ✓
@tedlieu

Dear @TheJusticeDept: Today I am announcing I am going to violate federal law and solicit a foreign government to help my re-election campaign, because it's in the public interest.

Just kidding. I'm not a criminal like @realDonaldTrump or a crazed enabler like @AlanDersh.
twitter.com/cbseveningnews...

CBS Evening News ✓ @CBSEveningNews
Replying to @CBSEveningNews

Pres. Trump's counsel Alan Dershowitz: "If a president does something which he believes will help him get elected in the public interest, that cannot be the kind of quid pro quo that results in impeachment." cbsn.ws/2GKOq7X

♥ 39K 11:56 PM - Jan 29, 2020

💬 11.9K people are talking about this

So did Sen. Chris Murphy (D-Conn.):

Chris Murphy
@ChrisMurphyCT

The President's new argument today, that anything he does to benefit his re-election, no matter how corrupt, is unimpeachable, is

B
A N
A N
A
S

 27K 9:00 PM - Jan 29, 2020

 6,167 people are talking about this

From a former FBI special agent who now teaches at Yale:

MSNBC's Rachel Maddow noted a suspicious, unexplained change in the DOJ position on former Trump national security adviser Michael Flynn's sentence for lying to the FBI about his Russian contacts:

Rachel Maddow MSNBC ✓

@maddow

22 days ago, DOJ prosecutors in the Mike Flynn case were asking for a sentence of imprisonment. Now they say they're not.

What happened in the last 22 days?

twitter.com/adamgoldmanNYT...

Adam Goldman ✓ @adamgoldmanNYT

Prosecutors in Flynn case soften stance but why? First filing was 1/7/20. The second is from a filing today.

♥ 11.9K 11:27 PM - Jan 29, 2020

💬 7,615 people are talking about this

The Department of Homeland Security's acting deputy secretary celebrated the detention of another group of migrants:

Jared Kushner, Trump's senior adviser and son-in-law who is in charge of the Middle East portfolio, asked people to "divorce" themselves from all the history of the region. That's not how history works. You can't divorce yourself from it:

The Hill ✓
@thehill

Jared Kushner: "What I would encourage people to do is try to divorce yourself from all of the history that's happened over the years and read this plan."

♡ 411 8:01 PM - Jan 29, 2020

💬 1,083 people are talking about this

And Vanessa Bryant, Kobe Bryant's widow, shared an emotional message days after her husband and daughter died in a helicopter crash:

Jake Tapper ✓
@jaketapper

Vanessa Bryant posts on Instagram

... were so incredibly blessed to have them in our lives. I wish they were here with us forever. They were our beautiful blessings taken from us too soon.

I'm not sure what our lives hold beyond today, and it's impossible to imagine life without them. But we wake up each day, trying to keep pushing because Kobe, and our baby girl, Gigi, are shining on us to light the way. Our love for them is endless — and that's to say, immeasurable. I just wish I could hug them, kiss them and bless them. Have them here with us, forever.

Thank you for sharing your joy, your grief and your support with us. We ask that you grant us the respect and privacy we will need to navigate this new reality.

To honor our Team Mamba family, the Mamba Sports Foundation has set up the MambaOnThree Fund to help support the other families affected by this tragedy. To donate, please go to MambaOnThree.org.

To further Kobe and Gianna's legacy in youth sports, please visit MambaSportsFoundation.org.

Liked by laurenmpratapas and 637,137 others

vanessabryant My girls and I want to thank the

5,867 1:19 AM - Jan 30, 2020

1,202 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert had a few questions about Dershowitz's defense of Trump:

“Late Night’s” Amber Ruffin sang a little ditty about Anita Baker endorsing Andrew Yang:

And a “Full Frontal” correspondent went to Iowa to find out if the Iowa caucus is a relic of the past:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Trump's defense lawyers refused to answer two important questions related to the president's intent
Date: Thursday, January 30, 2020 8:17:24 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Trump's defense lawyers refused to answer two important questions related to the president's intent

Trump lawyer defends accepting foreign information in an election

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: Sometimes what's not said turns out be most revealing.

Senators posed 93 written questions from 1 p.m. until a little after 11 p.m. on Wednesday as part of President Trump's impeachment trial.

Sens. Susan Collins (R-Maine) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), two potential swing votes on whether to call witnesses, teamed up to ask a straightforward question of fact to the president's defense team: Did Trump ever mention Joe and Hunter Biden in connection with corruption when he spoke to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky's predecessor -- "or other Ukrainian officials, President Trump's Cabinet members, or top aides or others"?

This could shed light on whether the president's motives were entirely partisan when he pressed his counterpart in Kyiv to look at the former vice president's son on July 25 – three months after Joe Biden announced his candidacy against Trump. Theoretically, it could help the president's case if Trump had brought up the Bidens and corruption to then-Ukrainian president Petro Poroshenko when it was still unclear whether he'd run.

But Deputy White House Counsel Patrick Philbin refused to answer. He said he would only talk about issues that were already in the record. "I'm limited to what's in the record, and what's in the record is determined by what the House of Representatives saw," Philbin said. "So I can't point to something in the record that shows President Trump at an earlier time mentioning specifically something related to Joe or Hunter Biden."

This is a lawyerly tactic for evading questions, but it was a particularly dubious excuse because another of the president's defense lawyers had introduced a new Daily Beast article into the record just minutes earlier.

Philbin also dodged when Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah), possibly another key vote, asked Trump's lawyers what specific date the president first ordered the hold on military aid to Ukraine and what his reasoning was at the time he did so. "I don't think there is evidence in the record of a specific date," Philbin said.

Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.), the lead House impeachment manager, called Philbin's dodges disingenuous. "You're not confined to the record in the House, nor is the president," Schiff told the White House lawyer in front of all 100 senators. “The president could call witnesses if they existed. There’s nothing to prevent them from saying, ‘As a matter of fact, tomorrow we’re going to call such-and-such, and they’re going to testify that indeed, Donald Trump brought up Hunter Biden to President Poroshenko!’”

Refusing to provide any new information is just the latest illustration of the stonewalling that’s been the centerpiece of the White House strategy to save Trump since word of the whistleblower complaint got out. The White House has not complied with any House subpoenas for witnesses or documents related to the Ukraine affair.

Trump perhaps felt emboldened to forcefully defy congressional subpoenas because of his experience with Bob Mueller. The president paid no discernable political price for refusing to give an interview to the then-special counsel. Eventually, he agreed to answer a limited number of written questions about episodes that occurred before he took office. Remember, Trump’s July 25 with Zelensky call came one day after Mueller testified before Congress.

Later in the evening, Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.) reupped the Collins and Murkowski query. He sent this question to the president’s lawyers: “Could you please give an accurate and truthful answer to the senators’ question?”

“So I can’t,” Philbin replied. “I’m not in a position to go back into things that the president might have said in private, so I can’t go telling now about things that the president might have said to Cabinet members.”

President Trump talks about health care during a 2017 event at the White House with Susan Collins and Lisa Murkowski. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

Trump defense attorney Alan Dershowitz then took it to the next level. In response to a separate question, the emeritus Harvard Law professor referred to what Collins and Murkowski asked. Then he argued that it doesn't matter even if Trump only became interested in Ukraine investigating Biden after the Democrat announced a challenge against him. "His candidacy is a very good reason for upping the interest in his son: If he wasn't running for president, he's a has-been," Dershowitz said. "He's the former vice president of the United States, okay? Big deal. But if he's running for president, that's an enormous big deal."

Dershowitz has overshadowed the rest of Trump's defense team because he has such a flair for the dramatic and because his over-the-top arguments are so far outside the mainstream of constitutional jurisprudence. But the soft-spoken Philbin, 52, more subtly staked out a series of startlingly low standards for acceptable presidential conduct during the first day of questions.

For example, Philbin said a president asking Russia and China to look into his political opponents – as Trump has done publicly – would not violate campaign finance laws that make it illegal to accept or solicit a “thing of value” from foreign sources.

“Mere information is not something that would violate the campaign finance laws,” Philbin said in response to a question from Sen. Chris Coons (D-Del.). “If there is credible information, credible information of wrongdoing by someone who is running for a public office, it’s not campaign interference for credible information about wrongdoing to be brought to light.”

This is consistent with Trump’s claim in June that “there isn’t anything wrong” with accepting “oppo research” from foreigners. The president told ABC News at the time – a month before his July 25 call – that he feels no obligation to alert the FBI if his campaign is approached again by foreign agents in 2020 with dirt on a Democrat, as the Russians did ahead of the June 2016 meeting at Trump Tower with Donald Trump Jr., Jared Kushner and Paul Manafort.

Democrats fumed. “Apparently it’s okay for the president to get information from foreign governments in an election — that’s news to me,” said Rep. Zoe Lofgren (D-Calif.), one of the House managers, responding to Philbin. “As we go forward in this trial itself, we are creating additional dangers to the nation by suggesting that things that have long been prohibited are now suddenly going to be okay because they've been asserted in the president's defense."

Philbin asserted earlier in the afternoon that that it "cannot possibly be the basis for an impeachable offense" if the president had multiple motivations for pushing Ukraine to announce an investigation of the Bidens – even if one motive was helping his 2020 reelection campaign.

"All elected officials to some extent have in mind how their conduct, how their decisions, their policy decisions will affect the next election," Philbin said. "There's always some personal interest in the electoral outcome of policy."

The 16 hours allotted for Q&A will continue this afternoon, starting at 1 p.m. They'll wrap sometime this evening. The Senate is on track to vote on witnesses tomorrow.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and his lieutenants feel increasingly confident they can twist enough arms to block former national security adviser John Bolton from testifying under oath about Trump's role in the alleged Ukrainian coercion campaign.

"Trump is set to deliver his State of the Union address Feb. 4, and Republicans would like to have the impeachment trial behind them by that point," Erica Werner, Karoun Demirjian and Elise Viebeck report. "My sense is we will get there," said Sen. John Cornyn (R-Tex.), a key McConnell ally. ... For his part, Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) sounded glum about the prospect ... 'The president and Mitch McConnell put huge pressure on these folks,' Schumer told reporters ... 'It's an uphill fight. Is it more likely than not? Probably no. But is it a decent, good chance? Yes.'"

With the notable exception of Collins, the Republican senators who face tough reelection fights in November are falling in line with leadership. Sen. Cory Gardner (Colo.) said he does “not believe we need to hear from an 18th witness.” “I have heard enough,” said appointed Sen. Martha McSally (Ariz.). “It is time to vote.” We’ve heard similar statements from Sens. Thom Tillis (N.C.) and Joni Ernst (Iowa).

Democrats say the lack of candor in response to questions from Collins, Murkowski and Romney is all the more reason to call Bolton and other witnesses, such as acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, who could speak to Trump’s motives. “The Senate can get to the truth by calling witnesses,” said Rep. Hakeem Jeffries (D-N.Y.).

Dershowitz: Quid pro quo in Trump's political interest is not impeachable

MORE FROM THE TRIAL:

-- Chief Justice John Roberts's role in the trial may soon become less like a substitute teacher's and more like an actual judge. Robert Barnes reports: "Wednesday marked a new phase of the impeachment inquiry, one more likely to reveal what Roberts believes it means for the chief justice of the United States to 'preside' over an impeachment trial of the president. He displayed no inclination to play a more active role. It is largely uncharted territory — only two chief justices in the nation's history have been put in such a position. There is disagreement among those who have studied impeachment over such basic questions as whether he can break a tie vote, much less call witnesses on his own volition. ... Roberts continued to play it straight. He quietly turned down a question from Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) that might have named the alleged whistleblower in the case, but he otherwise did not question premises or point out what might be inaccuracies. ... Other questions from senators seemed almost designed to put into the chief justice's mouth the most explosive charges about [the Bidens] or some of the most controversial comments from Trump."

-- "Democrats are casting a nervous eye on a small group of publicly undecided senators in their ranks as Republicans target ... a bipartisan acquittal," Mike DeBonis reports. "Under the spotlight are two centrist mavericks who won election last year — Sens. Joe Manchin III (D-W.Va.) and Kyrsten Sinema (D-Ariz.) — as well as Sen. Doug Jones (D-Ala.), who will face voters this year after a long-shot win in a special election in 2017."

-- "Dershowitz — my professor at Harvard Law School — is flat-out wrong in his assertion that abuse of power is not a basis for impeachment," former congresswoman Elizabeth Holtzman (D-N.Y.) writes in an op-ed for today's newspaper. "His position contradicts his own prior views, as well as the views of almost all legal scholars, something that Dershowitz himself admits. Just as important, his assertion flies in the face of the articles of impeachment voted against President Richard M. Nixon by the House Judiciary Committee — of which I was a member — in 1974. These articles did not charge Nixon with a crime, a fact Dershowitz willfully ignores."

-- The Post's opinion page is full of additional commentary on this theme:

- The Editorial Board: "Republicans' damaging new line of defense."
- George F. Will: "There is more utility than futility in the impeachment trial.”

- Joe Scarborough: “Trump’s confederacy of dunces.”
- Harry Litman: “Trump’s mixed-motive defense is a lousy argument dressed up in plausible legalese.”

-- Dershowitz told Esquire for a new magazine profile that working for Trump’s defense has led to more blowback than any of his previous clients: “Worse than Harry Reems. Worse than von Bülow. Worse than O.J. ‘No question,’ he says. ‘My life was a lot happier before I did this than now. I had a lot more friends. I got a lot of grief during the O.J. case. I defended that guy for murder, but it was nothing like this. This is much worse.’ Is Trump held in lower esteem than O.J. was? Dershowitz shrugs. ‘In the O.J. case, people disagreed with what I did,’ he says. ‘Here, people disagree with who I am.’”

What is John Bolton trying to achieve?

-- Bolton’s lawyer said his book does not contain classified material and asked the White House for an expedited review of the draft chapter about Ukraine in case he's called to testify. Tom Hamburger, Josh Dawsey and Karen DeYoung report: “The Jan. 24 email to the White House from Bolton’s lawyer, Charles Cooper, was in response to a letter from the National Security Council a day earlier warning that the manuscript contained ‘significant amounts’ of classified material that could not be disclosed publicly. ... Ellen J. Knight, the security council’s senior director for records, access and information security management, said Bolton would be breaking his nondisclosure agreement with the U.S. government if he published the book without deleting the classified material. ... Bolton’s team expects a lengthy fight over the issue.”

-- The bigger picture: Trump demands fealty from those closest to him while inspiring very little. Former aides, advisers and associates turn on the president with thrumming regularity, Ashley Parker observes: “They are, en masse, all the president’s disloyal men and women — an unofficial club that includes Rex Tillerson, Trump’s former secretary of state, Omarosa Manigault Newman, a former White House senior adviser, and Michael Cohen, the president’s former personal attorney and fixer ... The culture, of course, is set from the top, with an Oval Office occupant who requires abject fealty but rarely returns it. Trump is known for his petty cruelty, for berating aides publicly and privately and for presiding over an intentionally gladiatorial West Wing, where advisers seem to expect to be betrayed at some point — and behave accordingly.”

-- Rudy Giuliani’s indicted former associate Lev Parnas is unable to enter the Senate chamber to observe the impeachment trial because of his ankle bracelet monitor. That doesn't mean he couldn't make himself its star anyway. Maura Judkis and Avi Selk report: “Around 10:45 a.m. Wednesday, ... [Parnas] took a stroll from Union Station to the Capitol building. ... If he couldn't say it in front of the Senate, he could say it here, in front of the Union Station Ladurée macaron shop: ‘The president knew everything that was going on in Ukraine,’ Parnas said. ‘There was many quid pro quos.’ ... Both [Parnas and his lawyer Joseph Bondy] wore gray suits. Both had American flag pins on their lapels. The pair were swarmed by TV camera crews. ‘I’m not here to make a circus,’ said Bondy, but most circuses start with a parade ... ‘I felt like a Kardashian for a few minutes,’ a law student accompanying the legal team remarked. ... ‘Thank you, Lev!’ called out Jennifer Chartrand, 55, of Rockville. She was wearing a knitted pink pussy hat. ‘Thanks for speaking truth!’”

-- The Trump administration just issued new sanctions on top Russian-backed officials in Crimea. Carol Morello reports: “The sanctions targeting seven officials and a railway company connecting Russia with Crimea were handed down by the Treasury Department two days before Secretary of State Mike Pompeo is scheduled to meet with officials in Ukraine. The United States has never recognized Moscow’s seizure of Crimea and still considers it a part of Ukraine. ... Treasury Secretary Stephen Mnuchin said the U.S. action ‘reiterates our unwavering support for restoring free and fair democratic political processes in Crimea.’ ... The action gave a subtle cold shoulder to the Crimean officials, preceding each one’s title with ‘so-called.’ Among them was Yuri Gotsanyuk, the ‘so-called Prime Minister of the so-called Republic of Crimea.’”

-- Ukraine's precarious attempt to balance Russian authoritarianism and Western democracy makes American attention critical to politicians there. For the Ukrainian president, the holy grail is a White House meeting, which is why Volodymyr Zelensky remains so focused on getting that one-on-one with the president. With Pompeo due to meet Zelensky tomorrow, Ukraine's leadership is looking for a signal on its standing with Trump, Natalie Gryvnyak and Robyn Dixon report. "But the signs for Ukraine are worrying. [Former U.S. special envoy to Ukraine Kurt] Volker has not been replaced since his resignation in September. There has been no new U.S. ambassador appointed to replace Marie Yovanovitch ... And a disquieting silence has descended over U.S.-Ukraine relations amid [impeachment]. ... Even if Pompeo does deliver Zelensky a White House meeting, as Volker suggested, attention will inevitably turn to whether Zelensky offered something helpful to Trump in return."

-- "The United States last year resettled more nationals from Ukraine, a country that barely registers in the United Nations' assessments of the global refugee crisis, than it did almost any other nationality," Abigail Hauslohner reports. "Only people fleeing widespread violence and unrest in Congo and Myanmar outnumber the flow of Ukrainian refugees to the United States." There is no indication that Trump's special interest in Ukraine played a role in this rise. "But the demographic shift does appear to be the byproduct of Trump administration policies that have restricted access [from other countries] to the U.S. refugee program, experts said. ... The 4,451 Ukrainians who arrived in the United States during fiscal 2019 made up 15 percent of the 30,000 total refugees who resettled in the country. In 2016, Ukrainians accounted for just 3 percent.”

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “I’m no fan of John Bolton, although I like him a little more than I used to,” Schiff joked as he made the case for witnesses.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Iowa caucus 2020: A step-by-step guide

2020 WATCH:

-- Allies for Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders have spoken to Andrew Yang's campaign about cooperation in Iowa on caucus night. And Tom Steyer's campaign was contacted by a representative from Pete Buttigieg's campaign to feel out whether they could work together in some way. Annie Linskey and Dan Balz report: "With just five days to go before the Iowa caucuses, several of the top Democratic campaigns and operatives are eyeing one another as potential, and limited, allies in their battle to win convention delegates. ... Candidates who do not earn support from at least 15 percent of those in the room are not considered viable, and they do not earn delegates. Their backers are free to leave or to align with another candidate. That can lead to negotiations between campaigns over the fate of the supporters of nonviable candidates. ... Those specific deals would be harder for campaigns to use this year because candidates who reach 15 percent aren't able to shed voters. That potentially offers more power to less popular candidates. Some suggested that it was far-fetched to think an Iowa committed enough to attend the caucuses would be likely to make their second choice based on the recommendation of a campaign staffer. ...

“Biden’s campaign has also been courting endorsements from two candidates who have left the race — [Kamala] Harris and Cory Booker ... Yet those discussions have been complicated by the Senate impeachment trial. Booker and Harris have appeared reluctant to make any endorsements while the hearings are ongoing, particularly when Biden is a focus in the proceedings and could still be subpoenaed to testify. ... [Elizabeth] Warren’s staff made an early bet that they could identify Iowans who view her as a second choice, with an eye toward making a direct pitch to those people on caucus night if their first choice doesn’t have enough support. Warren’s campaign declined to speak about caucus night strategy. Yang spoke frankly on Wednesday about caucus strategy but also acknowledged the limitations of sharing supporters.”

-- Figuring out who won the Iowa caucuses could actually be kind of hard. Philip Bump explains: “We’re used to knowing who won a race by looking at who got more votes. ... Iowa won’t be that simple. Nor is the state Democratic Party making things easier. It will release not one number on Monday but four.

1. The results of the first alignment (which, in our example, Sanders won).
2. The results of the final alignment (which we had Biden winning).

3. The number of state-delegate equivalents each candidate earned.
4. And, a bit later, the estimated number of national delegates each candidate won.

That's four numbers all aimed at measuring the same thing — whom Iowa Democrats want to be the next president. It's likely that all four metrics will point to the same candidate. But if there's a candidate who's the second choice for a lot of voters, it's easy to see how the first two numbers could be in conflict. Add in the wonkiness of the calculations ... and you can see how the other two numbers could throw another name into the mix, especially if the race is close."

-- Biden will deliver a closing argument in Iowa today doubling as a forceful rebuke of Trump as impeachment tensions grow. The former vice president's campaign shares this sneak peek at the speech: "Health care. Climate. Guns. National Security. All these issues and more are on the ballot. But something else is on the ballot. Something even more important. Character is on the ballot. America's character. I don't believe we're the dark, angry nation we see in Donald Trump's tweets. I don't believe we're a nation that rips babies out of their mothers' arms. I don't believe we're a nation that builds walls and whips up hysteria over immigrant invasions. I don't believe we're a nation that embraces white supremacists and hate groups. I don't believe we're a nation that defers to Vladimir Putin. ...

"The American people are a good and decent people," Biden plans to say. "They deserve a president who tells them the truth – not lie after lie after lie. They deserve a president who will put the country's interest first – not his own self-interest. They deserve a president who appeals to the best in us – not the worst. They deserve a president who will bring us together – not pull us apart.”

-- But, but, but: Biden’s ground game in Iowa is unsteady in some areas, which could hurt him on caucus night. Trip Gabriel reports in the New York Times: “According to nearly a dozen county Democratic chairs and Biden activists around the state, Mr. Biden’s ground game has weak spots that threaten him with underperforming his polling in Iowa, where he has consistently been at or near the top.... In Des Moines County in eastern Iowa, Tom Courtney, the Democratic co-chairman, said last week he knew of ‘only a few’ Biden precinct captains in his 16 precincts. Asked about the likelihood that a candidate’s supporters would materialize on their own without an organizing staff, Mr. Courtney said, ‘I’ve not seen it before.’ His wife, Nancy Courtney, who is a Biden activist, said there was a ‘slim chance’ Mr. Biden wouldn’t reach viability in some caucuses, meaning his support would fall below a 15 percent threshold needed to earn delegates. ‘A lot of the campaigns have really good staffers and we only have one staffer in Des Moines County,’ she said. ‘That worries me.’”

-- After a super PAC aligned with the Democratic establishment launched a $680,000 ad buy against Sanders, the senator’s supporters responded by chipping in $1.3 million in a day. In an email to supporters on Tuesday, Sanders’s campaign warned that he was being targeted and alluded to an “outside spending group.” (NYT)

-- Documents show that Sanders’s team is preparing dozens of potential executive orders on a wide range of domestic policy issues, including immigration, the environment and prescription drugs. Jeff Stein and Sean Sullivan report: “Aides have presented Sanders with a list of possible executive actions, including more than a dozen options for reversing [Trump’s] immigration policy, such as lifting the cap on the number of refugees accepted into the United States and immediately halting border wall construction. Another option is the reinstatement of an Obama-era program that granted legal status to undocumented immigrants brought to America as children. ... The list of potential executive orders includes unilaterally allowing the United States to import prescription drugs from Canada; directing the Justice Department to legalize marijuana; and declaring climate change a national emergency while banning the exportation of crude oil. Other options cited in the document include canceling federal contracts for firms paying less than $15 an hour and reversing federal rules blocking U.S. funding to organizations that provide abortion counseling. ... The senator is reviewing the list of possible executive orders but has not signed off on when they would be released or their scope.”

-- D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser will endorse Mike Bloomberg today, joining more than two dozen other current and former mayors. Paul Schwartzmann reports: “The second-term mayor is choosing the billionaire businessman [over Biden], who worked closely with the District during the Obama administration and whom she has praised in the past ... In a statement provided by the Bloomberg campaign, Bowser touted Bloomberg as ‘the only candidate who will unify the country and defeat Donald Trump.’”

-- Hillary Clinton refuses to be served with the defamation lawsuit by Rep. Tulsi Gabbard’s (D-Hawaii). Gabbard’s attorney said

Clinton has now twice snubbed a process server attempting to deliver court papers. (New York Post)

-- “Progressives and moderates: Don’t destroy each other,” columnist E.J. Dionne writes in an essay previewing his new book “Code Red”: “Judging from the tone of the Democratic primary on the eve of the Iowa caucuses, feuding seems to be winning. Some of this contention is inevitable; each of these candidates wants to win. The danger lies in fostering the idea that the divides between progressives and moderates are more important than their intense and shared opposition with [Trump] and a right-wing version of Republicanism that seeks to undo our nation’s advances since the New Deal. The triumph of this view would be — let’s not mince words — a social catastrophe. ...

"Like so many of the binaries in politics, the restoration/transformation optic captures something important but is also a false choice. The country can’t simply pick up where it left off before Trump took office. The radicalized conservatism that dominates the Republican Party will not go away even if he is defeated. The inequalities of class and race that helped fueled Trump’s rise have deepened during his presidency. You might say restoring the norms that Trump threatens requires transformation. And the majority that opposes Trump is clearly seeking a combination of restoration and transformation. They want to bring back things they believe have been lost as a prelude to moving forward. What they want most to restore is progress. Progressives and moderates need to realize that at this moment in history, they share a commitment to what public life can achieve and the hope that government can be decent again.”

-- Warren called for criminal penalties for spreading false information about voting online. From CNBC: “Warren proposed to combat disinformation by holding big tech companies like Facebook, Twitter and Google responsible for spreading misinformation designed to suppress voters from turning out. ... It’s part of a broader policy to stop disinformation, requiring tech companies and the government to come together to solve the problem.”

-- Twitter users can now report tweets with misleading information about the election as well as voter suppression. The reports will be reviewed against Twitter’s terms of service, and offenders could face penalties. (Politico)

-- Trump allies are handing out tens of thousands of dollars to black voters at events where organizers lavish praise on the president. From Politico: “The first giveaway took place last month in Cleveland, where recipients whose winning tickets were drawn from a bin landed cash gifts in increments of several hundred dollars, stuffed into envelopes. ... Trump’s campaign has been investing its own money to make inroads with black voters and erode Democrats’ overwhelming advantage with them. But the cash giveaways are organized under the auspices of an outside charity, the Urban Revitalization Coalition, permitting donors to remain anonymous and make tax-deductible contributions. The organizers say the events are run by the book and intended to promote economic development in inner cities. But the group behind the cash giveaways is registered as a 501(c)3 charitable organization. One leading legal expert on nonprofit law said the arrangement raises questions about the group's tax-exempt status, because it does not appear to be vetting the recipients of its money for legitimate charitable need."

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- The death toll from the coronavirus has risen to 170 in China,

with more than 7,700 confirmed cases of infection — an increase of more than 1,500 on the previous day. Simon Denyer and Paul Schemm report: “About 100 cases have been recorded outside of mainland China, and four other countries have reported person-to-person transmission of the virus. ... India and the Philippines reported their first cases on Thursday.” The World Health Organization will reconvene its emergency committee today.

-- “Stranded in Wuhan, frustrated Americans wait to be evacuated — or just hunker down,” Simon reports: “Doug Perez has a Chinese girlfriend and a Labrador puppy, and he is not leaving the virus-hit city of Wuhan without them. But other Americans in Wuhan are increasingly frustrated as they wait for their government to fly them out. ‘Many Americans do feel kind of abandoned,’ he said in a Skype interview from his home in the city. ... The Chinese government imposed a total travel lockdown on Wuhan last week, leaving 9 million people ... trapped in a city where the virus is raging, and hospitals are overflowing. Already 129 people have died in Wuhan with 2,261 confirmed cases and thousands more suspected of carrying the virus, official figures show, but experts say the real number could be much higher.” But hundreds of Americans remain in Wuhan with little information, a growing sense of unease and, they say, inadequate communication from the consulate there.

“Perez, his girlfriend, her brother, and Chubby, the Labrador, are holed up in their two-floor apartment ... He’s been watching ‘The Sopranos,’ reading, and learning computer programming. Wearing a face mask and rubber gloves, he takes the dog for a walk on the largely deserted streets, steering clear of the few other people about. Even Chubby has a mask, although he does not like wearing it ... They venture out occasionally to stock up on supplies at local stores. ... ‘We went to the grocery store and they were testing everyone’s temperature at the door,’ he said. ‘There was one guy panicking, he kept on touching his forehead.’ Perez said he kept his distance.”

-- The State Department announced this morning that it will arrange extra flights for private citizens to evacuate Wuhan, beginning on Monday. Those traveling would be subject to screening, health observations and monitoring.

-- University officials here in the States are scrambling to prepare for the arrival of the virus on their campuses. Schools like Arizona State University, where a member of the community tested positive for the virus, are issuing travel restrictions to China, and some with campuses in and near Shanghai have been forced to delay the start of their spring semester. Several schools, including Baylor University and Miami University in Ohio, have tested students, isolating them in some cases. (Susan Svrluga and Nick Anderson)

-- Trump has had little to say in public about the growing virus, except to downplay its danger to the United States. From the AP: "We're very much involved with them, right now, on the virus that's going around," Trump said yesterday at the White House. He said he discussed the situation with Chinese President Xi Jinping and added that the two countries are "working very closely."

-- In Brazil, days of deadly floods have left thousands homeless and the nation's prevailing social inequality has only helped

drive the number of casualties. Terrence McCoy reports: “The death toll rose to 62 on Wednesday after another round of battering rains and landslides across the states of Espírito Santo and Minas Gerais, where waves of mud have knocked houses off cliffs and buried dozens of people alive. Belo Horizonte, the Minas Gerais state capital, has been hit particularly hard. More than 100 municipalities have announced states of emergency. ... Descendants of slaves and other poor migrants, unable to find housing in the cities, have historically been shunted into the communities known as favelas. ... This feature of urban life has aggravated the annual scourge of deadly landslides, especially in the country’s heavily populated southeast, where studies have shown the threat of mudslides is greatest. ... The government also plays a role. News reports show state and federal governments have consistently failed to meet funding goals to help mitigate the damage wrought by the annual problem.”

-- Israel is rushing to capitalize on Trump’s peace plan after Palestinians condemned it as hopelessly biased. Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report: “Even before the parties had finished poring over the map that described a possible Palestinian state on 70 percent of the West Bank, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu made clear he would immediately take steps to annex the other 30 percent — the location of more than 150 Jewish settlements — along with the Jordan Valley. ... The dizzying pace of events left all sides scrambling to assess what was changing and what remained of the dogged status quo. ...

“Groups of protesters turned out only in parts of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and in nearby Amman, Jordan. There were scenes of isolated rock-throwing and burning posters of President Trump and Netanyahu. More-serious clashes occurred in the West Bank on Wednesday, according to Israeli media reports, including the wounding of three protesters by Israeli security forces near Ramallah. ... Israeli settlers were also sorting through the deal's particulars, with mixed responses. They stood to achieve a long-cherished dream of having their hilltop towns and cities become normalized Israeli communities — patrolled by police instead of soldiers — but many balked at the price: a four-year freeze on building and the prospect of a Palestinian state.”

-- Netanyahu claimed another diplomatic victory after Vladimir Putin pardoned an Israeli backpacker. Ruth Eglash and Isabelle

Khrushudyan report: “The pit stop in Russia immediately drew widespread speculation that he would return home with Na’ama Issachar, 27, who was sentenced by a Russian court last October to 7½ years in prison for drug smuggling. ... Issachar had been returning to Israel from India via Moscow last spring when Russian police discovered less than a third of an ounce of hashish in her checked luggage. Since her case came to light last summer, Netanyahu, who often boasts about his warm ties with Putin, has faced mounting pressure to make a special plea to the Russian leader for her release. ... Issachar’s mother arrived in Moscow on Tuesday, but authorities denied her request to visit her daughter, apparently in a bid to delay the pardon until Netanyahu’s detour through Russia on Thursday.”

A construction crew works yesterday to clean up a fallen section of the U.S.-Mexico border wall as seen from Mexicali in Baja California. Newly installed panels fell over in high winds. (Stringer/AFP/Getty Images)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- High winds blew over newly installed panels of Trump's border wall, landing on trees on the Mexican side of the border. A

Customs and Border Patrol spokesman said the sections in Calexico, Calif., that fell had recently been laid so the concrete had not set.

(CNN)

-- U.S. life expectancy is ticking up as the number of fatal drug overdoses declines and cancer deaths drop. Joel Achenbach reports: “A decline in the death rate from cancer is the single largest driver of the small increase in life expectancy, the CDC reported. Five of the other nine leading causes of death also showed declines in death rates, including the top cause, heart disease, as well as unintentional injuries (which include overdoses), chronic lower respiratory diseases, stroke and Alzheimer's disease. Two more, diabetes and kidney disease, were essentially unchanged. Deaths from suicide and influenza and pneumonia increased. Despite the encouraging elements of the CDC mortality report, the broader pattern for American health remains sobering. Life expectancy improved by the tiniest of increments, from 78.6 to 78.7 years. That figure remains lower than the peak in U.S. life expectancy, at 78.9 years, in 2014."

-- Two former aspiring actresses testified that Harvey Weinstein sexually assaulted them in the mid-2000s. The women – model Tarale Wulff, who testified that Weinstein raped her in his apartment, and Dawn Dunning, who said Weinstein assaulted her and months later offered movie roles in exchange for sex – aren't officially named as victims in the case because of the statute of limitations, but both were allowed to serve as witnesses to corroborate the stories of the other women. The Manhattan District Attorney's Office is planning on calling a third supporting accuser, who is the subject of a case against Weinstein in Los Angeles. (Shayna Jacobs)

-- The South Dakota House passed a bill restricting medical treatments for transgender youths. This is the first state to take action on the flurry of bills nationwide that would restrict medical interventions for transgender children. (Emily Wax-Thibodeaux and Samantha Schmidt)

-- House Democrats unveiled a $760 billion infrastructure package that's an ambitious and at times detailed attempt at getting Trump to back a long-awaited bipartisan priority. Michael

Laris reports: The plan “came with a glaring — and strategic — omission: They avoided saying how the vast majority of it should be paid for, arguing that Trump should be out front on that issue. ... A spokesman for [McConnell] referred to comments the senator made in April about the possibility of passing a $2 trillion infrastructure bill ... He said an idea raised by Senate Democrats — paying for new infrastructure by rolling back some of the tax cuts — was a ‘non-starter.’ ... House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard E. Neal (D-Mass.) said he thinks a bipartisan deal is possible — and that holding back Democratic declarations on how to fund infrastructure will help that process along.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Alabama Senate candidate Jeff Sessions, fired by Trump as attorney general, attacked Bolton for speaking out about the president's conduct:

 Jeff Sessions  @jeffsessions · 8h
With regard to the @AmbJohnBolton situation, let me just say this: I did not write a book or go on CNN or criticize @realDonaldTrump for 3 VERY IMPORTANT REASONS...

 Jeff Sessions  @jeffsessions

FIRST - I don't believe it is the honorable thing to do. You are there to serve his agenda, not your own. He was elected, not you.

 6,941 10:57 PM - Jan 29, 2020

 1,840 people are talking about this

 Jeff Sessions  @jeffsessions · 8h
Replying to @jeffsessions
SECOND - It is an act of disloyalty to the administration one serves,
and tends to undermine the unity and teamwork needed to reach the highest level of effectiveness.

 Jeff Sessions  @jeffsessions

THIRD - it sets a very damaging and dangerous precedent. A President must have the ability to have candid conversations with his National Security Advisor, his AG, his SOS, etc., without fear that those conversations will end up in a book or a newspaper.

 8,332 10:59 PM - Jan 29, 2020

 2,675 people are talking about this

A former Justice Department inspector general cried foul as the Trump White House sought to censor Bolton:

Michael R. Bromwich  @mrbromwich · 12h

The idea that Bolton would draft a manuscript that contains “significant amounts of classified information” is ridiculous. He knows what’s classified and what’s not. This is tampering with the pre-publication process to intimidate and achieve political ends. twitter.com/jaketapper/sta...

Jake Tapper  @jaketapper

WH letter to Bolton warning him against publication of his book as it is right now

NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20504

January 23, 2020

Charles J. Cooper
Cooper & Kirk
1525 New Hampshire Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20036

SENT VIA ELECTRONIC MAIL TO C.COOPER@COOPERKIRK.COM

Dear Mr. Cooper:

Thank you for speaking yesterday by telephone. As we discussed, the National Security Council (NSC) Access Management directorate has been provided the manuscript submitted by your client, former Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs John Bolton, for prepublication review. Based on our preliminary review, the manuscript appears to contain significant amounts of classified information. It also appears that some of this classified information is at the TOP SECRET level, which is defined by Executive Order 13526 as information that “reasonably could be expected to cause exceptionally grave harm to the national security” of the United States if disclosed without authorization. Under federal law and the nondisclosure agreements your client signed as a condition for gaining access to classified information, the manuscript may not be published or otherwise disclosed without the deletion of this classified information.

The manuscript remains under review in order for us to do our best to assist your client by identifying the classified information within the manuscript, while at the same time ensuring that publication does not harm the national security of the United States. We will do our best to work with you to ensure your client’s ability to tell his story in a manner that protects U.S. national security. We will be in touch with you shortly with additional, more detailed guidance regarding next steps that should enable you to revise the manuscript and move forward as expeditiously as possible.

Sincerely,

Ellen J. Knight
Senior Director for Records, Access, and
Information Security Management

Michael R. Bromwich

@mrbromwich

What a coincidence that @LindseyGrahamSC et al. yesterday suggested reviewing the manuscript in a classified setting, and today the WH claims it contains classified info. This is a drug deal concocted by the WH and GOP members to avoid testimony from Bolton and GOP senators to avoid testimony from Bolton.

1,299 6:46 PM - Jan 29, 2020

488 people are talking about this

A former lawyer for the National Security Agency, who is now at Brookings and runs Lawfare, reviewed Bolton's options:

Susan Hennessey  @Susan_Hennessey · 9h

The smartest thing John Bolton could do for his book at this point is to sit down tonight with a journalist and verbally go on the record with the Ukraine story.

Susan Hennessey

@Susan_Hennessey

The best outcome for Bolton is to be called to testify, which resolves nearly all of his pre-publication review issues. An interview is his best chance of forcing the question.

3,389 9:23 PM - Jan 29, 2020

598 people are talking about this

Rep. Ted Lieu (D-Calif.) mocked Dershowitz's arguments:

Ted Lieu ✓
@tedlieu

Dear @TheJusticeDept: Today I am announcing I am going to violate federal law and solicit a foreign government to help my re-election campaign, because it's in the public interest.

Just kidding. I'm not a criminal like @realDonaldTrump or a crazed enabler like @AlanDersh.
twitter.com/cbseveningnews...

CBS Evening News ✓ @CBSEveningNews
Replying to @CBSEveningNews

Pres. Trump's counsel Alan Dershowitz: "If a president does something which he believes will help him get elected in the public interest, that cannot be the kind of quid pro quo that results in impeachment." cbsn.ws/2GKOq7X

♥ 39K 11:56 PM - Jan 29, 2020

💬 11.9K people are talking about this

So did Sen. Chris Murphy (D-Conn.):

Chris Murphy
@ChrisMurphyCT

The President's new argument today, that anything he does to benefit his re-election, no matter how corrupt, is unimpeachable, is

B
A N
A N
A
S

 27K 9:00 PM - Jan 29, 2020

 6,167 people are talking about this

From a former FBI special agent who now teaches at Yale:

MSNBC's Rachel Maddow noted a suspicious, unexplained change in the DOJ position on former Trump national security adviser Michael Flynn's sentence for lying to the FBI about his Russian contacts:

Rachel Maddow MSNBC ✓

@maddow

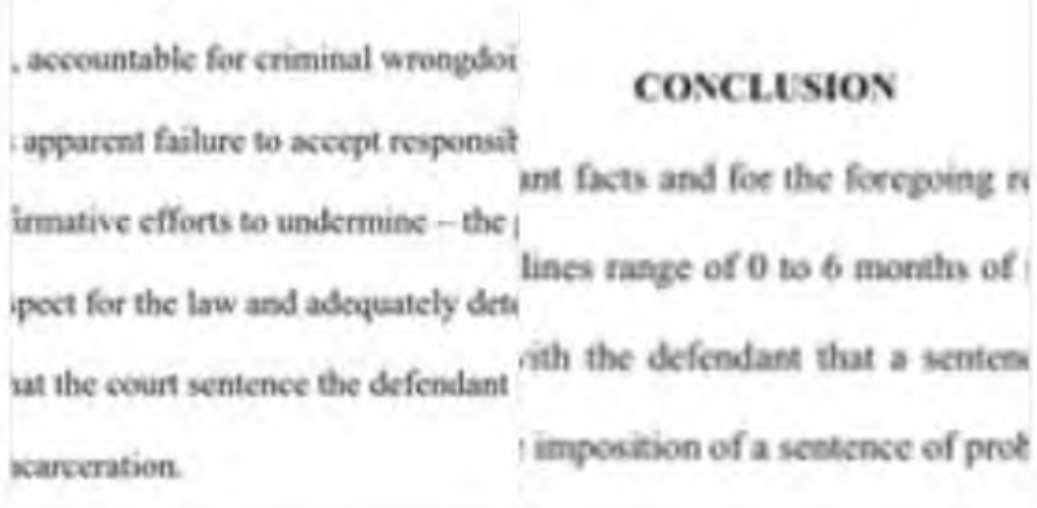

22 days ago, DOJ prosecutors in the Mike Flynn case were asking for a sentence of imprisonment. Now they say they're not.

What happened in the last 22 days?

twitter.com/adamgoldmanNYT...

Adam Goldman ✓ @adamgoldmanNYT

Prosecutors in Flynn case soften stance but why? First filing was 1/7/20. The second is from a filing today.

♥ 11.9K 11:27 PM - Jan 29, 2020

💬 7,615 people are talking about this

The Department of Homeland Security's acting deputy secretary celebrated the detention of another group of migrants:

Jared Kushner, Trump's senior adviser and son-in-law who is in charge of the Middle East portfolio, asked people to "divorce" themselves from all the history of the region. That's not how history works. You can't divorce yourself from it:

The Hill ✓
@thehill

Jared Kushner: "What I would encourage people to do is try to divorce yourself from all of the history that's happened over the years and read this plan."

♡ 411 8:01 PM - Jan 29, 2020

💬 1,083 people are talking about this

And Vanessa Bryant, Kobe Bryant's widow, shared an emotional message days after her husband and daughter died in a helicopter crash:

Jake Tapper ✓
@jaketapper

Vanessa Bryant posts on Instagram

... were so incredibly blessed to have them in our lives. I wish they were here with us forever. They were our beautiful blessings taken from us too soon.

I'm not sure what our lives hold beyond today, and it's impossible to imagine life without them. But we wake up each day, trying to keep pushing because Kobe, and our baby girl, Gigi, are shining on us to light the way. Our love for them is endless — and that's to say, immeasurable. I just wish I could hug them, kiss them and bless them. Have them here with us, forever.

Thank you for sharing your joy, your grief and your support with us. We ask that you grant us the respect and privacy we will need to navigate this new reality.

To honor our Team Mamba family, the Mamba Sports Foundation has set up the MambaOnThree Fund to help support the other families affected by this tragedy. To donate, please go to MambaOnThree.org.

To further Kobe and Gianna's legacy in youth sports, please visit MambaSportsFoundation.org.

Liked by laurenmpratapas and 637,137 others

vanessabryant My girls and I want to thank the

5,867 1:19 AM - Jan 30, 2020

1,202 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert had a few questions about Dershowitz's defense of Trump:

“Late Night’s” Amber Ruffin sang a little ditty about Anita Baker endorsing Andrew Yang:

And a “Full Frontal” correspondent went to Iowa to find out if the Iowa caucus is a relic of the past:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post

To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov

Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Trump doesn't necessarily think Biden is his biggest 2020 threat. At least, not anymore.
Date: Friday, January 31, 2020 10:46:56 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Trump doesn't necessarily think Biden is his biggest 2020 threat. At least, not anymore.

Trump on impeachment at Iowa rally: 'They want to nullify your ballots'

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

DES MOINES — The centerpiece of Joe Biden’s closing pitch to Iowa voters is that he’s the Democrat whom President Trump fears the most. The impeachment trial has helped establish that this was probably the case last summer when Trump allegedly tried to coerce Ukraine into announcing an investigation of the former vice president by freezing vital military assistance and withholding a White House meeting. But is it still true?

Trump flew here Thursday night for a rally to counterprogram the caucuses. With Democrats apparently lacking the votes to call witnesses with firsthand knowledge of his intentions, putting him on the verge of winning acquittal in the Senate, the president delivered an 86-minute speech that offered several clues into how he now sees the race. He talked more about Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) than anyone else, followed by Biden and then former mayors Pete Buttigieg and Mike Bloomberg.

In a wistful mood about 2016, Trump twice told the crowd that he wishes he could face Hillary Clinton in a rematch. Then he posed a question to the capacity crowd: "Who is tougher: Her, crazy Bernie, sleepy Joe, Boot-edge-edge? Who would be the closest?" Members of the crowd yelled out various names, none discernably louder than the others. "I don't know," Trump continued, shaking his head. "I feel bad because it's too late for her to get in. I kept hoping, but I think honestly, I think that sleepy Joe, crazy Bernie, I don't even want to put Boot-edge-edge in, but I think they'd actually be tougher than her."

As Trump accused Biden of being frequently confused, a woman in the crowd yelled: "It's over for him!" Trump pointed at her and smiled. "It was over for him, actually, if you know him, a long time ago," the president said. "Now it's really over!" The crowd laughed.

To be sure, just because Trump publicly downplays Biden's prospects at a rally doesn't mean he thinks the former vice president isn't a threat. But this president often spends more time trashing whoever is on his mind. If anything, it was notable whom he didn't discuss.

Save for a passing reference to "Pocahontas," his nickname for Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.), Trump mentioned none of the women currently running against him. Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) loves to talk in her stump speech about how Trump tweeted when she announced her candidacy in a blizzard last February that "she looked like a Snowman(woman).” But Trump ignored her entirely on Thursday night.

Trump described South Bend, Ind., as a “failed” city and blamed Buttigieg. “It’s doing so badly,” he said, not citing evidence. He criticized Bloomberg for not competing in Iowa or the other three early states, asking rhetorically: “What happened to Mini Mike? Where is he?”

The Knapp Center at Drake University was packed to its capacity of about 7,200. Hundreds of people who had registered for tickets were nonetheless turned away by the fire marshal, but they stayed to watch Trump’s marathon monologue on a Jumbotron outside the arena, even though it was 29 degrees. It’s a reminder of the passion the president’s core supporters feel. None of the Democratic candidates fill arenas the way Trump can.

Millie Maddy, 16, and Izzy Bradley, 17, of Albia, Iowa, applaud as they watch a live feed of Trump's rally in Des Moines. (Sue Ogrocki/AP)

I asked a dozen Trump supporters outside the arena who they think would be the most formidable opponent against the president in a general election. They generally downplayed Biden's strength and dismissed his purported appeal to middle-of-the-road voters. One guy mentioned Buttigieg's outsider status as compelling. Another floated Klobuchar's moderate credentials. Others noted how much Sanders seems to energize the left in a way Biden cannot.

Trump's visit freshly illustrated his ability to suck up all the political oxygen in 2020 and dominate the conversation. As he spoke in Des Moines, of course, four of the senators seeking the Democratic nomination were stuck in Washington for impeachment jury duty. But he has demonstrated quite a knack for using the bully pulpit of the presidency to influence the issues being debated.

Some of the biggest flashpoints in the Democratic race have involved fights over who is the most electable. Democrats desperately want to oust Trump. Many liberals would be willing to support a moderate if they felt it was required to achieve that end. While Biden asserts, almost as a given, that he's best positioned to topple the incumbent, every other candidate has emphasized their case for why they post up best against Trump. Klobuchar notes the Trump counties she carried on the way to a landslide 2018 reelection in Minnesota. Warren has been highlighting data that show women faring better, including in the midterms. The signs people wave at Sanders rallies, for example, say "Bernie beats Trump."

Trump cares deeply about crowd sizes, and last night he ridiculed Biden for drawing small crowds around Iowa. He also accused the former vice president of frequently getting confused about which state he's in. "Joe had a crowd that was so small the other day that they had to set up a roundtable," Trump said.

Democratic strategists aligned with the party establishment suspect that Trump might have stepped up attacks on Sanders lately not because he's now leading in some national polls but to help elevate the democratic socialist and possibly boost turnout for him in the caucuses.

Trump did signal, for instance, that he sees Medicare-for-all as a potentially fatal issue for Sanders as he warned that people would lose their private health insurance under the proposal. "But I'm not going to knock it because I want Bernie to bring it right up to the end," he quipped, "and we'll debate it the day before the election."

It seems clear that Trump will seek to brand whomever Democrats nominate as a "socialist," even if that person has always categorically rejected the label. "During this campaign season, the good people of Iowa have had a front row seat to the lunacy and the madness of the totally sick left," Trump said at the rally. "In short, this election is a choice between American freedom and democratic socialism and in some cases, in my opinion, it's worse than socialism. Socialism is a kind word by comparison. The Democrats will lose because America will never be a socialist country."

Previewing the nasty race to come, Trump used hyperbole to attack

the Green New Deal. “They want to kill our cows,” he said. “That means you’re next.”

Joe Biden campaigns Thursday in Waukee, Iowa. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

-- Trump’s July 25 phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, in which the president requested the “favor,” came two hours after Trump live-tweeted about a poll he saw highlighted on Fox News. “When Democrats are polled, the number one thing they’re looking for in a candidate for 2020 is somebody who can beat Donald Trump,” Fox host Steve Doocy told viewers during the segment that morning. “And right now, so many people go, ‘Well, the only person that kind of qualifies for that is Joe Biden.’”

But that was now six-months-and-a-week ago. Polling does not bolster this conventional wisdom the way it did in the summer. A Washington Post-ABC News poll published earlier this week found Biden leading Trump 50 percent to 46 percent among registered voters, which is within the four-point margin of sampling error. Bloomberg had 49 percent support to Trump’s 46 percent. Sanders received 49 percent to Trump’s 47 percent, while Klobuchar stood at 48 percent to Trump’s 47 percent. Warren tied with Trump at 48 percent. Buttigieg trailed 45 percent to Trump’s 48 percent, but that’s still within the margin for error.

Biden and his main rivals had double-digit advantages over Trump in our fall poll. But the president’s approval rating has ticked up during the impeachment saga. His improved standing is driven by improving support among independents, who approve of his handling of the economy.

-- Biden’s campaign has argued that the impeachment trial proves Republicans still fear him most. Sen. Joni Ernst (R-Iowa) gleefully predicted to reporters on Monday that Trump defense attorney Pam Bondi’s portrayal of Biden as corrupt at the impeachment trial would hurt him with Democratic caucus-goers. Sen. Rick Scott (R-Fla.) made a token ad buy to air a commercial in Iowa this weekend, on Fox News, accusing Biden of “corruption.” Former Trump strategist Steve Bannon was quoted earlier this week suggesting that Biden is “the strongest Democratic candidate.”

Last night, Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-Ga.) asked Trump’s defense team about a Politico article that noted Biden had opposed witnesses during Bill Clinton’s impeachment trial in 1999. Trump attorney Patrick Philbin then cited the so-called “Biden rule” to argue for a vote against witnesses. This reads like opposition research, but it’s a timely reminder of Biden’s very long paper trail. He was first elected to the Senate in 1972. Republicans also dubiously invoked another so-called “Biden rule” to justify not scheduling a hearing for Supreme Court nominee Merrick Garland during an election year after Antonin Scalia died in 2016.

“Please keep it coming – because this validation from you is the best we can get,” said Biden chief strategist Mike Donilon. “We will rally around your fear of the vice president.”

Biden didn’t mention any of his Democratic opponents during a 19-minute speech on Thursday morning at an elementary school in Waukee, Iowa, but he did mention Trump 64 times. “In Joe Biden’s America, the president’s tax returns will not be a secret,” Biden said. “Political self-interest will not be confused with national interest. And no one, not even the president of the United States, will be above the law.”

-- Sanders edges out Biden 27 percent to 26 percent among Democratic primary voters nationally, according to a new NBC-Wall Street Journal poll published this morning. Warren has dropped to a distant third place, with 15 percent support. She was even with Sanders in their last two polls. Bloomberg has jumped into fourth place among Democrats nationally, garnering nine percent.

“The poll revealed a sharp generational divide in the nominating contest,” per the Journal’s write-up. “Mr. Sanders held his largest lead ever—a nearly-30-point advantage—over Mr. Biden among primary voters under age 50, and he led by nearly 40 points among the youngest voters, those under age 35. Mr. Biden, by contrast, led Mr. Sanders by 25 points among people ages 50 and older. ... One danger for Mr. Biden is that older voters also account for much of the newfound strength of Mr. Bloomberg, who is the first choice of 14% of those ages 50 and up.”

-- Making his closing argument in Iowa, Buttigieg contrasted himself with both Biden and Sanders – attacking them by name for the first time. “I hear Vice President Biden saying that this is no time to take a risk on someone new,” Buttigieg said yesterday in Decorah, Iowa. “But history has shown us that the biggest risk we could take with a very important election coming up is to look to the same Washington playbook and recycle the same arguments and expect that to work against a president like Donald Trump, who is new in kind.”

