“White House aides, led by Mick Mulvaney, the president’s acting chief of staff, had debated for days whether the administration needed a point person to be the face of the response,” the Times reports. “The decision to put Mr. Pence in charge was made on Wednesday after the president told some people that the vice president did not ‘have anything else to do,’ according to people familiar with Mr. Trump’s comments.”

Trump said he can quickly bring in coronavirus experts.

That's not how it works.

“The White House official charged with leading the U.S. response to deadly pandemics left nearly two years ago as his global health security team was disbanded ... Despite the mounting threat of a coronavirus outbreak in the United States, Trump said he has no regrets about those actions and that expertise and resources can be quickly ramped up to meet the current needs,” Beth Reinhard, Emma Brown and Neena Satija report.
Experts disagree:

- “They have stable jobs with retirement plans,” said physician Cyrus Shahpar, who served at the CDC under Obama and during the first year of the Trump administration. “They are not going to quit their job at the university or quit their job in the local government to go join the U.S. federal government for six months because of coronavirus. It doesn't work like that.”
- “You build a fire department ahead of time. You don't wait for a fire,” said Tom Inglesby, director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security.
- “What you're seeing play out is that this response is starting from a standing start instead of a running start,” said Ron Klain, who served as “Ebola czar” under Obama in 2014. Klain noted that Pence and Azar already have full-time jobs. “Running this response is not like driving Uber. You don't do it a couple hours a day.”

Bigger picture, the virus is pushing Trump to rely on experts he has long maligned. “Throughout his more than three years as president, Trump has obsessed, at times conspiratorially, over what he calls the ‘deep state’ — the thousands of career government specialists in national security, intelligence, science and other areas whose expertise he shuns in part because he suspects they are disloyal saboteurs,” Ashley Parker and Philip Rucker note. (Our Fact Checker team reviews 13 of the most noteworthy coronavirus comments Trump made during his news conference.)

Trump's CDC chief, Robert Redfield, is under growing

scrutiny, internally and externally.

“Hundreds of Americans were left stuck on a cruise ship that later became the single biggest source of U.S. coronavirus cases — a CDC decision,” Politico reports. “Dozens of public health labs are still waiting for tests that will allow them to diagnose coronavirus — a CDC responsibility. One of Redfield’s deputies on Monday urged businesses and schools to start preparing for the disease’s inevitable spread — stamping the CDC’s imprint on public fears ... Inside the health department, officials have complained that Redfield and CDC have been slow to resolve essential problems, like clarifying whether dozens of public health labs around the nation will soon have diagnostics capable of testing for coronavirus.”

Virus testing is widening after the first U.S. case of community transmission.

“The four-day delay in testing a California woman for coronavirus highlights how a faulty test and, until Thursday, a narrow definition of who should be tested have hindered the United States’ ability to track how widely the disease has spread,” Carolyn Y. Johnson and Laurie McGinley report. “Those concerns were stoked by the emergence of the nation’s first case of community transmission in Northern California, where hospital administrators say the patient, a woman, was not tested when clinicians requested it because she did not meet strict [CDC] criteria ... ‘We have just a few hundred testing kits in the state of California,’ Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) said Thursday at a news conference. ‘That’s simply inadequate to do justice to the kind of testing that is required to address this issue head on.’ ... Newsom said the state was working with the CDC to get more testing kits and the ability to do tests without shipping samples across the country.” New York is making its own coronavirus test after the CDC's test repeatedly failed, per BuzzFeed News.

Markets are on track for their worst week since the financial crisis.

“European indexes fell sharply, led by losses in the travel and resources sectors, continuing the slump in Asia earlier in the day,” Adam Taylor and

Rick Noack report. “U.S. futures pointed to further losses on Wall Street at the open.”

South Korea now has 2,337 confirmed cases, the largest hot spot outside of China.

There are 78,824 confirmed cases in mainland China. South Korea is trying to rapidly test a large number of people, including more than 200,000 people who are members of a church in Daegu where the virus appeared to have spread widely, per Min Joo Kim and Adam Taylor.

Mongolia's president was put under a 14-day quarantine after traveling to China for one day. (Taylor)

Japan is scaling back the Olympic torch relay. It was due to start in Fukushima on March 26. A spokesman says that, though the procession may be downsized, it won't be cancelled. The International Olympic Committee said it remains fully committed to moving ahead with the Games as scheduled. (Simon Denyer)

---

Quote of the day

Former Baltimore mayor Catherine Pugh (D) was sentenced to three years in prison after pleading guilty to fraud, tax evasion and conspiracy. Responding to the contention by her defense attorneys that the public humiliation she endured should be considered as part of the punishment, U.S. District Judge Deborah K. Chasanow said: “Yes, the impact on Ms. Pugh has been great. But the impact on the city is also very great and very tragic.” (Paul Schwartzman)

---

Social media speed read

Trump tried to pin the spread of the virus on Democrats in a now-deleted

tweet:

Washington's Democratic governor gave this readout of his call with the V.P.:

All the leading Democratic presidential candidates attacked Trump's decisions:

Videos of the day

“The Daily Show” sent two correspondents to check in with black voters in South Carolina:

Stephen Colbert is not impressed by Trump's coronavirus plan:

Seth Meyers said this situation should give Trump pause about his cuts to health funding:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Why Bernie Sanders, the oldest presidential candidate, struggles so much with older voters
Date: Friday, February 28, 2020 10:30:41 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Uber

By James Hohmann

with Mariana Alfaro

Email

Why Bernie Sanders, the oldest presidential candidate, struggles so much with older voters

CHARLESTON, S.C. – Throughout world history, seniors have rarely led revolutions. It's often younger idealists who storm barricades, draft declarations and topple established orders. Until Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.).

The 78-year-old front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination is an unlikely figurehead for a movement that advocates political revolution. The self-described democratic socialist captivates millennials, but he has largely failed to inspire voters in his own generation. At least so far.

Older people tend to be more settled in their political beliefs. They're more affluent than their younger counterparts, a factor that might make them warier of big structural changes. They tend to worry more about Sanders's age – and his heart attack – than younger voters who mostly haven't faced their own serious health struggles yet.

Mostly, though, elderly Democratic voters fear Sanders is too far to the left to defeat President Trump. Unlike the young whippersnappers who flock to Sanders's rallies, older folks remember the blowouts of 1988 and 1972 when their party nominated candidates who were more liberal than the country was ready to accept. In scores of interviews, they've expressed worry about repeating the mistakes of the past.

"I like Bernie, but I'm just afraid him tooting his socialist horn so much is going to hurt him," said Karen Griffin, 66, a volunteer for the local Democratic Party here who remains undecided about which alternative to Sanders she will vote for in Saturday's South Carolina primary. "A lot of the people that are my age vote. Growing up, we always heard socialism was scary, scary, scary. When my generation hears that term, it's scary!"

Bernie Sanders campaigns on Wednesday at Greenleaf Christian Church in Goldsboro, N.C. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

While Sanders won big in the Nevada caucuses last Saturday, the entrance polls highlighted a striking age gap. The septuagenarian won 65 percent of voters under the age of 30, 49 percent of 30- to 44-year-olds, 27 percent among 45- to 64-year-olds and just 12 percent among voters over 65. In that oldest cohort, which accounted for 28 percent of those voting, Sanders finished fourth – behind former vice president Joe Biden, Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) and Pete Buttigieg, the former mayor of South Bend, Ind.

Sanders similarly underperformed among seniors in the New Hampshire primary. And in the Iowa caucuses, which remain too close for the Associated Press to call even after the state Democratic Party completed a partial recount, the entrance polls show that Sanders received only 4 percent among Hawkeye State Democrats over the age of 65, compared to 48 percent of those under 30.

A new Monmouth University poll shows Biden leading in South Carolina among likely Democratic primary voters, with 36 percent, and a neck-and-neck contest for second place between

Sanders (16 percent) and billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer (15 percent). Sanders received 10 percent support among voters over 65 in the Palmetto State, per Monmouth, compared to 18 percent among those under 50.

During a rally on Thursday afternoon, Sanders declared that “we will beat Trump in a landslide” and “we will transform America” – if younger people vote at the same level as those 65 and older. “So I say to young people here, don’t complain about your student debt, don’t complain about climate change, don’t complain about racism or sexism or homophobia. Your complaints don’t mean anything. What means something is standing up and fighting,” the senator told a crowd of 4,700 in Richmond. Virginia is one of 14 states, plus the territory of American Samoa, that vote next Tuesday.

George McGovern, right, holds a snowball he made while campaigning as the Democratic nominee for president in September 1972 in Billings, Mont. (Bob Daugherty/AP)

George McGovern’s 1972 presidential campaign got Bruce Cunningham engaged in politics for the first time. He grew up in a Republican family in a conservative part of New York state, but the massacre of anti-war protesters at Kent State University in 1970 pushed Cunningham hard to the left. Now 65, he and his wife moved a few years ago to this affordable and adorable port city, where they dote on their four grandchildren who live nearby and plan to vote together for Biden in Saturday’s primary.

“McGovern was the Bernie Sanders of his day,” said Cunningham, a retired higher education administrator. “Bernie has also captivated the young folks, too, but I can’t really figure out how. McGovern was a steady guy. He had a real sense of dignity. To me, Bernie seems like a crotchety old man who is just shouting all the time.”

Cunningham remembers his family telling him, as he volunteered for McGovern almost half a century ago, that he’d become less liberal as he aged. He now sees truth in that old cliché, except when it comes to Sanders. “Bernie’s got some interesting ideas. I think they’re very unrealistic, though,” said Cunningham. “Like McGovern, I’m not sure Bernie can win. And, to me, the highest priority has got to be getting rid of the clown in the White House.”

His wife, Carol Cunningham, 62, suffers from multiple myeloma, an incurable but treatable form of blood cancer. The retired real estate agent worries that Sanders's Medicare-for-all proposal could push her off her private insurance plan and jeopardize her access to the doctors who she thinks do a great job taking care of her. "I'm just not sure Medicare-for-all is the right answer to the problems in health care," she said. "It's certainly not going to be great for everybody." The couple considered voting for Cory Booker until the senator from New Jersey dropped out. Now they both believe the former vice president has the best chance to topple Trump.

McGovern's name has been coming up a lot lately on the campaign trail, as Sanders's opponents across the Democratic establishment raise the specter that he's so liberal that he could get wiped out in a 1972-style landslide. McGovern lost 49 states that year, including his home state of South Dakota, which he represented in the Senate. Massachusetts was the only state Richard Nixon lost as he cruised to reelection for a second term, which he'd serve only 19 months of before resigning in disgrace.

Biden brings the 1972 election up in his stump speech. That's the year he got elected to the Senate as a 29-year-old. He likes to note that he toppled a GOP incumbent, even as Nixon carried his home state of Delaware with 60 percent. Making the case for his electability, Sanders has taken to reciting polls that show him leading the president in head-to-head matchups across Midwestern battleground states that flipped from backing Barack Obama in 2012 to Trump in 2016.

Check out how young the crowd was at Sanders's rally on Thursday in Spartanburg, S.C. (Matt Rourke/AP)

The Sanders campaign has stepped up efforts to make inroads with older voters. As he discusses Medicare-for-all, for example, Sanders has tweaked his pitch somewhat to emphasize ways that it would help older people. In Richmond, for example, he talked about how the government would now cover hearing aids, eyeglasses and home health care. Sanders's emphasis on his plan to expand Social Security in digital ads a few weeks ago was aimed at improving his standing with the 65-plus crowd. While Sanders once talked about socialist Eugene Debs as his political hero, now he praises mainstream Democrats like Franklin Roosevelt and his campaign has run commercials suggesting that his bold proposals follow in the footsteps of John F. Kennedy, someone Sanders ridiculed in decades past.

Before Thanksgiving and Christmas, the campaign even blasted out messaging advice to thousands of student supporters on how to persuade their parents and grandparents that they should vote for Sanders. "It's up to us as ... young people to make the moral appeal to our older relatives to join us in voting for Bernie," the document said, "because let's face it: they won't be around for as long to deal with the consequences of this election, but we will be.”

More recent polling, however, shows how much work Sanders still has his cut out for himself as he tries to expand his ceiling of support inside the Democratic Party. Last week's Washington Post-ABC News poll showed Sanders leading nationally among Democrats and Democratic-leaning voters – with twice as much support (at 32 percent) as second-place Biden (16 percent). The survey found Sanders winning 50 percent of those under 50 years old. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) was in second place with this under-50 cohort, with only 15 percent. But Sanders got just 14 percent of support from those over 50, putting him in third place behind former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg and Biden.

These are warning flags for Sanders because older voters tend to turn out at higher rates. For example, in the 2016 general election, the Pew Research Center calculated that baby boomers, and those in older generations, together accounted for 43 percent of eligible voters but cast 49 percent of the votes.

Sanders's theory of the case, which he outlines in every speech, is that he would be able to activate millions of young people to vote for the first time and therefore reduce the average age of the electorate. He struggled to do this in Iowa or New Hampshire but showed some evidence of success in Nevada. South Carolina, where most voters in the primary are expected to be African American, will be a tougher test.

The crowds at Pete Buttigieg's events, such as this one in North Charleston on Monday, tend to be much older. (Matt Rourke/AP)

South Carolina doesn't have partisan voter registration, which means Saturday's Democratic primary is open to everyone. A sizable swath of the electorate will therefore be moderate-minded independents who are uncomfortable with Sanders's revolutionary rhetoric.

Max McDuffie, 78, voted for Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) in the GOP primary four years ago but didn't vote in the general election because he disliked Trump and Hillary Clinton. "I thought I was a Republican – until Trump," said the retired military officer, who now considers himself an independent and lives in Goose Creek, which is home to a naval installation. He's voting for Buttigieg because he thinks the 38-year-old former mayor remains "uncorrupted."

The two issues McDuffie cares about the most are tackling climate change and reducing the national debt. On the hustings, you often meet highly informed voters like McDuffie who don't fit neatly in traditional boxes that pundits like to force voters into. Student loan debt isn't a top-of-mind concern for seniors. They're not agitating for tuition-free college, universal pre-K or anything that would change how they get their health care.

The trillions in new spending proposed by Sanders makes McDuffie and many other older voters I've spoken with here this week deeply uncomfortable. “All they do in Washington is spend money and money and money, and now he wants to spend more money,” he said. “It'll catch up with us eventually. I feel so sorry for our children and grandchildren.”

McDuffie's wife, Kathy, 75, remains undecided. She said she's interested in Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Steyer. “There's three people I don't want: Trump, Sanders or Warren,” said the retired postal worker. “All the others I'm pretty open to. But Trump, Sanders and Warren are too far out there. They're too divisive.”

Biden, 77, has been trying to reach voters like the McDuffies by emphasizing his desire to restore America to what it was like before Trump. When he was asked Thursday on NBC's “Today” show what it will mean if he doesn't win the nomination, Biden replied: “It says to me that we have moved away from our roots.” Speaking with a tone of disbelief, he added: “The idea that there's going to be this revolution? Americans aren't looking for a revolution. They're looking for progress.”

Coming Sunday: We will publish a special edition of The Daily 202, with insight and analysis on South Carolina's primary results and what they mean for Super Tuesday.

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost's essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

---

More from South Carolina

Trevor, Mattie, Shawn and Julian Mitchell pose for a portrait on Wadmalaw Island, S.C., where a predominantly black population is weighing the best way forward from a past filled with migration and inequality. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Black voters here aren't particularly enthused about their options.

“Wadmalaw Island, about 23 miles south of Charleston, has roughly 5,000 residents, more than half of whom are black. After the Union Army seized

South Carolina in the Civil War, white plantation owners fled the islands, leaving behind their lucrative rice fields and enslaved African Americans, many of whom were given plots of land,” Vanessa Williams reports.

“Presidential candidates rarely venture out to Wadmalaw or neighboring islands. Voters who want to see the candidates in person usually have to go to Charleston. That’s where Mildred Mitchell first saw Barack Obama ... She thought Obama’s policies ... were good for the country, and she hates that Trump seems intent on undoing his legacy. That was why she was leaning toward Biden, even though she was concerned about his age. ... ‘I want somebody that can beat Donald Trump,’ she said. Right now, she is not sure who that is. ... The Wadmalaw families have one thing in common: None expressed excitement about their choices, even as all vow to vote. They said they were frustrated by the large, chaotic field of candidates ... Mostly, they said, they felt a duty to participate in the election and a desire to defeat Trump. But there is no swooning like they all recalled from 2008, when they helped boost Obama’s candidacy at a critical moment.”

And they are worried about racism.

“Here in my hometown, voters I’ve talked to are worried and conflicted — and see the stakes in November as going far beyond ideology to involve history, legacy and the return of a kind of frank racism that many hoped was dead and buried,” columnist Eugene Robinson writes from Orangeburg, S.C. “It’s like racism is just coming out of the woodwork,’ said Bill Hamilton, 70, the retired sports information director at South Carolina State University, one of two historically black colleges in Orangeburg. ... ‘I just have a lot of disdain for Donald Trump,’ Hamilton said. ... Across town at the Kuckery — a popular lunch spot where the fried chicken is, well, just as fried chicken should be — I heard much the same thing from Juan L. Maulsby: ‘This election is a referendum on Trump. Trying to get him out.’ ... Maulsby said he believed ‘Biden has it in the bag here.’ ... The little I’ve heard about Bloomberg will not gladden the hearts of his campaign advisers. His debate performances discouraged a few voters I talked to and even left an impression of Trump-ishness among a couple of others.”

Miss Black America is trying to help Buttigieg gain support among black voters.

Ryann Richardson has been canvassing for Buttigieg in Charleston. “This was a packed 68 hours for the pageant queen, including a speech at a Mexican restaurant, two galas, three canvassing launches, a church service and roundtables with black female voters,” Jada Yuan reports. “The folks here take the reigning Miss Black America seriously. ... After South Carolina, she will head to Alabama for Super Tuesday. She was also stiletto-boots-on-the-ground for Buttigieg in Iowa, where she appeared at his victory party alongside other black women in the row behind him, cheering him on — which led Twitter critics and media outlets to accuse the campaign of using black women as political props. ... ‘It’s rather offensive,’ Richardson says, ‘this notion that adult black women lack the agency to decide where they stand and for whom they stand — and that when they stand there, they must only be stage scenery.’ ... She grilled Buttigieg about the shooting of Eric Logan, a black man in South Bend, by a white police officer. ‘I’ve never heard a politician accept accountability for a mistake ever, for a failure ever,’ she says. But Buttigieg did.”

Steyer has bet his campaign in this state on climate change.

“His argument that global warming will be felt most bluntly by black and brown communities is meant to resonate in a state where residents are already feeling its effects and where about 60 percent of voters in Saturday’s Democratic primary are African American,” Dino Grandoni reports. “Steyer may be making his last stand here, where polls show him running third ... Steyer’s strong showing in South Carolina is not just because of his message. He spent $52.9 million nationwide on his presidential campaign in January alone. ... Elsie Graves, a retired real estate agent who lives in Myrtle Beach, appreciates how she is not pestered with requests for donations when she visits Steyer’s website. ‘So I kind of like rich people in the race,’ she joked. Her bigger concern was depriving Biden of a vote in his bid to beat Sanders. But Graves, whose home suffered more than $20,000 in damage during Hurricane Matthew in 2016, said she was reassured by Steyer’s commitment to act immediately on climate change. She said she will vote for him.”

---

Looking to Super Tuesday and beyond

Joe Biden takes a selfie after a rally on Thursday in Conway, S.C. (Scott Olson/Getty Images)

Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) endorsed Biden this morning.

The 2016 vice presidential nominee hopes to give him a boost before Virginia’s primary on Super Tuesday. “He reminds me of Harry S. Truman, an outwardly ordinary man whose work ethic, faith in the goodness of everyday Americans, and love of country made him a great President,” Kaine said in a statement. A Wason Center poll of likely Democratic voters in Virginia released Friday shows Biden with a modest lead in the state, with Sanders in second and Bloomberg in third. (Jenna Portnoy)

Most Virginia moderates are not gravitating toward any particular Sanders alternative.

“In the affluent Northern Virginia suburbs that will be ground zero for Democratic turnout in November, an ‘anybody but Bernie’ movement is struggling to take hold,” Antonio Olivo reports. “Moderate Virginia voters have turned out in droves for Democratic candidates since [Trump’s] election. ... Now, those same voters are bouncing between presidential candidates, hoping that someone — anyone — can generate enough excitement to foil a November matchup between Sanders and Trump that they believe would be disastrous. ... Outside a Warren rally in Arlington ... Marguerite Metzler said that ‘it’s disturbing’ to think of Bloomberg, a former Republican, as the only viable alternative to Sanders. ... [She said Warren] may have blown her chances of winning in Virginia ... ‘by building such a strong association with free college and Medicare-for-all.’ After ticking off a list of misgivings over the other Democratic candidates — Biden lacks energy, Buttigieg is inexperienced — Metzler, who lives in Springfield, landed on a possible choice: ‘Maybe Amy?’”

Sanders shows few signs of making nice with fellow Democrats.

The front-runner this week has angered Florida Democrats with praise for Fidel Castro, upset some Jewish leaders with sharp criticism of the pro-Israel group AIPAC and preemptively spurned Bloomberg’s offer to help fund his campaign in the general election. “These disputes with other Democrats, even as he cements a position atop the presidential primary field, are prompting nervousness and alarm among many of them over whether Sanders can set aside decades-old habits of combativeness and confrontation and bring the party together to take on a president they revile,” Sean Sullivan and Michael Scherer report. “Adding to the Democratic anxiety, some are concerned about the small number of black voters among his audiences in South Carolina this week, suggesting he still may be struggling to attract that pillar of the Democratic coalition. ...

“In a recognition of these fractures, Democratic leaders have begun saying openly that some down-ballot party candidates may run on non-Sanders positions if he is the nominee. ‘It is not unusual for a party platform, or candidates for president, to have their own agenda they would put forth,’ House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.)

told reporters Thursday. 'And it is not unusual for the House of Representatives to have its agenda to win as well.' Minutes earlier, Rep. Donna Shalala (D-Fla.) spoke on the House floor in support of a bill condemning Sanders's comments praising Castro's literacy program, which she called 'misguided, ill-informed, hurtful and unacceptable.'"

Democratic leaders are willing to risk damage to the party to stop Sanders.

The New York Times interviewed 93 of the 771 superdelegates and reports that the "vast majority" predicted no candidate would clinch the nomination during the primaries, which could result in a brokered convention. Only nine of those interviewed said Sanders should become the nominee purely on the basis of arriving at the convention with a plurality of pledged delegates. "House members share their Sanders fears on text-messaging chains. Bill Clinton, in calls with old friends, vents about the party getting wiped out in the general election. And officials in the national and state parties are increasingly anxious about splintered primaries on Super Tuesday and beyond," per the Times. Obama said he will "wholeheartedly support" the eventual nominee in a new fundraising pitch for the Democratic National Committee, per John Wagner.

Warren is in real danger of losing her home state.

"Sanders is outpacing Warren in polls across the Super Tuesday map. But one state stings more than the others: Massachusetts," Politico reports. "As recently as October, the two-term senator held a 20-percentage point lead over Sanders, according to a WBUR poll. In the latest version of the poll, released Friday, she trailed him by 8 points. Now, in the run-up to the March 3 primary, Sanders is going all in on his bid to pick off Massachusetts, culminating in a four-day music and canvassing festival in Worcester that begins Friday. ... It's not clear whether Warren will campaign in Massachusetts in the run-up to the primary."

A Ukrainian court has forced a probe into Biden.

"A court ruling in Ukraine has forced state investigators to open a probe into alleged pressure by then-vice president Joe Biden that led to the 2016 dismissal of Viktor Shokin as the country's prosecutor general," David Stern and Robyn Dixon report from Kyiv. "Trump last year pressed Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky for an investigation of this kind, leading to Trump's impeachment ... Shokin's firing, however, was not a unilateral action directed by Biden. It was prompted by a push for anti-corruption reforms developed at the State Department and coordinated with the European Union and the International Monetary Fund. Shokin's lawyer, Oleksandr Teleshetsky, said the probe was launched in response to a court order, after an appeal for action by Shokin. The State Bureau of Investigations confirmed a case was opened. ... Shokin has long been angered by what he sees as an unfair dismissal following foreign pressure."

Bloomberg released information about his heart health.

According to Bloomberg's doctor, Stephen Sisson at Johns Hopkins, "Bloomberg's left ventricular ejection fraction was 'normal' at 60-65%; his left ventricular cavity size and left ventricular function were also deemed 'normal.'" Bloomberg's campaign said Sanders should release the same left ventricular ejection fraction data. (CNN)

Bloomberg's campaign dangled the vice presidency in pursuit of Andrew Yang's endorsement.

Yang "didn't commit to join forces, as he considers his own political future," the Wall Street Journal reports. "A senior Bloomberg aide said Mr. Yang wasn't being seriously considered to be the former mayor's running mate if he secured the nomination."

Bloomberg says "stop and frisk" decreased crime. Data suggests it wasn't a major factor.

"A Washington Post analysis of crime patterns and other academic research found that major felonies declined during Bloomberg's three terms from 2002 through 2013, but the reduction did not correspond to the increase in stops by police," Dan Keating and Harry Stevens report. "Crime has continued to fall since a federal judge deemed the practice an unconstitutional violation of civil rights in 2013. The disconnect suggests that an increase or decrease in crime happened largely for reasons independent of the aggressive expansion of the policy.”

As the opioid crisis grew, Bloomberg helped the Sackler family with some PR advice.

“The billionaire family whose company created and pushed the addictive painkiller OxyContin had managed to escape connection with the opioid crisis for years, but now two magazine pieces were portraying them as pain profiteers. ... Mortimer D.A. Sackler ... was openly furious. And so he turned to a person he knew and admired in the media industry,” writes Hannah Dreier for ProPublica. “I am meeting with Michael Bloomberg tomorrow morning at 10 am to seek his help and guidance on the current issues we are facing,’ Sackler wrote to Purdue’s top executives in December 2017. ‘I plan to discuss the following with him: 1. Current narrative vs the truth. 2. What advice does he have on how best to deal with it? 3. Does he have a journalist that he would recommend who could get the FULL story out there?’ ... Bloomberg advised Mortimer Sackler on how to handle negative coverage in 2017, and steered the family to a crisis communications specialist who had been his mayoral press secretary. In 2018, Bloomberg Philanthropies staff met with Sackler to discuss launching a joint initiative to combat the opioid crisis.”

An SEC coach became a Trump-loving Senate hopeful. His players no longer recognize him.

Former Auburn University coach Tommy Tuberville is competing with Jeff Sessions and others ahead of the GOP primary in Alabama next Tuesday to take on Sen. Doug Jones (D). At Auburn, Tuberville established a reputation as a mild-mannered coach and charming recruiter who led the Tigers to an undefeated record in 2004. But he's transformed himself, adopting some of the president's favorite language and Trump's propensity for exaggerations and falsehoods. "Perhaps more notably, Tuberville, who sold football recruits and built the Auburn program on a foundation of unity, has now taken on many of the president's more hard-line — and, often, xenophobic — talking points,” Kent Babb reports. “Some of Tuberville’s former Auburn players have noticed, pointing out that his persona on the campaign trail is strikingly different than the man who recruited and coached them. ‘That doesn’t reflect the person that I knew,’ said Devin Aromashodu, a former Auburn wide receiver who usually votes Democrat. ‘It sounds like two different people.’”

---

The coronavirus

Federal workers allegedly assisted evacuees without protective gear.

“Officials at the Department of Health and Human Services sent more than a dozen workers to receive the first Americans evacuated from Wuhan, China, the epicenter of the coronavirus outbreak, without proper training for infection control or appropriate protective gear, according to a whistleblower complaint,” Lena Sun and Yasmeen Abutaleb report. “The workers did not show symptoms of infection and were not tested for the virus, according to lawyers for the whistleblower, a senior HHS official based in Washington who oversees workers at the Administration for Children and Families, a unit within HHS. The whistleblower is seeking federal protection, alleging she was unfairly and improperly reassigned after raising concerns about the safety of these workers to HHS officials, including those within the office of Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar. She was told Feb. 19 that if she does not accept the new position in 15 days, which is March 5, she would be terminated. ...

“The complaint alleges HHS staffers were ‘improperly deployed’ and were ‘not properly trained or equipped to operate in a public health emergency situation.’ The complaint also alleges the workers were potentially exposed to coronavirus because appropriate steps were not taken to protect them and staffers were not trained in wearing personal protective equipment, even though they had face-to-face contact with returning passengers. ... In some instances, the teams were working alongside personnel from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in ‘full gown, gloves and hazmat attire,’ the complaint said. ... Several people within HHS voiced objections to sending the ACF personnel to receive passengers, according to a person familiar with the conversations ... A second person familiar with the situation said the workers were not tested for coronavirus because none of them met the criteria, which was restricted at that time to people with symptoms and either a recent trip to China or close contact with a person confirmed to be infected with covid19. If the workers had exhibited symptoms, appropriate protocol would have been followed.”

Vice President Pence took control of messaging amid criticism of his qualifications.

“Pence tried to project a sense of steady control over the government’s response to the coronavirus,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Josh Dawsey and Yasmeen Abutaleb report. “Pence appointed a doctor, Ambassador Debbie Birx, to serve as White House response coordinator for the virus, enforced tight control of the government’s public communications and added new members to a task force aimed at containing the spread of the outbreak. ... Trump on Thursday continued to downplay the threat, blaming the media and Democrats for creating a panic over the virus. ... In an effort to combat further fragmented messaging, Pence moved to seize control of all federal communications on the virus, requiring Cabinet officials and government experts to get clearance from his office before making public remarks, according to two senior administration officials.

“The move came after Trump grew frustrated about some of the public statements made by government officials warning the public, which the president viewed as overly alarmist ... The move drew immediate criticism from Democrats, who warned that Pence’s attempt at message control could quickly turn into an effort to suppress critical health information that the public needs. ... Adding economy-focused figures to the task force, Pence appointed Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and top White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow ... Pence suggested ... that both he and Azar would lead the government’s effort ... A former senior HHS official ... said Azar, public health officials and department employees have been ‘doing the measured playbook response’ to the coronavirus, while the White House has been obsessed with a ‘communications problem.’ For Azar, this created ‘a sense of irritation,’ the official said. ...

“One senior administration official involved in the response said many people were confused about how the response will be run. The official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, used a combination of expletives to describe the situation. The official said problems with a government-created coronavirus test have limited the United States’ capacity to rapidly increase testing.”

Trump said he put Pence in charge because he didn’t “have anything else to do.”

“White House aides, led by Mick Mulvaney, the president’s acting chief of staff, had debated for days whether the administration needed a point person to be the face of the response,” the Times reports. “The decision to put Mr. Pence in charge was made on Wednesday after the president told some people that the vice president did not ‘have anything else to do,’ according to people familiar with Mr. Trump’s comments.”

Trump said he can quickly bring in coronavirus experts. That's not how it works.

“The White House official charged with leading the U.S. response to deadly pandemics left nearly two years ago as his global health security team was disbanded ... Despite the mounting threat of a coronavirus outbreak in the United States, Trump said he has no regrets about those actions and that expertise and resources can be quickly ramped up to meet the current needs,” Beth Reinhard, Emma Brown and Neena Satija report. Experts disagree:

- “They have stable jobs with retirement plans,” said physician Cyrus Shahpar, who served at the CDC under Obama and during the first year of the Trump administration. “They are not going to quit their job at the university or quit their job in the local government to go join the U.S. federal government for six months because of coronavirus. It doesn't work like that.”
- “You build a fire department ahead of time. You don't wait for a fire,” said Tom Inglesby, director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security.
- “What you're seeing play out is that this response is starting from a standing start instead of a running start,” said Ron Klain, who served as “Ebola czar” under Obama in 2014. Klain noted that Pence and Azar already have full-time jobs. “Running this response is not like driving Uber. You don't do it a couple hours a day.”

Bigger picture, the virus is pushing Trump to rely on experts he has long maligned. “Throughout his more than three years as president, Trump has obsessed, at times conspiratorially, over what he calls the ‘deep state’ — the thousands of career government specialists in national security, intelligence, science and other areas whose expertise he shuns in part because he suspects they are disloyal saboteurs,” Ashley Parker and Philip Rucker note. (Our Fact Checker team reviews 13 of the most noteworthy coronavirus comments Trump made during his news conference.)

Trump's CDC chief, Robert Redfield, is under growing scrutiny, internally and externally.

“Hundreds of Americans were left stuck on a cruise ship that later became the single biggest source of U.S. coronavirus cases — a CDC decision,” Politico reports. “Dozens of public health labs are still waiting for tests that will allow them to diagnose coronavirus — a CDC responsibility. One of Redfield’s deputies on Monday urged businesses and schools to start preparing for the disease’s inevitable spread — stamping the CDC’s imprint on public fears ... Inside the health department, officials have complained that Redfield and CDC have been slow to resolve essential problems, like clarifying whether dozens of public health labs around the nation will soon have diagnostics capable of testing for coronavirus.”

Virus testing is widening after the first U.S. case of community transmission.

“The four-day delay in testing a California woman for coronavirus highlights how a faulty test and, until Thursday, a narrow definition of who should be tested have hindered the United States’ ability to track how widely the disease has spread,” Carolyn Y. Johnson and Laurie McGinley report. “Those concerns were stoked by the emergence of the nation’s first case of community transmission in Northern California, where hospital administrators say the patient, a woman, was not tested when clinicians requested it because she did not meet strict [CDC] criteria ... ‘We have just a few hundred testing kits in the state of California,’ Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) said Thursday at a news conference. ‘That’s simply inadequate to do justice to the kind of testing that is required to address this issue head on.’ ... Newsom said the state was working with the CDC to get more testing kits and the ability to do tests without shipping samples across the country.” New York is making its own coronavirus test after the CDC's test repeatedly failed, per BuzzFeed News.

Markets are on track for their worst week since the financial crisis.

“European indexes fell sharply, led by losses in the travel and resources sectors, continuing the slump in Asia earlier in the day,” Adam Taylor and Rick Noack report. “U.S. futures pointed to further losses on Wall Street at the open.”

South Korea now has 2,337 confirmed cases, the largest hot spot outside of China.

There are 78,824 confirmed cases in mainland China. South Korea is trying to rapidly test a large number of people, including more than 200,000 people who are members of a church in Daegu where the virus appeared to have spread widely, per Min Joo Kim and Adam Taylor.

Mongolia's president was put under a 14-day quarantine after traveling to China for one day. (Taylor)

Japan is scaling back the Olympic torch relay. It was due to start in Fukushima on March 26. A spokesman says that, though the procession may be downsized, it won't be cancelled. The International Olympic Committee said it remains fully committed to moving ahead with the Games as scheduled. (Simon Denyer)

---

Quote of the day

Former Baltimore mayor Catherine Pugh (D) was sentenced to three years in prison after pleading guilty to fraud, tax evasion and conspiracy. Responding to the contention by her defense attorneys that the public humiliation she endured should be considered as part of the punishment, U.S. District Judge Deborah K. Chasanow said: "Yes, the impact on Ms. Pugh has been great. But the impact on the city is also very great and very tragic." (Paul Schwartzman)

---

Social media speed read

Trump tried to pin the spread of the virus on Democrats in a now-deleted tweet:

Washington's Democratic governor gave this readout of his call with the V.P.:

All the leading Democratic presidential candidates attacked Trump's decisions:

Videos of the day

“The Daily Show” sent two correspondents to check in with black voters in South Carolina:

Stephen Colbert is not impressed by Trump's coronavirus plan:

Seth Meyers said this situation should give Trump pause about his cuts to health funding:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Why Bernie Sanders, the oldest presidential candidate, struggles so much with older voters
Date: Friday, February 28, 2020 10:31:06 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Uber

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Why Bernie Sanders, the oldest presidential candidate, struggles so much with older voters

CHARLESTON, S.C. – Throughout world history, seniors have rarely led revolutions. It's often younger idealists who storm barricades, draft declarations and topple established orders. Until Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.).

The 78-year-old front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination is an unlikely figurehead for a movement that advocates political revolution. The self-described democratic socialist captivates millennials, but he has largely failed to inspire voters in his own generation. At least so far.

Older people tend to be more settled in their political beliefs. They're more affluent than their younger counterparts, a factor that might make them warier of big structural changes. They tend to worry more about Sanders's age – and his heart attack – than younger voters who mostly haven't faced their own serious health struggles yet.

Mostly, though, elderly Democratic voters fear Sanders is too far to the left to defeat President Trump. Unlike the young whippersnappers who flock to Sanders's rallies, older folks remember the blowouts of 1988 and 1972 when their party nominated candidates who were more liberal than the country was ready to accept. In scores of interviews, they've expressed worry about repeating the mistakes of the past.

"I like Bernie, but I'm just afraid him tooting his socialist horn so much is going to hurt him," said Karen Griffin, 66, a volunteer for the local Democratic Party here who remains undecided about which alternative to Sanders she will vote for in Saturday's South Carolina primary. "A lot of the people that are my age vote. Growing up, we always heard socialism was scary, scary, scary. When my generation hears that term, it's scary!"

Bernie Sanders campaigns on Wednesday at Greenleaf Christian Church in Goldsboro, N.C. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

While Sanders won big in the Nevada caucuses last Saturday, the entrance polls highlighted a striking age gap. The septuagenarian won 65 percent of voters under the age of 30, 49 percent of 30- to 44-year-olds, 27 percent among 45- to 64-year-olds and just 12 percent among voters over 65. In that oldest cohort, which accounted for 28 percent of those voting, Sanders finished fourth – behind former vice president Joe Biden, Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) and Pete Buttigieg, the former mayor of South Bend, Ind.

Sanders similarly underperformed among seniors in the New Hampshire primary. And in the Iowa caucuses, which remain too close for the Associated Press to call even after the state Democratic Party completed a partial recount, the entrance polls show that Sanders received only 4 percent among Hawkeye State Democrats over the age of 65, compared to 48 percent of those under 30.

A new Monmouth University poll shows Biden leading in South Carolina among likely Democratic primary voters, with 36 percent, and a neck-and-neck contest for second place between

Sanders (16 percent) and billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer (15 percent). Sanders received 10 percent support among voters over 65 in the Palmetto State, per Monmouth, compared to 18 percent among those under 50.

During a rally on Thursday afternoon, Sanders declared that “we will beat Trump in a landslide” and “we will transform America” – if younger people vote at the same level as those 65 and older. “So I say to young people here, don’t complain about your student debt, don’t complain about climate change, don’t complain about racism or sexism or homophobia. Your complaints don’t mean anything. What means something is standing up and fighting,” the senator told a crowd of 4,700 in Richmond. Virginia is one of 14 states, plus the territory of American Samoa, that vote next Tuesday.

George McGovern, right, holds a snowball he made while campaigning as the Democratic nominee for president in September 1972 in Billings, Mont. (Bob Daugherty/AP)

George McGovern’s 1972 presidential campaign got Bruce Cunningham engaged in politics for the first time. He grew up in a Republican family in a conservative part of New York state, but the massacre of anti-war protesters at Kent State University in 1970 pushed Cunningham hard to the left. Now 65, he and his wife moved a few years ago to this affordable and adorable port city, where they dote on their four grandchildren who live nearby and plan to vote together for Biden in Saturday’s primary.

“McGovern was the Bernie Sanders of his day,” said Cunningham, a retired higher education administrator. “Bernie has also captivated the young folks, too, but I can’t really figure out how. McGovern was a steady guy. He had a real sense of dignity. To me, Bernie seems like a crotchety old man who is just shouting all the time.”

Cunningham remembers his family telling him, as he volunteered for McGovern almost half a century ago, that he’d become less liberal as he aged. He now sees truth in that old cliché, except when it comes to Sanders. “Bernie’s got some interesting ideas. I think they’re very unrealistic, though,” said Cunningham. “Like McGovern, I’m not sure Bernie can win. And, to me, the highest priority has got to be getting rid of the clown in the White House.”

His wife, Carol Cunningham, 62, suffers from multiple myeloma, an incurable but treatable form of blood cancer. The retired real estate agent worries that Sanders's Medicare-for-all proposal could push her off her private insurance plan and jeopardize her access to the doctors who she thinks do a great job taking care of her. "I'm just not sure Medicare-for-all is the right answer to the problems in health care," she said. "It's certainly not going to be great for everybody." The couple considered voting for Cory Booker until the senator from New Jersey dropped out. Now they both believe the former vice president has the best chance to topple Trump.

McGovern's name has been coming up a lot lately on the campaign trail, as Sanders's opponents across the Democratic establishment raise the specter that he's so liberal that he could get wiped out in a 1972-style landslide. McGovern lost 49 states that year, including his home state of South Dakota, which he represented in the Senate. Massachusetts was the only state Richard Nixon lost as he cruised to reelection for a second term, which he'd serve only 19 months of before resigning in disgrace.

Biden brings the 1972 election up in his stump speech. That's the year he got elected to the Senate as a 29-year-old. He likes to note that he toppled a GOP incumbent, even as Nixon carried his home state of Delaware with 60 percent. Making the case for his electability, Sanders has taken to reciting polls that show him leading the president in head-to-head matchups across Midwestern battleground states that flipped from backing Barack Obama in 2012 to Trump in 2016.

Check out how young the crowd was at Sanders's rally on Thursday in Spartanburg, S.C. (Matt Rourke/AP)

The Sanders campaign has stepped up efforts to make inroads with older voters. As he discusses Medicare-for-all, for example, Sanders has tweaked his pitch somewhat to emphasize ways that it would help older people. In Richmond, for example, he talked about how the government would now cover hearing aids, eyeglasses and home health care. Sanders's emphasis on his plan to expand Social Security in digital ads a few weeks ago was aimed at improving his standing with the 65-plus crowd. While Sanders once talked about socialist Eugene Debs as his political hero, now he praises mainstream Democrats like Franklin Roosevelt and his campaign has run commercials suggesting that his bold proposals follow in the footsteps of John F. Kennedy, someone Sanders ridiculed in decades past.

Before Thanksgiving and Christmas, the campaign even blasted out messaging advice to thousands of student supporters on how to persuade their parents and grandparents that they should vote for Sanders. "It's up to us as ... young people to make the moral appeal to our older relatives to join us in voting for Bernie," the document said, "because let's face it: they won't be around for as long to deal with the consequences of this election, but we will be.”

More recent polling, however, shows how much work Sanders still has his cut out for himself as he tries to expand his ceiling of support inside the Democratic Party. Last week's Washington Post-ABC News poll showed Sanders leading nationally among Democrats and Democratic-leaning voters – with twice as much support (at 32 percent) as second-place Biden (16 percent). The survey found Sanders winning 50 percent of those under 50 years old. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) was in second place with this under-50 cohort, with only 15 percent. But Sanders got just 14 percent of support from those over 50, putting him in third place behind former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg and Biden.

These are warning flags for Sanders because older voters tend to turn out at higher rates. For example, in the 2016 general election, the Pew Research Center calculated that baby boomers, and those in older generations, together accounted for 43 percent of eligible voters but cast 49 percent of the votes.

Sanders's theory of the case, which he outlines in every speech, is that he would be able to activate millions of young people to vote for the first time and therefore reduce the average age of the electorate. He struggled to do this in Iowa or New Hampshire but showed some evidence of success in Nevada. South Carolina, where most voters in the primary are expected to be African American, will be a tougher test.