The Daily 202's BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Senate trial: The final day of questioning

MORE ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Senate Republicans are increasingly confident they have the votes to block new testimony at the president's impeachment trial, which would could set the stage for a vote to acquit Trump soon. Mike DeBonis, Seung Min Kim and David Fahrenthold report: "Sen. Susan Collins (Maine) said she will break with Republican leadership and vote to hear witnesses. But ... Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.) ... announced Friday that he's ready to end the trial even though he found Trump's behavior 'inappropriate' and leave the president's fate in the hands of voters during the upcoming election. ... Along with Collins, Sen. Mitt Romney (Utah) is still viewed as the likeliest Republican contender to side with Democrats for more testimony, while Sen. Lisa Murkowski (Alaska) could join as well. She said late Thursday night that she is going to review her notes and reflect on the decision. It's unclear who would be the fourth vote...

"One outside possibility is that the Senate will deadlock on the question of calling witnesses. That would put Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. in the position of breaking the tie — a role Democrats are urging him to play. But there is little expectation Roberts would weigh in on such a politically thorny question and instead would allow the tie to result in no witness being subpoenaed. ... [Republicans] appeared unconcerned he would take any decisive action. ...

“In the 1999 impeachment trial of President Bill Clinton, the Senate heard a combined five hours and 28 minutes of closing arguments. Then, the Senate entered four days of closed-door jury deliberations totaling nearly 26 hours, before voting to acquit Clinton on two articles of impeachment. In this case, some Republicans said, they want to skip the closing arguments and the deliberations and move ahead to the last step. “That would leave Senate Democrats with few cards to play. They could not stop an acquittal vote. But they could delay it — and force Republican senators to take uncomfortable votes against hearing more evidence or allowing more debate. One idea proposed by Sen. Chris Van Hollen (D-Md.) is a motion to require Roberts to issue a subpoena for additional documents and witnesses if he thinks they are relevant to the trial. It would probably fail ...

“Even if Democrats force extra votes, the final vote to acquit Trump could come as early as Friday night or Saturday, unless leaders decide to move it to Monday, just one day before Trump’s State of the Union address. On Thursday — on the last day of questions and answers in the Senate — the day was mostly devoted to softballs, lobbed by senators at their own side. ... At the start of the day’s session, Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) submitted a question for Roberts to read aloud. The question contained the name of a person who conservative media have alleged is the intelligence community whistleblower ... Roberts didn't read it. ... After that, Paul stood up, gathered his papers and walked out of the Senate chamber to address reporters. He then said the name that Roberts would not."

-- "While many Republicans have expressed hopes that the expected failure of a vote to call new witnesses would mean a rapid end to Trump's impeachment trial, officials are warning that might not be the case," Rachael Bade and DeBonis report. "A longer schedule could mean the trial stretches beyond Monday's Iowa caucuses, further complicating the campaign schedules of the four senators seeking the Democratic nomination who are sitting as jurors. A senior administration official and two congressional officials said Friday that it was unlikely that senators would rush immediately to a verdict if the witness vote fails. ...

"The administration official and a congressional official raised the possibility that the Senate could take up a new procedural resolution laying out rules for the trial's endgame — which could include time for closing arguments, private deliberations and public speeches by senators. ... Should the Senate embark on this process, the senior administration official said, a final verdict could be delayed as late as Wednesday — after the Iowa caucuses on Monday and Trump's State of the Union address on Tuesday. But a congressional official noted that much depends on what a majority of senators want to do: A 51-vote majority could choose to hasten the final verdict at any point."

-- It's no consolation for Democrats, but Alexander took a swipe at Trump's conduct as he announced he will vote to acquit: "It was inappropriate for the president to ask a foreign leader to investigate his political opponent and to withhold United States aid to encourage that investigation,” the retiring senator said in a statement. “When elected officials inappropriately interfere with such investigations, it undermines the principle of equal justice under the law. But the Constitution does not give the Senate the power to remove the president from office and ban him from this year’s ballot simply for actions that are inappropriate.”

-- Bolton writes in his draft manuscript that Trump directed him to help with the alleged pressure campaign to extract damaging information on Democrats from Ukrainian officials more than two months before the July 25 call, the New York Times reports: “Mr. Trump gave the instruction, Mr. Bolton wrote, during an Oval Office conversation in early May that included the acting White House chief of staff, Mick Mulvaney, the president’s personal lawyer Rudolph W. Giuliani and the White House counsel, Pat A. Cipollone, who is now leading the president’s impeachment defense. Mr. Trump told Mr. Bolton to call [Zelensky], who had recently won election as president of Ukraine, to ensure Mr. Zelensky would meet with Mr. Giuliani, who was planning a trip to Ukraine to discuss the investigations that the president sought, in Mr. Bolton’s account. Mr. Bolton never made the call, he wrote.”

-- During a long-scheduled speech in Austin, Tex., Bolton voiced support for the government officials who testified before the House. From KXAN: “Bolton defended former diplomatic and state department officials Fiona Hill, Tim Morrison, Alex Vindman, Bill Taylor, and Marie Yovanovitch. ‘All of them acted in the best interest of the country as they saw it and consistent to what they thought our policies were,' said Bolton, during the question-and-answer time after his keynote speech. He went on to say members of the Trump Administration should 'feel they're able to speak their minds without retribution.' 'The idea that somehow testifying to what you think is true is destructive to the system of government we have — I think, is very nearly the reverse — the exact reverse of the truth,' said Bolton."

-- Jennifer Williams, who testified in the House inquiry, will leave Vice President Pence's office two months earlier than scheduled.

She plans to join Central Command in the spring as a deputy foreign policy adviser, Politico reports. She will be advising the command on Middle East policy issues and has had the job lined up since last fall. Marc Short, Pence's chief of staff, said she "requested in writing an early departure."

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "This is a happy period for us," Trump told supporters during his rally here Thursday in Des Moines. "It's a happy period because we call it 'impeachment light.'"

New video shows Parnas attending Trump fundraiser at Mar-a-Lago

-- Trump's defense team said Giuliani had the right to act as an intermediary for Trump with the Ukrainians, even as they also insisted the president's personal lawyer was not carrying out official U.S. policy. Deputy White House Counsel Patrick Philbin said it would not be "improper" for a president "in some circumstances ... to rely on a personal confidant" to relay messages back and forth with a foreign government. "That's not prohibited." (Felicia Sonmez)

-- A new video recording shows the access former Giuliani associates Lev Parnas and Igor Fruman had to Trump at a Mar-a-Lago donor event. Josh Dawsey, Rosalind Helderman and Paul Sonne report: Ten days before Parnas and Fruman dined with Trump at his D.C. hotel, "they were part of a small group of Republican Party donors who met with the president at ... his Florida estate ... While it was known that Fruman and Parnas had attended an event at Mar-a-Lago, the focus of the event, the timing and who else was in attendance had not been made public. ... The recordings of the two events undercut Trump's repeated assertions that he does not know Parnas and Fruman ... Taken together, the two recordings provide a window into Trump's close interactions with high-dollar donors, despite his pledge to 'drain the swamp.'"

-- Trump defense lawyer Jay Sekulow refused to disclose who is paying Giuliani's bills to defend the president, raising suspicions. Philip Bump reports: "A group of Democratic senators ... decided to pose the question of Giuliani's income to the House impeachment managers and Trump's legal team. ... [Sekulow] started talking before he even got to the microphone, he was so indignant. Or so he'd have us believe."

-- White House Counsel Pat Cipollone's defense has placed him on televisions screens across America, though he would have preferred it was not so. Manuel Roig-Franzia and Josh Dawsey profile him: “He’d argued before the trial that cameras should be banned from the chamber. He believed that Trump’s case could be damaged by the re-airing of comments made by the president and acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, who’d said at a news conference that the media should ‘get over it’ because quid pro quos ‘happen all the time’ in U.S. foreign policy ... But keeping cameras out also would have had the effect of maintaining his carefully nurtured below-the-radar profile. ... Prior to Cipollone’s name emerging as a contender for Trump’s White House counsel job, he’d never even appeared in the news pages of his hometown newspaper — The Post.”

-- Commentary from The Post’s opinion page:

- The Editorial Board: "If Senate Republicans give Trump the coverup he wants, his acquittal will be worthless."
- George Conway, conservative lawyer and husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway: "Don't let the defense fool you. This impeachment is all about corruption."
- Dana Milbank: "The impeachment trial hurtles toward its worst-case conclusion."
- Marc Thiessen: "Republican senators are being set up by the House."
- Fareed Zakaria: "How the story of impeachment tells the story of polarization."

- Jennifer Rubin: “The reasons not to call John Bolton are ridiculous.”
- Karen Tumulty: “Bolton is teaching Trump the difference between loyalty and fealty.”
- William Treanor: “Trump’s attorneys have butchered a crucial Founder’s take on impeachment.”
- Keith Whittington: “The Senate is likely to acquit Trump. It should still reject [Alan] Dershowitz’s logic.”
- Harry Litman: “Dershowitz may have argued himself out of relevance.”

-- The White House will propose keeping aid to Ukraine intact in the new budget, a departure from past efforts to slash assistance. Erica Werner and Jeff Stein report: “The money at issue comes from two programs: one administered by the Pentagon, and the other by the State Department. ... As White House officials prepared their 2021 budget request, set to be released Feb. 10, the Ukraine financing program was once again on the chopping block, with officials weighing another attempt to cut it down to $20 million, according to two people with knowledge of the deliberations who spoke on the condition of anonymity to disclose internal discussions. But after inquiries, ... OMB denied that any cut would be proposed, with a spokesperson saying the budget would extend existing funding levels.”

-- Nancy Pelosi has stepped out of the impeachment spotlight after dominating the initial debate. Returning from a 10-day break that included a visit to Poland, the speaker of the House gave a news conference yesterday that only briefly touched on the trial. (Paul

Kane)

-- But her caucus's investigations into Trump will continue after the trial: A federal judge said he's inclined to uphold House subpoenas for documents important to the probe of the administration's foiled plans to add a citizenship question to the census. Spencer Hsu reports: "Judge Randolph D. Moss said he would rule quickly after a three-hour hearing in Washington, D.C., in which he said courts should not micromanage disputes between the other two branches of government. Moss rejected the White House's sweeping constitutional claim that Congress cannot sue to enforce its subpoena powers and that it can indefinitely withhold communications between federal agency officials through a 'protective assertion' of executive privilege."

-- Senate investigators conducted an extensive interview of the IRS whistleblower who alleged improper political interference in the audit of the president or the vice president. The whistleblower delivered transcribed remarks to staffers for Sens. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) and Ron Wyden (D-Ore.), the chairman and top Democrat on the Senate Finance Committee, Jeff Stein and Erica Werner report.

-- E. Jean Carroll, the New York writer who last summer accused Trump of raping her in the 1990s, requested that the president submit a DNA sample to determine whether his genetic material is on the black dress she said she was wearing during the alleged assault. Michael Brice-Saddler reports: "Carroll's lawyers served notice to a Trump attorney on Thursday, asking that Trump provide a sample for 'analysis and comparison against unidentified male DNA present on the dress' ... Carroll's lawyers requested that Trump provide the DNA sample on March 2 in Washington. ... Trump has vehemently denied the allegation and called it fake news, asserting that he had 'never met this person in my life' and that Carroll was 'not my type.' He also said Carroll had made up the story to promote her book. The request for DNA comes after Carroll sued Trump for defamation in New York state court in November, arguing he had smeared her and damaged her career by calling her a liar.”

Flight attendants deplane at Brisbane airport in Australia on Friday. (Glenn Hunt/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Health officials confirmed the first U.S. case of person-to-person transmission of the coronavirus is in Chicago, and the World Health Organization finally declared it a public health emergency. Overnight, the State Department also issued a “do not travel” advisory for all of China. That’s the highest warning level, and it previously only applied to the province where the outbreak began.

“State and federal officials said the sixth infected person in the United States is married to the Chicago-area woman who contracted the virus when she traveled to Wuhan, China,” Lenny Bernstein, Lena Sun, Siobhán O'Grady and Yasmeen Abutaleb report.

“The unidentified man, who is in his 60s, has been isolated in the same suburban hospital as his wife since Tuesday, when he began exhibiting symptoms consistent with the early stages of the virus, including fever, coughing and shortness of breath ... In Chicago, Public Health Commissioner Allison Arwady said the new U.S. patient was placed in isolation Tuesday, the same day he exhibited symptoms. The man, who has underlying health conditions, is in stable condition at a medical center in Hoffman Estates, a suburb of Chicago, where his wife is also hospitalized ...

“Officials warned a jittery public, however, to expect additional cases and perhaps more person-to-person transmissions of the virus. ‘Moving forward, we can expect to see more cases, and more cases means the potential for more person-to-person spread,’ said Nancy Messonnier, director of the National Center for Immunization and Respiratory Diseases at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Nonetheless, the overall risk to people in the United States is still considered quite low, officials said. They advised U.S. residents to take the kinds of precautions they would to guard against seasonal flu — which already has killed at least 8,200 people in late 2019 and early 2020 — including frequent hand-washing and staying home when they are sick. There is no need for face masks in the United States, Messonnier said.”

“Around the globe, however, and particularly in China, the respiratory illness caused by the newly identified virus continued on a widening, destructive path ... The virus had killed 213 people — all of them in China — and infected more than 9,700 as of Friday. About 90 cases have been recorded outside China — including the first two in Italy, both Chinese tourists ... Two cases of coronavirus were confirmed in Britain, while South Korea confirmed an 11th case. ... Airlines are cutting or completely canceling flights to China, a nation of 1.4 billion people ... The union representing 15,000 American Airlines pilots sued the company to halt the carrier’s U.S.-China service, citing ‘serious, and in many ways still unknown, health threats posed by the coronavirus.’”

-- “China, anxious to shield Communist Party leaders from blame, dismissed a public health official over her handling of the crisis,” Shibani Mahtani reports on our special live blog. “In Hong Kong, officials closed schools until March as the number of confirmed cases rose to 12 and residents faced supply shortages.” And outcry is building over Australia’s plan to quarantine Wuhan evacuees in an offshore migrant detention center, O’Grady reports.

-- Trump is under growing pressure to mount a coordinated federal response to the coronavirus threat. David Nakamura, Abutaleb and Dawsey report: “The White House has sought to tamp down criticism from Democrats in recent days by projecting an air of confidence and competence, with Trump presiding late Wednesday over an interagency briefing in the Situation Room ... ‘This is no cause for urgent panic in any way in the United States,’ Adm. Brett Giroir, assistant secretary of health, told reporters at the White House on Thursday. ... One senior administration official said Trump has been hesitant to speak out because some aides have cautioned that he could unnecessarily cause public alarm — and assured him that China is working hard to keep the virus under control. But increasingly, there is a feeling among aides that the president must say more..."

-- Facebook will remove fake cures and other harmful misinformation shared about the coronavirus. Tony Romm reports: "The social-networking giant said in a blog post that its efforts, building off its policies that prohibit users from causing real-world harm, would result in the removal of dangerous claims, such as those that suggest drinking bleach cures the coronavirus, as well as hashtags that promote falsehoods on its photo-sharing site Instagram. ... Facebook also said it would start steering users to more authoritative sources of information from the World Health Organization. Facebook also said it had provided free advertising credits to help organizations run coronavirus education campaigns."

Afghan Army commandos attend their graduation ceremony on Jan. 13 after a three-and-a-half-month training program at the Commando Training Center on the outskirts of Kabul. (Rahmat Gul/AP)

-- Taliban attacks have reached record-high levels in Afghanistan. Susannah George reports: “During the last three months of 2019, the Taliban and other insurgent groups launched more than 8,200 attacks against Afghan troops, American forces and civilians, more than any other fourth quarter since 2010, the U.S. Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction said in its quarterly report released Thursday. ... Overall, the watchdog report found that attacks launched by the Taliban and other insurgent groups increased by 6 percent in 2019 from the previous year.”

-- Iraq said its military has resumed operations with the U.S.-led coalition against ISIS, which were suspended after Trump ordered the drone strike that killed Qasem Soleimani. Louisa

Loveluck reports: “A statement from the office of Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi said the missions have resumed in an attempt to maximize progress against the regrouping Islamist militants ahead of a new U.S.-Iraqi agreement that could lead to a significant reduction of the U.S.-led coalition’s troop presence.”

-- The House passed two measures seeking to restrain Trump from targeting Iran militarily. Karoun Demirjian reports: “The legislation would prohibit Trump from using federal funds to strike Iran without prior approval, and repeal an 18-year-old law that he and his advisers have cited to justify killing a top Iranian general earlier this month. Both measures have earned limited Republican support and are expected to face difficult odds in the Senate, where GOP leaders can easily block them from coming to the floor for a vote.”

-- A leaked Customs and Border Protection memo shows U.S. border officers working at Canadian ports of entry were directed to detain and question travelers of Iranian descent, including American citizens, in the wake of the Soleimani strike. Citing a high “threat alert,” the document states that, among others, anyone born in Iran, Lebanon or the Palestinian territories between 1961 and 2001 should be vetted. (CNN)

-- Trump’s border wall is vulnerable to flash floods, which means it will require hundreds of storm gates to prevent it from being knocked over. Nick Miroff reports: The gates “must be left open for months every summer during ‘monsoon season’ in the desert, according to U.S. border officials, agents and engineers familiar with the plans. The open, unmanned gates in remote areas already have allowed for the easy entry of smugglers and migrants into the United States. ... [Trump's wall] effectively acts as a sewer grate that traps the debris; when clogged, the barriers cannot withstand the power of the runoff. Because the gates typically are located in isolated areas that lack electricity, they cannot be operated from afar."

-- The "longest ever" drug-smuggling tunnel was discovered at the U.S.-Mexico border, CBP said. Kim Bellware reports: "Hidden 70 feet beneath a small industrial building in Tijuana, Mexico, lays a long and sophisticated passageway — complete with a railway, plumbing and ventilation system. It stretches the length of almost 12 football fields, and U.S. Customs and Border Protection officials said Mexican narcotics traffickers had used the tunnel to smuggle drugs across the border, into an industrial area of San Diego."

-- Trump is expected to reveal his travel ban expansion today. A draft of the updated ban that was being considered would place immigration restrictions on an additional six countries. (Politico)

-- Heat and high winds may intensify the bush fires that continue advancing towards Australia's capital of Canberra. Andrew Freedman reports: "That fire is burning in Namadgi National Park and was accidentally started by a military helicopter used for firefighting."

-- New data confirms that Antarctica's most dangerous glacier is melting from below. Chris Mooney reports: "The unprecedented research, part of a multimillion-dollar British and U.S. initiative to study the remote Thwaites Glacier, involved drilling through nearly 2,000 feet of ice to measure water temperatures in a narrow cavity where the glacier first connects with the ocean. This is one of the most difficult-to-reach locations on Earth. At a region known as the ‘grounding line,” where the ice transitions between resting on bedrock and floating on the ocean, scientists measured water temperatures of about 0 degrees Celsius (32 degrees Fahrenheit). That is more than 2 degrees warmer than the freezing point in that location, said David Holland, a New York University glaciologist.”

-- In other important environmental news, the Trump administration is working to permanently weaken a law to protect birds. Darryl Fears and Juliet Eilperin report: “Interior Department officials said Thursday that they will propose regulations clarifying that individuals and industrial operators, such as oil, gas and wind companies, will not be penalized if they accidentally kill birds — even on a massive scale. ... Since guidelines under the administration’s interpretation of the law were issued in April 2018, hundreds of ducks, geese, herons and migrating birds have perished in oil pits, on utility lines and in other operations without penalty, according to documents compiled by conservation groups.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Former Maryland congressman John Delaney (D) dropped out of the presidential race:

John Delaney ✓
@JohnDelaney

It has been a privilege to campaign for the Democratic nomination for President, but it is clear that God has a different purpose for me at this moment in time. Read my full statement here:

1/19johndelaney.com/2020/01/31/joh...

John Delaney Announces Decision to Withdraw Fro...

DES MOINES, IA - Today, 2020 Presidential candidate John Delaney announces his decision to withdraw from the 2020
johndelaney.com

♡ 64 12:55 PM - Jan 31, 2020

💬 57 people are talking about this

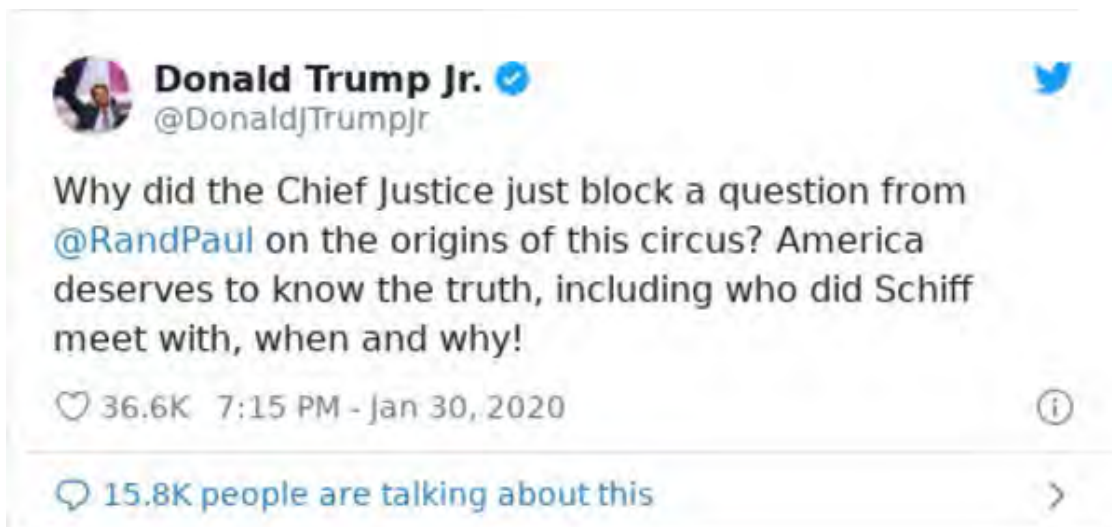

Delaney told CNN he doesn't want to take support away from other moderate candidates in Monday's Iowa caucuses. (Amy B Wang)

Trump defense lawyer Alan Dershowitz tried to walk back some of his more extreme legal arguments on the president's behalf, as he found himself widely mocked and ridiculed by a chorus of constitutional scholars from across the ideological spectrum:

The president's eldest son expressed support for Rand Paul's efforts to out the alleged whistleblower:

Lead impeachment manager Adam Schiff accused the Trump administration of rank hypocrisy:

Rep. Justin Amash (Mich.), who declared his independence from the GOP after endorsing impeachment, slammed the Senate for what he describes as an institutional failure:

The former top lawyer at the FBI (Jim Comey's right-hand man) weighed in on the Q&A at the trial:

From a former House GOP staffer and ex-CIA officer who sought the presidency as an independent in 2016:

Evan McMullin ✓
@EvanMcMullin

Republican leaders in Congress believe—and privately say—that they fear the country is quickly changing in ways that may soon deprive them of power, and that they must use the power they have now to delay it as long as possible, even by harming the Republic if necessary.

♡ 20.6K 3:17 PM - Jan 30, 2020

💬 12.6K people are talking about this

Trump tweeted a picture of himself getting briefed on the coronavirus, and some alumni of the intelligence community were shocked that the CIA's live feed was included in what went out:

Aki Peritz
@AkiPeritz

Oh hi, I can see CIA and NSA on the Top secret VTC (per the monitor in pic 2) twitter.com/realdonaldtrum...

Donald J. Trump  @realDonaldTrump

Just received a briefing on the Coronavirus in China from all of our GREAT agencies, who are also working closely with China. We will continue to monitor the ongoing developments. We have the best experts anywhere in the world, and they are on top of it 24/7!

♡ 645 5:32 PM - Jan 30, 2020

💬 304 people are talking about this

The legendary newscaster Gwen Ifill was honored with a stamp:

Vanessa Williams

@WaPoVanessa

❤️❤️❤️ Unveiling of @gwenifill stamp today
@MetropolitanAME

♡ 61 4:47 PM - Jan 30, 2020

💬 18 people are talking about this

And John Bolton may not be seen near the Senate anytime soon, but his impersonator got close enough:

Peter Alexander ✓
@PeterAlexander

There is now a John Bolton impersonator/comedian on the Hill delivering prepared statements.

♡ 669 5:16 PM - Jan 30, 2020

💬 147 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert is worried about the arguments Trump's lawyers have made:

Colbert also “visited” Iowa to talk to voters before the caucuses:

Seth Meyers wondered where Trump found his lawyers:

And, ahead of the Super Bowl on Sunday, Trevor Noah took a look at the world of sports betting:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post

To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov

Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Trump doesn't necessarily think Biden is his biggest 2020 threat. At least, not anymore.
Date: Friday, January 31, 2020 10:47:46 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Trump doesn't necessarily think Biden is his biggest 2020 threat. At least, not anymore.

Trump on impeachment at Iowa rally: 'They want to nullify your ballots'

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

DES MOINES — The centerpiece of Joe Biden’s closing pitch to Iowa voters is that he’s the Democrat whom President Trump fears the most. The impeachment trial has helped establish that this was probably the case last summer when Trump allegedly tried to coerce Ukraine into announcing an investigation of the former vice president by freezing vital military assistance and withholding a White House meeting. But is it still true?

Trump flew here Thursday night for a rally to counterprogram the caucuses. With Democrats apparently lacking the votes to call witnesses with firsthand knowledge of his intentions, putting him on the verge of winning acquittal in the Senate, the president delivered an 86-minute speech that offered several clues into how he now sees the race. He talked more about Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) than anyone else, followed by Biden and then former mayors Pete Buttigieg and Mike Bloomberg.

In a wistful mood about 2016, Trump twice told the crowd that he wishes he could face Hillary Clinton in a rematch. Then he posed a question to the capacity crowd: "Who is tougher: Her, crazy Bernie, sleepy Joe, Boot-edge-edge? Who would be the closest?" Members of the crowd yelled out various names, none discernably louder than the others. "I don't know," Trump continued, shaking his head. "I feel bad because it's too late for her to get in. I kept hoping, but I think honestly, I think that sleepy Joe, crazy Bernie, I don't even want to put Boot-edge-edge in, but I think they'd actually be tougher than her."

As Trump accused Biden of being frequently confused, a woman in the crowd yelled: "It's over for him!" Trump pointed at her and smiled. "It was over for him, actually, if you know him, a long time ago," the president said. "Now it's really over!" The crowd laughed.

To be sure, just because Trump publicly downplays Biden's prospects at a rally doesn't mean he thinks the former vice president isn't a threat. But this president often spends more time trashing whoever is on his mind. If anything, it was notable whom he didn't discuss.

Save for a passing reference to "Pocahontas," his nickname for Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.), Trump mentioned none of the women currently running against him. Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) loves to talk in her stump speech about how Trump tweeted when she announced her candidacy in a blizzard last February that "she looked like a Snowman(woman).” But Trump ignored her entirely on Thursday night.

Trump described South Bend, Ind., as a “failed” city and blamed Buttigieg. “It’s doing so badly,” he said, not citing evidence. He criticized Bloomberg for not competing in Iowa or the other three early states, asking rhetorically: “What happened to Mini Mike? Where is he?”

The Knapp Center at Drake University was packed to its capacity of about 7,200. Hundreds of people who had registered for tickets were nonetheless turned away by the fire marshal, but they stayed to watch Trump’s marathon monologue on a Jumbotron outside the arena, even though it was 29 degrees. It’s a reminder of the passion the president’s core supporters feel. None of the Democratic candidates fill arenas the way Trump can.

Millie Maddy, 16, and Izzy Bradley, 17, of Albia, Iowa, applaud as they watch a live feed of Trump's rally in Des Moines. (Sue Ogrocki/AP)

I asked a dozen Trump supporters outside the arena who they think would be the most formidable opponent against the president in a general election. They generally downplayed Biden's strength and dismissed his purported appeal to middle-of-the-road voters. One guy mentioned Buttigieg's outsider status as compelling. Another floated Klobuchar's moderate credentials. Others noted how much Sanders seems to energize the left in a way Biden cannot.

Trump's visit freshly illustrated his ability to suck up all the political oxygen in 2020 and dominate the conversation. As he spoke in Des Moines, of course, four of the senators seeking the Democratic nomination were stuck in Washington for impeachment jury duty. But he has demonstrated quite a knack for using the bully pulpit of the presidency to influence the issues being debated.

Some of the biggest flashpoints in the Democratic race have involved fights over who is the most electable. Democrats desperately want to oust Trump. Many liberals would be willing to support a moderate if they felt it was required to achieve that end. While Biden asserts, almost as a given, that he's best positioned to topple the incumbent, every other candidate has emphasized their case for why they post up best against Trump. Klobuchar notes the Trump counties she carried on the way to a landslide 2018 reelection in Minnesota. Warren has been highlighting data that show women faring better, including in the midterms. The signs people wave at Sanders rallies, for example, say "Bernie beats Trump."

Trump cares deeply about crowd sizes, and last night he ridiculed Biden for drawing small crowds around Iowa. He also accused the former vice president of frequently getting confused about which state he's in. "Joe had a crowd that was so small the other day that they had to set up a roundtable," Trump said.

Democratic strategists aligned with the party establishment suspect that Trump might have stepped up attacks on Sanders lately not because he's now leading in some national polls but to help elevate the democratic socialist and possibly boost turnout for him in the caucuses.

Trump did signal, for instance, that he sees Medicare-for-all as a potentially fatal issue for Sanders as he warned that people would lose their private health insurance under the proposal. "But I'm not going to knock it because I want Bernie to bring it right up to the end," he quipped, "and we'll debate it the day before the election."

It seems clear that Trump will seek to brand whomever Democrats nominate as a "socialist," even if that person has always categorically rejected the label. "During this campaign season, the good people of Iowa have had a front row seat to the lunacy and the madness of the totally sick left," Trump said at the rally. "In short, this election is a choice between American freedom and democratic socialism and in some cases, in my opinion, it's worse than socialism. Socialism is a kind word by comparison. The Democrats will lose because America will never be a socialist country."

Previewing the nasty race to come, Trump used hyperbole to attack

the Green New Deal. “They want to kill our cows,” he said. “That means you’re next.”

Joe Biden campaigns Thursday in Waukee, Iowa. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

-- Trump’s July 25 phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, in which the president requested the “favor,” came two hours after Trump live-tweeted about a poll he

saw highlighted on Fox News. “When Democrats are polled, the number one thing they’re looking for in a candidate for 2020 is somebody who can beat Donald Trump,” Fox host Steve Doocy told viewers during the segment that morning. “And right now, so many people go, ‘Well, the only person that kind of qualifies for that is Joe Biden.’”

But that was now six-months-and-a-week ago. Polling does not bolster this conventional wisdom the way it did in the summer. A Washington Post-ABC News poll published earlier this week found Biden leading Trump 50 percent to 46 percent among registered voters, which is within the four-point margin of sampling error. Bloomberg had 49 percent support to Trump’s 46 percent. Sanders received 49 percent to Trump’s 47 percent, while Klobuchar stood at 48 percent to Trump’s 47 percent. Warren tied with Trump at 48 percent. Buttigieg trailed 45 percent to Trump’s 48 percent, but that’s still within the margin for error.

Biden and his main rivals had double-digit advantages over Trump in our fall poll. But the president’s approval rating has ticked up during the impeachment saga. His improved standing is driven by improving support among independents, who approve of his handling of the economy.

-- Biden’s campaign has argued that the impeachment trial proves Republicans still fear him most. Sen. Joni Ernst (R-Iowa) gleefully predicted to reporters on Monday that Trump defense attorney Pam Bondi’s portrayal of Biden as corrupt at the impeachment trial would hurt him with Democratic caucus-goers. Sen. Rick Scott (R-Fla.) made a token ad buy to air a commercial in Iowa this weekend, on Fox News, accusing Biden of “corruption.” Former Trump strategist Steve Bannon was quoted earlier this week suggesting that Biden is “the strongest Democratic candidate.”

Last night, Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-Ga.) asked Trump’s defense team about a Politico article that noted Biden had opposed witnesses during Bill Clinton’s impeachment trial in 1999. Trump attorney Patrick Philbin then cited the so-called “Biden rule” to argue for a vote against witnesses. This reads like opposition research, but it’s a timely reminder of Biden’s very long paper trail. He was first elected to the Senate in 1972. Republicans also dubiously invoked another so-called “Biden rule” to justify not scheduling a hearing for Supreme Court nominee Merrick Garland during an election year after Antonin Scalia died in 2016.

“Please keep it coming – because this validation from you is the best we can get,” said Biden chief strategist Mike Donilon. “We will rally around your fear of the vice president.”

Biden didn’t mention any of his Democratic opponents during a 19-minute speech on Thursday morning at an elementary school in Waukee, Iowa, but he did mention Trump 64 times. “In Joe Biden’s America, the president’s tax returns will not be a secret,” Biden said. “Political self-interest will not be confused with national interest. And no one, not even the president of the United States, will be above the law.”

-- Sanders edges out Biden 27 percent to 26 percent among Democratic primary voters nationally, according to a new NBC-Wall Street Journal poll published this morning. Warren has dropped to a distant third place, with 15 percent support. She was even with Sanders in their last two polls. Bloomberg has jumped into fourth place among Democrats nationally, garnering nine percent.

“The poll revealed a sharp generational divide in the nominating contest,” per the Journal’s write-up. “Mr. Sanders held his largest lead ever—a nearly-30-point advantage—over Mr. Biden among primary voters under age 50, and he led by nearly 40 points among the youngest voters, those under age 35. Mr. Biden, by contrast, led Mr. Sanders by 25 points among people ages 50 and older. ... One danger for Mr. Biden is that older voters also account for much of the newfound strength of Mr. Bloomberg, who is the first choice of 14% of those ages 50 and up.”

-- Making his closing argument in Iowa, Buttigieg contrasted himself with both Biden and Sanders – attacking them by name for the first time. “I hear Vice President Biden saying that this is no time to take a risk on someone new,” Buttigieg said yesterday in Decorah, Iowa. “But history has shown us that the biggest risk we could take with a very important election coming up is to look to the same Washington playbook and recycle the same arguments and expect that to work against a president like Donald Trump, who is new in kind.”

The Daily 202's BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Senate trial: The final day of questioning

MORE ON IMPEACHMENT:

-- Senate Republicans are increasingly confident they have the votes to block new testimony at the president's impeachment trial, which would could set the stage for a vote to acquit Trump soon. Mike DeBonis, Seung Min Kim and David Fahrenthold report: "Sen. Susan Collins (Maine) said she will break with Republican leadership and vote to hear witnesses. But ... Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.) ... announced Friday that he's ready to end the trial even though he found Trump's behavior 'inappropriate' and leave the president's fate in the hands of voters during the upcoming election. ... Along with Collins, Sen. Mitt Romney (Utah) is still viewed as the likeliest Republican contender to side with Democrats for more testimony, while Sen. Lisa Murkowski (Alaska) could join as well. She said late Thursday night that she is going to review her notes and reflect on the decision. It's unclear who would be the fourth vote...

"One outside possibility is that the Senate will deadlock on the question of calling witnesses. That would put Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. in the position of breaking the tie — a role Democrats are urging him to play. But there is little expectation Roberts would weigh in on such a politically thorny question and instead would allow the tie to result in no witness being subpoenaed. ... [Republicans] appeared unconcerned he would take any decisive action. ...

“In the 1999 impeachment trial of President Bill Clinton, the Senate heard a combined five hours and 28 minutes of closing arguments. Then, the Senate entered four days of closed-door jury deliberations totaling nearly 26 hours, before voting to acquit Clinton on two articles of impeachment. In this case, some Republicans said, they want to skip the closing arguments and the deliberations and move ahead to the last step. “That would leave Senate Democrats with few cards to play. They could not stop an acquittal vote. But they could delay it — and force Republican senators to take uncomfortable votes against hearing more evidence or allowing more debate. One idea proposed by Sen. Chris Van Hollen (D-Md.) is a motion to require Roberts to issue a subpoena for additional documents and witnesses if he thinks they are relevant to the trial. It would probably fail ...

“Even if Democrats force extra votes, the final vote to acquit Trump could come as early as Friday night or Saturday, unless leaders decide to move it to Monday, just one day before Trump’s State of the Union address. On Thursday — on the last day of questions and answers in the Senate — the day was mostly devoted to softballs, lobbed by senators at their own side. ... At the start of the day’s session, Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) submitted a question for Roberts to read aloud. The question contained the name of a person who conservative media have alleged is the intelligence community whistleblower ... Roberts didn't read it. ... After that, Paul stood up, gathered his papers and walked out of the Senate chamber to address reporters. He then said the name that Roberts would not."

-- "While many Republicans have expressed hopes that the expected failure of a vote to call new witnesses would mean a rapid end to Trump's impeachment trial, officials are warning that might not be the case," Rachael Bade and DeBonis report. "A longer schedule could mean the trial stretches beyond Monday's Iowa caucuses, further complicating the campaign schedules of the four senators seeking the Democratic nomination who are sitting as jurors. A senior administration official and two congressional officials said Friday that it was unlikely that senators would rush immediately to a verdict if the witness vote fails. ...

"The administration official and a congressional official raised the possibility that the Senate could take up a new procedural resolution laying out rules for the trial's endgame — which could include time for closing arguments, private deliberations and public speeches by senators. ... Should the Senate embark on this process, the senior administration official said, a final verdict could be delayed as late as Wednesday — after the Iowa caucuses on Monday and Trump's State of the Union address on Tuesday. But a congressional official noted that much depends on what a majority of senators want to do: A 51-vote majority could choose to hasten the final verdict at any point."

-- It's no consolation for Democrats, but Alexander took a swipe at Trump's conduct as he announced he will vote to acquit: "It was inappropriate for the president to ask a foreign leader to investigate his political opponent and to withhold United States aid to encourage that investigation,” the retiring senator said in a statement. “When elected officials inappropriately interfere with such investigations, it undermines the principle of equal justice under the law. But the Constitution does not give the Senate the power to remove the president from office and ban him from this year’s ballot simply for actions that are inappropriate.”

-- Bolton writes in his draft manuscript that Trump directed him to help with the alleged pressure campaign to extract damaging information on Democrats from Ukrainian officials more than two months before the July 25 call, the New York Times reports: “Mr. Trump gave the instruction, Mr. Bolton wrote, during an Oval Office conversation in early May that included the acting White House chief of staff, Mick Mulvaney, the president’s personal lawyer Rudolph W. Giuliani and the White House counsel, Pat A. Cipollone, who is now leading the president’s impeachment defense. Mr. Trump told Mr. Bolton to call [Zelensky], who had recently won election as president of Ukraine, to ensure Mr. Zelensky would meet with Mr. Giuliani, who was planning a trip to Ukraine to discuss the investigations that the president sought, in Mr. Bolton’s account. Mr. Bolton never made the call, he wrote.”

-- During a long-scheduled speech in Austin, Tex., Bolton voiced support for the government officials who testified before the House. From KXAN: “Bolton defended former diplomatic and state department officials Fiona Hill, Tim Morrison, Alex Vindman, Bill Taylor, and Marie Yovanovitch. ‘All of them acted in the best interest of the country as they saw it and consistent to what they thought our policies were,' said Bolton, during the question-and-answer time after his keynote speech. He went on to say members of the Trump Administration should 'feel they're able to speak their minds without retribution.' 'The idea that somehow testifying to what you think is true is destructive to the system of government we have — I think, is very nearly the reverse — the exact reverse of the truth,' said Bolton."

-- Jennifer Williams, who testified in the House inquiry, will leave Vice President Pence's office two months earlier than scheduled.

She plans to join Central Command in the spring as a deputy foreign policy adviser, Politico reports. She will be advising the command on Middle East policy issues and has had the job lined up since last fall. Marc Short, Pence's chief of staff, said she "requested in writing an early departure."

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "This is a happy period for us," Trump told supporters during his rally here Thursday in Des Moines. "It's a happy period because we call it 'impeachment light.'"

New video shows Parnas attending Trump fundraiser at Mar-a-Lago

-- Trump's defense team said Giuliani had the right to act as an intermediary for Trump with the Ukrainians, even as they also insisted the president's personal lawyer was not carrying out official U.S. policy. Deputy White House Counsel Patrick Philbin said it would not be "improper" for a president "in some circumstances ... to rely on a personal confidant" to relay messages back and forth with a foreign government. "That's not prohibited." (Felicia Sonmez)

-- A new video recording shows the access former Giuliani associates Lev Parnas and Igor Fruman had to Trump at a Mar-a-Lago donor event. Josh Dawsey, Rosalind Helderman and Paul Sonne report: Ten days before Parnas and Fruman dined with Trump at his D.C. hotel, "they were part of a small group of Republican Party donors who met with the president at ... his Florida estate ... While it was known that Fruman and Parnas had attended an event at Mar-a-Lago, the focus of the event, the timing and who else was in attendance had not been made public. ... The recordings of the two events undercut Trump's repeated assertions that he does not know Parnas and Fruman ... Taken together, the two recordings provide a window into Trump's close interactions with high-dollar donors, despite his pledge to 'drain the swamp.'"

-- Trump defense lawyer Jay Sekulow refused to disclose who is paying Giuliani's bills to defend the president, raising suspicions. Philip Bump reports: "A group of Democratic senators ... decided to pose the question of Giuliani's income to the House impeachment managers and Trump's legal team. ... [Sekulow] started talking before he even got to the microphone, he was so indignant. Or so he'd have us believe."

-- White House Counsel Pat Cipollone's defense has placed him on televisions screens across America, though he would have preferred it was not so. Manuel Roig-Franzia and Josh Dawsey profile him: “He’d argued before the trial that cameras should be banned from the chamber. He believed that Trump’s case could be damaged by the re-airing of comments made by the president and acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, who’d said at a news conference that the media should ‘get over it’ because quid pro quos ‘happen all the time’ in U.S. foreign policy ... But keeping cameras out also would have had the effect of maintaining his carefully nurtured below-the-radar profile. ... Prior to Cipollone’s name emerging as a contender for Trump’s White House counsel job, he’d never even appeared in the news pages of his hometown newspaper — The Post.”

-- Commentary from The Post’s opinion page:

- The Editorial Board: "If Senate Republicans give Trump the coverup he wants, his acquittal will be worthless."
- George Conway, conservative lawyer and husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway: "Don't let the defense fool you. This impeachment is all about corruption."
- Dana Milbank: "The impeachment trial hurtles toward its worst-case conclusion."
- Marc Thiessen: "Republican senators are being set up by the House."
- Fareed Zakaria: "How the story of impeachment tells the story of polarization."

- Jennifer Rubin: “The reasons not to call John Bolton are ridiculous.”
- Karen Tumulty: “Bolton is teaching Trump the difference between loyalty and fealty.”
- William Treanor: “Trump’s attorneys have butchered a crucial Founder’s take on impeachment.”
- Keith Whittington: “The Senate is likely to acquit Trump. It should still reject [Alan] Dershowitz’s logic.”
- Harry Litman: “Dershowitz may have argued himself out of relevance.”

-- The White House will propose keeping aid to Ukraine intact in the new budget, a departure from past efforts to slash assistance. Erica Werner and Jeff Stein report: “The money at issue comes from two programs: one administered by the Pentagon, and the other by the State Department. ... As White House officials prepared their 2021 budget request, set to be released Feb. 10, the Ukraine financing program was once again on the chopping block, with officials weighing another attempt to cut it down to $20 million, according to two people with knowledge of the deliberations who spoke on the condition of anonymity to disclose internal discussions. But after inquiries, ... OMB denied that any cut would be proposed, with a spokesperson saying the budget would extend existing funding levels.”

-- Nancy Pelosi has stepped out of the impeachment spotlight after dominating the initial debate. Returning from a 10-day break that included a visit to Poland, the speaker of the House gave a news conference yesterday that only briefly touched on the trial. (Paul

Kane)

-- But her caucus's investigations into Trump will continue after the trial: A federal judge said he's inclined to uphold House subpoenas for documents important to the probe of the administration's foiled plans to add a citizenship question to the census. Spencer Hsu reports: "Judge Randolph D. Moss said he would rule quickly after a three-hour hearing in Washington, D.C., in which he said courts should not micromanage disputes between the other two branches of government. Moss rejected the White House's sweeping constitutional claim that Congress cannot sue to enforce its subpoena powers and that it can indefinitely withhold communications between federal agency officials through a 'protective assertion' of executive privilege."

-- Senate investigators conducted an extensive interview of the IRS whistleblower who alleged improper political interference in the audit of the president or the vice president. The whistleblower delivered transcribed remarks to staffers for Sens. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) and Ron Wyden (D-Ore.), the chairman and top Democrat on the Senate Finance Committee, Jeff Stein and Erica Werner report.

-- E. Jean Carroll, the New York writer who last summer accused Trump of raping her in the 1990s, requested that the president submit a DNA sample to determine whether his genetic material is on the black dress she said she was wearing during the alleged assault. Michael Brice-Saddler reports: "Carroll's lawyers served notice to a Trump attorney on Thursday, asking that Trump provide a sample for 'analysis and comparison against unidentified male DNA present on the dress' ... Carroll's lawyers requested that Trump provide the DNA sample on March 2 in Washington. ... Trump has vehemently denied the allegation and called it fake news, asserting that he had 'never met this person in my life' and that Carroll was 'not my type.' He also said Carroll had made up the story to promote her book. The request for DNA comes after Carroll sued Trump for defamation in New York state court in November, arguing he had smeared her and damaged her career by calling her a liar.”

Flight attendants deplane at Brisbane airport in Australia on Friday. (Glenn Hunt/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Health officials confirmed the first U.S. case of person-to-person transmission of the coronavirus is in Chicago, and the World Health Organization finally declared it a public health emergency. Overnight, the State Department also issued a “do not travel” advisory for all of China. That’s the highest warning level, and it previously only applied to the province where the outbreak began.

“State and federal officials said the sixth infected person in the United States is married to the Chicago-area woman who contracted the virus when she traveled to Wuhan, China,” Lenny Bernstein, Lena Sun, Siobhán O'Grady and Yasmeen Abutaleb report.

“The unidentified man, who is in his 60s, has been isolated in the same suburban hospital as his wife since Tuesday, when he began exhibiting symptoms consistent with the early stages of the virus, including fever, coughing and shortness of breath ... In Chicago, Public Health Commissioner Allison Arwady said the new U.S. patient was placed in isolation Tuesday, the same day he exhibited symptoms. The man, who has underlying health conditions, is in stable condition at a medical center in Hoffman Estates, a suburb of Chicago, where his wife is also hospitalized ...

“Officials warned a jittery public, however, to expect additional cases and perhaps more person-to-person transmissions of the virus. ‘Moving forward, we can expect to see more cases, and more cases means the potential for more person-to-person spread,’ said Nancy Messonnier, director of the National Center for Immunization and Respiratory Diseases at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Nonetheless, the overall risk to people in the United States is still considered quite low, officials said. They advised U.S. residents to take the kinds of precautions they would to guard against seasonal flu — which already has killed at least 8,200 people in late 2019 and early 2020 — including frequent hand-washing and staying home when they are sick. There is no need for face masks in the

United States, Messonnier said.”

“Around the globe, however, and particularly in China, the respiratory illness caused by the newly identified virus continued on a widening, destructive path ... The virus had killed 213 people — all of them in China — and infected more than 9,700 as of Friday. About 90 cases have been recorded outside China — including the first two in Italy, both Chinese tourists ... Two cases of coronavirus were confirmed in Britain, while South Korea confirmed an 11th case. ... Airlines are cutting or completely canceling flights to China, a nation of 1.4 billion people ... The union representing 15,000 American Airlines pilots sued the company to halt the carrier’s U.S.-China service, citing ‘serious, and in many ways still unknown, health threats posed by the coronavirus.’”

-- “China, anxious to shield Communist Party leaders from blame, dismissed a public health official over her handling of the crisis,” Shibani Mahtani reports on our special live blog. “In Hong Kong, officials closed schools until March as the number of confirmed cases rose to 12 and residents faced supply shortages.” And outcry is building over Australia’s plan to quarantine Wuhan evacuees in an offshore migrant detention center, O’Grady reports.

-- Trump is under growing pressure to mount a coordinated federal response to the coronavirus threat. David Nakamura, Abutaleb and Dawsey report: “The White House has sought to tamp down criticism from Democrats in recent days by projecting an air of confidence and competence, with Trump presiding late Wednesday over an interagency briefing in the Situation Room ... ‘This is no cause for urgent panic in any way in the United States,’ Adm. Brett Giroir, assistant secretary of health, told reporters at the White House on Thursday. ... One senior administration official said Trump has been hesitant to speak out because some aides have cautioned that he could unnecessarily cause public alarm — and assured him that China is working hard to keep the virus under control. But increasingly, there is a feeling among aides that the president must say more..."

-- Facebook will remove fake cures and other harmful misinformation shared about the coronavirus. Tony Romm reports: "The social-networking giant said in a blog post that its efforts, building off its policies that prohibit users from causing real-world harm, would result in the removal of dangerous claims, such as those that suggest drinking bleach cures the coronavirus, as well as hashtags that promote falsehoods on its photo-sharing site Instagram. ... Facebook also said it would start steering users to more authoritative sources of information from the World Health Organization. Facebook also said it had provided free advertising credits to help organizations run coronavirus education campaigns."

Afghan Army commandos attend their graduation ceremony on Jan. 13 after a three-and-a-half-month training program at the Commando Training Center on the outskirts of Kabul. (Rahmat Gul/AP)

-- Taliban attacks have reached record-high levels in Afghanistan. Susannah George reports: “During the last three months of 2019, the Taliban and other insurgent groups launched more than 8,200 attacks against Afghan troops, American forces and civilians, more than any other fourth quarter since 2010, the U.S. Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction said in its quarterly report released Thursday. ... Overall, the watchdog report found that attacks launched by the Taliban and other insurgent groups increased by 6 percent in 2019 from the previous year.”

-- Iraq said its military has resumed operations with the U.S.-led coalition against ISIS, which were suspended after Trump ordered the drone strike that killed Qasem Soleimani. Louisa

Loveluck reports: “A statement from the office of Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi said the missions have resumed in an attempt to maximize progress against the regrouping Islamist militants ahead of a new U.S.-Iraqi agreement that could lead to a significant reduction of the U.S.-led coalition’s troop presence.”

-- The House passed two measures seeking to restrain Trump from targeting Iran militarily. Karoun Demirjian reports: “The legislation would prohibit Trump from using federal funds to strike Iran without prior approval, and repeal an 18-year-old law that he and his advisers have cited to justify killing a top Iranian general earlier this month. Both measures have earned limited Republican support and are expected to face difficult odds in the Senate, where GOP leaders can easily block them from coming to the floor for a vote.”

-- A leaked Customs and Border Protection memo shows U.S. border officers working at Canadian ports of entry were directed to detain and question travelers of Iranian descent, including American citizens, in the wake of the Soleimani strike. Citing a high “threat alert,” the document states that, among others, anyone born in Iran, Lebanon or the Palestinian territories between 1961 and 2001 should be vetted. (CNN)

-- Trump’s border wall is vulnerable to flash floods, which means it will require hundreds of storm gates to prevent it from being knocked over. Nick Miroff reports: The gates “must be left open for months every summer during ‘monsoon season’ in the desert, according to U.S. border officials, agents and engineers familiar with the plans. The open, unmanned gates in remote areas already have allowed for the easy entry of smugglers and migrants into the United States. ... [Trump's wall] effectively acts as a sewer grate that traps the debris; when clogged, the barriers cannot withstand the power of the runoff. Because the gates typically are located in isolated areas that lack electricity, they cannot be operated from afar."

-- The "longest ever" drug-smuggling tunnel was discovered at the U.S.-Mexico border, CBP said. Kim Bellware reports: "Hidden 70 feet beneath a small industrial building in Tijuana, Mexico, lays a long and sophisticated passageway — complete with a railway, plumbing and ventilation system. It stretches the length of almost 12 football fields, and U.S. Customs and Border Protection officials said Mexican narcotics traffickers had used the tunnel to smuggle drugs across the border, into an industrial area of San Diego."

-- Trump is expected to reveal his travel ban expansion today. A draft of the updated ban that was being considered would place immigration restrictions on an additional six countries. (Politico)

-- Heat and high winds may intensify the bush fires that continue advancing towards Australia's capital of Canberra. Andrew Freedman reports: "That fire is burning in Namadgi National Park and was accidentally started by a military helicopter used for firefighting."

-- New data confirms that Antarctica's most dangerous glacier is melting from below. Chris Mooney reports: "The unprecedented research, part of a multimillion-dollar British and U.S. initiative to study the remote Thwaites Glacier, involved drilling through nearly 2,000 feet of ice to measure water temperatures in a narrow cavity where the glacier first connects with the ocean. This is one of the most difficult-to-reach locations on Earth. At a region known as the

‘grounding line,” where the ice transitions between resting on bedrock and floating on the ocean, scientists measured water temperatures of about 0 degrees Celsius (32 degrees Fahrenheit). That is more than 2 degrees warmer than the freezing point in that location, said David Holland, a New York University glaciologist.”