The crowds at Pete Buttigieg's events, such as this one in North Charleston on Monday, tend to be much older. (Matt Rourke/AP)

South Carolina doesn't have partisan voter registration, which means Saturday's Democratic primary is open to everyone. A sizable swath of the electorate will therefore be moderate-minded independents who are uncomfortable with Sanders's revolutionary rhetoric.

Max McDuffie, 78, voted for Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) in the GOP primary four years ago but didn't vote in the general election because he disliked Trump and Hillary Clinton. "I thought I was a Republican – until Trump," said the retired military officer, who now considers himself an independent and lives in Goose Creek, which is home to a naval installation. He's voting for Buttigieg because he thinks the 38-year-old former mayor remains "uncorrupted."

The two issues McDuffie cares about the most are tackling climate change and reducing the national debt. On the hustings, you often meet highly informed voters like McDuffie who don't fit neatly in traditional boxes that pundits like to force voters into. Student loan debt isn't a top-of-mind concern for seniors. They're not agitating for tuition-free college, universal pre-K or anything that would change how they get their health care.

The trillions in new spending proposed by Sanders makes McDuffie and many other older voters I've spoken with here this week deeply uncomfortable. “All they do in Washington is spend money and money and money, and now he wants to spend more money,” he said. “It'll catch up with us eventually. I feel so sorry for our children and grandchildren.”

McDuffie's wife, Kathy, 75, remains undecided. She said she's interested in Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Steyer. “There's three people I don't want: Trump, Sanders or Warren,” said the retired postal worker. “All the others I'm pretty open to. But Trump, Sanders and Warren are too far out there. They're too divisive.”

Biden, 77, has been trying to reach voters like the McDuffies by emphasizing his desire to restore America to what it was like before Trump. When he was asked Thursday on NBC's “Today” show what it will mean if he doesn't win the nomination, Biden replied: “It says to me that we have moved away from our roots.” Speaking with a tone of disbelief, he added: “The idea that there's going to be this revolution? Americans aren't looking for a revolution. They're looking for progress.”

Coming Sunday: We will publish a special edition of The Daily 202, with insight and analysis on South Carolina's primary results and what they mean for Super Tuesday.

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost’s essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

---

More from South Carolina

Trevor, Mattie, Shawn and Julian Mitchell pose for a portrait on Wadmalaw Island, S.C., where a predominantly black population is weighing the best way forward from a past filled with migration and inequality. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Black voters here aren't particularly enthused about their options.

“Wadmalaw Island, about 23 miles south of Charleston, has roughly 5,000 residents, more than half of whom are black. After the Union Army seized South Carolina in the Civil War, white plantation owners fled the islands, leaving behind their lucrative rice fields and enslaved African Americans, many of whom were given plots of land,” Vanessa Williams reports.

“Presidential candidates rarely venture out to Wadmalaw or neighboring islands. Voters who want to see the candidates in person usually have to go to Charleston. That’s where Mildred Mitchell first saw Barack Obama ... She thought Obama’s policies ... were good for the country, and she hates that Trump seems intent on undoing his legacy. That was why she was leaning toward Biden, even though she was concerned about his age. ... ‘I want somebody that can beat Donald Trump,’ she said. Right now, she is not sure who that is. ... The Wadmalaw families have one thing in common: None expressed excitement about their choices, even as all vow to vote. They said they were frustrated by the large, chaotic field of candidates ... Mostly, they said, they felt a duty to participate in the election and a desire to defeat Trump. But there is no swooning like they all recalled from 2008, when they helped boost Obama’s candidacy at a critical moment.”

And they are worried about racism.

“Here in my hometown, voters I’ve talked to are worried and conflicted — and see the stakes in November as going far beyond ideology to involve history, legacy and the return of a kind of frank racism that many hoped was dead and buried,” columnist Eugene Robinson writes from Orangeburg, S.C. “It’s like racism is just coming out of the woodwork,’ said Bill Hamilton, 70, the retired sports information director at South Carolina State University, one of two historically black colleges in Orangeburg. ... ‘I just have a lot of disdain for Donald Trump,’ Hamilton said. ... Across town at the Kuckery — a popular lunch spot where the fried chicken is, well, just as fried chicken should be — I heard much the same thing from Juan L. Maulsby: ‘This election is a referendum on Trump. Trying to get him out.’ ... Maulsby said he believed ‘Biden has it in the bag here.’ ... The little I’ve heard about Bloomberg will not gladden the hearts of his campaign advisers. His debate performances discouraged a few voters I talked to and even left an impression of Trump-ishness among a couple of others.”

Miss Black America is trying to help Buttigieg gain support among black voters.

Ryann Richardson has been canvassing for Buttigieg in Charleston. “This was a packed 68 hours for the pageant queen, including a speech at a Mexican restaurant, two galas, three canvassing launches, a church service and roundtables with black female voters,” Jada Yuan reports. “The folks here take the reigning Miss Black America seriously. ... After South Carolina, she will head to Alabama for Super Tuesday. She was also stiletto-boots-on-the-ground for Buttigieg in Iowa, where she appeared at his victory party alongside other black women in the row behind him, cheering him on — which led Twitter critics and media outlets to accuse the campaign of using black women as political props. ... ‘It’s rather offensive,’ Richardson says, ‘this notion that adult black women lack the agency to decide where they stand and for whom they stand — and that when they stand there, they must only be stage scenery.’ ... She grilled Buttigieg about the shooting of Eric Logan, a black man in South Bend, by a white police officer. ‘I’ve never heard a politician accept accountability for a mistake ever, for a failure ever,’ she says. But Buttigieg did.”

Steyer has bet his campaign in this state on climate change.

“His argument that global warming will be felt most bluntly by black and brown communities is meant to resonate in a state where residents are already feeling its effects and where about 60 percent of voters in Saturday’s Democratic primary are African American,” Dino Grandoni reports. “Steyer may be making his last stand here, where polls show him running third ... Steyer’s strong showing in South Carolina is not just because of his message. He spent $52.9 million nationwide on his presidential campaign in January alone. ... Elsie Graves, a retired real estate agent who lives in Myrtle Beach, appreciates how she is not pestered with requests for donations when she visits Steyer’s website. ‘So I kind of like rich people in the race,’ she joked. Her bigger concern was depriving Biden of a vote in his bid to beat Sanders. But Graves, whose home suffered more than $20,000 in damage during Hurricane Matthew in 2016, said she was reassured by Steyer's commitment to act immediately on climate change. She said she will vote for him."

---

Looking to Super Tuesday and beyond

Joe Biden takes a selfie after a rally on Thursday in Conway, S.C. (Scott Olson/Getty Images)

Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) endorsed Biden this morning.

The 2016 vice presidential nominee hopes to give him a boost before Virginia's primary on Super Tuesday. "He reminds me of Harry S. Truman, an outwardly ordinary man whose work ethic, faith in the goodness of everyday Americans, and love of country made him a great President," Kaine said in a statement. A Wason Center poll of likely Democratic voters in Virginia released Friday shows Biden with a modest lead in the state, with Sanders in second and Bloomberg in third. (Jenna Portnoy)

Most Virginia moderates are not gravitating toward any particular Sanders alternative.

“In the affluent Northern Virginia suburbs that will be ground zero for Democratic turnout in November, an ‘anybody but Bernie’ movement is struggling to take hold,” Antonio Olivo reports. “Moderate Virginia voters have turned out in droves for Democratic candidates since [Trump’s] election. ... Now, those same voters are bouncing between presidential candidates, hoping that someone — anyone — can generate enough excitement to foil a November matchup between Sanders and Trump that they believe would be disastrous. ... Outside a Warren rally in Arlington ... Marguerite Metzler said that ‘it’s disturbing’ to think of Bloomberg, a former Republican, as the only viable alternative to Sanders. ... [She said Warren] may have blown her chances of winning in Virginia ... ‘by building such a strong association with free college and Medicare-for-all.’ After ticking off a list of misgivings over the other Democratic candidates — Biden lacks energy, Buttigieg is inexperienced — Metzler, who lives in Springfield, landed on a possible choice: ‘Maybe Amy?’”

Sanders shows few signs of making nice with fellow Democrats.

The front-runner this week has angered Florida Democrats with praise for Fidel Castro, upset some Jewish leaders with sharp criticism of the pro-Israel group AIPAC and preemptively spurned Bloomberg’s offer to help fund his campaign in the general election. “These disputes with other Democrats, even as he cements a position atop the presidential primary field, are prompting nervousness and alarm among many of them over whether Sanders can set aside decades-old habits of combativeness and confrontation and bring the party together to take on a president they revile,” Sean Sullivan and Michael Scherer report. “Adding to the Democratic anxiety, some are concerned about the small number of black voters among his audiences in South Carolina this week, suggesting he still may be struggling to attract that pillar of the Democratic coalition. ...

“In a recognition of these fractures, Democratic leaders have begun saying openly that some down-ballot party candidates may run on non-Sanders positions if he is the nominee. ‘It is not unusual for a party platform, or candidates for president, to have their own agenda they would put forth,' House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) told reporters Thursday. 'And it is not unusual for the House of Representatives to have its agenda to win as well.' Minutes earlier, Rep. Donna Shalala (D-Fla.) spoke on the House floor in support of a bill condemning Sanders's comments praising Castro's literacy program, which she called 'misguided, ill-informed, hurtful and unacceptable.'"

Democratic leaders are willing to risk damage to the party to stop Sanders.

The New York Times interviewed 93 of the 771 superdelegates and reports that the "vast majority" predicted no candidate would clinch the nomination during the primaries, which could result in a brokered convention. Only nine of those interviewed said Sanders should become the nominee purely on the basis of arriving at the convention with a plurality of pledged delegates. "House members share their Sanders fears on text-messaging chains. Bill Clinton, in calls with old friends, vents about the party getting wiped out in the general election. And officials in the national and state parties are increasingly anxious about splintered primaries on Super Tuesday and beyond," per the Times. Obama said he will "wholeheartedly support" the eventual nominee in a new fundraising pitch for the Democratic National Committee, per John Wagner.

Warren is in real danger of losing her home state.

"Sanders is outpacing Warren in polls across the Super Tuesday map. But one state stings more than the others: Massachusetts," Politico reports. "As recently as October, the two-term senator held a 20-percentage point lead over Sanders, according to a WBUR poll. In the latest version of the poll, released Friday, she trailed him by 8 points. Now, in the run-up to the March 3 primary, Sanders is going all in on his bid to pick off Massachusetts, culminating in a four-day music and canvassing festival in Worcester that begins Friday. ... It's not clear whether Warren will campaign in Massachusetts in the run-up to the primary."

A Ukrainian court has forced a probe into Biden.

"A court ruling in Ukraine has forced state investigators to open a probe into alleged pressure by then-vice president Joe Biden that led to the 2016 dismissal of Viktor Shokin as the country's prosecutor general," David Stern and Robyn Dixon report from Kyiv. "Trump last year pressed Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky for an investigation of this kind, leading to Trump's impeachment ... Shokin's firing, however, was not a unilateral action directed by Biden. It was prompted by a push for anti-corruption reforms developed at the State Department and coordinated with the European Union and the International Monetary Fund. Shokin's lawyer, Oleksandr Teleshetsky, said the probe was launched in response to a court order, after an appeal for action by Shokin. The State Bureau of Investigations confirmed a case was opened. ... Shokin has long been angered by what he sees as an unfair dismissal following foreign pressure."

Bloomberg released information about his heart health.

According to Bloomberg's doctor, Stephen Sisson at Johns Hopkins, "Bloomberg's left ventricular ejection fraction was 'normal' at 60-65%; his left ventricular cavity size and left ventricular function were also deemed 'normal.'" Bloomberg's campaign said Sanders should release the same left ventricular ejection fraction data. (CNN)

Bloomberg's campaign dangled the vice presidency in pursuit of Andrew Yang's endorsement.

Yang "didn't commit to join forces, as he considers his own political future," the Wall Street Journal reports. "A senior Bloomberg aide said Mr. Yang wasn't being seriously considered to be the former mayor's running mate if he secured the nomination."

Bloomberg says "stop and frisk" decreased crime. Data suggests it wasn't a major factor.

"A Washington Post analysis of crime patterns and other academic research found that major felonies declined during Bloomberg's three terms from 2002 through 2013, but the reduction did not correspond to the increase in stops by police," Dan Keating and Harry Stevens report.

“Crime has continued to fall since a federal judge deemed the practice an unconstitutional violation of civil rights in 2013. The disconnect suggests that an increase or decrease in crime happened largely for reasons independent of the aggressive expansion of the policy.”

As the opioid crisis grew, Bloomberg helped the Sackler family with some PR advice.

“The billionaire family whose company created and pushed the addictive painkiller OxyContin had managed to escape connection with the opioid crisis for years, but now two magazine pieces were portraying them as pain profiteers. ... Mortimer D.A. Sackler ... was openly furious. And so he turned to a person he knew and admired in the media industry,” writes Hannah Dreier for ProPublica. “I am meeting with Michael Bloomberg tomorrow morning at 10 am to seek his help and guidance on the current issues we are facing,’ Sackler wrote to Purdue’s top executives in December 2017. ‘I plan to discuss the following with him: 1. Current narrative vs the truth. 2. What advice does he have on how best to deal with it? 3. Does he have a journalist that he would recommend who could get the FULL story out there?’ ... Bloomberg advised Mortimer Sackler on how to handle negative coverage in 2017, and steered the family to a crisis communications specialist who had been his mayoral press secretary. In 2018, Bloomberg Philanthropies staff met with Sackler to discuss launching a joint initiative to combat the opioid crisis.”

An SEC coach became a Trump-loving Senate hopeful. His players no longer recognize him.

Former Auburn University coach Tommy Tuberville is competing with Jeff Sessions and others ahead of the GOP primary in Alabama next Tuesday to take on Sen. Doug Jones (D). At Auburn, Tuberville established a reputation as a mild-mannered coach and charming recruiter who led the Tigers to an undefeated record in 2004. But he's transformed himself, adopting some of the president's favorite language and Trump's propensity for exaggerations and falsehoods. "Perhaps more notably, Tuberville, who sold football recruits and built the Auburn program on a foundation of unity, has now taken on many of the president's more hard-line — and, often, xenophobic — talking points,” Kent Babb reports. “Some of Tuberville’s former Auburn players have noticed, pointing out that his persona on the campaign trail is strikingly different than the man who recruited and coached them. ‘That doesn’t reflect the person that I knew,’ said Devin Aromashodu, a former Auburn wide receiver who usually votes Democrat. ‘It sounds like two different people.’”

---

The coronavirus

Federal workers allegedly assisted evacuees without protective gear.

“Officials at the Department of Health and Human Services sent more than a dozen workers to receive the first Americans evacuated from Wuhan, China, the epicenter of the coronavirus outbreak, without proper training for infection control or appropriate protective gear, according to a whistleblower complaint,” Lena Sun and Yasmeen Abutaleb report. “The workers did not show symptoms of infection and were not tested for the virus, according to lawyers for the whistleblower, a senior HHS official based in Washington who oversees workers at the Administration for Children and Families, a unit within HHS. The whistleblower is seeking federal protection, alleging she was unfairly and improperly reassigned after raising concerns about the safety of these workers to HHS officials, including those within the office of Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar. She was told Feb. 19 that if she does not accept the new position in 15 days, which is March 5, she would be terminated. ...

“The complaint alleges HHS staffers were ‘improperly deployed’ and were ‘not properly trained or equipped to operate in a public health emergency situation.’ The complaint also alleges the workers were potentially exposed to coronavirus because appropriate steps were not taken to protect them and staffers were not trained in wearing personal protective equipment, even though they had face-to-face contact with returning passengers. ... In some instances, the teams were working alongside personnel from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in ‘full gown, gloves and hazmat attire,’ the complaint said. ... Several people within HHS voiced objections to sending the ACF personnel to receive passengers, according to a person familiar with the conversations ... A second person familiar with the situation said the workers were not tested for coronavirus because none of them met the criteria, which was restricted at that time to people with symptoms and either a recent trip to China or close contact with a person confirmed to be infected with covid19. If the workers had exhibited symptoms, appropriate protocol would have been followed.”

Vice President Pence took control of messaging amid criticism of his qualifications.

“Pence tried to project a sense of steady control over the government’s response to the coronavirus,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Josh Dawsey and Yasmeen Abutaleb report. “Pence appointed a doctor, Ambassador Debbie Birx, to serve as White House response coordinator for the virus, enforced tight control of the government’s public communications and added new members to a task force aimed at containing the spread of the outbreak. ... Trump on Thursday continued to downplay the threat, blaming the media and Democrats for creating a panic over the virus. ... In an effort to combat further fragmented messaging, Pence moved to seize control of all federal communications on the virus, requiring Cabinet officials and government experts to get clearance from his office before making public remarks, according to two senior administration officials.

“The move came after Trump grew frustrated about some of the public statements made by government officials warning the public, which the president viewed as overly alarmist ... The move drew immediate criticism from Democrats, who warned that Pence’s attempt at message control could quickly turn into an effort to suppress critical health information that the public needs. ... Adding economy-focused figures to the task force, Pence appointed Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and top White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow ... Pence suggested ... that both he and Azar would lead the government’s effort ... A former senior HHS official ... said Azar, public health officials and department employees have been ‘doing the measured playbook response’ to the coronavirus, while the White House has been obsessed with a ‘communications problem.’ For Azar, this created ‘a sense of irritation,’ the official said. ...

“One senior administration official involved in the response said many people were confused about how the response will be run. The official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, used a combination of expletives to describe the situation. The official said problems with a government-created coronavirus test have limited the United States’ capacity to rapidly increase testing.”

Trump said he put Pence in charge because he didn’t “have anything else to do.”

“White House aides, led by Mick Mulvaney, the president’s acting chief of staff, had debated for days whether the administration needed a point person to be the face of the response,” the Times reports. “The decision to put Mr. Pence in charge was made on Wednesday after the president told some people that the vice president did not ‘have anything else to do,’ according to people familiar with Mr. Trump’s comments.”

Trump said he can quickly bring in coronavirus experts.

That's not how it works.

“The White House official charged with leading the U.S. response to deadly pandemics left nearly two years ago as his global health security team was disbanded ... Despite the mounting threat of a coronavirus outbreak in the United States, Trump said he has no regrets about those actions and that expertise and resources can be quickly ramped up to meet the current needs,” Beth Reinhard, Emma Brown and Neena Satija report. Experts disagree:

- “They have stable jobs with retirement plans,” said physician Cyrus Shahpar, who served at the CDC under Obama and during the first year of the Trump administration. “They are not going to quit their job at the university or quit their job in the local government to go join the U.S. federal government for six months because of coronavirus. It doesn't work like that.”
- “You build a fire department ahead of time. You don't wait for a fire,” said Tom Inglesby, director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security.
- “What you're seeing play out is that this response is starting from a standing start instead of a running start,” said Ron Klain, who served as “Ebola czar” under Obama in 2014. Klain noted that Pence and Azar already have full-time jobs. “Running this response is not like driving Uber. You don't do it a couple hours a day.”

Bigger picture, the virus is pushing Trump to rely on experts he has long maligned. “Throughout his more than three years as president, Trump has obsessed, at times conspiratorially, over what he calls the ‘deep state’ — the thousands of career government specialists in national security, intelligence, science and other areas whose expertise he shuns in part because he suspects they are disloyal saboteurs,” Ashley Parker and Philip Rucker note. (Our Fact Checker team reviews 13 of the most noteworthy coronavirus comments Trump made during his news conference.)

Trump's CDC chief, Robert Redfield, is under growing

scrutiny, internally and externally.

“Hundreds of Americans were left stuck on a cruise ship that later became the single biggest source of U.S. coronavirus cases — a CDC decision,” Politico reports. “Dozens of public health labs are still waiting for tests that will allow them to diagnose coronavirus — a CDC responsibility. One of Redfield’s deputies on Monday urged businesses and schools to start preparing for the disease’s inevitable spread — stamping the CDC’s imprint on public fears ... Inside the health department, officials have complained that Redfield and CDC have been slow to resolve essential problems, like clarifying whether dozens of public health labs around the nation will soon have diagnostics capable of testing for coronavirus.”

Virus testing is widening after the first U.S. case of community transmission.

“The four-day delay in testing a California woman for coronavirus highlights how a faulty test and, until Thursday, a narrow definition of who should be tested have hindered the United States’ ability to track how widely the disease has spread,” Carolyn Y. Johnson and Laurie McGinley report. “Those concerns were stoked by the emergence of the nation’s first case of community transmission in Northern California, where hospital administrators say the patient, a woman, was not tested when clinicians requested it because she did not meet strict [CDC] criteria ... ‘We have just a few hundred testing kits in the state of California,’ Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) said Thursday at a news conference. ‘That’s simply inadequate to do justice to the kind of testing that is required to address this issue head on.’ ... Newsom said the state was working with the CDC to get more testing kits and the ability to do tests without shipping samples across the country.” New York is making its own coronavirus test after the CDC's test repeatedly failed, per BuzzFeed News.

Markets are on track for their worst week since the financial crisis.

“European indexes fell sharply, led by losses in the travel and resources sectors, continuing the slump in Asia earlier in the day,” Adam Taylor and

Rick Noack report. “U.S. futures pointed to further losses on Wall Street at the open.”

South Korea now has 2,337 confirmed cases, the largest hot spot outside of China.

There are 78,824 confirmed cases in mainland China. South Korea is trying to rapidly test a large number of people, including more than 200,000 people who are members of a church in Daegu where the virus appeared to have spread widely, per Min Joo Kim and Adam Taylor.

Mongolia's president was put under a 14-day quarantine after traveling to China for one day. (Taylor)

Japan is scaling back the Olympic torch relay. It was due to start in Fukushima on March 26. A spokesman says that, though the procession may be downsized, it won't be cancelled. The International Olympic Committee said it remains fully committed to moving ahead with the Games as scheduled. (Simon Denyer)

---

Quote of the day

Former Baltimore mayor Catherine Pugh (D) was sentenced to three years in prison after pleading guilty to fraud, tax evasion and conspiracy. Responding to the contention by her defense attorneys that the public humiliation she endured should be considered as part of the punishment, U.S. District Judge Deborah K. Chasanow said: “Yes, the impact on Ms. Pugh has been great. But the impact on the city is also very great and very tragic.” (Paul Schwartzman)

---

Social media speed read

Trump tried to pin the spread of the virus on Democrats in a now-deleted

tweet:

Washington's Democratic governor gave this readout of his call with the V.P.:

All the leading Democratic presidential candidates attacked Trump's decisions:

Videos of the day

“The Daily Show” sent two correspondents to check in with black voters in South Carolina:

Stephen Colbert is not impressed by Trump's coronavirus plan:

Seth Meyers said this situation should give Trump pause about his cuts to health funding:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Why Bernie Sanders, the oldest presidential candidate, struggles so much with older voters
Date: Friday, February 28, 2020 10:31:33 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Uber

By James Hohmann

with Mariana Alfaro

✉ Email

Why Bernie Sanders, the oldest presidential candidate, struggles so much with older voters

CHARLESTON, S.C. – Throughout world history, seniors have rarely led revolutions. It's often younger idealists who storm barricades, draft declarations and topple established orders. Until Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.).

The 78-year-old front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination is an unlikely figurehead for a movement that advocates political revolution. The self-described democratic socialist captivates millennials, but he has largely failed to inspire voters in his own generation. At least so far.

Older people tend to be more settled in their political beliefs. They're more affluent than their younger counterparts, a factor that might make them warier of big structural changes. They tend to worry more about Sanders's age – and his heart attack – than younger voters who mostly haven't faced their own serious health struggles yet.

Mostly, though, elderly Democratic voters fear Sanders is too far to the left to defeat President Trump. Unlike the young whippersnappers who flock to Sanders's rallies, older folks remember the blowouts of 1988 and 1972 when their party nominated candidates who were more liberal than the country was ready to accept. In scores of interviews, they've expressed worry about repeating the mistakes of the past.

"I like Bernie, but I'm just afraid him tooting his socialist horn so much is going to hurt him," said Karen Griffin, 66, a volunteer for the local Democratic Party here who remains undecided about which alternative to Sanders she will vote for in Saturday's South Carolina primary. "A lot of the people that are my age vote. Growing up, we always heard socialism was scary, scary, scary. When my generation hears that term, it's scary!"

Bernie Sanders campaigns on Wednesday at Greenleaf Christian Church in Goldsboro, N.C. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

While Sanders won big in the Nevada caucuses last Saturday, the entrance polls highlighted a striking age gap. The septuagenarian won 65 percent of voters under the age of 30, 49 percent of 30- to 44-year-olds, 27 percent among 45- to 64-year-olds and just 12 percent among voters over 65. In that oldest cohort, which accounted for 28 percent of those voting, Sanders finished fourth – behind former vice president Joe Biden, Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) and Pete Buttigieg, the former mayor of South Bend, Ind.

Sanders similarly underperformed among seniors in the New Hampshire primary. And in the Iowa caucuses, which remain too close for the Associated Press to call even after the state Democratic Party completed a partial recount, the entrance polls show that Sanders received only 4 percent among Hawkeye State Democrats over the age of 65, compared to 48 percent of those under 30.

A new Monmouth University poll shows Biden leading in South Carolina among likely Democratic primary voters, with 36 percent, and a neck-and-neck contest for second place between

Sanders (16 percent) and billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer (15 percent). Sanders received 10 percent support among voters over 65 in the Palmetto State, per Monmouth, compared to 18 percent among those under 50.

During a rally on Thursday afternoon, Sanders declared that “we will beat Trump in a landslide” and “we will transform America” – if younger people vote at the same level as those 65 and older. “So I say to young people here, don’t complain about your student debt, don’t complain about climate change, don’t complain about racism or sexism or homophobia. Your complaints don’t mean anything. What means something is standing up and fighting,” the senator told a crowd of 4,700 in Richmond. Virginia is one of 14 states, plus the territory of American Samoa, that vote next Tuesday.

George McGovern, right, holds a snowball he made while campaigning as the Democratic nominee for president in September 1972 in Billings, Mont. (Bob Daugherty/AP)

George McGovern’s 1972 presidential campaign got Bruce Cunningham engaged in politics for the first time. He grew up in a Republican family in a conservative part of New York state, but the massacre of anti-war protesters at Kent State University in 1970 pushed Cunningham hard to the left. Now 65, he and his wife moved a few years ago to this affordable and adorable port city, where they dote on their four grandchildren who live nearby and plan to vote together for Biden in Saturday’s primary.

“McGovern was the Bernie Sanders of his day,” said Cunningham, a retired higher education administrator. “Bernie has also captivated the young folks, too, but I can’t really figure out how. McGovern was a steady guy. He had a real sense of dignity. To me, Bernie seems like a crotchety old man who is just shouting all the time.”

Cunningham remembers his family telling him, as he volunteered for McGovern almost half a century ago, that he’d become less liberal as he aged. He now sees truth in that old cliché, except when it comes to Sanders. “Bernie’s got some interesting ideas. I think they’re very unrealistic, though,” said Cunningham. “Like McGovern, I’m not sure Bernie can win. And, to me, the highest priority has got to be getting rid of the clown in the White House.”

His wife, Carol Cunningham, 62, suffers from multiple myeloma, an incurable but treatable form of blood cancer. The retired real estate agent worries that Sanders's Medicare-for-all proposal could push her off her private insurance plan and jeopardize her access to the doctors who she thinks do a great job taking care of her. "I'm just not sure Medicare-for-all is the right answer to the problems in health care," she said. "It's certainly not going to be great for everybody." The couple considered voting for Cory Booker until the senator from New Jersey dropped out. Now they both believe the former vice president has the best chance to topple Trump.

McGovern's name has been coming up a lot lately on the campaign trail, as Sanders's opponents across the Democratic establishment raise the specter that he's so liberal that he could get wiped out in a 1972-style landslide. McGovern lost 49 states that year, including his home state of South Dakota, which he represented in the Senate. Massachusetts was the only state Richard Nixon lost as he cruised to reelection for a second term, which he'd serve only 19 months of before resigning in disgrace.

Biden brings the 1972 election up in his stump speech. That's the year he got elected to the Senate as a 29-year-old. He likes to note that he toppled a GOP incumbent, even as Nixon carried his home state of Delaware with 60 percent. Making the case for his electability, Sanders has taken to reciting polls that show him leading the president in head-to-head matchups across Midwestern battleground states that flipped from backing Barack Obama in 2012 to Trump in 2016.

Check out how young the crowd was at Sanders's rally on Thursday in Spartanburg, S.C. (Matt Rourke/AP)

The Sanders campaign has stepped up efforts to make inroads with older voters. As he discusses Medicare-for-all, for example, Sanders has tweaked his pitch somewhat to emphasize ways that it would help older people. In Richmond, for example, he talked about how the government would now cover hearing aids, eyeglasses and home health care. Sanders's emphasis on his plan to expand Social Security in digital ads a few weeks ago was aimed at improving his standing with the 65-plus crowd. While Sanders once talked about socialist Eugene Debs as his political hero, now he praises mainstream Democrats like Franklin Roosevelt and his campaign has run commercials suggesting that his bold proposals follow in the footsteps of John F. Kennedy, someone Sanders ridiculed in decades past.

Before Thanksgiving and Christmas, the campaign even blasted out messaging advice to thousands of student supporters on how to persuade their parents and grandparents that they should vote for Sanders. "It's up to us as ... young people to make the moral appeal to our older relatives to join us in voting for Bernie," the document said, "because let's face it: they won't be around for as long to deal with the consequences of this election, but we will be.”

More recent polling, however, shows how much work Sanders still has his cut out for himself as he tries to expand his ceiling of support inside the Democratic Party. Last week's Washington Post-ABC News poll showed Sanders leading nationally among Democrats and Democratic-leaning voters – with twice as much support (at 32 percent) as second-place Biden (16 percent). The survey found Sanders winning 50 percent of those under 50 years old. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) was in second place with this under-50 cohort, with only 15 percent. But Sanders got just 14 percent of support from those over 50, putting him in third place behind former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg and Biden.

These are warning flags for Sanders because older voters tend to turn out at higher rates. For example, in the 2016 general election, the Pew Research Center calculated that baby boomers, and those in older generations, together accounted for 43 percent of eligible voters but cast 49 percent of the votes.

Sanders's theory of the case, which he outlines in every speech, is that he would be able to activate millions of young people to vote for the first time and therefore reduce the average age of the electorate. He struggled to do this in Iowa or New Hampshire but showed some evidence of success in Nevada. South Carolina, where most voters in the primary are expected to be African American, will be a tougher test.

The crowds at Pete Buttigieg's events, such as this one in North Charleston on Monday, tend to be much older. (Matt Rourke/AP)

South Carolina doesn't have partisan voter registration, which means Saturday's Democratic primary is open to everyone. A sizable swath of the electorate will therefore be moderate-minded independents who are uncomfortable with Sanders's revolutionary rhetoric.

Max McDuffie, 78, voted for Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) in the GOP primary four years ago but didn't vote in the general election because he disliked Trump and Hillary Clinton. "I thought I was a Republican – until Trump," said the retired military officer, who now considers himself an independent and lives in Goose Creek, which is home to a naval installation. He's voting for Buttigieg because he thinks the 38-year-old former mayor remains "uncorrupted."

The two issues McDuffie cares about the most are tackling climate change and reducing the national debt. On the hustings, you often meet highly informed voters like McDuffie who don't fit neatly in traditional boxes that pundits like to force voters into. Student loan debt isn't a top-of-mind concern for seniors. They're not agitating for tuition-free college, universal pre-K or anything that would change how they get their health care.

The trillions in new spending proposed by Sanders makes McDuffie and many other older voters I've spoken with here this week deeply uncomfortable. “All they do in Washington is spend money and money and money, and now he wants to spend more money,” he said. “It'll catch up with us eventually. I feel so sorry for our children and grandchildren.”

McDuffie's wife, Kathy, 75, remains undecided. She said she's interested in Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Steyer. “There's three people I don't want: Trump, Sanders or Warren,” said the retired postal worker. “All the others I'm pretty open to. But Trump, Sanders and Warren are too far out there. They're too divisive.”

Biden, 77, has been trying to reach voters like the McDuffies by emphasizing his desire to restore America to what it was like before Trump. When he was asked Thursday on NBC's “Today” show what it will mean if he doesn't win the nomination, Biden replied: “It says to me that we have moved away from our roots.” Speaking with a tone of disbelief, he added: “The idea that there's going to be this revolution? Americans aren't looking for a revolution. They're looking for progress.”

Coming Sunday: We will publish a special edition of The Daily 202, with insight and analysis on South Carolina's primary results and what they mean for Super Tuesday.

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost's essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

---

More from South Carolina

Trevor, Mattie, Shawn and Julian Mitchell pose for a portrait on Wadmalaw Island, S.C., where a predominantly black population is weighing the best way forward from a past filled with migration and inequality. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Black voters here aren't particularly enthused about their options.

“Wadmalaw Island, about 23 miles south of Charleston, has roughly 5,000 residents, more than half of whom are black. After the Union Army seized

South Carolina in the Civil War, white plantation owners fled the islands, leaving behind their lucrative rice fields and enslaved African Americans, many of whom were given plots of land,” Vanessa Williams reports.

“Presidential candidates rarely venture out to Wadmalaw or neighboring islands. Voters who want to see the candidates in person usually have to go to Charleston. That’s where Mildred Mitchell first saw Barack Obama ... She thought Obama’s policies ... were good for the country, and she hates that Trump seems intent on undoing his legacy. That was why she was leaning toward Biden, even though she was concerned about his age. ... ‘I want somebody that can beat Donald Trump,’ she said. Right now, she is not sure who that is. ... The Wadmalaw families have one thing in common: None expressed excitement about their choices, even as all vow to vote. They said they were frustrated by the large, chaotic field of candidates ... Mostly, they said, they felt a duty to participate in the election and a desire to defeat Trump. But there is no swooning like they all recalled from 2008, when they helped boost Obama’s candidacy at a critical moment.”

And they are worried about racism.

“Here in my hometown, voters I’ve talked to are worried and conflicted — and see the stakes in November as going far beyond ideology to involve history, legacy and the return of a kind of frank racism that many hoped was dead and buried,” columnist Eugene Robinson writes from Orangeburg, S.C. “It’s like racism is just coming out of the woodwork,’ said Bill Hamilton, 70, the retired sports information director at South Carolina State University, one of two historically black colleges in Orangeburg. ... ‘I just have a lot of disdain for Donald Trump,’ Hamilton said. ... Across town at the Kuckery — a popular lunch spot where the fried chicken is, well, just as fried chicken should be — I heard much the same thing from Juan L. Maulsby: ‘This election is a referendum on Trump. Trying to get him out.’ ... Maulsby said he believed ‘Biden has it in the bag here.’ ... The little I’ve heard about Bloomberg will not gladden the hearts of his campaign advisers. His debate performances discouraged a few voters I talked to and even left an impression of Trump-ishness among a couple of others.”

Miss Black America is trying to help Buttigieg gain support among black voters.

Ryann Richardson has been canvassing for Buttigieg in Charleston. “This was a packed 68 hours for the pageant queen, including a speech at a Mexican restaurant, two galas, three canvassing launches, a church service and roundtables with black female voters,” Jada Yuan reports. “The folks here take the reigning Miss Black America seriously. ... After South Carolina, she will head to Alabama for Super Tuesday. She was also stiletto-boots-on-the-ground for Buttigieg in Iowa, where she appeared at his victory party alongside other black women in the row behind him, cheering him on — which led Twitter critics and media outlets to accuse the campaign of using black women as political props. ... ‘It’s rather offensive,’ Richardson says, ‘this notion that adult black women lack the agency to decide where they stand and for whom they stand — and that when they stand there, they must only be stage scenery.’ ... She grilled Buttigieg about the shooting of Eric Logan, a black man in South Bend, by a white police officer. ‘I’ve never heard a politician accept accountability for a mistake ever, for a failure ever,’ she says. But Buttigieg did.”

Steyer has bet his campaign in this state on climate change.

“His argument that global warming will be felt most bluntly by black and brown communities is meant to resonate in a state where residents are already feeling its effects and where about 60 percent of voters in Saturday’s Democratic primary are African American,” Dino Grandoni reports. “Steyer may be making his last stand here, where polls show him running third ... Steyer’s strong showing in South Carolina is not just because of his message. He spent $52.9 million nationwide on his presidential campaign in January alone. ... Elsie Graves, a retired real estate agent who lives in Myrtle Beach, appreciates how she is not pestered with requests for donations when she visits Steyer’s website. ‘So I kind of like rich people in the race,’ she joked. Her bigger concern was depriving Biden of a vote in his bid to beat Sanders. But Graves, whose home suffered more than $20,000 in damage during Hurricane Matthew in 2016, said she was reassured by Steyer's commitment to act immediately on climate change. She said she will vote for him."

---

Looking to Super Tuesday and beyond

Joe Biden takes a selfie after a rally on Thursday in Conway, S.C. (Scott Olson/Getty Images)

Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) endorsed Biden this morning.

The 2016 vice presidential nominee hopes to give him a boost before Virginia's primary on Super Tuesday. "He reminds me of Harry S. Truman, an outwardly ordinary man whose work ethic, faith in the goodness of everyday Americans, and love of country made him a great President," Kaine said in a statement. A Wason Center poll of likely Democratic voters in Virginia released Friday shows Biden with a modest lead in the state, with Sanders in second and Bloomberg in third. (Jenna Portnoy)

Most Virginia moderates are not gravitating toward any particular Sanders alternative.

"In the affluent Northern Virginia suburbs that will be ground zero for Democratic turnout in November, an ‘anybody but Bernie’ movement is struggling to take hold,” Antonio Olivo reports. “Moderate Virginia voters have turned out in droves for Democratic candidates since [Trump’s] election. ... Now, those same voters are bouncing between presidential candidates, hoping that someone — anyone — can generate enough excitement to foil a November matchup between Sanders and Trump that they believe would be disastrous. ... Outside a Warren rally in Arlington ... Marguerite Metzler said that ‘it’s disturbing’ to think of Bloomberg, a former Republican, as the only viable alternative to Sanders. ... [She said Warren] may have blown her chances of winning in Virginia ... ‘by building such a strong association with free college and Medicare-for-all.’ After ticking off a list of misgivings over the other Democratic candidates — Biden lacks energy, Buttigieg is inexperienced — Metzler, who lives in Springfield, landed on a possible choice: ‘Maybe Amy?’”

Sanders shows few signs of making nice with fellow Democrats.

The front-runner this week has angered Florida Democrats with praise for Fidel Castro, upset some Jewish leaders with sharp criticism of the pro-Israel group AIPAC and preemptively spurned Bloomberg’s offer to help fund his campaign in the general election. “These disputes with other Democrats, even as he cements a position atop the presidential primary field, are prompting nervousness and alarm among many of them over whether Sanders can set aside decades-old habits of combativeness and confrontation and bring the party together to take on a president they revile,” Sean Sullivan and Michael Scherer report. “Adding to the Democratic anxiety, some are concerned about the small number of black voters among his audiences in South Carolina this week, suggesting he still may be struggling to attract that pillar of the Democratic coalition. ...

“In a recognition of these fractures, Democratic leaders have begun saying openly that some down-ballot party candidates may run on non-Sanders positions if he is the nominee. ‘It is not unusual for a party platform, or candidates for president, to have their own agenda they would put forth,’ House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.)

told reporters Thursday. 'And it is not unusual for the House of Representatives to have its agenda to win as well.' Minutes earlier, Rep. Donna Shalala (D-Fla.) spoke on the House floor in support of a bill condemning Sanders's comments praising Castro's literacy program, which she called 'misguided, ill-informed, hurtful and unacceptable.'"

Democratic leaders are willing to risk damage to the party to stop Sanders.

The New York Times interviewed 93 of the 771 superdelegates and reports that the "vast majority" predicted no candidate would clinch the nomination during the primaries, which could result in a brokered convention. Only nine of those interviewed said Sanders should become the nominee purely on the basis of arriving at the convention with a plurality of pledged delegates. "House members share their Sanders fears on text-messaging chains. Bill Clinton, in calls with old friends, vents about the party getting wiped out in the general election. And officials in the national and state parties are increasingly anxious about splintered primaries on Super Tuesday and beyond," per the Times. Obama said he will "wholeheartedly support" the eventual nominee in a new fundraising pitch for the Democratic National Committee, per John Wagner.

Warren is in real danger of losing her home state.

"Sanders is outpacing Warren in polls across the Super Tuesday map. But one state stings more than the others: Massachusetts," Politico reports. "As recently as October, the two-term senator held a 20-percentage point lead over Sanders, according to a WBUR poll. In the latest version of the poll, released Friday, she trailed him by 8 points. Now, in the run-up to the March 3 primary, Sanders is going all in on his bid to pick off Massachusetts, culminating in a four-day music and canvassing festival in Worcester that begins Friday. ... It's not clear whether Warren will campaign in Massachusetts in the run-up to the primary."

A Ukrainian court has forced a probe into Biden.

"A court ruling in Ukraine has forced state investigators to open a probe into alleged pressure by then-vice president Joe Biden that led to the 2016

dismissal of Viktor Shokin as the country's prosecutor general," David Stern and Robyn Dixon report from Kyiv. "Trump last year pressed Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky for an investigation of this kind, leading to Trump's impeachment ... Shokin's firing, however, was not a unilateral action directed by Biden. It was prompted by a push for anti-corruption reforms developed at the State Department and coordinated with the European Union and the International Monetary Fund. Shokin's lawyer, Oleksandr Teleshetsky, said the probe was launched in response to a court order, after an appeal for action by Shokin. The State Bureau of Investigations confirmed a case was opened. ... Shokin has long been angered by what he sees as an unfair dismissal following foreign pressure."

Bloomberg released information about his heart health.

According to Bloomberg's doctor, Stephen Sisson at Johns Hopkins, "Bloomberg's left ventricular ejection fraction was 'normal' at 60-65%; his left ventricular cavity size and left ventricular function were also deemed 'normal.'" Bloomberg's campaign said Sanders should release the same left ventricular ejection fraction data. (CNN)

Bloomberg's campaign dangled the vice presidency in pursuit of Andrew Yang's endorsement.

Yang "didn't commit to join forces, as he considers his own political future," the Wall Street Journal reports. "A senior Bloomberg aide said Mr. Yang wasn't being seriously considered to be the former mayor's running mate if he secured the nomination."

Bloomberg says "stop and frisk" decreased crime. Data suggests it wasn't a major factor.

"A Washington Post analysis of crime patterns and other academic research found that major felonies declined during Bloomberg's three terms from 2002 through 2013, but the reduction did not correspond to the increase in stops by police," Dan Keating and Harry Stevens report. "Crime has continued to fall since a federal judge deemed the practice an unconstitutional violation of civil rights in 2013. The disconnect suggests that an increase or decrease in crime happened largely for reasons independent of the aggressive expansion of the policy.”

As the opioid crisis grew, Bloomberg helped the Sackler family with some PR advice.