-- In other important environmental news, the Trump administration is working to permanently weaken a law to protect birds. Darryl Fears and Juliet Eilperin report: “Interior Department officials said Thursday that they will propose regulations clarifying that individuals and industrial operators, such as oil, gas and wind companies, will not be penalized if they accidentally kill birds — even on a massive scale. ... Since guidelines under the administration’s interpretation of the law were issued in April 2018, hundreds of ducks, geese, herons and migrating birds have perished in oil pits, on utility lines and in other operations without penalty, according to documents compiled by conservation groups.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Former Maryland congressman John Delaney (D) dropped out of the presidential race:

John Delaney ✓
@JohnDelaney

It has been a privilege to campaign for the Democratic nomination for President, but it is clear that God has a different purpose for me at this moment in time. Read my full statement here:

1/19johndelaney.com/2020/01/31/joh...

John Delaney Announces Decision to Withdraw Fro...

DES MOINES, IA - Today, 2020 Presidential candidate John Delaney announces his decision to withdraw from the 2020
johndelaney.com

♡ 64 12:55 PM - Jan 31, 2020

💬 57 people are talking about this

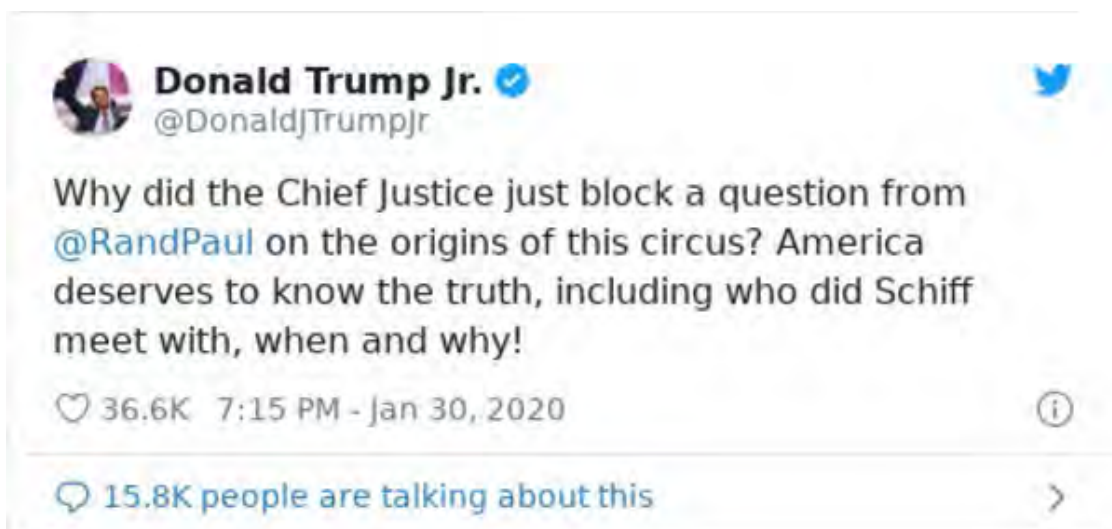

Delaney told CNN he doesn't want to take support away from other moderate candidates in Monday's Iowa caucuses. (Amy B Wang)

Trump defense lawyer Alan Dershowitz tried to walk back some of his

more extreme legal arguments on the president's behalf, as he found himself widely mocked and ridiculed by a chorus of constitutional scholars from across the ideological spectrum:

The president's eldest son expressed support for Rand Paul's efforts to out the alleged whistleblower:

Lead impeachment manager Adam Schiff accused the Trump administration of rank hypocrisy:

Rep. Justin Amash (Mich.), who declared his independence from the GOP after endorsing impeachment, slammed the Senate for what he describes as an institutional failure:

The former top lawyer at the FBI (Jim Comey's right-hand man) weighed in on the Q&A at the trial:

From a former House GOP staffer and ex-CIA officer who sought the presidency as an independent in 2016:

Trump tweeted a picture of himself getting briefed on the coronavirus, and some alumni of the intelligence community were shocked that the CIA's live feed was included in what went out:

Aki Peritz
@AkiPeritz

Oh hi, I can see CIA and NSA on the Top secret VTC (per the monitor in pic 2) twitter.com/realdonaldtrum...

Donald J. Trump  @realDonaldTrump

Just received a briefing on the Coronavirus in China from all of our GREAT agencies, who are also working closely with China. We will continue to monitor the ongoing developments. We have the best experts anywhere in the world, and they are on top of it 24/7!

♡ 645 5:32 PM - Jan 30, 2020

💬 304 people are talking about this

The legendary newscaster Gwen Ifill was honored with a stamp:

Vanessa Williams

@WaPoVanessa

❤️❤️❤️ Unveiling of @gwenifill stamp today
@MetropolitanAME

♡ 61 4:47 PM - Jan 30, 2020

💬 18 people are talking about this

And John Bolton may not be seen near the Senate anytime soon, but his impersonator got close enough:

Peter Alexander ✓
@PeterAlexander

There is now a John Bolton impersonator/comedian on the Hill delivering prepared statements.

♡ 669 5:16 PM - Jan 30, 2020

💬 147 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert is worried about the arguments Trump's lawyers have made:

Colbert also “visited” Iowa to talk to voters before the caucuses:

Seth Meyers wondered where Trump found his lawyers:

And, ahead of the Super Bowl on Sunday, Trevor Noah took a look at the world of sports betting:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Recipes! Dig into dozens of crowd-pleasing Super Bowl treats and an easy weeknight chicken thigh dish
Date: Saturday, February 1, 2020 8:08:51 AM

---

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Recipes

What to cook during the week ahead, from Post Food editors.

---

By Ann Maloney

✉ Email

It's true that you can't please all the people all of the time, but we've discovered that if we share chicken thigh recipes, we can please an awful lot of readers most of the time.

Case in point: This week, I whipped up a recipe that calls for browning the thighs and then turning them in a reduced citrusy, slightly sweet sauce thick enough to coat each piece with deliciousness. It's such an easy way to prepare this juicy, more flavorful (and cheaper) cut of chicken.

Several readers wrote to tell me that they ride the white-meat-only wagon but were tempted by this recipe. I asked them to go for it and let me know if they've converted.

Want more chicken thigh recipes? Search our Recipe Finder.

Folks will tune into Super Bowl LIV on Sunday, but if you're invited to a party — or hosting one — you know TD also stands for Tasty Dishes. We've got dozens of delicious ideas for you, including six variations on chili, a collection of tempting hot dips, a taste-test of 14 jarred salsa brands and a smorgasbord of wings, treats and desserts (so you can skip those Taco Bell Buffalo Chicken Nacho Fries that Tim Carman declares a hot mess.)

And, if you've got a vegetarian in your game-watching group, Joe Yonan has whipped up a crowd-pleasing mac and cheese that is chock-full of the good green stuff.

If you like the idea of energy bars, but just can't find one that tastes great, try your hand at making Nourish columnist Ellie Krieger's protein-rich Fruit Nut Energy Bars. They are packed with nuts and seeds and the sweetness comes from a variety of dried fruits.

Bring It columnist Cathy Barrow knows how to simplify the complicated. She shares a recipe for homemade turkey sausage patties (no casings needed), fattened up with a bit of creme fraiche, that perfectly complements an egg-and-cheese breakfast sandwich.

Those sausages are one example of how ground turkey can be turned into delicious dishes. If you need convincing, check out Kari Sonde's round up of a half dozen ground-turkey recipes that prove this theory. She included one of my tips for adding flavor to the lean meat: Slip a tablespoon of bacon fat into a pound or two. (I keep a jar in the refrigerator and add bacon fat to it anytime I make the stuff.) Sure, it adds close to 250 calories and about 14 grams of fat, but that's spread out over multiple servings, and that fat adds a boost of flavor and moisture that the turkey craves. Kari shared more suggestions — including adding feta to a turkey burger — that just might make you take a second look at this lean protein.

Do you love cooking newsletters? Did you know you could subscribe to any of The Washington Post's Voraciously newsletters at any time? A popular one is Plant Powered, our 12-week series focused on helping you put more vegetables on your plate. This week, we shared a Harissa Stuffed Bell Peppers recipe from that series. Interested? Sign up here.

See you next week!

(Photo by Stacy Zarin Goldberg for The Washington Post; food styling by Lisa Cherkasky for The Washington Post)

Honey-Citrus Chicken Thighs

This honey-citrus sauce is wonderful over chicken thighs, but it also is one that complements a variety of proteins from pork chops to shrimp.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

---

Greens Mac 'n' Cheese

With greens pureed into the sauce and broccolini florets offering some fresh crunch, it's all good.

By Joe Yonan • Read more »

---

Build a better breakfast sandwich with this homemade turkey sausage patty

BRING IT | Easy to stir together, this lighter version of sausage is perfect for an egg-cheese sandwich.

By Cathy Barrow • Read more »

---

ADVERTISEMENT

202
THE CLIMATE
FROM The Washington Post

Inside the politics of climate change
This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives and the climate-curious alike.

Sign up

Powered by LiveIntent

---

Harissa Stuffed Bell Peppers

It's a vibrant vegetarian recipe that tastes as good as it looks.

By Sonja Overhiser and Alex Overhiser • Read more »

---

Fruit and Nut Energy Bars

These easy-to-make, on-the-go, wholesome bars might make you swear off the packaged kind forever.

By Ellie Krieger • Read more »

---

More from Voraciously

6 recipes that will change your mind about ground turkey

Ground turkey is good! We stand by it!

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

202
THE CLIMATE
FROM The Washington Post

Inside the politics of climate change
This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives and the climate-curious alike.

Sign up

Powered by LiveIntent

Super Bowl party recipes and tips: Wings, dips, desserts and clever ways to keep the beer cold

Recipes for spice-rubbed ribs, Buffalo chicken dip, nachos, pizza and more.

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

6 hearty chili recipes to warm you up or feed a crowd this winter

Meaty? Vegan? Red? Green? It's all here, and more.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

The Maillard reaction: What it is and why it matters

Sugars, protein and heat are key to some of the best browning and flavors in food.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Meal Plan of Action by Voraciously for your dinner game plan. Menus and meal prep guides for the week ahead — every Thursday for 12 weeks. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Recipes | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Recipes or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: 'It's called 2016 PTSD.' The ghost of Hillary Clinton haunts the Iowa caucuses.
Date: Monday, February 3, 2020 10:43:54 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

COMMITTED TO AFFORDABLE CARE FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

Powered by  LiveIntent

'It's called 2016 PTSD.' The ghost of Hillary Clinton haunts the Iowa caucuses.

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) introduces her husband, John, and their daughter Abigail during a rally at Franklin Junior High School in Des Moines on Saturday night. (Gene J. Puskar/AP)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

DES MOINES – Amy Klobuchar remembers the text messages she received from her daughter on election night in 2016. Abigail Bessler, then a student at Yale University, traveled to New York so she could watch Hillary Clinton break the ultimate glass ceiling. When Donald Trump won a shocking upset instead, she texted the senator from Minnesota: “Mom, what should we do now?” Klobuchar wrote back a minute later that she should catch the last train to New Haven: “Remember, you have class tomorrow.” Her distraught daughter replied: “Mom, I mean our country.”

“That is the question we’ve asked ourselves every day since then: What should we do now?” Klobuchar told hundreds of supporters crammed into the Franklin Junior High gym on Saturday night. “My profound advice is this: We better not screw this up.”

Tens of thousands of Iowa Democrats are asking themselves that question as they prepare to gather tonight across more than 1,600 precincts for caucuses that will kickstart a five-month marathon to the party’s convention in Milwaukee. Presidential candidates, their surrogates and rank-and-file voters frequently invoked, always with dread, the memory of 2016 over the weekend. The latest proxy fight between loyalists to Clinton and Bernie Sanders got the lion’s share of attention, but the previous presidential election loomed large at six rallies I covered. The topic came up repeatedly during dozens of interviews across events for all the top contenders.

Pete Buttigieg’s final rally on Sunday was at Lincoln High School – the home of the Rail Splitters – in the same gymnasium where Clinton held her final rally on the night before the caucuses in 2016. Buttigieg and his surrogates boast that he’s toured 25 of the 31 Iowa counties that Barack Obama won in 2012 but Clinton lost in 2016. “And we’re getting bigger and better turnout in them,” Rep. Anthony Brown (D-Md.) told the crowd of 2,000 in Des Moines.

A few hours later, as she warmed up a crowd of 1,100 for Joe Biden at Hiatt Middle School, Rep. Abby Finkenauer (D-Iowa) made the crowd uncomfortable as she forced them to relive their nightmare. “One of the things that really hit me, and that I cannot say thank you enough to the vice president for, is the hope he finally gave me that I didn't even know I was missing," she said. "You see, I remember – as every Iowan does – that night in 2016. We didn't just lose the White House that night. We also lost our state Senate, and the GOP took complete control of our state."

Finkenauer picked up her U.S. House seat in the northeast quadrant of the state during the 2018 midterms, but she noted that Democrats need to flip four seats to win the Iowa House in November. She recalled visiting one of those state legislative districts a few days ago, where the Democrat lost by nine votes in 2018, and meeting independents and Republicans who said they'd vote for Biden if he's the nominee. "Joe Biden will help us take back our state," Finkenauer said.

Former vice president Joe Biden campaigns on Sunday at Clarke University in Dubuque, Iowa. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

Facing what looked like an intimidating Clinton juggernaut, Biden chose not to run in 2016. Elizabeth Warren and Mike Bloomberg also considered bids but opted against them. People in Iowa have been speculating that, perhaps, the outcome would have been different if any of the three had challenged her.

Biden thanked Finkenauer when he took the stage. “We can turn Donald Trump into a four-year historical aberration,” he said, “but we need you.”

The uncharacteristic fixation among Democratic voters on electability – across the ideological spectrum – flows at least in part from that latent sense of shock. “I’ve actually come up with a term for this that I use: It’s called 2016 PTSD,” said Rep. Brendan Boyle (D-Pa.). He spent the last two days as a surrogate for Biden, carpooling around Iowa with former senator Bill Nelson (Fla.), telling every Democrat they could find that the former vice president can carry the two swing states they hail from this fall.

“I did an hour of phone banking today, and literally every person who I reached said, ‘Well, I just want to make sure we pick the best person who can beat Trump,’” Boyle said last night as he and Nelson walked to their rental car after Biden’s rally so they could go watch the Super Bowl. “I think that’s a big reason why you see such a huge undecided number entering the caucuses. People realize the stakes are just so high for this election. It’s the trauma of election night 2016, as well as what Trump’s been like ever since. If you had a Mitt Romney presidency, I don’t think there’d be the same animus that you see on our side.”

A CBS survey of Iowa released on Sunday showed Sanders and Biden tied at 25 percent, with Buttigieg at 21 percent, Warren at 16 percent and Klobuchar at 5 percent.

For Democratic elites and activists, the lingering shock of Trump's victory is never far from the surface. Various storylines going into the caucuses involve clashes and tensions that pick at some of the scabs that, it turns out, have not fully scarred over. Clinton has stepped up her criticism of Sanders as he's moved to the top of some polls. In a podcast published Friday, Clinton faulted Sanders for not doing more to unify the party after she beat him in 2016. This followed her criticisms in a documentary that "nobody likes him" and "he got nothing done," which she stood by in an interview with the Hollywood Reporter.

Sanders couldn't attend a Friday evening event in Clive because he was stuck in Washington for the impeachment trial. When Clinton's name came up during a panel discussion of prominent supporters, someone in the crowd booed. The moderator replied not to boo because that's not classy. Then Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.), a prominent Sanders surrogate and member of the Squad, interrupted. "No, no, I'll boo," she said, booing for effect. "That's all right — the haters will shut up on Monday."

After Tlaib expressed regret the next morning, Sanders campaign manager Faiz Shakir tweeted: "Rashida, you're all good. We love your passion and conviction. Don't change." Then Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill weighed in: "I can't imagine this kind of behavior is something Iowans want to see from candidates and their surrogates."

---

Content from Partnership for America's Health Care Future

American families can't afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there's "no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases."

---

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) takes the stage with his grandkids Ella and Dylan at Simpson College on Saturday in Indianola, Iowa. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Sanders alluded to the kerfuffle moments after he took the stage at Simpson College in Indianola on Saturday afternoon. “I’ll tell you as bluntly as I can why I believe we are the strongest campaign to beat Trump – not to say we are the only campaign,” he said. “Certainly, I hope that we’re going to win. But if we don’t win, we will support the winner.”

The senator from Vermont then announced that his campaign knocked on 500,000 doors in Iowa during the past month. “If it’s a low turnout election, Trump will win,” he said. “And I believe our campaign ... can bring millions of people into the political process who normally do not vote.”

Then, on Saturday night, documentarian Michael Moore, who has been introducing Sanders around the state, ripped the Democratic National Committee during a concert in Cedar Rapids that drew 3,000 people. With echoes from four years ago, Moore accused the DNC of rigging the debate qualification requirements to help Bloomberg, a self-funding billionaire, qualify. The DNC’s spokeswoman replied that this is a “totally false ... conspiracy theory.”

A lot of the pitches the candidates and their surrogates make feel like allusions to the perceived shortcomings that critics believe allowed Trump to topple Clinton. “Bernie is a candidate the current president will not be able to vilify as inauthentic, and that’s a huge advantage,” said Jane Sanders, the senator’s wife. “If you watched the debates, you know that I’m not afraid to speak my mind,” added Klobuchar.

Consultants have pleaded with Sanders to talk more about himself throughout the campaign – in addition to his calls for political revolution. The senator obliged when he launched his campaign last February, but he's mostly cut it out. This weekend, though, Sanders took the stage with two of his grandchildren. Then he emphasized his background as the son of an immigrant when he promised to restore protections for "Dreamers," undocumented immigrants who were brought to the United States as children.

"The status quo is terrified of a Bernie presidency," said Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.), another member of the Squad, who introduced Sanders at Simpson College. Dozens of students snapped their fingers to signal approval. "Iowa will be able to start a domino effect ... that will take him all the way to the White House."

Warren tries to straddle the gap from Sanders to Biden. She emphasized this weekend that she knows how to work within the system to advance her agenda (e.g. to lower the cost of hearing aids) but also knows when to pick fights and apply pressure from the outside (e.g. to save the Affordable Care Act from being repealed). Coincidentally, she appeared at the same student center on Sunday that Sanders campaigned at on Saturday. "I am in this to fight back," Warren declared. "That's why I'm here. We fight back. Fighting back is an act of patriotism."

Pete Buttigieg is hugged by his husband, Chasten Buttigieg, at the end of a rally Sunday at Lincoln High School in Des Moines. (Matt McClain/The Washington Post)

Buttigieg also sought to stay out of the spat between Bernie World and Hillary Land. “I didn’t much enjoy, as a Democrat, living through the experience of 2016, and I want to make sure 2020 resembles 2016 as little as possible,” he said as he left a Saturday event in Waterloo.

Buttigieg has branded himself a unifier. Members of the audience submitted written questions for the candidate at his rally in Des Moines, which were pulled at random from a fishbowl. One asked him to name his favorite Beatles song. “I feel like, in a moment like this, the answer has got to be ‘Come Together,’” said Buttigieg, who is always quick on his feet.

Buttigieg was joined on Sunday afternoon by his mother and mother-in-law. His mom, Anne Montgomery, at 74, is younger than both Sanders and Biden. With explicit calls for generational change, Buttigieg said the next president will face futuristic challenges that we cannot even begin to fathom because the world is changing so fast. “We need a president prepared to leave the politics of the past in the past,” he said, adding that “falling back on the familiar” is comfortable but dangerous. “We can’t be afraid.”

Many Democratic rank-and-file voters are exhausted over the Sanders vs. Clinton feud of 2016. Sean Maguire, 42, is supporting Warren but complimented Sanders for “shifting the Overton window.” “He’s definitely changed the conversation, and we wouldn’t be here without him,” said Maguire, who lives in West Des Moines and works in software. But he thinks Clinton and Sanders need to cut out their feuding. “Hillary has been in politics for decades, and she’s a brilliant woman and clearly capable,” said Maguire. “I think she’s throwing bombs right now because she’s wanting more of a moderate candidate. So she’s using her influence and power to change the narrative and to get us talking. But just shut up and move on.”

I spoke with a mother and daughter from Norwalk, a suburb of Des Moines, who plan to caucus together for Buttigieg after supporting Sanders four years ago. Andrea Legan, 40, an office manager at a law firm, said the fighting between loyalists to Sanders and Clinton is tiresome. “There’s three sides to every story – his, hers and the truth,” she said. “Unlike Trump supporters, I will admit my mistake,” added Sue Woody, 61, a weight-loss consultant. “It just makes me mad that, for the Bernie Bros, it’s him or nobody. That’s how we got Trump.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE
HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by LivelIntent

MORE FROM IOWA:

-- Washington Post team coverage:

- Dan Balz: “Undecided Iowans are making their decisions.”
- Chelsea Janes, Annie Linskey, Sean Sullivan and Cleve Wootson Jr.: “Candidates power to end of Iowa campaign with competing visions of unity and electability.”
- Toluse Olorunnipa: “After a year of immersion in Iowa, will the Democrats return before November?”

- Karen Tumulty: “Uncertainty hangs over Iowa — and the 2020 race.”
- Marc Fisher: “An anxious nation finally votes. Some hope that will ease divisions. Others see a permanent state of ‘trench warfare.’”
- Jenna Johnson: “Sanders’s caucus target: Latino voters usually overlooked in mostly white Iowa.”
- Kayla Epstein: “How do the Iowa caucuses work, and how are they different this year?”

-- Good reads from elsewhere:

- Des Moines Register: “10 questions that will be answered on caucus night.”
- Politico: “Rivals warn Sanders campaign plans to game Iowa results.”
- New York Times: “Democrats Had a 2020 Vision. This Isn’t Quite What They Expected.”
- Wall Street Journal: “Where Democratic Candidates Might Look for Support in Iowa Caucuses.”
- Fox News: “Iowa counties to watch.”
- FiveThirtyEight: “What Are The X-Factors That Could Change The Results In Iowa?”
- AP: “New rules could muddle results of Iowa caucuses.”
- Los Angeles Times: “Iowa voters are bringing the caucus to California and beyond.”
- USA Today: “Who will win New Hampshire? Unsure Democratic voters are watching Iowa with an eye on beating Trump.”

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

'We're going to turn the page on impeachment': GOP, Democrats look ahead to Wednesday's vote

IMPEACHMENT LATEST:

-- Two Senate Republicans acknowledged on the Sunday talk shows that Trump was wrong to pressure Ukraine for his own political benefit, even as they defended their decision to prohibit new evidence in his impeachment trial while pressing ahead with the president's all-but-certain acquittal in a vote scheduled for Wednesday. They did so even after the Trump administration acknowledged the existence over the weekend of two dozen emails that could reveal the president's thinking about withholding the military aid.

- “I think he shouldn’t have done it,” Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.) told Chuck Todd on NBC. “I think it was wrong. Inappropriate was the way I’d say — improper, crossing the line.”
- “Maybe not the perfect call,” Sen. Joni Ernst (R-Iowa) told Jake Tapper on CNN. “He did it maybe in the wrong manner. ... I think he could have done it through different channels.”

-- But Ernst also opened the door to the House trying to impeaching Biden if he's elected and Republicans win the majority. “I think this door of impeachable whatever has been opened,” she told Bloomberg News. “Joe Biden should be very careful what he’s asking for because, you know, we can have a situation where if it should ever be President Biden, that immediately, people, right the day after he would be elected would be saying, ‘Well, we’re going to impeach him.’”

-- Sen. Susan Collins, the first of two Republicans to break with the president on any aspect of the trial, has found it lonely in the middle. Griff Witte reports from her home state: “Here in Maine, where the famously independent Collins is locked in a tight reelection campaign, the choice elicited a wintry mix of cold shoulders and icy glares. Republicans quietly counseled that Collins could go no further without inciting a rebellion from the party’s Trump-loving base — perhaps even a primary challenge. Democrats, meanwhile, heaped scorn on the senator for making gestures toward standing up to the president but not doing so when it counts. ... Siding with Democrats on whether the president should be removed would be unforgivable among Maine's rank-and-file Republicans, who are increasingly part of the Trump wing of the party, not the Collins wing. ... The base is already restless. In recent weeks, Collins's offices have been flooded with angry voice mails, many of them threatening and hate-filled. The vitriol has come from impeachment supporters as well as the president's defenders, outspoken in demanding that Collins take their side."

-- RNC Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel won't defend her uncle, Mitt Romney, after he voted in favor of witnesses. On CBS's "Face the Nation," McDaniel was asked about the Utah senator not being invited to the Conservative Political Action Conference as a result of his vote. She claimed she had not seen the CPAC announcement but said some Republicans were justifiably "upset" when other Republicans don't defend the president. "They think if you're not supporting him, you're helping a Democrat get elected. That's a very common belief among the grass-roots of our party," she said.

-- Lead House impeachment manager Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) declined to say whether the House will subpoena John Bolton now that the Senate has declined to do so. "Whether it's ... in testimony before the House or it's in his book or it's in one form or another, the truth ... will continue to come out," Schiff said on CBS.

-- Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) promised a sweeping GOP counterattack against Biden and a pursuit of the whistleblower who brought the president's conduct to light after the Senate is expected to acquit Trump. "It's going to happen in the coming weeks," he said on Fox News. Graham used his TV appearance to put the ball in the court of Sen. James E. Risch (R-Idaho), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. “Jim, if you’re watching the show, I hope you are,” he said, “let’s call these people in. Eventually, we’ll get to Hunter Biden. We’re not going to let it go. Jim Risch, you need to start it.” Risch’s office did not respond to requests for comment.

-- Trump said in an interview that aired on Fox before the Super Bowl that he will go ahead with his State of the Union address on Tuesday night. "We’re going to talk about the achievements that we’ve made," the president told Sean Hannity.

-- Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer will deliver the official Democratic response to the State of the Union tomorrow night. The 48-year-old, elected in 2018, will likely be on vice presidential short lists. (Detroit Free Press)

Major airlines stop flying to China as coronavirus spreads

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Coronavirus infections are predicted to grow exponentially as the outbreak becomes increasingly politicized. Anna Fifield and Joel Achenbach report: "One nation after another is closing its doors to most Chinese travelers, as the death toll from the novel coronavirus continues to rise with no sign that the virus can be contained before it becomes a full-blown planetary health crisis. China's increasing isolation threatens to turn this new epidemic into a geopolitical conflict, intensifying preexisting tensions between China and the United States and having potentially significant impacts on the global economy. At 5 p.m. Sunday, the United States put into effect stringent travel restrictions on people coming from China. But the official edict of the Trump administration, announced Friday, led to confusion late Sunday about where, exactly, travelers from China deemed in need of quarantining would be screened and housed at or near the airports where they would be arriving. ...

"At least a dozen countries have put travel restrictions on people coming from China. That list includes some neighboring countries that have closed their borders with China. Such travel restrictions are contrary to public health recommendations and have riled Chinese government officials. The Foreign Ministry's combative spokeswoman, Hua Chunying, singled out the United States, saying that the World Health Organization has said such restrictions are not necessary. ... Hua said many countries have offered China support, but in contrast, 'certain U.S. officials' words and actions are neither factual nor appropriate.' That appeared to be a reference to U.S. Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross, who last week said the coronavirus could 'help' to bring jobs to the United States as companies moved operations away from China. ...

"China's National Health Commission reported Monday that there are now 17,205 confirmed cases of coronavirus infection on the mainland, plus 15 in Hong Kong and eight in Macao. The WHO reported 146 confirmed cases in 23 countries outside China." Federal officials announced there are 11 U.S. cases of the coronavirus, with a couple from central California falling ill after the husband's trip to China's Hubei province at the epicenter of the outbreak.

-- The Department of Homeland Security is warning airline passengers their flights may be rerouted if officials discover mid-flight that someone onboard has been to China in the last 14 days. (AP)

-- The virus is threatening supply chains that depend on Chinese-made parts and materials. David Lynch reports: "Some of the United States' best-known manufacturers such as General Electric, Caterpillar and the Big Three automakers, along with many smaller American businesses, depend on what is made in Chinese factories.

Now, they confront life without those items.... 'The concern is not the zombie apocalypse with people dying in the streets. The concern is that a huge chunk of the global economy gets put out of commission as people wait it out,' said Patrick Chovanec, managing director at Silvercrest Asset Management in New York. ... Most Wall Street economists ... say the economic damage will be limited.

Economists at JPMorgan Chase Bank on Friday cut their first-quarter global growth estimate by 0.3 percentage points to 2.3 percent. But they predicted a swift rebound that would return China and the global economy to their pre-crisis trends by midyear.”

-- Stock markets in China reopened this morning after a 10-day break to their sharpest falls in more than four years. Simon Denyer and Shibani Mahtani report on our special live blog: China's main share indexes plunged more than 8 percent. The government announced it has opened a “super-fast” built hospital in Wuhan. The new facility has 1,000 beds that authorities hope will relieve pressure on the city's overwhelmed hospitals. And Hong Kong leader Carrie Lam said this morning that she would close more border crossings with China, leaving only three open. The announcement came as thousands of medical workers in the city started a strike designated to pressure the government into a full border closure.

-- A man wearing a fake explosive device stabbed two people in south London before he was shot dead by police in what authorities are calling a terrorist attack. William Booth and Karla Adam report: “Police identified the assailant as Sudesh Amman, 20, recently released from prison, where he had been serving a sentence for ‘Islamist-related terrorism’ offenses. British news media said Amman pleaded guilty in 2018 to charges of possessing terrorist documents and disseminating terrorist publications. ... Police said that armed officers, part of a proactive counterterrorism surveillance operation, were following Amman on foot when the attack began. ... Three people were wounded, police said.”

-- Al Qaeda claimed it directed the Saudi military officer who carried out the December shooting at the U.S. military base in Florida that left three sailors dead. From the Times: “In an audio recording released on Sunday, the leader of the Yemen-based group, Qassim al-Rimi, claimed responsibility for the Dec. 6 attack at Naval Air Station Pensacola, according to SITE, an organization that tracks jihadist media. The group offered no evidence that it had trained the gunman, Second Lt. Mohammed Saeed Alshamrani, but produced a copy of his will as well as correspondence that indicated he had been in contact with Al Qaeda. Experts said those elements gave the claim a plausible air.”

-- Turkey accused Syria of killing five Turkish soldiers in Syria’s Idlib province, as the Turks carried out retaliatory strikes. Kareem Fahim reports: The unrest came as “forces loyal to Syrian President Bashar al-Assad are pursuing a military offensive in Idlib [that] has killed hundreds of civilians and caused an exodus of displaced people from towns caught up in the fighting, according to humanitarian aid groups. ... The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, a monitoring group, said the Turkish soldiers were killed during an exchange of fire near the town of Saraqeb, about 15 miles north of Maarat al-Numan. Turkey ‘has responded to this attack in kind’ and killed 30-35 Syrian soldiers, [Turkish President Recep Tayyip] Erdogan said, adding that the retaliatory strikes were continuing.”

-- The head of U.S. Central Command says Iran has “de-escalated,” but the threat of retaliation remains. Missy Ryan reports: “Speaking during a visit to the USS Harry S. Truman, an American aircraft carrier conducting operations in the northern Arabian Sea, [Gen. Kenneth “Frank” McKenzie Jr.] said Iran’s maritime forces likewise had displayed a ‘fairly normal’ level of activity in recent weeks. ... McKenzie said he believed Iran was still ‘digesting’ the impact of the Trump administration’s decision to kill [Maj. Gen. Qasem] Soleimani ... ‘I think Iran has seen that we do have will and that we’re willing to take action in our own interests,’ McKenzie said. ‘We’re not going to endlessly be the recipient of their actions.’”

-- The New Yorker’s Adam Entous and Evan Osnos trace back the decisions that led Trump to order the attack on Soleimani: “The Suleimani operation differed substantially from America’s patterns of targeted killing since 2002. Suleimani was not the leader of a stateless cabal but a high-ranking representative of one of the most populous nations in the Middle East, which, for all its deep involvement in terrorism, is not in a conventional war with the United States. In adopting a mode of assault usually reserved for a wartime enemy, the Administration acted on the belief, which is popular among many of the President’s most influential advisers, that the U.S. has been deceiving itself about the nature of its relationship with Tehran.”

-- The trial for a promising HIV vaccine failed in South Africa after an analysis showed it was no more effective than a placebo. Lenny Bernstein reports: “Vaccinations were halted after an independent monitoring panel for the ‘Uhambo’ study in South Africa determined on Jan 23 that 129 people who received the vaccine developed HIV while 123 who were given a placebo contracted the infection.”

Kansas City Chiefs quarterback Patrick Mahomes hugs girlfriend Brittany Matthews after leading his team from behind to win the Super Bowl. (Patrick Semansky/AP)

THE SUPER BOWL:

-- The Kansas City Chiefs claimed their first Super Bowl title in 50 years after defeating the San Francisco 49ers. Mark Maske

reports: Quarterback Patrick "Mahomes delivered a pair of touchdown passes as part of a 21-point outburst as the Chiefs came back to beat the San Francisco 49ers, 31-20, with a stunning late turnaround in Super Bowl LIV on a picture-perfect South Florida night. 'I just went out there and kept competing,' said Mahomes, who was named the game's MVP. 'I knew we weren't in an ideal situation. But I believed in my defense to get stops. They did. And the guys kept believing in me to start making plays down the field, and we found a way to win.' ... Mahomes became a Super Bowl winner in his third NFL season. He had a first-half rushing touchdown and ended up completing 26 of 42 passes for 286 yards. Chiefs Coach Andy Reid added a Super Bowl victory to his distinguished career." Mahomes "showed why he is the best player in the NFL," writes columnist Jerry Brewer.

-- Kyle Shanahan's team lost a double-digit Super Bowl lead.

Again. Jacob Bogage reports: "The 49ers led by 10 points entering the fourth quarter of Super Bowl LIV, with nearly all the momentum and a championship just 15 minutes away. ... Shanahan is just 40, but he has his own experience with playoff heartache. He was the offensive coordinator for the Falcons three years ago when Atlanta lost a 28-3 second-half lead against Tom Brady and the New England Patriots. Shanahan received plenty of scrutiny after that loss, with critics charging that his play-calling turned too conservative too early ... In those two Super Bowls, Shanahan's offenses have now been outscored 46-0 in the fourth quarter and overtime.”

-- Jennifer Lopez and Shakira took over Hard Rock Stadium for a dazzling 12 minutes at halftime, living the American Dream, writes pop music critic Chris Richards: “For the razzled-and-dazzled, there were armies of dancers pretending to be soldiers, and cheerleaders, and salsa musicians. And there were big songs — the kind you hear at weddings and dentist appointments. And there was a cameo from the rapper Bad Bunny, clad in a trench coat made of liquid steel. And there was a string section playing Led Zeppelin’s ‘Kashmir’ like they were rowing a pirate ship across the Biscayne Bay. And there was Shakira, wagging her tongue at the camera, either singing or trying to communicate with birds of paradise. And there was J-Lo, forever young, twirling around on a pole pointed toward heaven. But through all that, if you were still able to masticate your potato chips in quiet concentration, you may have heard the American Dream itself pulsing in a space where it will always be allowed to live: inside a pop song.”

-- Our culture reporters say the commercials, overall, were pretty weak this year. Maura Judkis and Sonia Rao think the best five spots came from Google, Cheetos, Doritos, Pringles and Snickers. And they identify the five worst ads as those from Audi, Genesis, Planters, Rocket Mortgage and Sabra.

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

NBC News reported that John F. Kerry was overheard talking on his cellphone Sunday morning in the lobby restaurant of the Renaissance Savery hotel in Des Moines about what it would take to run for president. A reporter overheard him discussing “the possibility of Bernie Sanders taking down the Democratic Party — down whole.” When the story broke, Kerry said the report was “false,” using an expletive that shares the first letter of his middle name to put a finer point on it. He deleted the tweet and replaced it with this version:

As soon as the Super Bowl was over, the president sent his congratulations ... to the wrong state:

Katie Rogers ✓
@katierogers

The president just deleted this tweet, presumably to not piss off entire state of Missouri

Donald J. Trump ✓ @realDonaldTrump...
Congratulations to the Kansas City Chiefs on a great game, and a fantastic comeback, under immense pressure. You represented the Great State of Kansas and, in fact, the entire USA, so very well. Our Country is PROUD OF YOU!

♥ 1,572 3:25 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 687 people are talking about this

After the tweet was deleted, many joked that the president will use a Sharpie to validate his mistake:

Tarz \_(□)_/ ✓
@TheyCallMeTarz

I'm just saving everyone from having to see this tomorrow.

♡ 3,943 3:36 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 1,131 people are talking about this

The Missouri governor was in Miami cheering for the correct state:

Governor Mike Parson ✓

@GovParsonMO

Help us cheer the @Chiefs to victory! #SBLIV
#ChiefsKingdom

♥ 382 2:52 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 42 people are talking about this

The president's elder sons and campaign manager, not subject to federal gift laws, appeared to enjoy the hospitality of a GOP lobbyist:

Kenneth P. Vogel ✓

@kenvogel

The president's sons & campaign manager hanging out at the Super Bowl with Trump-linked lobbyist @JeffMillerCA2TX, who companies hire to try to win favorable treatment from the Trump administration.

Recent clients have included Altria, Amazon, Apple & energy & pharmaceutical cos

♥ 356 2:27 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 465 people are talking about this

Bob Dole, the 1996 GOP presidential nominee who represented Kansas in the Senate, also went to Miami for the game:

Senator Bob Dole ✓
@SenatorDole

I'm all Chiefs!

♥ 1,558 12:47 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 263 people are talking about this

Trump attacked Bloomberg for being short, leading to this moment:

Paul Farhi ✓
@farhip

Chyron of the year (so far):

6,448 5:06 PM - Feb 2, 2020

2,500 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

The Trump campaign's Super Bowl ad featured Alice Johnson, whose life sentence for nonviolent drug offenses the president commuted in 2018:

President Trump's ad on criminal justice reform | Super Bowl 2020

“Saturday Night Live” imagined an impeachment "fantasy" trial in the cold open:

SNL also touched on the coronavirus news:

Trevor Noah addressed recent reports that portions of the border wall are falling, joking that maybe Trump should focus on getting the wall done right rather than fast:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: 'It's called 2016 PTSD.' The ghost of Hillary Clinton haunts the Iowa caucuses.
Date: Monday, February 3, 2020 10:44:34 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

'It's called 2016 PTSD.' The ghost of Hillary Clinton haunts the Iowa caucuses.

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) introduces her husband, John, and their daughter Abigail during a rally at Franklin Junior High School in Des Moines on Saturday night. (Gene J. Puskar/AP)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

DES MOINES – Amy Klobuchar remembers the text messages she received from her daughter on election night in 2016. Abigail Bessler, then a student at Yale University, traveled to New York so she could watch Hillary Clinton break the ultimate glass ceiling. When Donald Trump won a shocking upset instead, she texted the senator from Minnesota: “Mom, what should we do now?” Klobuchar wrote back a minute later that she should catch the last train to New Haven: “Remember, you have class tomorrow.” Her distraught daughter replied: “Mom, I mean our country.”

“That is the question we’ve asked ourselves every day since then: What should we do now?” Klobuchar told hundreds of supporters crammed into the Franklin Junior High gym on Saturday night. “My profound advice is this: We better not screw this up.”

Tens of thousands of Iowa Democrats are asking themselves that question as they prepare to gather tonight across more than 1,600 precincts for caucuses that will kickstart a five-month marathon to the party’s convention in Milwaukee. Presidential candidates, their surrogates and rank-and-file voters frequently invoked, always with dread, the memory of 2016 over the weekend. The latest proxy fight between loyalists to Clinton and Bernie Sanders got the lion’s share of attention, but the previous presidential election loomed large at six rallies I covered. The topic came up repeatedly during dozens of interviews across events for all the top contenders.

Pete Buttigieg’s final rally on Sunday was at Lincoln High School – the home of the Rail Splitters – in the same gymnasium where Clinton held her final rally on the night before the caucuses in 2016. Buttigieg and his surrogates boast that he’s toured 25 of the 31 Iowa counties that Barack Obama won in 2012 but Clinton lost in 2016. “And we’re getting bigger and better turnout in them,” Rep. Anthony Brown (D-Md.) told the crowd of 2,000 in Des Moines.

A few hours later, as she warmed up a crowd of 1,100 for Joe Biden at Hiatt Middle School, Rep. Abby Finkenauer (D-Iowa) made the crowd uncomfortable as she forced them to relive their nightmare. “One of the things that really hit me, and that I cannot say thank you enough to the vice president for, is the hope he finally gave me that I didn't even know I was missing," she said. "You see, I remember – as every Iowan does – that night in 2016. We didn't just lose the White House that night. We also lost our state Senate, and the GOP took complete control of our state."

Finkenauer picked up her U.S. House seat in the northeast quadrant of the state during the 2018 midterms, but she noted that Democrats need to flip four seats to win the Iowa House in November. She recalled visiting one of those state legislative districts a few days ago, where the Democrat lost by nine votes in 2018, and meeting independents and Republicans who said they'd vote for Biden if he's the nominee. "Joe Biden will help us take back our state," Finkenauer said.

Former vice president Joe Biden campaigns on Sunday at Clarke University in Dubuque, Iowa. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

Facing what looked like an intimidating Clinton juggernaut, Biden chose not to run in 2016. Elizabeth Warren and Mike Bloomberg also considered bids but opted against them. People in Iowa have been speculating that, perhaps, the outcome would have been different if any of the three had challenged her.

Biden thanked Finkenauer when he took the stage. “We can turn Donald Trump into a four-year historical aberration,” he said, “but we need you.”

The uncharacteristic fixation among Democratic voters on electability – across the ideological spectrum – flows at least in part from that latent sense of shock. “I’ve actually come up with a term for this that I use: It’s called 2016 PTSD,” said Rep. Brendan Boyle (D-Pa.). He spent the last two days as a surrogate for Biden, carpooling around Iowa with former senator Bill Nelson (Fla.), telling every Democrat they could find that the former vice president can carry the two swing states they hail from this fall.

“I did an hour of phone banking today, and literally every person who I reached said, ‘Well, I just want to make sure we pick the best person who can beat Trump,’” Boyle said last night as he and Nelson walked to their rental car after Biden’s rally so they could go watch the Super Bowl. “I think that’s a big reason why you see such a huge undecided number entering the caucuses. People realize the stakes are just so high for this election. It’s the trauma of election night 2016, as well as what Trump’s been like ever since. If you had a Mitt Romney presidency, I don’t think there’d be the same animus that you see on our side.”

A CBS survey of Iowa released on Sunday showed Sanders and Biden tied at 25 percent, with Buttigieg at 21 percent, Warren at 16 percent and Klobuchar at 5 percent.

For Democratic elites and activists, the lingering shock of Trump's victory is never far from the surface. Various storylines going into the caucuses involve clashes and tensions that pick at some of the scabs that, it turns out, have not fully scarred over. Clinton has stepped up her criticism of Sanders as he's moved to the top of some polls. In a podcast published Friday, Clinton faulted Sanders for not doing more to unify the party after she beat him in 2016. This followed her criticisms in a documentary that "nobody likes him" and "he got nothing done," which she stood by in an interview with the Hollywood Reporter.

Sanders couldn't attend a Friday evening event in Clive because he was stuck in Washington for the impeachment trial. When Clinton's name came up during a panel discussion of prominent supporters, someone in the crowd booed. The moderator replied not to boo because that's not classy. Then Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.), a prominent Sanders surrogate and member of the Squad, interrupted. "No, no, I'll boo," she said, booing for effect. "That's all right — the haters will shut up on Monday."

After Tlaib expressed regret the next morning, Sanders campaign manager Faiz Shakir tweeted: "Rashida, you're all good. We love your passion and conviction. Don't change." Then Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill weighed in: "I can't imagine this kind of behavior is something Iowans want to see from candidates and their surrogates."

---

Content from Partnership for America's Health Care Future

American families can't afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there's "no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases."

---

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) takes the stage with his grandkids Ella and Dylan at Simpson College on Saturday in Indianola, Iowa. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Sanders alluded to the kerfuffle moments after he took the stage at Simpson College in Indianola on Saturday afternoon. “I’ll tell you as bluntly as I can why I believe we are the strongest campaign to beat Trump – not to say we are the only campaign,” he said. “Certainly, I hope that we’re going to win. But if we don’t win, we will support the winner.”

The senator from Vermont then announced that his campaign knocked on 500,000 doors in Iowa during the past month. “If it’s a low turnout election, Trump will win,” he said. “And I believe our campaign ... can bring millions of people into the political process who normally do not vote.”

Then, on Saturday night, documentarian Michael Moore, who has been introducing Sanders around the state, ripped the Democratic National Committee during a concert in Cedar Rapids that drew 3,000 people. With echoes from four years ago, Moore accused the DNC of rigging the debate qualification requirements to help Bloomberg, a self-funding billionaire, qualify. The DNC’s spokeswoman replied that this is a “totally false ... conspiracy theory.”

A lot of the pitches the candidates and their surrogates make feel like allusions to the perceived shortcomings that critics believe allowed Trump to topple Clinton. “Bernie is a candidate the current president will not be able to vilify as inauthentic, and that’s a huge advantage,” said Jane Sanders, the senator’s wife. “If you watched the debates, you know that I’m not afraid to speak my mind,” added Klobuchar.

Consultants have pleaded with Sanders to talk more about himself throughout the campaign – in addition to his calls for political revolution. The senator obliged when he launched his campaign last February, but he's mostly cut it out. This weekend, though, Sanders took the stage with two of his grandchildren. Then he emphasized his background as the son of an immigrant when he promised to restore protections for "Dreamers," undocumented immigrants who were brought to the United States as children.

"The status quo is terrified of a Bernie presidency," said Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.), another member of the Squad, who introduced Sanders at Simpson College. Dozens of students snapped their fingers to signal approval. "Iowa will be able to start a domino effect ... that will take him all the way to the White House."

Warren tries to straddle the gap from Sanders to Biden. She emphasized this weekend that she knows how to work within the system to advance her agenda (e.g. to lower the cost of hearing aids) but also knows when to pick fights and apply pressure from the outside (e.g. to save the Affordable Care Act from being repealed). Coincidentally, she appeared at the same student center on Sunday that Sanders campaigned at on Saturday. "I am in this to fight back," Warren declared. "That's why I'm here. We fight back. Fighting back is an act of patriotism."

Pete Buttigieg is hugged by his husband, Chasten Buttigieg, at the end of a rally Sunday at Lincoln High School in Des Moines. (Matt McClain/The Washington Post)

Buttigieg also sought to stay out of the spat between Bernie World and Hillary Land. “I didn’t much enjoy, as a Democrat, living through the experience of 2016, and I want to make sure 2020 resembles 2016 as little as possible,” he said as he left a Saturday event in Waterloo.

Buttigieg has branded himself a unifier. Members of the audience submitted written questions for the candidate at his rally in Des Moines, which were pulled at random from a fishbowl. One asked him to name his favorite Beatles song. “I feel like, in a moment like this, the answer has got to be ‘Come Together,’” said Buttigieg, who is always quick on his feet.

Buttigieg was joined on Sunday afternoon by his mother and mother-

in-law. His mom, Anne Montgomery, at 74, is younger than both Sanders and Biden. With explicit calls for generational change, Buttigieg said the next president will face futuristic challenges that we cannot even begin to fathom because the world is changing so fast. “We need a president prepared to leave the politics of the past in the past,” he said, adding that “falling back on the familiar” is comfortable but dangerous. “We can’t be afraid.”

Many Democratic rank-and-file voters are exhausted over the Sanders vs. Clinton feud of 2016. Sean Maguire, 42, is supporting Warren but complimented Sanders for “shifting the Overton window.” “He’s definitely changed the conversation, and we wouldn’t be here without him,” said Maguire, who lives in West Des Moines and works in software. But he thinks Clinton and Sanders need to cut out their feuding. “Hillary has been in politics for decades, and she’s a brilliant woman and clearly capable,” said Maguire. “I think she’s throwing bombs right now because she’s wanting more of a moderate candidate. So she’s using her influence and power to change the narrative and to get us talking. But just shut up and move on.”

I spoke with a mother and daughter from Norwalk, a suburb of Des Moines, who plan to caucus together for Buttigieg after supporting Sanders four years ago. Andrea Legan, 40, an office manager at a law firm, said the fighting between loyalists to Sanders and Clinton is tiresome. “There’s three sides to every story – his, hers and the truth,” she said. “Unlike Trump supporters, I will admit my mistake,” added Sue Woody, 61, a weight-loss consultant. “It just makes me mad that, for the Bernie Bros, it’s him or nobody. That’s how we got Trump.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE
HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by LivelIntent

MORE FROM IOWA:

-- Washington Post team coverage:

- Dan Balz: “Undecided Iowans are making their decisions.”
- Chelsea Janes, Annie Linskey, Sean Sullivan and Cleve Wootson Jr.: “Candidates power to end of Iowa campaign with competing visions of unity and electability.”
- Toluse Olorunnipa: “After a year of immersion in Iowa, will the Democrats return before November?”

- Karen Tumulty: “Uncertainty hangs over Iowa — and the 2020 race.”
- Marc Fisher: “An anxious nation finally votes. Some hope that will ease divisions. Others see a permanent state of ‘trench warfare.’”
- Jenna Johnson: “Sanders’s caucus target: Latino voters usually overlooked in mostly white Iowa.”
- Kayla Epstein: “How do the Iowa caucuses work, and how are they different this year?”

-- Good reads from elsewhere:

- Des Moines Register: “10 questions that will be answered on caucus night.”
- Politico: “Rivals warn Sanders campaign plans to game Iowa results.”
- New York Times: “Democrats Had a 2020 Vision. This Isn’t Quite What They Expected.”
- Wall Street Journal: “Where Democratic Candidates Might Look for Support in Iowa Caucuses.”
- Fox News: “Iowa counties to watch.”
- FiveThirtyEight: “What Are The X-Factors That Could Change The Results In Iowa?”
- AP: “New rules could muddle results of Iowa caucuses.”
- Los Angeles Times: “Iowa voters are bringing the caucus to California and beyond.”
- USA Today: “Who will win New Hampshire? Unsure Democratic voters are watching Iowa with an eye on beating Trump.”

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

'We're going to turn the page on impeachment': GOP, Democrats look ahead to Wednesday's vote

IMPEACHMENT LATEST:

-- Two Senate Republicans acknowledged on the Sunday talk shows that Trump was wrong to pressure Ukraine for his own political benefit, even as they defended their decision to prohibit new evidence in his impeachment trial while pressing ahead with the president's all-but-certain acquittal in a vote scheduled for Wednesday. They did so even after the Trump administration acknowledged the existence over the weekend of two dozen emails that could reveal the president's thinking about withholding the military aid.

- “I think he shouldn’t have done it,” Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.) told Chuck Todd on NBC. “I think it was wrong. Inappropriate was the way I’d say — improper, crossing the line.”
- “Maybe not the perfect call,” Sen. Joni Ernst (R-Iowa) told Jake Tapper on CNN. “He did it maybe in the wrong manner. ... I think he could have done it through different channels.”

-- But Ernst also opened the door to the House trying to impeaching Biden if he's elected and Republicans win the majority. “I think this door of impeachable whatever has been opened,” she told Bloomberg News. “Joe Biden should be very careful what he’s asking for because, you know, we can have a situation where if it should ever be President Biden, that immediately, people, right the day after he would be elected would be saying, ‘Well, we’re going to impeach him.’”

-- Sen. Susan Collins, the first of two Republicans to break with the president on any aspect of the trial, has found it lonely in the middle. Griff Witte reports from her home state: “Here in Maine, where the famously independent Collins is locked in a tight reelection campaign, the choice elicited a wintry mix of cold shoulders and icy glares. Republicans quietly counseled that Collins could go no further without inciting a rebellion from the party’s Trump-loving base — perhaps even a primary challenge. Democrats, meanwhile, heaped scorn on the senator for making gestures toward standing up to the president but not doing so when it counts. ... Siding with Democrats on whether the president should be removed would be unforgivable among Maine's rank-and-file Republicans, who are increasingly part of the Trump wing of the party, not the Collins wing. ... The base is already restless. In recent weeks, Collins's offices have been flooded with angry voice mails, many of them threatening and hate-filled. The vitriol has come from impeachment supporters as well as the president's defenders, outspoken in demanding that Collins take their side."

-- RNC Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel won't defend her uncle, Mitt Romney, after he voted in favor of witnesses. On CBS's "Face the Nation," McDaniel was asked about the Utah senator not being invited to the Conservative Political Action Conference as a result of his vote. She claimed she had not seen the CPAC announcement but said some Republicans were justifiably "upset" when other Republicans don't defend the president. "They think if you're not supporting him, you're helping a Democrat get elected. That's a very common belief among the grass-roots of our party," she said.

-- Lead House impeachment manager Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) declined to say whether the House will subpoena John Bolton now that the Senate has declined to do so. "Whether it's ... in testimony before the House or it's in his book or it's in one form or another, the truth ... will continue to come out," Schiff said on CBS.

-- Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) promised a sweeping GOP counterattack against Biden and a pursuit of the whistleblower who brought the president's conduct to light after the Senate is expected to acquit Trump. "It's going to happen in the coming weeks," he said on Fox News. Graham used his TV appearance to put the ball in the court of Sen. James E. Risch (R-Idaho), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. “Jim, if you’re watching the show, I hope you are,” he said, “let’s call these people in. Eventually, we’ll get to Hunter Biden. We’re not going to let it go. Jim Risch, you need to start it.” Risch’s office did not respond to requests for comment.

-- Trump said in an interview that aired on Fox before the Super Bowl that he will go ahead with his State of the Union address on Tuesday night. "We're going to talk about the achievements that we've made," the president told Sean Hannity.

-- Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer will deliver the official Democratic response to the State of the Union tomorrow night. The 48-year-old, elected in 2018, will likely be on vice presidential short lists. (Detroit Free Press)

Major airlines stop flying to China as coronavirus spreads

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Coronavirus infections are predicted to grow exponentially as the outbreak becomes increasingly politicized. Anna Fifield and Joel Achenbach report: "One nation after another is closing its doors to most Chinese travelers, as the death toll from the novel coronavirus continues to rise with no sign that the virus can be contained before it becomes a full-blown planetary health crisis. China's increasing isolation threatens to turn this new epidemic into a geopolitical conflict, intensifying preexisting tensions between China and the United States and having potentially significant impacts on the global economy. At 5 p.m. Sunday, the United States put into effect stringent travel restrictions on people coming from China. But the official edict of the Trump administration, announced Friday, led to confusion late Sunday about where, exactly, travelers from China deemed in need of quarantining would be screened and housed at or near the airports where they would be arriving. ...

"At least a dozen countries have put travel restrictions on people coming from China. That list includes some neighboring countries that have closed their borders with China. Such travel restrictions are contrary to public health recommendations and have riled Chinese government officials. The Foreign Ministry's combative spokeswoman, Hua Chunying, singled out the United States, saying that the World Health Organization has said such restrictions are not necessary. ... Hua said many countries have offered China support, but in contrast, 'certain U.S. officials' words and actions are neither factual nor appropriate.' That appeared to be a reference to U.S. Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross, who last week said the coronavirus could 'help' to bring jobs to the United States as companies moved operations away from China. ...

"China's National Health Commission reported Monday that there are now 17,205 confirmed cases of coronavirus infection on the mainland, plus 15 in Hong Kong and eight in Macao. The WHO reported 146 confirmed cases in 23 countries outside China." Federal officials announced there are 11 U.S. cases of the coronavirus, with a couple from central California falling ill after the husband's trip to China's Hubei province at the epicenter of the outbreak.

-- The Department of Homeland Security is warning airline passengers their flights may be rerouted if officials discover mid-flight that someone onboard has been to China in the last 14 days. (AP)

-- The virus is threatening supply chains that depend on Chinese-made parts and materials. David Lynch reports: "Some of the United States' best-known manufacturers such as General Electric, Caterpillar and the Big Three automakers, along with many smaller American businesses, depend on what is made in Chinese factories.

Now, they confront life without those items.... 'The concern is not the zombie apocalypse with people dying in the streets. The concern is that a huge chunk of the global economy gets put out of commission as people wait it out,' said Patrick Chovanec, managing director at Silvercrest Asset Management in New York. ... Most Wall Street economists ... say the economic damage will be limited.

Economists at JPMorgan Chase Bank on Friday cut their first-quarter global growth estimate by 0.3 percentage points to 2.3 percent. But they predicted a swift rebound that would return China and the global economy to their pre-crisis trends by midyear.”

-- Stock markets in China reopened this morning after a 10-day break to their sharpest falls in more than four years. Simon Denyer and Shibani Mahtani report on our special live blog: China’s main share indexes plunged more than 8 percent. The government announced it has opened a “super-fast” built hospital in Wuhan. The new facility has 1,000 beds that authorities hope will relieve pressure on the city’s overwhelmed hospitals. And Hong Kong leader Carrie Lam said this morning that she would close more border crossings with China, leaving only three open. The announcement came as thousands of medical workers in the city started a strike designated to pressure the government into a full border closure.

-- A man wearing a fake explosive device stabbed two people in south London before he was shot dead by police in what authorities are calling a terrorist attack. William Booth and Karla Adam report: “Police identified the assailant as Sudesh Amman, 20, recently released from prison, where he had been serving a sentence for ‘Islamist-related terrorism’ offenses. British news media said Amman pleaded guilty in 2018 to charges of possessing terrorist documents and disseminating terrorist publications. ... Police said that armed officers, part of a proactive counterterrorism surveillance operation, were following Amman on foot when the attack began. ... Three people were wounded, police said.”

-- Al Qaeda claimed it directed the Saudi military officer who carried out the December shooting at the U.S. military base in Florida that left three sailors dead. From the Times: “In an audio recording released on Sunday, the leader of the Yemen-based group, Qassim al-Rimi, claimed responsibility for the Dec. 6 attack at Naval Air Station Pensacola, according to SITE, an organization that tracks jihadist media. The group offered no evidence that it had trained the gunman, Second Lt. Mohammed Saeed Alshamrani, but produced a copy of his will as well as correspondence that indicated he had been in contact with Al Qaeda. Experts said those elements gave the claim a plausible air.”

-- Turkey accused Syria of killing five Turkish soldiers in Syria’s Idlib province, as the Turks carried out retaliatory strikes. Kareem Fahim reports: The unrest came as “forces loyal to Syrian President Bashar al-Assad are pursuing a military offensive in Idlib [that] has killed hundreds of civilians and caused an exodus of displaced people from towns caught up in the fighting, according to humanitarian aid groups. ... The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, a monitoring group, said the Turkish soldiers were killed during an exchange of fire near the town of Saraqeb, about 15 miles north of Maarat al-Numan. Turkey ‘has responded to this attack in kind’ and killed 30-35 Syrian soldiers, [Turkish President Recep Tayyip] Erdogan said, adding that the retaliatory strikes were continuing.”

-- The head of U.S. Central Command says Iran has “de-escalated,” but the threat of retaliation remains. Missy Ryan reports: “Speaking during a visit to the USS Harry S. Truman, an American aircraft carrier conducting operations in the northern Arabian Sea, [Gen. Kenneth “Frank” McKenzie Jr.] said Iran’s maritime forces likewise had displayed a ‘fairly normal’ level of activity in recent weeks. ... McKenzie said he believed Iran was still ‘digesting’ the impact of the Trump administration’s decision to kill [Maj. Gen. Qasem] Soleimani ... ‘I think Iran has seen that we do have will and that we’re willing to take action in our own interests,’ McKenzie said. ‘We’re not going to endlessly be the recipient of their actions.’”

-- The New Yorker’s Adam Entous and Evan Osnos trace back the decisions that led Trump to order the attack on Soleimani: “The Suleimani operation differed substantially from America’s patterns of targeted killing since 2002. Suleimani was not the leader of a stateless cabal but a high-ranking representative of one of the most populous nations in the Middle East, which, for all its deep involvement in terrorism, is not in a conventional war with the United States. In adopting a mode of assault usually reserved for a wartime enemy, the Administration acted on the belief, which is popular among many of the President’s most influential advisers, that the U.S. has been deceiving itself about the nature of its relationship with Tehran.”

-- The trial for a promising HIV vaccine failed in South Africa after an analysis showed it was no more effective than a placebo. Lenny Bernstein reports: “Vaccinations were halted after an independent monitoring panel for the ‘Uhambo’ study in South Africa determined on Jan 23 that 129 people who received the vaccine developed HIV while 123 who were given a placebo contracted the infection.”

Kansas City Chiefs quarterback Patrick Mahomes hugs girlfriend Brittany Matthews after leading his team from behind to win the Super Bowl. (Patrick Semansky/AP)

THE SUPER BOWL:

-- The Kansas City Chiefs claimed their first Super Bowl title in 50 years after defeating the San Francisco 49ers. Mark Maske

reports: Quarterback Patrick "Mahomes delivered a pair of touchdown passes as part of a 21-point outburst as the Chiefs came back to beat the San Francisco 49ers, 31-20, with a stunning late turnaround in Super Bowl LIV on a picture-perfect South Florida night. 'I just went out there and kept competing,' said Mahomes, who was named the game's MVP. 'I knew we weren't in an ideal situation. But I believed in my defense to get stops. They did. And the guys kept believing in me to start making plays down the field, and we found a way to win.' ... Mahomes became a Super Bowl winner in his third NFL season. He had a first-half rushing touchdown and ended up completing 26 of 42 passes for 286 yards. Chiefs Coach Andy Reid added a Super Bowl victory to his distinguished career." Mahomes "showed why he is the best player in the NFL," writes columnist Jerry Brewer.

-- Kyle Shanahan's team lost a double-digit Super Bowl lead.

Again. Jacob Bogage reports: "The 49ers led by 10 points entering the fourth quarter of Super Bowl LIV, with nearly all the momentum and a championship just 15 minutes away. ... Shanahan is just 40, but he has his own experience with playoff heartache. He was the offensive coordinator for the Falcons three years ago when Atlanta lost a 28-3 second-half lead against Tom Brady and the New England Patriots. Shanahan received plenty of scrutiny after that loss, with critics charging that his play-calling turned too conservative too early ... In those two Super Bowls, Shanahan's offenses have now been outscored 46-0 in the fourth quarter and overtime.”

-- Jennifer Lopez and Shakira took over Hard Rock Stadium for a dazzling 12 minutes at halftime, living the American Dream, writes pop music critic Chris Richards: “For the razzled-and-dazzled, there were armies of dancers pretending to be soldiers, and cheerleaders, and salsa musicians. And there were big songs — the kind you hear at weddings and dentist appointments. And there was a cameo from the rapper Bad Bunny, clad in a trench coat made of liquid steel. And there was a string section playing Led Zeppelin’s ‘Kashmir’ like they were rowing a pirate ship across the Biscayne Bay. And there was Shakira, wagging her tongue at the camera, either singing or trying to communicate with birds of paradise. And there was J-Lo, forever young, twirling around on a pole pointed toward heaven. But through all that, if you were still able to masticate your potato chips in quiet concentration, you may have heard the American Dream itself pulsing in a space where it will always be allowed to live: inside a pop song.”

-- Our culture reporters say the commercials, overall, were pretty weak this year. Maura Judkis and Sonia Rao think the best five spots came from Google, Cheetos, Doritos, Pringles and Snickers. And they identify the five worst ads as those from Audi, Genesis, Planters, Rocket Mortgage and Sabra.

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

NBC News reported that John F. Kerry was overheard talking on his cellphone Sunday morning in the lobby restaurant of the Renaissance Savery hotel in Des Moines about what it would take to run for president. A reporter overheard him discussing “the possibility of Bernie Sanders taking down the Democratic Party — down whole.” When the story broke, Kerry said the report was “false,” using an expletive that shares the first letter of his middle name to put a finer point on it. He deleted the tweet and replaced it with this version:

As soon as the Super Bowl was over, the president sent his congratulations ... to the wrong state:

Katie Rogers ✓
@katierogers

The president just deleted this tweet, presumably to not piss off entire state of Missouri

Donald J. Trump ✓ @realDonaldTrump
Congratulations to the Kansas City Chiefs on a great game, and a fantastic comeback, under immense pressure. You represented the Great State of Kansas and, in fact, the entire USA, so very well. Our Country is PROUD OF YOU!

♥ 1,572 3:25 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 687 people are talking about this

After the tweet was deleted, many joked that the president will use a Sharpie to validate his mistake:

Tarz \_(□)_/ ✓
@TheyCallMeTarz

I'm just saving everyone from having to see this tomorrow.

♡ 3,943 3:36 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 1,131 people are talking about this

The Missouri governor was in Miami cheering for the correct state:

Governor Mike Parson ✓

@GovParsonMO

Help us cheer the @Chiefs to victory! #SBLIV
#ChiefsKingdom

♥ 382 2:52 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 42 people are talking about this

The president's elder sons and campaign manager, not subject to federal gift laws, appeared to enjoy the hospitality of a GOP lobbyist:

Kenneth P. Vogel ✓

@kenvogel

The president's sons & campaign manager hanging out at the Super Bowl with Trump-linked lobbyist @JeffMillerCA2TX, who companies hire to try to win favorable treatment from the Trump administration.

Recent clients have included Altria, Amazon, Apple & energy & pharmaceutical cos

♥ 356 2:27 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 465 people are talking about this

Bob Dole, the 1996 GOP presidential nominee who represented Kansas in the Senate, also went to Miami for the game:

Senator Bob Dole ✓
@SenatorDole

I'm all Chiefs!

♥ 1,558 12:47 AM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 263 people are talking about this

Trump attacked Bloomberg for being short, leading to this moment:

Paul Farhi ✓
@farhip

Chyron of the year (so far):

♡ 6,448 5:06 PM - Feb 2, 2020

💬 2,500 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

The Trump campaign's Super Bowl ad featured Alice Johnson, whose life sentence for nonviolent drug offenses the president commuted in 2018:

President Trump's ad on criminal justice reform | Super Bowl 2020

“Saturday Night Live” imagined an impeachment "fantasy" trial in the cold open:

SNL also touched on the coronavirus news:

Trevor Noah addressed recent reports that portions of the border wall are falling, joking that maybe Trump should focus on getting the wall done right rather than fast:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Codes Enclosed -- February 4 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Tuesday, February 4, 2020 5:35:59 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

This email is an alert that the full edition of Energywire was just published. When prompted, enter your trial access codes (both are case sensitive):

Username: (b) (5)

Password: (b) (5)

Ready to subscribe? Click here.

ENERGYWIRE — Tue., February 4, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Largest U.S. offshore wind farm hinges on fossil fuel giant

Battle lines are forming over Dominion Energy's $7.8 billion plan to build the first offshore wind farm in the Mid-Atlantic.

TOP STORIES

2. ENERGY TRANSITIONS:

N.C. coal plant closure fuels gas debate

3. SECURITY:

Feds band against energy hackers as ransomware threat rises

4. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Army unveils 'resilient' solar panels for extreme weather

OIL AND GAS

5. PIPELINES:

Enbridge Line 3 approval ignites climate battle

LOBBYING

6. PEOPLE:

Utility group taps ex-Hill aide

ELECTRICITY

---

7. CHINA:

Solar industry seeks government aid amid virus outbreak

8. HYDROPOWER:

Transmission line foes submit signatures for referendum

9. NUCLEAR:

2nd reactor being studied for eastern Wash.

---

BUSINESS

---

10. NATURAL GAS:

UAE finds world's biggest gas field since 2005

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

---

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: The Washington Post

To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov

Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: A bad night for Biden in Iowa is good news for Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Bloomberg
Date: Tuesday, February 4, 2020 8:50:05 AM

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

A bad night for Biden in Iowa is good news for Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Bloomberg

Joe and Jill Biden address supporters on Monday night while they await results at Drake University in Des Moines. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

DES MOINES – Joe Biden’s core message was electability, but the former vice president failed to consolidate support among the majority of Iowa caucus-goers who said choosing a candidate who can beat President Trump was their first priority, according to preliminary entrance polls conducted Monday night.

Just under one-quarter of electability-focused voters supported Biden, while a similar percentage backed former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg. Sens. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.), Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.)

and Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) each drew about 15 percent support among this group.

By contrast, Biden received only 5 percent support among caucus-goers who said it was most important to nominate a candidate they agree with. Sanders led among this group with 36 percent support.

Because of technical problems, no winner has been called. In fact, the state Democratic Party has still not released any official numbers. It's therefore important to emphasize the preliminary and anecdotal nature of what we know, but there's a body of evidence that points to a bad night for Biden.

"It's a very close race among the top three candidates (Warren, Sanders, Buttigieg) and Biden came a distant fourth," tweeted Warren chief strategist Joe Rospars.

"With the numbers we've seen internally and publicly, we're running even or ahead of Vice President Biden," said Klobuchar campaign manager Justin Buoen.

Biden campaign manager Greg Schultz pushed back on his counterparts. "Our own model shows that Biden overperformed in key districts we needed to be competitive in and we feel confident that this is a tight race with bunched up candidates," he said in a statement that offered no specifics or numbers. "When it comes to the final outcome of the caucuses, this is still a competition for delegates, and the winner will continue to be based on State Delegate Equivalents. We believe that we have won our fair share of them."

-- Among moderate and conservative voters, who made up about one-third of caucus-goers, about 1 in 4 said they backed Biden, while another quarter backed Buttigieg, and about 1 in 5 supported Klobuchar, according to the entrance polls.

Seniors and moderates buoyed Biden's support in the caucuses. Scott Clement, the director of our polling unit, notes that 1 in 3 caucus-goers age 65 or older chose Biden as their initial preference while about 1 in 30 voters under age 30 did so, according to the preliminary entrance polls.

With Iowa caucus results still uncertain, Democrats look to New Hampshire

-- Biden campaign officials had said they thought he would be viable nearly everywhere, meaning that he'd cross the threshold of getting 15 percent support in the precinct, but observers at several caucus sites reported that he was falling short. My colleagues scattered across the state to observe precinct caucuses. Here are three especially revealing vignettes from the ground that don't bode well for the former vice president:

1) “In a cramped elementary school gymnasium in Muscatine, supporters of [Biden] and [Warren] were stunned when both candidates failed to receive enough votes to remain viable,” Tim Craig reports. “This was the sort of place where both had hoped to do well. The economy of this Mississippi River town has long revolved around manufacturing. The neighborhoods near the school are a mix of one-story homes with ‘Proud Union Home’ signs in their front yards and grander multistory houses that overlook a country club golf course. In 2016, voters in this precinct were mostly split between Hillary Clinton and [Sanders]. During the general election, Trump narrowly defeated Clinton here — and went on to win Muscatine County, making him the first Republican to do so since 1984. Of the roughly 170 caucus-goers in the gym, only 17 initially voted for Biden and 16 for Warren.

“For an agonizing 25 minutes, supporters for both campaigns strategized about whether they should form an alliance — but with many Warren supporters skeptical of Biden, and vice versa, the effort collapsed. The two camps watched their members scatter, sometimes slapping on the stickers of rivals — most often [Buttigieg], who ended the night there with 73 votes, but also Sanders and [Klobuchar], who came in second and third. ‘I’ve been doing this a long time and this is absolutely crazy that neither Biden nor Warren were viable here,’ said Esther Dean, 83, a Biden supporter and attorney.”

If Biden’s not viable in Muscatine, it’s a red flag.

2) “In the fast-growing Des Moines suburb of Ankeny, local

Democrats expected [Buttigieg] and [Warren] to do well, as both had made repeated trips to the area and had large organizing operations,” Isaac Stanley-Becker reports. “They were surprised when dozens of Sanders supporters showed up and became the largest faction in the precinct. Biden did not have enough support, and his supporters were quickly surrounded, as if by poachers. Jacob Middleton, the precinct captain for Sanders, approached the Biden supporters and asked: ‘Is anyone even considering going for Bernie over here?’ ‘No,’ the disillusioned Biden supporters answered in unison. ‘None?’ he repeated. ‘No,’ they said. ... In the end, a handful of Biden supporters, shocked the former vice president didn’t have enough support to move ahead, refused to pick a second choice.”

3) “As the night wore on and the formalities of the caucus taking place in Iowa City’s Englert Theatre took longer than expected, nearly two dozen Biden supporters gathered in the small lobby beneath an exit sign,” Rachel Chason reports. “They realized there was no way their candidate would make it past the first round of voting, and they tried to decide what to do next. The theater was packed with large crowds for other candidates: 300 for Sanders, nearly 200 for Warren and nearly 100 for Buttigieg. It was no surprise — after all, this is the so-called People’s Republic of Johnson County, home to the highest percentage of registered Democrats in the state. But these Biden supporters weren’t sure if either Sanders or Warren could beat the president.

“Gene Murphy, 65, has liked Biden for about 40 years — and caucused for him because he thought he had the best shot of beating Trump. He decided that he would vote first for Biden, then for Buttigieg. ... ‘Bernie is great,’ he said, ‘but I don’t see him winning.’”

Content from Partnership for America’s Health Care Future

American families can’t afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there’s “no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases.”

Biden in Iowa: ‘Character is on the ballot’

-- “We’re in this for the long haul,” Biden told supporters at his watch party in Des Moines. “From our indications, it’s going to be close. We are going to walk out of here with our share of delegates. We don’t know exactly what it is yet, but we feel good about where we are.”

-- Biden already has a painful history with Iowa. He dropped out in 1987 after being accused of plagiarizing a speech by British Labour leader Neil Kinnock while in Des Moines. In 2008, he finished fifth in the caucuses here, garnering less than 1 percent of the vote. Months later, Barack Obama would revive Biden’s political career by putting him on the ticket.

-- Operatives agree it’s safe to say that turnout did not break the record set in 2008 but was more comparable to 2016. “The one conclusion from the numbers that were being collected by the media suggested that the eventual winner would receive a lower percentage of the vote than any previous winner since 1972, when the modern caucuses were born,” Dan Balz notes. “But that could end up being the secondary story. On Monday night, it was all about Iowa and not the candidates.”

-- The snafu related to tabulating the results could offer a symbolic reprieve of sorts for Biden. No matter what gets announced by the state party, some campaigns will have a strong incentive to cast doubt on the results. No one has done this more forcefully, so far, than the Biden campaign. His general counsel Dana Remus sent an open letter to the leaders of the Iowa Democratic Party last night expressing concerns about the “considerable flaws” in the caucus reporting system, foreshadowing a possible effort to diminish bad results by casting doubt on the veracity of the numbers.

“The app that was intended to relay Caucus results to the Party failed; the Party’s back-up telephonic reporting system likewise has failed. Now, we understand that Caucus Chairs are attempting to — and, in many cases, failing to — report results telephonically to the Party. These acute failures are occurring statewide,” Remus wrote. “We believe that the campaigns deserve full explanations and relevant information regarding the methods of quality control you are employing, and an opportunity to respond, before any official results are released.”

Biden’s deputy campaign manager, Kate Bedingfield, tweeted that the “integrity of the process is critical.”

-- State party officials held a second conference call with top officials from the campaigns in the wee hours of this morning. "The party officials told the campaigns that they planned to release caucus results later on Tuesday, and that they are hand-checking results," Sean Sullivan and Matt Viser report on our live blog. "Sanders senior adviser Jeff Weaver got into a tense exchange with Iowa Democratic Party Chairman Troy Price."

-- Everyone else tried to claim some success last night. Advisers to Buttigieg and Sanders each distributed internal data to reporters overnight to bolster their claims that they fared well in the unofficial returns.

“By all indications, we are going on to New Hampshire victorious,” said Buttigieg.

“When those results are announced, I have a good feeling we’re going to be doing very, very well here in Iowa,” said Sanders.

“We know there’s delays, but we know one thing — we are punching above our weight,” said Klobuchar.

“The road won’t be easy, but we are built for the long haul,” said Warren.

Buttigieg in Iowa: 'We are going on to New Hampshire victorious'

-- Second-place finishes across many groups served Buttigieg well. My colleague Dan Keating emailed a smart observation from poring over the preliminary entrance polls of voter preferences: “Buttigieg didn’t dominate among any group, but he racked up many silver medals. Buttigieg isn’t leading among voters under 45 – he’s second. He isn’t leading among 45 and older – he’s second. He’s not leading among people with college degrees – he’s second. He’s also second among Democratic voters without a college degree. ... He’s second among independents with support from about 2 in 10. He's roughly tied for second with Warren among self-described liberals (again, about 2 in 10). Buttigieg was second in large cities and second in suburbs.

“It’s not that he’s never first. Preliminary results suggest he led narrowly among women voters. He led in the more rural areas. He won among caucus-goers who called themselves somewhat liberal, the largest contingent. And one of his only clear weaknesses was with ‘very liberal’ Democrats, among whom he garnered support from just over 1 in 10, a distant third behind Warren and Sanders. He was just a nudge ahead of Biden among people who voted for Clinton in the caucus four years ago. And he nabbed (a distant) second among people who opted for Sanders in the 2016 caucus; Sanders won a majority of his past supporters.”

“Among people whose top issue was foreign affairs, Buttigieg was ... second. [Biden was first.] Among people whose top issue was healthcare or climate change, he was essentially tied with Sanders for the lead. For voters prioritizing income inequality, he landed a shocking-for-him third behind Sanders and Warren. Among people who said beating Trump is more important than specific policy issues, Buttigieg roughly matched Biden for first. Among caucus-goers who said specific policies are more important, he once again got second, behind Sanders. Buttigieg’s finish in the caucus shows that a lot of silver medals can get you near the top of the podium.”

-- Mike Bloomberg, a candidate who doesn’t have to worry about fundraising and who didn’t compete in Iowa, is also looking like one of the winners from all this chaos. The billionaire former mayor of New York is pouring hundreds of millions of dollars into advertisements in the states that vote on Super Tuesday, March 3, when more than half the delegates will be awarded. Bloomberg, who stumped in California on Monday, benefits from a weaker Biden and a fragmented field. He hopes to emerge as the moderate alternative to Sanders or Warren.

Sanders in Iowa: 'Change is coming'

-- There's more danger ahead for Biden. As the race moves to New Hampshire, he has not invested nearly as much as his opponents in the state, putting him at a disadvantage. Biden spent just $5,429 on television and radio advertising in New Hampshire through mid-January. Compare that to $3.6 million from Sanders in that period, and $128,000 from Warren, according to Advertising Analytics. During the same period, Biden spent $5 million in Iowa on TV and radio. Advertising Analytics said on Monday that Biden's total spending has now increased to $215,000.

"Biden's campaign has long sought to play down expectations here, given that Sanders and Warren are from neighboring states," Michael Kranish reports in today's newspaper from Concord, N.H. "But Biden himself recently delivered a conflicting message. While he stressed he doesn't need a victory here, he said on Jan. 26 on a local television station, WMUR, that 'I think I will win New Hampshire.' ... Biden, meanwhile, faces challenges here that may be even greater than those he dealt with in Iowa. The relative lack of minorities, whose support is crucial to his bid, is once again a factor here. Whites make up 91 percent of Iowa and 93 percent in New Hampshire, according to Census Bureau figures. ...

"Even the best-run campaign organization in New Hampshire will find it difficult to overcome a poor Iowa finish, according to Dante Scala, a professor of political science at the University of New Hampshire. 'You can build the boat,' Scala said, referring to a campaign organization. 'But you win with the wind in its sails. If you are not the story out of Iowa, your sails can go limp anyway, and it doesn't matter how well the boat is built.'"

New Hampshire Secretary of State William Gardner noted that, in the last 17 New Hampshire primaries, 14 winners went on to be elected president, and the other three who occupied the White House finished in second place here. “No one has come in less than second in a New Hampshire presidential primary and gone on to be president,” Gardner said.

-- Sanders led Biden by six points, 24 percent to 18 percent, in a Suffolk University poll of likely New Hampshire Democratic primary voters that was published this morning by the Boston Globe and WBZ-TV. Sanders benefits from enduring support among younger voters and independents. Warren garnered 13 percent and Buttigieg got 11 percent. The others were in single digits, while 12 percent said they're still undecided. The poll was conducted before the caucuses, and public opinion has sometimes shifted dramatically in the week between Iowa and New Hampshire.

Iowa Caucus secretary struggles to report results

MORE ON WHAT WENT WRONG IN IOWA:

-- “The app that the Iowa Democratic Party commissioned to tabulate and report results from the caucuses on Monday was not properly tested at a statewide scale,” the New York Times reports, citing sources who were briefed on the app by the state party. “It was quickly put together in just the past two months ... And the party decided to use the app only after another proposal for reporting votes — which entailed having caucus participants call in their votes over the phone — was abandoned, on the advice of Democratic National Committee officials, according to David Jefferson, a board member of Verified Voting, a nonpartisan election integrity organization.”

-- “Sean Bagniewski, chair of the Polk County Democratic Party, said that local officials were aware of problems with the app since last Thursday and that they had requested state officials resolve the problems — to no avail,” Michael Scherer reports.

“When local party officials asked the state party about issues they had with the app, they were referred to a ‘dedicated staffer’ who was not able to solve the problems, he said. ‘We had had so many complaints about the app that we started telling our chairs that if they were having problems with the app then you should call in the results,’ Bagniewski said.

“The state party did not provide any training on how to use the app, he said, adding that while the caucus trainings are done at the county level, the app itself came from the state level. Local officials had trouble downloading the app, getting a PIN to log in, and activating it even when they had a PIN, Bagniewski said. Then, when precinct chairmen tried to call the results in via the hotline, they were placed on hold for as long as two hours, he said. ‘When our chairs are calling, it’s a wait time of an hour and a half or two hours. In some cases, they have dropped the call,’ he said.”

-- “A tech company affiliated with, and funded by, ACRONYM, a Democratic digital nonprofit group that has rapidly expanded in recent years, was responsible for building the Iowa caucus app,” HuffPost reports. “Multiple Democratic sources, including one of the presidential campaigns, confirmed the app’s creator.”

-- “We are validating every piece of data we have against our paper trail,” Iowa Democratic chair Troy Price told reporters in a prepared statement early this morning. “That system is taking longer than expected but it’s in place to ensure we are eventually able to report results with full confidence.” His spokeswoman said earlier that they “found inconsistencies,” but she said it was “simply a reporting issue” and insisted that “the app did not go down and this is not a hack or an intrusion.”

-- The bigger picture: With the eyes of the world on Iowa, Isaac Stanley-Becker calls this “another hiccup in American democracy.”

-- Are Democrats in disarray? “The two top officials overseeing Milwaukee’s host committee for the 2020 Democratic National Convention were sidelined Monday amid allegations of a toxic work culture,” the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel reports.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “Iowa is the Broward County of caucuses,” said Klobuchar spokesman Max Steele, a former communications director at the Florida Democratic

Party. (Dave Weigel)

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross BlueShield Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by LivelIntent

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Senate trial: House managers and Trump lawyers give closing arguments

IMPEACHMENT LATEST:

-- House managers and the president's defenders offered their closing arguments to a Senate that has largely made up its mind. Elise Viebeck, Mike DeBonis and Robert Costa report: "Two days before Trump's expected acquittal, ... Democrats have nowhere near the two-thirds of the Senate needed to remove Trump from office, and the only remaining drama centered on a few possible swing votes from each party ... In a floor speech, Sen. Joe Manchin III (D-W.Va.) declined to announce his decision, but asked his colleagues to consider censuring Trump, a less severe rebuke than removal from office that few senators were willing to pursue. Sen. Doug Jones (D-Ala.) said that he remains undecided about how he will vote. Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) condemned the House's probe while also calling Trump's behavior 'shameful and wrong.' But she said she could not vote to convict. ...

“Both the House managers and Trump’s legal team crafted their remarks with a view toward the campaign trail, as voters will decide the future of his presidency. ‘We’re sitting here on the day that election season begins in Iowa. It is wrong. There is only one answer to that, and the answer is to reject those articles of impeachment, to have confidence in the American people, to have confidence in the result of the upcoming election, to have confidence and respect for the last election and not throw it out,’ [Trump lawyer Pat] Cipollone said in his closing remarks. ... [Adam] Schiff argued that Trump lacks the character to comport himself properly as president, describing his behavior as ‘far more destructive’ than the actions of Presidents Richard Nixon and Bill Clinton that triggered their impeachment proceedings. ...

"At least 10 Republicans have echoed Sen. Lamar Alexander’s (R-Tenn.) belief that Trump’s conduct was 'inappropriate.' These comments have contributed to speculation that Congress could pursue censure, as Manchin proposed. ‘What the president did was wrong,’ Manchin said in his floor speech. But multiple senators of both parties dismissed the idea as they arrived at the Capitol on Monday. Asked to gauge the appetite for censure among Republicans, Sen. Mike Braun (R-Ind.) said, ‘ ... zero.’ The vast majority of Republicans, he said, believe that Trump committed no wrongdoing and that he has been subjected to a partisan, politically motivated investigation. Several Democrats said they were also uninterested in the idea, calling it a punishment well short of what Trump’s alleged conduct deserves. ‘What he did was an impeachable offense. I think it’s absolutely obvious, and giving a slap on the wrist doesn’t do any good,’ said Sen. Jon Tester (D-Mont.).”

-- Trump will deliver his State of the Union tonight, seizing the dais on the cusp of his Senate acquittal to make the case for a second term. Philip Rucker and Seung Min Kim report: “The theme of Trump’s speech will be ‘the Great American Comeback’ ... Trump plans to present a vision of ‘relentless optimism,’ as one aide put it, and to summon lawmakers from both parties to work together on economic policies and other issue areas. But the traditionally presidential tone previewed by the White House has been belied by the president’s own messages of discord and disunity, and his vow to seek retribution on the Democrats he feels wronged him by searing his impeachment into history. ...

“It is an open question whether Trump will use the address to complain as he has in other forums about his impeachment or to prematurely celebrate the trial’s likely outcome. Some Republican lawmakers have urged the president not to do so, in part because the Senate is not expected to vote to formally conclude its trial until Wednesday. ... In a briefing with reporters to preview the speech, a senior administration official said Trump would focus on five issue areas: a ‘blue-collar boom’ for which he credits his trade negotiations with China, Mexico and Canada; domestic policies to help working families, including paid family leave; health care; illegal immigration; and national security. ... Trump also plans to use the speech to sound appeals to his conservative base. For instance, he intends to pitch a tax break to support scholarships for private and religious schools, a pet issue for advocates on the right.”

-- Two Trump aides quietly spend months compiling Trump’s SOTU speech and allow him to take credit for it. From the Times:

“In this White House, writing his speech is a job best done anonymously, and by all accounts, [Vince] Haley and [Ross] Worthington understand that. ... Several months ago, an email circulated through the administration, as it has in years past, asking everyone from policy advisers to cabinet officials to submit their top-line achievements and talking points for review. From their perch in the Eisenhower Executive Office Building, Mr. Haley and Mr. Worthington assembled the suggestions with input from other aides. ... Trump also passed along scraps of paper scribbled with sentences or themes he wanted included in the speech, and had those forwarded to his writers. As this year’s draft began to take shape, Mr. Haley and Mr. Worthington received high-level edits from [Stephen] Miller, with occasional feedback from Anthony R. Dolan, the former chief speechwriter for President Ronald Reagan who works in the White House as an adviser for planning.”

-- Another Trump aide who often goes uncredited is Gabe Perez, the man tasked with managing the president’s teleprompter.

From Politico: “It’s a talent Perez has honed over nearly four years in what some describe as one of the White House’s toughest jobs. Hired by chance after the Trump campaign Googled ‘teleprompters’ and the company he worked for in New York came up, Perez has become the one person Trump trusts to manage his oratory acrobatics, embellishments and ad-libs during even the most scripted appearances. ‘It’s like a high-wire act with no safety net,’ said Jason Miller, Trump’s former communications strategist said.”

-- Trump is already plotting revenge on John Bolton, per Vanity

Fair: “Republicans briefed on Trump’s thinking believe that the president is out for revenge against his adversaries. 'It's payback time,' a prominent Republican told me last week. 'He has an enemies list that is growing by the day,' another source said. Names that came up in my conversations with Republicans included Adam Schiff, Jerry Nadler, Mitt Romney, and John Bolton. 'Trump's playbook is simple: go after people who crossed him during impeachment.' Several sources said Bolton is at the top of the list."

-- The White House excluded CNN from its annual pre-SOTU lunch for news anchors. This came after the Trump campaign removed a Bloomberg News reporter from an Iowa news conference. A campaign official said the move was in keeping with campaign policy, per the Wall Street Journal.

The CDC released this illustration of the ultrastructural morphology exhibited by the new coronavirus, which caused the outbreak of respiratory illness first detected in Wuhan, China. (Alissa Eckert, MS; Dan Higgins, MAM/CDC/Reuters)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- The second coronavirus death outside mainland China was reported in Hong Kong, as the outbreak continues to spread. Simon Denyer, Derek Hawkins and Adam Taylor report: “China’s National Health Commission reported Monday that there are 20,438 confirmed cases in China, including 15 in Hong Kong and eight in Macao. The self-governing island of Taiwan reported 10 cases. The World Health Organization reported 146 confirmed cases in 23 countries outside China. ... The United States recorded its 11th case of the coronavirus, with a couple from central California falling ill after the husband’s trip to China’s Hubei province at the epicenter of the outbreak.”

-- States are scrambling to carry out Trump’s coronavirus travel order. Lena Sun, Lori Aratani, William Wan and Antonio Olivo report: “In interviews, state officials said the order came on Friday with no advance notice and little planning. The restrictions ban non-U.S. citizens who recently visited China from entering the country and quarantine Americans who visited Hubei province, the epicenter of the outbreak, within the past 14 days. (Immediate relatives of U.S. citizens, permanent residents, and flight crew members are exempted from the ban.) ... ‘The way this was rolled out is concerning. This is not the kind of thing you want to do on the fly because that creates chaos.’ said Hawaii Lt. Gov. Josh Green. ... Local jurisdictions are responsible for quarantine once people leave airports, officials have said. That has left authorities struggling to implement a system they had less than three days to devise.”

-- The spread of the virus threatens to strain U.S.-China relations and the global health system. David Nakamura and Anna Fifield

report: “The rapid spread of the virus has put Beijing on the defensive for what critics have called a slow initial response to contain it and a lack of transparency over the scale of the outbreak. In a briefing for reporters, a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman attempted to deflect blame by citing an ‘overreaction’ from the U.S. government that has ‘spread fear’ and set a ‘bad example’ for other nations. ... She asserted that the administration has not offered ‘any substantial assistance’ to combat the virus ... The Trump administration offered a tempered response Monday. [Trump] made no public remarks, while the State Department declined to comment.”

-- China built a massive hospital in 10 days to combat the coronavirus. It’s still not enough. Michael Brice-Saddler reports:

“The facility’s first patients arrived Monday, according to Chinese state media. Huoshenshan’s swift construction was the product of a round-the-clock effort fueled by 4,000 workers and 1,000 construction machines, according to China Daily. ... According to the Associated Press, the two-story, 600,000-square-foot hospital features doubled-sided cabinets and ventilation systems that essentially quarantine patients, allowing hospital staff to deliver supplies without entering their rooms. The building also contains infrared scanners that can detect whether any employees have a fever — one of the coronavirus’s telltale symptoms. ... But even in the early days of Huoshenshan’s construction, it quickly became apparent that the facility would not be large enough to mitigate bed shortages as the virus continues to spread.”

Johnson talks tough on post-Brexit trade deal with Europe

-- “With Britain's exit from the European Union official, at long last, the two partners on Monday began to squabble over their future relationship, with Prime Minister Boris Johnson huffing that he would rather leave the economic bloc without a free-trade deal than see Britain shackled to fusty European rules,” William Booth and Michael Birnbaum report: “At the same hour in Brussels, E.U. chief negotiator Michel Barnier outlined the bloc’s demands, declaring that Europe will agree to free trade only if Britain submits to the continent’s regulations. And so begins an 11-month transition period, when all this may or may not be sorted out. In this messy and drawn-out split, after 47 years together, the divvying up of the stuff is not so easy. Britain under Johnson is now all about cutting loose and ‘going global’ and making side deals with the Americans and Australians, while Europe is all about the need preserve a ‘level playing field,’ if Britain wants to be a friend with privileges — meaning access to its single market of 450 million consumers.

“In broad strokes, in language orotund and marked by the clever turns of phrase he perfected as an Oxford-educated, Fleet Street columnist, the prime minister laid out his vision for a post-Brexit Britain that is a world champion for free trade. He mixed his metaphors, but his message was clear. Britain is a ship in ‘the slipway’ ready to set sail, a rocket ‘on the launchpad’ ready to blast off, a butterfly ‘leaving its chrysalis.’ ‘We are reemerging after decades of hibernation as a campaigner for global free trade,’ Johnson said. ‘And, frankly, it is not a moment too soon, because the argument for this fundamental liberty is now not being made.’ The prime minister took a subtle swipe at President Trump, warning his audience that trade wars and tariff barriers are in vogue [from Brussels to Beijing and Washington] — and that is a bad thing.”

-- In a fight for national preservation, Greece is paying parents a baby bonus to boost birthrate. (The Guardian)

-- Leaked audio shows that the regime in Tehran knew immediately that one of its own missiles downed the Ukrainian passenger jet. Erin Cunningham and Isabelle Khurshudyan report: “A leaked audio file and transcript were published late Sunday by Ukraine’s 1+1 television channel. They included an exchange between an Iranian air traffic controller and a pilot who said he saw a missile hit Ukraine International Airlines Flight 752 on Jan. 8. ‘Flares on route, as if from a missile,’ the pilot of an Aseman Airlines flight from Shiraz to Tehran said to the controller, according to the transcript. The controller responded that the tower was not informed of any missile activity in the area. ‘That surely is light from a missile,’ the pilot said. Later he said, ‘We saw an explosion, a big flare from the explosion.”

-- The U.S. added a “low yield” nuclear weapon to its submarine arsenal. The low-yield missile joins other more powerful weapons aboard. The deployment is the first major addition to the strategic nuclear arsenal and is a departure from the Obama administration’s policy of depending less on nuclear weapons in pursuit of a nuclear-free world. (AP)

-- The president’s son-in-law Jared Kushner angered Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu’s camp due to White House pushback over plans to annex Jewish settlements in the West Bank. Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report: “Sources among Israeli settler groups and within the prime minister’s circle, according to the reports, blame Kushner for a split in the administration, portraying U.S. Ambassador David Friedman as more willing to see Israel annex the settlements in short order and Kushner resisting fast action. The move would allow Netanyahu to shore up right-wing support in advance of national elections here in March, observers say. ... Netanyahu said hours after the plan’s release that he planned to bring annexation before his cabinet within days. Friedman told reporters that day that the timing was up to Israel. ... But Kushner, in interviews and reportedly in conversations with Israeli officials, put the brakes on, saying the move should wait on a new government to be formed after next month’s vote.”

-- Former Kenyan president Daniel arap Moi, who deepened ethnic tensions and enriched himself at the public’s expense, died in Nairobi at 95. Yamiche Alcindor reports: “Mr. Moi was one of the last of Africa’s so-called Big Men, who presided over their countries in increasingly despotic ways. During 24 ruinous years in power, he curtailed political freedom, presided over the stagnation of Kenya's economy and encouraged patronage politics. He enshrined his name on currency, schools, an international airport and other prominent sites throughout the East African country. Despite condemnation by human rights groups and allegations that he had stolen millions of dollars in aid money, Mr. Moi's ties to the United States remained strong because of Kenya's staunch anti-communism and relative stability in a region ravaged by war and by leaders who were even more erratic."

Kim Kardashian West thanks Trump for his work on criminal justice at a June event promoting the hiring of ex-offenders. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- Most of Trump's grants of clemency have bypassed the Justice Department and go to well-connected offenders. Beth Reinhard and Anne Gearan report: "As the administration takes its cues from celebrities, political allies and Fox News, thousands of other offenders who followed Justice Department rules are waiting, passed over as cases that were brought directly to Trump leaped to the front of the line. For more than 125 years, the Office of the Pardon Attorney in the Justice Department has quietly served as the key adviser on clemency, one of the most unlimited powers bestowed on the president by the Constitution. Under Trump, the pardon office has become a bureaucratic way station, according to government data and interviews with lawyers, criminal justice advocates, and former pardon and White House officials. ... Ronald Reagan set a low bar with 669 decisions during his first three years; 3,993 petitions processed during Barack Obama's first three years reached a high-water mark. Trump has ruled on only 204 clemency requests — 24 approvals and 180 denials. That is the slowest pace in decades."

"The joy you get finding meritorious people, working on those cases, making recommendations that go to the White House, seeing people receive the grants — you feel like you've done something," said Larry Kupers, the former head of the office, who quit last year. "If that's not happening, it feels like you are spinning your wheels." Asked what advice he would give offenders seeking leniency, Kupers said: "Find a way to get to Kim Kardashian. I'm very serious about that."

-- Hundreds of pages of FBI witness interviews from former special counsel Bob Mueller's investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election were declassified after

BuzzFeed News and CNN filed a FOIA: “The documents also contained a summary of an interview that Kushner ... had with FBI agents and federal prosecutors in November 2017. But the five-page summary, known as an FBI 302, was almost entirely redacted. Intelligence agencies are still reviewing another Kushner interview summary from 2018 for classified information. Kushner’s interview summaries have been some of the most highly sought-after records from Mueller’s investigation; they were requested by the House Judiciary Committee last year as part of its impeachment inquiry. ... In addition to Kushner’s interview summary, the FBI and the Justice Department turned over 289 pages of heavily redacted summaries of interviews from former White House press secretary Sean Spicer; former White House chief of staff Reince Priebus; Trump's former personal lawyer Michael Cohen.”

-- Testimony in Harvey Weinstein’s trial ended early after an accuser broke down sobbing when asked about a childhood sexual assault. Shayna Jacobs reports: “Jessica Mann's cries echoed through the Manhattan courtroom... Prosecutor Joan Illuzzi-Orbon tried to comfort the fragile witness outside the presence of the jury... Mann — in a 2014 email to an ex-boyfriend — referred to a ‘sexual assault’ that did not appear to be one of the nonconsensual encounters she attributes to the Oscar-winning producer. She was shaking and too upset to speak when defense lawyer Donna Rotunno asked if the mention had to do with abuse from her younger years. ... Weinstein provided ‘all the validation I needed,’ [Mann] wrote to a boyfriend, a successful actor, who she said was critical of her Weinstein connection. Mann was on the witness stand for nearly a full day of grueling cross-examination. She had to answer for her history of interactions with Weinstein, particularly why she remained in a five-year consensual relationship with the producer who she now alleges raped her in 2013.”

-- Veteran Affairs Secretary Robert Wilkie abruptly fired his No. 2, James Byrne, after five months on the job. But it's not clear why. There was only a brief, cryptic statement that said his ouster was effective immediately, per Politico.

-- Trump once said everyone should “stand proudly” for the national anthem. But he fidgeted and air-conducted at his own Super Bowl party as “The Star-Spangled Banner” rang. Kim Bellware reports: “In an Instagram video taken by a guest and later shared with the Miami Herald, other attendees — including members of the first family — are seen standing calmly with hand over heart as ‘The Star-Spangled Banner’ plays. The 20-second clip using the front-facing-camera mode shows Trump doing neither. Instead, the president is seen fidgeting, pointing around the room, straightening his jacket and at one point waving his fingers in the air as if conducting an invisible orchestra.”

-- Conservative talk radio figure Rush Limbaugh said he has advanced lung cancer. Paul Farhi reports: “‘I thought about not telling anybody,’ he said on the air from his home studio in West Palm Beach, Fla. ‘It is what it is. You know me, I’m the mayor of Realville. This has happened, and my intention is to come here every day I can and do this program as normally and competently and expertly as I do each and every day because that is the source of my greatest satisfaction professionally, personally.’”

-- Two women died and a child was wounded in a shooting at a residence hall in Texas A&M University at Commerce. Paulina Firozi reports: “The toddler is in stable condition, the university’s police chief, Bryan Vaughn, said ... Police found the women’s bodies after a student who lives in the residence hall called police at 10:17 a.m. Central time... Police did not identify a suspected shooter and did not provide additional details at the news conference.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

The Democratic candidates descended overnight on New Hampshire:

David Catanese ✓

@davecatanese

. @PeteButtigieg has arrived in Nashua, New Hampshire

♡ 472 12:29 PM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 70 people are talking about this

Nate Evans
@nathanpevans

Dozens of @amyklobuchar supporters in NH greeted her when she landed in Manchester. At 3:30 in the morning.
#nhpolitics

♡ 323 9:07 AM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 85 people are talking about this

Nicole Sganga @NicoleSganga · 5h

Replying to @NicoleSganga

MANCHESTER, NH — Senator Amy Klobuchar arrives at the airport in New Hampshire. “We just had an excellent night tonight in Iowa. Of course, we don’t know the results yet. Minor problem!” she quips.

Dozens of supporters greeted the Senator at the airport. #nhpolitics #FITN

Nicole Sganga ✓
@NicoleSganga

Senator Amy Klobuchar says "of course" she's concerned about the Iowa caucus results.

She adds there were election results long before apps and computers.

"They've written them all down, they're adding them all up, and we'll get them." #nhpolitics #FITN

116 10:02 AM - Feb 4, 2020

38 people are talking about this

Annie Linskey ✓

@AnnieLinskey

Air Warren landed in New Hampshire

5 9:15 AM - Feb 4, 2020

See Annie Linskey's other Tweets

Warren, the bane of the big banks, ironically won a precinct caucus at an arena named for Wells Fargo, whose previous chief executive she crusaded to get fired:

A screenshot of a Twitter post. The user's profile picture is a circular icon with a man in a suit. The name is Bharat Ramamurti and the handle is @BharatRamamurti. The tweet text reads: ".@ewarren won the caucus held at the Wells Fargo Center in Des Moines. Appropriate." Below the text, it shows 4,327 likes and the time "3:41 AM - Feb 4, 2020". At the bottom, it says "569 people are talking about this" with a right-pointing arrow.

Bharat Ramamurti
@BharatRamamurti

.@ewarren won the caucus held at the Wells Fargo Center in Des Moines. Appropriate.

4,327 3:41 AM - Feb 4, 2020

569 people are talking about this

Someone snuck some wine into a voting location. It did not end well:

Iowa Starting Line

@IAStartingLine

At one Des Moines precinct tonight, an attendee brought in a concealed bottle of wine, dropped it, and it shattered everywhere

♡ 23.2K 12:56 AM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 5,170 people are talking about this

Pete Buttigieg claimed victory without any public evidence to show for it:

Steve Kornacki
@SteveKornacki

The official results as Pete Buttigieg declares himself victorious in Iowa:

8,807 5:29 AM - Feb 4, 2020

2,599 people are talking about this

Here's an example of the handwritten form that Democrats are using from each precinct as backups to check their math:

Trip Gabriel
@tripgabriel

Why so long to report results? Nearly 1,700 caucuses fill out worksheets like this, then report multiple results.

First Alignment Results Caucus Math Worksheet County: [blank] Precinct: 1 Delegate(s): 18 Nov 2019

Name of candidate or recommended group: VIABILITY: 0-2 - your precinct - 10/14
1-50 precinct

| Name of candidate or recommended group | Number of members after the group after the meeting | VIABILITY: |
|--|---|------------|
| A) Amy                                 | 44  |            |
| B) Bernie                              | 34  |            |
| C) Biden                               | 65-68   |            |
| D) Pete                                | 60-5-14   |            |
| E) Warren                              | 41-53   |            |
| F) Young                               | 7   |            |
| G) UNDEC                               | 0   |            |

AWARDING DELEGATES

| Name of candidate or recommended group | Number of members after the group after the meeting | Number of delegates awarded to this group | Total delegates awarded to this group | Total delegates awarded to all groups | Number of delegates awarded to this group as a percentage of the total delegates awarded |
|--|---|---|---------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|--|
| A) Amy                                 | 44  | 254                                       | 254                                   | 1732                                  | 14.66%   |
| B) Biden                               | 68  | 254                                       | 254                                   | 1732                                  | 14.66%   |
| C) Pete                                | 18  | 254                                       | 254                                   | 1732                                  | 14.66%   |
| D) WARREN                              | 53  | 254                                       | 254                                   | 1732                                  | 14.66%   |
| E)                                     |   |   |                                       |                                       |  |
| F)                                     |   |   |                                       |                                       |  |
| G)                                     |   |   |                                       |                                       |  |

Signature of Chairperson: [blank] Signature of Secretary: [blank]

923 4:29 AM - Feb 4, 2020

608 people are talking about this

The New York Post mocked Iowa Democrats for screwing up their counting:

DUH MOINES

Democrats in chaos as Iowa caucus implodes

Can't anybody here count?! The Iowa Democratic caucuses descended into chaos last night and early this morning as "inconsistencies" in reporting at polling sites — perhaps linked to a glitchy new app — caused an embarrassingly delayed tally in the hotly anticipated first contest in the race for president.

PAGES 4-5

DRAMA AS HARV ACCUSER BREAKS DOWN PAGE 7

Trump's campaign manager Brad Parscale, as well as Eric Trump, hinted without evidence that the results were delayed so they could be rigged:

Brad Parscale - Text TRUMP to 88022 ✓

@parscale

Quality control = rigged? 🤔

twitter.com/francisbrennan...

Francis Brennan (Text TRUMP to 88022) @FrancisBren...

MSNBC's Steve Kornacki reports:

"We've heard from the Iowa state Democratic Party... They say that they are doing, quote, 'quality control on the results that they've received.' They say they are doing it, quote, 'out of an abundance of caution.'" #RiggedElection?

♡ 14.2K 3:19 AM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 7,386 people are talking about this

Twitter said it won't remove posts like this. "The tweet is not in violation of our election integrity policy as it does not suppress voter turnout or mislead people about when, where, or how to vote," Twitter spokesman Brandon Borrman told Tony Romm.

Democrats worked through the night to get an accurate count from Polk County, which includes Des Moines. This is from the county chair:

 Sean Bagniewski
@bagniewski

It's 2AM and we have supporters for Buttigieg, Klobuchar, Sanders, and Warren at Polk HQ going through every precinct box to send the results we have to the state party so we can finally go to bed.

Our volunteers are literally tireless. #IACaucus

♡ 1,206 8:14 AM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 267 people are talking about this

A Michael Bennet supporter wasn't ready to give up:

An embattled Republican congressman from Iowa defended the caucuses:

The former dean of the Iowa press corps, who covered politics for 34 years at the Des Moines Register, said he thinks the caucus system as we've known it is over:

And this is a great analogy:

The longest-serving Democratic senator carried a copy of JFK's "Profiles in Courage." Does Pat Leahy know that one of the chapters in the book is actually about a Republican who broke with his party to vote against removing Andrew Johnson at his impeachment trial?:

John Bresnahan ✓
@BresPolitico

.@SenatorLeahy has a subtle message as he searches for Republican senators who'll vote to convict Trump

♥ 143 8:11 PM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 56 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert went through some of the excuses Republican senators have used to vote for Trump's acquittal:

Seth Meyers, noting Trump's Super Bowl mix-up, said it is understandable to confuse the two Kansas Cities, if you're a middle-schooler:

"The Daily Show's" Jordan Klepper asked Trump's Iowa supporters for their thoughts on impeachment:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post

To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov

Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: A bad night for Biden in Iowa is good news for Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Bloomberg
Date: Tuesday, February 4, 2020 8:50:32 AM

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

A bad night for Biden in Iowa is good news for Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Bloomberg

Joe and Jill Biden address supporters on Monday night while they await results at Drake University in Des Moines. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

DES MOINES – Joe Biden’s core message was electability, but the former vice president failed to consolidate support among the majority of Iowa caucus-goers who said choosing a candidate who can beat President Trump was their first priority, according to preliminary entrance polls conducted Monday night.