“The billionaire family whose company created and pushed the addictive painkiller OxyContin had managed to escape connection with the opioid crisis for years, but now two magazine pieces were portraying them as pain profiteers. ... Mortimer D.A. Sackler ... was openly furious. And so he turned to a person he knew and admired in the media industry,” writes Hannah Dreier for ProPublica. “I am meeting with Michael Bloomberg tomorrow morning at 10 am to seek his help and guidance on the current issues we are facing,’ Sackler wrote to Purdue’s top executives in December 2017. ‘I plan to discuss the following with him: 1. Current narrative vs the truth. 2. What advice does he have on how best to deal with it? 3. Does he have a journalist that he would recommend who could get the FULL story out there?’ ... Bloomberg advised Mortimer Sackler on how to handle negative coverage in 2017, and steered the family to a crisis communications specialist who had been his mayoral press secretary. In 2018, Bloomberg Philanthropies staff met with Sackler to discuss launching a joint initiative to combat the opioid crisis.”

An SEC coach became a Trump-loving Senate hopeful. His players no longer recognize him.

Former Auburn University coach Tommy Tuberville is competing with Jeff Sessions and others ahead of the GOP primary in Alabama next Tuesday to take on Sen. Doug Jones (D). At Auburn, Tuberville established a reputation as a mild-mannered coach and charming recruiter who led the Tigers to an undefeated record in 2004. But he's transformed himself, adopting some of the president's favorite language and Trump's propensity for exaggerations and falsehoods. "Perhaps more notably, Tuberville, who sold football recruits and built the Auburn program on a foundation of unity, has now taken on many of the president's more hard-line — and, often, xenophobic — talking points,” Kent Babb reports. “Some of Tuberville’s former Auburn players have noticed, pointing out that his persona on the campaign trail is strikingly different than the man who recruited and coached them. ‘That doesn’t reflect the person that I knew,’ said Devin Aromashodu, a former Auburn wide receiver who usually votes Democrat. ‘It sounds like two different people.’”

---

The coronavirus

Federal workers allegedly assisted evacuees without protective gear.

“Officials at the Department of Health and Human Services sent more than a dozen workers to receive the first Americans evacuated from Wuhan, China, the epicenter of the coronavirus outbreak, without proper training for infection control or appropriate protective gear, according to a whistleblower complaint,” Lena Sun and Yasmeen Abutaleb report. “The workers did not show symptoms of infection and were not tested for the virus, according to lawyers for the whistleblower, a senior HHS official based in Washington who oversees workers at the Administration for Children and Families, a unit within HHS. The whistleblower is seeking federal protection, alleging she was unfairly and improperly reassigned after raising concerns about the safety of these workers to HHS officials, including those within the office of Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar. She was told Feb. 19 that if she does not accept the new position in 15 days, which is March 5, she would be terminated. ...

“The complaint alleges HHS staffers were ‘improperly deployed’ and were ‘not properly trained or equipped to operate in a public health emergency situation.’ The complaint also alleges the workers were potentially exposed to coronavirus because appropriate steps were not taken to protect them and staffers were not trained in wearing personal protective equipment, even though they had face-to-face contact with returning passengers. ... In some instances, the teams were working alongside personnel from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in ‘full gown, gloves and hazmat attire,’ the complaint said. ... Several people within HHS voiced objections to sending the ACF personnel to receive passengers, according to a person familiar with the conversations ... A second person familiar with the situation said the workers were not tested for coronavirus because none of them met the criteria, which was restricted at that time to people with symptoms and either a recent trip to China or close contact with a person confirmed to be infected with covid19. If the workers had exhibited symptoms, appropriate protocol would have been followed.”

Vice President Pence took control of messaging amid criticism of his qualifications.

“Pence tried to project a sense of steady control over the government’s response to the coronavirus,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Josh Dawsey and Yasmeen Abutaleb report. “Pence appointed a doctor, Ambassador Debbie Birx, to serve as White House response coordinator for the virus, enforced tight control of the government’s public communications and added new members to a task force aimed at containing the spread of the outbreak. ... Trump on Thursday continued to downplay the threat, blaming the media and Democrats for creating a panic over the virus. ... In an effort to combat further fragmented messaging, Pence moved to seize control of all federal communications on the virus, requiring Cabinet officials and government experts to get clearance from his office before making public remarks, according to two senior administration officials.

“The move came after Trump grew frustrated about some of the public statements made by government officials warning the public, which the president viewed as overly alarmist ... The move drew immediate criticism from Democrats, who warned that Pence’s attempt at message control could quickly turn into an effort to suppress critical health information that the public needs. ... Adding economy-focused figures to the task force, Pence appointed Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and top White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow ... Pence suggested ... that both he and Azar would lead the government’s effort ... A former senior HHS official ... said Azar, public health officials and department employees have been ‘doing the measured playbook response’ to the coronavirus, while the White House has been obsessed with a ‘communications problem.’ For Azar, this created ‘a sense of irritation,’ the official said. ...

“One senior administration official involved in the response said many people were confused about how the response will be run. The official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, used a combination of expletives to describe the situation. The official said problems with a government-created coronavirus test have limited the United States’ capacity to rapidly increase testing.”

Trump said he put Pence in charge because he didn’t “have anything else to do.”

“White House aides, led by Mick Mulvaney, the president’s acting chief of staff, had debated for days whether the administration needed a point person to be the face of the response,” the Times reports. “The decision to put Mr. Pence in charge was made on Wednesday after the president told some people that the vice president did not ‘have anything else to do,’ according to people familiar with Mr. Trump’s comments.”

Trump said he can quickly bring in coronavirus experts. That's not how it works.

“The White House official charged with leading the U.S. response to deadly pandemics left nearly two years ago as his global health security team was disbanded ... Despite the mounting threat of a coronavirus outbreak in the United States, Trump said he has no regrets about those actions and that expertise and resources can be quickly ramped up to meet the current needs,” Beth Reinhard, Emma Brown and Neena Satija report. Experts disagree:

- “They have stable jobs with retirement plans,” said physician Cyrus Shahpar, who served at the CDC under Obama and during the first year of the Trump administration. “They are not going to quit their job at the university or quit their job in the local government to go join the U.S. federal government for six months because of coronavirus. It doesn't work like that.”
- “You build a fire department ahead of time. You don't wait for a fire,” said Tom Inglesby, director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security.
- “What you're seeing play out is that this response is starting from a standing start instead of a running start,” said Ron Klain, who served as “Ebola czar” under Obama in 2014. Klain noted that Pence and Azar already have full-time jobs. “Running this response is not like driving Uber. You don't do it a couple hours a day.”

Bigger picture, the virus is pushing Trump to rely on experts he has long maligned. “Throughout his more than three years as president, Trump has obsessed, at times conspiratorially, over what he calls the ‘deep state’ — the thousands of career government specialists in national security, intelligence, science and other areas whose expertise he shuns in part because he suspects they are disloyal saboteurs,” Ashley Parker and Philip Rucker note. (Our Fact Checker team reviews 13 of the most noteworthy coronavirus comments Trump made during his news conference.)

Trump's CDC chief, Robert Redfield, is under growing scrutiny, internally and externally.

“Hundreds of Americans were left stuck on a cruise ship that later became the single biggest source of U.S. coronavirus cases — a CDC decision,” Politico reports. “Dozens of public health labs are still waiting for tests that will allow them to diagnose coronavirus — a CDC responsibility. One of Redfield’s deputies on Monday urged businesses and schools to start preparing for the disease’s inevitable spread — stamping the CDC’s imprint on public fears ... Inside the health department, officials have complained that Redfield and CDC have been slow to resolve essential problems, like clarifying whether dozens of public health labs around the nation will soon have diagnostics capable of testing for coronavirus.”

Virus testing is widening after the first U.S. case of community transmission.

“The four-day delay in testing a California woman for coronavirus highlights how a faulty test and, until Thursday, a narrow definition of who should be tested have hindered the United States’ ability to track how widely the disease has spread,” Carolyn Y. Johnson and Laurie McGinley report. “Those concerns were stoked by the emergence of the nation’s first case of community transmission in Northern California, where hospital administrators say the patient, a woman, was not tested when clinicians requested it because she did not meet strict [CDC] criteria ... ‘We have just a few hundred testing kits in the state of California,’ Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) said Thursday at a news conference. ‘That’s simply inadequate to do justice to the kind of testing that is required to address this issue head on.’ ... Newsom said the state was working with the CDC to get more testing kits and the ability to do tests without shipping samples across the country.” New York is making its own coronavirus test after the CDC's test repeatedly failed, per BuzzFeed News.

Markets are on track for their worst week since the financial crisis.

“European indexes fell sharply, led by losses in the travel and resources sectors, continuing the slump in Asia earlier in the day,” Adam Taylor and Rick Noack report. “U.S. futures pointed to further losses on Wall Street at the open.”

South Korea now has 2,337 confirmed cases, the largest hot spot outside of China.

There are 78,824 confirmed cases in mainland China. South Korea is trying to rapidly test a large number of people, including more than 200,000 people who are members of a church in Daegu where the virus appeared to have spread widely, per Min Joo Kim and Adam Taylor.

Mongolia's president was put under a 14-day quarantine after traveling to China for one day. (Taylor)

Japan is scaling back the Olympic torch relay. It was due to start in Fukushima on March 26. A spokesman says that, though the procession may be downsized, it won't be cancelled. The International Olympic Committee said it remains fully committed to moving ahead with the Games as scheduled. (Simon Denyer)

---

Quote of the day

Former Baltimore mayor Catherine Pugh (D) was sentenced to three years in prison after pleading guilty to fraud, tax evasion and conspiracy. Responding to the contention by her defense attorneys that the public humiliation she endured should be considered as part of the punishment, U.S. District Judge Deborah K. Chasanow said: "Yes, the impact on Ms. Pugh has been great. But the impact on the city is also very great and very tragic." (Paul Schwartzman)

---

Social media speed read

Trump tried to pin the spread of the virus on Democrats in a now-deleted tweet:

Washington's Democratic governor gave this readout of his call with the V.P.:

All the leading Democratic presidential candidates attacked Trump's decisions:

Videos of the day

“The Daily Show” sent two correspondents to check in with black voters in South Carolina:

Stephen Colbert is not impressed by Trump's coronavirus plan:

Seth Meyers said this situation should give Trump pause about his cuts to health funding:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden's firewall holds. What his South Carolina comeback means for Super Tuesday.
Date: Sunday, March 1, 2020 11:00:25 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Joe Biden's firewall holds. What his South Carolina comeback means for Super Tuesday.

Thirty-three years after launching his first of three presidential campaigns, Joe Biden finally won a primary on Saturday. The former vice president's landslide in South Carolina was sweeping enough that he received more total votes across the first four early states than Bernie Sanders. The lopsided victory bolsters Biden's argument going into Super Tuesday that he's the Democratic Party's most viable alternative to the independent senator from Vermont.

He wasn't subtle about making this case during his celebratory speech in Columbia, S.C. "If the Democrats want a nominee who's a Democrat – a lifelong Democrat, a proud Democrat, an Obama-Biden Democrat – then join us," he said. "For all those who've been knocked down, counted out, left behind, this is your campaign! Just days ago, the press and pundits declared this candidacy dead. Now, thanks to all of you, the heart of the Democratic Party, we've just won, and we've won big because of you. And we are very much alive!"

With 100 percent of precincts reporting, Biden won 48 percent in the Palmetto State – carrying every county and winning among every significant demographic group. Sanders trailed, with 20 percent. Billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer dropped out after finishing third with 11 percent, under the 15 percent threshold required to get delegates. Former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg finished fourth, with 8 percent, followed by Sen. Elizabeth Warren (Mass.), with 7 percent, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (Minn.), with 3 percent. Sanders received the most votes in Nevada, New Hampshire and Iowa, but he never garnered more than 34 percent of the vote, and Buttigieg narrowly won more delegates from the Iowa caucuses.

The most significant question in American politics at this moment is whether Biden will be able to capitalize on Tuesday, when 14 states, plus American Samoa, award 34 percent of the delegates to the Democratic convention.

Biden has rolled out a string of endorsements since Saturday night, including from former Virginia governor Terry McAuliffe, Rep. Bobby Scott (D-Va.), former senator Blanche Lincoln (D-Ark.) and former DNC chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz, who remains a congresswoman from Florida. Biden also just unveiled the endorsement of Selma, Ala., Mayor Darrio Melton. Several of the candidates are in Selma today for the anniversary of Bloody Sunday.

Biden announced Sunday morning that he had raised $5 million in the past 24 hours, but he hasn't been advertising nearly as much as several of his rivals in the states that vote on March 3. His victory speech was crisp and punchy, but he remains gaffe prone and uneven on the stump. Even if he manages to emerge from this week as the most obvious alternative to Sanders, the field looks certain to stay fragmented for some time – which works to Sanders's advantage.

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Steyer's failure is a red flag for Mike Bloomberg. The former New York mayor skipped the first four states, but Steyer's play in South Carolina was Bloomberg's Super Tuesday strategy in miniature. And it didn't work. Steyer put nearly $200 million of his personal fortune into his campaign and focused more on South Carolina than anywhere else, advocating forcefully for paying reparations to the descendants of slaves and focusing on fighting climate change along the Eastern Seaboard in a coastal state. Steyer spent $23.6 million on television advertising alone in South Carolina, out of a total of $36 million spent by all the candidates, according to the tracking firm Advertising Analytics. This got him into double digits, but he underperformed where he'd been in recent polling. All told, Steyer spent about $395 on commercials for every vote he received in South Carolina.

Bloomberg has spent about half a billion dollars in the three months he's been running. But he has lost a lot of his luster since he fared so poorly in the first debate and faced mounting scrutiny. That said, polls suggest that he's still poised to pick up a big chunk of delegates on Tuesday, especially in states where he's had the airwaves mostly to himself. "His advisers vowed Saturday night that Bloomberg will stay in the race at least through Super Tuesday," Cleve Wootson and Michael Scherer reported. "They cited internal campaign data showing that if Bloomberg dropped out it would strengthen Sanders, whose left-leaning policies the former mayor abhors. His campaign announced Saturday that he will buy three minutes of commercial airtime nationally at 8:30 p.m. Sunday night to present his vision for managing the current coronavirus outbreak.”

---

Welcome to a special Sunday edition of The Daily 202,
PowerPost’s essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

Biden will undoubtedly get some bounce from South Carolina, especially in the seven Southern states that vote on Tuesday, but how big will it be? African Americans accounted for 57 percent of the electorate in South Carolina’s Democratic primary, according to our exit polling. Biden won 61 percent of the black vote, followed by Sanders at 16 percent. He also beat Sanders among white voters, though only 34 percent to 23 percent, with Buttigieg pulling 16 percent.

It’s a big break for Biden that Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Warren have so utterly failed to racially diversify their coalitions. None of the three will get any delegates out of South Carolina, despite campaigning extensively there over the past year. Warren got 5 percent of the black vote, Buttigieg got 3 percent and Klobuchar got less than 1 percent. It’s impossible to become the Democratic nominee with those kinds of numbers. Klobuchar has been unable to translate her momentum from the overwhelmingly white states of Iowa and New Hampshire into either of the racially diverse states that followed. If demographics alone are destiny, Biden is also poised to fare well in Florida on March 17 and Georgia on March 24.

An NBC News-Marist poll published Sunday morning shows a neck-and-neck primary in North Carolina, with 26 percent for Sanders and 24 percent for Biden. This is well within the margin of error. The other Southern states voting Tuesday are Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. African Americans account for a sizable share of the population in all six, but with Alabama as an exception, the black vote will account for a much smaller share of the electorate than in South Carolina.

That's one of several ways that South Carolina was uniquely favorable terrain for Biden. The 77-year-old has literally – literally! – spent decades cultivating relationships that paid off. He's vacationed there in the summers. He traveled there constantly during his eight years as vice president. More than 3 in 4 voters in the primary viewed him favorably, according to the exit poll. Only 51 percent of voters viewed Sanders favorably. About half of voters said the endorsement of Biden by Rep. Jim Clyburn (D-S.C.) on Wednesday was an “important” factor in their vote. “You brought me back,” Biden told Clyburn in his victory speech. Biden does not have so many deep relationships in the upcoming states.

South Carolina also lacks partisan voter registration, so it was an open primary. Many moderates who voted in the GOP primary in 2016 appear to have cast ballots in the Democratic primary for Biden. Turnout was at least 527,728, a sharp increase from 373,063 four years ago. It's on par with the 2008 turnout of 532,151, when Barack Obama beat Hillary Clinton, but there was also a competitive

Republican primary that year. The electorate in South Carolina was far more moderate than in the first three states. Self-identified moderates and conservatives accounted for about half of all voters, compared to a third in the Iowa and Nevada caucuses and slightly more than that in the New Hampshire primary, according to analysis by Dan Keating and Scott Clement.

South Carolinians weren't looking for a revolution. More than half of voters overall – and two-thirds of black voters – said they want a return to the policies of the Obama administration, according to the exit polls. Biden won that group by more than 5 to 1 over Sanders. By contrast, a quarter of voters wanted to break from Obama and move to more liberal policies, and they favored Sanders over Biden by 37 percent to 22 percent.

More than 7 in 10 South Carolina voters were 45 or older. That's the highest percentage of any of the first four states by far. Biden won this group over Sanders by 3 to 1. Sanders won among voters under age 30, but Biden beat him by 5 percent among voters between the ages of 30 to 44, by 37 points among those ages 45 to 64 and by 55 points among seniors. (I wrote on Friday about Sanders's struggles with older voters.)

South Carolina's electorate was also particularly religious, more so than some of the upcoming states. More than 4 out of 10 Democratic primary voters reported attending religious services once a week or more, compared to 13 percent in New Hampshire. Sanders does better among those who go to church less often. Among those who went to church at least once a week in South Carolina, Biden won 57 percent.

Quote of the day

“You cannot win 'em all,” Sanders said, reacting to South Carolina’s results during a rally in Virginia. “And that will not be the only defeat. There are a lot of states in this country, and nobody wins them all.”

Sanders remains the front-runner for the nomination, but he needs a commanding performance on Tuesday to keep that status. He’s heavily favored in California, the biggest delegate prize of the year, where he will campaign later today. Polling published Friday by CNN showed Sanders leading in the Golden State with 35 percent. Others bunched up just below 15 percent: Warren was at 14 percent, Biden at 13 percent and Bloomberg at 12 percent. South Carolina might push Biden into viability, to collect delegates, in a bunch of districts.

Another CNN poll showed Sanders leading in Texas, the second biggest prize on Tuesday, with 29 percent, followed by Biden at 20 percent, Bloomberg at 18 percent, Warren at 15 percent and no one else in double digits. NBC and Marist released a separate poll this morning of Texas that showed Sanders with 34 percent and Biden trailing with 19 percent. Sanders’s lead is driven by strength among younger Latinos.

“No day on this year’s primary-caucus calendar sets up any better for Sanders than this year’s Super Tuesday. Beyond that, primaries in the future are mostly closed, denying Sanders the votes of independents, one of his best constituencies,” Dan Balz explained. “Campaign strategists can’t say just how well Sanders will be positioned after Super Tuesday. There are simply too many variables — too many candidates, too much fluidity and too many combinations about possible outcomes. Campaigns have been modeling the states and constantly tweaking internal projections. As one strategist put it: ‘It’s an insane Rubik’s cube.’”

On Tuesday, 1,357 delegates are up for grabs. To clinch the nomination, a candidate needs 1,991 delegates. “Estimates of delegate totals and of Sanders’s possible margins vary significantly,” Balz reported. “At the high end, say strategists inside the campaigns as well as outside analysts, Sanders could emerge from Tuesday’s contests leading his closest competitor by 300 to as high as 400 delegates. That would put him firmly in command of the race though still might leave him short of a majority going into the convention. At the lower end of estimates, the consensus is that Sanders’s delegate margin could be in the range of 200 or 250. That would still give Sanders the advantage but could be a more manageable margin to overcome for one of the other candidates, but only if the field quickly shrinks after Tuesday.

“One non-campaign analysis calculates that Sanders could win between 600 and 700 delegates on Tuesday with the next-highest candidate in the range of 300 to 500. Sanders could emerge with a 2-to-1 lead over his closest challenger, but still well below 50 percent overall. But these are merely possible scenarios, not predictions, and were all based on information before South Carolina voted. Faiz Shakir, Sanders’s campaign manager, sought to play down suggestions that Sanders will come out of Super Tuesday with a lead of more than 300.”

The Sanders campaign said this morning that it raised $46.5 million in February. “The cash infusion came from 2.2 million individual donations, including more than 350,000 people who gave to the Sanders campaign for the first time,” Sean Sullivan reported. “On Saturday alone, the campaign said it raised $4.5 million. When President Obama was running for office in 2008, he raised $55 million over the same time period. For Sanders, the sum marks a significant increase from the $25 million it collected in January. Since the start of his second campaign for president last February, the campaign said it has raised more than $167 million. The Sanders campaign did not immediately say how much money it had in its account at the end of February. It announced that it was purchasing airtime for TV ads in nine states that vote on March 10 and March 17.”

Candidates are on defense in their home states tomorrow. Sanders, expected to easily carry his home state of Vermont, traveled to Massachusetts on Saturday, which Warren represents. A new Suffolk University-WBZ-Boston Globe poll shows Sanders edging out Warren in Massachusetts 24 percent to 22 percent, which is within the 4.4 percent margin of error, and Bloomberg, who was born in the Bay State, gets 13 percent. The poll puts Buttigieg in fourth place, with Biden in fifth.

Sanders will go on Monday to Minnesota, which Klobuchar represents, in hopes of beating her on her home turf. The Sanders campaign is putting on a concert in the Twin Cities at a venue that holds 18,000 people. A Star Tribune-Minnesota Public Radio poll released last weekend showed Klobuchar leading Sanders 29 percent to 23 percent in the state, with a 4.5 percentage point margin of error.

Klobuchar seems likely to come under mounting pressure to drop out after Super Tuesday unless she fares well somewhere beyond Minnesota. “First, she finished a surprisingly strong third in

New Hampshire, but otherwise she has been a nonentity,” Aaron Blake explained. “Second, she’s the most ideologically similar to Biden, meaning her exit would most apparently accrue to his benefit. And lastly, Buttigieg has a better argument for staying in the race, given he notched a delegate win in Iowa and polls much better than her nationally. At the same time, given she is far back in the polls, it’s not clear how much Biden might gain by her dropping out. And Biden’s campaign is reportedly encouraging her to stay in, perhaps in hopes that she prevents Sanders from a significant delegate win in her home state.”

But this seems poised to remain a multi-candidate race for a while. Warren has not won a single delegate since the Iowa caucuses on Feb. 3. But she’s raised enough hard money to stick around for a while on account of her strong debate performances. She was, after all, a high school debate state champion in her native state of Oklahoma, which votes on Tuesday. And she’s now getting more than $15 million of help from a super PAC after flip-flopping and reversing herself on accepting outside money.

Warren campaign manager Roger Lau sent a memo to reporters this morning that suggests they’re focused on winning a contested convention. “As the dust settles after March 3rd, the reality of this race will be clear: no candidate will likely have a path to the majority of delegates needed to win an outright claim to the Democratic nomination,” he wrote. “Our grassroots campaign is built to compete in every state and territory and ultimately prevail at the national convention in Milwaukee.”

Buttigieg’s strategy is to maximize his delegate haul on Tuesday to stay in the hunt for Midwestern primaries in the following weeks. Michigan and Missouri, for example, vote on March 10. Illinois and Ohio vote March 17. The former mayor said today on NBC’s “Meet the Press” that he’s staying in. “Nothing can take away from Vice President Biden's commanding victory,” said Buttigieg, adding that he knew “South Carolina was going to be a challenging state.”

“We have reached the conclusion that pushing forward is the best thing we can do for the country and for the party,” said the 38-year-old. “We’ll be assessing at every turn, ... making sure that every step we take is in the interest of the party and that goal of making sure we defeat Donald Trump.”

---

More from the states

In Arkansas, there's no clear favorite. “Arkansas, with 31 available delegates, is worth less than 3% of the total Democratic delegate share on Super Tuesday. The candidates vying for the Democratic nomination, however, have begun treating the state like a worthwhile battleground,” the Democrat-Gazette in Little Rock reports. “The reason, perhaps, is due to the lack of a clear front-runner -- or even several -- in this Republican-dominated state. In dozens of interviews with elected Democrats and other party leaders last week, [we] found that support remained split among no fewer than five candidates. Many said they are still waiting to decide for whom to vote. ‘This is really about the first time in 30 years in which there's not been a favorite daughter or favorite son in one of the contests, or someone like Al Gore, who is very clearly identified with a major figure from Arkansas,’ said Andrew Dowdle, a political science professor at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville.”

In Colorado, many voters held back their mail-in ballots until the last minute. “As Colorado voters have returned 1 million or so ballots in the last three weeks, Democratic ballots lagged Republican returns, suggesting that large numbers of voters planning to participate in the Democratic primary have held theirs back as they’ve watched the race’s drama play out in other states,” the Denver Post reports. “Among more than 50 undecided Colorado voters [we] surveyed or interviewed last week, it was clear many don’t fit into clear ‘liberal’ or ‘moderate’ lanes. While plenty were considering candidates in only one of those categories, others were mulling interesting combos — including several voters weighing a Sanders or a Warren (or both) against a Buttigieg or a Klobuchar.”

Voters in California have also held on to their ballots, giving Biden additional hope. “The portion of returned ballots at this stage is much lower than in recent elections — and his campaign is counting on a late surge of support among those holdouts after his dominant [South Carolina] performance on Saturday,” Politico reports. “Paul Mitchell, an elections expert who has tracked the number of returned vote-by-mail California ballots through Friday [said] he’s seen a significant drop-off among Democratic voters to date from the last two California presidential primaries. And the decline in returned ballots so far is occurring among the most dedicated voters: Those who have participated in the last five elections.”

Election officials there are scrambling to address coronavirus concerns. “While there were ‘no indications of any disruptions to California’s March 3, 2020 presidential primary,’ the California Secretary of State’s office [said] it will continue to monitor any public health alerts that could impact election administration,” ABC News reports. “Officials in Solano County, California are now taking precautionary measures and providing expanded options for voters, including offering an additional location for them to drop off ballots in advance of Super Tuesday. ... Voters ‘don’t even have to get out of their car and we’re going to expand that on Monday and Tuesday,’ said John Gardner, the assistant registrar of voters for Solano County. ... Gardner [said] every polling place and every poll worker will receive disinfectant wipes and spray, hand sanitizer and gloves as additional precautions. In the past, only sanitary wipes were provided to clean the voting equipment itself.”

Texans early voting has eclipsed the 2016 numbers. “But voters in the state still cast even more early votes in the Republican primary than the Democratic contest, 1,070,278 to 954,583,” the Houston Chronicle reports. “The nearly 7 percent turnout on the Democratic side for the 15 counties with the most registered voters was above the 5 percent racked up after early voting in the 2016 presidential primary.”

Biden has long been popular with black voters in Texas. Will they stick with him? “His lead in Texas polls has disappeared. Now many black voters in Texas and beyond are wondering aloud whether to look elsewhere. If they do en masse, it could effectively end his campaign,” the Texas Tribune reports. “To be sure, Biden does have support from some prominent black Texas leaders. U.S. Rep. Marc Veasey, D-Fort Worth, an early Biden backer, said last weekend on CNN that black voters ‘here in the state of Texas — they will not forget that Bernie Sanders threatened to primary President Obama in 2012.’ But Carroll Robinson, the chairman of the Texas Coalition of Black Democrats, said Biden ‘took his support among black voters for granted, and his outreach wasn’t as assertive as, say, Bloomberg.’”

In Minnesota, the Catholic archdiocese asked priests not to vote in the Democratic primary over concerns that they'd appear “partisan.” Under the state’s system, voters request whichever party's ballot they want, and that preference is recorded and sent to chairs of all four political parties in the state, the Star Tribune reports.

In Maine, Klobuchar presented herself as a centrist capable of bringing the party together. “I think Maine, that practical state that you are, understands that it’s important to have bold ideas that can actually get done,” she told a crowd of several hundred, per the Portland

Press Herald. Last week, Maine's Bangor Daily News endorsed Klobuchar while ripping Sanders.

In Tennessee, Buttigieg promised to unify the country. "Buttigieg came to Nashville Saturday to make the case that he could unite a coalition of Democrats, independents and 'future former Republicans' strong enough to defeat [Trump]," the Tennessean reports. "Buttigieg drew a crowd of about 2,700 to Public Square Park next to Nashville's city hall ... It was perhaps the largest showing a Democratic candidate has drawn in the city this cycle. ... Nashville Mayor John Cooper attended the rally a day after attending a Klobuchar fundraiser. ... Despite attending fundraisers for some candidates, Cooper said he has not donated to any. He also has not endorsed."

Utah will participate in Super Tuesday for the first time. "It's not even the 12th biggest prize for the Democratic presidential hopefuls vying to snatch up as many delegates as they can on their march to the nomination," the Salt Lake Tribune reports. "But the state's contest matters, as shown by the rare campaign visits, the stream of ads and the excitement of voters casting a ballot in what is still a wide-open race. ... That's different from previous cycles, when Utah's primary landed later in the spring, too late in many ways to be part of the game." In 2016, Sanders beat Clinton with nearly 80 percent. Aiming for a similar outcome this time around, Sanders will visit Salt Lake City on Monday.

Biden, Buttigieg, Bloomberg and Klobuchar will address the AIPAC conference with video messages, four years after organizers rejected an offer from Sanders to deliver a video message during his previous presidential campaign.
(Jerusalem Post)

Israel's ambassador to the United Nations, meanwhile, assailed Sanders at the conference as an "ignorant fool." "Whoever calls the prime minister of Israel a 'racist' is either a liar, an ignorant fool, or both," Danny Danon said. "We don't want Sanders at AIPAC. We don't want him in Israel." (Times of Israel)

A great Sunday read: What the reckonings of a suburban Southern white woman say about Trump’s chances. Miranda Murphey “is 39, a high school English teacher with a PhD and part of a voting demographic whose rebellion could upend the political map of the country: not just suburban women, not just white suburban women, but white suburban women in the South, whose loyalty Trump will need to remain in power,” Stephanie McCrummen reports. "She first started reevaluating her politics after the election of Barack Obama, even though she had voted Republican. ... Then came Trump, who Miranda found so morally repugnant that for the first time in her voting life she wrote in the name of the Libertarian Party candidate and went to bed expecting that good and decent conservatives would do the same. She woke up realizing she was wrong. Church members had voted for Trump. Her parents had gone for Trump. [Her husband]: Trump. And then came Liz, a new English teacher in her district ... She was not like anyone Miranda had met before, a Republican who’d become a Democrat and who described her Trump-era self as a ‘full-on rage machine.’ ... Miranda was surprised by how often she found herself seeing what Liz meant.”

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

---

The coronavirus

Trump unveiled new travel restrictions after the first death on U.S. soil.

“A man in his 50s with an underlying health condition became the first person in the United States to die of coronavirus infection,” William Wan, Katie Mettler, Miriam Berger and Carolyn Johnson report. “Along with the fatality in Washington state, health officials in the Seattle area confirmed two additional cases of the covid-19 disease and a possible outbreak at a long-term nursing facility — raising alarm because the elderly and sick are among those most vulnerable to the virus. Officials in California’s Santa Clara County announced another case Saturday, and Illinois announced another case Saturday evening. The new cases bring the number of people apparently infected by community spread of the disease to nine. ... One of the three new cases of infection is a health-care worker at the Life Care nursing home in Kirkland, Wash. Another is a woman in her 70s from the nursing home, now in serious condition... The man who died was not associated with the nursing home. ...

“As news of the first fatality broke, Trump announced he would extend an existing travel ban on Iran to apply to any foreign nationals who had been in that country over the past 14 days. He also raised the warning level for travel to Italy and South Korea, recommending Americans not travel to certain regions of those countries with outbreaks of the virus. Trump said he is also considering restrictions across the southern U.S. border. ... At the hastily convened news conference, Trump described the patient who died as a 'wonderful woman' in her late 50s. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention later issued a statement saying it had mistakenly described the patient's gender in a briefing to Trump and Vice President Pence, and local health officials clarified the deceased patient was a man. Trump praised his administration's response to the virus, calling his earlier decision to ban foreign nationals from China 'a lifesaver,' and he urged people to remain calm and to go on living their lives normally. 'Healthy people, if you're healthy, you will probably go through a process and you'll be fine,' Trump said. ...

“On Saturday, the Food and Drug Administration took steps to expand testing by speeding up certified hospital laboratories' ability to create and use their own tests, following complaints from many labs. The FDA also approved a test developed by New York state laboratories, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo said, making New York the first state able to use its own test. ... An unreleased report from a branch of the State Department obtained by The Washington Post on Saturday found roughly 2 million tweets already peddling conspiracy theories about the coronavirus, raising worries about Silicon Valley's preparedness to combat a surge of dangerous disinformation online. Trying to avoid panic, Pence said Saturday that the average American does not need to buy face masks because of the coronavirus, echoing worries by health officials that hoarding such supplies may put health workers at risk in coming weeks.”

The administration continues trying to contain not just the virus, but also its political damage.

“Interviews with nearly two dozen administration officials, former White House aides, public health experts and lawmakers ... portray a White House scrambling to gain control of a rudderless response defined by bureaucratic infighting, confusion and misinformation 'It's complete chaos,' a senior administration official said. 'Everyone is just trying to get a handle on what the [expletive] is going on,'” Yasmeen Abutaleb, Ashley

Parker and Josh Dawsey report. “Personal animosities between [Health Secretary Alex] Azar and senior members of the White House — including [acting chief of staff Mick] Mulvaney and Joe Grogan, the director of the Domestic Policy Council — also complicated response efforts, several senior administration officials said. Several officials said those relationships have never recovered from past battles ...

“Administration officials [continued plowing] forward with their previous schedules, modifying them only slightly as they tried to minimize the coronavirus threat. Mulvaney spoke, as previously planned, at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference outside Washington, where he assured the crowd, ‘We know how to handle this,’ and accused the news media of overhyping the virus to ‘bring down the president.’ Pence, too, continued with a prior commitment Friday evening — a closed-door, high-dollar fundraiser in Sarasota, Fla. — while tacking on a brief coronavirus response meeting with Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) at the airport ... And Trump held a long-standing campaign rally Friday in North Charleston, S.C., where he accused Democrats of ‘politicizing’ the coronavirus. ‘And this is their new hoax,’ the president crowed from the stage.”

Nancy Pelosi will bring a coronavirus funding bill to the floor this week.

The House speaker didn’t indicate a price tag, but “she said the funding package must be new money and ‘not stolen from other accounts.’ She said House appropriators will work to ensure there is a firewall around the funds so the president cannot use the money for anything other than fighting the coronavirus,” Colby Itkowitz reports. “Pelosi said the funding package should also include money to make eventual vaccines available to everyone, loans for small businesses hurt by disruptions, and reimbursement for state and local governments responding to outbreaks.”

The outbreak is creating huge medical bills.

“Frank Wucinski and his 3-year-old daughter, Annabel, are among the dozens of Americans the government has flown back to the country from Wuhan, China, and put under quarantine to check for signs of coronavirus. Now they are among what could become a growing number of families hit with surprise medical bills related to government-mandated actions,” the NYT reports. “Both have repeatedly tested negative for the virus. After their release from quarantine, Mr. Wucinski and his daughter went to stay with his mother in Harrisburg, Pa. That’s where they found a pile of medical bills waiting: $3,918 in charges from hospital doctors, radiologists and an ambulance company. ‘I assumed it was all being paid for,’ Mr. Wucinski said. ‘We didn’t have a choice.’ ... The federal government has the authority to quarantine and isolate patients if officials believe them to be a public health threat. These powers, which date back to cholera outbreaks among ship passengers in the late 19th century, are rarely used. They don’t say anything about who pays when the isolation happens in a nongovernmental medical facility — or when they’re brought there by a private ambulance company.”

Australia also reported its first coronavirus death.

“A 78-year-old man who contracted the coronavirus after spending time on the Diamond Princess cruise ship died Saturday in a Perth hospital, becoming Australia’s first death from the disease. The man and his 79-year-old wife were among 164 Australians who were evacuated from the cruise ship, which was docked in Japan while people on board were quarantined, and flown to Australia for treatment last week,” Derek Hawkins reports. “His wife was also placed in isolation, where she tested positive Friday. Robertson said she was in stable condition. ‘She had the opportunity to talk to him prior to his death, but she’s understandably quite upset. And I obviously ask that people respect their privacy,’ Robertson told Australia’s national broadcaster.”

China and South Korea reported hundreds of new cases.

“Chinese health officials early Sunday, local time, reported an additional 573 confirmed cases of the coronavirus and 35 deaths on the country’s mainland. In keeping with the pattern throughout the outbreak, the vast majority of those cases and deaths were in Hubei province, where the virus first emerged. The total number of cases on the mainland reached 79,824, and the total number of deaths hit 2,870,” Marisa Iati reports. “In nearby South Korea, health officials reported 376 additional cases of the coronavirus, 333 of which were in the southern city of Daegu. ... The total number of cases in South Korea stands at 3,526, and the death count is 17.”

Italy became the third country to have more than 1,000 coronavirus cases.

“The latest data, according to the Italian government, shows that 1,049 people nationwide are positive for the virus, and another 29 have died. More than half of the cases are in the wealthy northern region of Lombardy, which includes Milan. But a handful of cases have popped up as far south as Sicily and Puglia,” Chico Harlan reports.

Mexico hit back at Trump’s comments on possibly closing the border.

With polite astonishment, Mexico noted “that ‘there are four cases of covid-19 registered in our country and 22 in the U.S.’ The Foreign Ministry said the U.S. and Mexican governments were in close contact on the issue, and Mexico was willing to cooperate with Washington to protect public health,” Mary Beth Sheridan reports. “Few cases of coronavirus have been reported in Latin America. Ecuador reported its first confirmed case Saturday, and two cases have been confirmed in Brazil.”

---

A peace deal in Afghanistan

Abdul Ghani Baradar, right, who led the Taliban delegation, and U.S. envoy Zalmay Khalilzad sign the deal. (Ibraheem Al Omari/Reuters)

The agreement signed with the Taliban in Doha set a timetable for U.S. withdrawal.

“The agreement to end the brutal U.S.-Taliban conflict in Afghanistan ... was signed on Saturday under the gaze of tough men in turbans, who clapped and shouted ‘Allahu akbar!’” Karen DeYoung reports. “Trump hailed the accord, formalized with signatures and a handshake between U.S. negotiator Zalmay Khalilzad and his Taliban counterpart, Abdul Ghani Baradar, as historic. ... Trump said he would be ‘meeting personally with Taliban leaders in the not too distant future.’ Asked whether such a meeting would be overseas, or if he would invite them to Camp David, an idea he broached last year, he said, ‘We’re looking at that.’ Senior administration officials, while claiming success, offered slightly more tempered expressions of optimism. ...

“Many veterans of the years-long efforts to end the war and leave a stable Afghanistan, as well as Trump supporters, questioned whether the new agreement laid a sturdy groundwork for permanent peace. Some described it as a capitulation to the Taliban, whose primary demand has always been the full departure of foreign troops. ... Some senior military and intelligence officials 'are concerned that the administration is putting too much stock in the promises of the Taliban,' who will 'simply sign anything to get us to leave,' [said a former senior defense official]. ...

"The conditions in the agreement appeared to relate far more to the insurgents' promises to stop attacking the Americans as they leave, and to sever ties with other terrorist groups, rather than a long-term solution for Afghans. ... The agreement includes a Taliban commitment to start direct negotiations with the Afghan government over a cease-fire and political settlement of the war within 10 days. Those negotiations, tentatively to be held in Norway, are already complicated by political upheaval in Kabul, where President Ashraf Ghani's recent reelection is under challenge and there are major fights over the composition of a negotiating team. The agenda for the talks is massive, including a comprehensive cease-fire, the role of the Taliban in a future government, and rights for women and civil society. No format has been established, and there is no deadline for completion. ...

"The agreement also provides for the 'expeditious' release by March 10 of up to 5,000 Taliban prisoners and up to 1,000 prisoners held by 'the other side,' and the release of all remaining prisoners within the subsequent three months. It does not mention whether 'the other side' includes Taliban prisoners being held by the United States, including some at the detention facility in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. ... John Bolton, Trump's former national security adviser, called the deal 'an unacceptable risk to the United States' civilian population.' ... At his news conference, Trump indicated that the Taliban would take over the fight against the Islamic State and others, although the agreement, and a separate joint declaration with the Afghan government, cite only Taliban responsibilities for preventing terrorist groups from activities within territory under Taliban control."

The Afghan government also questioned aspects of the deal.

“Freeing Taliban prisoners is not [under] the authority of America, but the authority of the Afghan government. There has been no commitment for the release of 5,000 prisoners,’ Ghani told reporters gathered inside the palace in Kabul on Sunday. Ghani said the prisoner swap could be discussed during talks with the Taliban but could not be a precondition,” Susannah George reports. "The peace deal did not mention [the] future of the period of reduced violence that preceded the deal’s signing. Following the signing ceremony Saturday, Taliban spokesman Suhail Shaheen said the week-long period of reduced violence has ‘ended.’ Ghani, however, said Sunday that the reduction in violence would extend and eventually transform into a cease-fire.”

---

Social media speed read

Buttigieg met with Jimmy Carter in Georgia this morning:

Trump reacted to the South Carolina results:

Steyer responded:

Clyburn celebrated his kingmaker status:

Videos of the day

“Saturday Night Live” opened with a coronavirus press conference:

Colin Jost and Michael Che had thoughts about Trump's coronavirus response:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Trailer for news and insight on political campaigns around the country, from David Weigel. 435 districts. 50 states. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden's firewall holds. What his South Carolina comeback means for Super Tuesday.
Date: Sunday, March 1, 2020 11:00:28 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Joe Biden's firewall holds. What his South Carolina comeback means for Super Tuesday.

Thirty-three years after launching his first of three presidential campaigns, Joe Biden finally won a primary on Saturday. The former vice president's landslide in South Carolina was sweeping enough that he received more total votes across the first four early states than Bernie Sanders. The lopsided victory bolsters Biden's argument going into Super Tuesday that he's the Democratic Party's most viable alternative to the independent senator from Vermont.

He wasn't subtle about making this case during his celebratory speech in Columbia, S.C. "If the Democrats want a nominee who's a Democrat – a lifelong Democrat, a proud Democrat, an Obama-Biden Democrat – then join us," he said. "For all those who've been knocked down, counted out, left behind, this is your campaign! Just days ago, the press and pundits declared this candidacy dead. Now, thanks to all of you, the heart of the Democratic Party, we've just won, and we've won big because of you. And we are very much alive!"

With 100 percent of precincts reporting, Biden won 48 percent in the Palmetto State – carrying every county and winning among every significant demographic group. Sanders trailed, with 20 percent. Billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer dropped out after finishing third with 11 percent, under the 15 percent threshold required to get delegates. Former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg finished fourth, with 8 percent, followed by Sen. Elizabeth Warren (Mass.), with 7 percent, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (Minn.), with 3 percent. Sanders received the most votes in Nevada, New Hampshire and Iowa, but he never garnered more than 34 percent of the vote, and Buttigieg narrowly won more delegates from the Iowa caucuses.

The most significant question in American politics at this

moment is whether Biden will be able to capitalize on Tuesday, when 14 states, plus American Samoa, award 34 percent of the delegates to the Democratic convention.