Just under one-quarter of electability-focused voters supported Biden, while a similar percentage backed former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg. Sens. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.), Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.)

and Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) each drew about 15 percent support among this group.

By contrast, Biden received only 5 percent support among caucus-goers who said it was most important to nominate a candidate they agree with. Sanders led among this group with 36 percent support.

Because of technical problems, no winner has been called. In fact, the state Democratic Party has still not released any official numbers. It's therefore important to emphasize the preliminary and anecdotal nature of what we know, but there's a body of evidence that points to a bad night for Biden.

"It's a very close race among the top three candidates (Warren, Sanders, Buttigieg) and Biden came a distant fourth," tweeted Warren chief strategist Joe Rospars.

"With the numbers we've seen internally and publicly, we're running even or ahead of Vice President Biden," said Klobuchar campaign manager Justin Buoen.

Biden campaign manager Greg Schultz pushed back on his counterparts. "Our own model shows that Biden overperformed in key districts we needed to be competitive in and we feel confident that this is a tight race with bunched up candidates," he said in a statement that offered no specifics or numbers. "When it comes to the final outcome of the caucuses, this is still a competition for delegates, and the winner will continue to be based on State Delegate Equivalents. We believe that we have won our fair share of them."

-- Among moderate and conservative voters, who made up about

one-third of caucus-goers, about 1 in 4 said they backed Biden, while another quarter backed Buttigieg, and about 1 in 5 supported Klobuchar, according to the entrance polls.

Seniors and moderates buoyed Biden's support in the caucuses. Scott Clement, the director of our polling unit, notes that 1 in 3 caucus-goers age 65 or older chose Biden as their initial preference while about 1 in 30 voters under age 30 did so, according to the preliminary entrance polls.

With Iowa caucus results still uncertain, Democrats look to New Hampshire

-- Biden campaign officials had said they thought he would be viable nearly everywhere, meaning that he'd cross the threshold of getting 15 percent support in the precinct, but observers at several caucus sites reported that he was falling short. My colleagues scattered across the state to observe precinct caucuses. Here are three especially revealing vignettes from the ground that don't bode well for the former vice president:

1) “In a cramped elementary school gymnasium in Muscatine, supporters of [Biden] and [Warren] were stunned when both candidates failed to receive enough votes to remain viable,” Tim Craig reports. “This was the sort of place where both had hoped to do well. The economy of this Mississippi River town has long revolved around manufacturing. The neighborhoods near the school are a mix of one-story homes with ‘Proud Union Home’ signs in their front yards and grander multistory houses that overlook a country club golf course. In 2016, voters in this precinct were mostly split between Hillary Clinton and [Sanders]. During the general election, Trump narrowly defeated Clinton here — and went on to win Muscatine County, making him the first Republican to do so since 1984. Of the roughly 170 caucus-goers in the gym, only 17 initially voted for Biden and 16 for Warren.

“For an agonizing 25 minutes, supporters for both campaigns strategized about whether they should form an alliance — but with many Warren supporters skeptical of Biden, and vice versa, the effort collapsed. The two camps watched their members scatter, sometimes slapping on the stickers of rivals — most often [Buttigieg], who ended the night there with 73 votes, but also Sanders and [Klobuchar], who came in second and third. ‘I’ve been doing this a long time and this is absolutely crazy that neither Biden nor Warren were viable here,’ said Esther Dean, 83, a Biden supporter and attorney.”

If Biden’s not viable in Muscatine, it’s a red flag.

2) “In the fast-growing Des Moines suburb of Ankeny, local

Democrats expected [Buttigieg] and [Warren] to do well, as both had made repeated trips to the area and had large organizing operations,” Isaac Stanley-Becker reports. “They were surprised when dozens of Sanders supporters showed up and became the largest faction in the precinct. Biden did not have enough support, and his supporters were quickly surrounded, as if by poachers. Jacob Middleton, the precinct captain for Sanders, approached the Biden supporters and asked: ‘Is anyone even considering going for Bernie over here?’ ‘No,’ the disillusioned Biden supporters answered in unison. ‘None?’ he repeated. ‘No,’ they said. ... In the end, a handful of Biden supporters, shocked the former vice president didn’t have enough support to move ahead, refused to pick a second choice.”

3) “As the night wore on and the formalities of the caucus taking place in Iowa City’s Englert Theatre took longer than expected, nearly two dozen Biden supporters gathered in the small lobby beneath an exit sign,” Rachel Chason reports. “They realized there was no way their candidate would make it past the first round of voting, and they tried to decide what to do next. The theater was packed with large crowds for other candidates: 300 for Sanders, nearly 200 for Warren and nearly 100 for Buttigieg. It was no surprise — after all, this is the so-called People’s Republic of Johnson County, home to the highest percentage of registered Democrats in the state. But these Biden supporters weren’t sure if either Sanders or Warren could beat the president.

“Gene Murphy, 65, has liked Biden for about 40 years — and caucused for him because he thought he had the best shot of

beating Trump. He decided that he would vote first for Biden, then for Buttigieg. ... ‘Bernie is great,’ he said, ‘but I don’t see him winning.’”

Content from Partnership for America’s Health Care Future

American families can’t afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there’s “no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases.”

Biden in Iowa: ‘Character is on the ballot’

-- “We’re in this for the long haul,” Biden told supporters at his watch party in Des Moines. “From our indications, it’s going to be close. We are going to walk out of here with our share of delegates. We don’t know exactly what it is yet, but we feel good about where we are.”

-- Biden already has a painful history with Iowa. He dropped out in 1987 after being accused of plagiarizing a speech by British Labour leader Neil Kinnock while in Des Moines. In 2008, he finished fifth in the caucuses here, garnering less than 1 percent of the vote. Months later, Barack Obama would revive Biden’s political career by putting him on the ticket.

-- Operatives agree it’s safe to say that turnout did not break the record set in 2008 but was more comparable to 2016. “The one conclusion from the numbers that were being collected by the media suggested that the eventual winner would receive a lower percentage of the vote than any previous winner since 1972, when the modern caucuses were born,” Dan Balz notes. “But that could end up being the secondary story. On Monday night, it was all about Iowa and not the candidates.”

-- The snafu related to tabulating the results could offer a symbolic reprieve of sorts for Biden. No matter what gets announced by the state party, some campaigns will have a strong incentive to cast doubt on the results. No one has done this more forcefully, so far, than the Biden campaign. His general counsel Dana Remus sent an open letter to the leaders of the Iowa Democratic Party last night expressing concerns about the “considerable flaws” in the caucus reporting system, foreshadowing a possible effort to diminish bad results by casting doubt on the veracity of the numbers.

“The app that was intended to relay Caucus results to the Party failed; the Party’s back-up telephonic reporting system likewise has failed. Now, we understand that Caucus Chairs are attempting to — and, in many cases, failing to — report results telephonically to the Party. These acute failures are occurring statewide,” Remus wrote. “We believe that the campaigns deserve full explanations and relevant information regarding the methods of quality control you are employing, and an opportunity to respond, before any official results are released.”

Biden’s deputy campaign manager, Kate Bedingfield, tweeted that the “integrity of the process is critical.”

-- State party officials held a second conference call with top officials from the campaigns in the wee hours of this morning. "The party officials told the campaigns that they planned to release caucus results later on Tuesday, and that they are hand-checking results," Sean Sullivan and Matt Viser report on our live blog. "Sanders senior adviser Jeff Weaver got into a tense exchange with Iowa Democratic Party Chairman Troy Price."

-- Everyone else tried to claim some success last night. Advisers to Buttigieg and Sanders each distributed internal data to reporters overnight to bolster their claims that they fared well in the unofficial returns.

“By all indications, we are going on to New Hampshire victorious,” said Buttigieg.

“When those results are announced, I have a good feeling we’re going to be doing very, very well here in Iowa,” said Sanders.

“We know there’s delays, but we know one thing — we are punching above our weight,” said Klobuchar.

“The road won’t be easy, but we are built for the long haul,” said Warren.

Buttigieg in Iowa: 'We are going on to New Hampshire victorious'

-- Second-place finishes across many groups served Buttigieg well. My colleague Dan Keating emailed a smart observation from poring over the preliminary entrance polls of voter preferences: “Buttigieg didn’t dominate among any group, but he racked up many silver medals. Buttigieg isn’t leading among voters under 45 – he’s second. He isn’t leading among 45 and older – he’s second. He’s not leading among people with college degrees – he’s second. He’s also second among Democratic voters without a college degree. ... He’s second among independents with support from about 2 in 10. He's roughly tied for second with Warren among self-described liberals (again, about 2 in 10). Buttigieg was second in large cities and second in suburbs.

“It’s not that he’s never first. Preliminary results suggest he led narrowly among women voters. He led in the more rural areas. He won among caucus-goers who called themselves somewhat liberal, the largest contingent. And one of his only clear weaknesses was with ‘very liberal’ Democrats, among whom he garnered support from just over 1 in 10, a distant third behind Warren and Sanders. He was just a nudge ahead of Biden among people who voted for Clinton in the caucus four years ago. And he nabbed (a distant) second among people who opted for Sanders in the 2016 caucus; Sanders won a majority of his past supporters.”

“Among people whose top issue was foreign affairs, Buttigieg was ... second. [Biden was first.] Among people whose top issue was healthcare or climate change, he was essentially tied with Sanders for the lead. For voters prioritizing income inequality, he landed a shocking-for-him third behind Sanders and Warren. Among people who said beating Trump is more important than specific policy issues, Buttigieg roughly matched Biden for first. Among caucus-goers who said specific policies are more important, he once again got second, behind Sanders. Buttigieg’s finish in the caucus shows that a lot of silver medals can get you near the top of the podium.”

-- Mike Bloomberg, a candidate who doesn’t have to worry about fundraising and who didn’t compete in Iowa, is also looking like one of the winners from all this chaos. The billionaire former mayor of New York is pouring hundreds of millions of dollars into advertisements in the states that vote on Super Tuesday, March 3, when more than half the delegates will be awarded. Bloomberg, who stumped in California on Monday, benefits from a weaker Biden and a fragmented field. He hopes to emerge as the moderate alternative to Sanders or Warren.

Sanders in Iowa: 'Change is coming'

-- There's more danger ahead for Biden. As the race moves to New Hampshire, he has not invested nearly as much as his opponents in the state, putting him at a disadvantage. Biden spent just $5,429 on television and radio advertising in New Hampshire through mid-January. Compare that to $3.6 million from Sanders in that period, and $128,000 from Warren, according to Advertising Analytics. During the same period, Biden spent $5 million in Iowa on TV and radio. Advertising Analytics said on Monday that Biden's total spending has now increased to $215,000.

"Biden's campaign has long sought to play down expectations here, given that Sanders and Warren are from neighboring states," Michael Kranish reports in today's newspaper from Concord, N.H. "But Biden himself recently delivered a conflicting message. While he stressed he doesn't need a victory here, he said on Jan. 26 on a local television station, WMUR, that 'I think I will win New Hampshire.' ... Biden, meanwhile, faces challenges here that may be even greater than those he dealt with in Iowa. The relative lack of minorities, whose support is crucial to his bid, is once again a factor here. Whites make up 91 percent of Iowa and 93 percent in New Hampshire, according to Census Bureau figures. ...

"Even the best-run campaign organization in New Hampshire will find it difficult to overcome a poor Iowa finish, according to Dante Scala, a professor of political science at the University of New Hampshire. 'You can build the boat,' Scala said, referring to a campaign organization. 'But you win with the wind in its sails. If you are not the story out of Iowa, your sails can go limp anyway, and it doesn't matter how well the boat is built.'"

New Hampshire Secretary of State William Gardner noted that, in the last 17 New Hampshire primaries, 14 winners went on to be elected president, and the other three who occupied the White House finished in second place here. “No one has come in less than second in a New Hampshire presidential primary and gone on to be president,” Gardner said.

-- Sanders led Biden by six points, 24 percent to 18 percent, in a Suffolk University poll of likely New Hampshire Democratic primary voters that was published this morning by the Boston Globe and WBZ-TV. Sanders benefits from enduring support among younger voters and independents. Warren garnered 13 percent and Buttigieg got 11 percent. The others were in single digits, while 12 percent said they're still undecided. The poll was conducted before the caucuses, and public opinion has sometimes shifted dramatically in the week between Iowa and New Hampshire.

Iowa Caucus secretary struggles to report results

MORE ON WHAT WENT WRONG IN IOWA:

-- “The app that the Iowa Democratic Party commissioned to tabulate and report results from the caucuses on Monday was not properly tested at a statewide scale,” the New York Times reports, citing sources who were briefed on the app by the state party. “It was quickly put together in just the past two months ... And the party decided to use the app only after another proposal for reporting votes — which entailed having caucus participants call in their votes over the phone — was abandoned, on the advice of Democratic National Committee officials, according to David Jefferson, a board member of Verified Voting, a nonpartisan election integrity organization.”

-- “Sean Bagniewski, chair of the Polk County Democratic Party, said that local officials were aware of problems with the app since last Thursday and that they had requested state officials resolve the problems — to no avail,” Michael Scherer reports.

“When local party officials asked the state party about issues they had with the app, they were referred to a ‘dedicated staffer’ who was not able to solve the problems, he said. ‘We had had so many complaints about the app that we started telling our chairs that if they were having problems with the app then you should call in the results,’ Bagniewski said.

“The state party did not provide any training on how to use the app, he said, adding that while the caucus trainings are done at the county level, the app itself came from the state level. Local officials had trouble downloading the app, getting a PIN to log in, and activating it even when they had a PIN, Bagniewski said. Then, when precinct chairmen tried to call the results in via the hotline, they were placed on hold for as long as two hours, he said. ‘When our chairs are calling, it’s a wait time of an hour and a half or two hours. In some cases, they have dropped the call,’ he said.”

-- “A tech company affiliated with, and funded by, ACRONYM, a Democratic digital nonprofit group that has rapidly expanded in recent years, was responsible for building the Iowa caucus app,” HuffPost reports. “Multiple Democratic sources, including one of the presidential campaigns, confirmed the app’s creator.”

-- “We are validating every piece of data we have against our paper trail,” Iowa Democratic chair Troy Price told reporters in a prepared statement early this morning. “That system is taking longer than expected but it’s in place to ensure we are eventually able to report results with full confidence.” His spokeswoman said earlier that they “found inconsistencies,” but she said it was “simply a reporting issue” and insisted that “the app did not go down and this is not a hack or an intrusion.”

-- The bigger picture: With the eyes of the world on Iowa, Isaac Stanley-Becker calls this “another hiccup in American democracy.”

-- Are Democrats in disarray? “The two top officials overseeing Milwaukee’s host committee for the 2020 Democratic National Convention were sidelined Monday amid allegations of a toxic work culture,” the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel reports.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “Iowa is the Broward County of caucuses,” said Klobuchar spokesman Max Steele, a former communications director at the Florida Democratic

Party. (Dave Weigel)

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross BlueShield Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Powered by LivelIntent

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Senate trial: House managers and Trump lawyers give closing arguments

IMPEACHMENT LATEST:

-- House managers and the president's defenders offered their closing arguments to a Senate that has largely made up its mind. Elise Viebeck, Mike DeBonis and Robert Costa report: "Two days before Trump's expected acquittal, ... Democrats have nowhere near the two-thirds of the Senate needed to remove Trump from office, and the only remaining drama centered on a few possible swing votes from each party ... In a floor speech, Sen. Joe Manchin III (D-W.Va.) declined to announce his decision, but asked his colleagues to consider censuring Trump, a less severe rebuke than removal from office that few senators were willing to pursue. Sen. Doug Jones (D-Ala.) said that he remains undecided about how he will vote. Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) condemned the House's probe while also calling Trump's behavior 'shameful and wrong.' But she said she could not vote to convict. ...

“Both the House managers and Trump’s legal team crafted their remarks with a view toward the campaign trail, as voters will decide the future of his presidency. ‘We’re sitting here on the day that election season begins in Iowa. It is wrong. There is only one answer to that, and the answer is to reject those articles of impeachment, to have confidence in the American people, to have confidence in the result of the upcoming election, to have confidence and respect for the last election and not throw it out,’ [Trump lawyer Pat] Cipollone said in his closing remarks. ... [Adam] Schiff argued that Trump lacks the character to comport himself properly as president, describing his behavior as ‘far more destructive’ than the actions of Presidents Richard Nixon and Bill Clinton that triggered their impeachment proceedings. ...

"At least 10 Republicans have echoed Sen. Lamar Alexander’s (R-Tenn.) belief that Trump’s conduct was 'inappropriate.' These comments have contributed to speculation that Congress could pursue censure, as Manchin proposed. ‘What the president did was wrong,’ Manchin said in his floor speech. But multiple senators of both parties dismissed the idea as they arrived at the Capitol on Monday. Asked to gauge the appetite for censure among Republicans, Sen. Mike Braun (R-Ind.) said, ‘ ... zero.’ The vast majority of Republicans, he said, believe that Trump committed no wrongdoing and that he has been subjected to a partisan, politically motivated investigation. Several Democrats said they were also uninterested in the idea, calling it a punishment well short of what Trump’s alleged conduct deserves. ‘What he did was an impeachable offense. I think it’s absolutely obvious, and giving a slap on the wrist doesn’t do any good,’ said Sen. Jon Tester (D-Mont.).”

-- Trump will deliver his State of the Union tonight, seizing the dais on the cusp of his Senate acquittal to make the case for a second term. Philip Rucker and Seung Min Kim report: “The theme of Trump’s speech will be ‘the Great American Comeback’ ... Trump plans to present a vision of ‘relentless optimism,’ as one aide put it, and to summon lawmakers from both parties to work together on economic policies and other issue areas. But the traditionally presidential tone previewed by the White House has been belied by the president’s own messages of discord and disunity, and his vow to seek retribution on the Democrats he feels wronged him by searing his impeachment into history. ...

“It is an open question whether Trump will use the address to complain as he has in other forums about his impeachment or to prematurely celebrate the trial’s likely outcome. Some Republican lawmakers have urged the president not to do so, in part because the Senate is not expected to vote to formally conclude its trial until Wednesday. ... In a briefing with reporters to preview the speech, a senior administration official said Trump would focus on five issue areas: a ‘blue-collar boom’ for which he credits his trade negotiations with China, Mexico and Canada; domestic policies to help working families, including paid family leave; health care; illegal immigration; and national security. ... Trump also plans to use the speech to sound appeals to his conservative base. For instance, he intends to pitch a tax break to support scholarships for private and religious schools, a pet issue for advocates on the right.”

-- Two Trump aides quietly spend months compiling Trump’s SOTU speech and allow him to take credit for it. From the Times:

“In this White House, writing his speech is a job best done anonymously, and by all accounts, [Vince] Haley and [Ross] Worthington understand that. ... Several months ago, an email circulated through the administration, as it has in years past, asking everyone from policy advisers to cabinet officials to submit their top-line achievements and talking points for review. From their perch in the Eisenhower Executive Office Building, Mr. Haley and Mr. Worthington assembled the suggestions with input from other aides. ... Trump also passed along scraps of paper scribbled with sentences or themes he wanted included in the speech, and had those forwarded to his writers. As this year’s draft began to take shape, Mr. Haley and Mr. Worthington received high-level edits from [Stephen] Miller, with occasional feedback from Anthony R. Dolan, the former chief speechwriter for President Ronald Reagan who works in the White House as an adviser for planning.”

-- Another Trump aide who often goes uncredited is Gabe Perez, the man tasked with managing the president’s teleprompter.

From Politico: “It’s a talent Perez has honed over nearly four years in what some describe as one of the White House’s toughest jobs. Hired by chance after the Trump campaign Googled ‘teleprompters’ and the company he worked for in New York came up, Perez has become the one person Trump trusts to manage his oratory acrobatics, embellishments and ad-libs during even the most scripted appearances. ‘It’s like a high-wire act with no safety net,’ said Jason Miller, Trump’s former communications strategist said.”

-- Trump is already plotting revenge on John Bolton, per Vanity

Fair: “Republicans briefed on Trump’s thinking believe that the president is out for revenge against his adversaries. 'It's payback time,' a prominent Republican told me last week. 'He has an enemies list that is growing by the day,' another source said. Names that came up in my conversations with Republicans included Adam Schiff, Jerry Nadler, Mitt Romney, and John Bolton. 'Trump's playbook is simple: go after people who crossed him during impeachment.' Several sources said Bolton is at the top of the list."

-- The White House excluded CNN from its annual pre-SOTU lunch for news anchors. This came after the Trump campaign removed a Bloomberg News reporter from an Iowa news conference. A campaign official said the move was in keeping with campaign policy, per the Wall Street Journal.

The CDC released this illustration of the ultrastructural morphology exhibited by the new coronavirus, which caused the outbreak of respiratory illness first detected in Wuhan, China. (Alissa Eckert, MS; Dan Higgins, MAM/CDC/Reuters)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- The second coronavirus death outside mainland China was reported in Hong Kong, as the outbreak continues to spread. Simon Denyer, Derek Hawkins and Adam Taylor report: “China’s National Health Commission reported Monday that there are 20,438 confirmed cases in China, including 15 in Hong Kong and eight in Macao. The self-governing island of Taiwan reported 10 cases. The World Health Organization reported 146 confirmed cases in 23 countries outside China. ... The United States recorded its 11th case of the coronavirus, with a couple from central California falling ill after the husband’s trip to China’s Hubei province at the epicenter of the outbreak.”

-- States are scrambling to carry out Trump’s coronavirus travel order. Lena Sun, Lori Aratani, William Wan and Antonio Olivo report: “In interviews, state officials said the order came on Friday with no advance notice and little planning. The restrictions ban non-U.S. citizens who recently visited China from entering the country and quarantine Americans who visited Hubei province, the epicenter of the outbreak, within the past 14 days. (Immediate relatives of U.S. citizens, permanent residents, and flight crew members are exempted from the ban.) ... ‘The way this was rolled out is concerning. This is not the kind of thing you want to do on the fly because that creates chaos.’ said Hawaii Lt. Gov. Josh Green. ... Local jurisdictions are responsible for quarantine once people leave airports, officials have said. That has left authorities struggling to implement a system they had less than three days to devise.”

-- The spread of the virus threatens to strain U.S.-China relations and the global health system. David Nakamura and Anna Fifield

report: “The rapid spread of the virus has put Beijing on the defensive for what critics have called a slow initial response to contain it and a lack of transparency over the scale of the outbreak. In a briefing for reporters, a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman attempted to deflect blame by citing an ‘overreaction’ from the U.S. government that has ‘spread fear’ and set a ‘bad example’ for other nations. ... She asserted that the administration has not offered ‘any substantial assistance’ to combat the virus ... The Trump administration offered a tempered response Monday. [Trump] made no public remarks, while the State Department declined to comment.”

-- China built a massive hospital in 10 days to combat the coronavirus. It’s still not enough. Michael Brice-Saddler reports:

“The facility’s first patients arrived Monday, according to Chinese state media. Huoshenshan’s swift construction was the product of a round-the-clock effort fueled by 4,000 workers and 1,000 construction machines, according to China Daily. ... According to the Associated Press, the two-story, 600,000-square-foot hospital features doubled-sided cabinets and ventilation systems that essentially quarantine patients, allowing hospital staff to deliver supplies without entering their rooms. The building also contains infrared scanners that can detect whether any employees have a fever — one of the coronavirus’s telltale symptoms. ... But even in the early days of Huoshenshan’s construction, it quickly became apparent that the facility would not be large enough to mitigate bed shortages as the virus continues to spread.”

Johnson talks tough on post-Brexit trade deal with Europe

-- “With Britain's exit from the European Union official, at long last, the two partners on Monday began to squabble over their future relationship, with Prime Minister Boris Johnson huffing that he would rather leave the economic bloc without a free-trade deal than see Britain shackled to fusty European rules,” William Booth and Michael Birnbaum report: “At the same hour in Brussels, E.U. chief negotiator Michel Barnier outlined the bloc’s demands, declaring that Europe will agree to free trade only if Britain submits to the continent’s regulations. And so begins an 11-month transition period, when all this may or may not be sorted out. In this messy and drawn-out split, after 47 years together, the divvying up of the stuff is not so easy. Britain under Johnson is now all about cutting loose and ‘going global’ and making side deals with the Americans and Australians, while Europe is all about the need preserve a ‘level playing field,’ if Britain wants to be a friend with privileges — meaning access to its single market of 450 million consumers.

“In broad strokes, in language orotund and marked by the clever turns of phrase he perfected as an Oxford-educated, Fleet Street columnist, the prime minister laid out his vision for a post-Brexit Britain that is a world champion for free trade. He mixed his metaphors, but his message was clear. Britain is a ship in ‘the slipway’ ready to set sail, a rocket ‘on the launchpad’ ready to blast off, a butterfly ‘leaving its chrysalis.’ ‘We are reemerging after decades of hibernation as a campaigner for global free trade,’ Johnson said. ‘And, frankly, it is not a moment too soon, because the argument for this fundamental liberty is now not being made.’ The prime minister took a subtle swipe at President Trump, warning his audience that trade wars and tariff barriers are in vogue [from Brussels to Beijing and Washington] — and that is a bad thing.”

-- In a fight for national preservation, Greece is paying parents a baby bonus to boost birthrate. (The Guardian)

-- Leaked audio shows that the regime in Tehran knew immediately that one of its own missiles downed the Ukrainian passenger jet. Erin Cunningham and Isabelle Khurshudyan report: “A leaked audio file and transcript were published late Sunday by Ukraine’s 1+1 television channel. They included an exchange between an Iranian air traffic controller and a pilot who said he saw a missile hit Ukraine International Airlines Flight 752 on Jan. 8. ‘Flares on route, as if from a missile,’ the pilot of an Aseman Airlines flight from Shiraz to Tehran said to the controller, according to the transcript. The controller responded that the tower was not informed of any missile activity in the area. ‘That surely is light from a missile,’ the pilot said. Later he said, ‘We saw an explosion, a big flare from the explosion.”

-- The U.S. added a “low yield” nuclear weapon to its submarine arsenal. The low-yield missile joins other more powerful weapons aboard. The deployment is the first major addition to the strategic nuclear arsenal and is a departure from the Obama administration’s policy of depending less on nuclear weapons in pursuit of a nuclear-free world. (AP)

-- The president’s son-in-law Jared Kushner angered Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu’s camp due to White House pushback over plans to annex Jewish settlements in the West Bank. Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report: “Sources among Israeli settler groups and within the prime minister’s circle, according to the reports, blame Kushner for a split in the administration, portraying U.S. Ambassador David Friedman as more willing to see Israel annex the settlements in short order and Kushner resisting fast action. The move would allow Netanyahu to shore up right-wing support in advance of national elections here in March, observers say. ... Netanyahu said hours after the plan’s release that he planned to bring annexation before his cabinet within days. Friedman told reporters that day that the timing was up to Israel. ... But Kushner, in interviews and reportedly in conversations with Israeli officials, put the brakes on, saying the move should wait on a new government to be formed after next month’s vote.”

-- Former Kenyan president Daniel arap Moi, who deepened ethnic tensions and enriched himself at the public’s expense, died in Nairobi at 95. Yamiche Alcindor reports: “Mr. Moi was one of the last of Africa’s so-called Big Men, who presided over their countries in increasingly despotic ways. During 24 ruinous years in power, he curtailed political freedom, presided over the stagnation of Kenya's economy and encouraged patronage politics. He enshrined his name on currency, schools, an international airport and other prominent sites throughout the East African country. Despite condemnation by human rights groups and allegations that he had stolen millions of dollars in aid money, Mr. Moi's ties to the United States remained strong because of Kenya's staunch anti-communism and relative stability in a region ravaged by war and by leaders who were even more erratic."

Kim Kardashian West thanks Trump for his work on criminal justice at a June event promoting the hiring of ex-offenders. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- Most of Trump's grants of clemency have bypassed the Justice Department and go to well-connected offenders. Beth Reinhard and Anne Gearan report: "As the administration takes its cues from celebrities, political allies and Fox News, thousands of other offenders who followed Justice Department rules are waiting, passed over as cases that were brought directly to Trump leaped to the front of the line. For more than 125 years, the Office of the Pardon Attorney in the Justice Department has quietly served as the key adviser on clemency, one of the most unlimited powers bestowed on the president by the Constitution. Under Trump, the pardon office has become a bureaucratic way station, according to government data and interviews with lawyers, criminal justice advocates, and former pardon and White House officials. ... Ronald Reagan set a low bar with 669 decisions during his first three years; 3,993 petitions processed during Barack Obama's first three years reached a high-water mark. Trump has ruled on only 204 clemency requests — 24 approvals and 180 denials. That is the slowest pace in decades."

"The joy you get finding meritorious people, working on those cases, making recommendations that go to the White House, seeing people receive the grants — you feel like you've done something," said Larry Kupers, the former head of the office, who quit last year. "If that's not happening, it feels like you are spinning your wheels." Asked what advice he would give offenders seeking leniency, Kupers said: "Find a way to get to Kim Kardashian. I'm very serious about that."

-- Hundreds of pages of FBI witness interviews from former special counsel Bob Mueller's investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election were declassified after

BuzzFeed News and CNN filed a FOIA: “The documents also contained a summary of an interview that Kushner ... had with FBI agents and federal prosecutors in November 2017. But the five-page summary, known as an FBI 302, was almost entirely redacted. Intelligence agencies are still reviewing another Kushner interview summary from 2018 for classified information. Kushner’s interview summaries have been some of the most highly sought-after records from Mueller’s investigation; they were requested by the House Judiciary Committee last year as part of its impeachment inquiry. ... In addition to Kushner’s interview summary, the FBI and the Justice Department turned over 289 pages of heavily redacted summaries of interviews from former White House press secretary Sean Spicer; former White House chief of staff Reince Priebus; Trump's former personal lawyer Michael Cohen.”

-- Testimony in Harvey Weinstein’s trial ended early after an accuser broke down sobbing when asked about a childhood sexual assault. Shayna Jacobs reports: “Jessica Mann's cries echoed through the Manhattan courtroom... Prosecutor Joan Illuzzi-Orbon tried to comfort the fragile witness outside the presence of the jury... Mann — in a 2014 email to an ex-boyfriend — referred to a ‘sexual assault’ that did not appear to be one of the nonconsensual encounters she attributes to the Oscar-winning producer. She was shaking and too upset to speak when defense lawyer Donna Rotunno asked if the mention had to do with abuse from her younger years. ... Weinstein provided ‘all the validation I needed,’ [Mann] wrote to a boyfriend, a successful actor, who she said was critical of her Weinstein connection. Mann was on the witness stand for nearly a full day of grueling cross-examination. She had to answer for her history of interactions with Weinstein, particularly why she remained in a five-year consensual relationship with the producer who she now alleges raped her in 2013.”

-- Veteran Affairs Secretary Robert Wilkie abruptly fired his No. 2, James Byrne, after five months on the job. But it's not clear why. There was only a brief, cryptic statement that said his ouster was effective immediately, per Politico.

-- Trump once said everyone should “stand proudly” for the national anthem. But he fidgeted and air-conducted at his own Super Bowl party as “The Star-Spangled Banner” rang. Kim Bellware reports: “In an Instagram video taken by a guest and later shared with the Miami Herald, other attendees — including members of the first family — are seen standing calmly with hand over heart as ‘The Star-Spangled Banner’ plays. The 20-second clip using the front-facing-camera mode shows Trump doing neither. Instead, the president is seen fidgeting, pointing around the room, straightening his jacket and at one point waving his fingers in the air as if conducting an invisible orchestra.”

-- Conservative talk radio figure Rush Limbaugh said he has advanced lung cancer. Paul Farhi reports: “‘I thought about not telling anybody,’ he said on the air from his home studio in West Palm Beach, Fla. ‘It is what it is. You know me, I’m the mayor of Realville. This has happened, and my intention is to come here every day I can and do this program as normally and competently and expertly as I do each and every day because that is the source of my greatest satisfaction professionally, personally.’”

-- Two women died and a child was wounded in a shooting at a residence hall in Texas A&M University at Commerce. Paulina Firozi reports: “The toddler is in stable condition, the university’s police chief, Bryan Vaughn, said ... Police found the women’s bodies after a student who lives in the residence hall called police at 10:17 a.m. Central time... Police did not identify a suspected shooter and did not provide additional details at the news conference.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

The Democratic candidates descended overnight on New Hampshire:

David Catanese ✓

@davecatanese

. @PeteButtigieg has arrived in Nashua, New Hampshire

♡ 472 12:29 PM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 70 people are talking about this

Nate Evans
@nathanpevans

Dozens of @amyklobuchar supporters in NH greeted her when she landed in Manchester. At 3:30 in the morning.
#nhpolitics

♡ 323 9:07 AM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 85 people are talking about this

Nicole Sganga @NicoleSganga · 5h

Replying to @NicoleSganga

MANCHESTER, NH — Senator Amy Klobuchar arrives at the airport in New Hampshire. “We just had an excellent night tonight in Iowa. Of course, we don’t know the results yet. Minor problem!” she quips.

Dozens of supporters greeted the Senator at the airport. #nhpolitics #FITN

Nicole Sganga ✓
@NicoleSganga

Senator Amy Klobuchar says "of course" she's concerned about the Iowa caucus results.

She adds there were election results long before apps and computers.

"They've written them all down, they're adding them all up, and we'll get them." #nhpolitics #FITN

116 10:02 AM - Feb 4, 2020

38 people are talking about this

Annie Linskey ✓

@AnnieLinskey

Air Warren landed in New Hampshire

5 9:15 AM - Feb 4, 2020

See Annie Linskey's other Tweets

Warren, the bane of the big banks, ironically won a precinct caucus at an arena named for Wells Fargo, whose previous chief executive she crusaded to get fired:

Someone snuck some wine into a voting location. It did not end well:

Iowa Starting Line

@IAStartingLine

At one Des Moines precinct tonight, an attendee brought in a concealed bottle of wine, dropped it, and it shattered everywhere

♡ 23.2K 12:56 AM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 5,170 people are talking about this

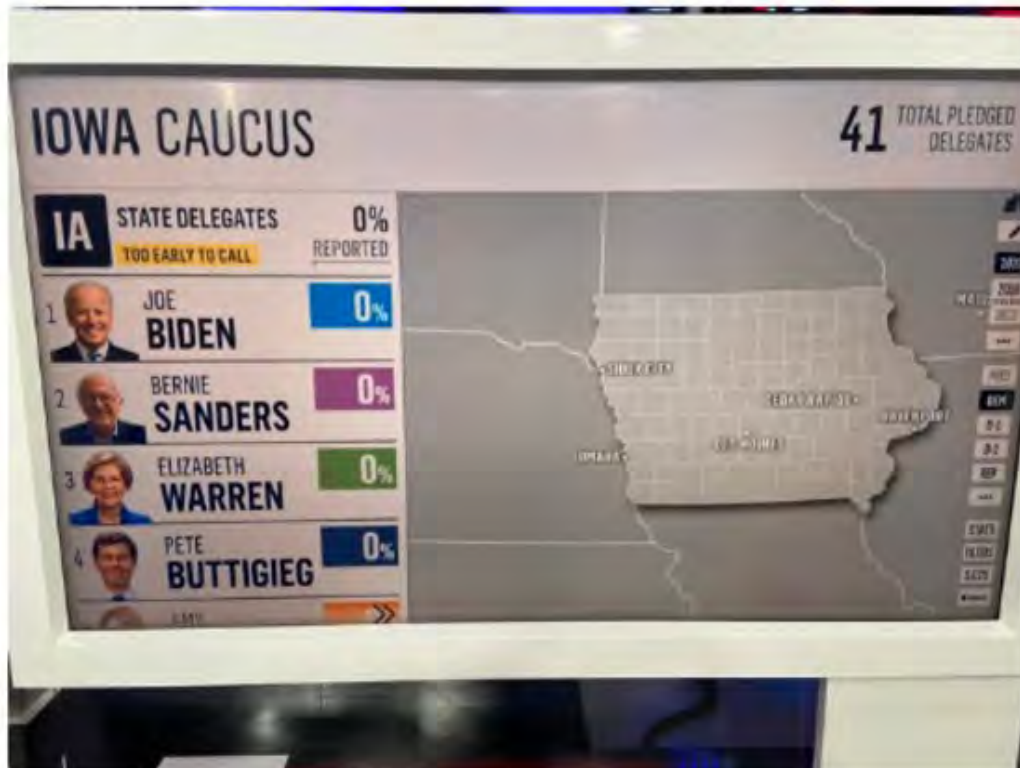

Pete Buttigieg claimed victory without any public evidence to show for it:

Steve Kornacki
@SteveKornacki

The official results as Pete Buttigieg declares himself victorious in Iowa:

8,807 5:29 AM - Feb 4, 2020

2,599 people are talking about this

Here's an example of the handwritten form that Democrats are using from each precinct as backups to check their math:

Trip Gabriel
@tripgabriel

Why so long to report results? Nearly 1,700 caucuses fill out worksheets like this, then report multiple results.

First Alignment Results Caucus Math Worksheet County: [blank] Precinct: 1 Delegate(s): 18 Nov 2019

Name of candidate or recommended group: VIABILITY: 0-2 - your precinct - 1 signed
1-50 precinct

Number of members within the group after this precinct

A) Amy 44
 B) Bernie 34
 C) Biden 65-68
 D) Pete 60-5-14
 E) Warren 41-53
 F) Yara 7
 G) UNDEC 0

Total number of delegates allocated to this precinct: 254
 Total number of delegates allocated to this precinct: 381
 Total number of delegates allocated to this precinct: 39

AWARDING DELEGATES

| Name of candidate or recommended group | Number of members within the group after this precinct | Total number of delegates allocated to this precinct | Total number of delegates allocated to this precinct | Total number of delegates allocated to this precinct | Number of delegates allocated to this precinct |
|--|--|--|--|--|--|
| A) Amy                                 | 44   | 254  | 254  | 1.7322   | 2  |
| B) Biden                               | 68   | 254  | 254  | 2.6777   | 2  |
| C) Pete                                | 18   | 254  | 254  | 3.0708   | 2  |
| D) WARREN                              | 53   | 254  | 254  | 2.0866   | 2  |
| E)                                     |  |  |  |  |  |
| F)                                     |  |  |  |  |  |
| G)                                     |  |  |  |  |  |

Representative of Candidate A: [Signature]
 Representative of Candidate B: [Signature]
 Representative of Candidate C: [Signature]
 Representative of Candidate D: [Signature]

923 4:29 AM - Feb 4, 2020

608 people are talking about this

The New York Post mocked Iowa Democrats for screwing up their counting:

DUH MOINES

Democrats in chaos as Iowa caucus implodes

Can't anybody here count?! The Iowa Democratic caucuses descended into chaos last night and early this morning as "inconsistencies" in reporting at polling sites — perhaps linked to a glitchy new app — caused an embarrassingly delayed tally in the hotly anticipated first contest in the race for president.

PAGES 4-5

DRAMA AS HARV ACCUSER BREAKS DOWN PAGE 7

Trump's campaign manager Brad Parscale, as well as Eric Trump, hinted without evidence that the results were delayed so they could be rigged:

Brad Parscale - Text TRUMP to 88022 ✓

@parscale

Quality control = rigged? 🤔

twitter.com/francisbrennan...

Francis Brennan (Text TRUMP to 88022) @FrancisBren...

MSNBC's Steve Kornacki reports:

"We've heard from the Iowa state Democratic Party... They say that they are doing, quote, 'quality control on the results that they've received.' They say they are doing it, quote, 'out of an abundance of caution.'" #RiggedElection?

♡ 14.2K 3:19 AM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 7,386 people are talking about this

Twitter said it won't remove posts like this. "The tweet is not in violation of our election integrity policy as it does not suppress voter turnout or mislead people about when, where, or how to vote," Twitter spokesman Brandon Borrman told Tony Romm.

Democrats worked through the night to get an accurate count from Polk County, which includes Des Moines. This is from the county chair:

 Sean Bagniewski
@bagniewski

It's 2AM and we have supporters for Buttigieg, Klobuchar, Sanders, and Warren at Polk HQ going through every precinct box to send the results we have to the state party so we can finally go to bed.

Our volunteers are literally tireless. #IACaucus

♡ 1,206 8:14 AM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 267 people are talking about this

A Michael Bennet supporter wasn't ready to give up:

An embattled Republican congressman from Iowa defended the caucuses:

The former dean of the Iowa press corps, who covered politics for 34 years at the Des Moines Register, said he thinks the caucus system as we've known it is over:

And this is a great analogy:

The longest-serving Democratic senator carried a copy of JFK's "Profiles in Courage." Does Pat Leahy know that one of the chapters in the book is actually about a Republican who broke with his party to vote against removing Andrew Johnson at his impeachment trial?:

John Bresnahan ✓
@BresPolitico

.@SenatorLeahy has a subtle message as he searches for Republican senators who'll vote to convict Trump

♥ 143 8:11 PM - Feb 3, 2020

💬 56 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert went through some of the excuses Republican senators have used to vote for Trump's acquittal:

Seth Meyers, noting Trump's Super Bowl mix-up, said it is understandable to confuse the two Kansas Cities, if you're a middle-schooler:

"The Daily Show's" Jordan Klepper asked Trump's Iowa supporters for their thoughts on impeachment:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: State of the Union showcases Trump's total control of the GOP on eve of probable impeachment acquittal
Date: Wednesday, February 5, 2020 8:17:59 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

State of the Union showcases Trump's total control of the GOP on eve of probable impeachment acquittal

Boasts, Barbs and a ripped up speech: President Trump's 2020 State of the Union address

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: President Trump did not mention impeachment during his State of the Union address on Tuesday night, but it loomed large on the eve of his foregone acquittal by the Senate. Many of the Republican jurors in the trial chanted “four more years” as he stepped to the podium, and they interrupted him 128 times for applause during a 77-minute speech.

Not a single Republican in the House broke ranks to vote for either article of impeachment seven weeks ago. Every Republican senator has now announced that they will vote this afternoon against convicting the president, except for Mitt Romney, who has not revealed his intentions either way.

Rep. Jeff Van Drew (R-N.J.), who quit the Democratic Party in December after opposing impeachment, stood on the GOP side of the center aisle last night and sought Trump's attention to get a handshake. Trump held a rally last Wednesday in Van Drew's district — which he carried in 2016 — to ensure the party-switcher will fend off a GOP primary challenge to hold the seat.

Trump has never been more popular than he is right now among Republicans, at the elite and grass-roots levels. A Gallup poll released yesterday put Trump's approval rating at 49 percent, the highest point of his presidency so far. One big reason: His approval among Republicans rose by six points since early January to 94 percent. That's three points higher than his previous personal best.

At the Republican caucuses in Iowa on Monday night, Trump received 97.1 percent of the vote. Former Massachusetts governor Bill Weld and former Illinois congressman Joe Walsh have campaigned hard against Trump, and both were in Des Moines this weekend, but they were greeted by small crowds and little appetite among Republicans to break with the president who staged a hostile takeover of the party four years ago after finishing second in the Iowa caucuses.

Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) arrives for Trump's State of the Union address. (Leah Millis/Pool/Reuters)

-- Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) announced on Tuesday that she will vote to acquit Trump on both articles of impeachment passed by the House. “I believe that the president has learned from this case,” she told CBS News’s Norah O’Donnell. “The president has been impeached. That’s a pretty big lesson. ... I believe that he will be much more cautious in the future.” Other Republicans – including Rob Portman (Ohio), Joni Ernst (Iowa) Shelley Moore Capito (W.V.) – have used variations of the talking point that Trump has learned his lesson.

But there is no evidence that Trump has been chastened. There have been no suggestions that he feels any contrition at all for the alleged scheme to coerce Ukraine to announce an investigation of Joe Biden by freezing military assistance and withholding a White House meeting.

Trump was even asked directly about Collins’s claim that he learned a lesson during a two-hour, off-the-record lunch with television anchors to preview the speech. The president replied that he has done nothing wrong. “It was a perfect call,” said Trump, repeating a mantra he’s used for months.

The Washington Post didn’t attend the lunch, but several participants described it to Josh Dawsey and Phil Rucker: “Trump expressed frustration with former national security adviser John Bolton, who the president said had turned on him. Trump also mocked Bolton by saying that he always wanted to be called ‘ambassador,’ even internally at the White House, and that his ambassadorship to the United Nations in the mid-2000s was a recess appointment.

“Trump also said he wanted to block Bolton’s forthcoming book from being published, according to two people familiar with knowledge of the lunch. The White House has only said that the book has classified information and that Bolton needs to make changes to the book. Bolton is said to allege that Trump tied aid to Ukraine to politically motivated investigations of his opponents, and people familiar with the project say it is unflattering to the president. The president told the anchors that Bolton could have written the book once Trump left office but that doing it while Trump is still in office ‘is not right.’”

---

Content from Partnership for America’s Health Care Future

American families can’t afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there's "no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases."

Rep. Debbie Lesko (R-Ariz.) holds up a school choice logo on the Republican side of the aisle during the State of the Union address. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

-- Getting acquitted is not the same thing as being exonerated, but Trump will probably portray it as just that during his looming victory lap. After all, he said last year that Bob Mueller's report represented “complete and total exoneration,” even though the former special counsel went out of his way to say that it was not. He even detailed 10 cases of possible obstruction of justice.

-- Trump’s personal lawyer Rudy Giuliani even told NPR yesterday that the president should continue pushing for a Biden investigation once he’s acquitted. “Absolutely, 100%,” Giuliani said. “I would have no problem with him doing it. In fact, I’d have a problem with him not doing it.”

-- Opposing impeachment has been a fundraising gold mine for Republicans. “Donation pages for WinRed — the GOP’s online fundraising tool — that included the word ‘impeach’ or ‘impeachment’ raised 300 percent more than pages that did not,” per Politico. “Rep. Lee Zeldin (R-N.Y.), who himself has been catapulted from the back benches of Congress to Trump’s Twitter feed through his role defending the president during impeachment, compared the uptick in energy and fundraising dollars to the bitter confirmation fight over Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh in 2018.”

-- Dozens of prominent Republican surrogates who traveled to Iowa on Monday as a show of force for Trump at the GOP caucuses wore MAGA-style hats that said "Keep Iowa Great" on their chartered flight home:

(Tim Murtaugh/Trump campaign)

-- There are daily reminders of the extent to which Trump now dominates Republican politics, even though he did not even join the party until 2009. For example, Trump repeatedly humiliated Jeff Sessions, culminating with his termination, after the then-attorney general recused himself from overseeing the Justice Department's probe of Russian connections with the Trump campaign in 2016. Sessions is now running in a crowded GOP primary to wrest back the Alabama Senate seat he gave up so he could join the administration. Lacking the president's support, Sessions launched a new campaign commercial yesterday to highlight that he was the first senator to endorse Trump in 2016. "While the others were hiding under their desks, ... I knew he was the one to make America great again," Sessions says to the camera, as he dons his four-year-old MAGA hat. "And I'll keep fighting for President Trump and his agenda."

Rush Limbaugh awarded Presidential Medal of Freedom

-- Trump made no effort to unify the nation at the end of the third presidential impeachment trial in American history. Instead, he used his third State of the Union to demonstrate anew that his reelection strategy for 2020 is to follow the same base-first playbook that worked in 2016: Divide and conquer.

He took at least three digs at former president Barack Obama, including his handling of the economy, Cuba and immigration. “If we hadn’t reversed the failed economic policies of the previous administration, the world would not now be witnessing this great economic success,” Trump said.

Trump awarding the Presidential Medal of Freedom to a surprised Rush Limbaugh during the speech was also emblematic of this. Limbaugh, who said earlier this week that he’s been diagnosed with lung cancer, has contributed mightily to the polarization. He’s a divisive figure who has been accused over the years of making racist and misogynistic comments on his nationally syndicated radio show. For what it’s worth, like Trump, Limbaugh spent several years pushing the totally discredited conspiracy theory that Obama was not born in the United States and has never apologized.

“Rush Limbaugh: Thank you for your decades of tireless devotion to our country,” Trump said in his State of the Union. “Rush, in recognition of all that you have done for our nation [and] the millions of people a day that you speak to and inspire, ... I am proud to announce tonight that you will be receiving our country’s highest civilian honor, the Presidential Medal of Freedom.”

“Oh, no,” an unknown Democrat yelled from their side of the chamber when Trump announced the award. “Thank you, Rush,” an unknown Republican yelled from their side.

-- While Trump extended no olive branches, he threw plenty of other red meat to his base. He promised to fight to protect prayer in public schools, advocated restrictions on abortion rights and pledged to protect the right to bear arms, which he said is “under siege all across our country.”

-- The president also offered an implicit reminder that he’s pushed a party that once proudly and unabashedly championed free markets in the direction of protectionism. Trump boasted last night about replacing the North American Free Trade Agreement with the new U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement. “Unfair trade is perhaps the single biggest reason that I decided to run for president,” he said. “Many politicians came and went, pledging to change or replace NAFTA, ... and then absolutely nothing happened. But unlike so many who came before me, I keep my promises.”

Pat Toomey of Pennsylvania was the only Republican senator who voted against ratifying the USMCA last month because of principled conservative objections that it makes trade less free. Other Republicans grumbled privately about the deal’s flaws, and its concessions to organized labor, but they backed the deal anyway.

-- Trump is talented at the transactional elements of party politics. During his speech, Trump singled out for praise several Republican senators who have defended him during the trial: He endorsed John Barrasso’s highway bill, Thom Tillis’s proposal to allow people to sue sanctuary cities, Chuck Grassley’s efforts to reduce prescription drug prices and Tim Scott’s work on economic opportunity zones “as part of our great Republican tax cuts.” Trump also praised Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell for confirming 187 of his judicial nominees. “Thank you, Mitch,” he said, “and we have many in the pipeline.”

Democrats didn't hide their disdain for Trump's State of the Union address

-- But the president has always defined himself politically as much by whom he's against as what's he's for. Last night, he attacked Pennsylvania's Democratic governor for vetoing a school voucher program opposed by teachers unions. He ripped the city of New York and the state of California for not fully cooperating with Immigration and Customs Enforcement officers. He slammed the 132 Democrats who have endorsed Medicare-for-all and accused them of wanting to give taxpayer-funded health care to undocumented immigrants, to which House Speaker Nancy Pelosi mouthed "not true." Trump declared: "To those watching at home tonight, I want you to know: We will never let socialism destroy American health care."

-- What people will remember from last night is that neither Trump nor Pelosi and Democratic leaders tried to hide their mutual disdain for one another. After Trump appeared to snub Pelosi by not shaking her outstretched hand at the start of the speech, the speaker of the House ripped up a printout of his speech into four separate piles as he concluded. Asked why she tore up the speech, Pelosi told reporters: “It was the courteous thing to do, considering the alternative.”

The seven House impeachment managers sat together. Rank-and-file Democrats like Lois Frankel from Florida approached Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) to get selfies before Trump’s arrival. This is Trump’s final State of the Union address before voters get to render their own verdict on his tenure.

Trump’s 2020 State of the Union, fact checked | The Fact Checker

HOW IT'S PLAYING:

-- The Fact Checker team flags 31 false or misleading statements by the president. The annual speech was “once again chock-full of stretched facts and dubious figures,” Glenn Kessler, Sal Rizzo and Sarah Cahlan report. “Many of these claims have been fact-checked repeatedly, yet the president persists in using them.”

-- “Trump claimed the U.S. economy is ‘roaring’ and ‘the best it has ever been.’ ... The broad consensus among economists is that the U.S. economy is doing well, but these are not unprecedented times,” Heather Long reports. “In a number of ways, the current economy is the best the nation has seen since the late 1990s.”

-- Aaron Blake’s four takeaways: 1. Impeachment bad blood spills over. 2. A (repeatedly) overstated economic case. 3. Running against Barack Obama. 4. The Rush Limbaugh moment was obviously designed to elicit a reaction.

-- More team coverage:

- David Nakamura: “Trump paints strong economy as vindication as he tries to move past impeachment.”
- Rachael Bade: “Democrats use State of the Union rebuttal to pivot from impeachment.”
- Mike DeBonis: “Pelosi shreds Trump’s speech, capping a tumultuous year in Washington.”
- Robin Givhan: “Congressional Democrats wore their white-hot fury to the State of the Union.”
- Ashley Parker: “With chants, walkouts and a ripped-up speech, bitter partisanship dominates...”
- Avi Selk: “The cheers, glares and ‘Oh no!’ ... showed just how bitterly divided this Congress is.”
- Philip Bump: “Amid reelection bid, Trump’s State of the Union address goes full reality show. Leveraging the presidency for his political benefit gets more subtle.”

- Amber Phillips and Kristina Orrego annotated a transcript of the address.