Biden has rolled out a string of endorsements since Saturday night, including from former Virginia governor Terry McAuliffe, Rep. Bobby Scott (D-Va.), former senator Blanche Lincoln (D-Ark.) and former DNC chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz, who remains a congresswoman from Florida. Biden also just unveiled the endorsement of Selma, Ala., Mayor Darrio Melton. Several of the candidates are in Selma today for the anniversary of Bloody Sunday.

Biden announced Sunday morning that he had raised $5 million in the past 24 hours, but he hasn't been advertising nearly as much as several of his rivals in the states that vote on March 3. His victory speech was crisp and punchy, but he remains gaffe prone and uneven on the stump. Even if he manages to emerge from this week as the most obvious alternative to Sanders, the field looks certain to stay fragmented for some time – which works to Sanders's advantage.

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Steyer's failure is a red flag for Mike Bloomberg. The former New York mayor skipped the first four states, but Steyer's play in South Carolina was Bloomberg's Super Tuesday strategy in miniature. And it didn't work. Steyer put nearly $200 million of his personal fortune into his campaign and focused more on South Carolina than anywhere else, advocating forcefully for paying reparations to the descendants of slaves and focusing on fighting climate change along the Eastern Seaboard in a coastal state. Steyer spent $23.6 million on television advertising alone in South Carolina, out of a total of $36 million spent by all the candidates, according to the tracking firm Advertising Analytics. This got him into double digits, but he underperformed where he'd been in recent polling. All told, Steyer spent about $395 on commercials for every vote he received in South Carolina.

Bloomberg has spent about half a billion dollars in the three months he's been running. But he has lost a lot of his luster since he fared so poorly in the first debate and faced mounting scrutiny. That said, polls suggest that he's still poised to pick up a big chunk of delegates on Tuesday, especially in states where he's had the airwaves mostly to himself. "His advisers vowed Saturday night that Bloomberg will stay in the race at least through Super Tuesday," Cleve Wootson and Michael Scherer reported. "They cited internal campaign data showing that if Bloomberg dropped out it would strengthen Sanders, whose left-leaning policies the former mayor abhors. His campaign announced Saturday that he will buy three minutes of commercial airtime nationally at 8:30 p.m. Sunday night to present his vision for managing the current coronavirus outbreak.”

---

Welcome to a special Sunday edition of The Daily 202,
PowerPost’s essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

Biden will undoubtedly get some bounce from South Carolina, especially in the seven Southern states that vote on Tuesday, but how big will it be? African Americans accounted for 57 percent of the electorate in South Carolina’s Democratic primary, according to our exit polling. Biden won 61 percent of the black vote, followed by Sanders at 16 percent. He also beat Sanders among white voters, though only 34 percent to 23 percent, with Buttigieg pulling 16 percent.

It’s a big break for Biden that Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Warren have so utterly failed to racially diversify their coalitions. None of the three will get any delegates out of South Carolina, despite campaigning extensively there over the past year. Warren got 5 percent of the black vote, Buttigieg got 3 percent and Klobuchar got less than 1 percent. It’s impossible to become the Democratic nominee with those kinds of numbers. Klobuchar has been unable to translate her momentum from the overwhelmingly white states of Iowa and New Hampshire into either of the racially diverse states that followed. If demographics alone are destiny, Biden is also poised to fare well in Florida on March 17 and Georgia on March 24.

An NBC News-Marist poll published Sunday morning shows a neck-and-neck primary in North Carolina, with 26 percent for Sanders and 24 percent for Biden. This is well within the margin of error. The other Southern states voting Tuesday are Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. African Americans account for a sizable share of the population in all six, but with Alabama as an exception, the black vote will account for a much smaller share of the electorate than in South Carolina.

That's one of several ways that South Carolina was uniquely favorable terrain for Biden. The 77-year-old has literally – literally! – spent decades cultivating relationships that paid off. He's vacationed there in the summers. He traveled there constantly during his eight years as vice president. More than 3 in 4 voters in the primary viewed him favorably, according to the exit poll. Only 51 percent of voters viewed Sanders favorably. About half of voters said the endorsement of Biden by Rep. Jim Clyburn (D-S.C.) on Wednesday was an “important” factor in their vote. “You brought me back,” Biden told Clyburn in his victory speech. Biden does not have so many deep relationships in the upcoming states.

South Carolina also lacks partisan voter registration, so it was an open primary. Many moderates who voted in the GOP primary in 2016 appear to have cast ballots in the Democratic primary for Biden. Turnout was at least 527,728, a sharp increase from 373,063 four years ago. It's on par with the 2008 turnout of 532,151, when Barack Obama beat Hillary Clinton, but there was also a competitive

Republican primary that year. The electorate in South Carolina was far more moderate than in the first three states. Self-identified moderates and conservatives accounted for about half of all voters, compared to a third in the Iowa and Nevada caucuses and slightly more than that in the New Hampshire primary, according to analysis by Dan Keating and Scott Clement.

South Carolinians weren't looking for a revolution. More than half of voters overall – and two-thirds of black voters – said they want a return to the policies of the Obama administration, according to the exit polls. Biden won that group by more than 5 to 1 over Sanders. By contrast, a quarter of voters wanted to break from Obama and move to more liberal policies, and they favored Sanders over Biden by 37 percent to 22 percent.

More than 7 in 10 South Carolina voters were 45 or older. That's the highest percentage of any of the first four states by far. Biden won this group over Sanders by 3 to 1. Sanders won among voters under age 30, but Biden beat him by 5 percent among voters between the ages of 30 to 44, by 37 points among those ages 45 to 64 and by 55 points among seniors. (I wrote on Friday about Sanders's struggles with older voters.)

South Carolina's electorate was also particularly religious, more so than some of the upcoming states. More than 4 out of 10 Democratic primary voters reported attending religious services once a week or more, compared to 13 percent in New Hampshire. Sanders does better among those who go to church less often. Among those who went to church at least once a week in South Carolina, Biden won 57 percent.

---

Quote of the day

“You cannot win 'em all,” Sanders said, reacting to South Carolina’s results during a rally in Virginia. “And that will not be the only defeat. There are a lot of states in this country, and nobody wins them all.”

Sanders remains the front-runner for the nomination, but he needs a commanding performance on Tuesday to keep that status. He’s heavily favored in California, the biggest delegate prize of the year, where he will campaign later today. Polling published Friday by CNN showed Sanders leading in the Golden State with 35 percent. Others bunched up just below 15 percent: Warren was at 14 percent, Biden at 13 percent and Bloomberg at 12 percent. South Carolina might push Biden into viability, to collect delegates, in a bunch of districts.

Another CNN poll showed Sanders leading in Texas, the second biggest prize on Tuesday, with 29 percent, followed by Biden at 20 percent, Bloomberg at 18 percent, Warren at 15 percent and no one else in double digits. NBC and Marist released a separate poll this morning of Texas that showed Sanders with 34 percent and Biden trailing with 19 percent. Sanders’s lead is driven by strength among younger Latinos.

“No day on this year’s primary-caucus calendar sets up any better for Sanders than this year’s Super Tuesday. Beyond that, primaries in the future are mostly closed, denying Sanders the votes of independents, one of his best constituencies,” Dan Balz explained. “Campaign strategists can’t say just how well Sanders will be positioned after Super Tuesday. There are simply too many variables — too many candidates, too much fluidity and too many combinations about possible outcomes. Campaigns have been modeling the states and constantly tweaking internal projections. As one strategist put it: ‘It’s an insane Rubik’s cube.’”

On Tuesday, 1,357 delegates are up for grabs. To clinch the nomination, a candidate needs 1,991 delegates. “Estimates of delegate totals and of Sanders’s possible margins vary significantly,” Balz reported. “At the high end, say strategists inside the campaigns as well as outside analysts, Sanders could emerge from Tuesday’s contests leading his closest competitor by 300 to as high as 400 delegates. That would put him firmly in command of the race though still might leave him short of a majority going into the convention. At the lower end of estimates, the consensus is that Sanders’s delegate margin could be in the range of 200 or 250. That would still give Sanders the advantage but could be a more manageable margin to overcome for one of the other candidates, but only if the field quickly shrinks after Tuesday.

“One non-campaign analysis calculates that Sanders could win between 600 and 700 delegates on Tuesday with the next-highest candidate in the range of 300 to 500. Sanders could emerge with a 2-to-1 lead over his closest challenger, but still well below 50 percent overall. But these are merely possible scenarios, not predictions, and were all based on information before South Carolina voted. Faiz Shakir, Sanders’s campaign manager, sought to play down suggestions that Sanders will come out of Super Tuesday with a lead of more than 300.”

The Sanders campaign said this morning that it raised $46.5 million in February. “The cash infusion came from 2.2 million individual donations, including more than 350,000 people who gave to the Sanders campaign for the first time,” Sean Sullivan reported. “On Saturday alone, the campaign said it raised $4.5 million. When President Obama was running for office in 2008, he raised $55 million over the same time period. For Sanders, the sum marks a significant increase from the $25 million it collected in January. Since the start of his second campaign for president last February, the campaign said it has raised more than $167 million. The Sanders campaign did not immediately say how much money it had in its account at the end of February. It announced that it was purchasing airtime for TV ads in nine states that vote on March 10 and March 17.”

Candidates are on defense in their home states tomorrow. Sanders, expected to easily carry his home state of Vermont, traveled to Massachusetts on Saturday, which Warren represents. A new Suffolk University-WBZ-Boston Globe poll shows Sanders edging out Warren in Massachusetts 24 percent to 22 percent, which is within the 4.4 percent margin of error, and Bloomberg, who was born in the Bay State, gets 13 percent. The poll puts Buttigieg in fourth place, with Biden in fifth.

Sanders will go on Monday to Minnesota, which Klobuchar represents, in hopes of beating her on her home turf. The Sanders campaign is putting on a concert in the Twin Cities at a venue that holds 18,000 people. A Star Tribune-Minnesota Public Radio poll released last weekend showed Klobuchar leading Sanders 29 percent to 23 percent in the state, with a 4.5 percentage point margin of error.

Klobuchar seems likely to come under mounting pressure to drop out after Super Tuesday unless she fares well somewhere beyond Minnesota. “First, she finished a surprisingly strong third in

New Hampshire, but otherwise she has been a nonentity,” Aaron Blake explained. “Second, she’s the most ideologically similar to Biden, meaning her exit would most apparently accrue to his benefit. And lastly, Buttigieg has a better argument for staying in the race, given he notched a delegate win in Iowa and polls much better than her nationally. At the same time, given she is far back in the polls, it’s not clear how much Biden might gain by her dropping out. And Biden’s campaign is reportedly encouraging her to stay in, perhaps in hopes that she prevents Sanders from a significant delegate win in her home state.”

But this seems poised to remain a multi-candidate race for a while. Warren has not won a single delegate since the Iowa caucuses on Feb. 3. But she’s raised enough hard money to stick around for a while on account of her strong debate performances. She was, after all, a high school debate state champion in her native state of Oklahoma, which votes on Tuesday. And she’s now getting more than $15 million of help from a super PAC after flip-flopping and reversing herself on accepting outside money.

Warren campaign manager Roger Lau sent a memo to reporters this morning that suggests they’re focused on winning a contested convention. “As the dust settles after March 3rd, the reality of this race will be clear: no candidate will likely have a path to the majority of delegates needed to win an outright claim to the Democratic nomination,” he wrote. “Our grassroots campaign is built to compete in every state and territory and ultimately prevail at the national convention in Milwaukee.”

Buttigieg’s strategy is to maximize his delegate haul on Tuesday to stay in the hunt for Midwestern primaries in the following weeks. Michigan and Missouri, for example, vote on March 10. Illinois and Ohio vote March 17. The former mayor said today on NBC’s “Meet the Press” that he’s staying in. “Nothing can take away from Vice President Biden's commanding victory,” said Buttigieg, adding that he knew “South Carolina was going to be a challenging state.”

“We have reached the conclusion that pushing forward is the best thing we can do for the country and for the party,” said the 38-year-old. “We’ll be assessing at every turn, ... making sure that every step we take is in the interest of the party and that goal of making sure we defeat Donald Trump.”

---

More from the states

In Arkansas, there's no clear favorite. “Arkansas, with 31 available delegates, is worth less than 3% of the total Democratic delegate share on Super Tuesday. The candidates vying for the Democratic nomination, however, have begun treating the state like a worthwhile battleground,” the Democrat-Gazette in Little Rock reports. “The reason, perhaps, is due to the lack of a clear front-runner -- or even several -- in this Republican-dominated state. In dozens of interviews with elected Democrats and other party leaders last week, [we] found that support remained split among no fewer than five candidates. Many said they are still waiting to decide for whom to vote. ‘This is really about the first time in 30 years in which there's not been a favorite daughter or favorite son in one of the contests, or someone like Al Gore, who is very clearly identified with a major figure from Arkansas,’ said Andrew Dowdle, a political science

professor at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville.”

In Colorado, many voters held back their mail-in ballots until the last minute. “As Colorado voters have returned 1 million or so ballots in the last three weeks, Democratic ballots lagged Republican returns, suggesting that large numbers of voters planning to participate in the Democratic primary have held theirs back as they’ve watched the race’s drama play out in other states,” the Denver Post reports. “Among more than 50 undecided Colorado voters [we] surveyed or interviewed last week, it was clear many don’t fit into clear ‘liberal’ or ‘moderate’ lanes. While plenty were considering candidates in only one of those categories, others were mulling interesting combos — including several voters weighing a Sanders or a Warren (or both) against a Buttigieg or a Klobuchar.”

Voters in California have also held on to their ballots, giving Biden additional hope. “The portion of returned ballots at this stage is much lower than in recent elections — and his campaign is counting on a late surge of support among those holdouts after his dominant [South Carolina] performance on Saturday,” Politico reports. “Paul Mitchell, an elections expert who has tracked the number of returned vote-by-mail California ballots through Friday [said] he’s seen a significant drop-off among Democratic voters to date from the last two California presidential primaries. And the decline in returned ballots so far is occurring among the most dedicated voters: Those who have participated in the last five elections.”

Election officials there are scrambling to address coronavirus concerns. “While there were ‘no indications of any disruptions to California’s March 3, 2020 presidential primary,’ the California Secretary of State’s office [said] it will continue to monitor any public health alerts that could impact election administration,” ABC News reports. “Officials in Solano County, California are now taking precautionary measures and providing expanded options for voters, including offering an additional location for them to drop off ballots in advance of Super Tuesday. ... Voters ‘don’t even have to get out of their car and we’re going to expand that on Monday and Tuesday,' said John Gardner, the assistant registrar of voters for Solano County. ... Gardner [said] every polling place and every poll worker will receive disinfectant wipes and spray, hand sanitizer and gloves as additional precautions. In the past, only sanitary wipes were provided to clean the voting equipment itself."

Texans early voting has eclipsed the 2016 numbers. "But voters in the state still cast even more early votes in the Republican primary than the Democratic contest, 1,070,278 to 954,583," the Houston Chronicle reports. "The nearly 7 percent turnout on the Democratic side for the 15 counties with the most registered voters was above the 5 percent racked up after early voting in the 2016 presidential primary."

Biden has long been popular with black voters in Texas. Will they stick with him? "His lead in Texas polls has disappeared. Now many black voters in Texas and beyond are wondering aloud whether to look elsewhere. If they do en masse, it could effectively end his campaign," the Texas Tribune reports. "To be sure, Biden does have support from some prominent black Texas leaders. U.S. Rep. Marc Veasey, D-Fort Worth, an early Biden backer, said last weekend on CNN that black voters 'here in the state of Texas — they will not forget that Bernie Sanders threatened to primary President Obama in 2012.' But Carroll Robinson, the chairman of the Texas Coalition of Black Democrats, said Biden 'took his support among black voters for granted, and his outreach wasn't as assertive as, say, Bloomberg.'"

In Minnesota, the Catholic archdiocese asked priests not to vote in the Democratic primary over concerns that they'd appear "partisan." Under the state's system, voters request whichever party's ballot they want, and that preference is recorded and sent to chairs of all four political parties in the state, the Star Tribune reports.

In Maine, Klobuchar presented herself as a centrist capable of bringing the party together. "I think Maine, that practical state that you are, understands that it's important to have bold ideas that can actually get done," she told a crowd of several hundred, per the Portland

Press Herald. Last week, Maine's Bangor Daily News endorsed Klobuchar while ripping Sanders.

In Tennessee, Buttigieg promised to unify the country. "Buttigieg came to Nashville Saturday to make the case that he could unite a coalition of Democrats, independents and 'future former Republicans' strong enough to defeat [Trump]," the Tennessean reports. "Buttigieg drew a crowd of about 2,700 to Public Square Park next to Nashville's city hall ... It was perhaps the largest showing a Democratic candidate has drawn in the city this cycle. ... Nashville Mayor John Cooper attended the rally a day after attending a Klobuchar fundraiser. ... Despite attending fundraisers for some candidates, Cooper said he has not donated to any. He also has not endorsed."

Utah will participate in Super Tuesday for the first time. "It's not even the 12th biggest prize for the Democratic presidential hopefuls vying to snatch up as many delegates as they can on their march to the nomination," the Salt Lake Tribune reports. "But the state's contest matters, as shown by the rare campaign visits, the stream of ads and the excitement of voters casting a ballot in what is still a wide-open race. ... That's different from previous cycles, when Utah's primary landed later in the spring, too late in many ways to be part of the game." In 2016, Sanders beat Clinton with nearly 80 percent. Aiming for a similar outcome this time around, Sanders will visit Salt Lake City on Monday.

Biden, Buttigieg, Bloomberg and Klobuchar will address the AIPAC conference with video messages, four years after organizers rejected an offer from Sanders to deliver a video message during his previous presidential campaign.
(Jerusalem Post)

Israel's ambassador to the United Nations, meanwhile, assailed Sanders at the conference as an "ignorant fool." "Whoever calls the prime minister of Israel a 'racist' is either a liar, an ignorant fool, or both," Danny Danon said. "We don't want Sanders at AIPAC. We don't want him in Israel." (Times of Israel)

A great Sunday read: What the reckonings of a suburban Southern white woman say about Trump’s chances. Miranda Murphey “is 39, a high school English teacher with a PhD and part of a voting demographic whose rebellion could upend the political map of the country: not just suburban women, not just white suburban women, but white suburban women in the South, whose loyalty Trump will need to remain in power,” Stephanie McCrummen reports. "She first started reevaluating her politics after the election of Barack Obama, even though she had voted Republican. ... Then came Trump, who Miranda found so morally repugnant that for the first time in her voting life she wrote in the name of the Libertarian Party candidate and went to bed expecting that good and decent conservatives would do the same. She woke up realizing she was wrong. Church members had voted for Trump. Her parents had gone for Trump. [Her husband]: Trump. And then came Liz, a new English teacher in her district ... She was not like anyone Miranda had met before, a Republican who’d become a Democrat and who described her Trump-era self as a ‘full-on rage machine.’ ... Miranda was surprised by how often she found herself seeing what Liz meant.”

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

---

The coronavirus

Trump unveiled new travel restrictions after the first death on U.S. soil.

“A man in his 50s with an underlying health condition became the first person in the United States to die of coronavirus infection,” William Wan, Katie Mettler, Miriam Berger and Carolyn Johnson report. “Along with the fatality in Washington state, health officials in the Seattle area confirmed two additional cases of the covid-19 disease and a possible outbreak at a long-term nursing facility — raising alarm because the elderly and sick are among those most vulnerable to the virus. Officials in California’s Santa Clara County announced another case Saturday, and Illinois announced another case Saturday evening. The new cases bring the number of people apparently infected by community spread of the disease to nine. ... One of the three new cases of infection is a health-care worker at the Life Care nursing home in Kirkland, Wash. Another is a woman in her 70s from the nursing home, now in serious condition... The man who died was not associated with the nursing home. ...

“As news of the first fatality broke, Trump announced he would extend an existing travel ban on Iran to apply to any foreign nationals who had been in that country over the past 14 days. He also raised the warning level for travel to Italy and South Korea, recommending Americans not travel to certain regions of those countries with outbreaks of the virus. Trump said he is also considering restrictions across the southern U.S. border. ... At the hastily convened news conference, Trump described the patient who died as a 'wonderful woman' in her late 50s. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention later issued a statement saying it had mistakenly described the patient's gender in a briefing to Trump and Vice President Pence, and local health officials clarified the deceased patient was a man. Trump praised his administration's response to the virus, calling his earlier decision to ban foreign nationals from China 'a lifesaver,' and he urged people to remain calm and to go on living their lives normally. 'Healthy people, if you're healthy, you will probably go through a process and you'll be fine,' Trump said. ...

“On Saturday, the Food and Drug Administration took steps to expand testing by speeding up certified hospital laboratories' ability to create and use their own tests, following complaints from many labs. The FDA also approved a test developed by New York state laboratories, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo said, making New York the first state able to use its own test. ... An unreleased report from a branch of the State Department obtained by The Washington Post on Saturday found roughly 2 million tweets already peddling conspiracy theories about the coronavirus, raising worries about Silicon Valley's preparedness to combat a surge of dangerous disinformation online. Trying to avoid panic, Pence said Saturday that the average American does not need to buy face masks because of the coronavirus, echoing worries by health officials that hoarding such supplies may put health workers at risk in coming weeks.”

The administration continues trying to contain not just the virus, but also its political damage.

“Interviews with nearly two dozen administration officials, former White House aides, public health experts and lawmakers ... portray a White House scrambling to gain control of a rudderless response defined by bureaucratic infighting, confusion and misinformation 'It's complete chaos,' a senior administration official said. 'Everyone is just trying to get a handle on what the [expletive] is going on,’” Yasmeen Abutaleb, Ashley

Parker and Josh Dawsey report. “Personal animosities between [Health Secretary Alex] Azar and senior members of the White House — including [acting chief of staff Mick] Mulvaney and Joe Grogan, the director of the Domestic Policy Council — also complicated response efforts, several senior administration officials said. Several officials said those relationships have never recovered from past battles ...

“Administration officials [continued plowing] forward with their previous schedules, modifying them only slightly as they tried to minimize the coronavirus threat. Mulvaney spoke, as previously planned, at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference outside Washington, where he assured the crowd, ‘We know how to handle this,’ and accused the news media of overhyping the virus to ‘bring down the president.’ Pence, too, continued with a prior commitment Friday evening — a closed-door, high-dollar fundraiser in Sarasota, Fla. — while tacking on a brief coronavirus response meeting with Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) at the airport ... And Trump held a long-standing campaign rally Friday in North Charleston, S.C., where he accused Democrats of ‘politicizing’ the coronavirus. ‘And this is their new hoax,’ the president crowed from the stage.”

Nancy Pelosi will bring a coronavirus funding bill to the floor this week.

The House speaker didn’t indicate a price tag, but “she said the funding package must be new money and ‘not stolen from other accounts.’ She said House appropriators will work to ensure there is a firewall around the funds so the president cannot use the money for anything other than fighting the coronavirus,” Colby Itkowitz reports. “Pelosi said the funding package should also include money to make eventual vaccines available to everyone, loans for small businesses hurt by disruptions, and reimbursement for state and local governments responding to outbreaks.”

The outbreak is creating huge medical bills.

“Frank Wucinski and his 3-year-old daughter, Annabel, are among the dozens of Americans the government has flown back to the country from Wuhan, China, and put under quarantine to check for signs of coronavirus. Now they are among what could become a growing number of families hit with surprise medical bills related to government-mandated actions,” the NYT reports. “Both have repeatedly tested negative for the virus. After their release from quarantine, Mr. Wucinski and his daughter went to stay with his mother in Harrisburg, Pa. That’s where they found a pile of medical bills waiting: $3,918 in charges from hospital doctors, radiologists and an ambulance company. ‘I assumed it was all being paid for,’ Mr. Wucinski said. ‘We didn’t have a choice.’ ... The federal government has the authority to quarantine and isolate patients if officials believe them to be a public health threat. These powers, which date back to cholera outbreaks among ship passengers in the late 19th century, are rarely used. They don’t say anything about who pays when the isolation happens in a nongovernmental medical facility — or when they’re brought there by a private ambulance company.”

Australia also reported its first coronavirus death.

“A 78-year-old man who contracted the coronavirus after spending time on the Diamond Princess cruise ship died Saturday in a Perth hospital, becoming Australia’s first death from the disease. The man and his 79-year-old wife were among 164 Australians who were evacuated from the cruise ship, which was docked in Japan while people on board were quarantined, and flown to Australia for treatment last week,” Derek Hawkins reports. “His wife was also placed in isolation, where she tested positive Friday. Robertson said she was in stable condition. ‘She had the opportunity to talk to him prior to his death, but she’s understandably quite upset. And I obviously ask that people respect their privacy,’ Robertson told Australia’s national broadcaster.”

China and South Korea reported hundreds of new cases.

“Chinese health officials early Sunday, local time, reported an additional 573 confirmed cases of the coronavirus and 35 deaths on the country’s mainland. In keeping with the pattern throughout the outbreak, the vast majority of those cases and deaths were in Hubei province, where the virus first emerged. The total number of cases on the mainland reached 79,824, and the total number of deaths hit 2,870,” Marisa Iati reports. “In nearby South Korea, health officials reported 376 additional cases of the coronavirus, 333 of which were in the southern city of Daegu. ... The total number of cases in South Korea stands at 3,526, and the death count is 17.”

Italy became the third country to have more than 1,000 coronavirus cases.

“The latest data, according to the Italian government, shows that 1,049 people nationwide are positive for the virus, and another 29 have died. More than half of the cases are in the wealthy northern region of Lombardy, which includes Milan. But a handful of cases have popped up as far south as Sicily and Puglia,” Chico Harlan reports.

Mexico hit back at Trump’s comments on possibly closing the border.

With polite astonishment, Mexico noted “that ‘there are four cases of covid-19 registered in our country and 22 in the U.S.’ The Foreign Ministry said the U.S. and Mexican governments were in close contact on the issue, and Mexico was willing to cooperate with Washington to protect public health,” Mary Beth Sheridan reports. “Few cases of coronavirus have been reported in Latin America. Ecuador reported its first confirmed case Saturday, and two cases have been confirmed in Brazil.”

---

A peace deal in Afghanistan

Abdul Ghani Baradar, right, who led the Taliban delegation, and U.S. envoy Zalmay Khalilzad sign the deal. (Ibraheem Al Omari/Reuters)

The agreement signed with the Taliban in Doha set a timetable for U.S. withdrawal.

“The agreement to end the brutal U.S.-Taliban conflict in Afghanistan ... was signed on Saturday under the gaze of tough men in turbans, who clapped and shouted ‘Allahu akbar!’” Karen DeYoung reports. “Trump hailed the accord, formalized with signatures and a handshake between U.S. negotiator Zalmay Khalilzad and his Taliban counterpart, Abdul Ghani Baradar, as historic. ... Trump said he would be ‘meeting personally with Taliban leaders in the not too distant future.’ Asked whether such a meeting would be overseas, or if he would invite them to Camp David, an idea he broached last year, he said, ‘We’re looking at that.’ Senior administration officials, while claiming success, offered slightly more tempered expressions of optimism. ...

“Many veterans of the years-long efforts to end the war and leave a stable Afghanistan, as well as Trump supporters, questioned whether the new agreement laid a sturdy groundwork for permanent peace. Some described it as a capitulation to the Taliban, whose primary demand has always been the full departure of foreign troops. ... Some senior military and intelligence officials 'are concerned that the administration is putting too much stock in the promises of the Taliban,' who will 'simply sign anything to get us to leave,' [said a former senior defense official]. ...

"The conditions in the agreement appeared to relate far more to the insurgents' promises to stop attacking the Americans as they leave, and to sever ties with other terrorist groups, rather than a long-term solution for Afghans. ... The agreement includes a Taliban commitment to start direct negotiations with the Afghan government over a cease-fire and political settlement of the war within 10 days. Those negotiations, tentatively to be held in Norway, are already complicated by political upheaval in Kabul, where President Ashraf Ghani's recent reelection is under challenge and there are major fights over the composition of a negotiating team. The agenda for the talks is massive, including a comprehensive cease-fire, the role of the Taliban in a future government, and rights for women and civil society. No format has been established, and there is no deadline for completion. ...

"The agreement also provides for the 'expeditious' release by March 10 of up to 5,000 Taliban prisoners and up to 1,000 prisoners held by 'the other side,' and the release of all remaining prisoners within the subsequent three months. It does not mention whether 'the other side' includes Taliban prisoners being held by the United States, including some at the detention facility in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. ... John Bolton, Trump's former national security adviser, called the deal 'an unacceptable risk to the United States' civilian population.' ... At his news conference, Trump indicated that the Taliban would take over the fight against the Islamic State and others, although the agreement, and a separate joint declaration with the Afghan government, cite only Taliban responsibilities for preventing terrorist groups from activities within territory under Taliban control."

The Afghan government also questioned aspects of the deal.

“Freeing Taliban prisoners is not [under] the authority of America, but the authority of the Afghan government. There has been no commitment for the release of 5,000 prisoners,’ Ghani told reporters gathered inside the palace in Kabul on Sunday. Ghani said the prisoner swap could be discussed during talks with the Taliban but could not be a precondition,” Susannah George reports. "The peace deal did not mention [the] future of the period of reduced violence that preceded the deal’s signing. Following the signing ceremony Saturday, Taliban spokesman Suhail Shaheen said the week-long period of reduced violence has ‘ended.’ Ghani, however, said Sunday that the reduction in violence would extend and eventually transform into a cease-fire.”

---

Social media speed read

Buttigieg met with Jimmy Carter in Georgia this morning:

Trump reacted to the South Carolina results:

Steyer responded:

Clyburn celebrated his kingmaker status:

Videos of the day

“Saturday Night Live” opened with a coronavirus press conference:

Colin Jost and Michael Che had thoughts about Trump's coronavirus response:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Trailer for news and insight on political campaigns around the country, from David Weigel. 435 districts. 50 states. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden's firewall holds. What his South Carolina comeback means for Super Tuesday.
Date: Sunday, March 1, 2020 11:00:45 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann

with Mariana Alfaro

Email

Joe Biden's firewall holds. What his South Carolina comeback means for Super Tuesday.

Thirty-three years after launching his first of three presidential campaigns, Joe Biden finally won a primary on Saturday. The former vice president's landslide in South Carolina was sweeping enough that he received more total votes across the first four early states than Bernie Sanders. The lopsided victory bolsters Biden's argument going into Super Tuesday that he's the Democratic Party's most viable alternative to the independent senator from Vermont.

He wasn't subtle about making this case during his celebratory speech in Columbia, S.C. "If the Democrats want a nominee who's a Democrat – a lifelong Democrat, a proud Democrat, an Obama-Biden Democrat – then join us," he said. "For all those who've been knocked down, counted out, left behind, this is your campaign! Just days ago, the press and pundits declared this candidacy dead. Now, thanks to all of you, the heart of the Democratic Party, we've just won, and we've won big because of you. And we are very much alive!"

With 100 percent of precincts reporting, Biden won 48 percent in the Palmetto State – carrying every county and winning among every significant demographic group. Sanders trailed, with 20 percent. Billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer dropped out after finishing third with 11 percent, under the 15 percent threshold required to get delegates. Former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg finished fourth, with 8 percent, followed by Sen. Elizabeth Warren (Mass.), with 7 percent, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (Minn.), with 3 percent. Sanders received the most votes in Nevada, New Hampshire and Iowa, but he never garnered more than 34 percent of the vote, and Buttigieg narrowly won more delegates from the Iowa caucuses.

The most significant question in American politics at this

moment is whether Biden will be able to capitalize on Tuesday, when 14 states, plus American Samoa, award 34 percent of the delegates to the Democratic convention.

Biden has rolled out a string of endorsements since Saturday night, including from former Virginia governor Terry McAuliffe, Rep. Bobby Scott (D-Va.), former senator Blanche Lincoln (D-Ark.) and former DNC chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz, who remains a congresswoman from Florida. Biden also just unveiled the endorsement of Selma, Ala., Mayor Darrio Melton. Several of the candidates are in Selma today for the anniversary of Bloody Sunday.

Biden announced Sunday morning that he had raised $5 million in the past 24 hours, but he hasn't been advertising nearly as much as several of his rivals in the states that vote on March 3. His victory speech was crisp and punchy, but he remains gaffe prone and uneven on the stump. Even if he manages to emerge from this week as the most obvious alternative to Sanders, the field looks certain to stay fragmented for some time – which works to Sanders's advantage.

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Steyer's failure is a red flag for Mike Bloomberg. The former New York mayor skipped the first four states, but Steyer's play in South Carolina was Bloomberg's Super Tuesday strategy in miniature. And it didn't work. Steyer put nearly $200 million of his personal fortune into his campaign and focused more on South Carolina than anywhere else, advocating forcefully for paying reparations to the descendants of slaves and focusing on fighting climate change along the Eastern Seaboard in a coastal state. Steyer spent $23.6 million on television advertising alone in South Carolina, out of a total of $36 million spent by all the candidates, according to the tracking firm Advertising Analytics. This got him into double digits, but he underperformed where he'd been in recent polling. All told, Steyer spent about $395 on commercials for every vote he received in South Carolina.

Bloomberg has spent about half a billion dollars in the three months he's been running. But he has lost a lot of his luster since he fared so poorly in the first debate and faced mounting scrutiny. That said, polls suggest that he's still poised to pick up a big chunk of delegates on Tuesday, especially in states where he's had the airwaves mostly to himself. "His advisers vowed Saturday night that Bloomberg will stay in the race at least through Super Tuesday," Cleve Wootson and Michael Scherer reported. "They cited internal campaign data showing that if Bloomberg dropped out it would strengthen Sanders, whose left-leaning policies the former mayor abhors. His campaign announced Saturday that he will buy three minutes of commercial airtime nationally at 8:30 p.m. Sunday night to present his vision for managing the current coronavirus outbreak.”

---

Welcome to a special Sunday edition of The Daily 202,
PowerPost’s essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

Biden will undoubtedly get some bounce from South Carolina, especially in the seven Southern states that vote on Tuesday, but how big will it be? African Americans accounted for 57 percent of the electorate in South Carolina’s Democratic primary, according to our exit polling. Biden won 61 percent of the black vote, followed by Sanders at 16 percent. He also beat Sanders among white voters, though only 34 percent to 23 percent, with Buttigieg pulling 16 percent.

It’s a big break for Biden that Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Warren have so utterly failed to racially diversify their coalitions. None of the three will get any delegates out of South Carolina, despite campaigning extensively there over the past year. Warren got 5 percent of the black vote, Buttigieg got 3 percent and Klobuchar got less than 1 percent. It’s impossible to become the Democratic nominee with those kinds of numbers. Klobuchar has been unable to translate her momentum from the overwhelmingly white states of Iowa and New Hampshire into either of the racially diverse states that followed. If demographics alone are destiny, Biden is also poised to fare well in Florida on March 17 and Georgia on March 24.

An NBC News-Marist poll published Sunday morning shows a neck-and-neck primary in North Carolina, with 26 percent for Sanders and 24 percent for Biden. This is well within the margin of error. The other Southern states voting Tuesday are Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. African Americans account for a sizable share of the population in all six, but with Alabama as an exception, the black vote will account for a much smaller share of the electorate than in South Carolina.

That's one of several ways that South Carolina was uniquely favorable terrain for Biden. The 77-year-old has literally – literally! – spent decades cultivating relationships that paid off. He's vacationed there in the summers. He traveled there constantly during his eight years as vice president. More than 3 in 4 voters in the primary viewed him favorably, according to the exit poll. Only 51 percent of voters viewed Sanders favorably. About half of voters said the endorsement of Biden by Rep. Jim Clyburn (D-S.C.) on Wednesday was an “important” factor in their vote. “You brought me back,” Biden told Clyburn in his victory speech. Biden does not have so many deep relationships in the upcoming states.

South Carolina also lacks partisan voter registration, so it was an open primary. Many moderates who voted in the GOP primary in 2016 appear to have cast ballots in the Democratic primary for Biden. Turnout was at least 527,728, a sharp increase from 373,063 four years ago. It's on par with the 2008 turnout of 532,151, when Barack Obama beat Hillary Clinton, but there was also a competitive

Republican primary that year. The electorate in South Carolina was far more moderate than in the first three states. Self-identified moderates and conservatives accounted for about half of all voters, compared to a third in the Iowa and Nevada caucuses and slightly more than that in the New Hampshire primary, according to analysis by Dan Keating and Scott Clement.

South Carolinians weren't looking for a revolution. More than half of voters overall – and two-thirds of black voters – said they want a return to the policies of the Obama administration, according to the exit polls. Biden won that group by more than 5 to 1 over Sanders. By contrast, a quarter of voters wanted to break from Obama and move to more liberal policies, and they favored Sanders over Biden by 37 percent to 22 percent.

More than 7 in 10 South Carolina voters were 45 or older. That's the highest percentage of any of the first four states by far. Biden won this group over Sanders by 3 to 1. Sanders won among voters under age 30, but Biden beat him by 5 percent among voters between the ages of 30 to 44, by 37 points among those ages 45 to 64 and by 55 points among seniors. (I wrote on Friday about Sanders's struggles with older voters.)

South Carolina's electorate was also particularly religious, more so than some of the upcoming states. More than 4 out of 10 Democratic primary voters reported attending religious services once a week or more, compared to 13 percent in New Hampshire. Sanders does better among those who go to church less often. Among those who went to church at least once a week in South Carolina, Biden won 57 percent.

Quote of the day

“You cannot win 'em all,” Sanders said, reacting to South Carolina’s results during a rally in Virginia. “And that will not be the only defeat. There are a lot of states in this country, and nobody wins them all.”

Sanders remains the front-runner for the nomination, but he needs a commanding performance on Tuesday to keep that status. He’s heavily favored in California, the biggest delegate prize of the year, where he will campaign later today. Polling published Friday by CNN showed Sanders leading in the Golden State with 35 percent. Others bunched up just below 15 percent: Warren was at 14 percent, Biden at 13 percent and Bloomberg at 12 percent. South Carolina might push Biden into viability, to collect delegates, in a bunch of districts.

Another CNN poll showed Sanders leading in Texas, the second biggest prize on Tuesday, with 29 percent, followed by Biden at 20 percent, Bloomberg at 18 percent, Warren at 15 percent and no one else in double digits. NBC and Marist released a separate poll this morning of Texas that showed Sanders with 34 percent and Biden trailing with 19 percent. Sanders’s lead is driven by strength among younger Latinos.

“No day on this year’s primary-caucus calendar sets up any better for Sanders than this year’s Super Tuesday. Beyond that, primaries in the future are mostly closed, denying Sanders the votes of independents, one of his best constituencies,” Dan Balz explained. “Campaign strategists can’t say just how well Sanders will be positioned after Super Tuesday. There are simply too many variables — too many candidates, too much fluidity and too many combinations about possible outcomes. Campaigns have been modeling the states and constantly tweaking internal projections. As one strategist put it: ‘It’s an insane Rubik’s cube.’”

On Tuesday, 1,357 delegates are up for grabs. To clinch the nomination, a candidate needs 1,991 delegates. “Estimates of delegate totals and of Sanders’s possible margins vary significantly,” Balz reported. “At the high end, say strategists inside the campaigns as well as outside analysts, Sanders could emerge from Tuesday’s contests leading his closest competitor by 300 to as high as 400 delegates. That would put him firmly in command of the race though still might leave him short of a majority going into the convention. At the lower end of estimates, the consensus is that Sanders’s delegate margin could be in the range of 200 or 250. That would still give Sanders the advantage but could be a more manageable margin to overcome for one of the other candidates, but only if the field quickly shrinks after Tuesday.

“One non-campaign analysis calculates that Sanders could win between 600 and 700 delegates on Tuesday with the next-highest candidate in the range of 300 to 500. Sanders could emerge with a 2-to-1 lead over his closest challenger, but still well below 50 percent overall. But these are merely possible scenarios, not predictions, and were all based on information before South Carolina voted. Faiz Shakir, Sanders’s campaign manager, sought to play down suggestions that Sanders will come out of Super Tuesday with a lead of more than 300.”

The Sanders campaign said this morning that it raised $46.5 million in February. “The cash infusion came from 2.2 million individual donations, including more than 350,000 people who gave to the Sanders campaign for the first time,” Sean Sullivan reported. “On Saturday alone, the campaign said it raised $4.5 million. When President Obama was running for office in 2008, he raised $55 million over the same time period. For Sanders, the sum marks a significant increase from the $25 million it collected in January. Since the start of his second campaign for president last February, the campaign said it has raised more than $167 million. The Sanders campaign did not immediately say how much money it had in its account at the end of February. It announced that it was purchasing airtime for TV ads in nine states that vote on March 10 and March 17.”

Candidates are on defense in their home states tomorrow.

Sanders, expected to easily carry his home state of Vermont, traveled to Massachusetts on Saturday, which Warren represents. A new Suffolk University-WBZ-Boston Globe poll shows Sanders edging out Warren in Massachusetts 24 percent to 22 percent, which is within the 4.4 percent margin of error, and Bloomberg, who was born in the Bay State, gets 13 percent. The poll puts Buttigieg in fourth place, with Biden in fifth.

Sanders will go on Monday to Minnesota, which Klobuchar represents, in hopes of beating her on her home turf. The Sanders campaign is putting on a concert in the Twin Cities at a venue that holds 18,000 people. A Star Tribune-Minnesota Public Radio poll released last weekend showed Klobuchar leading Sanders 29 percent to 23 percent in the state, with a 4.5 percentage point margin of error.

Klobuchar seems likely to come under mounting pressure to drop out after Super Tuesday unless she fares well somewhere beyond Minnesota. “First, she finished a surprisingly strong third in

New Hampshire, but otherwise she has been a nonentity,” Aaron Blake explained. “Second, she’s the most ideologically similar to Biden, meaning her exit would most apparently accrue to his benefit. And lastly, Buttigieg has a better argument for staying in the race, given he notched a delegate win in Iowa and polls much better than her nationally. At the same time, given she is far back in the polls, it’s not clear how much Biden might gain by her dropping out. And Biden’s campaign is reportedly encouraging her to stay in, perhaps in hopes that she prevents Sanders from a significant delegate win in her home state.”

But this seems poised to remain a multi-candidate race for a while. Warren has not won a single delegate since the Iowa caucuses on Feb. 3. But she’s raised enough hard money to stick around for a while on account of her strong debate performances. She was, after all, a high school debate state champion in her native state of Oklahoma, which votes on Tuesday. And she’s now getting more than $15 million of help from a super PAC after flip-flopping and reversing herself on accepting outside money.

Warren campaign manager Roger Lau sent a memo to reporters this morning that suggests they’re focused on winning a contested convention. “As the dust settles after March 3rd, the reality of this race will be clear: no candidate will likely have a path to the majority of delegates needed to win an outright claim to the Democratic nomination,” he wrote. “Our grassroots campaign is built to compete in every state and territory and ultimately prevail at the national convention in Milwaukee.”

Buttigieg’s strategy is to maximize his delegate haul on Tuesday to stay in the hunt for Midwestern primaries in the following weeks. Michigan and Missouri, for example, vote on March 10. Illinois and Ohio vote March 17. The former mayor said today on NBC’s “Meet the Press” that he’s staying in. “Nothing can take away from Vice President Biden's commanding victory,” said Buttigieg, adding that he knew “South Carolina was going to be a challenging state.”

“We have reached the conclusion that pushing forward is the best thing we can do for the country and for the party,” said the 38-year-old. “We’ll be assessing at every turn, ... making sure that every step we take is in the interest of the party and that goal of making sure we defeat Donald Trump.”

---

More from the states

In Arkansas, there's no clear favorite. “Arkansas, with 31 available delegates, is worth less than 3% of the total Democratic delegate share on Super Tuesday. The candidates vying for the Democratic nomination, however, have begun treating the state like a worthwhile battleground,” the Democrat-Gazette in Little Rock reports. “The reason, perhaps, is due to the lack of a clear front-runner -- or even several -- in this Republican-dominated state. In dozens of interviews with elected Democrats and other party leaders last week, [we] found that support remained split among no fewer than five candidates. Many said they are still waiting to decide for whom to vote. ‘This is really about the first time in 30 years in which there's not been a favorite daughter or favorite son in one of the contests, or someone like Al Gore, who is very clearly identified with a major figure from Arkansas,’ said Andrew Dowdle, a political science

professor at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville.”

In Colorado, many voters held back their mail-in ballots until the last minute. “As Colorado voters have returned 1 million or so ballots in the last three weeks, Democratic ballots lagged Republican returns, suggesting that large numbers of voters planning to participate in the Democratic primary have held theirs back as they’ve watched the race’s drama play out in other states,” the Denver Post reports. “Among more than 50 undecided Colorado voters [we] surveyed or interviewed last week, it was clear many don’t fit into clear ‘liberal’ or ‘moderate’ lanes. While plenty were considering candidates in only one of those categories, others were mulling interesting combos — including several voters weighing a Sanders or a Warren (or both) against a Buttigieg or a Klobuchar.”

Voters in California have also held on to their ballots, giving Biden additional hope. “The portion of returned ballots at this stage is much lower than in recent elections — and his campaign is counting on a late surge of support among those holdouts after his dominant [South Carolina] performance on Saturday,” Politico reports. “Paul Mitchell, an elections expert who has tracked the number of returned vote-by-mail California ballots through Friday [said] he’s seen a significant drop-off among Democratic voters to date from the last two California presidential primaries. And the decline in returned ballots so far is occurring among the most dedicated voters: Those who have participated in the last five elections.”

Election officials there are scrambling to address coronavirus concerns. “While there were ‘no indications of any disruptions to California’s March 3, 2020 presidential primary,’ the California Secretary of State’s office [said] it will continue to monitor any public health alerts that could impact election administration,” ABC News reports. “Officials in Solano County, California are now taking precautionary measures and providing expanded options for voters, including offering an additional location for them to drop off ballots in advance of Super Tuesday. ... Voters ‘don’t even have to get out of their car and we’re going to expand that on Monday and Tuesday,' said John Gardner, the assistant registrar of voters for Solano County. ... Gardner [said] every polling place and every poll worker will receive disinfectant wipes and spray, hand sanitizer and gloves as additional precautions. In the past, only sanitary wipes were provided to clean the voting equipment itself."

Texans early voting has eclipsed the 2016 numbers. "But voters in the state still cast even more early votes in the Republican primary than the Democratic contest, 1,070,278 to 954,583," the Houston Chronicle reports. "The nearly 7 percent turnout on the Democratic side for the 15 counties with the most registered voters was above the 5 percent racked up after early voting in the 2016 presidential primary."

Biden has long been popular with black voters in Texas. Will they stick with him? "His lead in Texas polls has disappeared. Now many black voters in Texas and beyond are wondering aloud whether to look elsewhere. If they do en masse, it could effectively end his campaign," the Texas Tribune reports. "To be sure, Biden does have support from some prominent black Texas leaders. U.S. Rep. Marc Veasey, D-Fort Worth, an early Biden backer, said last weekend on CNN that black voters 'here in the state of Texas — they will not forget that Bernie Sanders threatened to primary President Obama in 2012.' But Carroll Robinson, the chairman of the Texas Coalition of Black Democrats, said Biden 'took his support among black voters for granted, and his outreach wasn't as assertive as, say, Bloomberg.'"

In Minnesota, the Catholic archdiocese asked priests not to vote in the Democratic primary over concerns that they'd appear "partisan." Under the state's system, voters request whichever party's ballot they want, and that preference is recorded and sent to chairs of all four political parties in the state, the Star Tribune reports.

In Maine, Klobuchar presented herself as a centrist capable of bringing the party together. "I think Maine, that practical state that you are, understands that it's important to have bold ideas that can actually get done," she told a crowd of several hundred, per the Portland

Press Herald. Last week, Maine's Bangor Daily News endorsed Klobuchar while ripping Sanders.

In Tennessee, Buttigieg promised to unify the country. "Buttigieg came to Nashville Saturday to make the case that he could unite a coalition of Democrats, independents and 'future former Republicans' strong enough to defeat [Trump]," the Tennessean reports. "Buttigieg drew a crowd of about 2,700 to Public Square Park next to Nashville's city hall ... It was perhaps the largest showing a Democratic candidate has drawn in the city this cycle. ... Nashville Mayor John Cooper attended the rally a day after attending a Klobuchar fundraiser. ... Despite attending fundraisers for some candidates, Cooper said he has not donated to any. He also has not endorsed."

Utah will participate in Super Tuesday for the first time. "It's not even the 12th biggest prize for the Democratic presidential hopefuls vying to snatch up as many delegates as they can on their march to the nomination," the Salt Lake Tribune reports. "But the state's contest matters, as shown by the rare campaign visits, the stream of ads and the excitement of voters casting a ballot in what is still a wide-open race. ... That's different from previous cycles, when Utah's primary landed later in the spring, too late in many ways to be part of the game." In 2016, Sanders beat Clinton with nearly 80 percent. Aiming for a similar outcome this time around, Sanders will visit Salt Lake City on Monday.

Biden, Buttigieg, Bloomberg and Klobuchar will address the AIPAC conference with video messages, four years after organizers rejected an offer from Sanders to deliver a video message during his previous presidential campaign. (Jerusalem Post)

Israel's ambassador to the United Nations, meanwhile, assailed Sanders at the conference as an "ignorant fool." "Whoever calls the prime minister of Israel a 'racist' is either a liar, an ignorant fool, or both," Danny Danon said. "We don't want Sanders at AIPAC. We don't want him in Israel." (Times of Israel)

A great Sunday read: What the reckonings of a suburban Southern white woman say about Trump’s chances. Miranda Murphey “is 39, a high school English teacher with a PhD and part of a voting demographic whose rebellion could upend the political map of the country: not just suburban women, not just white suburban women, but white suburban women in the South, whose loyalty Trump will need to remain in power,” Stephanie McCrummen reports. "She first started reevaluating her politics after the election of Barack Obama, even though she had voted Republican. ... Then came Trump, who Miranda found so morally repugnant that for the first time in her voting life she wrote in the name of the Libertarian Party candidate and went to bed expecting that good and decent conservatives would do the same. She woke up realizing she was wrong. Church members had voted for Trump. Her parents had gone for Trump. [Her husband]: Trump. And then came Liz, a new English teacher in her district ... She was not like anyone Miranda had met before, a Republican who’d become a Democrat and who described her Trump-era self as a ‘full-on rage machine.’ ... Miranda was surprised by how often she found herself seeing what Liz meant.”

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

---

The coronavirus

Trump unveiled new travel restrictions after the first death on U.S. soil.

“A man in his 50s with an underlying health condition became the first person in the United States to die of coronavirus infection,” William Wan, Katie Mettler, Miriam Berger and Carolyn Johnson report. “Along with the fatality in Washington state, health officials in the Seattle area confirmed two additional cases of the covid-19 disease and a possible outbreak at a long-term nursing facility — raising alarm because the elderly and sick are among those most vulnerable to the virus. Officials in California’s Santa Clara County announced another case Saturday, and Illinois announced another case Saturday evening. The new cases bring the number of people apparently infected by community spread of the disease to nine. ... One of the three new cases of infection is a health-care worker at the Life Care nursing home in Kirkland, Wash. Another is a woman in her 70s from the nursing home, now in serious condition... The man who died was not associated with the nursing home. ...

“As news of the first fatality broke, Trump announced he would extend an existing travel ban on Iran to apply to any foreign nationals who had been in that country over the past 14 days. He also raised the warning level for travel to Italy and South Korea, recommending Americans not travel to certain regions of those countries with outbreaks of the virus. Trump said he is also considering restrictions across the southern U.S. border. ... At the hastily convened news conference, Trump described the patient who died as a 'wonderful woman' in her late 50s. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention later issued a statement saying it had mistakenly described the patient's gender in a briefing to Trump and Vice President Pence, and local health officials clarified the deceased patient was a man. Trump praised his administration's response to the virus, calling his earlier decision to ban foreign nationals from China 'a lifesaver,' and he urged people to remain calm and to go on living their lives normally. 'Healthy people, if you're healthy, you will probably go through a process and you'll be fine,' Trump said. ...

“On Saturday, the Food and Drug Administration took steps to expand testing by speeding up certified hospital laboratories' ability to create and use their own tests, following complaints from many labs. The FDA also approved a test developed by New York state laboratories, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo said, making New York the first state able to use its own test. ... An unreleased report from a branch of the State Department obtained by The Washington Post on Saturday found roughly 2 million tweets already peddling conspiracy theories about the coronavirus, raising worries about Silicon Valley's preparedness to combat a surge of dangerous disinformation online. Trying to avoid panic, Pence said Saturday that the average American does not need to buy face masks because of the coronavirus, echoing worries by health officials that hoarding such supplies may put health workers at risk in coming weeks.”

The administration continues trying to contain not just the virus, but also its political damage.

“Interviews with nearly two dozen administration officials, former White House aides, public health experts and lawmakers ... portray a White House scrambling to gain control of a rudderless response defined by bureaucratic infighting, confusion and misinformation 'It's complete chaos,' a senior administration official said. 'Everyone is just trying to get a handle on what the [expletive] is going on,'” Yasmeen Abutaleb, Ashley

Parker and Josh Dawsey report. “Personal animosities between [Health Secretary Alex] Azar and senior members of the White House — including [acting chief of staff Mick] Mulvaney and Joe Grogan, the director of the Domestic Policy Council — also complicated response efforts, several senior administration officials said. Several officials said those relationships have never recovered from past battles ...

“Administration officials [continued plowing] forward with their previous schedules, modifying them only slightly as they tried to minimize the coronavirus threat. Mulvaney spoke, as previously planned, at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference outside Washington, where he assured the crowd, ‘We know how to handle this,’ and accused the news media of overhyping the virus to ‘bring down the president.’ Pence, too, continued with a prior commitment Friday evening — a closed-door, high-dollar fundraiser in Sarasota, Fla. — while tacking on a brief coronavirus response meeting with Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) at the airport ... And Trump held a long-standing campaign rally Friday in North Charleston, S.C., where he accused Democrats of ‘politicizing’ the coronavirus. ‘And this is their new hoax,’ the president crowed from the stage.”

Nancy Pelosi will bring a coronavirus funding bill to the floor this week.

The House speaker didn’t indicate a price tag, but “she said the funding package must be new money and ‘not stolen from other accounts.’ She said House appropriators will work to ensure there is a firewall around the funds so the president cannot use the money for anything other than fighting the coronavirus,” Colby Itkowitz reports. “Pelosi said the funding package should also include money to make eventual vaccines available to everyone, loans for small businesses hurt by disruptions, and reimbursement for state and local governments responding to outbreaks.”

The outbreak is creating huge medical bills.

“Frank Wucinski and his 3-year-old daughter, Annabel, are among the dozens of Americans the government has flown back to the country from Wuhan, China, and put under quarantine to check for signs of coronavirus. Now they are among what could become a growing number of families hit with surprise medical bills related to government-mandated actions,” the NYT reports. “Both have repeatedly tested negative for the virus. After their release from quarantine, Mr. Wucinski and his daughter went to stay with his mother in Harrisburg, Pa. That’s where they found a pile of medical bills waiting: $3,918 in charges from hospital doctors, radiologists and an ambulance company. ‘I assumed it was all being paid for,’ Mr. Wucinski said. ‘We didn’t have a choice.’ ... The federal government has the authority to quarantine and isolate patients if officials believe them to be a public health threat. These powers, which date back to cholera outbreaks among ship passengers in the late 19th century, are rarely used. They don’t say anything about who pays when the isolation happens in a nongovernmental medical facility — or when they’re brought there by a private ambulance company.”

Australia also reported its first coronavirus death.

“A 78-year-old man who contracted the coronavirus after spending time on the Diamond Princess cruise ship died Saturday in a Perth hospital, becoming Australia’s first death from the disease. The man and his 79-year-old wife were among 164 Australians who were evacuated from the cruise ship, which was docked in Japan while people on board were quarantined, and flown to Australia for treatment last week,” Derek Hawkins reports. “His wife was also placed in isolation, where she tested positive Friday. Robertson said she was in stable condition. ‘She had the opportunity to talk to him prior to his death, but she’s understandably quite upset. And I obviously ask that people respect their privacy,’ Robertson told Australia’s national broadcaster.”

China and South Korea reported hundreds of new cases.

“Chinese health officials early Sunday, local time, reported an additional 573 confirmed cases of the coronavirus and 35 deaths on the country’s mainland. In keeping with the pattern throughout the outbreak, the vast majority of those cases and deaths were in Hubei province, where the virus first emerged. The total number of cases on the mainland reached 79,824, and the total number of deaths hit 2,870,” Marisa Iati reports. “In nearby South Korea, health officials reported 376 additional cases of the coronavirus, 333 of which were in the southern city of Daegu. ... The total number of cases in South Korea stands at 3,526, and the death count is 17.”

Italy became the third country to have more than 1,000 coronavirus cases.

“The latest data, according to the Italian government, shows that 1,049 people nationwide are positive for the virus, and another 29 have died. More than half of the cases are in the wealthy northern region of Lombardy, which includes Milan. But a handful of cases have popped up as far south as Sicily and Puglia,” Chico Harlan reports.

Mexico hit back at Trump’s comments on possibly closing the border.

With polite astonishment, Mexico noted “that ‘there are four cases of covid-19 registered in our country and 22 in the U.S.’ The Foreign Ministry said the U.S. and Mexican governments were in close contact on the issue, and Mexico was willing to cooperate with Washington to protect public health,” Mary Beth Sheridan reports. “Few cases of coronavirus have been reported in Latin America. Ecuador reported its first confirmed case Saturday, and two cases have been confirmed in Brazil.”

---

A peace deal in Afghanistan

Abdul Ghani Baradar, right, who led the Taliban delegation, and U.S. envoy Zalmay Khalilzad sign the deal. (Ibraheem Al Omari/Reuters)

The agreement signed with the Taliban in Doha set a timetable for U.S. withdrawal.

“The agreement to end the brutal U.S.-Taliban conflict in Afghanistan ... was signed on Saturday under the gaze of tough men in turbans, who clapped and shouted ‘Allahu akbar!’” Karen DeYoung reports. “Trump hailed the accord, formalized with signatures and a handshake between U.S. negotiator Zalmay Khalilzad and his Taliban counterpart, Abdul Ghani Baradar, as historic. ... Trump said he would be ‘meeting personally with Taliban leaders in the not too distant future.’ Asked whether such a meeting would be overseas, or if he would invite them to Camp David, an idea he broached last year, he said, ‘We’re looking at that.’ Senior administration officials, while claiming success, offered slightly more tempered expressions of optimism. ...

“Many veterans of the years-long efforts to end the war and leave a stable Afghanistan, as well as Trump supporters, questioned whether the new agreement laid a sturdy groundwork for permanent peace. Some described it as a capitulation to the Taliban, whose primary demand has always been the full departure of foreign troops. ... Some senior military and intelligence officials 'are concerned that the administration is putting too much stock in the promises of the Taliban,' who will 'simply sign anything to get us to leave,' [said a former senior defense official]. ...

"The conditions in the agreement appeared to relate far more to the insurgents' promises to stop attacking the Americans as they leave, and to sever ties with other terrorist groups, rather than a long-term solution for Afghans. ... The agreement includes a Taliban commitment to start direct negotiations with the Afghan government over a cease-fire and political settlement of the war within 10 days. Those negotiations, tentatively to be held in Norway, are already complicated by political upheaval in Kabul, where President Ashraf Ghani's recent reelection is under challenge and there are major fights over the composition of a negotiating team. The agenda for the talks is massive, including a comprehensive cease-fire, the role of the Taliban in a future government, and rights for women and civil society. No format has been established, and there is no deadline for completion. ...

"The agreement also provides for the 'expeditious' release by March 10 of up to 5,000 Taliban prisoners and up to 1,000 prisoners held by 'the other side,' and the release of all remaining prisoners within the subsequent three months. It does not mention whether 'the other side' includes Taliban prisoners being held by the United States, including some at the detention facility in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. ... John Bolton, Trump's former national security adviser, called the deal 'an unacceptable risk to the United States' civilian population.' ... At his news conference, Trump indicated that the Taliban would take over the fight against the Islamic State and others, although the agreement, and a separate joint declaration with the Afghan government, cite only Taliban responsibilities for preventing terrorist groups from activities within territory under Taliban control."

The Afghan government also questioned aspects of the deal.

“Freeing Taliban prisoners is not [under] the authority of America, but the authority of the Afghan government. There has been no commitment for the release of 5,000 prisoners,’ Ghani told reporters gathered inside the palace in Kabul on Sunday. Ghani said the prisoner swap could be discussed during talks with the Taliban but could not be a precondition,” Susannah George reports. "The peace deal did not mention [the] future of the period of reduced violence that preceded the deal’s signing. Following the signing ceremony Saturday, Taliban spokesman Suhail Shaheen said the week-long period of reduced violence has ‘ended.’ Ghani, however, said Sunday that the reduction in violence would extend and eventually transform into a cease-fire.”

---

Social media speed read

Buttigieg met with Jimmy Carter in Georgia this morning:

Trump reacted to the South Carolina results:

Steyer responded:

Clyburn celebrated his kingmaker status:

Videos of the day

“Saturday Night Live” opened with a coronavirus press conference:

Colin Jost and Michael Che had thoughts about Trump's coronavirus response:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Trailer for news and insight on political campaigns around the country, from David Weigel. 435 districts. 50 states. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden's firewall holds. What his South Carolina comeback means for Super Tuesday.
Date: Sunday, March 1, 2020 11:01:00 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann

with Mariana Alfaro

Email

Joe Biden's firewall holds. What his South Carolina comeback means for Super Tuesday.

Thirty-three years after launching his first of three presidential campaigns, Joe Biden finally won a primary on Saturday. The former vice president's landslide in South Carolina was sweeping enough that he received more total votes across the first four early states than Bernie Sanders. The lopsided victory bolsters Biden's argument going into Super Tuesday that he's the Democratic Party's most viable alternative to the independent senator from Vermont.

He wasn't subtle about making this case during his celebratory speech in Columbia, S.C. "If the Democrats want a nominee who's a Democrat – a lifelong Democrat, a proud Democrat, an Obama-Biden Democrat – then join us," he said. "For all those who've been knocked down, counted out, left behind, this is your campaign! Just days ago, the press and pundits declared this candidacy dead. Now, thanks to all of you, the heart of the Democratic Party, we've just won, and we've won big because of you. And we are very much alive!"

With 100 percent of precincts reporting, Biden won 48 percent in the Palmetto State – carrying every county and winning among every significant demographic group. Sanders trailed, with 20 percent. Billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer dropped out after finishing third with 11 percent, under the 15 percent threshold required to get delegates. Former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg finished fourth, with 8 percent, followed by Sen. Elizabeth Warren (Mass.), with 7 percent, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (Minn.), with 3 percent. Sanders received the most votes in Nevada, New Hampshire and Iowa, but he never garnered more than 34 percent of the vote, and Buttigieg narrowly won more delegates from the Iowa caucuses.

The most significant question in American politics at this

moment is whether Biden will be able to capitalize on Tuesday, when 14 states, plus American Samoa, award 34 percent of the delegates to the Democratic convention.

Biden has rolled out a string of endorsements since Saturday night, including from former Virginia governor Terry McAuliffe, Rep. Bobby Scott (D-Va.), former senator Blanche Lincoln (D-Ark.) and former DNC chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz, who remains a congresswoman from Florida. Biden also just unveiled the endorsement of Selma, Ala., Mayor Darrio Melton. Several of the candidates are in Selma today for the anniversary of Bloody Sunday.

Biden announced Sunday morning that he had raised $5 million in the past 24 hours, but he hasn't been advertising nearly as much as several of his rivals in the states that vote on March 3. His victory speech was crisp and punchy, but he remains gaffe prone and uneven on the stump. Even if he manages to emerge from this week as the most obvious alternative to Sanders, the field looks certain to stay fragmented for some time – which works to Sanders's advantage.

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Steyer's failure is a red flag for Mike Bloomberg. The former New York mayor skipped the first four states, but Steyer's play in South Carolina was Bloomberg's Super Tuesday strategy in miniature. And it didn't work. Steyer put nearly $200 million of his personal fortune into his campaign and focused more on South Carolina than anywhere else, advocating forcefully for paying reparations to the descendants of slaves and focusing on fighting climate change along the Eastern Seaboard in a coastal state. Steyer spent $23.6 million on television advertising alone in South Carolina, out of a total of $36 million spent by all the candidates, according to the tracking firm Advertising Analytics. This got him into double digits, but he underperformed where he'd been in recent polling. All told, Steyer spent about $395 on commercials for every vote he received in South Carolina.

Bloomberg has spent about half a billion dollars in the three months he's been running. But he has lost a lot of his luster since he fared so poorly in the first debate and faced mounting scrutiny. That said, polls suggest that he's still poised to pick up a big chunk of delegates on Tuesday, especially in states where he's had the airwaves mostly to himself. "His advisers vowed Saturday night that Bloomberg will stay in the race at least through Super Tuesday," Cleve Wootson and Michael Scherer reported. "They cited internal campaign data showing that if Bloomberg dropped out it would strengthen Sanders, whose left-leaning policies the former mayor abhors. His campaign announced Saturday that he will buy three minutes of commercial airtime nationally at 8:30 p.m. Sunday night to present his vision for managing the current coronavirus outbreak.”

---

Welcome to a special Sunday edition of The Daily 202,
PowerPost’s essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

Biden will undoubtedly get some bounce from South Carolina, especially in the seven Southern states that vote on Tuesday, but how big will it be? African Americans accounted for 57 percent of the electorate in South Carolina’s Democratic primary, according to our exit polling. Biden won 61 percent of the black vote, followed by Sanders at 16 percent. He also beat Sanders among white voters, though only 34 percent to 23 percent, with Buttigieg pulling 16 percent.

It’s a big break for Biden that Buttigieg, Klobuchar and Warren have so utterly failed to racially diversify their coalitions. None of the three will get any delegates out of South Carolina, despite campaigning extensively there over the past year. Warren got 5 percent of the black vote, Buttigieg got 3 percent and Klobuchar got less than 1 percent. It’s impossible to become the Democratic nominee with those kinds of numbers. Klobuchar has been unable to translate her momentum from the overwhelmingly white states of Iowa and New Hampshire into either of the racially diverse states that followed. If demographics alone are destiny, Biden is also poised to fare well in Florida on March 17 and Georgia on March 24.

An NBC News-Marist poll published Sunday morning shows a neck-and-neck primary in North Carolina, with 26 percent for Sanders and 24 percent for Biden. This is well within the margin of error. The other Southern states voting Tuesday are Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. African Americans account for a sizable share of the population in all six, but with Alabama as an exception, the black vote will account for a much smaller share of the electorate than in South Carolina.

That's one of several ways that South Carolina was uniquely favorable terrain for Biden. The 77-year-old has literally – literally! – spent decades cultivating relationships that paid off. He's vacationed there in the summers. He traveled there constantly during his eight years as vice president. More than 3 in 4 voters in the primary viewed him favorably, according to the exit poll. Only 51 percent of voters viewed Sanders favorably. About half of voters said the endorsement of Biden by Rep. Jim Clyburn (D-S.C.) on Wednesday was an “important” factor in their vote. “You brought me back,” Biden told Clyburn in his victory speech. Biden does not have so many deep relationships in the upcoming states.

South Carolina also lacks partisan voter registration, so it was an open primary. Many moderates who voted in the GOP primary in 2016 appear to have cast ballots in the Democratic primary for Biden. Turnout was at least 527,728, a sharp increase from 373,063 four years ago. It's on par with the 2008 turnout of 532,151, when Barack Obama beat Hillary Clinton, but there was also a competitive

Republican primary that year. The electorate in South Carolina was far more moderate than in the first three states. Self-identified moderates and conservatives accounted for about half of all voters, compared to a third in the Iowa and Nevada caucuses and slightly more than that in the New Hampshire primary, according to analysis by Dan Keating and Scott Clement.

South Carolinians weren't looking for a revolution. More than half of voters overall – and two-thirds of black voters – said they want a return to the policies of the Obama administration, according to the exit polls. Biden won that group by more than 5 to 1 over Sanders. By contrast, a quarter of voters wanted to break from Obama and move to more liberal policies, and they favored Sanders over Biden by 37 percent to 22 percent.

More than 7 in 10 South Carolina voters were 45 or older. That's the highest percentage of any of the first four states by far. Biden won this group over Sanders by 3 to 1. Sanders won among voters under age 30, but Biden beat him by 5 percent among voters between the ages of 30 to 44, by 37 points among those ages 45 to 64 and by 55 points among seniors. (I wrote on Friday about Sanders's struggles with older voters.)

South Carolina's electorate was also particularly religious, more so than some of the upcoming states. More than 4 out of 10 Democratic primary voters reported attending religious services once a week or more, compared to 13 percent in New Hampshire. Sanders does better among those who go to church less often. Among those who went to church at least once a week in South Carolina, Biden won 57 percent.

---

Quote of the day

“You cannot win 'em all,” Sanders said, reacting to South Carolina’s results during a rally in Virginia. “And that will not be the only defeat. There are a lot of states in this country, and nobody wins them all.”

Sanders remains the front-runner for the nomination, but he needs a commanding performance on Tuesday to keep that status. He’s heavily favored in California, the biggest delegate prize of the year, where he will campaign later today. Polling published Friday by CNN showed Sanders leading in the Golden State with 35 percent. Others bunched up just below 15 percent: Warren was at 14 percent, Biden at 13 percent and Bloomberg at 12 percent. South Carolina might push Biden into viability, to collect delegates, in a bunch of districts.

Another CNN poll showed Sanders leading in Texas, the second biggest prize on Tuesday, with 29 percent, followed by Biden at 20 percent, Bloomberg at 18 percent, Warren at 15 percent and no one else in double digits. NBC and Marist released a separate poll this morning of Texas that showed Sanders with 34 percent and Biden trailing with 19 percent. Sanders’s lead is driven by strength among younger Latinos.

“No day on this year’s primary-caucus calendar sets up any better for Sanders than this year’s Super Tuesday. Beyond that, primaries in the future are mostly closed, denying Sanders the votes of independents, one of his best constituencies,” Dan Balz explained. “Campaign strategists can’t say just how well Sanders will be positioned after Super Tuesday. There are simply too many variables — too many candidates, too much fluidity and too many combinations about possible outcomes. Campaigns have been modeling the states and constantly tweaking internal projections. As one strategist put it: ‘It’s an insane Rubik’s cube.’”

On Tuesday, 1,357 delegates are up for grabs. To clinch the nomination, a candidate needs 1,991 delegates. “Estimates of delegate totals and of Sanders’s possible margins vary significantly,” Balz reported. “At the high end, say strategists inside the campaigns as well as outside analysts, Sanders could emerge from Tuesday’s contests leading his closest competitor by 300 to as high as 400 delegates. That would put him firmly in command of the race though still might leave him short of a majority going into the convention. At the lower end of estimates, the consensus is that Sanders’s delegate margin could be in the range of 200 or 250. That would still give Sanders the advantage but could be a more manageable margin to overcome for one of the other candidates, but only if the field quickly shrinks after Tuesday.

“One non-campaign analysis calculates that Sanders could win between 600 and 700 delegates on Tuesday with the next-highest candidate in the range of 300 to 500. Sanders could emerge with a 2-to-1 lead over his closest challenger, but still well below 50 percent overall. But these are merely possible scenarios, not predictions, and were all based on information before South Carolina voted. Faiz Shakir, Sanders’s campaign manager, sought to play down suggestions that Sanders will come out of Super Tuesday with a lead of more than 300.”

The Sanders campaign said this morning that it raised $46.5 million in February. “The cash infusion came from 2.2 million individual donations, including more than 350,000 people who gave to the Sanders campaign for the first time,” Sean Sullivan reported. “On Saturday alone, the campaign said it raised $4.5 million. When President Obama was running for office in 2008, he raised $55 million over the same time period. For Sanders, the sum marks a significant increase from the $25 million it collected in January. Since the start of his second campaign for president last February, the campaign said it has raised more than $167 million. The Sanders campaign did not immediately say how much money it had in its account at the end of February. It announced that it was purchasing airtime for TV ads in nine states that vote on March 10 and March 17.”

Candidates are on defense in their home states tomorrow.

Sanders, expected to easily carry his home state of Vermont, traveled to Massachusetts on Saturday, which Warren represents. A new Suffolk University-WBZ-Boston Globe poll shows Sanders edging out Warren in Massachusetts 24 percent to 22 percent, which is within the 4.4 percent margin of error, and Bloomberg, who was born in the Bay State, gets 13 percent. The poll puts Buttigieg in fourth place, with Biden in fifth.

Sanders will go on Monday to Minnesota, which Klobuchar represents, in hopes of beating her on her home turf. The Sanders campaign is putting on a concert in the Twin Cities at a venue that holds 18,000 people. A Star Tribune-Minnesota Public Radio poll released last weekend showed Klobuchar leading Sanders 29 percent to 23 percent in the state, with a 4.5 percentage point margin of error.

Klobuchar seems likely to come under mounting pressure to drop out after Super Tuesday unless she fares well somewhere beyond Minnesota. “First, she finished a surprisingly strong third in

New Hampshire, but otherwise she has been a nonentity,” Aaron Blake explained. “Second, she’s the most ideologically similar to Biden, meaning her exit would most apparently accrue to his benefit. And lastly, Buttigieg has a better argument for staying in the race, given he notched a delegate win in Iowa and polls much better than her nationally. At the same time, given she is far back in the polls, it’s not clear how much Biden might gain by her dropping out. And Biden’s campaign is reportedly encouraging her to stay in, perhaps in hopes that she prevents Sanders from a significant delegate win in her home state.”

But this seems poised to remain a multi-candidate race for a while. Warren has not won a single delegate since the Iowa caucuses on Feb. 3. But she’s raised enough hard money to stick around for a while on account of her strong debate performances. She was, after all, a high school debate state champion in her native state of Oklahoma, which votes on Tuesday. And she’s now getting more than $15 million of help from a super PAC after flip-flopping and reversing herself on accepting outside money.

Warren campaign manager Roger Lau sent a memo to reporters this morning that suggests they’re focused on winning a contested convention. “As the dust settles after March 3rd, the reality of this race will be clear: no candidate will likely have a path to the majority of delegates needed to win an outright claim to the Democratic nomination,” he wrote. “Our grassroots campaign is built to compete in every state and territory and ultimately prevail at the national convention in Milwaukee.”

Buttigieg’s strategy is to maximize his delegate haul on Tuesday to stay in the hunt for Midwestern primaries in the following weeks. Michigan and Missouri, for example, vote on March 10. Illinois and Ohio vote March 17. The former mayor said today on NBC’s “Meet the Press” that he’s staying in. “Nothing can take away from Vice President Biden's commanding victory,” said Buttigieg, adding that he knew “South Carolina was going to be a challenging state.”

“We have reached the conclusion that pushing forward is the best thing we can do for the country and for the party,” said the 38-year-old. “We’ll be assessing at every turn, ... making sure that every step we take is in the interest of the party and that goal of making sure we defeat Donald Trump.”

---

More from the states

In Arkansas, there's no clear favorite. “Arkansas, with 31 available delegates, is worth less than 3% of the total Democratic delegate share on Super Tuesday. The candidates vying for the Democratic nomination, however, have begun treating the state like a worthwhile battleground,” the Democrat-Gazette in Little Rock reports. “The reason, perhaps, is due to the lack of a clear front-runner -- or even several -- in this Republican-dominated state. In dozens of interviews with elected Democrats and other party leaders last week, [we] found that support remained split among no fewer than five candidates. Many said they are still waiting to decide for whom to vote. ‘This is really about the first time in 30 years in which there's not been a favorite daughter or favorite son in one of the contests, or someone like Al Gore, who is very clearly identified with a major figure from Arkansas,’ said Andrew Dowdle, a political science

professor at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville.”

In Colorado, many voters held back their mail-in ballots until the last minute. “As Colorado voters have returned 1 million or so ballots in the last three weeks, Democratic ballots lagged Republican returns, suggesting that large numbers of voters planning to participate in the Democratic primary have held theirs back as they’ve watched the race’s drama play out in other states,” the Denver Post reports. “Among more than 50 undecided Colorado voters [we] surveyed or interviewed last week, it was clear many don’t fit into clear ‘liberal’ or ‘moderate’ lanes. While plenty were considering candidates in only one of those categories, others were mulling interesting combos — including several voters weighing a Sanders or a Warren (or both) against a Buttigieg or a Klobuchar.”

Voters in California have also held on to their ballots, giving Biden additional hope. “The portion of returned ballots at this stage is much lower than in recent elections — and his campaign is counting on a late surge of support among those holdouts after his dominant [South Carolina] performance on Saturday,” Politico reports. “Paul Mitchell, an elections expert who has tracked the number of returned vote-by-mail California ballots through Friday [said] he’s seen a significant drop-off among Democratic voters to date from the last two California presidential primaries. And the decline in returned ballots so far is occurring among the most dedicated voters: Those who have participated in the last five elections.”

Election officials there are scrambling to address coronavirus concerns. “While there were ‘no indications of any disruptions to California’s March 3, 2020 presidential primary,’ the California Secretary of State’s office [said] it will continue to monitor any public health alerts that could impact election administration,” ABC News reports. “Officials in Solano County, California are now taking precautionary measures and providing expanded options for voters, including offering an additional location for them to drop off ballots in advance of Super Tuesday. ... Voters ‘don’t even have to get out of their car and we’re going to expand that on Monday and Tuesday,' said John Gardner, the assistant registrar of voters for Solano County. ... Gardner [said] every polling place and every poll worker will receive disinfectant wipes and spray, hand sanitizer and gloves as additional precautions. In the past, only sanitary wipes were provided to clean the voting equipment itself."

Texans early voting has eclipsed the 2016 numbers. "But voters in the state still cast even more early votes in the Republican primary than the Democratic contest, 1,070,278 to 954,583," the Houston Chronicle reports. "The nearly 7 percent turnout on the Democratic side for the 15 counties with the most registered voters was above the 5 percent racked up after early voting in the 2016 presidential primary."

Biden has long been popular with black voters in Texas. Will they stick with him? "His lead in Texas polls has disappeared. Now many black voters in Texas and beyond are wondering aloud whether to look elsewhere. If they do en masse, it could effectively end his campaign," the Texas Tribune reports. "To be sure, Biden does have support from some prominent black Texas leaders. U.S. Rep. Marc Veasey, D-Fort Worth, an early Biden backer, said last weekend on CNN that black voters 'here in the state of Texas — they will not forget that Bernie Sanders threatened to primary President Obama in 2012.' But Carroll Robinson, the chairman of the Texas Coalition of Black Democrats, said Biden 'took his support among black voters for granted, and his outreach wasn't as assertive as, say, Bloomberg.'"

In Minnesota, the Catholic archdiocese asked priests not to vote in the Democratic primary over concerns that they'd appear "partisan." Under the state's system, voters request whichever party's ballot they want, and that preference is recorded and sent to chairs of all four political parties in the state, the Star Tribune reports.

In Maine, Klobuchar presented herself as a centrist capable of bringing the party together. "I think Maine, that practical state that you are, understands that it's important to have bold ideas that can actually get done," she told a crowd of several hundred, per the Portland

Press Herald. Last week, Maine's Bangor Daily News endorsed Klobuchar while ripping Sanders.

In Tennessee, Buttigieg promised to unify the country. "Buttigieg came to Nashville Saturday to make the case that he could unite a coalition of Democrats, independents and 'future former Republicans' strong enough to defeat [Trump]," the Tennessean reports. "Buttigieg drew a crowd of about 2,700 to Public Square Park next to Nashville's city hall ... It was perhaps the largest showing a Democratic candidate has drawn in the city this cycle. ... Nashville Mayor John Cooper attended the rally a day after attending a Klobuchar fundraiser. ... Despite attending fundraisers for some candidates, Cooper said he has not donated to any. He also has not endorsed."

Utah will participate in Super Tuesday for the first time. "It's not even the 12th biggest prize for the Democratic presidential hopefuls vying to snatch up as many delegates as they can on their march to the nomination," the Salt Lake Tribune reports. "But the state's contest matters, as shown by the rare campaign visits, the stream of ads and the excitement of voters casting a ballot in what is still a wide-open race. ... That's different from previous cycles, when Utah's primary landed later in the spring, too late in many ways to be part of the game." In 2016, Sanders beat Clinton with nearly 80 percent. Aiming for a similar outcome this time around, Sanders will visit Salt Lake City on Monday.

Biden, Buttigieg, Bloomberg and Klobuchar will address the AIPAC conference with video messages, four years after organizers rejected an offer from Sanders to deliver a video message during his previous presidential campaign. (Jerusalem Post)

Israel's ambassador to the United Nations, meanwhile, assailed Sanders at the conference as an "ignorant fool." "Whoever calls the prime minister of Israel a 'racist' is either a liar, an ignorant fool, or both," Danny Danon said. "We don't want Sanders at AIPAC. We don't want him in Israel." (Times of Israel)

A great Sunday read: What the reckonings of a suburban Southern white woman say about Trump’s chances. Miranda Murphey “is 39, a high school English teacher with a PhD and part of a voting demographic whose rebellion could upend the political map of the country: not just suburban women, not just white suburban women, but white suburban women in the South, whose loyalty Trump will need to remain in power,” Stephanie McCrummen reports. “She first started reevaluating her politics after the election of Barack Obama, even though she had voted Republican. ... Then came Trump, who Miranda found so morally repugnant that for the first time in her voting life she wrote in the name of the Libertarian Party candidate and went to bed expecting that good and decent conservatives would do the same. She woke up realizing she was wrong. Church members had voted for Trump. Her parents had gone for Trump. [Her husband]: Trump. And then came Liz, a new English teacher in her district ... She was not like anyone Miranda had met before, a Republican who’d become a Democrat and who described her Trump-era self as a ‘full-on rage machine.’ ... Miranda was surprised by how often she found herself seeing what Liz meant.”

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

---

The coronavirus

Trump unveiled new travel restrictions after the first death on U.S. soil.

“A man in his 50s with an underlying health condition became the first person in the United States to die of coronavirus infection,” William Wan, Katie Mettler, Miriam Berger and Carolyn Johnson report. “Along with the fatality in Washington state, health officials in the Seattle area confirmed two additional cases of the covid-19 disease and a possible outbreak at a long-term nursing facility — raising alarm because the elderly and sick are among those most vulnerable to the virus. Officials in California’s Santa Clara County announced another case Saturday, and Illinois announced another case Saturday evening. The new cases bring the number of people apparently infected by community spread of the disease to nine. ... One of the three new cases of infection is a health-care worker at the Life Care nursing home in Kirkland, Wash. Another is a woman in her 70s from the nursing home, now in serious condition... The man who died was not associated with the nursing home. ...

“As news of the first fatality broke, Trump announced he would extend an existing travel ban on Iran to apply to any foreign nationals who had been in that country over the past 14 days. He also raised the warning level for travel to Italy and South Korea, recommending Americans not travel to certain regions of those countries with outbreaks of the virus. Trump said he is also considering restrictions across the southern U.S. border. ... At the hastily convened news conference, Trump described the patient who died as a 'wonderful woman' in her late 50s. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention later issued a statement saying it had mistakenly described the patient's gender in a briefing to Trump and Vice President Pence, and local health officials clarified the deceased patient was a man. Trump praised his administration's response to the virus, calling his earlier decision to ban foreign nationals from China 'a lifesaver,' and he urged people to remain calm and to go on living their lives normally. 'Healthy people, if you're healthy, you will probably go through a process and you'll be fine,' Trump said. ...

“On Saturday, the Food and Drug Administration took steps to expand testing by speeding up certified hospital laboratories' ability to create and use their own tests, following complaints from many labs. The FDA also approved a test developed by New York state laboratories, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo said, making New York the first state able to use its own test. ... An unreleased report from a branch of the State Department obtained by The Washington Post on Saturday found roughly 2 million tweets already peddling conspiracy theories about the coronavirus, raising worries about Silicon Valley's preparedness to combat a surge of dangerous disinformation online. Trying to avoid panic, Pence said Saturday that the average American does not need to buy face masks because of the coronavirus, echoing worries by health officials that hoarding such supplies may put health workers at risk in coming weeks.”

The administration continues trying to contain not just the virus, but also its political damage.

“Interviews with nearly two dozen administration officials, former White House aides, public health experts and lawmakers ... portray a White House scrambling to gain control of a rudderless response defined by bureaucratic infighting, confusion and misinformation 'It's complete chaos,' a senior administration official said. 'Everyone is just trying to get a handle on what the [expletive] is going on,’” Yasmeen Abutaleb, Ashley

Parker and Josh Dawsey report. “Personal animosities between [Health Secretary Alex] Azar and senior members of the White House — including [acting chief of staff Mick] Mulvaney and Joe Grogan, the director of the Domestic Policy Council — also complicated response efforts, several senior administration officials said. Several officials said those relationships have never recovered from past battles ...

“Administration officials [continued plowing] forward with their previous schedules, modifying them only slightly as they tried to minimize the coronavirus threat. Mulvaney spoke, as previously planned, at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference outside Washington, where he assured the crowd, ‘We know how to handle this,’ and accused the news media of overhyping the virus to ‘bring down the president.’ Pence, too, continued with a prior commitment Friday evening — a closed-door, high-dollar fundraiser in Sarasota, Fla. — while tacking on a brief coronavirus response meeting with Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) at the airport ... And Trump held a long-standing campaign rally Friday in North Charleston, S.C., where he accused Democrats of ‘politicizing’ the coronavirus. ‘And this is their new hoax,’ the president crowed from the stage.”

Nancy Pelosi will bring a coronavirus funding bill to the floor this week.

The House speaker didn’t indicate a price tag, but “she said the funding package must be new money and ‘not stolen from other accounts.’ She said House appropriators will work to ensure there is a firewall around the funds so the president cannot use the money for anything other than fighting the coronavirus,” Colby Itkowitz reports. “Pelosi said the funding package should also include money to make eventual vaccines available to everyone, loans for small businesses hurt by disruptions, and reimbursement for state and local governments responding to outbreaks.”

The outbreak is creating huge medical bills.