An advertisement for a podcast. The background is a solid blue color with a subtle pattern of concentric circles. At the top, the text "The Daily 202's" is in a smaller white font, followed by "BIG IDEA" in a very large, bold, white, serif font. Below this, on the left, is a white play button icon inside a white circle. To the right of the icon is the text "Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player." in a white, sans-serif font.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Buttigieg says his campaign 'has taken its place at the front of this race'

2020 WATCH:

-- Pete Buttigieg and Bernie Sanders took the lead after partial results were released from the marred Iowa caucuses. Toluse Olorunnipa, Annie Linskey and Chelsea Janes report: “According to the early results, which Iowa Democratic Party Chairman Troy Price said represented 62 percent of the state’s precincts, Buttigieg was leading with 26.9 percent of the state’s delegates, followed by Sanders with 25.1 percent. Sanders won some bragging rights with a popular-vote lead, with 28,220 to Buttigieg’s 27,090. Elizabeth Warren and [Joe Biden] were in third and fourth place with 18.3 and 15.6 percent of the delegates, respectively — disappointing results for candidates who have sought to push the idea that they are most electable. They ranked in the same positions in the popular vote.

“The full results remained delayed Tuesday after a complex caucus process plagued by technical difficulties in its reporting system that began Monday night and continued with no clear timeline for a resolution. The Iowa Democratic Party said Tuesday that it was continuing to try to verify the results, collecting boxes of presidential preference cards and pushing precincts to report their results as quickly as possible. ... Buttigieg's voice seemed to crack Tuesday as he acknowledged the unprecedented nature of his success. ...

“While Sanders came out on top in the popular vote, the overall turnout figures — comparable to 2016’s but far below the record numbers that launched Barack Obama’s candidacy in 2008 — indicated that his pledge to energize an army of young and first-time voters had not been fulfilled. ... The muddled results served to persuade lower-tier candidates to stay in the race, making the Democrats’ challenge to select a standard-bearer all the more difficult. ... [Amy] Klobuchar was in fifth place in Iowa, according to the partial results, with 12.6 percent of the state’s delegates. Entrepreneur Andrew Yang trailed behind with 1.1 percent, and businessman Tom Steyer had 0.3 percent.” Klobuchar told supporters at a campaign stop in Concord, N.H.: “I’m someone that thrives in chaos. You want a steady hand in chaos, right?”

-- Iowa Democrats kept their caucusing app secret to prevent hacks. Instead, they got confusion and chaos. Isaac Stanley-Becker and Michael Scherer report: “Some explanations for the meltdown began to emerge — including the fact that many precinct organizers had not been able to adequately test the app designed for reporting results to party headquarters. But questions also remained about why the state party chose Shadow, a Democratic-aligned startup, for such a high-stakes moment. The app had been rolled out for testing in mid-January, just weeks before the caucuses. The delay was intentional, according to a state party official ...

"Iowa Democrats waited to introduce the software to avoid giving potential hackers time to penetrate it, the official said, adding that the party chose to keep the name of the vendor secret on the advice of national cybersecurity consultants. In the end, the problem on caucus night was not a hack. Nor could it be explained alone by difficulty in downloading the software. It was a more basic coding error that caused the problems. When caucus leaders started successfully reporting data through the app, a separate system also developed by Shadow collated the information but spit out only partial results, according to a person familiar with the events."

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "We feel really terrible about that," said Gerard Niemira, CEO of the political technology company Shadow, which developed the failed Iowa caucuses app. (Bloomberg News)

-- The caucus mess – and an emboldened Trump – are fueling Democratic anxiety. Matt Viser reports: "The Democratic five-alarm fire has begun. Around the country on Tuesday, Democrats found themselves baffled by the circumstances engulfing their party — even one that is known for, and sometimes takes pride in, its tendency to overreact with worry. 'This is just one sad week,' said former senator Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.). 'While I am having these very dark, sad feelings about the Senate GOP and a whitewash, here comes this mess in Iowa,' Boxer said, referring to the impeachment trial. 'This is a wake-up call. We're going to be tested.' ... Democrats were concerned that turnout for the caucuses, which party officials just weeks ago predicted would hit record levels due to voter enthusiasm to take on Trump, apparently fell short of expectations, potentially suggesting a lack of enthusiasm for the candidates. ... The combination of the muddled result, a botched process that forced the Iowa Democratic chairman to apologize late Tuesday, and the low participation levels was demoralizing to many in the party.”

-- The results emboldened Mike Bloomberg, who didn't compete in Iowa. “Bloomberg authorized his advisers Tuesday morning to double television spending for his own presidential campaign,” Paul Schwartzman and Michael Scherer report. “The campaign has also been authorized to hire more staff, said a person familiar with the strategy. Bloomberg told a noontime crowd [in Detroit] Tuesday that he was sleeping on a plane last night, woke up and asked an aide what had happened in the Iowa caucuses. He said the aide answered, ‘Nothing.’ ‘I still can’t figure out what happened,’ Bloomberg said to laughter. ‘More than any other candidate, we have the momentum.’”

-- Facing a cash crunch, Biden’s campaign tried to reassure jittery donors on a conference call that the former vice president can still win Nevada and South Carolina. (CNBC)

-- Trump and son-in-law Jared Kushner saw their campaign’s Super Bowl ad as a way of making inroads with black voters. From the Times: “Several senior Trump aides expressed skepticism of Mr. Kushner’s belief that broad numbers of black voters, whose views of the president are overwhelmingly negative, are persuadable. ... Mr. Trump himself was a motivating factor for turning out African-American Democrats in the 2018 midterm elections. Voter participation among black people in 2018 grew from the 2014 midterms, according to data from the Pew Research Center. Despite those numbers and the skepticism from colleagues, Mr. Kushner has been advising Mr. Trump that black voters can be converted into supporters if they are simply educated on his policies. Mr. Trump's biggest challenge, Mr. Kushner has told people, is a 'knowledge gap' on many of the president's accomplishments, particularly on the issue of criminal justice reform, which Mr. Kushner has spearheaded."

-- Kweisi Mfume won the Democratic primary in the special election to replace the late congressman Elijah Cummings, defeating the revered lawmaker's widow in Baltimore. Mfume is considered likely to easily reclaim the deep-blue seat he held more than 20 years ago. (Jenna Portnoy)

-- An increasing number of Republicans are acknowledging they need to begin addressing climate change and offering solutions to have any hope of retaking the House. Steven Mufson reports: "In poll after poll, large numbers of young and suburban Republican voters are registering their desire for climate action and say the issue is a priority. And their concern about climate change is spreading to older GOP supporters, too. ... The GOP is still hammering out details, but some critics say the new Republican approach to climate change looks a lot like the old one. In addition to trees, senior Republicans are said to be considering tax breaks for research, curbs on plastic waste and big federally funded infrastructure projects in the name of adaptation or resilience. The already well-worn buzzword 'innovation' will be their rallying cry, and natural gas, despite its carbon emissions, will be embraced."

Fear of the coronavirus turns Chinese cities into ghost towns

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- The overall death toll of the coronavirus has reached 492. Chinese authorities reported total confirmed cases now top 24,000. More than 3,000 are in critical condition. (Shibani Mahtani, Anna Fifield, Derek Hawkins and Siobhán O’Grady report in our live blog.)

-- Hong Kong leader Carrie Lam instituted a mandatory 14-day quarantine for visitors arriving from China, bowing to increasingly strident demands from striking health workers on the island. Mahtani reports: “Separately, the Hong Kong government will also shut cruise terminals in the city. On Wednesday morning, a cruise ship docked in Hong Kong — initially bound for Taiwan but turned away — with several suspected cases of infections among crew on board. Lam described the measure on Wednesday as 'very strict' and said her government believes there would be a 'substantial drop' in cross-boundary travel. Implementing such a move is politically sensitive for Hong Kong, which likely needs Beijing's approval for such a measure despite having its own immigration system."

-- Some 530 Americans stuck in the Wuhan area were evacuated after extended delays that appear to be linked to the political frictions between Beijing and Washington. Fifield reports: "Some had been in the airport for 48 hours waiting for information, with speculation that flight authorizations had been delayed by Chinese authorities. ... For many of the hundreds of Americans at the airport, the evacuation had been a frustrating experience, compounded by the fact that the U.S. government had evacuated its consulate in Wuhan immediately after the city at the center of the deadly coronavirus outbreak went into lockdown. ... Those difficulties have been compounded, some Americans in the city say, by a feeling that their government has deserted them. 'We're like refugees here,' said one woman from New Jersey who was visiting family in Wuhan for the Lunar New Year holiday when she got trapped in the city. ... Furthermore, [Americans] described scenes of chaos at the airport, with no officials there to help them and not even a sign indicating where to gather. This was in contrast to the Russian evacuation, where consular officials had set up an information desk with a Russian flag and had provided buses to bring Russian citizens through the checkpoints into the airport."

-- Ten aboard a cruise ship anchored in Japanese waters tested positive for the virus. The roughly 3,700 passengers and crew aboard the ship will be quarantined for two weeks. (Simon Denyer)

-- The FDA approved a new diagnostic test to check people for the virus. The emergency authorization allows public health labs across the country to use the test. The move will speed up testing that, until now, had all taken place at the CDC's headquarters in Atlanta. (Hawkins)

-- The U.S. oil industry is already suffering from the coronavirus's effects. From the NYT: "Just a few weeks after the outbreak of the virus, daily Chinese oil demand is already down 20 percent because of dwindling air travel, road transportation and manufacturing. Since China consumes 13 of every 100 barrels of oil the world produces, every oil company is being hit to some extent."

-- House Democrats urged the Trump administration to seek emergency funding for the outbreak. In a letter Tuesday, House Appropriations Chairwoman Nita M. Lowey (D-N.Y.) and Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-Conn.) say it's clear that "further resources will be necessary to support an aggressive and comprehensive government-wide response to the 2019 novel Coronavirus, both domestically and internationally." (Erica Werner)

-- Have you seen or experienced any racism, xenophobia or other forms of discrimination connected to the coronavirus epidemic? If you have, The Post wants to hear your story. Fill out this form, and one of our colleagues may follow up with you.

-- The U.S. is pushing an effort to develop a 5G alternative to Chinese communications giant Huawei. From the Journal: "The plan would build on efforts by some U.S. telecom and technology companies to agree on common engineering standards that would allow 5G software developers to run code on machines that come from nearly any hardware manufacturer. That would reduce, if not eliminate, reliance on Huawei equipment. Companies including Microsoft Corp., Dell Inc. and AT&T Inc. are part of the effort, White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow said.”

-- Gen. Kenneth McKenzie, head of the U.S. Central Command, met with officials in Baghdad amid tensions over the strike that killed Maj. Gen. Qasem Soleimani. Missy Ryan reports: “On a day-long unannounced trip, McKenzie also visited U.S. troops at al-Asad military base, one of the targets of a ballistic missile attack that Iran launched in retaliation ... McKenzie, who is concluding a tour of countries across the Middle East, told reporters after his visit that he discussed the future of the foreign military presence and other matters with Iraqi Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi, President Barham Salih and parliamentary speaker Mohammed al-Halbousi. ... McKenzie declined to comment on whether he and Iraqi leaders discussed a Pentagon proposal to place Patriot missile batteries in Iraq in the wake of the recent missile attack. McKenzie said the destruction at Asad base underscored what he believed was Iran’s intent to inflict fatal damage on U.S. personnel.”

-- At least 138 Salvadoran deported by the U.S. were killed back home, a rights group said. Mary Beth Sheridan reports: “A majority of the Salvadorans — 109 — were sent home during the Obama administration, according to Alison Leal Parker, managing director of the U.S. program of Human Rights Watch. But under President Trump, the New York-based organization notes, it has become more difficult to receive asylum. Human Rights Watch predicts the situation ‘will only worsen.’ ... Human Rights Watch also identified 70 cases of deportees who disappeared following their return or suffered sexual violence, torture or other abuse, often by gangs.”

-- Nigeria was “blindsided” by Trump’s travel ban, its top diplomat claims. From the NYT: “Geoffrey Onyeama, Nigeria’s foreign minister, said that his government was already working to address security concerns that Trump administration officials said had prompted the decision, announced last week, to reject visas for Nigerians seeking to immigrate to the United States. ... He said that included efforts to directly share personal data — including immigrants’ criminal histories, stolen passport information and suspected links to terrorism — with the United States and Interpol member countries.”

A flag for Deutsche Bank flies outside the German bank's New York offices on Wall Street. (Mark Lennihan/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- “If Trump cheated on his taxes, Deutsche Bank would probably know. If his net worth is measured in millions, not billions, Deutsche Bank would probably know. If he secretly got money from the Kremlin, Deutsche Bank would probably know,” Times reporter David Enrich writes in an excerpt of his new book, “Dark Towers,” which focuses on the president’s relationship with the bank. “If they ever become public, the bank’s Trump records could serve as a Rosetta Stone to decode the president’s finances. Executives told me that the bank has, or at one point had, portions of Trump’s personal federal income tax returns going back to around 2011. ... The bank has documents detailing the finances and operations of his businesses. And it has records about internal deliberations over whether and how to do business with Trump — a paper trail that most likely reflects some bank employees’ concerns about potentially suspicious transactions that they detected in the family’s accounts. One reason all these files could be so illuminating is that the bank’s relationship with Trump extended well beyond making simple loans. Deutsche Bank managed tens of millions of dollars of Trump’s personal assets. The bank also furnished him with other services that have not previously been reported: providing sophisticated financial instruments that shielded him from risks and outside scrutiny, and making introductions to wealthy Russians who were interested in investing in Western real estate.”

-- Lawyers for Trump and for adult-film star Stormy Daniels faced off in court over her libel lawsuit against the president. The fight

is over a 2018 Trump tweet in which he accused her of being a “total con job” for claiming that she was threatened by an unknown man at a casino parking lot in 2011. Daniels claims the tweet was an act of intimidation aimed at hushing up her claim that she and Trump had sexual encounters while he was married to Melania Trump and she was pregnant with their son. (Politico)

-- The trial for the former CIA employee accused of leaking thousands of agency documents to WikiLeaks began in New York. Shane Harris reports: “Joshua Schulte, 31, is charged with disclosing classified information to WikiLeaks after allegedly stealing it from a secretive CIA unit where he worked. In more than 8,000 pages of material published in 2017 — known as the Vault 7 leaks — WikiLeaks showed how the CIA breaks into smartphones and Internet-connected devices, including televisions. The disclosure ‘was the single biggest leak of classified national defense information in the history of the CIA,’ Assistant U.S. Attorney David Denton told jurors. Denton said that as a result of the disclosure, CIA operations had ‘come to a halt,’ U.S. intelligence officers serving overseas had been exposed and American adversaries were able to turn cyberweapons developed by the CIA against the United States.”

-- The ban on flavored e-cigarette pods takes effect tomorrow. Sales of fruit-, dessert- and mint-flavored pods will be outlawed. Menthol and tobacco flavors will escape the prohibition. (Laurie McGinley)

-- Civil rights leader Bayard Rustin was pardoned decades after his arrest for having consensual sex with men in California. Samantha Schmidt reports: “The ‘morals charge,’ which was often used to target gay people in those years, remained a stain on his record and nearly sidelined him from the movement he helped create. On Wednesday, California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) issued a posthumous pardon for Rustin. Inspired by a call from lawmakers to pardon the civil rights leader, Newsom also announced a clemency initiative that would help clear the records of other people who faced discriminatory charges for consensual activity with people of the same sex. ... The new clemency initiative will focus on identifying eligible candidates for pardons and will accept applications on behalf of people who meet the criteria for consideration, the governor's office said."

-- Macy's is closing 125 stores – a fifth of its total -- and laying off 2,000 employees as it struggles to win over costumers who are increasingly buying online. Abha Bhattarai reports: "The department store chain is also shutting down its headquarters in Cincinnati and will move operations to its main headquarters in New York, the company announced ...Macy's, which had $25 billion in sales in 2018, is the country's largest department store chain. ... Analysts said the closures, set to take place over three years, would hurt some of the country's most vulnerable shopping malls, and lead to a ripple effect of declining foot traffic and revenue for nearby stores. ... Macy's did not specify which locations it plans to close but said closures would be in 'lower tier' malls."

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Rep. Billy Long (R-Mo.) suggested Pelosi auction the ripped-up pieces of her copy of Trump's speech:

A Texas congresswoman drew a comparison between the reaction to the ripped-up speech and the Trump administration's actions:

Rep. Sylvia Garcia ✓
@RepSylviaGarcia

Folks are more outraged with @SpeakerPelosi ripping up the speech in half than with the fact that Trump has ripped families apart at the border. #SOTU2020

He's ripped babies from their parents' arms and put them in cages.

That should outrage EVERYONE!
twitter.com/thehill/status...

The Hill ✓ @thehill

Speaker Pelosi rips up President Trump's #StateoftheUnion address. #SOTU #SOTU2020 hill.cm/1PToaBc

♡ 2,673 5:42 AM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 1,273 people are talking about this

The White House's official account, meanwhile, accused Pelosi of ripping up a list of touching moments from the speech, including recognition of a surviving Tuskegee Airman:

Pelosi shared a picture of herself trying unsuccessfully to shake hands with Trump at the start of the speech:

Nancy Pelosi ✓
@SpeakerPelosi

Democrats will never stop extending the hand of friendship to get the job done #ForThePeople. We will work to find common ground where we can, but will stand our ground where we cannot. #SOTU

♡ 51.7K 4:08 AM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 36.4K people are talking about this

Fred Guttenberg, who lost his 14-year-old daughter in the 2018 Parkland, Fla., school shooting, attended the speech as a guest of Pelosi. He was escorted out of the gallery when he started shouting after Trump attacked states for passing stricter gun laws and promised to never give an inch on the Second Amendment. As the hashtag #ImWithFred trended, Guttenberg apologized for his behavior:

Fred Guttenberg  @fred_guttenberg · 59m

(1,2) Tonight was a rough night. I disrupted the State Of The Union and was detained because I let my emotions get the best of me. I simply want to be able to deal with the reality of gun violence and not have to listen to the lies about the 2A as happened tonight.

Fred Guttenberg

@fred_guttenberg

(2,2) That said, I should not have yelled out. I am thankful for the overwhelming support that I am receiving. However, I do owe my family and friends an apology. I have tried to conduct myself with dignity throughout this process and I will do better as I pursue gun safety.

♡ 4,708 5:51 AM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 1,237 people are talking about this

From an Army veteran at the scene:

Will Goodwin
@Will_P_Goodwin

I sat one seat apart from @fred\_guttenberg at #SOTU tonight.

When POTUS started lying about gun violence, he leaned over and said "I'm about to get kicked out but I can't stand this."

And then he stood up for his daughter Jamie and spoke truth to power. #ImWithFred

♡ 11.9K 4:36 AM - Feb 5, 2020 · Washington, DC

💬 3,361 people are talking about this

Once again, Democratic congresswomen wore white to the SOTU:

Rep. Nydia Velazquez ✓
@NydiaVelazquez

Proud to join women colleagues in wearing white to tonight's #SOTU to honor the suffragette movement and let @POTUS know we will not back down as we fight #ForthePeople! #WearWhite

♡ 114 11:26 PM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 37 people are talking about this

Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.) — the Somali-born member of "the Squad" who Trump said last year should "go back" to where she came from — sat near the back of the chamber. She explained why she did not boycott the speech, although she appeared to walk out toward the end:

Nevada Democrats backed out of their plans to use the failed Iowa caucuses app:

NV Dems
@nv Dems

NV Dems Statement on the Iowa Caucus:

Nevada State Democratic Party Chair William McCurdy II released the below statement regarding the Iowa caucus:

"NV Dems can confidently say that what happened in the Iowa caucus last night will not happen in Nevada on February 22nd. We will not be employing the same app or vendor used in the Iowa caucus. We had already developed a series of backups and redundant reporting systems, and are currently evaluating the best path forward."

 4,106 5:37 PM - Feb 4, 2020

 1,386 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert went live with his thoughts on the president's speech:

Seth Meyers had a few strong words for the Iowa caucuses:

And Hasan Minhaj interviewed Sanders about his campaign promises:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: State of the Union showcases Trump's total control of the GOP on eve of probable impeachment acquittal
Date: Wednesday, February 5, 2020 8:18:45 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

State of the Union showcases Trump's total control of the GOP on eve of probable impeachment acquittal

Boasts, Barbs and a ripped up speech: President Trump's 2020 State of the Union address

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA: President Trump did not mention impeachment during his State of the Union address on Tuesday night, but it loomed large on the eve of his foregone acquittal by the Senate. Many of the Republican jurors in the trial chanted “four more years” as he stepped to the podium, and they interrupted him 128 times for applause during a 77-minute speech.

Not a single Republican in the House broke ranks to vote for either article of impeachment seven weeks ago. Every Republican senator has now announced that they will vote this afternoon against convicting the president, except for Mitt Romney, who has not revealed his intentions either way.

Rep. Jeff Van Drew (R-N.J.), who quit the Democratic Party in December after opposing impeachment, stood on the GOP side of the center aisle last night and sought Trump's attention to get a handshake. Trump held a rally last Wednesday in Van Drew's district — which he carried in 2016 — to ensure the party-switcher will fend off a GOP primary challenge to hold the seat.

Trump has never been more popular than he is right now among Republicans, at the elite and grass-roots levels. A Gallup poll released yesterday put Trump's approval rating at 49 percent, the highest point of his presidency so far. One big reason: His approval among Republicans rose by six points since early January to 94 percent. That's three points higher than his previous personal best.

At the Republican caucuses in Iowa on Monday night, Trump received 97.1 percent of the vote. Former Massachusetts governor Bill Weld and former Illinois congressman Joe Walsh have campaigned hard against Trump, and both were in Des Moines this weekend, but they were greeted by small crowds and little appetite among Republicans to break with the president who staged a hostile takeover of the party four years ago after finishing second in the Iowa caucuses.

Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) arrives for Trump's State of the Union address. (Leah Millis/Pool/Reuters)

-- Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) announced on Tuesday that she will vote to acquit Trump on both articles of impeachment passed by the House. “I believe that the president has learned from this case,” she told CBS News’s Norah O’Donnell. “The president has been impeached. That’s a pretty big lesson. ... I believe that he will be much more cautious in the future.” Other Republicans – including Rob Portman (Ohio), Joni Ernst (Iowa) Shelley Moore Capito (W.V.) – have used variations of the talking point that Trump has learned his lesson.

But there is no evidence that Trump has been chastened. There have been no suggestions that he feels any contrition at all for the alleged scheme to coerce Ukraine to announce an investigation of Joe Biden by freezing military assistance and withholding a White House meeting.

Trump was even asked directly about Collins’s claim that he learned a lesson during a two-hour, off-the-record lunch with television anchors to preview the speech. The president replied that he has done nothing wrong. “It was a perfect call,” said Trump, repeating a mantra he’s used for months.

The Washington Post didn’t attend the lunch, but several participants described it to Josh Dawsey and Phil Rucker: “Trump expressed frustration with former national security adviser John Bolton, who the president said had turned on him. Trump also mocked Bolton by saying that he always wanted to be called ‘ambassador,’ even internally at the White House, and that his ambassadorship to the United Nations in the mid-2000s was a recess appointment.

“Trump also said he wanted to block Bolton’s forthcoming book from being published, according to two people familiar with knowledge of the lunch. The White House has only said that the book has classified information and that Bolton needs to make changes to the book. Bolton is said to allege that Trump tied aid to Ukraine to politically motivated investigations of his opponents, and people familiar with the project say it is unflattering to the president. The president told the anchors that Bolton could have written the book once Trump left office but that doing it while Trump is still in office ‘is not right.’”

---

Content from Partnership for America’s Health Care Future

American families can’t afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there's "no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases."

Rep. Debbie Lesko (R-Ariz.) holds up a school choice logo on the Republican side of the aisle during the State of the Union address. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

-- Getting acquitted is not the same thing as being exonerated, but Trump will probably portray it as just that during his looming victory lap. After all, he said last year that Bob Mueller's report represented “complete and total exoneration,” even though the former special counsel went out of his way to say that it was not. He even detailed 10 cases of possible obstruction of justice.

-- Trump’s personal lawyer Rudy Giuliani even told NPR yesterday that the president should continue pushing for a Biden investigation once he’s acquitted. “Absolutely, 100%,” Giuliani said. “I would have no problem with him doing it. In fact, I’d have a problem with him not doing it.”

-- Opposing impeachment has been a fundraising gold mine for Republicans. “Donation pages for WinRed — the GOP’s online fundraising tool — that included the word ‘impeach’ or ‘impeachment’ raised 300 percent more than pages that did not,” per Politico. “Rep. Lee Zeldin (R-N.Y.), who himself has been catapulted from the back benches of Congress to Trump’s Twitter feed through his role defending the president during impeachment, compared the uptick in energy and fundraising dollars to the bitter confirmation fight over Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh in 2018.”

-- Dozens of prominent Republican surrogates who traveled to Iowa on Monday as a show of force for Trump at the GOP caucuses wore MAGA-style hats that said "Keep Iowa Great" on their chartered flight home:

(Tim Murtaugh/Trump campaign)

-- There are daily reminders of the extent to which Trump now dominates Republican politics, even though he did not even join the party until 2009. For example, Trump repeatedly humiliated Jeff Sessions, culminating with his termination, after the then-attorney general recused himself from overseeing the Justice Department's probe of Russian connections with the Trump campaign in 2016. Sessions is now running in a crowded GOP primary to wrest back the Alabama Senate seat he gave up so he could join the administration. Lacking the president's support, Sessions launched a new campaign commercial yesterday to highlight that he was the first senator to endorse Trump in 2016. "While the others were hiding under their desks, ... I knew he was the one to make America great again," Sessions says to the camera, as he dons his four-year-old MAGA hat. "And I'll keep fighting for President Trump and his agenda."

Rush Limbaugh awarded Presidential Medal of Freedom

-- Trump made no effort to unify the nation at the end of the third presidential impeachment trial in American history. Instead, he used his third State of the Union to demonstrate anew that his reelection strategy for 2020 is to follow the same base-first playbook that worked in 2016: Divide and conquer.

He took at least three digs at former president Barack Obama, including his handling of the economy, Cuba and immigration. “If we hadn’t reversed the failed economic policies of the previous administration, the world would not now be witnessing this great economic success,” Trump said.

Trump awarding the Presidential Medal of Freedom to a surprised Rush Limbaugh during the speech was also emblematic of this. Limbaugh, who said earlier this week that he’s been diagnosed with lung cancer, has contributed mightily to the polarization. He’s a divisive figure who has been accused over the years of making racist and misogynistic comments on his nationally syndicated radio show. For what it’s worth, like Trump, Limbaugh spent several years pushing the totally discredited conspiracy theory that Obama was not born in the United States and has never apologized.

“Rush Limbaugh: Thank you for your decades of tireless devotion to our country,” Trump said in his State of the Union. “Rush, in recognition of all that you have done for our nation [and] the millions of people a day that you speak to and inspire, ... I am proud to announce tonight that you will be receiving our country’s highest civilian honor, the Presidential Medal of Freedom.”

“Oh, no,” an unknown Democrat yelled from their side of the chamber when Trump announced the award. “Thank you, Rush,” an unknown Republican yelled from their side.

-- While Trump extended no olive branches, he threw plenty of other red meat to his base. He promised to fight to protect prayer in public schools, advocated restrictions on abortion rights and pledged to protect the right to bear arms, which he said is “under siege all across our country.”

-- The president also offered an implicit reminder that he’s pushed a party that once proudly and unabashedly championed free markets in the direction of protectionism. Trump boasted last night about replacing the North American Free Trade Agreement with the new U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement. “Unfair trade is perhaps the single biggest reason that I decided to run for president,” he said. “Many politicians came and went, pledging to change or replace NAFTA, ... and then absolutely nothing happened. But unlike so many who came before me, I keep my promises.”

Pat Toomey of Pennsylvania was the only Republican senator who voted against ratifying the USMCA last month because of principled conservative objections that it makes trade less free. Other Republicans grumbled privately about the deal’s flaws, and its concessions to organized labor, but they backed the deal anyway.

-- Trump is talented at the transactional elements of party politics. During his speech, Trump singled out for praise several Republican senators who have defended him during the trial: He endorsed John Barrasso’s highway bill, Thom Tillis’s proposal to allow people to sue sanctuary cities, Chuck Grassley’s efforts to reduce prescription drug prices and Tim Scott’s work on economic opportunity zones “as part of our great Republican tax cuts.” Trump also praised Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell for confirming 187 of his judicial nominees. “Thank you, Mitch,” he said, “and we have many in the pipeline.”

Democrats didn't hide their disdain for Trump's State of the Union address

-- But the president has always defined himself politically as much by whom he's against as what's he's for. Last night, he attacked Pennsylvania's Democratic governor for vetoing a school voucher program opposed by teachers unions. He ripped the city of New York and the state of California for not fully cooperating with Immigration and Customs Enforcement officers. He slammed the 132 Democrats who have endorsed Medicare-for-all and accused them of wanting to give taxpayer-funded health care to undocumented immigrants, to which House Speaker Nancy Pelosi mouthed "not true." Trump declared: "To those watching at home tonight, I want you to know: We will never let socialism destroy American health care."

-- What people will remember from last night is that neither Trump nor Pelosi and Democratic leaders tried to hide their mutual disdain for one another. After Trump appeared to snub Pelosi by not shaking her outstretched hand at the start of the speech, the speaker of the House ripped up a printout of his speech into four separate piles as he concluded. Asked why she tore up the speech, Pelosi told reporters: “It was the courteous thing to do, considering the alternative.”

The seven House impeachment managers sat together. Rank-and-file Democrats like Lois Frankel from Florida approached Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) to get selfies before Trump’s arrival. This is Trump’s final State of the Union address before voters get to render their own verdict on his tenure.

Trump’s 2020 State of the Union, fact checked | The Fact Checker

HOW IT'S PLAYING:

-- The Fact Checker team flags 31 false or misleading statements by the president. The annual speech was “once again chock-full of stretched facts and dubious figures,” Glenn Kessler, Sal Rizzo and Sarah Cahlan report. “Many of these claims have been fact-checked repeatedly, yet the president persists in using them.”

-- “Trump claimed the U.S. economy is ‘roaring’ and ‘the best it has ever been.’ ... The broad consensus among economists is that the U.S. economy is doing well, but these are not unprecedented times,” Heather Long reports. “In a number of ways, the current economy is the best the nation has seen since the late 1990s.”

-- Aaron Blake’s four takeaways: 1. Impeachment bad blood spills over. 2. A (repeatedly) overstated economic case. 3. Running against Barack Obama. 4. The Rush Limbaugh moment was obviously designed to elicit a reaction.

-- More team coverage:

- David Nakamura: “Trump paints strong economy as vindication as he tries to move past impeachment.”
- Rachael Bade: “Democrats use State of the Union rebuttal to pivot from impeachment.”
- Mike DeBonis: “Pelosi shreds Trump’s speech, capping a tumultuous year in Washington.”
- Robin Givhan: “Congressional Democrats wore their white-hot fury to the State of the Union.”
- Ashley Parker: “With chants, walkouts and a ripped-up speech, bitter partisanship dominates...”
- Avi Selk: “The cheers, glares and ‘Oh no!’ ... showed just how bitterly divided this Congress is.”
- Philip Bump: “Amid reelection bid, Trump’s State of the Union address goes full reality show. Leveraging the presidency for his political benefit gets more subtle.”

- Amber Phillips and Kristina Orrego annotated a transcript of the address.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Buttigieg says his campaign 'has taken its place at the front of this race'

2020 WATCH:

-- Pete Buttigieg and Bernie Sanders took the lead after partial results were released from the marred Iowa caucuses. Toluse Olorunnipa, Annie Linskey and Chelsea Janes report: “According to the early results, which Iowa Democratic Party Chairman Troy Price said represented 62 percent of the state’s precincts, Buttigieg was leading with 26.9 percent of the state’s delegates, followed by Sanders with 25.1 percent. Sanders won some bragging rights with a popular-vote lead, with 28,220 to Buttigieg’s 27,090. Elizabeth Warren and [Joe Biden] were in third and fourth place with 18.3 and 15.6 percent of the delegates, respectively — disappointing results for candidates who have sought to push the idea that they are most electable. They ranked in the same positions in the popular vote.

“The full results remained delayed Tuesday after a complex caucus process plagued by technical difficulties in its reporting

system that began Monday night and continued with no clear timeline for a resolution. The Iowa Democratic Party said Tuesday that it was continuing to try to verify the results, collecting boxes of presidential preference cards and pushing precincts to report their results as quickly as possible. ... Buttigieg's voice seemed to crack Tuesday as he acknowledged the unprecedented nature of his success. ...

“While Sanders came out on top in the popular vote, the overall turnout figures — comparable to 2016’s but far below the record numbers that launched Barack Obama’s candidacy in 2008 — indicated that his pledge to energize an army of young and first-time voters had not been fulfilled. ... The muddled results served to persuade lower-tier candidates to stay in the race, making the Democrats’ challenge to select a standard-bearer all the more difficult. ... [Amy] Klobuchar was in fifth place in Iowa, according to the partial results, with 12.6 percent of the state’s delegates. Entrepreneur Andrew Yang trailed behind with 1.1 percent, and businessman Tom Steyer had 0.3 percent.” Klobuchar told supporters at a campaign stop in Concord, N.H.: “I’m someone that thrives in chaos. You want a steady hand in chaos, right?”

-- Iowa Democrats kept their caucusing app secret to prevent hacks. Instead, they got confusion and chaos. Isaac Stanley-Becker and Michael Scherer report: “Some explanations for the meltdown began to emerge — including the fact that many precinct organizers had not been able to adequately test the app designed for reporting results to party headquarters. But questions also remained about why the state party chose Shadow, a Democratic-aligned startup, for such a high-stakes moment. The app had been rolled out for testing in mid-January, just weeks before the caucuses. The delay was intentional, according to a state party official ...

"Iowa Democrats waited to introduce the software to avoid giving potential hackers time to penetrate it, the official said, adding that the party chose to keep the name of the vendor secret on the advice of national cybersecurity consultants. In the end, the problem on caucus night was not a hack. Nor could it be explained alone by difficulty in downloading the software. It was a more basic coding error that caused the problems. When caucus leaders started successfully reporting data through the app, a separate system also developed by Shadow collated the information but spit out only partial results, according to a person familiar with the events."

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "We feel really terrible about that," said Gerard Niemira, CEO of the political technology company Shadow, which developed the failed Iowa caucuses app. (Bloomberg News)

-- The caucus mess – and an emboldened Trump – are fueling Democratic anxiety. Matt Viser reports: "The Democratic five-alarm fire has begun. Around the country on Tuesday, Democrats found themselves baffled by the circumstances engulfing their party — even one that is known for, and sometimes takes pride in, its tendency to overreact with worry. 'This is just one sad week,' said former senator Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.). 'While I am having these very dark, sad feelings about the Senate GOP and a whitewash, here comes this mess in Iowa,' Boxer said, referring to the impeachment trial. 'This is a wake-up call. We're going to be tested.' ... Democrats were concerned that turnout for the caucuses, which party officials just weeks ago predicted would hit record levels due to voter enthusiasm to take on Trump, apparently fell short of expectations, potentially suggesting a lack of enthusiasm for the candidates. ... The combination of the muddled result, a botched process that forced the Iowa Democratic chairman to apologize late Tuesday, and the low participation levels was demoralizing to many in the party.”

-- The results emboldened Mike Bloomberg, who didn't compete in Iowa. “Bloomberg authorized his advisers Tuesday morning to double television spending for his own presidential campaign,” Paul Schwartzman and Michael Scherer report. “The campaign has also been authorized to hire more staff, said a person familiar with the strategy. Bloomberg told a noontime crowd [in Detroit] Tuesday that he was sleeping on a plane last night, woke up and asked an aide what had happened in the Iowa caucuses. He said the aide answered, ‘Nothing.’ ‘I still can’t figure out what happened,’ Bloomberg said to laughter. ‘More than any other candidate, we have the momentum.’”

-- Facing a cash crunch, Biden’s campaign tried to reassure jittery donors on a conference call that the former vice president can still win Nevada and South Carolina. (CNBC)

-- Trump and son-in-law Jared Kushner saw their campaign’s Super Bowl ad as a way of making inroads with black voters. From the Times: “Several senior Trump aides expressed skepticism of Mr. Kushner’s belief that broad numbers of black voters, whose views of the president are overwhelmingly negative, are persuadable. ... Mr. Trump himself was a motivating factor for turning out African-American Democrats in the 2018 midterm elections. Voter participation among black people in 2018 grew from the 2014 midterms, according to data from the Pew Research Center. Despite those numbers and the skepticism from colleagues, Mr. Kushner has been advising Mr. Trump that black voters can be converted into supporters if they are simply educated on his policies. Mr. Trump's biggest challenge, Mr. Kushner has told people, is a 'knowledge gap' on many of the president's accomplishments, particularly on the issue of criminal justice reform, which Mr. Kushner has spearheaded."

-- Kweisi Mfume won the Democratic primary in the special election to replace the late congressman Elijah Cummings, defeating the revered lawmaker's widow in Baltimore. Mfume is considered likely to easily reclaim the deep-blue seat he held more than 20 years ago. (Jenna Portnoy)

-- An increasing number of Republicans are acknowledging they need to begin addressing climate change and offering solutions to have any hope of retaking the House. Steven Mufson reports: "In poll after poll, large numbers of young and suburban Republican voters are registering their desire for climate action and say the issue is a priority. And their concern about climate change is spreading to older GOP supporters, too. ... The GOP is still hammering out details, but some critics say the new Republican approach to climate change looks a lot like the old one. In addition to trees, senior Republicans are said to be considering tax breaks for research, curbs on plastic waste and big federally funded infrastructure projects in the name of adaptation or resilience. The already well-worn buzzword 'innovation' will be their rallying cry, and natural gas, despite its carbon emissions, will be embraced."

Fear of the coronavirus turns Chinese cities into ghost towns

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- The overall death toll of the coronavirus has reached 492. Chinese authorities reported total confirmed cases now top 24,000. More than 3,000 are in critical condition. (Shibani Mahtani, Anna Fifield, Derek Hawkins and Siobhán O’Grady report in our live blog.)

-- Hong Kong leader Carrie Lam instituted a mandatory 14-day quarantine for visitors arriving from China, bowing to increasingly strident demands from striking health workers on the island. Mahtani reports: “Separately, the Hong Kong government will also shut cruise terminals in the city. On Wednesday morning, a cruise ship docked in Hong Kong — initially bound for Taiwan but turned away — with several suspected cases of infections among crew on board. Lam described the measure on Wednesday as 'very strict' and said her government believes there would be a 'substantial drop' in cross-boundary travel. Implementing such a move is politically sensitive for Hong Kong, which likely needs Beijing's approval for such a measure despite having its own immigration system."

-- Some 530 Americans stuck in the Wuhan area were evacuated after extended delays that appear to be linked to the political frictions between Beijing and Washington. Fifield reports: "Some had been in the airport for 48 hours waiting for information, with speculation that flight authorizations had been delayed by Chinese authorities. ... For many of the hundreds of Americans at the airport, the evacuation had been a frustrating experience, compounded by the fact that the U.S. government had evacuated its consulate in Wuhan immediately after the city at the center of the deadly coronavirus outbreak went into lockdown. ... Those difficulties have been compounded, some Americans in the city say, by a feeling that their government has deserted them. 'We're like refugees here,' said one woman from New Jersey who was visiting family in Wuhan for the Lunar New Year holiday when she got trapped in the city. ... Furthermore, [Americans] described scenes of chaos at the airport, with no officials there to help them and not even a sign indicating where to gather. This was in contrast to the Russian evacuation, where consular officials had set up an information desk with a Russian flag and had provided buses to bring Russian citizens through the checkpoints into the airport."

-- Ten aboard a cruise ship anchored in Japanese waters tested positive for the virus. The roughly 3,700 passengers and crew aboard the ship will be quarantined for two weeks. (Simon Denyer)

-- The FDA approved a new diagnostic test to check people for

the virus. The emergency authorization allows public health labs across the country to use the test. The move will speed up testing that, until now, had all taken place at the CDC's headquarters in Atlanta. (Hawkins)

-- The U.S. oil industry is already suffering from the coronavirus's effects. From the NYT: "Just a few weeks after the outbreak of the virus, daily Chinese oil demand is already down 20 percent because of dwindling air travel, road transportation and manufacturing. Since China consumes 13 of every 100 barrels of oil the world produces, every oil company is being hit to some extent."

-- House Democrats urged the Trump administration to seek emergency funding for the outbreak. In a letter Tuesday, House Appropriations Chairwoman Nita M. Lowey (D-N.Y.) and Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-Conn.) say it's clear that "further resources will be necessary to support an aggressive and comprehensive government-wide response to the 2019 novel Coronavirus, both domestically and internationally." (Erica Werner)

-- Have you seen or experienced any racism, xenophobia or other forms of discrimination connected to the coronavirus epidemic? If you have, The Post wants to hear your story. Fill out this form, and one of our colleagues may follow up with you.

-- The U.S. is pushing an effort to develop a 5G alternative to Chinese communications giant Huawei. From the Journal: "The plan would build on efforts by some U.S. telecom and technology companies to agree on common engineering standards that would allow 5G software developers to run code on machines that come from nearly any hardware manufacturer. That would reduce, if not eliminate, reliance on Huawei equipment. Companies including Microsoft Corp., Dell Inc. and AT&T Inc. are part of the effort, White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow said.”

-- Gen. Kenneth McKenzie, head of the U.S. Central Command, met with officials in Baghdad amid tensions over the strike that killed Maj. Gen. Qasem Soleimani. Missy Ryan reports: “On a day-long unannounced trip, McKenzie also visited U.S. troops at al-Asad military base, one of the targets of a ballistic missile attack that Iran launched in retaliation ... McKenzie, who is concluding a tour of countries across the Middle East, told reporters after his visit that he discussed the future of the foreign military presence and other matters with Iraqi Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi, President Barham Salih and parliamentary speaker Mohammed al-Halbousi. ... McKenzie declined to comment on whether he and Iraqi leaders discussed a Pentagon proposal to place Patriot missile batteries in Iraq in the wake of the recent missile attack. McKenzie said the destruction at Asad base underscored what he believed was Iran’s intent to inflict fatal damage on U.S. personnel.”

-- At least 138 Salvadoran deported by the U.S. were killed back home, a rights group said. Mary Beth Sheridan reports: “A majority of the Salvadorans — 109 — were sent home during the Obama administration, according to Alison Leal Parker, managing director of the U.S. program of Human Rights Watch. But under President Trump, the New York-based organization notes, it has become more difficult to receive asylum. Human Rights Watch predicts the situation ‘will only worsen.’ ... Human Rights Watch also identified 70 cases of deportees who disappeared following their return or suffered sexual violence, torture or other abuse, often by gangs.”

-- Nigeria was “blindsided” by Trump’s travel ban, its top diplomat claims. From the NYT: “Geoffrey Onyeama, Nigeria’s foreign minister, said that his government was already working to address security concerns that Trump administration officials said had prompted the decision, announced last week, to reject visas for Nigerians seeking to immigrate to the United States. ... He said that included efforts to directly share personal data — including immigrants’ criminal histories, stolen passport information and suspected links to terrorism — with the United States and Interpol member countries.”

A flag for Deutsche Bank flies outside the German bank's New York offices on Wall Street. (Mark Lennihan/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- “If Trump cheated on his taxes, Deutsche Bank would probably know. If his net worth is measured in millions, not billions, Deutsche Bank would probably know. If he secretly got money from the Kremlin, Deutsche Bank would probably know,” Times reporter David Enrich writes in an excerpt of his new book, “Dark Towers,” which focuses on the president’s relationship with the bank. “If they ever become public, the bank’s Trump records could serve as a Rosetta Stone to decode the president’s finances. Executives told me that the bank has, or at one point had, portions of Trump’s personal federal income tax returns going back to around 2011. ... The bank has documents detailing the finances and operations of his businesses. And it has records about internal deliberations over whether and how to do business with Trump — a paper trail that most likely reflects some bank employees’ concerns about potentially suspicious transactions that they detected in the family’s accounts. One reason all these files could be so illuminating is that the bank’s relationship with Trump extended well beyond making simple loans. Deutsche Bank managed tens of millions of dollars of Trump’s personal assets. The bank also furnished him with other services that have not previously been reported: providing sophisticated financial instruments that shielded him from risks and outside scrutiny, and making introductions to wealthy Russians who were interested in investing in Western real estate.”

-- Lawyers for Trump and for adult-film star Stormy Daniels faced off in court over her libel lawsuit against the president. The fight

is over a 2018 Trump tweet in which he accused her of being a “total con job” for claiming that she was threatened by an unknown man at a casino parking lot in 2011. Daniels claims the tweet was an act of intimidation aimed at hushing up her claim that she and Trump had sexual encounters while he was married to Melania Trump and she was pregnant with their son. (Politico)

-- The trial for the former CIA employee accused of leaking thousands of agency documents to WikiLeaks began in New York. Shane Harris reports: “Joshua Schulte, 31, is charged with disclosing classified information to WikiLeaks after allegedly stealing it from a secretive CIA unit where he worked. In more than 8,000 pages of material published in 2017 — known as the Vault 7 leaks — WikiLeaks showed how the CIA breaks into smartphones and Internet-connected devices, including televisions. The disclosure ‘was the single biggest leak of classified national defense information in the history of the CIA,’ Assistant U.S. Attorney David Denton told jurors. Denton said that as a result of the disclosure, CIA operations had ‘come to a halt,’ U.S. intelligence officers serving overseas had been exposed and American adversaries were able to turn cyberweapons developed by the CIA against the United States.”

-- The ban on flavored e-cigarette pods takes effect tomorrow. Sales of fruit-, dessert- and mint-flavored pods will be outlawed. Menthol and tobacco flavors will escape the prohibition. (Laurie McGinley)

-- Civil rights leader Bayard Rustin was pardoned decades after his arrest for having consensual sex with men in California. Samantha Schmidt reports: “The ‘morals charge,’ which was often used to target gay people in those years, remained a stain on his record and nearly sidelined him from the movement he helped create. On Wednesday, California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) issued a posthumous pardon for Rustin. Inspired by a call from lawmakers to pardon the civil rights leader, Newsom also announced a clemency initiative that would help clear the records of other people who faced discriminatory charges for consensual activity with people of the same sex. ... The new clemency initiative will focus on identifying eligible candidates for pardons and will accept applications on behalf of people who meet the criteria for consideration, the governor's office said."

-- Macy's is closing 125 stores – a fifth of its total -- and laying off 2,000 employees as it struggles to win over costumers who are increasingly buying online. Abha Bhattarai reports: "The department store chain is also shutting down its headquarters in Cincinnati and will move operations to its main headquarters in New York, the company announced ...Macy's, which had $25 billion in sales in 2018, is the country's largest department store chain. ... Analysts said the closures, set to take place over three years, would hurt some of the country's most vulnerable shopping malls, and lead to a ripple effect of declining foot traffic and revenue for nearby stores. ... Macy's did not specify which locations it plans to close but said closures would be in 'lower tier' malls."

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Rep. Billy Long (R-Mo.) suggested Pelosi auction the ripped-up pieces of her copy of Trump's speech:

A Texas congresswoman drew a comparison between the reaction to the ripped-up speech and the Trump administration's actions:

Rep. Sylvia Garcia ✓
@RepSylviaGarcia

Folks are more outraged with @SpeakerPelosi ripping up the speech in half than with the fact that Trump has ripped families apart at the border. #SOTU2020

He's ripped babies from their parents' arms and put them in cages.

That should outrage EVERYONE!
twitter.com/thehill/status...

The Hill ✓ @thehill

Speaker Pelosi rips up President Trump's #StateoftheUnion address. #SOTU #SOTU2020 hill.cm/1PToaBc

♥ 2,673 5:42 AM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 1,273 people are talking about this

The White House's official account, meanwhile, accused Pelosi of ripping up a list of touching moments from the speech, including recognition of a surviving Tuskegee Airman:

Pelosi shared a picture of herself trying unsuccessfully to shake hands with Trump at the start of the speech:

Nancy Pelosi ✓
@SpeakerPelosi

Democrats will never stop extending the hand of friendship to get the job done #ForThePeople. We will work to find common ground where we can, but will stand our ground where we cannot. #SOTU

♡ 51.7K 4:08 AM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 36.4K people are talking about this

Fred Guttenberg, who lost his 14-year-old daughter in the 2018 Parkland, Fla., school shooting, attended the speech as a guest of Pelosi. He was escorted out of the gallery when he started shouting after Trump attacked states for passing stricter gun laws and promised to never give an inch on the Second Amendment. As the hashtag #ImWithFred trended, Guttenberg apologized for his behavior:

Fred Guttenberg  @fred_guttenberg · 59m

(1,2) Tonight was a rough night. I disrupted the State Of The Union and was detained because I let my emotions get the best of me. I simply want to be able to deal with the reality of gun violence and not have to listen to the lies about the 2A as happened tonight.

Fred Guttenberg

@fred_guttenberg

(2,2) That said, I should not have yelled out. I am thankful for the overwhelming support that I am receiving. However, I do owe my family and friends an apology. I have tried to conduct myself with dignity throughout this process and I will do better as I pursue gun safety.

♡ 4,708 5:51 AM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 1,237 people are talking about this

From an Army veteran at the scene:

Will Goodwin
@Will_P_Goodwin

I sat one seat apart from @fred\_guttenberg at #SOTU tonight.

When POTUS started lying about gun violence, he leaned over and said "I'm about to get kicked out but I can't stand this."

And then he stood up for his daughter Jamie and spoke truth to power. #ImWithFred

♡ 11.9K 4:36 AM - Feb 5, 2020 · Washington, DC

💬 3,361 people are talking about this

Once again, Democratic congresswomen wore white to the SOTU:

Rep. Nydia Velazquez ✓
@NydiaVelazquez

Proud to join women colleagues in wearing white to tonight's #SOTU to honor the suffragette movement and let @POTUS know we will not back down as we fight #ForthePeople! #WearWhite

♡ 114 11:26 PM - Feb 4, 2020

💬 37 people are talking about this

Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.) — the Somali-born member of "the Squad" who Trump said last year should "go back" to where she came from — sat near the back of the chamber. She explained why she did not boycott the speech, although she appeared to walk out toward the end:

Nevada Democrats backed out of their plans to use the failed Iowa caucuses app:

NV Dems
@nvdems

NV Dems Statement on the Iowa Caucus:

Nevada State Democratic Party Chair William McCurdy II released the below statement regarding the Iowa caucus:

"NV Dems can confidently say that what happened in the Iowa caucus last night will not happen in Nevada on February 22nd. We will not be employing the same app or vendor used in the Iowa caucus. We had already developed a series of backups and redundant reporting systems, and are currently evaluating the best path forward."

 4,106  5:37 PM - Feb 4, 2020

 1,386 people are talking about this

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert went live with his thoughts on the president's speech:

Seth Meyers had a few strong words for the Iowa caucuses:

And Hasan Minhaj interviewed Sanders about his campaign promises:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: A reluctant Romney tried to give Trump an out on impeachment. The White House wouldn't take it.
Date: Thursday, February 6, 2020 10:24:35 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

A reluctant Romney tried to give Trump an out on impeachment. The White House wouldn't take it.

Sen. Mitt Romney's full speech announcing he will vote to convict Trump

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaró

THE BIG IDEA: Mitt Romney wants you to know that voting to remove President Trump from office on an abuse-of-power charge was “the most difficult decision” he’s ever made.

As he became the first senator in U.S. history to vote for removing a president of his own party from office, even though he knew it wouldn’t change the outcome, the GOP’s 2012 standard-bearer emphasized his reluctance to do so and highlighted the off-ramps he sought.

Romney revealed that he contacted the White House counsel’s office, through a fellow senator, asking if it would provide sworn affidavits from officials such as former national security adviser John Bolton or acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, but it was to no avail.

“I sought to hear testimony from John Bolton not only because I believed he could add context to the charges, but also because I hoped that what he said might raise reasonable doubt and thus remove from me the awful obligation to vote for impeachment,” Romney said in an emotional speech on the Senate floor.

The 1975 graduate of Harvard Law School said he also hoped Trump’s defense team would persuade him to acquit the president during the trial. He found their arguments that a president can only be impeached for violating a specific statute “absurd on its face.”

“I was hoping beyond hope that the defense would present evidence, exculpatory evidence, that would remove from me the responsibility to vote where my conscience was telling me I had to vote,” Romney told The Washington Post’s Dan Balz. “When Nancy Pelosi indicated we’re now going to pursue impeachment, my heart sank in dread.”

Ultimately, Romney chose to split the difference – as Maine Rep. Jared Golden, a freshman Democrat from a conservative district, did in December – by voting for the article of impeachment on abuse of power but against the article related to obstruction of Congress. His reasoning was that “the House did not take the time to go to the courts” and exhaust all the legal possibilities for compelling testimony and documents from administration officials with firsthand knowledge who could speak to Trump’s role in the alleged effort to coerce Ukraine’s government to announce an investigation of Joe Biden in exchange for delivering military aid.

But Romney emphasized that he does not approve of the White House’s stonewalling, and his comments underscored the extent to which Trump and his administration did not cooperate with congressional efforts to conduct oversight of the executive branch.

-- Without tipping off GOP leadership or the White House in advance, Romney explained his agonizing deliberations in half a dozen media interviews that were embargoed until he announced his decision on the Senate floor. “There has not been a morning since this process began that I've slept beyond 4 a.m.,” Romney told Chris Wallace on Fox News. “I have looked at the testimony in detail. I have attempted to get every piece of information I could.”

-- The senator told the Deseret News that some nights he would lean toward acquittal and, on others, he felt less certain. He took 54 pages of detailed notes in a legal pad. He recalled heading back to his office after the trial wrapped up each night to debrief his staff, sometimes for hours, on what he learned. He told the oldest paper in the state he represents that he spoke with his wife, Ann, every night and discussed his final decision with their five sons and daughters-in-law.