“Frank Wucinski and his 3-year-old daughter, Annabel, are among the dozens of Americans the government has flown back to the country from Wuhan, China, and put under quarantine to check for signs of coronavirus. Now they are among what could become a growing number of families hit with surprise medical bills related to government-mandated actions,” the NYT reports. “Both have repeatedly tested negative for the virus. After their release from quarantine, Mr. Wucinski and his daughter went to stay with his mother in Harrisburg, Pa. That’s where they found a pile of medical bills waiting: $3,918 in charges from hospital doctors, radiologists and an ambulance company. ‘I assumed it was all being paid for,’ Mr. Wucinski said. ‘We didn’t have a choice.’ ... The federal government has the authority to quarantine and isolate patients if officials believe them to be a public health threat. These powers, which date back to cholera outbreaks among ship passengers in the late 19th century, are rarely used. They don’t say anything about who pays when the isolation happens in a nongovernmental medical facility — or when they’re brought there by a private ambulance company.”

Australia also reported its first coronavirus death.

“A 78-year-old man who contracted the coronavirus after spending time on the Diamond Princess cruise ship died Saturday in a Perth hospital, becoming Australia’s first death from the disease. The man and his 79-year-old wife were among 164 Australians who were evacuated from the cruise ship, which was docked in Japan while people on board were quarantined, and flown to Australia for treatment last week,” Derek Hawkins reports. “His wife was also placed in isolation, where she tested positive Friday. Robertson said she was in stable condition. ‘She had the opportunity to talk to him prior to his death, but she’s understandably quite upset. And I obviously ask that people respect their privacy,’ Robertson told Australia’s national broadcaster.”

China and South Korea reported hundreds of new cases.

“Chinese health officials early Sunday, local time, reported an additional 573 confirmed cases of the coronavirus and 35 deaths on the country’s mainland. In keeping with the pattern throughout the outbreak, the vast majority of those cases and deaths were in Hubei province, where the virus first emerged. The total number of cases on the mainland reached 79,824, and the total number of deaths hit 2,870,” Marisa Iati reports. “In nearby South Korea, health officials reported 376 additional cases of the coronavirus, 333 of which were in the southern city of Daegu. ... The total number of cases in South Korea stands at 3,526, and the death count is 17.”

Italy became the third country to have more than 1,000 coronavirus cases.

“The latest data, according to the Italian government, shows that 1,049 people nationwide are positive for the virus, and another 29 have died. More than half of the cases are in the wealthy northern region of Lombardy, which includes Milan. But a handful of cases have popped up as far south as Sicily and Puglia,” Chico Harlan reports.

Mexico hit back at Trump’s comments on possibly closing the border.

With polite astonishment, Mexico noted “that ‘there are four cases of covid-19 registered in our country and 22 in the U.S.’ The Foreign Ministry said the U.S. and Mexican governments were in close contact on the issue, and Mexico was willing to cooperate with Washington to protect public health,” Mary Beth Sheridan reports. “Few cases of coronavirus have been reported in Latin America. Ecuador reported its first confirmed case Saturday, and two cases have been confirmed in Brazil.”

---

A peace deal in Afghanistan

Abdul Ghani Baradar, right, who led the Taliban delegation, and U.S. envoy Zalmay Khalilzad sign the deal. (Ibraheem Al Omari/Reuters)

The agreement signed with the Taliban in Doha set a timetable for U.S. withdrawal.

“The agreement to end the brutal U.S.-Taliban conflict in Afghanistan ... was signed on Saturday under the gaze of tough men in turbans, who clapped and shouted ‘Allahu akbar!’” Karen DeYoung reports. “Trump hailed the accord, formalized with signatures and a handshake between U.S. negotiator Zalmay Khalilzad and his Taliban counterpart, Abdul Ghani Baradar, as historic. ... Trump said he would be ‘meeting personally with Taliban leaders in the not too distant future.’ Asked whether such a meeting would be overseas, or if he would invite them to Camp David, an idea he broached last year, he said, ‘We’re looking at that.’ Senior administration officials, while claiming success, offered slightly more tempered expressions of optimism. ...

“Many veterans of the years-long efforts to end the war and leave a stable Afghanistan, as well as Trump supporters, questioned whether the new agreement laid a sturdy groundwork for permanent peace. Some described it as a capitulation to the Taliban, whose primary demand has always been the full departure of foreign troops. ... Some senior military and intelligence officials 'are concerned that the administration is putting too much stock in the promises of the Taliban,' who will 'simply sign anything to get us to leave,' [said a former senior defense official]. ...

"The conditions in the agreement appeared to relate far more to the insurgents' promises to stop attacking the Americans as they leave, and to sever ties with other terrorist groups, rather than a long-term solution for Afghans. ... The agreement includes a Taliban commitment to start direct negotiations with the Afghan government over a cease-fire and political settlement of the war within 10 days. Those negotiations, tentatively to be held in Norway, are already complicated by political upheaval in Kabul, where President Ashraf Ghani's recent reelection is under challenge and there are major fights over the composition of a negotiating team. The agenda for the talks is massive, including a comprehensive cease-fire, the role of the Taliban in a future government, and rights for women and civil society. No format has been established, and there is no deadline for completion. ...

"The agreement also provides for the 'expeditious' release by March 10 of up to 5,000 Taliban prisoners and up to 1,000 prisoners held by 'the other side,' and the release of all remaining prisoners within the subsequent three months. It does not mention whether 'the other side' includes Taliban prisoners being held by the United States, including some at the detention facility in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. ... John Bolton, Trump's former national security adviser, called the deal 'an unacceptable risk to the United States' civilian population.' ... At his news conference, Trump indicated that the Taliban would take over the fight against the Islamic State and others, although the agreement, and a separate joint declaration with the Afghan government, cite only Taliban responsibilities for preventing terrorist groups from activities within territory under Taliban control."

The Afghan government also questioned aspects of the deal.

“Freeing Taliban prisoners is not [under] the authority of America, but the authority of the Afghan government. There has been no commitment for the release of 5,000 prisoners,’ Ghani told reporters gathered inside the palace in Kabul on Sunday. Ghani said the prisoner swap could be discussed during talks with the Taliban but could not be a precondition,” Susannah George reports. "The peace deal did not mention [the] future of the period of reduced violence that preceded the deal’s signing. Following the signing ceremony Saturday, Taliban spokesman Suhail Shaheen said the week-long period of reduced violence has ‘ended.’ Ghani, however, said Sunday that the reduction in violence would extend and eventually transform into a cease-fire.”

---

Social media speed read

Buttigieg met with Jimmy Carter in Georgia this morning:

Trump reacted to the South Carolina results:

Steyer responded:

Clyburn celebrated his kingmaker status:

Videos of the day

“Saturday Night Live” opened with a coronavirus press conference:

Colin Jost and Michael Che had thoughts about Trump's coronavirus response:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Trailer for news and insight on political campaigns around the country, from David Weigel. 435 districts. 50 states. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 2 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Monday, March 2, 2020 5:33:46 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Mon., March 2, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. ENERGY MARKETS:

Coronavirus cancels CERAWeek as energy threats rise

Big Oil CEOs, Cabinet officials and international dignitaries won't gather in Texas next week for one of the world's top energy conferences because of growing concerns about the COVID-19 virus. The announcement came as President Trump implemented new travel restrictions and analysts warned of additional threats to the energy sector.

TOP STORIES

2. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Trump says turbines are 'rotting.' Is that true?

3. INTERIOR:

Bernhardt: ANWR drilling plan coming

4. OIL AND GAS:

Methane battle flares up in N.M.

FEDERAL AGENCIES

5. DOE:

Brouillette: Coal can build 'better batteries'

ENERGY TRANSITIONS

6. FINANCE:

Why isn't the Ivy League divesting from fossil fuels?

ELECTRICITY

7. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Developer to open hub to grow U.S. offshore wind industry

TECHNOLOGY

8. AUSTRALIA:

2 years on, Elon Musk's battery bet pays off

9. ELECTRIC VEHICLES:

U.S. launches tool to claim world's rare earth minerals

OIL AND GAS

---

10. ENERGY MARKETS:

U.S. gas pioneers forced to sell shares amid market slump

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Democratic fears that Bernie Sanders would hurt down-ballot candidates influence suburban voters
Date: Monday, March 2, 2020 10:35:20 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Democratic fears that Bernie Sanders would hurt down-ballot candidates influence suburban voters

HOUSTON – Joanne Armstrong was tired of screaming at the television. It's why she volunteered for Lizzie Fletcher in 2018. And it's why she doesn't want Bernie Sanders to be the Democratic nominee for president in 2020.

Armstrong, a physician in her 50s, decided to channel her anger at

President Trump two years ago by going door-knocking, for the first time ever, to help Fletcher, a Democratic congressional candidate in the suburban Houston district where she lives. In the midterms, Fletcher toppled nine-term Republican congressman John Culberson, a powerful appropriator, picking up a seat that had been comfortably in GOP hands after George H.W. Bush won it in 1966.

Armstrong worries that Fletcher, still a freshman, would lose her quest for a second term if Sanders (I-Vt.) is at the top of the ticket and that Trump would handily win a second term. She said it was hard enough to convince voters to take a chance on a Democratic candidate last time when she could warn while canvassing about how Republicans were trying to destroy the Affordable Care Act without a replacement plan, putting people with preexisting conditions at risk. But Sanders's Medicare-for-all plan also threatens to upend the system, jeopardizing people's private health-insurance coverage. Houston is world-renowned for its medical centers, especially related to cancer treatment.

"People looked at Trump in 2018 and said this is not who we are. But Bernie also isn't who we in Houston are," said Armstrong. "I'm still tired of screaming at the TV after three years. I don't want four more years."

Bernie Sanders reacts to cheering supporters during a rally on Sunday in San Jose, Calif. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Texas is the second-biggest prize on Super Tuesday, behind California, with 228 delegates up for grabs. Houston, the fourth-most populous city in the country, has become a battleground within the battleground. Harris County, home to Houston, has more than 4 million residents, a bigger population than 26 states.

Joe Biden is flying here this afternoon for a rally at Texas Southern University. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) spoke to a crowd of 2,000 at an outdoor rally on Saturday night. Former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg stumped here this past Thursday with the mayor of Houston, who endorsed him. Sanders visited the University of Houston last weekend, where he celebrated his triumph in the Nevada caucuses.

Two polls published Sunday put Sanders ahead but by significantly different margins among likely voters in the Lone Star State, reflecting the degree to which the contest remains fluid and also how hard it is to predict what the electorate will look like in this evolving megastate. Sanders led Biden 34 percent to 19 percent in an NBC-Marist poll, with Bloomberg at 15 percent and Warren at 10 percent.

But Sanders led Biden by only 4 percentage points, 30 percent to 26 percent, in a CBS-YouGov poll, which was within the margin of error, with Warren at 17 percent and Bloomberg at 13 percent.

But Sanders fares particularly poorly in the same well-to-do suburban areas that fueled the Democratic wave in the midterms and where Trump remains most vulnerable. The 7th District, where Fletcher already faces a tough reelection fight, is the sort of place that national Democrats fear they'd lose if Sanders leads the ticket. Mitt Romney carried the district with 60 percent of the vote in the 2012 presidential election, but Trump lost it to Hillary Clinton in 2016 with 47 percent. Establishment-minded Democrats worry that voters who don't like Trump or Sanders might stay home, especially moderates who voted for candidates like Fletcher in 2018. They fear that Sanders would galvanize more Republicans than he'd bring in the new voters he promises to mobilize.

Armstrong is undecided but anxious to vote for a Democrat in Texas's presidential primary on Tuesday who can block Sanders from winning the nomination. She really likes Warren, but she's mainly concerned about beating Trump. She's texted all weekend with friends as far away as New Jersey and Massachusetts to mull what she should do. "I would vote for Joe Biden. He's not my first choice, but I would if I thought he was the only one who could beat Bernie," she said. "I just don't want Bernie. There's a big contingent that doesn't want Bernie, but they're all splitting. ... Do I vote my conscience, which is Warren? Or do I vote strategically, which is Biden?"

Elizabeth Warren acknowledges the crowd of 2,000 after a rally on Saturday night in Houston. (Brian Snyder/Reuters)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more. chain store you can think of, plus an indoor ice-skating rink. It was packed this weekend as I interviewed more than 30 voters.

---

The Galleria, in the heart of Fletcher's district, is one of the largest and ritziest malls in the United States. It has every fancy

Charlotte Sullivan, 70, the retired human resources director of an oil and gas company, plans to vote for Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) because she seems reasonable and willing to compromise to get results. “I’m a fiscally responsible Democrat, and I don’t go for Bernie’s socialism,” Sullivan said as she shopped with her daughter. “I will go for Bernie if he’s the nominee because I cannot tolerate Trump at all. But Bernie has dug himself into a trench, and he’s not going to be able to get out of it.”

Sullivan lives in the richest Zip code of Houston, a traditionally Republican neighborhood in Fletcher’s district that’s full of multimillion-dollar homes. “My neighbors will all vote for Trump before they’ll vote for Bernie, but they’d love to see someone moderate so they could make the switch,” she said. “If Klobuchar was the nominee, they’d vote for her.”

She looked at Bloomberg but concluded that he’s a Democratic version of Trump. “All my antennae go up,” Sullivan said. “It’s the feeling that tells me something’s not right about him. I’ve had very few circumstances in my life where that instinct took me in the wrong direction. My gut says, ‘Don’t go with Bloomberg.’”

Carol Alvarado, a Democratic state senator who represents Houston, endorsed Biden on Sunday after his sweeping win in the South Carolina primary. Democrats picked up a dozen state House seats in 2018 and could win control of the chamber if they gain nine more in 2020. Several of their best pick-up opportunities are around Houston. Alvarado, who chairs the Senate Democratic Caucus, identified certain seats in both the state House and Senate that they’re more likely to win if the former vice president is their standard-bearer.

“We could lose seats if we’re having to talk about democratic socialism,” she explained in an interview. “And if we lose those seats, that gives Republicans a larger majority – which matters for the next decade.” She’s referring to redistricting. The outcome of the 2020 state elections will impact who draws the boundaries that will be in effect until 2031. Alvarado said a Democratic-controlled legislature could also vote to expand Medicaid under the ACA, something Republicans have declined to do. “There’s just so much riding on this election for the future of Texas,” she said.

Joe Biden attends a Sunday church service at Brown Chapel AME Church to commemorate the 55th anniversary of Bloody Sunday in Selma, Ala. (Toni L. Sandys/The Washington Post)

Houston is also the epicenter of the American energy industry, and Sanders’s plan to ban fracking and pass a Green New Deal makes moderates jittery. When you fly into town, you see the scope of the region’s dependence on fossil fuels in the form of tankers and refineries.

“People’s livelihoods are directly tied to that industry,” said Rep. Marc Veasey (D-Tex.). He represents a Fort Worth district, where he notes that many African Americans and Latinos depend on energy industry jobs that Sanders could put in jeopardy. He said union members also regularly express “worry and concern” to him that Sanders’s Medicare-for-all proposal would take away health-care benefits they’ve negotiated hard to secure from their employers.

Veasey lamented that Sanders being at the top of the ticket would make it harder to play offense against House Republicans like freshman Dan Crenshaw in the Houston suburbs. Veasey, who endorsed Biden in November, added that many of his Democratic colleagues would have little choice but to distance themselves from Sanders if he’s the nominee in order to get reelected. “There’s absolutely no question about that,” he told me on Sunday evening.

The CBS-YouGov poll released asked likely Democratic voters in Texas which candidate has the best chance of beating Trump, regardless of whom they support. Interestingly, Latino voters said Sanders has the best chance of winning the general, topping Biden by a 24-point margin. Black voters thought Biden had the best chance, besting Sanders by a 25-point margin. White voters were more evenly split: 32 percent said Biden, 28 percent said Sanders, 18 percent said Bloomberg and 13 percent said Warren.

Anthony Blake, a 35-year-old management consultant, will vote for Sanders in the primary. “Sometimes I think you’ve got to fight fire with fire, as terrible as that sounds,” he said. When I asked about the electability fears expressed by his fellow Houstonians, he pointed to several recent polls that showed Sanders leading Trump in head-to-head matchups and in many cases outperforming other Democrats. “The data doesn’t really show that,” he said, downplaying the concerns of elected lawmakers.

Blake, a political junkie who is white, came to watch Warren’s outdoor rally on Discovery Green in the heart of downtown Houston on Saturday night. He observed that Sanders’s rally at the same venue last April drew a bigger and, he believes, more energetic crowd. He said he was especially impressed that the Sanders crowd included so many diverse faces, especially Latinos, and young people who told him they've never been engaged with politics. “I know they say it's a fool's errand, but Bernie's going to bring new people out,” said Blake. “I've never seen energy like I have for Bernie.”

He added that he comes from a conservative family. “They've been Republicans for 30 years now, but they dislike Trump,” he said. “They're terrified of Bernie right now, but they'll vote for him over Trump.”

Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner introduces Mike Bloomberg during a rally last Thursday in Houston. (Joe Raedle/Getty Images)

The NBC-Marist poll showed 1 in 4 likely voters in Texas remained undecided. Sarita Gomez-Mola, 70, is among them. The foreign-language interpreter, who lives in the 7th District, said she will cast her ballot for whomever she concludes on primary day has the best chance of blocking Sanders from clinching the nomination, which she acknowledged may be Biden. A friend visiting from New York encouraged her to think about Bloomberg, but she's “angsting” over which of the Democratic alternatives to Sanders could best unify the party.

“Will the Sanders voters support Bloomberg? I worry,” she said. “But Bernie cannot hijack the Democratic Party. He’s divisive, and we’re lurching from one extreme to the other. There would be nothing but gridlock. If Barack Obama couldn’t get his priorities passed, how is Sanders going to?”

Gomez-Mola’s husband is a geologist who works for an oil company. “All his colleagues are Trumppers,” she said. “They will all vote for Trump, no matter who he’s up against.” Likewise, she said, she’ll vote for any Democratic nominee over Trump. “I was born in Cuba, and I’m very afraid of Sanders because of all the changes he wants to make,” said Gomez-Mola. “But even if Fidel Castro came back from the grave and was the nominee, I’d support him over Trump. Castro was my nemesis all my life, but Trump is just that bad.”

This is exactly what the Sanders campaign is counting on. The senator’s strategists express confidence that dislike for Trump is so strong among Democrats that even moderates will coalesce and consolidate behind Sanders if he wins the nomination.

The 7th District is a majority-minority district: 43 percent white, 31 percent Latino, 13 percent black and 11 percent Asian. One in five residents of this district has a postgraduate degree. Another 30 percent have a bachelor’s.

Salvador Delmundo, 56, is an ordained minister who works as a chaplain at one of the hospitals in the district. His political evolution over the past 20 years tracks with the community’s broader shift. He was a Republican who voted for George W. Bush when he carried the district with 66 percent in 2004, but Obama’s barrier-breaking candidacy lured him away. Now he considers himself a “middle-of-the-road” Democrat. “Over the last 10 to 15 years, what was good for me and my wife was developing a deeper appreciation and understanding of the importance of diversity,” he explained as he ate a cheesesteak in the food court while his wife shopped.

Delumndo emphasized that winning as a Democrat in these parts is still an uphill battle that requires carefully challenging deeply ingrained mindsets. “The hurdle before Sanders is educating the general American public about what socialism is,” he said. “I have a lot of ‘friends’ – and I say friends with air quotes – saying that North Korea shot dead a coronavirus patient, and that’s what they do to people in socialist countries. It’s totally crazy, but that’s what they say.”

Delmundo and his wife considered Biden, Sanders and Warren before deciding to vote for the senator from Massachusetts because she seemed like a bridge between the left and the middle of the party. “We decided Warren was in the middle between Biden and Sanders,” he said. “That said, regardless of who wins the primary, we’re going to go with the Democratic nominee.”

Lizzie Fletcher, on the left in the white blouse, joins other Democrats who were elected to Congress in 2018 for a group portrait in front of the Capitol. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Fletcher has not endorsed in the presidential race, and she declined an interview request to discuss her thinking. A spokeswoman said she didn't have open events over the weekend. She's been building a large war chest, with close to $2 million cash on hand. Around the district, she'd been emphasizing a drug pricing bill she sponsored, which the House passed and got pigeonholed in the Senate, to show she's focused on pocketbook issues.

The 2020 election will be the first in modern Texas history where ballots no longer include the option to just vote the Republican or Democratic line straight down the ticket. "Political consultants here don't know how to model for this," said Jim Henson, director of the Texas Politics Project at the University of Texas at Austin. "It stands to reason that drop-off will be higher down the ballot, and that's causing some anxiety on both sides."

Henson thinks Fletcher might be "somewhat more insulated" than other Democrats in frontline House races if Sanders is the nominee. She'll be well funded, has time to build out her own field operation and represents an informed electorate capable of distinguishing between her and Sanders. “There’s also a lot of ifs about what kind of a campaign Sanders is going to run if he’s actually the nominee,” said Henson.

Many House Republicans who lost in 2018, including Culberson, survived when Trump was at the top of the ticket two years before because voters saw them as distinct from the GOP nominee. Two years later, this was a harder sell because they’d mostly voted in lockstep with his agenda. House Democratic strategists hope to benefit from a similar dynamic in 2020 if Sanders wins the nomination because he’s seen as an outsider taking over the party. National Republican strategists counter that they expect Trump to outperform his 2016 numbers in the district no matter the Democratic nominee, so long as the coronavirus doesn’t push the economy into recession, because voters here have benefitted disproportionately from the 2017 tax cuts and various business-friendly policies, such as deregulation.

Six Republicans are running in their own primary on Tuesday to challenge Fletcher this fall. The national party favors Wesley Hunt, an African American in his 30s who piloted Apache helicopters in Iraq as an Army captain after graduating from West Point. He’s trying to break 50 percent to avoid a runoff. His closet competitor is former Bellaire mayor Cindy Siegel, who has spent more than half a million dollars and launched attack ads against Hunt.

Laura Moser campaigns in Houston in May 2017. She lost a runoff to Fletcher. (Michael Stravato/For The Washington Post)

Two years ago, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee intervened to boost Fletcher over the more liberal Laura Moser in the primary. National party operatives even took the unusual step of publishing a tranche of opposition research against Moser because they thought the moderate Fletcher would have an easier time ousting Culberson. (We wrote several Big Ideas about the ensuing kerfuffle.)

Moser voted early for Sanders, but interestingly she doesn't believe the polls that show him ahead in the Texas primary. Many Democrats she knows in the district planned to vote for Bloomberg a few weeks ago, but she said he's faded since his bad debate performance in Las Vegas. Moser said she does not know anyone who loves Biden, but she expects many will vote for him anyway to stop Sanders. And Warren remains popular among many of the most devoted volunteers on her congressional campaign. "I was sort of supporting Warren for a lot of the primary, and it was basically my mother's book club at her events," Moser explained on Sunday afternoon. "Then I went to a Bernie event, and they were all 20-years old, Muslims, Latinx and people I hadn't seen at political events before. That's why I decided to go all in for Bernie."

Democrats haven't won a statewide race in Texas since 1994, and Moser said she'd be surprised if that changes this

November. "I don't think Texas is going to flip this year anyway, but if it doesn't, it's not Bernie's fault," she said. "The whole point is either new people come – or they don't. It's a very hard gamble. But the old thing isn't working. ... If the people Bernie is betting on actually come out, we have a lot of them in Texas. But will they come out? I don't know. ... I really banked on those people coming out in my race. And they didn't. ... The infrastructure is not fully there yet. People aren't used to mattering, and people aren't used to voting. That's changing, but it takes time."

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost's essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

Powered by LiveIntent

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

More on 2020

Buttigieg ended his presidential bid.

“The normally stoic Buttigieg appeared to be steadying himself throughout his farewell remarks in his hometown of South Bend, bringing to an end what was for a time an electrifying candidacy,” Chelsea Janes and Amy B Wang report. “After a year of going everywhere, meeting everyone, defying every expectation, seeking every vote, the truth is that the path has narrowed to a close for our candidacy, if not for our cause,’ Buttigieg said. ... Despite attracting enormous attention, significant support and often enthusiastic crowds, Buttigieg was not polling well in the upcoming primary states and never found a way to reverse the antipathy he generated in the black community. Earlier Sunday, his campaign held a call with reporters in which senior adviser Michael Halle and deputy campaign manager Hari Sevugan made the case that while Buttigieg likely wouldn’t win any of the 14 states that vote Tuesday, he could still accumulate enough delegates to keep Sanders’s lead to a minimum. ... LGBTQ leaders had no doubt that Buttigieg’s candidacy had widened the path for gay Americans in politics and other areas of life in the United States. ... The crowd interrupted him with a new chant: ‘2024! 2024!’”

---

Quote of the day

“We sent a message to every kid out there wondering if whatever marks them out as different means they are somehow destined to be less than. [They saw] that someone who once felt that exact same way can become a leading American presidential candidate — with his husband at his side,” Buttigieg said in his concession speech.

Sanders is hoping California will deliver him the nomination.

“There are 415 delegates at stake here Tuesday, the largest haul on a day when 14 other states and territories will also go to the polls,” Scott Wilson reports. “The campaign has a state organization far larger than those of his opponents — 22 offices and more than 100 paid staffers. And it has been targeting Latinos, Asian Americans and young voters, key demographics in the Democratic electorate. ... A Suffolk University/USA Today poll showed Sanders with a double-digit lead. He was at 35 percent among likely Democratic primary voters, well ahead of [Bloomberg] at 16 percent, [Biden] at 14 percent and [Warren] at 12 percent. ... Officials say they’re confident. ‘The campaign really prioritized California in a way that we hadn’t before,’ said Rafael Návar, the Sanders campaign’s state director. ‘Most people looked at the first four states. I looked at it as five states, and so California had a prioritization from the start.’

“One key rival for Sanders is Warren, who is hovering around the 15 percent vote threshold, according to some recent polls. ... Julián Castro ... recently appeared at a Warren event in San Francisco that drew about 150 staff members, volunteers and others. It seems part of an effort to cut into Sanders’s lead among Latinos, especially older ones less liberal on issues of ethnic identity and more suspect of Sanders’s Medicare-for-all proposal. Several polls show Sanders drawing nearly half the state’s Latino support. ... Some of his better-funded rivals have also looked hopefully toward television. California is a place where intensive advertising usually proves essential in winning statewide races. But those rich enough to afford big buys in multiple markets are then often resented, especially the self-financed candidates. ... But it's not clear whether endorsements or heavy spending will dent Sanders's lead, nor whether Biden's surge in South Carolina will itself alter the trajectory of California. Biden has spent little time in the state, traveling here more for fundraising than for organizing."

Biden moved aggressively to capitalize on his South Carolina win.

"Several influential Democrats from Super Tuesday states also gave Biden a lift on Sunday as they announced their support, including former senator Barbara Boxer of California. In Virginia, Rep. Jennifer Wexton — who won her suburban district in 2018, turning the seat blue for the first time in 38 years — endorsed Biden, calling him a 'steady, empathetic leader,'" , " Robert Costa reports. "For many Biden allies, Bloomberg — the billionaire centrist whose name will appear on ballots for the first time Tuesday — remains the biggest headache, and they are hopeful that he may soon decide to bow out. On Sunday, they passed around a clip from MSNBC in which David Plouffe, Barack Obama's 2008 campaign manager, said, 'The reality is Bloomberg needed Biden to lose South Carolina to have any chance.' ... Although Biden's campaign would welcome a narrowed field, several allies are also informally telling allies of Klobuchar and Warren to consider staying in the race until Tuesday night, to deny Sanders a major delegate haul in the Super Tuesday states of Minnesota and Massachusetts ...

"Bloomberg has attempted to make inroads with African American voters but has encountered continued problems over his past support of stop-and-frisk, a police strategy that opponents say is a form of racial profiling. Before announcing his candidacy, he apologized for defending the practice. As Bloomberg spoke Sunday in Selma, Ala., at Brown Chapel AME Church, about 10 people stood and silently turned their backs to him. They returned to their seats after the former mayor stepped away from the podium. The incident caused a stir in the church, but Bloomberg continued his remarks without interruption. Other attendees continued to listen, some cheering and applauding.”

Obama called Biden to congratulate him on winning South Carolina, Bloomberg News reports. Two people familiar with the former president’s thinking said he still doesn’t plan to make an endorsement early in the nominating process. Costa reports in his story that, in interviews with more than a dozen operatives, lawmakers and campaign aides, it was clear that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Obama, among others, are reluctant to do anything at this point that would seem heavy-handed.

A Klobuchar rally in Minnesota was canceled amid protests.

“Klobuchar canceled a rally in her home state Sunday night as several dozen protesters chanted ‘Black Lives Matter,’ ‘Klobuchar has got to go’ and ‘Free Myon’ — referencing the case of a black teenager convicted of murder after a flawed police investigation,” Politico reports. “WCCO-CBS Minnesota reported that the protesters made their way into the rally and on stage, where they continued chanting. After a 40-minute delay, the rally was canceled. A campaign spokesperson told the press: ‘The campaign offered a meeting with the Senator if they (protesters) would leave the stage after being on stage for more than an hour. After the group initially agreed, they backed out of the agreement and we are canceling the event.’”

Sanders said he would only pick a running mate who backs Medicare-for-all.

He told the San Francisco Chronicle his running mate must support his signature issue: “‘We will pick somebody who knows the experience of working families in this country, who has a history of fighting for those families, and somebody whose politics are similar to mine,’ [Sanders said]. ... Sanders sounded a warning against the party trying to deny him the nomination if he comes to Milwaukee with a plurality of pledged delegates. 'I think that would look terrible, and I think that would lay the groundwork for a Trump victory,' Sanders said in the interview. 'It would reflect on the Democratic Party in a very, very terrible way.' ... He attributed Biden's dominance among black voters to the endorsement he received from South Carolina Rep. Jim Clyburn ... 'Clyburn played a very significant role,' Sanders said. But, he added, 'there is a difference in how African Americans vote in California, Michigan or North Carolina.'"

The coronavirus response shows a common thread between Warren and Bloomberg.

"Both are using this moment to paint themselves as highly competent technocrats who would use data to guide policy," Annie Linskey reports. "Bloomberg's coronavirus response came in the form of a taped three-minute address aired on two networks Sunday night, thanks to a $1.5 million ad buy. ... Bloomberg's plan to address the virus includes inviting doctors who've been pushed out of government back to their old jobs ... Warren released her first proposal to address the coronavirus last week and was quick to point out that she was offering a plan before any of the other candidates — and even before the White House ... she previewed her ideas, saying she wants the federal government to provide all Americans with free screening for the virus and free vaccines if one is developed."

Trump's campaign manager hijacked social media to win the 2016 election. He's trying to do it again.

Brad Parscale relied on Facebook to help him accomplish several campaign objectives, including persuasion, fund-raising, and G.O.T.V., or 'get out the vote.' Finding and motivating likely voters through traditional means, such as TV ads or door-to-door canvassing, is expensive and time-consuming compared with social media," the New Yorker's Andrew Marantz writes in a new profile. "'We have almost two hundred and fifteen million hard-I.D. voter records in our database now,' Parscale claimed last year, although his definition of 'hard I.D.' is not clear. Even if Trump were banned from every social network, his campaign would be able to reach supporters by text. According to Parscale, the campaign is on track to send 'almost a billion texts, the most in history'—and texts are far more likely to be opened than e-mails, social-media posts, or news articles. 'We've been working on this around the clock for three years,' a senior official who works on the 2020 digital campaign told me. He acknowledged that the campaign doesn't have the same scrappy, subversive energy as in 2016—'It's hard to feel like a total underdog when you have the White House'—but, he added, 'we're not slowing down. We're ramping up.'"

A North Carolina Democrat running for Senate is frustrated with both parties.

"Democrat Erica Smith, a two-term North Carolina state senator, was so inspired by women who beat the odds and won seats in Congress in 2018 that she decided to run in this year's U.S. Senate race. The party establishment chose another candidate," Vanessa Williams reports. "The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee endorsed Cal Cunningham, a former state lawmaker and an Army veteran of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars who had run unsuccessfully for the Senate a decade ago. Smith was disappointed but didn't bow out ... Smith got an unexpected and unwelcome benefactor: a Republican-affiliated political action committee that started running ads touting Smith as the 'true progressive,' while suggesting Cunningham does not support addressing climate change and LGBTQ rights. Smith, 50, who is African American, says she feels she has been disrespected by both political parties: Republicans who are using her to damage the perceived front-runner in the primary and Democratic leaders who endorsed Cunningham because they didn't think she could win."

---

The coronavirus

A staffer blocks the view of a person being taken by a stretcher to a waiting ambulance from a nursing facility where more than 50 people are sick and being tested for the coronavirus in Kirkland, Wash. (Elaine Thompson/AP)

The coronavirus may have spread undetected for weeks in Washington state.

It "has been circulating undetected and has possibly infected scores of people over the past six weeks in Washington state, according to a genetic analysis of virus samples that has sobering implications for the entire country amid heightening anxiety about the likely spread of the disease," Joel Achenbach, Katie Mettler, Lena Sun and Ben Guarino report. "The researchers conducted genetic sequencing of two virus samples. One is from a patient who traveled from China to Snohomish County in mid-January and was the first person diagnosed with the disease in the United States. The other came from a recently diagnosed patient in the same county, a high school student with no travel-related or other known exposure to the coronavirus. The two samples look almost identical genetically, said Trevor Bedford, a computational biologist at Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center in Seattle ... 'I believe we're facing an already substantial outbreak in Washington State that was not detected until now due to narrow case definition requiring direct travel to China,' [Bedford said].

“Officials in Seattle and King County on Sunday announced that four more people have tested positive for the coronavirus, including the second person in the state to die of the virus. That brings the outbreak in Washington state to 13 cases. Of the four new cases, the three surviving patients range in age from their 70s to 90s, have underlying health conditions and are in critical condition, health officials said. ... Health officials in Washington state and across the nation said they expect that numbers will continue to rise in the wake of the decision by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention last week to widen testing guidelines. Over the weekend, new cases were reported in Americans who had recently traveled to South Korea and Italy, including one person in Rhode Island, the state’s first case. ... Late Sunday, the office of Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis announced two ‘presumptively positive’ cases of the coronavirus, in Manatee and Hillsborough counties, and declared a public health emergency.” In New York, Gov. Andrew Cuomo confirmed the state’s first case of the virus.

Kirkland, Wash., has suddenly become the epicenter of the virus.

“One church canceled Communion on Sunday and banned handshakes and hugs. More than two dozen firefighters, and some police officers, are under quarantine. The hospital urged visitors to stay home. And Lake Washington Institute of Technology said it is shutting down for two days to disinfect the campus,” Maria Sacchetti and Ashley Nguyen report. “This outdoorsy city of 90,000 just northeast of Seattle, known for its piney woods, water sports and a Google campus with a meandering bike path running through it, has become the epicenter of the U.S. response to the deadly coronavirus as it begins to spread along the West Coast. ... With a quarter of the city’s 100 firefighters under quarantine, Kirkland city officials scrambled to prepare amid a host of unknowns. It remains unclear how many residents have been exposed to the virus, though its spread seems inevitable.”

Rumors and chaos in Alabama point to the big issues facing the government.

“Not long before local leaders decided, in the words of one of them, that federal health officials ‘didn’t know what they were doing’ with their plan to quarantine novel coronavirus patients in [Anniston, Ala.], a doctor here set out in a biohazard suit to stage a one-man protest along the highway with a sign. ‘The virus has arrived. Are you ready?’ it asked. The town didn’t think it was,” Todd Frankel reports. “Residents already were unnerved by strange stories posted on Facebook and shared via text messages about helicopters secretly flying in sick patients, that the virus was grown in a Chinese lab, that someone — either the media or the government — was lying to them about what was really going on. The quarantine plan hastily hatched by the federal Department of Health and Human Services was soon scrapped by Trump, who faced intense pushback from Alabama’s congressional delegation ...

“‘I was shocked,’ Anniston Mayor Jack Draper said. ‘I was shocked by the lack of planning. I was shocked by the manner in which it was presented to us.’” HHS planned on housing patients at an old FEMA facility in town, which doesn’t have any special capabilities for handling infectious diseases, local officials said. “Meanwhile, federal officials never contacted the town’s hospital, Regional Medical Center, about handling covid-19 patients, said Louis Bass, the hospital’s chief executive.”

HHS is investigating problems with the CDC’s first round of diagnostic tests.

“It is unclear which senior health officials, at which agencies, knew about the CDC test problems and when they learned of them. HHS is convening a team of scientists from outside the CDC to investigate the test development and its flaws, according to an HHS spokesperson,” Politico reports. “It remains unclear why CDC developed its own coronavirus test, rather than relying on one distributed by the World Health Organization, but some experts suggest the agency wanted a test that would do a better job of ruling out other viruses.”

The CDC has failed to release crucial information that doctors say could save lives.

“Several US patients have recovered from coronavirus, but so far, the CDC has shared detailed clinical information about only one of those patients. That information includes what treatments the patients received and how they fared,” CNN reports. “The federal agency possesses such information about several US coronavirus patients, but has not released it. That means doctors who now unexpectedly find themselves treating new coronavirus patients aren't able to benefit from the findings of doctors who preceded them.”

The virus continues spreading globally.

“South Korea said Monday it has confirmed 599 new cases, far higher than the daily tally reported in China,” Adam Taylor, Teo Armus, Simon Denyer and Rick Noack report. “With 4,335 confirmed infections and at least 22 deaths, South Korea has the second-largest national caseload. However, it has tested more than 100,000 people, far more than most nations. ... Italy now has more than 1,600 confirmed cases, while Iran surpassed 1,500, with 66 deaths. ... Elsewhere, Indonesia, one of the few large nations thought to be free of the virus, announced on Monday that it had two confirmed cases. ... In China, the number of new cases was 202, bringing its total to 80,026, including 2,912 deaths.”

---

Divided America

Acting deputy Homeland Security secretary Ken Cuccinelli arrives at the Capitol to brief senators on the coronavirus response. (Mark Wilson/Getty Images)

A court ruled that Ken Cuccinelli's appointment as head of USCIS was unlawful.

U.S. District Judge Randolph Moss, an Obama appointee, said Trump's "appointment last year of [Cuccinelli] to be head of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services was a violation of federal vacancy laws, and that Cuccinelli lacked the authority to issue policy directives tightening asylum rules," Nick Miroff reports. "The ruling amounts to a rebuke of Trump's stated preference for filling top administration jobs with officials serving in an 'acting' capacity. ... The Trump administration is expected to appeal the decision."

The Supreme Court will hear a third challenge to ACA.

This time, it will be at the request of Democratic-controlled states that are fighting a lower court decision that said the entire law must fall. "The court's review will come in the term that begins in October, which would not leave time for a decision before the November presidential election,” Robert Barnes reports. “The law remains in effect during the legal challenges.”

Trump is winning a war on American institutions.

The Atlantic's George Packer tells the story of how Erica Newland, a Yale Law School graduate, fell out of love with her job at the Justice Department: “Newland went to work at the Department of Justice in the last summer of the Obama administration. ... She decided to serve under Trump. She liked her work and her colleagues ... Things got worse in the second year. ... No one risked getting fired. No one would become the target of a Trump tweet. The danger might be a mediocre performance review or a poor reference. ... She hated going to work. ... At night she slept poorly, plagued by regrets. Should she have pushed harder on a legal issue? ... How could she live with the cruelty and bigotry of executive orders and other proposals, even legal ones, that crossed her desk? She was angry and miserable, and her friends told her to leave. ...

“As the executive orders and other requests for the office’s approval piled up, many of them of dubious legality, one of Newland’s supervisors took to saying, ‘We’re just following orders.’ He said it without irony, as a way of reminding everyone ... When she gave him a look he added, ‘I know that’s what the Nazis said, but we’re not Nazis.’ ... On October 27, an anti-Semitic extremist killed 11 people at a synagogue in Pittsburgh. Before the shooting, he berated Jews online for enabling ‘invaders’ to enter the United States from Mexico. ... Newland, who could imagine being shot in a synagogue, felt that her office’s work was sanctioning rhetoric that had inspired a mass killer. She tendered her resignation three days later.”

The Navy SEAL acquitted of killing an ISIS prisoner talked to “60 Minutes” about his case.

Edward Gallagher, the former SEAL, “acknowledges that people either love him as an American hero or despise him as a war criminal.”

Correspondent David Martin told Gallagher that his picture with the dead

prisoner is a “trophy photo if I ever saw one.” “Yeah, that what it was taken as,” Gallagher said, before adding he was “trying to make it look tough. I know how bad it looks when it gets out into the public, which it never was supposed to. ... It was like a joke text. Dark humor.”

Charlottesville won't celebrate Thomas Jefferson's birthday. It will instead celebrate the end of slavery.

“His name still adorns much of the city, from the public library to a private winery. And from the foot of a mountain dedicated to him, his statue still gazes out over the university he founded. But lately, in ways both small and seismic, Thomas Jefferson's town has started to feel like it belongs to someone else,” Michael Miller reports. “For the first time since World War II, Charlottesville won't honor the Founding Father's birthday this spring. Instead, on Tuesday, the city will celebrate the demise of the institution with which Jefferson increasingly has become associated: slavery. Liberation and Freedom Day, as the new holiday is known, will commemorate when Union troops arrived here on March 3, 1865, and freed the enslaved people who made up a majority of Charlottesville's residents.”

---

Social media speed read

Rep. John Lewis (D-Ga.) is battling pancreatic cancer, but he decided to make the pilgrimage back to the Edmund Pettus bridge in Selma, Ala., on the anniversary of his vicious beating on Bloody Sunday:

John Lewis ✓
@repjohnlewis

We were beaten, we were tear-gassed. I thought I was going to die on this bridge. But somehow and some way, God almighty helped me here. We cannot give up now. We cannot give in. We must keep the faith, keep our eyes on the prize.

♥ 60.3K 12:40 AM - Mar 2, 2020

💬 13.4K people are talking about this

All the candidates wished Buttigieg well as he dropped out, even Klobuchar, who clashed often with the 38-year-old:

Former candidate Marianne Williamson, who endorsed Sanders last week, offered this analysis:

Chasten Buttigieg commemorated his husband's historic bid:

Now that Buttigieg is gone, Biden gets a new title:

---

Videos of the day

John Oliver tackled the coronavirus and examined the ways it has highlighted government weaknesses around the world:

Trevor Noah shared his extended thoughts on Bloomberg:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Democratic fears that Bernie Sanders would hurt down-ballot candidates influence suburban voters
Date: Monday, March 2, 2020 10:36:14 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Democratic fears that Bernie Sanders would hurt down-ballot candidates influence suburban voters

HOUSTON – Joanne Armstrong was tired of screaming at the television. It's why she volunteered for Lizzie Fletcher in 2018. And it's why she doesn't want Bernie Sanders to be the Democratic nominee for president in 2020.

Armstrong, a physician in her 50s, decided to channel her anger at

President Trump two years ago by going door-knocking, for the first time ever, to help Fletcher, a Democratic congressional candidate in the suburban Houston district where she lives. In the midterms, Fletcher toppled nine-term Republican congressman John Culberson, a powerful appropriator, picking up a seat that had been comfortably in GOP hands after George H.W. Bush won it in 1966.

Armstrong worries that Fletcher, still a freshman, would lose her quest for a second term if Sanders (I-Vt.) is at the top of the ticket and that Trump would handily win a second term. She said it was hard enough to convince voters to take a chance on a Democratic candidate last time when she could warn while canvassing about how Republicans were trying to destroy the Affordable Care Act without a replacement plan, putting people with preexisting conditions at risk. But Sanders's Medicare-for-all plan also threatens to upend the system, jeopardizing people's private health-insurance coverage. Houston is world-renowned for its medical centers, especially related to cancer treatment.

"People looked at Trump in 2018 and said this is not who we are. But Bernie also isn't who we in Houston are," said Armstrong. "I'm still tired of screaming at the TV after three years. I don't want four more years."

Bernie Sanders reacts to cheering supporters during a rally on Sunday in San Jose, Calif. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Texas is the second-biggest prize on Super Tuesday, behind California, with 228 delegates up for grabs. Houston, the fourth-most populous city in the country, has become a battleground within the battleground. Harris County, home to Houston, has more than 4 million residents, a bigger population than 26 states.

Joe Biden is flying here this afternoon for a rally at Texas Southern University. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) spoke to a crowd of 2,000 at an outdoor rally on Saturday night. Former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg stumped here this past Thursday with the mayor of Houston, who endorsed him. Sanders visited the University of Houston last weekend, where he celebrated his triumph in the Nevada caucuses.

Two polls published Sunday put Sanders ahead but by significantly different margins among likely voters in the Lone Star State, reflecting the degree to which the contest remains fluid and also how hard it is to predict what the electorate will look like in this evolving megastate. Sanders led Biden 34 percent to 19 percent in an NBC-Marist poll, with Bloomberg at 15 percent and Warren at 10 percent.

But Sanders led Biden by only 4 percentage points, 30 percent to 26 percent, in a CBS-YouGov poll, which was within the margin of error, with Warren at 17 percent and Bloomberg at 13 percent.

But Sanders fares particularly poorly in the same well-to-do suburban areas that fueled the Democratic wave in the midterms and where Trump remains most vulnerable. The 7th District, where Fletcher already faces a tough reelection fight, is the sort of place that national Democrats fear they'd lose if Sanders leads the ticket. Mitt Romney carried the district with 60 percent of the vote in the 2012 presidential election, but Trump lost it to Hillary Clinton in 2016 with 47 percent. Establishment-minded Democrats worry that voters who don't like Trump or Sanders might stay home, especially moderates who voted for candidates like Fletcher in 2018. They fear that Sanders would galvanize more Republicans than he'd bring in the new voters he promises to mobilize.

Armstrong is undecided but anxious to vote for a Democrat in Texas's presidential primary on Tuesday who can block Sanders from winning the nomination. She really likes Warren, but she's mainly concerned about beating Trump. She's texted all weekend with friends as far away as New Jersey and Massachusetts to mull what she should do. "I would vote for Joe Biden. He's not my first choice, but I would if I thought he was the only one who could beat Bernie," she said. "I just don't want Bernie. There's a big contingent that doesn't want Bernie, but they're all splitting. ... Do I vote my conscience, which is Warren? Or do I vote strategically, which is Biden?"

Elizabeth Warren acknowledges the crowd of 2,000 after a rally on Saturday night in Houston. (Brian Snyder/Reuters)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more. chain store you can think of, plus an indoor ice-skating rink. It was packed this weekend as I interviewed more than 30 voters.

---

The Galleria, in the heart of Fletcher's district, is one of the largest and ritziest malls in the United States. It has every fancy

Charlotte Sullivan, 70, the retired human resources director of an oil and gas company, plans to vote for Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) because she seems reasonable and willing to compromise to get results. “I’m a fiscally responsible Democrat, and I don’t go for Bernie’s socialism,” Sullivan said as she shopped with her daughter. “I will go for Bernie if he’s the nominee because I cannot tolerate Trump at all. But Bernie has dug himself into a trench, and he’s not going to be able to get out of it.”

Sullivan lives in the richest Zip code of Houston, a traditionally Republican neighborhood in Fletcher’s district that’s full of multimillion-dollar homes. “My neighbors will all vote for Trump before they’ll vote for Bernie, but they’d love to see someone moderate so they could make the switch,” she said. “If Klobuchar was the nominee, they’d vote for her.”

She looked at Bloomberg but concluded that he’s a Democratic version of Trump. “All my antennae go up,” Sullivan said. “It’s the feeling that tells me something’s not right about him. I’ve had very few circumstances in my life where that instinct took me in the wrong direction. My gut says, ‘Don’t go with Bloomberg.’”

Carol Alvarado, a Democratic state senator who represents Houston, endorsed Biden on Sunday after his sweeping win in the South Carolina primary. Democrats picked up a dozen state House seats in 2018 and could win control of the chamber if they gain nine more in 2020. Several of their best pick-up opportunities are around Houston. Alvarado, who chairs the Senate Democratic Caucus, identified certain seats in both the state House and Senate that they’re more likely to win if the former vice president is their standard-bearer.

“We could lose seats if we’re having to talk about democratic socialism,” she explained in an interview. “And if we lose those seats, that gives Republicans a larger majority – which matters for the next decade.” She’s referring to redistricting. The outcome of the 2020 state elections will impact who draws the boundaries that will be in effect until 2031. Alvarado said a Democratic-controlled legislature could also vote to expand Medicaid under the ACA, something Republicans have declined to do. “There’s just so much riding on this election for the future of Texas,” she said.

Joe Biden attends a Sunday church service at Brown Chapel AME Church to commemorate the 55th anniversary of Bloody Sunday in Selma, Ala. (Toni L. Sandys/The Washington Post)

Houston is also the epicenter of the American energy industry, and Sanders’s plan to ban fracking and pass a Green New Deal makes moderates jittery. When you fly into town, you see the scope of the region’s dependence on fossil fuels in the form of tankers and refineries.

“People’s livelihoods are directly tied to that industry,” said Rep. Marc Veasey (D-Tex.). He represents a Fort Worth district, where he notes that many African Americans and Latinos depend on energy industry jobs that Sanders could put in jeopardy. He said union members also regularly express “worry and concern” to him that Sanders’s Medicare-for-all proposal would take away health-care benefits they’ve negotiated hard to secure from their employers.

Veasey lamented that Sanders being at the top of the ticket would make it harder to play offense against House Republicans like freshman Dan Crenshaw in the Houston suburbs. Veasey, who endorsed Biden in November, added that many of his Democratic colleagues would have little choice but to distance themselves from Sanders if he’s the nominee in order to get reelected. “There’s absolutely no question about that,” he told me on Sunday evening.

The CBS-YouGov poll released asked likely Democratic voters in Texas which candidate has the best chance of beating Trump, regardless of whom they support. Interestingly, Latino voters said Sanders has the best chance of winning the general, topping Biden by a 24-point margin. Black voters thought Biden had the best chance, besting Sanders by a 25-point margin. White voters were more evenly split: 32 percent said Biden, 28 percent said Sanders, 18 percent said Bloomberg and 13 percent said Warren.

Anthony Blake, a 35-year-old management consultant, will vote for Sanders in the primary. “Sometimes I think you’ve got to fight fire with fire, as terrible as that sounds,” he said. When I asked about the electability fears expressed by his fellow Houstonians, he pointed to several recent polls that showed Sanders leading Trump in head-to-head matchups and in many cases outperforming other Democrats. “The data doesn’t really show that,” he said, downplaying the concerns of elected lawmakers.

Blake, a political junkie who is white, came to watch Warren’s outdoor rally on Discovery Green in the heart of downtown Houston on Saturday night. He observed that Sanders’s rally at the same venue last April drew a bigger and, he believes, more energetic crowd. He said he was especially impressed that the Sanders crowd included so many diverse faces, especially Latinos, and young people who told him they've never been engaged with politics. “I know they say it's a fool's errand, but Bernie's going to bring new people out,” said Blake. “I've never seen energy like I have for Bernie.”

He added that he comes from a conservative family. “They've been Republicans for 30 years now, but they dislike Trump,” he said. “They're terrified of Bernie right now, but they'll vote for him over Trump.”

Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner introduces Mike Bloomberg during a rally last Thursday in Houston. (Joe Raedle/Getty Images)

The NBC-Marist poll showed 1 in 4 likely voters in Texas remained undecided. Sarita Gomez-Mola, 70, is among them. The foreign-language interpreter, who lives in the 7th District, said she will cast her ballot for whomever she concludes on primary day has the best chance of blocking Sanders from clinching the nomination, which she acknowledged may be Biden. A friend visiting from New York encouraged her to think about Bloomberg, but she's “angsting” over which of the Democratic alternatives to Sanders could best unify the party.

“Will the Sanders voters support Bloomberg? I worry,” she said. “But Bernie cannot hijack the Democratic Party. He’s divisive, and we’re lurching from one extreme to the other. There would be nothing but gridlock. If Barack Obama couldn’t get his priorities passed, how is Sanders going to?”

Gomez-Mola’s husband is a geologist who works for an oil company. “All his colleagues are Trumppers,” she said. “They will all vote for Trump, no matter who he’s up against.” Likewise, she said, she’ll vote for any Democratic nominee over Trump. “I was born in Cuba, and I’m very afraid of Sanders because of all the changes he wants to make,” said Gomez-Mola. “But even if Fidel Castro came back from the grave and was the nominee, I’d support him over Trump. Castro was my nemesis all my life, but Trump is just that bad.”

This is exactly what the Sanders campaign is counting on. The senator’s strategists express confidence that dislike for Trump is so strong among Democrats that even moderates will coalesce and consolidate behind Sanders if he wins the nomination.

The 7th District is a majority-minority district: 43 percent white, 31 percent Latino, 13 percent black and 11 percent Asian. One in five residents of this district has a postgraduate degree. Another 30 percent have a bachelor’s.

Salvador Delmundo, 56, is an ordained minister who works as a chaplain at one of the hospitals in the district. His political evolution over the past 20 years tracks with the community’s broader shift. He was a Republican who voted for George W. Bush when he carried the district with 66 percent in 2004, but Obama’s barrier-breaking candidacy lured him away. Now he considers himself a “middle-of-the-road” Democrat. “Over the last 10 to 15 years, what was good for me and my wife was developing a deeper appreciation and understanding of the importance of diversity,” he explained as he ate a cheesesteak in the food court while his wife shopped.

Delumndo emphasized that winning as a Democrat in these parts is still an uphill battle that requires carefully challenging deeply ingrained mindsets. “The hurdle before Sanders is educating the general American public about what socialism is,” he said. “I have a lot of ‘friends’ – and I say friends with air quotes – saying that North Korea shot dead a coronavirus patient, and that’s what they do to people in socialist countries. It’s totally crazy, but that’s what they say.”

Delmundo and his wife considered Biden, Sanders and Warren before deciding to vote for the senator from Massachusetts because she seemed like a bridge between the left and the middle of the party. “We decided Warren was in the middle between Biden and Sanders,” he said. “That said, regardless of who wins the primary, we’re going to go with the Democratic nominee.”

Lizzie Fletcher, on the left in the white blouse, joins other Democrats who were elected to Congress in 2018 for a group portrait in front of the Capitol. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Fletcher has not endorsed in the presidential race, and she declined an interview request to discuss her thinking. A spokeswoman said she didn't have open events over the weekend. She's been building a large war chest, with close to $2 million cash on hand. Around the district, she'd been emphasizing a drug pricing bill she sponsored, which the House passed and got pigeonholed in the Senate, to show she's focused on pocketbook issues.

The 2020 election will be the first in modern Texas history where ballots no longer include the option to just vote the Republican or Democratic line straight down the ticket. "Political consultants here don't know how to model for this," said Jim Henson, director of the Texas Politics Project at the University of Texas at Austin. "It stands to reason that drop-off will be higher down the ballot, and that's causing some anxiety on both sides."

Henson thinks Fletcher might be "somewhat more insulated" than other Democrats in frontline House races if Sanders is the nominee. She'll be well funded, has time to build out her own field operation and represents an informed electorate capable of distinguishing between her and Sanders. “There’s also a lot of ifs about what kind of a campaign Sanders is going to run if he’s actually the nominee,” said Henson.

Many House Republicans who lost in 2018, including Culberson, survived when Trump was at the top of the ticket two years before because voters saw them as distinct from the GOP nominee. Two years later, this was a harder sell because they’d mostly voted in lockstep with his agenda. House Democratic strategists hope to benefit from a similar dynamic in 2020 if Sanders wins the nomination because he’s seen as an outsider taking over the party. National Republican strategists counter that they expect Trump to outperform his 2016 numbers in the district no matter the Democratic nominee, so long as the coronavirus doesn’t push the economy into recession, because voters here have benefitted disproportionately from the 2017 tax cuts and various business-friendly policies, such as deregulation.

Six Republicans are running in their own primary on Tuesday to challenge Fletcher this fall. The national party favors Wesley Hunt, an African American in his 30s who piloted Apache helicopters in Iraq as an Army captain after graduating from West Point. He’s trying to break 50 percent to avoid a runoff. His closet competitor is former Bellaire mayor Cindy Siegel, who has spent more than half a million dollars and launched attack ads against Hunt.

Laura Moser campaigns in Houston in May 2017. She lost a runoff to Fletcher. (Michael Stravato/For The Washington Post)

Two years ago, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee intervened to boost Fletcher over the more liberal Laura Moser in the primary. National party operatives even took the unusual step of publishing a tranche of opposition research against Moser because they thought the moderate Fletcher would have an easier time ousting Culberson. (We wrote several Big Ideas about the ensuing kerfuffle.)

Moser voted early for Sanders, but interestingly she doesn't believe the polls that show him ahead in the Texas primary. Many Democrats she knows in the district planned to vote for Bloomberg a few weeks ago, but she said he's faded since his bad debate performance in Las Vegas. Moser said she does not know anyone who loves Biden, but she expects many will vote for him anyway to stop Sanders. And Warren remains popular among many of the most devoted volunteers on her congressional campaign. "I was sort of supporting Warren for a lot of the primary, and it was basically my mother's book club at her events," Moser explained on Sunday afternoon. "Then I went to a Bernie event, and they were all 20-years old, Muslims, Latinx and people I hadn't seen at political events before. That's why I decided to go all in for Bernie."

Democrats haven't won a statewide race in Texas since 1994, and Moser said she'd be surprised if that changes this

November. "I don't think Texas is going to flip this year anyway, but if it doesn't, it's not Bernie's fault," she said. "The whole point is either new people come – or they don't. It's a very hard gamble. But the old thing isn't working. ... If the people Bernie is betting on actually come out, we have a lot of them in Texas. But will they come out? I don't know. ... I really banked on those people coming out in my race. And they didn't. ... The infrastructure is not fully there yet. People aren't used to mattering, and people aren't used to voting. That's changing, but it takes time."

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost's essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

Powered by LiveIntent

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

More on 2020

Buttigieg ended his presidential bid.

“The normally stoic Buttigieg appeared to be steadying himself throughout his farewell remarks in his hometown of South Bend, bringing to an end what was for a time an electrifying candidacy,” Chelsea Janes and Amy B Wang report. “After a year of going everywhere, meeting everyone, defying every expectation, seeking every vote, the truth is that the path has narrowed to a close for our candidacy, if not for our cause,” Buttigieg said. ... Despite attracting enormous attention, significant support and often enthusiastic crowds, Buttigieg was not polling well in the upcoming primary states and never found a way to reverse the antipathy he generated in the black community. Earlier Sunday, his campaign held a call with reporters in which senior adviser Michael Halle and deputy campaign manager Hari Sevugan made the case that while Buttigieg likely wouldn’t win any of the 14 states that vote Tuesday, he could still accumulate enough delegates to keep Sanders’s lead to a minimum. ... LGBTQ leaders had no doubt that Buttigieg’s candidacy had widened the path for gay Americans in politics and other areas of life in the United States. ... The crowd interrupted him with a new chant: ‘2024! 2024!’”

---

Quote of the day

“We sent a message to every kid out there wondering if whatever marks them out as different means they are somehow destined to be less than. [They saw] that someone who once felt that exact same way can become a leading American presidential candidate — with his husband at his side,” Buttigieg said in his concession speech.

Sanders is hoping California will deliver him the nomination.

“There are 415 delegates at stake here Tuesday, the largest haul on a day when 14 other states and territories will also go to the polls,” Scott Wilson reports. “The campaign has a state organization far larger than those of his opponents — 22 offices and more than 100 paid staffers. And it has been targeting Latinos, Asian Americans and young voters, key demographics in the Democratic electorate. ... A Suffolk University/USA Today poll showed Sanders with a double-digit lead. He was at 35 percent among likely Democratic primary voters, well ahead of [Bloomberg] at 16 percent, [Biden] at 14 percent and [Warren] at 12 percent. ... Officials say they’re confident. ‘The campaign really prioritized California in a way that we hadn’t before,’ said Rafael Návar, the Sanders campaign’s state director. ‘Most people looked at the first four states. I looked at it as five states, and so California had a prioritization from the start.’

“One key rival for Sanders is Warren, who is hovering around the 15 percent vote threshold, according to some recent polls. ... Julián Castro ... recently appeared at a Warren event in San Francisco that drew about 150 staff members, volunteers and others. It seems part of an effort to cut into Sanders’s lead among Latinos, especially older ones less liberal on issues of ethnic identity and more suspect of Sanders’s Medicare-for-all proposal. Several polls show Sanders drawing nearly half the state’s Latino support. ... Some of his better-funded rivals have also looked hopefully toward television. California is a place where intensive advertising usually proves essential in winning statewide races. But those rich enough to afford big buys in multiple markets are then often resented, especially the self-financed candidates. ... But it's not clear whether endorsements or heavy spending will dent Sanders's lead, nor whether Biden's surge in South Carolina will itself alter the trajectory of California. Biden has spent little time in the state, traveling here more for fundraising than for organizing."

Biden moved aggressively to capitalize on his South Carolina win.

"Several influential Democrats from Super Tuesday states also gave Biden a lift on Sunday as they announced their support, including former senator Barbara Boxer of California. In Virginia, Rep. Jennifer Wexton — who won her suburban district in 2018, turning the seat blue for the first time in 38 years — endorsed Biden, calling him a 'steady, empathetic leader,'" , " Robert Costa reports. "For many Biden allies, Bloomberg — the billionaire centrist whose name will appear on ballots for the first time Tuesday — remains the biggest headache, and they are hopeful that he may soon decide to bow out. On Sunday, they passed around a clip from MSNBC in which David Plouffe, Barack Obama's 2008 campaign manager, said, 'The reality is Bloomberg needed Biden to lose South Carolina to have any chance.' ... Although Biden's campaign would welcome a narrowed field, several allies are also informally telling allies of Klobuchar and Warren to consider staying in the race until Tuesday night, to deny Sanders a major delegate haul in the Super Tuesday states of Minnesota and Massachusetts ...

"Bloomberg has attempted to make inroads with African American voters but has encountered continued problems over his past support of stop-and-frisk, a police strategy that opponents say is a form of racial profiling. Before announcing his candidacy, he apologized for defending the practice. As Bloomberg spoke Sunday in Selma, Ala., at Brown Chapel AME Church, about 10 people stood and silently turned their backs to him. They returned to their seats after the former mayor stepped away from the podium. The incident caused a stir in the church, but Bloomberg continued his remarks without interruption. Other attendees continued to listen, some cheering and applauding.”

Obama called Biden to congratulate him on winning South Carolina, Bloomberg News reports. Two people familiar with the former president’s thinking said he still doesn’t plan to make an endorsement early in the nominating process. Costa reports in his story that, in interviews with more than a dozen operatives, lawmakers and campaign aides, it was clear that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Obama, among others, are reluctant to do anything at this point that would seem heavy-handed.

A Klobuchar rally in Minnesota was canceled amid protests.

“Klobuchar canceled a rally in her home state Sunday night as several dozen protesters chanted ‘Black Lives Matter,’ ‘Klobuchar has got to go’ and ‘Free Myon’ — referencing the case of a black teenager convicted of murder after a flawed police investigation,” Politico reports. “WCCO-CBS Minnesota reported that the protesters made their way into the rally and on stage, where they continued chanting. After a 40-minute delay, the rally was canceled. A campaign spokesperson told the press: ‘The campaign offered a meeting with the Senator if they (protesters) would leave the stage after being on stage for more than an hour. After the group initially agreed, they backed out of the agreement and we are canceling the event.’”

Sanders said he would only pick a running mate who backs Medicare-for-all.

He told the San Francisco Chronicle his running mate must support his signature issue: “‘We will pick somebody who knows the experience of working families in this country, who has a history of fighting for those families, and somebody whose politics are similar to mine,’ [Sanders said]. ... Sanders sounded a warning against the party trying to deny him the nomination if he comes to Milwaukee with a plurality of pledged delegates. 'I think that would look terrible, and I think that would lay the groundwork for a Trump victory,' Sanders said in the interview. 'It would reflect on the Democratic Party in a very, very terrible way.' ... He attributed Biden's dominance among black voters to the endorsement he received from South Carolina Rep. Jim Clyburn ... 'Clyburn played a very significant role,' Sanders said. But, he added, 'there is a difference in how African Americans vote in California, Michigan or North Carolina.'"

The coronavirus response shows a common thread between Warren and Bloomberg.

"Both are using this moment to paint themselves as highly competent technocrats who would use data to guide policy," Annie Linskey reports. "Bloomberg's coronavirus response came in the form of a taped three-minute address aired on two networks Sunday night, thanks to a $1.5 million ad buy. ... Bloomberg's plan to address the virus includes inviting doctors who've been pushed out of government back to their old jobs ... Warren released her first proposal to address the coronavirus last week and was quick to point out that she was offering a plan before any of the other candidates — and even before the White House ... she previewed her ideas, saying she wants the federal government to provide all Americans with free screening for the virus and free vaccines if one is developed."

Trump's campaign manager hijacked social media to win the 2016 election. He's trying to do it again.

Brad Parscale relied on Facebook to help him accomplish several campaign objectives, including persuasion, fund-raising, and G.O.T.V., or 'get out the vote.' Finding and motivating likely voters through traditional means, such as TV ads or door-to-door canvassing, is expensive and time-consuming compared with social media," the New Yorker's Andrew Marantz writes in a new profile. "'We have almost two hundred and fifteen million hard-I.D. voter records in our database now,' Parscale claimed last year, although his definition of 'hard I.D.' is not clear. Even if Trump were banned from every social network, his campaign would be able to reach supporters by text. According to Parscale, the campaign is on track to send 'almost a billion texts, the most in history'—and texts are far more likely to be opened than e-mails, social-media posts, or news articles. 'We've been working on this around the clock for three years,' a senior official who works on the 2020 digital campaign told me. He acknowledged that the campaign doesn't have the same scrappy, subversive energy as in 2016—'It's hard to feel like a total underdog when you have the White House'—but, he added, 'we're not slowing down. We're ramping up.'"

A North Carolina Democrat running for Senate is frustrated with both parties.

"Democrat Erica Smith, a two-term North Carolina state senator, was so inspired by women who beat the odds and won seats in Congress in 2018 that she decided to run in this year's U.S. Senate race. The party establishment chose another candidate," Vanessa Williams reports. "The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee endorsed Cal Cunningham, a former state lawmaker and an Army veteran of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars who had run unsuccessfully for the Senate a decade ago. Smith was disappointed but didn't bow out ... Smith got an unexpected and unwelcome benefactor: a Republican-affiliated political action committee that started running ads touting Smith as the 'true progressive,' while suggesting Cunningham does not support addressing climate change and LGBTQ rights. Smith, 50, who is African American, says she feels she has been disrespected by both political parties: Republicans who are using her to damage the perceived front-runner in the primary and Democratic leaders who endorsed Cunningham because they didn't think she could win."

---

The coronavirus

A staffer blocks the view of a person being taken by a stretcher to a waiting ambulance from a nursing facility where more than 50 people are sick and being tested for the coronavirus in Kirkland, Wash. (Elaine Thompson/AP)

The coronavirus may have spread undetected for weeks in Washington state.

It "has been circulating undetected and has possibly infected scores of people over the past six weeks in Washington state, according to a genetic analysis of virus samples that has sobering implications for the entire country amid heightening anxiety about the likely spread of the disease," Joel Achenbach, Katie Mettler, Lena Sun and Ben Guarino report. "The researchers conducted genetic sequencing of two virus samples. One is from a patient who traveled from China to Snohomish County in mid-January and was the first person diagnosed with the disease in the United States. The other came from a recently diagnosed patient in the same county, a high school student with no travel-related or other known exposure to the coronavirus. The two samples look almost identical genetically, said Trevor Bedford, a computational biologist at Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center in Seattle ... 'I believe we're facing an already substantial outbreak in Washington State that was not detected until now due to narrow case definition requiring direct travel to China,' [Bedford said].

“Officials in Seattle and King County on Sunday announced that four more people have tested positive for the coronavirus, including the second person in the state to die of the virus. That brings the outbreak in Washington state to 13 cases. Of the four new cases, the three surviving patients range in age from their 70s to 90s, have underlying health conditions and are in critical condition, health officials said. ... Health officials in Washington state and across the nation said they expect that numbers will continue to rise in the wake of the decision by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention last week to widen testing guidelines. Over the weekend, new cases were reported in Americans who had recently traveled to South Korea and Italy, including one person in Rhode Island, the state’s first case. ... Late Sunday, the office of Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis announced two ‘presumptively positive’ cases of the coronavirus, in Manatee and Hillsborough counties, and declared a public health emergency.” In New York, Gov. Andrew Cuomo confirmed the state’s first case of the virus.

Kirkland, Wash., has suddenly become the epicenter of the virus.

“One church canceled Communion on Sunday and banned handshakes and hugs. More than two dozen firefighters, and some police officers, are under quarantine. The hospital urged visitors to stay home. And Lake Washington Institute of Technology said it is shutting down for two days to disinfect the campus,” Maria Sacchetti and Ashley Nguyen report. “This outdoorsy city of 90,000 just northeast of Seattle, known for its piney woods, water sports and a Google campus with a meandering bike path running through it, has become the epicenter of the U.S. response to the deadly coronavirus as it begins to spread along the West Coast. ... With a quarter of the city’s 100 firefighters under quarantine, Kirkland city officials scrambled to prepare amid a host of unknowns. It remains unclear how many residents have been exposed to the virus, though its spread seems inevitable.”

Rumors and chaos in Alabama point to the big issues facing the government.

“Not long before local leaders decided, in the words of one of them, that federal health officials ‘didn’t know what they were doing’ with their plan to quarantine novel coronavirus patients in [Anniston, Ala.], a doctor here set out in a biohazard suit to stage a one-man protest along the highway with a sign. ‘The virus has arrived. Are you ready?’ it asked. The town didn’t think it was,” Todd Frankel reports. “Residents already were unnerved by strange stories posted on Facebook and shared via text messages about helicopters secretly flying in sick patients, that the virus was grown in a Chinese lab, that someone — either the media or the government — was lying to them about what was really going on. The quarantine plan hastily hatched by the federal Department of Health and Human Services was soon scrapped by Trump, who faced intense pushback from Alabama’s congressional delegation ...

“‘I was shocked,’ Anniston Mayor Jack Draper said. ‘I was shocked by the lack of planning. I was shocked by the manner in which it was presented to us.’” HHS planned on housing patients at an old FEMA facility in town, which doesn’t have any special capabilities for handling infectious diseases, local officials said. “Meanwhile, federal officials never contacted the town’s hospital, Regional Medical Center, about handling covid-19 patients, said Louis Bass, the hospital’s chief executive.”

HHS is investigating problems with the CDC’s first round of diagnostic tests.

“It is unclear which senior health officials, at which agencies, knew about the CDC test problems and when they learned of them. HHS is convening a team of scientists from outside the CDC to investigate the test development and its flaws, according to an HHS spokesperson,” Politico reports. “It remains unclear why CDC developed its own coronavirus test, rather than relying on one distributed by the World Health Organization, but some experts suggest the agency wanted a test that would do a better job of ruling out other viruses.”

The CDC has failed to release crucial information that doctors say could save lives.

“Several US patients have recovered from coronavirus, but so far, the CDC has shared detailed clinical information about only one of those patients. That information includes what treatments the patients received and how they fared,” CNN reports. “The federal agency possesses such information about several US coronavirus patients, but has not released it. That means doctors who now unexpectedly find themselves treating new coronavirus patients aren't able to benefit from the findings of doctors who preceded them.”

The virus continues spreading globally.

“South Korea said Monday it has confirmed 599 new cases, far higher than the daily tally reported in China,” Adam Taylor, Teo Armus, Simon Denyer and Rick Noack report. “With 4,335 confirmed infections and at least 22 deaths, South Korea has the second-largest national caseload. However, it has tested more than 100,000 people, far more than most nations. ... Italy now has more than 1,600 confirmed cases, while Iran surpassed 1,500, with 66 deaths. ... Elsewhere, Indonesia, one of the few large nations thought to be free of the virus, announced on Monday that it had two confirmed cases. ... In China, the number of new cases was 202, bringing its total to 80,026, including 2,912 deaths.”

---

Divided America

Acting deputy Homeland Security secretary Ken Cuccinelli arrives at the Capitol to brief senators on the coronavirus response. (Mark Wilson/Getty Images)

A court ruled that Ken Cuccinelli's appointment as head of USCIS was unlawful.

U.S. District Judge Randolph Moss, an Obama appointee, said Trump's "appointment last year of [Cuccinelli] to be head of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services was a violation of federal vacancy laws, and that Cuccinelli lacked the authority to issue policy directives tightening asylum rules," Nick Miroff reports. "The ruling amounts to a rebuke of Trump's stated preference for filling top administration jobs with officials serving in an 'acting' capacity. ... The Trump administration is expected to appeal the decision."

The Supreme Court will hear a third challenge to ACA.

This time, it will be at the request of Democratic-controlled states that are fighting a lower court decision that said the entire law must fall. "The court's review will come in the term that begins in October, which would not leave time for a decision before the November presidential election,” Robert Barnes reports. “The law remains in effect during the legal challenges.”

Trump is winning a war on American institutions.

The Atlantic's George Packer tells the story of how Erica Newland, a Yale Law School graduate, fell out of love with her job at the Justice Department: “Newland went to work at the Department of Justice in the last summer of the Obama administration. ... She decided to serve under Trump. She liked her work and her colleagues ... Things got worse in the second year. ... No one risked getting fired. No one would become the target of a Trump tweet. The danger might be a mediocre performance review or a poor reference. ... She hated going to work. ... At night she slept poorly, plagued by regrets. Should she have pushed harder on a legal issue? ... How could she live with the cruelty and bigotry of executive orders and other proposals, even legal ones, that crossed her desk? She was angry and miserable, and her friends told her to leave. ...

“As the executive orders and other requests for the office’s approval piled up, many of them of dubious legality, one of Newland’s supervisors took to saying, ‘We’re just following orders.’ He said it without irony, as a way of reminding everyone ... When she gave him a look he added, ‘I know that’s what the Nazis said, but we’re not Nazis.’ ... On October 27, an anti-Semitic extremist killed 11 people at a synagogue in Pittsburgh. Before the shooting, he berated Jews online for enabling ‘invaders’ to enter the United States from Mexico. ... Newland, who could imagine being shot in a synagogue, felt that her office’s work was sanctioning rhetoric that had inspired a mass killer. She tendered her resignation three days later.”

The Navy SEAL acquitted of killing an ISIS prisoner talked to “60 Minutes” about his case.

Edward Gallagher, the former SEAL, “acknowledges that people either love him as an American hero or despise him as a war criminal.”

Correspondent David Martin told Gallagher that his picture with the dead

prisoner is a “trophy photo if I ever saw one.” “Yeah, that what it was taken as,” Gallagher said, before adding he was “trying to make it look tough. I know how bad it looks when it gets out into the public, which it never was supposed to. ... It was like a joke text. Dark humor.”

Charlottesville won't celebrate Thomas Jefferson's birthday. It will instead celebrate the end of slavery.

“His name still adorns much of the city, from the public library to a private winery. And from the foot of a mountain dedicated to him, his statue still gazes out over the university he founded. But lately, in ways both small and seismic, Thomas Jefferson's town has started to feel like it belongs to someone else,” Michael Miller reports. “For the first time since World War II, Charlottesville won't honor the Founding Father's birthday this spring. Instead, on Tuesday, the city will celebrate the demise of the institution with which Jefferson increasingly has become associated: slavery. Liberation and Freedom Day, as the new holiday is known, will commemorate when Union troops arrived here on March 3, 1865, and freed the enslaved people who made up a majority of Charlottesville's residents.”

---

Social media speed read

Rep. John Lewis (D-Ga.) is battling pancreatic cancer, but he decided to make the pilgrimage back to the Edmund Pettus bridge in Selma, Ala., on the anniversary of his vicious beating on Bloody Sunday:

John Lewis ✓
@repjohnlewis

We were beaten, we were tear-gassed. I thought I was going to die on this bridge. But somehow and some way, God almighty helped me here. We cannot give up now. We cannot give in. We must keep the faith, keep our eyes on the prize.

♥ 60.3K 12:40 AM - Mar 2, 2020

💬 13.4K people are talking about this

All the candidates wished Buttigieg well as he dropped out, even Klobuchar, who clashed often with the 38-year-old:

Former candidate Marianne Williamson, who endorsed Sanders last week, offered this analysis:

Chasten Buttigieg commemorated his husband's historic bid:

Now that Buttigieg is gone, Biden gets a new title:

---

Videos of the day

John Oliver tackled the coronavirus and examined the ways it has highlighted government weaknesses around the world:

Trevor Noah shared his extended thoughts on Bloomberg:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Democratic fears that Bernie Sanders would hurt down-ballot candidates influence suburban voters
Date: Monday, March 2, 2020 10:36:38 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Democratic fears that Bernie Sanders would hurt down-ballot candidates influence suburban voters

HOUSTON – Joanne Armstrong was tired of screaming at the television. It's why she volunteered for Lizzie Fletcher in 2018. And it's why she doesn't want Bernie Sanders to be the Democratic nominee for president in 2020.

Armstrong, a physician in her 50s, decided to channel her anger at

President Trump two years ago by going door-knocking, for the first time ever, to help Fletcher, a Democratic congressional candidate in the suburban Houston district where she lives. In the midterms, Fletcher toppled nine-term Republican congressman John Culberson, a powerful appropriator, picking up a seat that had been comfortably in GOP hands after George H.W. Bush won it in 1966.

Armstrong worries that Fletcher, still a freshman, would lose her quest for a second term if Sanders (I-Vt.) is at the top of the ticket and that Trump would handily win a second term. She said it was hard enough to convince voters to take a chance on a Democratic candidate last time when she could warn while canvassing about how Republicans were trying to destroy the Affordable Care Act without a replacement plan, putting people with preexisting conditions at risk. But Sanders's Medicare-for-all plan also threatens to upend the system, jeopardizing people's private health-insurance coverage. Houston is world-renowned for its medical centers, especially related to cancer treatment.

"People looked at Trump in 2018 and said this is not who we are. But Bernie also isn't who we in Houston are," said Armstrong. "I'm still tired of screaming at the TV after three years. I don't want four more years."

Bernie Sanders reacts to cheering supporters during a rally on Sunday in San Jose, Calif. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Texas is the second-biggest prize on Super Tuesday, behind California, with 228 delegates up for grabs. Houston, the fourth-most populous city in the country, has become a battleground within the battleground. Harris County, home to Houston, has more than 4 million residents, a bigger population than 26 states.

Joe Biden is flying here this afternoon for a rally at Texas Southern University. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) spoke to a crowd of 2,000 at an outdoor rally on Saturday night. Former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg stumped here this past Thursday with the mayor of Houston, who endorsed him. Sanders visited the University of Houston last weekend, where he celebrated his triumph in the Nevada caucuses.

Two polls published Sunday put Sanders ahead but by significantly different margins among likely voters in the Lone Star State, reflecting the degree to which the contest remains fluid and also how hard it is to predict what the electorate will look like in this evolving megastate. Sanders led Biden 34 percent to 19 percent in an NBC-Marist poll, with Bloomberg at 15 percent and Warren at 10 percent.

But Sanders led Biden by only 4 percentage points, 30 percent to 26 percent, in a CBS-YouGov poll, which was within the margin of error, with Warren at 17 percent and Bloomberg at 13 percent.

But Sanders fares particularly poorly in the same well-to-do suburban areas that fueled the Democratic wave in the midterms and where Trump remains most vulnerable. The 7th District, where Fletcher already faces a tough reelection fight, is the sort of place that national Democrats fear they'd lose if Sanders leads the ticket. Mitt Romney carried the district with 60 percent of the vote in the 2012 presidential election, but Trump lost it to Hillary Clinton in 2016 with 47 percent. Establishment-minded Democrats worry that voters who don't like Trump or Sanders might stay home, especially moderates who voted for candidates like Fletcher in 2018. They fear that Sanders would galvanize more Republicans than he'd bring in the new voters he promises to mobilize.

Armstrong is undecided but anxious to vote for a Democrat in Texas's presidential primary on Tuesday who can block Sanders from winning the nomination. She really likes Warren, but she's mainly concerned about beating Trump. She's texted all weekend with friends as far away as New Jersey and Massachusetts to mull what she should do. "I would vote for Joe Biden. He's not my first choice, but I would if I thought he was the only one who could beat Bernie," she said. "I just don't want Bernie. There's a big contingent that doesn't want Bernie, but they're all splitting. ... Do I vote my conscience, which is Warren? Or do I vote strategically, which is Biden?"

Elizabeth Warren acknowledges the crowd of 2,000 after a rally on Saturday night in Houston. (Brian Snyder/Reuters)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more. chain store you can think of, plus an indoor ice-skating rink. It was packed this weekend as I interviewed more than 30 voters.

---

The Galleria, in the heart of Fletcher's district, is one of the largest and ritziest malls in the United States. It has every fancy

Charlotte Sullivan, 70, the retired human resources director of an oil and gas company, plans to vote for Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) because she seems reasonable and willing to compromise to get results. “I’m a fiscally responsible Democrat, and I don’t go for Bernie’s socialism,” Sullivan said as she shopped with her daughter. “I will go for Bernie if he’s the nominee because I cannot tolerate Trump at all. But Bernie has dug himself into a trench, and he’s not going to be able to get out of it.”

Sullivan lives in the richest Zip code of Houston, a traditionally Republican neighborhood in Fletcher’s district that’s full of multimillion-dollar homes. “My neighbors will all vote for Trump before they’ll vote for Bernie, but they’d love to see someone moderate so they could make the switch,” she said. “If Klobuchar was the nominee, they’d vote for her.”

She looked at Bloomberg but concluded that he’s a Democratic version of Trump. “All my antennae go up,” Sullivan said. “It’s the feeling that tells me something’s not right about him. I’ve had very few circumstances in my life where that instinct took me in the wrong direction. My gut says, ‘Don’t go with Bloomberg.’”

Carol Alvarado, a Democratic state senator who represents Houston, endorsed Biden on Sunday after his sweeping win in the South Carolina primary. Democrats picked up a dozen state House seats in 2018 and could win control of the chamber if they gain nine more in 2020. Several of their best pick-up opportunities are around Houston. Alvarado, who chairs the Senate Democratic Caucus, identified certain seats in both the state House and Senate that they’re more likely to win if the former vice president is their standard-bearer.

“We could lose seats if we’re having to talk about democratic socialism,” she explained in an interview. “And if we lose those seats, that gives Republicans a larger majority – which matters for the next decade.” She’s referring to redistricting. The outcome of the 2020 state elections will impact who draws the boundaries that will be in effect until 2031. Alvarado said a Democratic-controlled legislature could also vote to expand Medicaid under the ACA, something Republicans have declined to do. “There’s just so much riding on this election for the future of Texas,” she said.

Joe Biden attends a Sunday church service at Brown Chapel AME Church to commemorate the 55th anniversary of Bloody Sunday in Selma, Ala. (Toni L. Sandys/The Washington Post)

Houston is also the epicenter of the American energy industry, and Sanders’s plan to ban fracking and pass a Green New Deal makes moderates jittery. When you fly into town, you see the scope of the region’s dependence on fossil fuels in the form of tankers and refineries.

“People’s livelihoods are directly tied to that industry,” said Rep. Marc Veasey (D-Tex.). He represents a Fort Worth district, where he notes that many African Americans and Latinos depend on energy industry jobs that Sanders could put in jeopardy. He said union members also regularly express “worry and concern” to him that Sanders’s Medicare-for-all proposal would take away health-care benefits they’ve negotiated hard to secure from their employers.

Veasey lamented that Sanders being at the top of the ticket would make it harder to play offense against House Republicans like freshman Dan Crenshaw in the Houston suburbs. Veasey, who endorsed Biden in November, added that many of his Democratic colleagues would have little choice but to distance themselves from Sanders if he’s the nominee in order to get reelected. “There’s absolutely no question about that,” he told me on Sunday evening.

The CBS-YouGov poll released asked likely Democratic voters in Texas which candidate has the best chance of beating Trump, regardless of whom they support. Interestingly, Latino voters said Sanders has the best chance of winning the general, topping Biden by a 24-point margin. Black voters thought Biden had the best chance, besting Sanders by a 25-point margin. White voters were more evenly split: 32 percent said Biden, 28 percent said Sanders, 18 percent said Bloomberg and 13 percent said Warren.

Anthony Blake, a 35-year-old management consultant, will vote for Sanders in the primary. “Sometimes I think you’ve got to fight fire with fire, as terrible as that sounds,” he said. When I asked about the electability fears expressed by his fellow Houstonians, he pointed to several recent polls that showed Sanders leading Trump in head-to-head matchups and in many cases outperforming other Democrats. “The data doesn’t really show that,” he said, downplaying the concerns of elected lawmakers.

Blake, a political junkie who is white, came to watch Warren’s outdoor rally on Discovery Green in the heart of downtown Houston on Saturday night. He observed that Sanders’s rally at the same venue last April drew a bigger and, he believes, more energetic crowd. He said he was especially impressed that the Sanders crowd included so many diverse faces, especially Latinos, and young people who told him they've never been engaged with politics. “I know they say it’s a fool’s errand, but Bernie’s going to bring new people out,” said Blake. “I’ve never seen energy like I have for Bernie.”

He added that he comes from a conservative family. “They’ve been Republicans for 30 years now, but they dislike Trump,” he said. “They’re terrified of Bernie right now, but they’ll vote for him over Trump.”

Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner introduces Mike Bloomberg during a rally last Thursday in Houston. (Joe Raedle/Getty Images)

The NBC-Marist poll showed 1 in 4 likely voters in Texas remained undecided. Sarita Gomez-Mola, 70, is among them. The foreign-language interpreter, who lives in the 7th District, said she will cast her ballot for whomever she concludes on primary day has the best chance of blocking Sanders from clinching the nomination, which she acknowledged may be Biden. A friend visiting from New York encouraged her to think about Bloomberg, but she’s “angsting” over which of the Democratic alternatives to Sanders could best unify the party.

“Will the Sanders voters support Bloomberg? I worry,” she said. “But Bernie cannot hijack the Democratic Party. He’s divisive, and we’re lurching from one extreme to the other. There would be nothing but gridlock. If Barack Obama couldn’t get his priorities passed, how is Sanders going to?”

Gomez-Mola’s husband is a geologist who works for an oil company. “All his colleagues are Trumppers,” she said. “They will all vote for Trump, no matter who he’s up against.” Likewise, she said, she’ll vote for any Democratic nominee over Trump. “I was born in Cuba, and I’m very afraid of Sanders because of all the changes he wants to make,” said Gomez-Mola. “But even if Fidel Castro came back from the grave and was the nominee, I’d support him over Trump. Castro was my nemesis all my life, but Trump is just that bad.”