Romney said he he’s “never experienced ... as much angst” about a decision. He received texts, emails and calls from people he “hadn’t heard from in a long time” urging him to support the president. “And let me tell you, I’d love to stand with the team,” Romney told the Deseret News’s Matthew Brown. “But if you stand with the team in contravention of your conscience and the duty you’ve made before God, I would have to endure the censure of my own conscience, as well as the disdain of history.”

President Trump holds up the print edition of today's Washington Post at the National Prayer Breakfast in Washington. (Evan Vucci/AP)

-- Romney expressed “regret” for making decisions throughout his career that have been influenced “in some cases by political benefit,” but he said this time is different because he swore an oath to render impartial justice. “I don’t want to be the skunk at the garden party, and I don’t want the disdain of Republicans across the country,” he told the New York Times’s Mark Leibovich. “I have found, in business in particular but also in politics, that when something is in your personal best interests, the ability of the mind to rationalize that that’s the right thing is really quite extraordinary. I have seen it in others, and I have seen it in myself.”

-- A devout Mormon, Romney told the Atlantic that he closely consulted Scripture and the Federalist Papers. He said he read Federalist No. 65 “multiple, multiple times” when trying to assess whether what the president did warranted removal from office.

Throughout the trial, he told McKay Coppins, he was guided by his father's favorite verse of Mormon scripture: "Search diligently, pray always, and be believing, and all things shall work together for your good."

"I have gone through a process of very thorough analysis and searching, and I have prayed through this process," Romney said.

"But I don't pretend that God told me what to do."

-- At the National Prayer Breakfast this morning, Trump seemed to take a dig at Romney over the references to his Mormon faith, as well as Speaker Nancy Pelosi over her recent comments that she prays for the president regularly. "I don't like people who use their faith as justification for doing what they know is wrong," he told a bipartisan crowd of 3,000 people in Washington. "Nor do I like people who say, 'I pray for you,' when they know that that's not so. So many people have been hurt, and we can't let that go on." Trump added: "They have done everything possible to destroy us and, by so doing, very badly hurt our nation."

"He then delivered a 20-minute address that sounded like a campaign speech, spending a good portion of it decrying the impeachment process, which he said was led by some 'very dishonest and corrupt people,'" Michelle Boorstein and Sarah Pulliam Bailey report.

-- In another interview yesterday, Romney was adamant that his decision had nothing to do with the harsh attacks that Trump has leveled at him since he refused to endorse his candidacy in 2016.

"I don't hate the president," Romney told the Salt Lake Tribune's

Thomas Burr. “So he shoots a tweet at me now and then. Really? You think I would endure the consequence of the vote I'm going to take for, you know, trying to get even with a tweet? I mean, is there anybody that petty?”

Romney pointed out that score cards show he’s voted with Trump 80 percent of the time over the past year. He said he agrees with many of his policies. He even predicted that Trump will get reelected because of the strong economy in 2020, even if he won’t vote for him. “I can give you a 100% commitment that 72-year-old Mitt Romney is never, ever going to run for president,” Romney told the Tribune. “I did that twice. I'm not doing it again.”

---

Content from Partnership for America’s Health Care Future

American families can’t afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there’s “no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases.”

---

Pro-Trump media reacts to Romney's vote against Trump

-- Trump's allies on Fox News reacted exactly as Romney predicted. Laura Ingraham threatened to move to Utah to run against Romney in 2024 if he seeks a second term: “He’s the ultimate selfish, preening, self-centered politician.”

Lou Dobbs said Romney will be “associated with Judas, Brutus [and] Benedict Arnold forever.”

Tucker Carlson refused to say Romney’s name: “That senator shall go unnamed on this show on the grounds that silly moral preening should not be rewarded with the publicity that it’s designed to garner.”

Sean Hannity gave Romney a new nickname: “Pierre Defecto,” a play on his Twitter lurker alias, “Pierre Delecto,” which became public last October. (Allyson Chiu rounds up more vitriol here.)

The lead item on Breitbart this morning was titled “Mitt Romney stabbed American workers in the back long before he stabbed

Trump."

-- “Whether the thirst for vengeance against Romney is sustained will hinge on Trump,” Josh Dawsey reports. “Party and campaign officials said privately that they hoped Trump wouldn’t obsess over the lone defection and move on from impeachment, basking in his acquittal instead of engaging in a days-long tiff with Romney. The president has firm control of the party and could dictate a strategy that is more aggressive, advisers said, if his pique at Romney flares. ... Trump allies could ... push operatives or donors not to support or work for him. White House officials could block policy or budget priorities that Romney wants, according to aides ... A senior Trump campaign official said the longer the Romney news cycle drags on, the worse it is for the president, because it focuses attention on his impeachment.”

-- Senate Republicans appear to have little appetite for retaliation. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (Ky.) pronounced himself “surprised and disappointed” with Romney’s vote. When asked how long Romney will be in the doghouse, though, he told reporters: “We don’t have any doghouses here. The most important vote is the next vote.”

Senate acquits Trump on both articles of impeachment

-- Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio) says many of his Republican colleagues believe privately what Romney said publicly about Trump's conduct. "For the stay-in-office-at-all-cost representatives and senators, fear is the motivator," Brown writes in an op-ed for today's Times. "They are afraid that Mr. Trump might give them a nickname like 'Low Energy Jeb' and 'Lyin' Ted,' or that he might tweet about their disloyalty. Or — worst of all — that he might come to their state to campaign against them in the Republican primary. They worry: 'Will the hosts on Fox attack me?' 'Will the mouthpieces on talk radio go after me?' 'Will the Twitter trolls turn their followers against me?' ...

"There's an old Russian proverb: The tallest blade of grass is the first cut by the scythe. In private, many of my colleagues agree that the president is reckless and unfit. They admit his lies. And they acknowledge what he did was wrong. They know this president has done things Richard Nixon never did. And they know that more damning evidence is likely to come out. ... I have asked some of them, 'If the Senate votes to acquit, what will you do to keep this president from getting worse?' Their responses have been shrugs and sheepish looks."

-- In the end, every Senate Democrat from a red state voted to convict. In some ways, Alabama's Doug Jones, who voted for both articles, was politically braver than Romney since Jones is on the ballot this November in a state Trump carried by 28 points in 2016. Romney doesn't face voters again until 2024.

The White House thought Sen. Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.) was its best chance at getting a bipartisan acquittal. Manchin tried to drum up support for a censure resolution, but neither side would go for it. "Despite the false claim that a president can do no wrong, the president is not entitled to act with blatant disregard for an equal branch of government or use the superpower status of the United States to condition our support of democracy and our allies on any political favor," Manchin said.

-- Commentary from the opinion page:

- Marie Yovanovitch: "These are turbulent times. But we will persist and prevail."
- The seven House impeachment managers: "Trump won't be vindicated. The Senate won't be, either."
- George Conway: "I believe the president, and in the president."
- The Post's Editorial Board: "It's not over. Congress

- must continue to hold Trump accountable.”
- Dana Milbank: “Romney’s act of bravery changed nothing and changed everything.”
  - Karen Tumulty: “What Romney learned from his father.”
  - Helaine Olen: “Mitt Romney and John McCain both defied Trump. That’s not a coincidence.”
  - Jennifer Rubin: “Romney shows us all is not lost.”
  - Max Boot: “Was impeachment worth it?”
  - Sen. Chris Coons (D-Del.): “If my father could help a criminal, I can pray for Donald Trump.”
  - John Podesta: “The country needs the House’s oversight now more than ever.”
  - Marc Thiessen: “Democrats threw everything they had at Trump. He’s still standing.”
  - Alexandra Petri: “The important thing about impeachment is we all had fun and learned a lesson.”

WHAT'S NEXT?

-- Democrats find themselves at a crossroads after the president's acquittal, torn between continuing investigations and a desire to concentrate on health care and other pocketbook issues. Rachael Bade and Paul Kane explore the tension: "One of the first decisions they face is whether to subpoena [Bolton] ... On Wednesday, House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) suggested that it was a matter of time before the chamber would call Bolton. 'When you have a lawless president, you have to bring that to the fore. You have to spotlight that,' Nadler told reporters. ... But other Democrats cautioned that no decision has been made about Bolton and expressed a desire to move on. 'We also have to have our own idea and vision. We can't win the next election just being against Trump,' said Sen. Robert Menendez (D-N.J.). 'We have to be for something.'"

Lead House impeachment manager Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) told MSNBC's Rachel Maddow last night that, after the Senate voted not to hear witnesses, his team approach Bolton's lawyer and asked if he would submit an affidavit under oath describing what he observed of the president's conduct toward Ukraine. Bolton refused, Schiff said.

-- Moments after Trump's acquittal, Republican Sens. Chuck Grassley (Iowa) and Ron Johnson (Wis.) announced they would launch a probe of Hunter Biden. Colby Itkowitz reports: "In a letter sent Wednesday to the head of the Secret Service, the senators write that they are 'reviewing potential conflicts of interest posed by the business activities of Hunter Biden and his associates during the Obama administration, particularly with respect to his business activities in Ukraine and China.' Specifically, they are seeking from the Secret Service any instances when Hunter Biden traveled with protective security detail during the time his father ... was vice president, as well as when he flew on government planes.”

-- The Justice Department said it has begun reviewing a 10-month-old allegation by the House Intelligence Committee that Trump ally Erik Prince, the brother of Education Secretary Betsy DeVos, repeatedly misled lawmakers during the panel’s investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election. Politico reports on a Feb. 4 letter to Schiff, the committee chairman, from Assistant Attorney General Stephen Boyd. “We apologize for the delay in responding to your letter,” Boyd wrote. “... The Department acknowledges receipt of your letter and will refer your request for investigation to the proper investigative agency or component for review.” In his referral, sent last April, Schiff highlighted six instances in which information revealed about Prince in Bob Mueller’s report diverged from Prince’s testimony before the committee in November 2017. “He homed in on Prince’s meeting, in the Seychelles in January 2017, with a Russian banker who is reportedly close to President Vladimir Putin of Russia, an encounter Prince later told congressional officials took place purely by chance,” per Kyle Cheney.

-- FBI Director Chris Wray defended the bureau during a House Judiciary Committee hearing in which Republicans repeatedly accused the law enforcement agency of violating the civil rights of former Trump campaign adviser Carter Page in 2016. This was Wray’s first congressional testimony since the DOJ’s inspector general released his highly critical December report on the FBI’s omissions and errors in Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court applications authorizing wiretaps on Page. “In the wake of that report, Wray announced a number of changes to FBI policy and procedures, including more training for FBI personnel about how to ensure accuracy when applying for such warrants,” Devlin Barrett reports. “A court-appointed adviser, David Kris, has said Wray’s proposed changes do not go far enough to ensure that the highly secretive court, which handles national security cases involving espionage or terrorism, does not violate Americans’ civil rights. In his testimony, the FBI director tried to draw a distinction between the specifics of Page’s case and what he said was the broader need for the law which keeps the United States safe.”

During the hearing, Democrats unsuccessfully pressed Wray to tell them whether Attorney General Bill Barr had asked him to investigate Joe Biden or John Bolton. “I have assured the Congress, and I can assure the Congress today, that the FBI will only open an investigation based on the facts and the law and proper predication,” Wray said in response to Nadler, the committee chairman. Pressed to be more specific, Wray added, “No one has asked me to open an investigation based on anything other than the facts, the law and proper predication.”

-- Any new investigations of the 2020 candidates must be cleared by top DOJ officials, per the NYT: “Barr issued new restrictions on Wednesday over the opening of politically sensitive investigations, an effort meant to avoid upending the presidential election as the F.B.I. inadvertently did in 2016 when its campaign inquiries shaped the outcome of the race. ... The memo said that the F.B.I. and all other divisions under the department’s purview must get Mr. Barr’s approval before investigating any of the 2020 presidential candidates.”

-- Pentagon officials were stunned by the White House decision to block aid to Ukraine, new emails show. From CNN: “Days before the July 2019 call between [Trump] and his Ukrainian counterpart, US officials were still working to expedite the delivery of Javelin anti-tank missiles to the country, according to emails and other internal documents. ... The decision reverberated across the government for weeks. Officials grew so concerned over the deferrals by the Office of Management and Budget that they noted the aid was at ‘serious risk,’ and questioned if the move was illegal.”

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Biden calls Iowa caucus results a 'gut punch'

2020 WATCH:

-- Greetings from Concord, N.H., where I will be camped out through Tuesday's primary.

-- Bernie Sanders announced this morning he raised $25 million in January, making it his best fundraising month so far. More than 648,000 people contributed — including 219,000 new donors. The campaign announced plans to spend more than $5.5 million in television and digital commercials across eight new states that vote on Super Tuesday, and it will increase its advertising in California and Texas, which also vote March 3. (Sean Sullivan and Michelle Ye Hee Lee)

-- Joe Biden and Elizabeth Warren acknowledged their growing difficulties following disappointing results in Iowa, and both are recalibrating to improve their chances here. Cleve Wootson, Matt

Viser, Michael Scherer and Annie Linskey capture the state of play: After admitting that his fourth-place finish was a “gut punch,” Biden attacked Sanders and Pete Buttigieg. “I am not going to sugarcoat it,” he told a standing-room-only crowd at a VFW hall in Somersworth, N.H.

Warren pulled nearly $500,000 worth of TV ads scheduled to run in Nevada and South Carolina after her third-place Iowa finish failed to provide the fundraising bump on which her campaign had counted. “I just always want to be careful about how we spend our money,” Warren told reporters after a rally in Keene, N.H. (Linskey has more details here on the Warren clawback.)

With 97 percent of the Iowa precincts finally reporting, Buttigieg held 26.2 percent of the state delegate equivalents, followed closely by Sanders with 26.1 percent. Sanders maintained a narrow popular vote lead. Warren had 18.2 percent of the delegates, and Biden trailed with 15.8 percent. Amy Klobuchar garnered 12.2 percent.

Shake-up watch: Biden’s Iowa state director, Jake Braun, is not expected to continue as a full-time campaign employee. Braun, who served as national deputy field director for Barack Obama’s 2008 campaign, had been hired in May to oversee Biden’s operation in Iowa. The campaign also will not retain Adrienne Bogen, who was overseeing the Iowa field operations.

Warren’s campaign manager accused Buttigieg’s strategist of using Twitter to signal to a supportive super PAC where to spend money: Buttigieg adviser Michael Halle tweeted that messages about the former mayor's military experience work "especially" well in Nevada, "where it's critical they see this on the air through the caucus." Warren manager Roger Lau replied, "Did you mean to tweet out this instruction to your super PAC?" The super PAC in question, VoteVets, issued a statement saying its officials "independently decide" their ad strategy.

Biden criticized Buttigieg for trying to link him to the dysfunction in Washington, where he's been a fixture since 1973: "Mayor Pete ... calls me part of the old, failed Washington," Biden said. "Is he really saying the Obama-Biden administration was a failure? Pete, just say it out loud." Buttigieg responded on MSNBC that Obama deserves more credit than Biden. "If you look at what President Obama was able to do in two terms, it was extraordinary," Buttigieg said. "But I think the bulk of the credit for the achievements of the Obama administration belong with President Obama."

-- This back-and-forth foreshadows a heated debate tomorrow night in New Hampshire. It will air on ABC. Seven candidates have qualified: Biden, Buttigieg, Sanders, Warren, Klobuchar, Tom Steyer and Andrew Yang are all in. That's everyone from last month's debate, plus Yang. The four remaining contenders — Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (Hawaii), Sen. Michael Bennet (Colo.), Mike Bloomberg and former Massachusetts governor Deval Patrick — have one day to meet the criteria. Gabbard is the closest. (Kevin Schaul)

-- In precincts around Iowa, Buttigieg benefited from being people's second choice. "Tallying losses and gains across the field, Buttigieg gained the most support as a second pick, followed by Klobuchar," Philip Bump reports, based on a review of the data that's been released. “Yang saw the biggest erosion of support — and didn’t gain much support as a second pick.” (Columnists Stephen Stromberg and E.J. Dionne Jr. both have takes on how Buttigieg broke through in the Hawkeye State.)

-- Mike Bloomberg, “in an interview in Detroit, said he does not name his Democratic rivals during his speeches because that would only help them,” Paul Schwartzman reports. “‘Why give them the courtesy?’ he asked. ‘I’m running against Donald Trump. To the extent these people are running against me, my polls are going up while theirs are going down.’”

An aircraft chartered by the State Department to evacuate Americans from the Chinese city of Wuhan arrives at Marine Corps Air Station Miramar in San Diego. (Denis Poroy/Reuters)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Americans evacuated from Wuhan face 14 days of quarantine in hotels on military bases in California as authorities wait to see whether anyone has coronavirus. Siobhán O'Grady, Lenny Bernstein, Anna Fifield and William Wan report: "The airport was a 16-hour overnight vigil of lines and paperwork and stress and delays, of squawking children and the worried well, all trying to board the same two planes. Ningxi Xu's name was on the list. But until the converted cargo plane was rising into the sky over Wuhan, China, she couldn't be certain she would be one of the lucky Americans to escape the center of the coronavirus outbreak and make it back home. ... One flight delivered 178 people to Travis Air Force Base outside

Sacramento. The other landed there, then went on to Marine Corps Air Station Miramar in San Diego, where about 170 people exited. Two more flights are leaving Wuhan and arriving in the United States on Thursday. An additional 195 people who arrived Jan. 28 are quarantined at March Air Reserve Base in Riverside, Calif. ...

“A patient in Wisconsin tested positive for it, bringing the total in the United States to 12 as the global toll grew to 563 people dead and more than 27,000 ill in the health crisis spreading out of China. The extended confinement is unwelcome, passengers said, but people seem to be taking it in stride. ‘Most people were just glad to be getting out of there,’ Xu said from her hotel room at Miramar. ... Each flight appeared to have at least one sick person aboard. On [one] plane, officials said, a small child with a fever was isolated in the rear of the craft in an area blocked off with plastic sheeting. Xu said she saw a woman in a similar place on her flight. The woman did not appear to be aboard for the final leg to Miramar. ... This is the first quarantine ordered by federal health officials in more than 50 years, and the CDC is having to improvise. Each family has a private room but is being told to keep some distance — at least six feet — from other families. The children will be told not to share toys.”

-- A U.S. plane will evacuate a “few dozen” Canadians in Wuhan. More than 300 Canadians have asked for government assistance to leave the city, but the flight chartered by the Canadian government has room for only 211 of them. (Amanda Coletta)

-- Several lawmakers confronted Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar and other officials about the Trump administration’s response to the virus. Erica Werner and Yasmeen

Abutaleb report: “In a closed-door briefing with senators, the two Democratic senators from Hawaii were particularly irate. They complained their state health officials had not been notified in advance that their airport would be one of 11 to receive and quarantine U.S. citizens arriving from China’s Hubei province, the epicenter of the virus. Sen. Brian Schatz (D-Hawaii) challenged Azar about the communication breakdown and Azar grew defensive, although he later apologized to Schatz for the tenor of their conversation. ... The lack of coordination was acute in Hawaii. Both of the state’s Democratic senators, Schatz and Mazie Hirono, unloaded on the administration, with Schatz describing the administration’s handling of the virus as ‘keystone cops.’”

-- A 30-hour-old infant became the youngest person diagnosed with coronavirus. The baby was born in Wuhan to a mother who’d tested positive for the disease before she gave birth. It’s unclear how the disease was transmitted – in the womb, or after birth. (BBC)

-- Africa has 1.2 billion people, but only six labs there can test for coronavirus. Danielle Paquette, Max Bearak and Lenny Bernstein report: “No cases have been confirmed so far in any of Africa’s 54 countries, but the risk of an outbreak is high, World Health Organization leaders say. Africa is home to 1.2 billion people, including an estimated 1 million Chinese nationals ... Flights from the Asian power bring at least 1,000 travelers to the continent each day. ... To address that concern, medical teams from 15 African nations are convening in Dakar on Thursday for an emergency workshop on the first layer of readiness: diagnosing the new virus. WHO officials said 24 countries, encompassing most of Africa’s population, will receive the material needed to conduct the tests by the end of the week.”

-- China’s conspicuously absent leader reemerged amid the coronavirus crisis — but only for an audience with a friendly autocrat. Anna Fifield reports: “On Wednesday night, a full week after his last appearance in the state media, Xi [Jinping] reemerged. Not to console quarantined patients in Wuhan or thank the tireless doctors treating them, but for an audience with Cambodia’s autocratic leader, Hun Sen. Xi’s usually ubiquitous face had been pictured in state media only one time in the previous 12 days: a week before, when the director-general of the World Health Organization came to Beijing and praised the Chinese government’s response to the crisis in ways more often associated with party propagandists. ... Although the state media said he was ‘personally directing’ and ‘personally planning’ the response to the crisis, there were no photos of a man who has styled himself as the ‘People’s Leader’ actually mingling with hoi polloi to fight what is being framed as a ‘People’s War.’ He was not in scrubs and a face mask meeting the health-care workers on the front lines. It was Premier Li Keqiang who got that assignment. And there is no footage of him inspecting the pop-up hospitals erected in Wuhan. Vice Premier Sun Chunlan was dispatched for that task. This vacuum was filled — as vacuums are wont to be — with baseless rumors that Xi had experienced a stroke or been overthrown.”

-- The world’s oceans are speeding up, and, yes, this is another mega-scale consequence of climate change. Chris Mooney reports: “Three-quarters of the world’s ocean waters have sped up their pace in recent decades, scientists reported Wednesday, a massive development that was not expected to occur until climate warming became much more advanced. The change is being driven by faster winds, which are adding more energy to the surface of the ocean. That, in turn, produces faster currents and an acceleration of ocean circulation. ... The new research found that 76 percent of the global ocean is speeding up, when the top 2,000 meters of the ocean are taken into account. The increase in speed is most intense in tropical oceans and especially the vast Pacific. Scientists aren't certain of all the consequences of this speedup yet. But they may include impacts in key regions along the eastern coasts of continents, where several currents have intensified. The result in some cases has been damaging ocean hotspots that have upended marine life."

-- Astronaut Christina Koch has returned to Earth after a record-breaking stay on the International Space Station. Koch spent 328 days in space, the longest single spaceflight by a woman. (Christian Davenport)

-- At least 38 people were killed, including rescue workers, in two avalanches in Turkey. Kareem Fahim reports: "Five people were killed in the first avalanche, which blanketed a highway in Bahcesaray, a mountainous district in eastern Van province at about 5 p.m. Tuesday, trapping vehicles including a minibus, local media reported. Dozens of rescue workers searched the area for additional survivors until about 1 a.m., then resumed the search on Wednesday morning in near-blizzard conditions. At about noon Wednesday, a second avalanche trapped the rescue teams, killing 33 people, the disaster agency said."

-- A plane skidded off the runway and broke apart at Istanbul's

Sabiha International Airport, killing three and injuring scores of other passengers. (Fahim)

Trump greets Venezuela's Guaidó at White House

-- Trump met with Venezuelan opposition leader Juan Guaidó for the first time, but his interest in the country's presidential crisis has waned. Karen DeYoung, Anthony Faiola and Anne Gearan report: "But the fact that the meeting took place, following Guaidó's appearance as Trump's guest at Tuesday night's State of the Union address, may have been enough to serve their shared goal of demonstrating administration support for Guaidó's interim government. ... It has now been more than a year since Trump promised that he would 'use the full weight of United States economic and diplomatic power' to drive [Nicolás] Maduro from office. Despite U.S. efforts to starve his government of resources with sanctions and the recognition of Guaidó by about 60 countries, Maduro remains. Trump's public interest in the issue has waned, and he has mentioned the young opposition figure less and less frequently as the months have gone by. The president's apparent ambivalence has hurt Guaidó's credibility at home, where public dissatisfaction with the anti-Maduro opposition is rising."

-- The surprises at Trump's State of the Union were carefully planned. Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey report: "Late Tuesday afternoon, as President Trump's team readied for an evening of dramatic reveals and made-for-TV twists at his State of the Union address, they hit a momentary snafu. Aides involved in the planning told the House sergeant at arms that they wanted to have a surprise guest enter the chamber in the middle of the president's speech. He resisted, citing protocol and security concerns. But the White House held firm: If the sergeant at arms wouldn't open the door, then first lady Melania Trump would get up and do it herself. ... In the end, Trump got the reality-show moment he wanted. As he introduced Amy Williams — a military spouse from Fort Bragg, N.C., whose husband was serving on his fourth deployment to the Middle East — and her two young children, he paused to build suspense for the big reveal. ... The moment was one of several theatrical flourishes orchestrated by the president and his aides that brought a reality-TV or game-show feel to the usually staid annual address to Congress, thrilling Trump's supporters and angering critics who said he was cheapening the event."

Trump took great pains to keep Guaidó's attendance a secret until the last minute, "despite Guaidó's clear interest in recent weeks for a public sign of support from Trump. ... One senior administration official said the president did not want to meet Guaidó in Florida over the weekend, partially to maintain the surprise and add to the drama of the moment. Administration officials also asked the Venezuelans not to tell anyone that Guaidó would be attending the speech. ...

“Another beneficiary of Trump’s stagecraft was Janiyah Davis, the fourth-grader. She and her mother were invited to the House chamber to represent thousands of children on waiting lists for taxpayer-supported private school scholarships. ... [Trump offered] help to Janiyah, who was stuck on the waiting list. ... ‘I can proudly announce tonight that an Opportunity Scholarship has become available, and it’s going to you,’ [he said]. ... As it turns out, the scholarship had ‘become available’ thanks to Trump’s own education secretary. On Wednesday, a spokeswoman for [Betsy DeVos] said that Janiyah’s tuition was being paid for by DeVos personally.”

-- Despite the flare, the speech received poor TV ratings. From the Times: “Roughly 37.2 million Americans tuned in for Mr. Trump’s speech, Nielsen said on Wednesday, the smallest live-TV audience for a presidential address to Congress since Barack Obama’s valedictory State of the Union in 2016. The viewership on Tuesday was a 20 percent decline from Mr. Trump’s State of the Union last year, and well below the audience for his speeches in 2017 and 2018.”

U.S. Border Patrol agents Joe Curran and Daniel Hernandez inspect border fence construction in the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument in Lukeville, Ariz. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- Long-term maintenance for Trump's border wall could cost billions, but the administration won't say how much it expects to spend in the coming decades on the structure. Nick Miroff reports: "Department of Homeland Security officials and Trump supporters have mostly waved off such concerns, describing the project as 'enduring infrastructure' that will last far into the future. But lawmakers and congressional staffers from both parties said they lack information about the projected maintenance costs."

-- The Trump administration will no longer allow New York residents to enroll in Global Entry or other Trusted Traveler programs, citing new “sanctuary” policies that limit federal access to state driver’s license data, acting homeland security secretary Chad Wolf announced last night on Fox News. Miroff reports: “Wolf told host Tucker Carlson that he sent a letter to the New York State Department of Motor Vehicles informing the agency that the state’s new limits on information-sharing with U.S. Customs and Border Protection made it impossible for federal authorities to process travelers’ applications for Global Entry and other programs. The measure appears to be one of the Trump administration’s most significant retaliatory moves against ‘sanctuary cities’ and other jurisdictions that limit local cooperation with federal immigration authorities. ... An official with the Department of Homeland Security ... said ... the move would affect the approximately 150,000 New York state residents who apply to the traveler programs each year. Travelers currently enrolled in Global Entry and programs such as SENTRI and NEXUS would not lose their status, but they will not be able to renew.”

-- A 32-year-old U.S. citizen died while in Border Patrol custody in Texas. Officials didn’t identify the man but alleged that he was a suspect in a human smuggling incident. (AP)

-- The White House threatened to veto a $4.7 billion earthquake aid package for Puerto Rico ahead of a House vote scheduled for Friday. Erica Werner reports: “The aid package was unlikely to pass the Senate in its current form. In its veto message, the White House Office of Management and Budget called the House legislation ‘misguided.’”

-- Veterans Affairs Secretary Robert Wilkie defended his abrupt

firing of his deputy secretary, calling the dismissal a “simple business decision.” Lisa Rein reports: “Wilkie’s firing of James Byrne on Monday has unsettled the veterans community inside and outside VA, and Wilkie provided few answers to why he dismissed a popular leader. ‘There’s nothing personal’ about Byrne’s firing, Wilkie said at a previously scheduled appearance at the National Press Club, ‘but we have so many things going on. ... It’s been my goal to ensure that everyone who works for us performs to the utmost.’ He tied Byrne’s firing to an effort across the Department of Veterans Affairs to hold poor performers accountable.”

-- In West Palm Beach, Fla., Trump’s name has disappeared from the skyline. David Fahrenthold reports: “Trump’s name adorned the tops of two tall condo buildings in West Palm Beach for more than two decades — but now it’s gone and won’t be returning, the Palm Beach Post reported Tuesday. The buildings once bore large signs reading ‘Trump Plaza,’ although they haven’t been affiliated with Trump’s company since 1991. The signs came down in late 2017 for cleaning, and the Palm Beach Post reported that residents voted 178-20 to not put them back. ... The condos in West Palm Beach will still be called ‘Trump Plaza,’ and there will still be ground-level signs bearing Trump’s name. The question of whether to remove those will be left to a later vote, the Palm Beach Post reported.”

-- Bernie Madoff, king of the Ponzi scheme, is seeking a medical release from prison. Justin George reports: “Madoff said he is in the end stages of kidney disease, must use a wheelchair and is in need of round-the-clock help. At 81, he is too old for a transplant, and he has been moved to palliative care within the Federal Medical Center prison in Butner, N.C. He is asking for compassionate release so he can die at home. ... Madoff expressed remorse for his massive fraud, in which he swindled investors out of billions, and said his dying wish is to salvage relationships with his grandchildren. He has served 11 years of the 150-year sentence he was given in 2009, after pleading guilty to 11 criminal counts, including fraud and money laundering.”

-- The last accuser to testify against Harvey Weinstein in his rape and sexual assault case took the witness stand to speak of an alleged attack at the Montage hotel in Beverly Hills in

2013. Shayna Jacobs reports: “Lauren Marie Young’s testimony will be the last the jury will hear from an accuser in Weinstein’s criminal trial in New York State Supreme Court in Manhattan, which nears its end after a month. Young, a 30-year-old model and actress who lives in Pennsylvania, said she, Weinstein and a Mexican model she knew, Claudia Salinas, were in a business meeting in the hotel lounge on Feb. 19, 2013, when Weinstein said they needed to move to his suite so he could get ready for an awards event he was attending with Quentin Tarantino. Young said she resisted every physical advance that was made on her after Salinas left her alone with Weinstein in the bathroom of the suite. She testified that she had been backed into a corner when Weinstein, already naked, pulled her dress down and started masturbating while groping her. ... Up until the February encounter, Weinstein and Salinas talked with Young about the possibility of her appearing on ‘America’s Next Top Model.’”

-- A drug-sniffing dog picked up a scent inside a sedan during a routine traffic stop in Florida, which led officials to two bags marked “Bag Full of Drugs.” You can probably guess where this is going. Tom Jackman reports: Inside the bags, police found “75 grams (2.6 ounces) of methamphetamine, more than a kilogram (2.2 pounds) of the date-rape drug GHB, 3.6 grams (0.12 ounces) of fentanyl, plus ecstasy, cocaine and assorted paraphernalia. The driver and passenger were both booked on multiple felony drug charges, according to the Florida Highway Patrol, with a hand from [deputy K-9] Prince of the Santa Rosa County Sheriff’s Office. ‘They don’t always make it that easy for us,’ Lt. W. Robert Cannon of the Florida Highway Patrol said. ‘If it weren’t for the fact that we’re talking about date rape drugs, fentanyl, which we all know can be deadly, cocaine and the other drugs, it would be humorous.’”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Social media was dominated by impassioned reactions to Romney's vote. Rick Gorka, Romney's traveling press secretary during the 2012 campaign and now a communications director at the Republican National Committee, lit into his old boss:

The RNC chairwoman, who is Romney's niece, was gentler:

A screenshot of a tweet from Ronna McDaniel (@GOPChairwoman). The tweet text reads: "This is not the first time I have disagreed with Mitt, and I imagine it will not be the last. The bottom line is President Trump did nothing wrong, and the Republican Party is more united than ever behind him. I, along with the @GOP, stand with President Trump." The tweet has 28.7K likes and was posted at 7:34 PM on Feb 5, 2020. Below the tweet, it says "16.2K people are talking about this".

Ronna McDaniel
@GOPChairwoman

This is not the first time I have disagreed with Mitt, and I imagine it will not be the last.

The bottom line is President Trump did nothing wrong, and the Republican Party is more united than ever behind him.

I, along with the @GOP, stand with President Trump.

28.7K 7:34 PM - Feb 5, 2020

16.2K people are talking about this

The president's son called for Romney to be expelled from the party:

A screenshot of a tweet from Donald Trump Jr. (@DonaldJTrumpjr). The tweet text reads: "Mitt Romney is forever bitter that he will never be POTUS. He was too weak to beat the Democrats then so he's joining them now. He's now officially a member of the resistance & should be expelled from the @GOP." The tweet has 89.9K likes and was posted at 7:32 PM on Feb 5, 2020. Below the tweet, it says "46.3K people are talking about this".

Donald Trump Jr.
@DonaldJTrumpjr

Mitt Romney is forever bitter that he will never be POTUS. He was too weak to beat the Democrats then so he's joining them now.

He's now officially a member of the resistance & should be expelled from the @GOP.

89.9K 7:32 PM - Feb 5, 2020

46.3K people are talking about this

Trump Sr. criticized Romney on Twitter after midnight:

The lead House manager celebrated Romney's decision:

Adam Schiff ✓
@RepAdamSchiff

Having proven Trump guilty, I asked if there was just one Republican Senator who would say “enough”

Who would stand up against this dangerously immoral president

Who would display moral courage

Who would do impartial justice as their oath required and convict

And there is. twitter.com/nytimes/status...

The New York Times ✓ @nytimes

Breaking News: "The case was made." Mitt Romney will vote to convict President Trump of abuse of power, the first Republican to support removing him from office in the impeachment trial. nyti.ms/31uKxgO

♥ 112K 7:29 PM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 31.4K people are talking about this

Former Republican senator Jeff Flake (Ariz.) praised Romney:

Jeff Flake ✓
@JeffFlake

I have long admired Mitt Romney, but never more than today. What an honorable man.

washingtonpost.com/politics/with-...

Romney to vote to convict Trump on charge of abus...

The Utah senator calls Trump's offenses "egregious" and says the president defense did not persuade him otherwise.

washingtonpost.com

♡ 67.8K 8:28 PM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 13.4K people are talking about this

Many Senate Democrats said they were deeply moved, including this lawmaker from Connecticut:

The president's embattled personal attorney celebrated:

After his acquittal, Trump recirculated this meme that suggests he'd love to be president for life:

Donald J. Trump ✓
@realDonaldTrump

♥ 349K 9:49 PM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 154K people are talking about this

McConnell's former chief of staff celebrated Trump's triumph:

Josh Holmes ✓
@Holmesjosh

Good morning, sunshine.

♡ 671 1:29 PM - Feb 6, 2020

💬 192 people are talking about this

Sen. Thom Tillis (R-N.C.), up for reelection, ripped up the articles of impeachment as a spoof of Pelosi ripping up the State of the Union:

 Thom Tillis
@ThomTillis

Two can play this game, @SpeakerPelosi. Glad to finally put impeachment in the rear view mirror so we can get back to work for the people of North Carolina.

 33.9K  10:05 PM - Feb 5, 2020

 15K people are talking about this

QUOTE OF THE DAY: “He shredded the truth, so I shredded his speech,” Pelosi told House Democrats at a closed-door meeting. (Politico)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert paid tribute to Romney:

Seth Meyers said this hasn't been a banner week for U.S. politics:

Samantha Bee delivered her own assessment of the state of our union:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: A reluctant Romney tried to give Trump an out on impeachment. The White House wouldn't take it.
Date: Thursday, February 6, 2020 10:25:15 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

A reluctant Romney tried to give Trump an out on impeachment. The White House wouldn't take it.

Sen. Mitt Romney's full speech announcing he will vote to convict Trump

BY JAMES HOHMANN

with Mariana Alfaró

THE BIG IDEA: Mitt Romney wants you to know that voting to remove President Trump from office on an abuse-of-power charge was “the most difficult decision” he’s ever made.

As he became the first senator in U.S. history to vote for removing a president of his own party from office, even though he knew it wouldn’t change the outcome, the GOP’s 2012 standard-bearer emphasized his reluctance to do so and highlighted the off-ramps he sought.

Romney revealed that he contacted the White House counsel’s office, through a fellow senator, asking if it would provide sworn affidavits from officials such as former national security adviser John Bolton or acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, but it was to no avail.

“I sought to hear testimony from John Bolton not only because I believed he could add context to the charges, but also because I hoped that what he said might raise reasonable doubt and thus remove from me the awful obligation to vote for impeachment,” Romney said in an emotional speech on the Senate floor.

The 1975 graduate of Harvard Law School said he also hoped Trump’s defense team would persuade him to acquit the president during the trial. He found their arguments that a president can only be impeached for violating a specific statute “absurd on its face.”

“I was hoping beyond hope that the defense would present evidence, exculpatory evidence, that would remove from me the responsibility to vote where my conscience was telling me I had to vote,” Romney told The Washington Post’s Dan Balz. “When Nancy Pelosi indicated we’re now going to pursue impeachment, my heart sank in dread.”

Ultimately, Romney chose to split the difference – as Maine Rep. Jared Golden, a freshman Democrat from a conservative district, did in December – by voting for the article of impeachment on abuse of power but against the article related to obstruction of Congress. His reasoning was that “the House did not take the time to go to the courts” and exhaust all the legal possibilities for compelling testimony and documents from administration officials with firsthand knowledge who could speak to Trump’s role in the alleged effort to coerce Ukraine’s government to announce an investigation of Joe Biden in exchange for delivering military aid.

But Romney emphasized that he does not approve of the White House’s stonewalling, and his comments underscored the extent to which Trump and his administration did not cooperate with congressional efforts to conduct oversight of the executive branch.

-- Without tipping off GOP leadership or the White House in advance, Romney explained his agonizing deliberations in half a dozen media interviews that were embargoed until he announced his decision on the Senate floor. “There has not been a morning since this process began that I've slept beyond 4 a.m.,” Romney told Chris Wallace on Fox News. “I have looked at the testimony in detail. I have attempted to get every piece of information I could.”

-- The senator told the Deseret News that some nights he would lean toward acquittal and, on others, he felt less certain. He took 54 pages of detailed notes in a legal pad. He recalled heading back to his office after the trial wrapped up each night to debrief his staff, sometimes for hours, on what he learned. He told the oldest paper in the state he represents that he spoke with his wife, Ann, every night and discussed his final decision with their five sons and daughters-in-law.

Romney said he he’s “never experienced ... as much angst” about a decision. He received texts, emails and calls from people he “hadn’t heard from in a long time” urging him to support the president. “And let me tell you, I’d love to stand with the team,” Romney told the Deseret News’s Matthew Brown. “But if you stand with the team in contravention of your conscience and the duty you’ve made before God, I would have to endure the censure of my own conscience, as well as the disdain of history.”

President Trump holds up the print edition of today's Washington Post at the National Prayer Breakfast in Washington. (Evan Vucci/AP)

-- Romney expressed “regret” for making decisions throughout his career that have been influenced “in some cases by political benefit,” but he said this time is different because he swore an oath to render impartial justice. “I don’t want to be the skunk at the garden party, and I don’t want the disdain of Republicans across the country,” he told the New York Times’s Mark Leibovich. “I have found, in business in particular but also in politics, that when something is in your personal best interests, the ability of the mind to rationalize that that’s the right thing is really quite extraordinary. I have seen it in others, and I have seen it in myself.”

-- A devout Mormon, Romney told the Atlantic that he closely consulted Scripture and the Federalist Papers. He said he read Federalist No. 65 “multiple, multiple times” when trying to assess whether what the president did warranted removal from office.

Throughout the trial, he told McKay Coppins, he was guided by his father's favorite verse of Mormon scripture: "Search diligently, pray always, and be believing, and all things shall work together for your good."

"I have gone through a process of very thorough analysis and searching, and I have prayed through this process," Romney said. "But I don't pretend that God told me what to do."

-- At the National Prayer Breakfast this morning, Trump seemed to take a dig at Romney over the references to his Mormon faith, as well as Speaker Nancy Pelosi over her recent comments that she prays for the president regularly. "I don't like people who use their faith as justification for doing what they know is wrong," he told a bipartisan crowd of 3,000 people in Washington. "Nor do I like people who say, 'I pray for you,' when they know that that's not so. So many people have been hurt, and we can't let that go on." Trump added: "They have done everything possible to destroy us and, by so doing, very badly hurt our nation."

"He then delivered a 20-minute address that sounded like a campaign speech, spending a good portion of it decrying the impeachment process, which he said was led by some 'very dishonest and corrupt people,'" Michelle Boorstein and Sarah Pulliam Bailey report.

-- In another interview yesterday, Romney was adamant that his decision had nothing to do with the harsh attacks that Trump has leveled at him since he refused to endorse his candidacy in 2016. "I don't hate the president," Romney told the Salt Lake Tribune's

Thomas Burr. “So he shoots a tweet at me now and then. Really? You think I would endure the consequence of the vote I'm going to take for, you know, trying to get even with a tweet? I mean, is there anybody that petty?”

Romney pointed out that score cards show he’s voted with Trump 80 percent of the time over the past year. He said he agrees with many of his policies. He even predicted that Trump will get reelected because of the strong economy in 2020, even if he won’t vote for him. “I can give you a 100% commitment that 72-year-old Mitt Romney is never, ever going to run for president,” Romney told the Tribune. “I did that twice. I'm not doing it again.”

---

Content from Partnership for America’s Health Care Future

American families can’t afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there’s “no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases.”

---

Pro-Trump media reacts to Romney's vote against Trump

-- Trump's allies on Fox News reacted exactly as Romney predicted. Laura Ingraham threatened to move to Utah to run against Romney in 2024 if he seeks a second term: "He's the ultimate selfish, preening, self-centered politician."

Lou Dobbs said Romney will be "associated with Judas, Brutus [and] Benedict Arnold forever."

Tucker Carlson refused to say Romney's name: "That senator shall go unnamed on this show on the grounds that silly moral preening should not be rewarded with the publicity that it's designed to garner."

Sean Hannity gave Romney a new nickname: "Pierre Defecto," a play on his Twitter lurker alias, "Pierre Delecto," which became public last October. (Allyson Chiu rounds up more vitriol here.)

The lead item on Breitbart this morning was titled "Mitt Romney stabbed American workers in the back long before he stabbed

Trump."

-- "Whether the thirst for vengeance against Romney is sustained will hinge on Trump," Josh Dawsey reports. "Party and campaign officials said privately that they hoped Trump wouldn't obsess over the lone defection and move on from impeachment, basking in his acquittal instead of engaging in a days-long tiff with Romney. The president has firm control of the party and could dictate a strategy that is more aggressive, advisers said, if his pique at Romney flares. ... Trump allies could ... push operatives or donors not to support or work for him. White House officials could block policy or budget priorities that Romney wants, according to aides ... A senior Trump campaign official said the longer the Romney news cycle drags on, the worse it is for the president, because it focuses attention on his impeachment."

-- Senate Republicans appear to have little appetite for retaliation. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (Ky.) pronounced himself "surprised and disappointed" with Romney's vote. When asked how long Romney will be in the doghouse, though, he told reporters: "We don't have any doghouses here. The most important vote is the next vote."

Senate acquits Trump on both articles of impeachment

-- Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio) says many of his Republican colleagues believe privately what Romney said publicly about Trump's conduct. "For the stay-in-office-at-all-cost representatives and senators, fear is the motivator," Brown writes in an op-ed for today's Times. "They are afraid that Mr. Trump might give them a nickname like 'Low Energy Jeb' and 'Lyin' Ted,' or that he might tweet about their disloyalty. Or — worst of all — that he might come to their state to campaign against them in the Republican primary. They worry: 'Will the hosts on Fox attack me?' 'Will the mouthpieces on talk radio go after me?' 'Will the Twitter trolls turn their followers against me?' ...

"There's an old Russian proverb: The tallest blade of grass is the first cut by the scythe. In private, many of my colleagues agree that the president is reckless and unfit. They admit his lies. And they acknowledge what he did was wrong. They know this president has done things Richard Nixon never did. And they know that more damning evidence is likely to come out. ... I have asked some of them, 'If the Senate votes to acquit, what will you do to keep this president from getting worse?' Their responses have been shrugs and sheepish looks."

-- In the end, every Senate Democrat from a red state voted to convict. In some ways, Alabama's Doug Jones, who voted for both articles, was politically braver than Romney since Jones is on the ballot this November in a state Trump carried by 28 points in 2016. Romney doesn't face voters again until 2024.

The White House thought Sen. Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.) was its best chance at getting a bipartisan acquittal. Manchin tried to drum up support for a censure resolution, but neither side would go for it. "Despite the false claim that a president can do no wrong, the president is not entitled to act with blatant disregard for an equal branch of government or use the superpower status of the United States to condition our support of democracy and our allies on any political favor," Manchin said.

-- Commentary from the opinion page:

- Marie Yovanovitch: "These are turbulent times. But we will persist and prevail."
- The seven House impeachment managers: "Trump won't be vindicated. The Senate won't be, either."
- George Conway: "I believe the president, and in the president."
- The Post's Editorial Board: "It's not over. Congress

- must continue to hold Trump accountable.”
- Dana Milbank: “Romney’s act of bravery changed nothing and changed everything.”
  - Karen Tumulty: “What Romney learned from his father.”
  - Helaine Olen: “Mitt Romney and John McCain both defied Trump. That’s not a coincidence.”
  - Jennifer Rubin: “Romney shows us all is not lost.”
  - Max Boot: “Was impeachment worth it?”
  - Sen. Chris Coons (D-Del.): “If my father could help a criminal, I can pray for Donald Trump.”
  - John Podesta: “The country needs the House’s oversight now more than ever.”
  - Marc Thiessen: “Democrats threw everything they had at Trump. He’s still standing.”
  - Alexandra Petri: “The important thing about impeachment is we all had fun and learned a lesson.”

WHAT'S NEXT?

-- Democrats find themselves at a crossroads after the president's acquittal, torn between continuing investigations and a desire to concentrate on health care and other pocketbook issues. Rachael Bade and Paul Kane explore the tension: "One of the first decisions they face is whether to subpoena [Bolton] ... On Wednesday, House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) suggested that it was a matter of time before the chamber would call Bolton. 'When you have a lawless president, you have to bring that to the fore. You have to spotlight that,' Nadler told reporters. ... But other Democrats cautioned that no decision has been made about Bolton and expressed a desire to move on. 'We also have to have our own idea and vision. We can't win the next election just being against Trump,' said Sen. Robert Menendez (D-N.J.). 'We have to be for something.'"

Lead House impeachment manager Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) told MSNBC's Rachel Maddow last night that, after the Senate voted not to hear witnesses, his team approach Bolton's lawyer and asked if he would submit an affidavit under oath describing what he observed of the president's conduct toward Ukraine. Bolton refused, Schiff said.

-- Moments after Trump's acquittal, Republican Sens. Chuck Grassley (Iowa) and Ron Johnson (Wis.) announced they would launch a probe of Hunter Biden. Colby Itkowitz reports: "In a letter sent Wednesday to the head of the Secret Service, the senators write that they are 'reviewing potential conflicts of interest posed by the business activities of Hunter Biden and his associates during the Obama administration, particularly with respect to his business activities in Ukraine and China.' Specifically, they are seeking from the Secret Service any instances when Hunter Biden traveled with protective security detail during the time his father ... was vice president, as well as when he flew on government planes.”

-- The Justice Department said it has begun reviewing a 10-month-old allegation by the House Intelligence Committee that Trump ally Erik Prince, the brother of Education Secretary Betsy DeVos, repeatedly misled lawmakers during the panel’s investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election. Politico reports on a Feb. 4 letter to Schiff, the committee chairman, from Assistant Attorney General Stephen Boyd. “We apologize for the delay in responding to your letter,” Boyd wrote. “... The Department acknowledges receipt of your letter and will refer your request for investigation to the proper investigative agency or component for review.” In his referral, sent last April, Schiff highlighted six instances in which information revealed about Prince in Bob Mueller’s report diverged from Prince’s testimony before the committee in November 2017. “He homed in on Prince’s meeting, in the Seychelles in January 2017, with a Russian banker who is reportedly close to President Vladimir Putin of Russia, an encounter Prince later told congressional officials took place purely by chance,” per Kyle Cheney.

-- FBI Director Chris Wray defended the bureau during a House Judiciary Committee hearing in which Republicans repeatedly accused the law enforcement agency of violating the civil rights of former Trump campaign adviser Carter Page in 2016. This was Wray’s first congressional testimony since the DOJ’s inspector general released his highly critical December report on the FBI’s omissions and errors in Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court applications

authorizing wiretaps on Page. “In the wake of that report, Wray announced a number of changes to FBI policy and procedures, including more training for FBI personnel about how to ensure accuracy when applying for such warrants,” Devlin Barrett reports. “A court-appointed adviser, David Kris, has said Wray’s proposed changes do not go far enough to ensure that the highly secretive court, which handles national security cases involving espionage or terrorism, does not violate Americans’ civil rights. In his testimony, the FBI director tried to draw a distinction between the specifics of Page’s case and what he said was the broader need for the law which keeps the United States safe.”

During the hearing, Democrats unsuccessfully pressed Wray to tell them whether Attorney General Bill Barr had asked him to investigate Joe Biden or John Bolton. “I have assured the Congress, and I can assure the Congress today, that the FBI will only open an investigation based on the facts and the law and proper predication,” Wray said in response to Nadler, the committee chairman. Pressed to be more specific, Wray added, “No one has asked me to open an investigation based on anything other than the facts, the law and proper predication.”

-- Any new investigations of the 2020 candidates must be cleared by top DOJ officials, per the NYT: “Barr issued new restrictions on Wednesday over the opening of politically sensitive investigations, an effort meant to avoid upending the presidential election as the F.B.I. inadvertently did in 2016 when its campaign inquiries shaped the outcome of the race. ... The memo said that the F.B.I. and all other divisions under the department’s purview must get Mr. Barr’s approval before investigating any of the 2020 presidential candidates.”

-- Pentagon officials were stunned by the White House decision to block aid to Ukraine, new emails show. From CNN: “Days before the July 2019 call between [Trump] and his Ukrainian counterpart, US officials were still working to expedite the delivery of Javelin anti-tank missiles to the country, according to emails and other internal documents. ... The decision reverberated across the government for weeks. Officials grew so concerned over the deferrals by the Office of Management and Budget that they noted the aid was at ‘serious risk,’ and questioned if the move was illegal.”

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Biden calls Iowa caucus results a 'gut punch'

2020 WATCH:

-- Greetings from Concord, N.H., where I will be camped out through Tuesday's primary.

-- Bernie Sanders announced this morning he raised $25 million in January, making it his best fundraising month so far. More than 648,000 people contributed — including 219,000 new donors. The campaign announced plans to spend more than $5.5 million in television and digital commercials across eight new states that vote on Super Tuesday, and it will increase its advertising in California and Texas, which also vote March 3. (Sean Sullivan and Michelle Ye Hee Lee)

-- Joe Biden and Elizabeth Warren acknowledged their growing difficulties following disappointing results in Iowa, and both are recalibrating to improve their chances here. Cleve Wootson, Matt

Viser, Michael Scherer and Annie Linskey capture the state of play: After admitting that his fourth-place finish was a “gut punch,” Biden attacked Sanders and Pete Buttigieg. “I am not going to sugarcoat it,” he told a standing-room-only crowd at a VFW hall in Somersworth, N.H.

Warren pulled nearly $500,000 worth of TV ads scheduled to run in Nevada and South Carolina after her third-place Iowa finish failed to provide the fundraising bump on which her campaign had counted. “I just always want to be careful about how we spend our money,” Warren told reporters after a rally in Keene, N.H. (Linskey has more details here on the Warren clawback.)

With 97 percent of the Iowa precincts finally reporting, Buttigieg held 26.2 percent of the state delegate equivalents, followed closely by Sanders with 26.1 percent. Sanders maintained a narrow popular vote lead. Warren had 18.2 percent of the delegates, and Biden trailed with 15.8 percent. Amy Klobuchar garnered 12.2 percent.

Shake-up watch: Biden’s Iowa state director, Jake Braun, is not expected to continue as a full-time campaign employee. Braun, who served as national deputy field director for Barack Obama’s 2008 campaign, had been hired in May to oversee Biden’s operation in Iowa. The campaign also will not retain Adrienne Bogen, who was overseeing the Iowa field operations.

Warren’s campaign manager accused Buttigieg’s strategist of using Twitter to signal to a supportive super PAC where to spend money: Buttigieg adviser Michael Halle tweeted that messages about the former mayor's military experience work "especially" well in Nevada, "where it's critical they see this on the air through the caucus." Warren manager Roger Lau replied, "Did you mean to tweet out this instruction to your super PAC?" The super PAC in question, VoteVets, issued a statement saying its officials "independently decide" their ad strategy.

Biden criticized Buttigieg for trying to link him to the dysfunction in Washington, where he's been a fixture since 1973: "Mayor Pete ... calls me part of the old, failed Washington," Biden said. "Is he really saying the Obama-Biden administration was a failure? Pete, just say it out loud." Buttigieg responded on MSNBC that Obama deserves more credit than Biden. "If you look at what President Obama was able to do in two terms, it was extraordinary," Buttigieg said. "But I think the bulk of the credit for the achievements of the Obama administration belong with President Obama."

-- This back-and-forth foreshadows a heated debate tomorrow night in New Hampshire. It will air on ABC. Seven candidates have qualified: Biden, Buttigieg, Sanders, Warren, Klobuchar, Tom Steyer and Andrew Yang are all in. That's everyone from last month's debate, plus Yang. The four remaining contenders — Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (Hawaii), Sen. Michael Bennet (Colo.), Mike Bloomberg and former Massachusetts governor Deval Patrick — have one day to meet the criteria. Gabbard is the closest. (Kevin Schaul)

-- In precincts around Iowa, Buttigieg benefited from being people's second choice. "Tallying losses and gains across the field, Buttigieg gained the most support as a second pick, followed by Klobuchar," Philip Bump reports, based on a review of the data that's been released. “Yang saw the biggest erosion of support — and didn’t gain much support as a second pick.” (Columnists Stephen Stromberg and E.J. Dionne Jr. both have takes on how Buttigieg broke through in the Hawkeye State.)

-- Mike Bloomberg, “in an interview in Detroit, said he does not name his Democratic rivals during his speeches because that would only help them,” Paul Schwartzman reports. “‘Why give them the courtesy?’ he asked. ‘I’m running against Donald Trump. To the extent these people are running against me, my polls are going up while theirs are going down.’”

An aircraft chartered by the State Department to evacuate Americans from the Chinese city of Wuhan arrives at Marine Corps Air Station Miramar in San Diego. (Denis Poroy/Reuters)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- Americans evacuated from Wuhan face 14 days of quarantine in hotels on military bases in California as authorities wait to see whether anyone has coronavirus. Siobhán O'Grady, Lenny Bernstein, Anna Fifield and William Wan report: "The airport was a 16-hour overnight vigil of lines and paperwork and stress and delays, of squawking children and the worried well, all trying to board the same two planes. Ningxi Xu's name was on the list. But until the converted cargo plane was rising into the sky over Wuhan, China, she couldn't be certain she would be one of the lucky Americans to escape the center of the coronavirus outbreak and make it back home. ... One flight delivered 178 people to Travis Air Force Base outside

Sacramento. The other landed there, then went on to Marine Corps Air Station Miramar in San Diego, where about 170 people exited. Two more flights are leaving Wuhan and arriving in the United States on Thursday. An additional 195 people who arrived Jan. 28 are quarantined at March Air Reserve Base in Riverside, Calif. ...

“A patient in Wisconsin tested positive for it, bringing the total in the United States to 12 as the global toll grew to 563 people dead and more than 27,000 ill in the health crisis spreading out of China. The extended confinement is unwelcome, passengers said, but people seem to be taking it in stride. ‘Most people were just glad to be getting out of there,’ Xu said from her hotel room at Miramar. ... Each flight appeared to have at least one sick person aboard. On [one] plane, officials said, a small child with a fever was isolated in the rear of the craft in an area blocked off with plastic sheeting. Xu said she saw a woman in a similar place on her flight. The woman did not appear to be aboard for the final leg to Miramar. ... This is the first quarantine ordered by federal health officials in more than 50 years, and the CDC is having to improvise. Each family has a private room but is being told to keep some distance — at least six feet — from other families. The children will be told not to share toys.”

-- A U.S. plane will evacuate a “few dozen” Canadians in Wuhan. More than 300 Canadians have asked for government assistance to leave the city, but the flight chartered by the Canadian government has room for only 211 of them. (Amanda Coletta)

-- Several lawmakers confronted Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar and other officials about the Trump administration’s response to the virus. Erica Werner and Yasmeen

Abutaleb report: “In a closed-door briefing with senators, the two Democratic senators from Hawaii were particularly irate. They complained their state health officials had not been notified in advance that their airport would be one of 11 to receive and quarantine U.S. citizens arriving from China’s Hubei province, the epicenter of the virus. Sen. Brian Schatz (D-Hawaii) challenged Azar about the communication breakdown and Azar grew defensive, although he later apologized to Schatz for the tenor of their conversation. ... The lack of coordination was acute in Hawaii. Both of the state’s Democratic senators, Schatz and Mazie Hirono, unloaded on the administration, with Schatz describing the administration’s handling of the virus as ‘keystone cops.’”

-- A 30-hour-old infant became the youngest person diagnosed with coronavirus. The baby was born in Wuhan to a mother who’d tested positive for the disease before she gave birth. It’s unclear how the disease was transmitted – in the womb, or after birth. (BBC)

-- Africa has 1.2 billion people, but only six labs there can test for coronavirus. Danielle Paquette, Max Bearak and Lenny Bernstein report: “No cases have been confirmed so far in any of Africa’s 54 countries, but the risk of an outbreak is high, World Health Organization leaders say. Africa is home to 1.2 billion people, including an estimated 1 million Chinese nationals ... Flights from the Asian power bring at least 1,000 travelers to the continent each day. ... To address that concern, medical teams from 15 African nations are convening in Dakar on Thursday for an emergency workshop on the first layer of readiness: diagnosing the new virus. WHO officials said 24 countries, encompassing most of Africa’s population, will receive the material needed to conduct the tests by the end of the week.”

-- China’s conspicuously absent leader reemerged amid the coronavirus crisis — but only for an audience with a friendly autocrat. Anna Fifield reports: “On Wednesday night, a full week after his last appearance in the state media, Xi [Jinping] reemerged. Not to console quarantined patients in Wuhan or thank the tireless doctors treating them, but for an audience with Cambodia’s autocratic leader, Hun Sen. Xi’s usually ubiquitous face had been pictured in state media only one time in the previous 12 days: a week before, when the director-general of the World Health Organization came to Beijing and praised the Chinese government’s response to the crisis in ways more often associated with party propagandists. ... Although the state media said he was ‘personally directing’ and ‘personally planning’ the response to the crisis, there were no photos of a man who has styled himself as the ‘People’s Leader’ actually mingling with hoi polloi to fight what is being framed as a ‘People’s War.’ He was not in scrubs and a face mask meeting the health-care workers on the front lines. It was Premier Li Keqiang who got that assignment. And there is no footage of him inspecting the pop-up hospitals erected in Wuhan. Vice Premier Sun Chunlan was dispatched for that task. This vacuum was filled — as vacuums are wont to be — with baseless rumors that Xi had experienced a stroke or been overthrown.”

-- The world’s oceans are speeding up, and, yes, this is another mega-scale consequence of climate change. Chris Mooney reports: “Three-quarters of the world’s ocean waters have sped up their pace in recent decades, scientists reported Wednesday, a massive development that was not expected to occur until climate warming became much more advanced. The change is being driven by faster winds, which are adding more energy to the surface of the ocean. That, in turn, produces faster currents and an acceleration of ocean circulation. ... The new research found that 76 percent of the global ocean is speeding up, when the top 2,000 meters of the ocean are taken into account. The increase in speed is most intense in tropical oceans and especially the vast Pacific. Scientists aren't certain of all the consequences of this speedup yet. But they may include impacts in key regions along the eastern coasts of continents, where several currents have intensified. The result in some cases has been damaging ocean hotspots that have upended marine life."

-- Astronaut Christina Koch has returned to Earth after a record-breaking stay on the International Space Station. Koch spent 328 days in space, the longest single spaceflight by a woman. (Christian Davenport)

-- At least 38 people were killed, including rescue workers, in two avalanches in Turkey. Kareem Fahim reports: "Five people were killed in the first avalanche, which blanketed a highway in Bahcesaray, a mountainous district in eastern Van province at about 5 p.m. Tuesday, trapping vehicles including a minibus, local media reported. Dozens of rescue workers searched the area for additional survivors until about 1 a.m., then resumed the search on Wednesday morning in near-blizzard conditions. At about noon Wednesday, a second avalanche trapped the rescue teams, killing 33 people, the disaster agency said."

-- A plane skidded off the runway and broke apart at Istanbul's

Sabiha International Airport, killing three and injuring scores of other passengers. (Fahim)

Trump greets Venezuela's Guaidó at White House

-- Trump met with Venezuelan opposition leader Juan Guaidó for the first time, but his interest in the country's presidential crisis has waned. Karen DeYoung, Anthony Faiola and Anne Gearan report: "But the fact that the meeting took place, following Guaidó's appearance as Trump's guest at Tuesday night's State of the Union address, may have been enough to serve their shared goal of demonstrating administration support for Guaidó's interim government. ... It has now been more than a year since Trump promised that he would 'use the full weight of United States economic and diplomatic power' to drive [Nicolás] Maduro from office. Despite U.S. efforts to starve his government of resources with sanctions and the recognition of Guaidó by about 60 countries, Maduro remains. Trump's public interest in the issue has waned, and he has mentioned the young opposition figure less and less frequently as the months have gone by. The president's apparent ambivalence has hurt Guaidó's credibility at home, where public dissatisfaction with the anti-Maduro opposition is rising."

-- The surprises at Trump's State of the Union were carefully planned. Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey report: "Late Tuesday afternoon, as President Trump's team readied for an evening of dramatic reveals and made-for-TV twists at his State of the Union address, they hit a momentary snafu. Aides involved in the planning told the House sergeant at arms that they wanted to have a surprise guest enter the chamber in the middle of the president's speech. He resisted, citing protocol and security concerns. But the White House held firm: If the sergeant at arms wouldn't open the door, then first lady Melania Trump would get up and do it herself. ... In the end, Trump got the reality-show moment he wanted. As he introduced Amy Williams — a military spouse from Fort Bragg, N.C., whose husband was serving on his fourth deployment to the Middle East — and her two young children, he paused to build suspense for the big reveal. ... The moment was one of several theatrical flourishes orchestrated by the president and his aides that brought a reality-TV or game-show feel to the usually staid annual address to Congress, thrilling Trump's supporters and angering critics who said he was cheapening the event."

Trump took great pains to keep Guaidó's attendance a secret until the last minute, "despite Guaidó's clear interest in recent weeks for a public sign of support from Trump. ... One senior administration official said the president did not want to meet Guaidó

in Florida over the weekend, partially to maintain the surprise and add to the drama of the moment. Administration officials also asked the Venezuelans not to tell anyone that Guaidó would be attending the speech. ...

“Another beneficiary of Trump’s stagecraft was Janiyah Davis, the fourth-grader. She and her mother were invited to the House chamber to represent thousands of children on waiting lists for taxpayer-supported private school scholarships. ... [Trump offered] help to Janiyah, who was stuck on the waiting list. ... ‘I can proudly announce tonight that an Opportunity Scholarship has become available, and it’s going to you,’ [he said]. ... As it turns out, the scholarship had ‘become available’ thanks to Trump’s own education secretary. On Wednesday, a spokeswoman for [Betsy DeVos] said that Janiyah’s tuition was being paid for by DeVos personally.”

-- Despite the flare, the speech received poor TV ratings. From the Times: “Roughly 37.2 million Americans tuned in for Mr. Trump’s speech, Nielsen said on Wednesday, the smallest live-TV audience for a presidential address to Congress since Barack Obama’s valedictory State of the Union in 2016. The viewership on Tuesday was a 20 percent decline from Mr. Trump’s State of the Union last year, and well below the audience for his speeches in 2017 and 2018.”

U.S. Border Patrol agents Joe Curran and Daniel Hernandez inspect border fence construction in the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument in Lukeville, Ariz. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERLOOKED:

-- Long-term maintenance for Trump's border wall could cost billions, but the administration won't say how much it expects to spend in the coming decades on the structure. Nick Miroff reports: "Department of Homeland Security officials and Trump supporters have mostly waved off such concerns, describing the project as 'enduring infrastructure' that will last far into the future. But lawmakers and congressional staffers from both parties said they lack information about the projected maintenance costs."

-- The Trump administration will no longer allow New York residents to enroll in Global Entry or other Trusted Traveler programs, citing new “sanctuary” policies that limit federal access to state driver’s license data, acting homeland security secretary Chad Wolf announced last night on Fox News. Miroff reports: “Wolf told host Tucker Carlson that he sent a letter to the New York State Department of Motor Vehicles informing the agency that the state’s new limits on information-sharing with U.S. Customs and Border Protection made it impossible for federal authorities to process travelers’ applications for Global Entry and other programs. The measure appears to be one of the Trump administration’s most significant retaliatory moves against ‘sanctuary cities’ and other jurisdictions that limit local cooperation with federal immigration authorities. ... An official with the Department of Homeland Security ... said ... the move would affect the approximately 150,000 New York state residents who apply to the traveler programs each year. Travelers currently enrolled in Global Entry and programs such as SENTRI and NEXUS would not lose their status, but they will not be able to renew.”

-- A 32-year-old U.S. citizen died while in Border Patrol custody in Texas. Officials didn’t identify the man but alleged that he was a suspect in a human smuggling incident. (AP)

-- The White House threatened to veto a $4.7 billion earthquake aid package for Puerto Rico ahead of a House vote scheduled for Friday. Erica Werner reports: “The aid package was unlikely to pass the Senate in its current form. In its veto message, the White House Office of Management and Budget called the House legislation ‘misguided.’”

-- Veterans Affairs Secretary Robert Wilkie defended his abrupt

firing of his deputy secretary, calling the dismissal a “simple business decision.” Lisa Rein reports: “Wilkie’s firing of James Byrne on Monday has unsettled the veterans community inside and outside VA, and Wilkie provided few answers to why he dismissed a popular leader. ‘There’s nothing personal’ about Byrne’s firing, Wilkie said at a previously scheduled appearance at the National Press Club, ‘but we have so many things going on. ... It’s been my goal to ensure that everyone who works for us performs to the utmost.’ He tied Byrne’s firing to an effort across the Department of Veterans Affairs to hold poor performers accountable.”

-- In West Palm Beach, Fla., Trump’s name has disappeared from the skyline. David Fahrenthold reports: “Trump’s name adorned the tops of two tall condo buildings in West Palm Beach for more than two decades — but now it’s gone and won’t be returning, the Palm Beach Post reported Tuesday. The buildings once bore large signs reading ‘Trump Plaza,’ although they haven’t been affiliated with Trump’s company since 1991. The signs came down in late 2017 for cleaning, and the Palm Beach Post reported that residents voted 178-20 to not put them back. ... The condos in West Palm Beach will still be called ‘Trump Plaza,’ and there will still be ground-level signs bearing Trump’s name. The question of whether to remove those will be left to a later vote, the Palm Beach Post reported.”

-- Bernie Madoff, king of the Ponzi scheme, is seeking a medical release from prison. Justin George reports: “Madoff said he is in the end stages of kidney disease, must use a wheelchair and is in need of round-the-clock help. At 81, he is too old for a transplant, and he has been moved to palliative care within the Federal Medical Center prison in Butner, N.C. He is asking for compassionate release so he can die at home. ... Madoff expressed remorse for his massive fraud, in which he swindled investors out of billions, and said his dying wish is to salvage relationships with his grandchildren. He has served 11 years of the 150-year sentence he was given in 2009, after pleading guilty to 11 criminal counts, including fraud and money laundering.”

-- The last accuser to testify against Harvey Weinstein in his rape and sexual assault case took the witness stand to speak of an alleged attack at the Montage hotel in Beverly Hills in

2013. Shayna Jacobs reports: “Lauren Marie Young’s testimony will be the last the jury will hear from an accuser in Weinstein’s criminal trial in New York State Supreme Court in Manhattan, which nears its end after a month. Young, a 30-year-old model and actress who lives in Pennsylvania, said she, Weinstein and a Mexican model she knew, Claudia Salinas, were in a business meeting in the hotel lounge on Feb. 19, 2013, when Weinstein said they needed to move to his suite so he could get ready for an awards event he was attending with Quentin Tarantino. Young said she resisted every physical advance that was made on her after Salinas left her alone with Weinstein in the bathroom of the suite. She testified that she had been backed into a corner when Weinstein, already naked, pulled her dress down and started masturbating while groping her. ... Up until the February encounter, Weinstein and Salinas talked with Young about the possibility of her appearing on ‘America’s Next Top Model.’”

-- A drug-sniffing dog picked up a scent inside a sedan during a routine traffic stop in Florida, which led officials to two bags marked “Bag Full of Drugs.” You can probably guess where this is going. Tom Jackman reports: Inside the bags, police found “75 grams (2.6 ounces) of methamphetamine, more than a kilogram (2.2 pounds) of the date-rape drug GHB, 3.6 grams (0.12 ounces) of fentanyl, plus ecstasy, cocaine and assorted paraphernalia. The driver and passenger were both booked on multiple felony drug charges, according to the Florida Highway Patrol, with a hand from [deputy K-9] Prince of the Santa Rosa County Sheriff’s Office. ‘They don’t always make it that easy for us,’ Lt. W. Robert Cannon of the Florida Highway Patrol said. ‘If it weren’t for the fact that we’re talking about date rape drugs, fentanyl, which we all know can be deadly, cocaine and the other drugs, it would be humorous.’”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Social media was dominated by impassioned reactions to Romney's vote. Rick Gorka, Romney's traveling press secretary during the 2012 campaign and now a communications director at the Republican National Committee, lit into his old boss:

The RNC chairwoman, who is Romney's niece, was gentler:

A screenshot of a tweet from Ronna McDaniel (@GOPChairwoman). The tweet text reads: "This is not the first time I have disagreed with Mitt, and I imagine it will not be the last. The bottom line is President Trump did nothing wrong, and the Republican Party is more united than ever behind him. I, along with the @GOP, stand with President Trump." The tweet has 28.7K likes and was posted at 7:34 PM on Feb 5, 2020. Below the tweet, it says "16.2K people are talking about this".

Ronna McDaniel
@GOPChairwoman

This is not the first time I have disagreed with Mitt, and I imagine it will not be the last.

The bottom line is President Trump did nothing wrong, and the Republican Party is more united than ever behind him.

I, along with the @GOP, stand with President Trump.

28.7K 7:34 PM - Feb 5, 2020

16.2K people are talking about this

The president's son called for Romney to be expelled from the party:

A screenshot of a tweet from Donald Trump Jr. (@DonaldJTrumpjr). The tweet text reads: "Mitt Romney is forever bitter that he will never be POTUS. He was too weak to beat the Democrats then so he's joining them now. He's now officially a member of the resistance & should be expelled from the @GOP." The tweet has 89.9K likes and was posted at 7:32 PM on Feb 5, 2020. Below the tweet, it says "46.3K people are talking about this".

Donald Trump Jr.
@DonaldJTrumpjr

Mitt Romney is forever bitter that he will never be POTUS. He was too weak to beat the Democrats then so he's joining them now.

He's now officially a member of the resistance & should be expelled from the @GOP.

89.9K 7:32 PM - Feb 5, 2020

46.3K people are talking about this

Trump Sr. criticized Romney on Twitter after midnight:

The lead House manager celebrated Romney's decision:

Adam Schiff ✓
@RepAdamSchiff

Having proven Trump guilty, I asked if there was just one Republican Senator who would say “enough”

Who would stand up against this dangerously immoral president

Who would display moral courage

Who would do impartial justice as their oath required and convict

And there is. twitter.com/nytimes/status...

The New York Times ✓ @nytimes

Breaking News: "The case was made." Mitt Romney will vote to convict President Trump of abuse of power, the first Republican to support removing him from office in the impeachment trial. nyti.ms/31uKxgO

♥ 112K 7:29 PM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 31.4K people are talking about this

Former Republican senator Jeff Flake (Ariz.) praised Romney:

Jeff Flake ✓
@JeffFlake

I have long admired Mitt Romney, but never more than today. What an honorable man.

washingtonpost.com/politics/with-...

Romney to vote to convict Trump on charge of abus...

The Utah senator calls Trump's offenses "egregious" and says the president defense did not persuade him otherwise.

washingtonpost.com

♡ 67.8K 8:28 PM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 13.4K people are talking about this

Many Senate Democrats said they were deeply moved, including this lawmaker from Connecticut:

The president's embattled personal attorney celebrated:

After his acquittal, Trump recirculated this meme that suggests he'd love to be president for life:

Donald J. Trump ✓
@realDonaldTrump

♥ 349K 9:49 PM - Feb 5, 2020

💬 154K people are talking about this

McConnell's former chief of staff celebrated Trump's triumph:

Josh Holmes ✓
@Holmesjosh

Good morning, sunshine.

♡ 671 1:29 PM - Feb 6, 2020

💬 192 people are talking about this

Sen. Thom Tillis (R-N.C.), up for reelection, ripped up the articles of impeachment as a spoof of Pelosi ripping up the State of the Union:

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "He shredded the truth, so I shredded his speech," Pelosi told House Democrats at a closed-door meeting. (Politico)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Stephen Colbert paid tribute to Romney:

Seth Meyers said this hasn't been a banner week for U.S. politics:

Samantha Bee delivered her own assessment of the state of our union:

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202

Privacy Policy | Help

---

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Pete Buttigieg is emerging as a unity candidate in New Hampshire – with a bounce from Iowa
Date: Friday, February 7, 2020 10:42:39 AM

---

If you're having trouble reading this, click here.

---

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share:

 Listen to The Big Idea

Powered by  LiveIntent

Pete Buttigieg is emerging as a unity candidate in New Hampshire – with a bounce from Iowa

Pete Buttigieg holds a town hall on Thursday at American Legion Post 98 in Merrimack, N.H. (Joseph Prezioso/AFP/Getty Images)

BY JAMES HOHMANN
with Mariana Alfaro

THE BIG IDEA:

MERRIMACK, N.H. – An Air Force veteran asked Pete Buttigieg at the American Legion hall here whether he learned any special lessons during his deployment to Afghanistan as a Naval reservist.

“Being in charge is not about being exalted,” answered the 38-year-old Democratic presidential candidate. “I was a pretty junior officer. I was just a lieutenant. But I recognized that the most important thing I could do was to do right by the enlisted people who were calling me

‘sir.’ It’s that basic principle that officers eat last when you’re at chow. And I wish that we had a president who understood that the position at the top of the org chart should also be the position of greatest humility about your need to do right by everybody around you.”

Buttigieg’s nod to the virtue of modesty was the single biggest applause line during his Thursday afternoon town hall meeting, which filled the venue to capacity. It offered a stark contrast to the anything-but-humble victory lap that President Trump took at the White House earlier in the afternoon to celebrate being acquitted by the Senate.

A dozen different voters I interviewed after Buttigieg’s event brought up the moment – including people who are torn between him and Joe Biden, him and Bernie Sanders, him and Elizabeth Warren, as well as him and Amy Klobuchar. These conversations offered a window into Buttigieg’s emergence, ahead of next Tuesday’s New Hampshire primary, as the kind of unity candidate who defies the conventional lanes that pundits try to force candidates into.

Polling shows that Buttigieg has been surging here since his better-than-expected finish in the Iowa caucuses, where he’s neck-and-neck with Sanders and an official winner has not been declared.

A nightly tracking poll of likely Democratic voters in New Hampshire by Suffolk University, in partnership with the Boston Globe and WBZ-TV, has shown the former mayor of South Bend, Ind., gaining ground here every night since Monday. Sanders led last night with 24 percent, followed by Buttigieg with 23 percent (up four points from the night before). The pollsters say Buttigieg’s gains are coming from Biden and Warren. Warren garnered 13 percent and Biden got 11 percent in the latest poll. Everyone else was in single digits. The margin of error is 4.4 percent.

A Monmouth University poll released Thursday puts Sanders in the lead with 24 percent among likely primary voters, followed by Buttigieg at 20 percent, Biden at 17 percent, Warren at 13 percent and Klobuchar at 9 percent. Half of all respondents said they're not firmly decided and could still change their minds. The margin of error is also 4.4 percent.

William Voss, an independent who lives here and voted for Hillary Clinton in the primary four years ago, saw Biden on Tuesday, Warren on Wednesday and Buttigieg on Thursday. He said he'll watch the Democratic debate on Friday night in Manchester before making a final decision over the weekend. "Pete hadn't really been on my list until he greatly surprised me in Iowa," Voss said. "Before Iowa, I perceived him as competing for vice president. Now I'm paying attention to him."

Buttigieg fields a voter's question in Merrimack. (Eric Thayer/Reuters)

Steve Shaw, 76, is a liberal who backed Sanders four years ago when he beat Clinton in the state's Democratic primary by 22 points. He's been trying to decide between supporting the independent senator from Vermont again or breaking for Warren, who represents the neighboring state of Massachusetts in the Senate. But Buttigieg has now entered the mix. "Iowa makes him more credible," said Shaw, a retired state employee who lives in Concord. "He's got a lot of courage in having a husband, too."

Shaw said he wants to support a candidate who feels empathy for the less fortunate, who does not condescend to regular people and who can think quickly on their feet. After the town hall, Shaw gave Buttigieg high marks for all three criteria and said the comments about eating only after his subordinates were "especially terrific."

“In that iconic painting by Edvard Munch called ‘The Scream,’ there are two theories as to what the figure is doing,” he explained. “Is she screaming for herself? Or is she screaming because she hears someone else screaming? In politics, you’re either showing empathy or you’re showing selfishness. There’s far too much selfishness and greed, especially from a president who is Robespierre with a comb-over. That’s why we’re so badly in need of empathy.”

Independents can cast ballots in the Democratic primary in New Hampshire. Without a real contest on the Republican side, that means there will likely be many more moderate-minded voters than four years ago. Bill Mauser, 77, is an independent who voted for John Kasich, the-then Ohio governor, in the GOP primary four years ago. He backed Clinton in the general, although he said it was so tough to decide between her and Trump that he didn’t make up his mind until he was standing in the voting booth. Now he’s trying to decide between Buttigieg and Klobuchar, the three-term senior senator from Minnesota.

“Amy is experienced, coming as she does from the Washington milieu, so she’s got the chops and she’s shown she’s strong enough to stand up to the opposition for what she believes in,” said Mauser, who lives in Merrimack and now enjoys bowling after a career in software development. He served four years on active duty in the Navy and 23 more in the reserves. “Pete is bright, articulate and a veteran, which is very good. The thing is that whoever wins is going to end up in a pit, and then in a brawl, with Donald J. Trump. He’s a no-holds-barred eye-gouger, so we need to pick someone with that in mind.”

In Iowa, promising generational change without an ideological edge, Buttigieg demonstrated an ability to build a broad coalition that transcends the traditional moderate vs. liberal “lanes” that pundits try to force candidates into. Preliminary entrance polls there showed that he tied for first among self-identified moderates (with Biden) and finished second among self-identified liberals (behind Sanders). He led among women and finished a close second among men. He was second among 17-to-29 and 30-to-44-year-olds, and he won among 45-to-64-year-olds. He fared just as well in rural parts of the state as the suburbs and cities over 50,000. Buttigieg even managed to get almost the same level of support among non-college graduates as those who earned degrees.

To be sure, Buttigieg continues to struggle to make inroads with black voters. This remains a challenge to his campaign in South Carolina and across the Southern states that vote on Super Tuesday. Biden is counting on black voters to offer a firewall, and the former vice president has leaned in on the argument that he’s the candidate most likely to defeat Trump in November.

---

Content from Partnership for America’s Health Care Future

American families can’t afford Medicare for All.

Studies confirm that Medicare for All would force Americans to pay more for worse care. Economists agree, there's "no way to pay for Medicare for All without tax increases."

---

Buttigieg speaks in Merrimack. (Eric Thayer/Reuters)

Dave and Alicia Hennessey, of Pelham, went to see Biden in Nashua on Tuesday and Buttigieg in Merrimack on Thursday. They both supported Clinton four years ago. Alicia, who retired from teaching at a computer training school, has decided to go for Buttigieg over Biden. "He's just so reasonable: on health care, on student debt, on the environment," the 70-year-old said. "I knocked on a lot of doors for Hillary. Bernie and Elizabeth are just too radical. ... I think Amy would have done a lot better if Pete wasn't in it."

Dave, a Vietnam veteran who retired last year from the real estate business, remains torn between Biden and Buttigieg. "The big issue is electability,” he said. “We’ve got to get Trump out of there. That’s priority one. While I like Pete – he’s smart and articulate – Joe is familiar, like an old pair of shoes. But he’s nowhere near the speaker that Pete is. And I’m concerned about his age. I’m 73, and I’ve lost a step or two. ... But I’m still concerned about so many morons out there being bigoted [about Buttigieg’s sexuality]. ... Electability is job one. ... I think it’s impressive he was able to do well, but I think the Iowa caucuses are so stupid and dumb.”

Biden’s struggles in Iowa have eroded his electability pitch somewhat, a point Buttigieg has been eager to make during a media blitz in recent days. Yesterday alone, Buttigieg appeared on ABC’s “The View,” CBS’s “Late Show with Stephen Colbert” and finished the night with a CNN town hall moderated by Chris Cuomo. He even talked to TMZ. “If your focus is on electability,” Buttigieg told the gossip site, “the best way, I think, to demonstrate you’re a candidate who can win is to go win.” In another sign that Buttigieg has arrived, the Trump campaign sent out an email attacking him last night.

Tonight’s debate on ABC looms as a pivotal test for Buttigieg. Because he’s rising, he faces almost certain attacks from all directions. Biden has telegraphed a few hits in recent days. Klobuchar did little during a previous debate to hide her resentment that Buttigieg is doing better than she. Warren’s manager accused one of Buttigieg’s strategists of coordinating in plain sight with an allied super PAC, something that the campaign and the group deny. She’s said that a woman with his same background would not have gotten as far.

Buttigieg was widely viewed as a winner of the November debate, but he stumbled badly in the December debate as he struggled to respond to criticism over raising money in a Napa Valley wine cave. He took a hit in the polls after that.

The former mayor, who has shifted more toward the middle over the last year, benefitted during the January debate from the squabbling between Sanders and Warren on the left over whether the Vermont senator told his Massachusetts colleague during a private dinner that a woman cannot win the presidency. Sanders vigorously denied it. Interviews on the ground over the last few weeks suggest that some men who had been intrigued by Warren and attracted to her detailed plans were turned off by what they perceived as her playing the gender card.

A few weeks ago, Warren was pitching herself for this role of unity candidate. Her team hoped she'd come out of Iowa stronger than she did, counting on a much-ballyhooed field program that didn't deliver as promised. They thought she could then sell herself in New Hampshire as both the more pragmatic alternative to Sanders and the more progressive alternative to Biden. Instead, after Warren's distant third-place finish, Buttigieg is slipping into that sweet spot.

Buttigieg said in Merrimack that his campaign had been "absolutely electrified ... by the extraordinary validation of this campaign's vision that we had in Iowa on Monday." He announced yesterday that he's raised $2.73 million and attracted 22,636 donors since caucus night, with an average of $42. "I'm also mindful and humbled by the fact that New Hampshire is New Hampshire," he concluded. "And New Hampshire is not the kind of place to let Iowa or anybody else tell you what to do!"

Bernie Sanders speaks Friday morning at the "Politics and Eggs" breakfast at the New Hampshire Institute of Politics at Saint Anselm College in Manchester, N.H. (Justin Lane/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

WHAT ELSE YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT 2020:

-- The latest on the Iowa mess: The state Democratic Party last night said it has now released all the results, showing the tightest of races between Buttigieg and Sanders. With 100 percent of precincts reporting, Buttigieg held a narrow lead of 26.2 percent in state delegate equivalents, the traditional metric by which an Iowa winner has been determined. Sanders had 26.1 percent. With continuing confusion and questions about the technical issues, no official winner has been declared by the party or news outlets like the Associated Press. Sanders led in the popular vote by roughly 6,000 votes in the first round and about 2,500 in the second round.

Sanders declared victory in a news conference at his New ### Hampshire headquarters in Manchester on Thursday afternoon.

“When 6,000 more people come out for you in an election than your nearest opponent, we here in northern New England call that a victory,” he said. “Who inches ahead in the end is meaningless,” Sanders added, referring to the delegate count.

His comments came less than an hour after Democratic National Committee Chairman Tom Perez called for a canvass of the results from the caucuses.

“The state party gave no indication it planned to honor Perez’s demand, instead issuing a statement noting that it is the campaigns that are entitled to request a canvass. None has so far made such a request, and Sanders and Buttigieg indicated Thursday they would not,” Isaac Stanley-Becker reports. “A canvass would mean a hand audit of the math worksheets and reporting forms that are completed on caucus night at each of the more than 1,750 precincts across the state. It would differ from a full recount, which involves a hand count of each of the ‘presidential preference cards’ completed by caucus-goers.”

-- Why Buttigieg decided to declare victory on Monday night:

“Unlike a typical election, where ballot choices are secret, the various campaigns received real-time reports of turnout and preference from the state’s 1,681 precincts. The numbers they reported back to Buttigieg in his suite at a downtown Des Moines Marriott cheered everyone in the room,” Michael Scherer, Holly Bailey, Sean Sullivan and Annie Linskey report in a meaty new ticktock. “The political wordsmith with degrees from Oxford and Harvard needed a win in Iowa to propel his campaign forward, so he decided to play a word game: He would declare himself ‘victorious’ without defining what victory meant. His staff uniformly agreed, even though they knew he still might not finish first in the delegate count. ‘It means victorious over a lot of things — victorious because a year ago, it was just four staffers, victorious in terms of overperforming the expectations, and victorious in that we beat a crop of senators and a former vice president,’ said one of the advisers in the room.”

-- Joe Walsh, the former Illinois congressman who has been waging a primary challenge to Trump from his right, ended his long-shot bid for the Republican nomination during an interview on CNN this morning. (Amy Wang)

-- Just five days before the New Hampshire primary, Biden's bus was parked in front of the castle-themed Radisson hotel where he's been staying in Nashua. But the candidate was nowhere to be found. Matt Viser, Cleve Wootson and Michael Scherer report:

“Biden spent Thursday gathered with his top advisers at his home in Wilmington, Del., seeking a reset and perhaps a last-ditch effort to save his candidacy, beginning with a debate Friday night. He held no public events. ... In one troublesome sign for the financially strapped campaign, it canceled nearly $150,000 in television ads in South Carolina, which votes Feb. 29, and moved the spending to Nevada, whose Feb. 22 contest follows New Hampshire’s. The move seemed to acknowledge that Biden’s campaign cannot sustain a continued run of bad news. ... Some of Biden’s supporters were growing agitated with the campaign, struggling to point to any one piece of it that has been successful. His organizing operation struggled in Iowa, his fundraising numbers have never been impressive, and his message is often muddled.

“One person close to the campaign ... expects a dramatic reshuffling of his operation if Biden does not show improvement in New Hampshire. Biden has rarely fired staffers during his decades-long career, so any changes would probably mean internal shifting of responsibilities. Even before then, disputes have emerged among some of his top advisers, who have generally split between an older group that has been with Biden for decades, and a younger group that, while loyal, has joined his staff more recently. There have been disagreements since the start of the campaign over how much to focus on the middle-class economic message that has defined much of Biden’s career and how much to center his message on President Trump.”

-- Dan Balz’s take: “Joe Biden’s campaign has a problem, and it begins with the candidate.”

-- Andrew Yang fired dozens of staffers after his abysmal finish in Iowa. From Politico: “Among those dismissed were the national political and policy directors of the campaign, as well as the deputy national political director — all senior level positions. The people who were fired worked across Yang’s organization, from his headquarters in New York to the now-disbanded Iowa operation. ... According to FEC reports released last week, the Yang campaign had more than 230 people on staff.”

-- A half-dozen women of color left Warren’s Nevada campaign, weeks before the state’s caucuses, complaining of a toxic work environment in which minorities felt tokenized. From Politico: “‘There was definitely something wrong with the culture,’ said Megan Lewis, a field organizer who joined the campaign in May and departed in December. 'I filed a complaint with HR, but the follow-up I received left me feeling as though I needed to make myself smaller or change who I was to fit into the office culture.' Another recently departed staffer, also a field organizer, granted anonymity because she feared reprisal, echoed that sentiment. 'I felt like a problem — like I was there to literally bring color into the space but not the knowledge and voice that comes with it,' she said in an interview. ... [Warren] has spent just 12 days there, another factor that dispirited the state's staff. This week, her campaign also scaled back its television ads in the state by about $140,000."

-- Warren's newest ad, airing in heavy rotation on TV here, features an old clip of Barack Obama praising her in the Rose Garden for her work creating the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. Biden is also running a commercial with old footage of Obama talking him up. The former president has not endorsed his running mate. (Watch here.)

-- Montana Gov. Steve Bullock (D) met privately with Obama as the deadline for him to file for Senate looms. The former presidential candidate is a sought-after recruit to challenge Republican Sen. Steve Daines. (Politico)

-- "Mike Bloomberg's presidential campaign plagiarized portions of its plans for maternal health, LGBTQ equality, the economy, tax policy, infrastructure, and mental health from research publications, media outlets, and a number of nonprofit, educational, and policy groups," the Intercept reports. "[E]xact passages from at least eight Bloomberg plans or accompanying fact sheets were direct copies of material from media outlets including CNN, Time, and CBS, a research center at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice, the American Medical Association, Everytown for Gun Safety, Building America's Future Educational Fund, and other organizations. The plagiarized sections ranged in length from entire paragraphs to individual sentences and fragments in documents that were between five and 14 pages long. ... By Thursday morning [after a press inquiry], one of the plans was completely taken down, while others were changed. ... The Bloomberg campaign did not deny the plagiarism. In a statement, the campaign said, 'Much of what you flagged were fact sheets that went out via MailChimp' — an online newsletter service — 'which doesn't support footnote formatting.'"

The Daily 202's
BIG IDEA

Get James's insight into Washington every weekday on your smart speaker or favorite podcast player.

Subscribe on Amazon Echo, Google Home, Apple HomePod and other podcast players.

BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

BlueCross BlueShield Association

PASS THE MOMNIBUS >

Welcome to the Daily 202, PowerPost's morning briefing for decision-makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter.

Republicans say Trump learned a lesson. Trump maintains he did nothing wrong.

IMPEACHMENT FALLOUT:

-- “Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman — a National Security Council aide who testified during House Democrats’ impeachment hearings — will be informed in the coming days, likely on Friday, by administration officials that he is being reassigned to a position at the Defense Department, taking a key figure from the investigation out of the White House,” Josh Dawsey, Bob Costa and Greg Miller report. “Vindman had already informed senior officials at the NSC that he intended to take an early exit from his assignment and leave his post by the end of the month ... but Trump is eager to make a symbol of the Army officer soon after the Senate acquitted him ... Trump has complained about Vindman in private, mocking the way he spoke [and] wore his uniform ... He has discussed with aides removing other national security officials who testified or cooperated with House Democrats, with Trump calling them disloyal and asking whether he should further cull his national security staff after impeachment. He remains incensed that so many people in his administration testified last year ...

“Additionally, Trump sees it as valuable to frame previous investigations as witch hunts because he expects more probes, [informal adviser Jason] Miller and other Trump allies said, and the president has told his aides that Democrats will continue to investigate his finances, his Cabinet officials and his interactions with foreign leaders. ... Trump has been convinced by polling and rallies in recent months that relentlessly attacking [Nancy] Pelosi is key to his reelection success, and he has shown flashes of anger when discussing her ... Republican lawmakers and Trump have also discussed ways to exact revenge on [Adam] Schiff for his leading role in the president’s impeachment...”

-- Trump celebrated his acquittal yesterday afternoon with an angry, raw and vindictive 62-minute rant. David Nakamura reports: “He spoke without a teleprompter. He cursed in the East Room. He called the House speaker a ‘horrible person.’ He lorded his power over a room full of deferential Republicans. He mocked a former GOP presidential nominee and his 2016 Democratic rival. He played the victim again and again. ... Trump was ... aggrieved — reflecting the id of a president who has seethed for months with rage against his enemies. This was the State of Trump. ... ‘We’ve been going through this now for over three years,' [he said.] 'It was evil. It was corrupt. It was dirty cops. It was leakers and liars.' ...

“Trump offered no words of regret, insisting, as he has repeatedly, that he did nothing wrong... The only apology he offered was to his own family, for the ‘phony, rotten’ ordeal that they were put through ... Instead, Trump vented ... ‘You could be George Washington, you could have just won the war, and they’d say, ‘Let’s get him out of office,’’ Trump said of his Democratic rivals. ‘They’re vicious as hell.’ ... At one point, he held up a copy of Thursday’s Washington Post with the headline, ‘Trump acquitted,’ and said he might have it framed. ... He was rewarded with a kiss from the first lady and a hug from his eldest daughter, Ivanka, a senior White House adviser. ...

“The White House opened the East Room event to the press corps, and scores of reporters crammed into tight spaces behind the seats for the guests. About an hour before the president was due to start speaking, aides scrambled to rearrange the lectern placement to allow Trump to enter from Cross Hall — producing a dramatic television shot that has traditionally lent gravitas and a presidential air to official statements. (President Barack Obama used that angle to announce the killing of Osama bin Laden in 2011.) ... ‘It’s all bullshit,’ the president said of the 17-month special-counsel investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election and his campaign’s contacts with Russian operatives.”

-- Trump also took aim at Hunter Biden, calling him “a son that made no money [and] got thrown out of the military” before launching into an attack on the younger Biden’s business activities in Ukraine,

China and elsewhere. (Felicia Sonmez)

-- The president's people at the Treasury Department quickly responded to requests from GOP senators for highly sensitive and closely held financial records about Hunter Biden and his associates, as part of the newly launched Republican inquiry into his business affairs. The Treasury Department still refuses to turn over the president's tax returns, which Congress is legally entitled to review. (Yahoo News)

-- Meanwhile, Ukraine complained the Trump administration is still holding up $30 million of arms and ammunition. Officials said they haven't been able to get any answers from the U.S. government about why the deals haven't been approved in more than a year. (BuzzFeed News)

-- Trump's company charges the Secret Service for the rooms agents use while protecting him at his luxury properties — billing U.S. taxpayers at rates as high as $650 per night, according to federal records and people who have seen receipts. David Fahrenthold, Jonathan O'Connell, Carol D. Leonnig and Josh Dawsey report: “Those charges, compiled here for the first time, show that Trump has an unprecedented — and largely hidden — business relationship with his own government. When Trump visits his clubs in Palm Beach, Fla., and Bedminster, N.J., the service needs space to post guards and store equipment. Trump's company says it charges only minimal fees. But Secret Service records do not show that. At Trump's Mar-a-Lago Club, the Secret Service was charged the $650 rate dozens of times in 2017, and a different rate, $396.15, dozens more times in 2018, according to documents from Trump's visits.

“And at the Trump National Golf Club Bedminster, the Secret Service was charged $17,000 a month to use a three-bedroom cottage on the property, an unusually high rent for homes in that area, according to receipts from 2017. Trump’s company billed the government even for days when Trump wasn’t there. These payments appear to contradict the Trump Organization’s own statements about what it charges members of his government entourage.”

-- Pelosi chided Trump for his behavior, as she defended her decision to tear up a copy of his State of the Union address.

Toluse Olorunnipa and Mike DeBonis report: “During a day that began with the National Prayer Breakfast, Trump questioned the religious sincerity of Pelosi and Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah), who voted Wednesday to convict the president on a charge of abuse of power. Pelosi, a Catholic, responded by saying Trump was ignorant about religion. ... Despite the negativity, both Trump and Pelosi used their remarks to make brief nods to the idea of working on bipartisan issues like infrastructure and health care. But such olive branches were dwarfed by a forest of vindictiveness, and continued political battle appeared to be the more likely path forward. ... 'He’s impeached forever, no matter what he says,’ Pelosi said. ‘You’re never getting rid of that scar.’”

-- A Utah state representative called for a vote to censure Romney after he voted to convict the president on abuse of power. The sponsor of the bill, GOP Rep. Phil Lyman, said he didn’t want Utah’s relationship with Trump to be “damaged” by Romney’s actions. (KSL)

-- Trump's trial may be over, but he and Chief Justice John Roberts aren't done with each other. Robert Barnes reports:

“Currently, the chief justice is either writing or reviewing the Supreme Court's decision on whether Trump acted within his power to end the program protecting young immigrant ‘dreamers’ from deportation. A decision could come at any time before the court's term concludes at the end of June. Next month, Roberts will call the court to order to consider whether Trump may shield his personal financial information from a congressional committee and a New York prosecutor each investigating matters beyond the president's impeachment.”

-- Commentary from The Post's opinion page:

- Dana Milbank: “Meet the new Trump, same as the old Trump.”
- Catherine Rampell: “Worried Trump might weaponize the presidency? He already has, many times.”
- Michael Gerson: “Trump's politicization of the National Prayer Breakfast is unholy and immoral.”
- Henry Olsen: “Trump's address on his acquittal showcases why people hate him. And love him.”
- Max Boot: “The contrast between Romney and [Marco] Rubio shows how low the GOP has sunk.”

-- A bipartisan report released by the Senate Intelligence Committee says the Obama administration mounted an insufficient response to Russia's election interference in 2016. But it concludes these failures were “understandable” because the government lacked information and had limited policy options at the time. Karoun Demirjian and Devlin Barrett report: “The panel recommended that the government develop specific responses to foreign influence campaigns to better safeguard against future incursions and integrate those efforts across agencies and with the governments of other countries contending with Russian aggression. Its report also said the president must be more direct with the American public about the nature of such threats, and ‘separate himself or herself from political considerations’ when handling these issues. ...

“Political concerns, the report found, played an influential role in the Obama administration’s ‘tempered’ response to the Russian threat, as officials’ fears about stoking a politically charged election season with vocal alerts about Russia’s activity created a snowball effect, ultimately allowing the Russian campaign to proliferate relatively unchecked. ... Internally, officials recalled, there was little or no discussion about a ‘pre-election response,’ as the government was ‘concerned about escalation’ with Moscow. Officials ‘did not know the full range of Moscow’s capabilities and were fearful that the Russians might attempt to affect electoral infrastructure,’ the report states. So the response stuck mostly to warnings of largely unspecified ‘consequences,’ communicated by President Obama to Russian President Vladimir Putin...” (Read the full 54-page report here.)

Li Wenliang, who was silenced by police for trying to share news about the coronavirus, shared this photo of himself in January on his Weibo account. That's the Chinese version of Twitter. He died on Thursday. (Li Wenliang/Weibo)

THE NEW WORLD ORDER:

-- “A Chinese doctor who was silenced by police for trying to share news about the new coronavirus long before Chinese health authorities disclosed its full threat died after coming down with the illness, a hospital statement said, triggering an outpouring of anger online toward the ruling Communist Party,” Gerry Shih reports from Hangzhou, China: “Li Wenliang, a 34-year-old ophthalmologist at Wuhan Central Hospital, became a national hero and symbol of the Chinese government’s systemic failings last month. Li had tried to warn his medical school classmates Dec. 30 about the existence of a contagious new virus that resembled the deadly severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS). Word began to spread in China thanks to Li, but his posts were censored, and he was detained Jan. 1 for ‘rumor-mongering.’ ...

“Li was released from detention Jan. 3 after signing a police document admitting that he committed an illegal act by making ‘untrue statements’ on social media and promising that he would ‘earnestly reflect’ on his mistakes. After they detained Li, Wuhan police appeared on Chinese state television to warn the public about the dangers of spreading rumors. In a coordinated state media push that day, they urged Internet users across the country to not believe online rumors and help build a ‘clear and bright cyberspace.’

“Days after he was released the first week of January, Li returned to work receiving patients who were beginning to flood into Wuhan’s hospitals. He began coughing Jan. 10, he later recalled. This past Saturday, three weeks after he checked himself into his hospital, he told his social media followers that he had finally been tested: He was indeed infected by the coronavirus. As he spent his final days in Wuhan Central's intensive-care unit, Li began publicly sharing how he sought to warn friends about the new virus, his ordeal with the police and his fight with the illness.

“He revealed that he lived with a pregnant wife and young child, and had quickly quarantined himself as soon as he suspected he was infected. His mother and father were now hospitalized for fever, he said without disclosing whether they — or his wife and child — contracted the coronavirus. ... As word of Li's death trickled out Thursday night, his followers left messages on his Weibo account [their version of Twitter] pleading in vain for him to post one last update. Hours after his death was confirmed, Chinese users began repeating a literary verse to express their gratitude for a man they felt their country did not deserve. ‘He who holds the firewood for the masses,’ they wrote, ‘is the one who freezes to death in wind and snow.’”

-- Sadly, the regime in Beijing has not learned its lesson: After Li's death, Communist Party leaders are starting to censor the outpouring of condolences on social media. CNBC reports that the government appears to be cracking down on posts that call Li a “hero” and others that reference the lyrics from "Les Miserables" song “Do You Hear the People Sing?” Weibo is also blocking posts that include the hashtag #IWantFreedomOfSpeech.

-- Luckily, we live in a country where I can write this: Li is a hero. He did exactly what a good doctor is supposed to do. His pregnant wife, young child and his parents – and frankly all Chinese people who want the freedom of speech we so often take for granted – will be in my prayers this weekend.

-- There are now more than 31,000 confirmed cases of coronavirus in mainland China. More than 630 of Li's countrymen have now died from the coronavirus, and the number could be far higher. More foreigners continue being evacuated from the area where the outbreak began. Two U.S. planes carrying more than 300 passengers flew out of Wuhan last night. (Simon Denyer, Karin Brulliard, Adam Taylor, Marisa Iati, Carol Morello)

Powered by  LiveIntent

Onboard a government plane evacuating Americans from the coronavirus epicenter

-- U.S. evacuees quarantined on military bases are resorting to Zumba, stairwell races and accounting classes to try and keep some sense of normalcy. William Wan, Lena H. Sun and Neena Satija report: “Twice a day, the evacuees have their temperatures checked by medical staff in protective gear. They are forbidden to stray from a small patch of land on a base filled with armed military personnel. So they have found creative ways of filling the days. ‘When people hear quarantine, they think of the zombie apocalypse, movies like ‘World War Z,’” said Matthew McCoy, 55, another evacuee. ‘But the reality is it’s what you make of it.’”

-- The number of visitors coming to the U.S. from China could drop by as much as 28 percent this year, according to a new report examining the virus’s impact on the country’s tourism industry. (Lori Aratani)

-- Another 41 people tested positive for coronavirus on board a quarantined cruise ship off the coast of Japan. A total of 61 passengers and crew have been diagnosed with the virus. Only 273 of the 3,711 people aboard have been tested so far. (Denyer and Akiko Kashiwagi)

-- Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe told his nation’s parliament that the Olympic Games will go on as planned this summer despite the virus. (Taylor)

-- The National Symphony Orchestra canceled its tour to China, the homeland of its principal clarinetist. (Peggy McGlone)

-- The virus will likely acquire a new, more easily communicated name in the coming days. It could be a variant of SARS, which scientists have described as a “cousin” of the virus. (Joel Achenbach)

-- The extended shutdown of Chinese factories from the outbreak is already upending supply chains, as manufacturers begin to feel the squeeze from shortages of material and travel restrictions on staff. Michael Tatarski reports: “New restrictions within China could further stress production lines. This week, officials in Zhejiang province announced that only one person per household would be allowed to leave home every two days for necessities. This includes three districts of the city of Hangzhou, home to e-commerce giant Alibaba. ... Although China has largely weathered Trump’s trade war, many economists expect its annual growth to slump to below 4 percent for the first quarter as services halt and consumers avoid going out due to contagion fears.”

-- A federal judge ordered the administration to end visa processing delays for hundreds of Afghan and Iraqi nationals who worked for American war-fighters. Spencer S. Hsu reports:

“The ruling Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Tanya S. Chutkan of Washington, D.C., granted class-action status to all applicants whose visa requests have been pending for more than nine months — a deadline set by statute — and followed a September opinion in which the judge called the government’s justification for delays ‘tortured and untenable.’”

-- Venezuelan authorities rounded up U.S. oil executives held under house arrest in Caracas and moved them to a prison after Trump invited opposition leader Juan Guaidó to the White House. The six Citgo employees have been detained since 2017 without a trial. (WSJ)

-- Russia is the clear winner from the U.S. embargo on Venezuelan oil. Anthony Faiola and Karen DeYoung report: “In the year since the Trump administration declared what amounted to economic war against the Venezuelan government of President Nicolás Maduro — an oil embargo that cut it off from its biggest petroleum buyer, the United States — the move has yielded some clear losers, including U.S. investors now shut out of the market. ... U.S. officials, oil industry insiders and analysts say secret deals between Moscow and Caracas to produce, transport and sell oil to other markets have become a cash cow for Russia that is earning its state-controlled enterprises an estimated $120 million a month.”

-- Canada’s oil bust left thousands of abandoned wells behind, and there’s not enough money for a cleanup. (Amanda Coletta)

-- Someone filled an Indian town’s well with alcohol, and now beer is pouring out of people’s taps. (CNN)

A German bumblebee searches for nectar in a still flowering basil plant. (Ulrich Perrey/picture-alliance/dpa/AP)

DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENTS THAT SHOULDN'T BE OVERSHADOWED:

-- Bumblebee populations in North America and Europe have plummeted as a result of extreme temperatures. Chris Mooney reports on a new study in the journal Science: “The number of areas populated by bumblebees has fallen 46 percent in North America and 17 percent in Europe, and the new research found that regions with sharp bee declines also experienced strong variations in climate — and especially higher temperatures and worse heat waves. It’s yet another major piece of bad news for bee populations. Declining colonies of commercial honeybees have been blamed on a strange phenomenon called Colony Collapse Disorder but also probably spring from a bevy of other causes. Now, the new research suggests that bumblebees in the wild are suffering, too. ‘Where temperatures are getting more extreme, bees tend to be disappearing more often,' said Peter Soroye, a researcher at the University of Ottawa and one of the study's authors.