This is exactly what the Sanders campaign is counting on. The senator’s strategists express confidence that dislike for Trump is so strong among Democrats that even moderates will coalesce and consolidate behind Sanders if he wins the nomination.

The 7th District is a majority-minority district: 43 percent white, 31 percent Latino, 13 percent black and 11 percent Asian. One in five residents of this district has a postgraduate degree. Another 30 percent have a bachelor’s.

Salvador Delmundo, 56, is an ordained minister who works as a chaplain at one of the hospitals in the district. His political evolution over the past 20 years tracks with the community’s broader shift. He was a Republican who voted for George W. Bush when he carried the district with 66 percent in 2004, but Obama’s barrier-breaking candidacy lured him away. Now he considers himself a “middle-of-the-road” Democrat. “Over the last 10 to 15 years, what was good for me and my wife was developing a deeper appreciation and understanding of the importance of diversity,” he explained as he ate a cheesesteak in the food court while his wife shopped.

Delumndo emphasized that winning as a Democrat in these parts is still an uphill battle that requires carefully challenging deeply ingrained mindsets. “The hurdle before Sanders is educating the general American public about what socialism is,” he said. “I have a lot of ‘friends’ – and I say friends with air quotes – saying that North Korea shot dead a coronavirus patient, and that’s what they do to people in socialist countries. It’s totally crazy, but that’s what they say.”

Delmundo and his wife considered Biden, Sanders and Warren before deciding to vote for the senator from Massachusetts because she seemed like a bridge between the left and the middle of the party. “We decided Warren was in the middle between Biden and Sanders,” he said. “That said, regardless of who wins the primary, we’re going to go with the Democratic nominee.”

Lizzie Fletcher, on the left in the white blouse, joins other Democrats who were elected to Congress in 2018 for a group portrait in front of the Capitol. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Fletcher has not endorsed in the presidential race, and she declined an interview request to discuss her thinking. A spokeswoman said she didn't have open events over the weekend. She's been building a large war chest, with close to $2 million cash on hand. Around the district, she'd been emphasizing a drug pricing bill she sponsored, which the House passed and got pigeonholed in the Senate, to show she's focused on pocketbook issues.

The 2020 election will be the first in modern Texas history where ballots no longer include the option to just vote the Republican or Democratic line straight down the ticket. "Political consultants here don't know how to model for this," said Jim Henson, director of the Texas Politics Project at the University of Texas at Austin. "It stands to reason that drop-off will be higher down the ballot, and that's causing some anxiety on both sides."

Henson thinks Fletcher might be "somewhat more insulated" than other Democrats in frontline House races if Sanders is the nominee. She'll be well funded, has time to build out her own field operation and represents an informed electorate capable of distinguishing between her and Sanders. “There’s also a lot of ifs about what kind of a campaign Sanders is going to run if he’s actually the nominee,” said Henson.

Many House Republicans who lost in 2018, including Culberson, survived when Trump was at the top of the ticket two years before because voters saw them as distinct from the GOP nominee. Two years later, this was a harder sell because they’d mostly voted in lockstep with his agenda. House Democratic strategists hope to benefit from a similar dynamic in 2020 if Sanders wins the nomination because he’s seen as an outsider taking over the party. National Republican strategists counter that they expect Trump to outperform his 2016 numbers in the district no matter the Democratic nominee, so long as the coronavirus doesn’t push the economy into recession, because voters here have benefitted disproportionately from the 2017 tax cuts and various business-friendly policies, such as deregulation.

Six Republicans are running in their own primary on Tuesday to challenge Fletcher this fall. The national party favors Wesley Hunt, an African American in his 30s who piloted Apache helicopters in Iraq as an Army captain after graduating from West Point. He’s trying to break 50 percent to avoid a runoff. His closet competitor is former Bellaire mayor Cindy Siegel, who has spent more than half a million dollars and launched attack ads against Hunt.

Laura Moser campaigns in Houston in May 2017. She lost a runoff to Fletcher. (Michael Stravato/For The Washington Post)

Two years ago, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee intervened to boost Fletcher over the more liberal Laura Moser in the primary. National party operatives even took the unusual step of publishing a tranche of opposition research against Moser because they thought the moderate Fletcher would have an easier time ousting Culberson. (We wrote several Big Ideas about the ensuing kerfuffle.)

Moser voted early for Sanders, but interestingly she doesn't believe the polls that show him ahead in the Texas primary. Many Democrats she knows in the district planned to vote for Bloomberg a few weeks ago, but she said he's faded since his bad debate performance in Las Vegas. Moser said she does not know anyone who loves Biden, but she expects many will vote for him anyway to stop Sanders. And Warren remains popular among many of the most devoted volunteers on her congressional campaign. "I was sort of supporting Warren for a lot of the primary, and it was basically my mother's book club at her events," Moser explained on Sunday afternoon. "Then I went to a Bernie event, and they were all 20-years old, Muslims, Latinx and people I hadn't seen at political events before. That's why I decided to go all in for Bernie."

Democrats haven't won a statewide race in Texas since 1994, and Moser said she'd be surprised if that changes this November. "I don't think Texas is going to flip this year anyway, but if it doesn't, it's not Bernie's fault," she said. "The whole point is either new people come – or they don't. It's a very hard gamble. But the old thing isn't working. ... If the people Bernie is betting on actually come out, we have a lot of them in Texas. But will they come out? I don't know. ... I really banked on those people coming out in my race. And they didn't. ... The infrastructure is not fully there yet. People aren't used to mattering, and people aren't used to voting. That's changing, but it takes time."

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost's essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

Advertisement for BlueCross BlueShield Association. The image shows a woman and a young child. Text overlay reads: "BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM". Below the image, it says "BlueCross BlueShield Association" and "PASS THE MOMNIBUS >". At the bottom left, it says "Powered by LivIntentent".

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

More on 2020

Buttigieg ended his presidential bid.

“The normally stoic Buttigieg appeared to be steady himself throughout his farewell remarks in his hometown of South Bend, bringing to an end what was for a time an electrifying candidacy,” Chelsea Janes and Amy B Wang report. “After a year of going everywhere, meeting everyone, defying every expectation, seeking every vote, the truth is that the path has narrowed to a close for our candidacy, if not for our cause,’ Buttigieg said. ... Despite attracting enormous attention, significant support and often enthusiastic crowds, Buttigieg was not polling well in the upcoming primary states and never found a way to reverse the antipathy he generated in the black community. Earlier Sunday, his campaign held a call with reporters in which senior adviser Michael Halle and deputy campaign manager Hari Sevugan made the case that while Buttigieg likely wouldn’t win any of the 14 states that vote Tuesday, he could still accumulate enough delegates to keep Sanders’s lead to a minimum. ... LGBTQ leaders had no doubt that Buttigieg’s candidacy had widened the path for gay Americans in politics and other areas of life in the United States. ... The crowd interrupted him with a new chant: ‘2024! 2024!’”

---

Quote of the day

“We sent a message to every kid out there wondering if whatever marks them out as different means they are somehow destined to be less than. [They saw] that someone who once felt that exact same way can become a leading American presidential candidate — with his husband at his side,” Buttigieg said in his concession speech.

Sanders is hoping California will deliver him the nomination.

“There are 415 delegates at stake here Tuesday, the largest haul on a day when 14 other states and territories will also go to the polls,” Scott Wilson reports. “The campaign has a state organization far larger than those of his opponents — 22 offices and more than 100 paid staffers. And it has been targeting Latinos, Asian Americans and young voters, key demographics in the Democratic electorate. ... A Suffolk University/USA Today poll showed Sanders with a double-digit lead. He was at 35 percent among likely Democratic primary voters, well ahead of [Bloomberg] at 16 percent, [Biden] at 14 percent and [Warren] at 12 percent. ... Officials say they’re confident. ‘The campaign really prioritized California in a way that we hadn’t before,’ said Rafael Nívar, the Sanders campaign’s state director. ‘Most people looked at the first four states. I looked at it as five states, and so California had a prioritization from the start.’

“One key rival for Sanders is Warren, who is hovering around the 15 percent vote threshold, according to some recent polls. ... Julián Castro ... recently appeared at a Warren event in San Francisco that drew about 150 staff members, volunteers and others. It seems part of an effort to cut into Sanders’s lead among Latinos, especially older ones less liberal on issues of ethnic identity and more suspect of Sanders’s Medicare-for-all proposal. Several polls show Sanders drawing nearly half the state’s Latino support. ... Some of his better-funded rivals have also looked hopefully toward television. California is a place where intensive advertising usually proves essential in winning statewide races. But those rich enough to afford big buys in multiple markets are then often resented, especially the self-financed candidates. ... But it's not clear whether endorsements or heavy spending will dent Sanders's lead, nor whether Biden's surge in South Carolina will itself alter the trajectory of California. Biden has spent little time in the state, traveling here more for fundraising than for organizing."

Biden moved aggressively to capitalize on his South Carolina win.

"Several influential Democrats from Super Tuesday states also gave Biden a lift on Sunday as they announced their support, including former senator Barbara Boxer of California. In Virginia, Rep. Jennifer Wexton — who won her suburban district in 2018, turning the seat blue for the first time in 38 years — endorsed Biden, calling him a 'steady, empathetic leader,'" , " Robert Costa reports. "For many Biden allies, Bloomberg — the billionaire centrist whose name will appear on ballots for the first time Tuesday — remains the biggest headache, and they are hopeful that he may soon decide to bow out. On Sunday, they passed around a clip from MSNBC in which David Plouffe, Barack Obama's 2008 campaign manager, said, 'The reality is Bloomberg needed Biden to lose South Carolina to have any chance.' ... Although Biden's campaign would welcome a narrowed field, several allies are also informally telling allies of Klobuchar and Warren to consider staying in the race until Tuesday night, to deny Sanders a major delegate haul in the Super Tuesday states of Minnesota and Massachusetts ...

"Bloomberg has attempted to make inroads with African American voters but has encountered continued problems over his past support of stop-and-frisk, a police strategy that opponents say is a form of racial profiling. Before announcing his candidacy, he apologized for defending the practice. As Bloomberg spoke Sunday in Selma, Ala., at Brown Chapel AME Church, about 10 people stood and silently turned their backs to him. They returned to their seats after the former mayor stepped away from the podium. The incident caused a stir in the church, but Bloomberg continued his remarks without interruption. Other attendees continued to listen, some cheering and applauding.”

Obama called Biden to congratulate him on winning South Carolina, Bloomberg News reports. Two people familiar with the former president’s thinking said he still doesn’t plan to make an endorsement early in the nominating process. Costa reports in his story that, in interviews with more than a dozen operatives, lawmakers and campaign aides, it was clear that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Obama, among others, are reluctant to do anything at this point that would seem heavy-handed.

A Klobuchar rally in Minnesota was canceled amid protests.

“Klobuchar canceled a rally in her home state Sunday night as several dozen protesters chanted ‘Black Lives Matter,’ ‘Klobuchar has got to go’ and ‘Free Myon’ — referencing the case of a black teenager convicted of murder after a flawed police investigation,” Politico reports. “WCCO-CBS Minnesota reported that the protesters made their way into the rally and on stage, where they continued chanting. After a 40-minute delay, the rally was canceled. A campaign spokesperson told the press: ‘The campaign offered a meeting with the Senator if they (protesters) would leave the stage after being on stage for more than an hour. After the group initially agreed, they backed out of the agreement and we are canceling the event.’”

Sanders said he would only pick a running mate who backs Medicare-for-all.

He told the San Francisco Chronicle his running mate must support his signature issue: “We will pick somebody who knows the experience of working families in this country, who has a history of fighting for those families, and somebody whose politics are similar to mine,” [Sanders said]. ... Sanders sounded a warning against the party trying to deny him the nomination if he comes to Milwaukee with a plurality of pledged delegates. ‘I think that would look terrible, and I think that would lay the groundwork for a Trump victory,' Sanders said in the interview. 'It would reflect on the Democratic Party in a very, very terrible way.' ... He attributed Biden's dominance among black voters to the endorsement he received from South Carolina Rep. Jim Clyburn ... 'Clyburn played a very significant role,' Sanders said. But, he added, 'there is a difference in how African Americans vote in California, Michigan or North Carolina.'"

The coronavirus response shows a common thread between Warren and Bloomberg.

"Both are using this moment to paint themselves as highly competent technocrats who would use data to guide policy," Annie Linskey reports. "Bloomberg's coronavirus response came in the form of a taped three-minute address aired on two networks Sunday night, thanks to a $1.5 million ad buy. ... Bloomberg's plan to address the virus includes inviting doctors who've been pushed out of government back to their old jobs ... Warren released her first proposal to address the coronavirus last week and was quick to point out that she was offering a plan before any of the other candidates — and even before the White House ... she previewed her ideas, saying she wants the federal government to provide all Americans with free screening for the virus and free vaccines if one is developed."

Trump's campaign manager hijacked social media to win the 2016 election. He's trying to do it again.

Brad Parscale relied on Facebook to help him accomplish several campaign objectives, including persuasion, fund-raising, and G.O.T.V., or 'get out the vote.' Finding and motivating likely voters through traditional means, such as TV ads or door-to-door canvassing, is expensive and time-consuming compared with social media," the New Yorker's Andrew Marantz writes in a new profile. "We have almost two hundred and fifteen million hard-I.D. voter records in our database now,' Parscale claimed last year, although his definition of 'hard I.D.' is not clear. Even if Trump were banned from every social network, his campaign would be able to reach supporters by text. According to Parscale, the campaign is on track to send 'almost a billion texts, the most in history'—and texts are far more likely to be opened than e-mails, social-media posts, or news articles. ‘We’ve been working on this around the clock for three years,’ a senior official who works on the 2020 digital campaign told me. He acknowledged that the campaign doesn’t have the same scrappy, subversive energy as in 2016—‘It’s hard to feel like a total underdog when you have the White House’—but, he added, ‘we’re not slowing down. We’re ramping up.’”

A North Carolina Democrat running for Senate is frustrated with both parties.

“Democrat Erica Smith, a two-term North Carolina state senator, was so inspired by women who beat the odds and won seats in Congress in 2018 that she decided to run in this year’s U.S. Senate race. The party establishment chose another candidate,” Vanessa Williams reports. “The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee endorsed Cal Cunningham, a former state lawmaker and an Army veteran of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars who had run unsuccessfully for the Senate a decade ago. Smith was disappointed but didn’t bow out ... Smith got an unexpected and unwelcome benefactor: a Republican-affiliated political action committee that started running ads touting Smith as the ‘true progressive,’ while suggesting Cunningham does not support addressing climate change and LGBTQ rights. Smith, 50, who is African American, says she feels she has been disrespected by both political parties: Republicans who are using her to damage the perceived front-runner in the primary and Democratic leaders who endorsed Cunningham because they didn’t think she could win.”

---

The coronavirus

A staffer blocks the view of a person being taken by a stretcher to a waiting ambulance from a nursing facility where more than 50 people are sick and being tested for the coronavirus in Kirkland, Wash. (Elaine Thompson/AP)

The coronavirus may have spread undetected for weeks in Washington state.

It "has been circulating undetected and has possibly infected scores of people over the past six weeks in Washington state, according to a genetic analysis of virus samples that has sobering implications for the entire country amid heightening anxiety about the likely spread of the disease," Joel Achenbach, Katie Mettler, Lena Sun and Ben Guarino report. "The researchers conducted genetic sequencing of two virus samples. One is from a patient who traveled from China to Snohomish County in mid-January and was the first person diagnosed with the disease in the United States. The other came from a recently diagnosed patient in the same county, a high school student with no travel-related or other known exposure to the coronavirus. The two samples look almost identical genetically, said Trevor Bedford, a computational biologist at Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center in Seattle ... 'I believe we're facing an already substantial outbreak in Washington State that was not detected until now due to narrow case definition requiring direct travel to China,' [Bedford said].

“Officials in Seattle and King County on Sunday announced that four more people have tested positive for the coronavirus, including the second person in the state to die of the virus. That brings the outbreak in Washington state to 13 cases. Of the four new cases, the three surviving patients range in age from their 70s to 90s, have underlying health conditions and are in critical condition, health officials said. ... Health officials in Washington state and across the nation said they expect that numbers will continue to rise in the wake of the decision by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention last week to widen testing guidelines. Over the weekend, new cases were reported in Americans who had recently traveled to South Korea and Italy, including one person in Rhode Island, the state’s first case. ... Late Sunday, the office of Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis announced two ‘presumptively positive’ cases of the coronavirus, in Manatee and Hillsborough counties, and declared a public health emergency.” In New York, Gov. Andrew Cuomo confirmed the state’s first case of the virus.

Kirkland, Wash., has suddenly become the epicenter of the virus.

“One church canceled Communion on Sunday and banned handshakes and hugs. More than two dozen firefighters, and some police officers, are under quarantine. The hospital urged visitors to stay home. And Lake Washington Institute of Technology said it is shutting down for two days to disinfect the campus,” Maria Sacchetti and Ashley Nguyen report. “This outdoorsy city of 90,000 just northeast of Seattle, known for its piney woods, water sports and a Google campus with a meandering bike path running through it, has become the epicenter of the U.S. response to the deadly coronavirus as it begins to spread along the West Coast. ... With a quarter of the city’s 100 firefighters under quarantine, Kirkland city officials scrambled to prepare amid a host of unknowns. It remains unclear how many residents have been exposed to the virus, though its spread seems inevitable.”

Rumors and chaos in Alabama point to the big issues facing the government.

“Not long before local leaders decided, in the words of one of them, that federal health officials ‘didn’t know what they were doing’ with their plan to quarantine novel coronavirus patients in [Anniston, Ala.], a doctor here set out in a biohazard suit to stage a one-man protest along the highway with a sign. ‘The virus has arrived. Are you ready?’ it asked. The town didn’t think it was,” Todd Frankel reports. “Residents already were unnerved by strange stories posted on Facebook and shared via text messages about helicopters secretly flying in sick patients, that the virus was grown in a Chinese lab, that someone — either the media or the government — was lying to them about what was really going on. The quarantine plan hastily hatched by the federal Department of Health and Human Services was soon scrapped by Trump, who faced intense pushback from Alabama’s congressional delegation ...

“‘I was shocked,’ Anniston Mayor Jack Draper said. ‘I was shocked by the lack of planning. I was shocked by the manner in which it was presented to us.’” HHS planned on housing patients at an old FEMA facility in town, which doesn’t have any special capabilities for handling infectious diseases, local officials said. “Meanwhile, federal officials never contacted the town’s hospital, Regional Medical Center, about handling covid-19 patients, said Louis Bass, the hospital’s chief executive.”

HHS is investigating problems with the CDC’s first round of diagnostic tests.

“It is unclear which senior health officials, at which agencies, knew about the CDC test problems and when they learned of them. HHS is convening a team of scientists from outside the CDC to investigate the test development and its flaws, according to an HHS spokesperson,” Politico reports. “It remains unclear why CDC developed its own coronavirus test, rather than relying on one distributed by the World Health Organization, but some experts suggest the agency wanted a test that would do a better job of ruling out other viruses.”

The CDC has failed to release crucial information that doctors say could save lives.

“Several US patients have recovered from coronavirus, but so far, the CDC has shared detailed clinical information about only one of those patients. That information includes what treatments the patients received and how they fared,” CNN reports. “The federal agency possesses such information about several US coronavirus patients, but has not released it. That means doctors who now unexpectedly find themselves treating new coronavirus patients aren't able to benefit from the findings of doctors who preceded them.”

The virus continues spreading globally.

“South Korea said Monday it has confirmed 599 new cases, far higher than the daily tally reported in China,” Adam Taylor, Teo Armus, Simon Denyer and Rick Noack report. “With 4,335 confirmed infections and at least 22 deaths, South Korea has the second-largest national caseload. However, it has tested more than 100,000 people, far more than most nations. ... Italy now has more than 1,600 confirmed cases, while Iran surpassed 1,500, with 66 deaths. ... Elsewhere, Indonesia, one of the few large nations thought to be free of the virus, announced on Monday that it had two confirmed cases. ... In China, the number of new cases was 202, bringing its total to 80,026, including 2,912 deaths.”

---

Divided America

Acting deputy Homeland Security secretary Ken Cuccinelli arrives at the Capitol to brief senators on the coronavirus response. (Mark Wilson/Getty Images)

A court ruled that Ken Cuccinelli's appointment as head of USCIS was unlawful.

U.S. District Judge Randolph Moss, an Obama appointee, said Trump's "appointment last year of [Cuccinelli] to be head of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services was a violation of federal vacancy laws, and that Cuccinelli lacked the authority to issue policy directives tightening asylum rules," Nick Miroff reports. "The ruling amounts to a rebuke of Trump's stated preference for filling top administration jobs with officials serving in an 'acting' capacity. ... The Trump administration is expected to appeal the decision."

The Supreme Court will hear a third challenge to ACA.

This time, it will be at the request of Democratic-controlled states that are fighting a lower court decision that said the entire law must fall. "The court's review will come in the term that begins in October, which would not leave time for a decision before the November presidential election,” Robert Barnes reports. “The law remains in effect during the legal challenges.”

Trump is winning a war on American institutions.

The Atlantic's George Packer tells the story of how Erica Newland, a Yale Law School graduate, fell out of love with her job at the Justice Department: “Newland went to work at the Department of Justice in the last summer of the Obama administration. ... She decided to serve under Trump. She liked her work and her colleagues ... Things got worse in the second year. ... No one risked getting fired. No one would become the target of a Trump tweet. The danger might be a mediocre performance review or a poor reference. ... She hated going to work. ... At night she slept poorly, plagued by regrets. Should she have pushed harder on a legal issue? ... How could she live with the cruelty and bigotry of executive orders and other proposals, even legal ones, that crossed her desk? She was angry and miserable, and her friends told her to leave. ...

“As the executive orders and other requests for the office’s approval piled up, many of them of dubious legality, one of Newland’s supervisors took to saying, ‘We’re just following orders.’ He said it without irony, as a way of reminding everyone ... When she gave him a look he added, ‘I know that’s what the Nazis said, but we’re not Nazis.’ ... On October 27, an anti-Semitic extremist killed 11 people at a synagogue in Pittsburgh. Before the shooting, he berated Jews online for enabling ‘invaders’ to enter the United States from Mexico. ... Newland, who could imagine being shot in a synagogue, felt that her office’s work was sanctioning rhetoric that had inspired a mass killer. She tendered her resignation three days later.”

The Navy SEAL acquitted of killing an ISIS prisoner talked to “60 Minutes” about his case.

Edward Gallagher, the former SEAL, “acknowledges that people either love him as an American hero or despise him as a war criminal.”

Correspondent David Martin told Gallagher that his picture with the dead

prisoner is a “trophy photo if I ever saw one.” “Yeah, that what it was taken as,” Gallagher said, before adding he was “trying to make it look tough. I know how bad it looks when it gets out into the public, which it never was supposed to. ... It was like a joke text. Dark humor.”

Charlottesville won't celebrate Thomas Jefferson's birthday. It will instead celebrate the end of slavery.

“His name still adorns much of the city, from the public library to a private winery. And from the foot of a mountain dedicated to him, his statue still gazes out over the university he founded. But lately, in ways both small and seismic, Thomas Jefferson's town has started to feel like it belongs to someone else,” Michael Miller reports. “For the first time since World War II, Charlottesville won't honor the Founding Father's birthday this spring. Instead, on Tuesday, the city will celebrate the demise of the institution with which Jefferson increasingly has become associated: slavery. Liberation and Freedom Day, as the new holiday is known, will commemorate when Union troops arrived here on March 3, 1865, and freed the enslaved people who made up a majority of Charlottesville's residents.”

---

Social media speed read

Rep. John Lewis (D-Ga.) is battling pancreatic cancer, but he decided to make the pilgrimage back to the Edmund Pettus bridge in Selma, Ala., on the anniversary of his vicious beating on Bloody Sunday:

John Lewis ✓
@repjohnlewis

We were beaten, we were tear-gassed. I thought I was going to die on this bridge. But somehow and some way, God almighty helped me here. We cannot give up now. We cannot give in. We must keep the faith, keep our eyes on the prize.

♥ 60.3K 12:40 AM - Mar 2, 2020

💬 13.4K people are talking about this

All the candidates wished Buttigieg well as he dropped out, even Klobuchar, who clashed often with the 38-year-old:

Former candidate Marianne Williamson, who endorsed Sanders last week, offered this analysis:

Chasten Buttigieg commemorated his husband's historic bid:

Now that Buttigieg is gone, Biden gets a new title:

---

Videos of the day

John Oliver tackled the coronavirus and examined the ways it has highlighted government weaknesses around the world:

Trevor Noah shared his extended thoughts on Bloomberg:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Super Tuesday tests Mike Bloomberg's money against Joe Biden's momentum
Date: Tuesday, March 3, 2020 8:20:22 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Super Tuesday tests Mike Bloomberg's money against Joe Biden's momentum

OKLAHOMA CITY – Pete Buttigieg dropped out of the presidential race while I was flying here to cover a rally he had scheduled for Monday. To salvage the trip, I decided to drive to Tulsa to see Amy Klobuchar. She suspended her campaign just as I hit the road. Instead, both trekked to Dallas to endorse Joe Biden.

As the field winnows, the former vice president is riding momentum from his win in South Carolina on Saturday and benefiting from the Democratic establishment's desperation to stop Bernie Sanders from securing an insurmountable delegate lead on Super Tuesday. Former Texas congressman Beto O'Rourke, who dropped out in November, also endorsed Biden in Dallas, a few hours after former Senate majority leader Harry Reid announced his support in Nevada.

In presidential politics, momentum historically is worth more than money. But no one has ever spent the kind of money that Mike Bloomberg has. Today is the first time the former New York mayor's name will appear on the ballot. He skipped the four early states to invest in the 14 states, plus American Samoa, that vote on Super Tuesday. Nearly a third of the delegates to the nominating convention will be awarded, the biggest haul of the year. "I'm in it to win it," Bloomberg said at a Monday event in Virginia, noting that he connected by phone with both Buttigieg and Klobuchar, who he said "behaved themselves well" in the race.

Biden is playing catch-up in his quest to consolidate support among moderates. He's been struggling to raise money – until $10 million poured in over the weekend. He has some of the weakest organizations in the states that vote on Super Tuesday. And his rivals were on the ground in the states that vote today while he was laser-focused on the Palmetto State.

Bloomberg has put about half a billion dollars into building the Death Star of campaigns. He has hired more than 2,400 paid staffers, including 400 at his Manhattan headquarters and 2,000 spread across 43 states and territories, including all that vote today. He has deployed more than 40 staffers in each of 19 states and more than 100 in each of six states. The campaign has opened more than 200 field offices, including more than 100 in the 14 states that vote today.

Three of those offices, and 23 of those full-time staffers, are here in Oklahoma. This state is far from Super Tuesday's biggest prize, but there are 37 delegates up for grabs. For context, the Iowa caucuses awarded 41 delegates. The state offers an interesting window into Bloomberg's strategy and a handy gauge of whether the gusher of investment, when his rivals were focused elsewhere, pays dividends.

After Klobuchar canceled her Tulsa rally, I dropped by Bloomberg's Oklahoma City field office on Monday afternoon. The campaign had advertised online that it was open for volunteers to come work the phone bank. There were four paid staffers in the office but just one volunteer actually making calls. One staffer sat at the front desk to check people in. Another assisted the volunteer as she used a campaign cellphone to work through a list of voters.

Regina Sabatini, the volunteer, turned out to be an amiable Bloomberg superfan. The 55-year-old from Mustang, on the outskirts of town, took the day off work as a project manager for software development so she could urge fellow Oklahomans to back Bloomberg. She also took off parts of last Thursday and Friday to come make calls. And over the weekend, from home, she texted a list of numbers given to her by the campaign. She said she's never volunteered before on a presidential campaign.

“The primary reason is I do feel he can truly beat Trump,” said Sabatini, wearing a Bloomberg campaign T-shirt. “Others talk about getting things done. He can actually get things done. ... I'm just horrified by how things are going with this administration. I truly believe we need to bring back civility to restore our democracy. ... I can sit and complain about it or I can do something about it.” Sabatini emphasized that she will support any Democratic nominee. “Vote blue,” she said, “no matter who.”

Bloomberg has spent at least $3.9 million on TV ads in Oklahoma, which has allowed him to run commercials more than 6,300 times. None of the other candidates spent more than a few hundred thousand dollars in the state. That could ultimately matter more than the fact that the office wasn't full of volunteers making calls, but there's a storied history of self-funders spending millions on television and having little to show for it. Just ask Tom Steyer, the billionaire environmentalist who dropped out of the race on Saturday night after he failed to earn any delegates, despite spending more than $250 million of his own money on his campaign and airing more ads in South Carolina than anyone else.

Sanders defeated Hillary Clinton in the Oklahoma primary four years ago by 10 points, 52 percent to 42 percent, carrying 75 of the state's 77 counties. But no one seems to have a strong sense of what will happen this time in the Sooner State. There's been no high-quality public polling. One local survey two weeks ago put Biden up 1 point over Bloomberg, well within the margin of error. Another poll the week before that had Bloomberg up 6 points, but that was before his bad debate performance in Las Vegas. Both surveys showed Sanders, the independent senator from Vermont, just under the 15 percent threshold required to get delegates. Obviously, the race is fluid. It's unclear where those who have been backing Klobuchar and Buttigieg will go. The senator from Minnesota and the former mayor from South Bend, Ind., both hoped to fare well here.

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Bloomberg has visited Oklahoma three times on his private jet since launching his campaign in November, including a speech in Oklahoma City last week. He unveiled what he calls his Greenwood Initiative during a trip to Tulsa on the eve of Martin Luther King Jr. Day. It's a plan to improve economic opportunities for African Americans. Greenwood was one of the most affluent black communities in the country until it was devastated in the 1921 Tulsa Race Massacre. About 8 percent of Oklahoma's population is black.

Bloomberg also held a roundtable with tribal leaders to solicit input on a Native American policy he subsequently unveiled. He has also secured endorsements from former governor Brad Henry, former Tulsa mayor Kathy Taylor and state Sen. Kevin Matthews, who represents Greenwood.

Bloomberg campaign officials said they've hosted 400 grass-roots events for voters around Oklahoma. They also said that there were more volunteers earlier in the afternoon at the field office in Oklahoma City, as well as Tulsa and Lawton, a rural area in southwestern Oklahoma where national campaigns don't typically invest.

Sanders benefits from a grass-roots army that's hard to buy. When I drove to his Oklahoma City office from Bloomberg's, there was one staffer present but that's because 26 volunteers were out door-knocking. The field organizer showed me the sign-in sheet to prove it. Sanders volunteers were also canvassing Monday afternoon in Tulsa and Norman, home to the University of Oklahoma. Neither Biden nor Elizabeth Warren have field offices in the state.

Jill Biden will drop by an elementary school in Oklahoma City later today to get out the vote for her husband, and actor Danny Glover will speak at a phone bank for Sanders in his field office here. Jane Sanders stumped last Thursday for her husband in Greenwood, the black neighborhood of Tulsa.

Warren was born and raised in Oklahoma, which she mentions

every chance she gets, and she visited here shortly before Christmas. She hung out with her brothers and tried to smooth over tensions with Native Americans who are upset that she spent decades falsely claiming to be one of them. Notably, the pro-Warren super PAC is not spending any money on TV here, a reflection of her prospects.

Today, though, Warren is focused on trying to survive by winning her adopted state of Massachusetts, where she taught law at Harvard and which she represents in the Senate. Sanders held big rallies in the Bay State over the weekend. Warren staying in the race hurts the senator from Vermont far more than anyone else, so he hopes to score a victory over her there.

Super Tuesday states have 10 times the population of earlier-voting states

Nearly 130 million people live in the 14 states with nominating contests on Super Tuesday – more than 10 times as many people who live in the four states with caucuses and primaries before Super Tuesday.

Each square ■ represents 10,000 people.

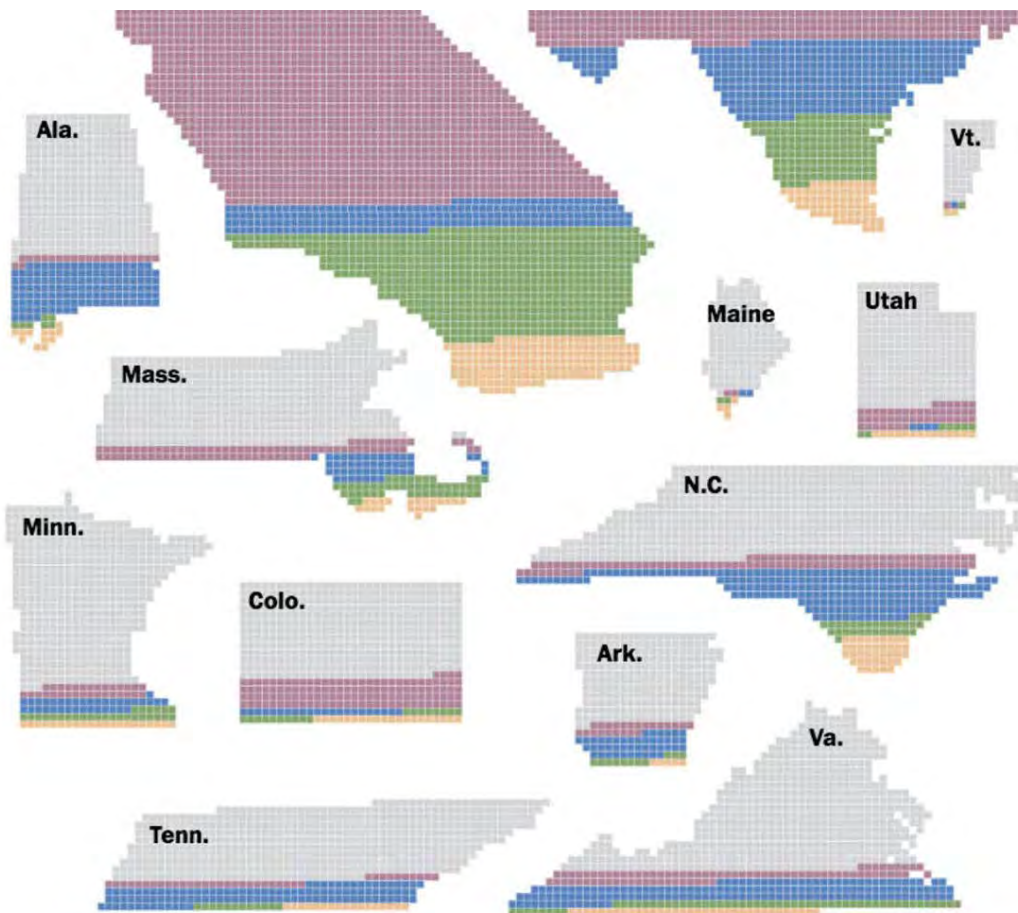

White non-Hispanic Black Asian Hispanic Other

Primaries or caucuses before Super Tuesday

Primaries on Super Tuesday

Super Tuesday states are more diverse than states that follow

"Other" includes Native Americans, people of multiple races and other races. U.S. territories other than Puerto Rico are not included.

Source: American Community Survey

ALYSSA FOWERS/THE WASHINGTON POST

During a town hall in Manassas, Va., that aired last night on Fox News, Bloomberg seemed a little annoyed when asked why he doesn't step aside for Biden. Fox host Martha MacCallum asked him whether he should follow the lead of Buttigieg and Klobuchar if he's as concerned about Sanders as he says. “I haven't even faced the voters once at a national level,” Bloomberg replied.

Fox’s Bret Baier pressed Bloomberg to name states where he might actually win the primary. “Well, keep in mind you don't have to win states, you have to win delegates,” Bloomberg replied. “The most likely scenario for the Democratic Party is that nobody has a majority, and then it goes to a convention, where there's horse-trading and everybody decides to compromise. It doesn't even have to be one of the two leading candidates.”

“The Sanders people would say they're trying to steal it,” Baier noted.

“Look, if the rules say that you can swap votes or make deals, then you can swap votes and make deals,” countered Bloomberg. “And if you don't like those rules, don't play.”

Bloomberg will spend tonight in Florida, which votes in two weeks, to signal that he plans to stick around no matter what happens tonight. He has events scheduled later this week in Michigan, which votes next Tuesday, and Pennsylvania, whose primary isn't until April 28.

Biden attacked Bloomberg during an interview last night on CNN. “He’s not a Democrat,” the former vice president told Anderson Cooper. “You can spend a billion dollars, but you can’t move away from what your record is.” Bloomberg was elected mayor of New York as a Republican and independent but never a Democrat. Asked about these criticisms on Fox, Bloomberg replied that he’s “in sync” with Democrats on taxes, climate change, and gun control. And he highlighted his generous contributions to liberal causes.

On Fox, asked to describe key differences between himself and Biden, Bloomberg touted his executive experience – building a company and leading a city for 12 years – as he argued that being former vice president is not really a managerial job. Mostly, though, Bloomberg focused his attacks on Sanders. “He’s not electable,” the billionaire said of the self-described democratic socialist. He described some of Sanders's ideas as "crazy," though he reiterated that he would vote for Sanders over Trump. "I would not be happy doing it," Bloomberg said. "But I have said I would."

The Sanders campaign seems to anticipate a two-way race with Biden coming out of Super Tuesday. "We are now entering the phase of the primary in which the differences between Bernie and Biden will take center stage," Sanders manager Faiz Shakir and senior adviser Jeff Weaver write in a new memo to surrogates and staff. "These differences make clear that the choice between these two candidates is stark — it is a choice between the party's core economic and social justice agenda, and the Washington establishment's agenda that aims to protect and enrich the wealthy and well-connected. The differences also spotlight how Bernie's agenda is a far more popular general election agenda than Biden."

Biden also seems to be itching to go mano a mano with Sanders. "The country is hungry — hungry, hungry, hungry — to be united," he said in Houston on Monday. "Most Americans ... don't want a promise of a revolution. They want a guarantee of results."

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost's essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

More from the states

Many Super Tuesday voters who already cast their ballots want a do-over. In California, Buttigieg’s exit “sparked some brief interest on social media about the rules governing a possible revote. ... The answer, in a word: no,” the Los Angeles Times reports. “There’s no provision in California election law for a second chance once a ballot has been mailed or cast in person at a polling place or regional vote center. ... There are no firm numbers on how many of California’s 20.7 million registered voters have already weighed in. Paul Mitchell, whose for-profit campaign research firm, Political Data Inc., tracks ballots as they are returned, said about 20% of all mailed ballots had been received by local elections officials as of Friday. But he said that underestimates how much of the race is already over, as millions of ballots that were mailed out won’t be returned. ‘Our data suggests 40% of those who will participate have already voted,’ Mitchell said.”

In Colorado, the procrastinators have the greatest shot at making a difference. “Colorado is switching back to a presidential primary system this year after several cycles of caucuses. As of mid-afternoon Monday, about 1.2 million ballots had been returned, and Democratic ballots overtook Republican ballots,” the Denver Post reports. “The total number of returned ballots nearly matched the total votes cast during the entirety of the 2018 primaries, when both parties had competitive statewide races. The slower pace for Democratic ballots this time signaled a likely avalanche of Democratic ballots coming late Monday and Tuesday, election watchers said. ... If the race is close here, it may take a day or two to learn if Sanders has held Warren, Biden and Bloomberg at bay.”

In Minnesota, tens of thousands of people have already probably cast ballots for Klobuchar. “Secretary of State Steve Simon released the final pre-election batch of early voting numbers on Friday, showing 94,287 people had requested early ballots,” the Star Tribune reports. “Simon said he’s been warning voters that the presidential primary isn’t like any other election. ‘I’ve been saying everywhere I go around the state, keep in mind, this kind of contest is different from an August primary election because candidates routinely drop out,’ he said.”

In North Carolina, 800,000 voters – mostly Democrats – voted early. “North Carolina allowed [recasts] for four years in the ’70s,” Wake County Board of Elections member Gerry Cohen told the News & Observer. “It was a nightmare for election officials.”

In Virginia, Biden is counting on suburban and African American voters to forge a coalition that can keep his momentum going. “Many of the state’s top Democrats have endorsed him, including top African American officials,” the Associated Press reports. “Bloomberg has been a regular visitor to Virginia and launched his race here. He’s spent millions of dollars helping elect Democrats in Virginia and spent lavishly on campaign staff and advertising. Sanders doesn’t need to win Virginia to have a good day ... A surprise showing in Virginia [for Warren] could be a much-needed boost.”

In Maine, Sanders rolled out endorsements from several local liberal leaders. Still, Warren has the most endorsements from state-level officials, the Bangor Daily News reports.

In Utah, Sanders spoke to a crowd of about 5,800 as he hopes for a repeat of his 2016 success. He has outraised Trump in the Beehive State, $728,000 to $463,000, the Salt Lake Tribune reports.

In Alabama, most of the focus is on the Republican Senate primary. Polling of the Democratic primary in the state has been almost nonexistent. Most attention is instead on the fight between seven Republicans to take on Sen. Doug Jones (D). Former attorney general Jeff Sessions, Rep. Bradley Byrne and former Auburn head football coach Tommy Tuberville appear most likely to make it to a runoff, the Montgomery Advertiser reports.

In Texas, Reps. Kay Granger (R) and Henry Cuellar (D) excel at securing federal funding for their districts, but they're struggling to beat back strong primary challenges from the insurgent wings of their parties. “Cuellar and Granger, both powerful players on Capitol Hill, are the Texas incumbents most at risk of losing reelection on Tuesday, in what will be the first primary contest for members of Congress anywhere in the United States,” the Texas Tribune reports. “Whether these districts’ voters opt to keep them in office or throw out their seniority, favoring ideological purity over congressional clout, will have sweeping consequences for Texans across the state.”

In New York, Ivanka Trump changed her voter registration from Democrat to Republican so she could vote for her dad in the state's April primary. In 2016, the president's daughter missed the deadline to do so and couldn't vote for her dad. Her “transformation from a New York socialite who donated to Democratic politicians and vocally supported gay rights to a card-carrying member of her father’s ‘Make America Great Again’ coalition is now complete,” the New York Times reports. “Online, her persona has also become more aggressive and raw, a reflection of her own anger, aides said, over her father’s impeachment. ... Ms. Trump declined to say which Democrat she would like to see face off against Mr. Trump in a general election. ... But, Ms. Trump said, she felt ‘good about our chances of beating all of them.’”

Like clockwork, Senate Republicans are preparing their first subpoena to Burisma, a Ukrainian oil and gas firm.

“Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) is preparing to subpoena a witness tied to Ukrainian natural gas company Burisma, in an escalation of the GOP probe of the firm,” Felicia Sonmez and Paul Kane report. “Johnson, the chairman of the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, sent a letter Sunday to members of the panel informing them of his plan to force a vote on subpoenaing the witness, political consultant and former Ukrainian diplomat Andrii Telizhenko, who worked for a company called Blue Star Strategies that was a representative for Burisma in the United States. Hunter Biden, Joe Biden’s son, sat on the board of Burisma while his father was the Obama administration’s point person on Ukraine policy. Trump and Republicans have claimed, without evidence, that there was something nefarious in the Bidens’ dealings with Ukraine. ...

“Two other GOP senators — Charles E. Grassley (Iowa) and Lindsey O. Graham (S.C.) — have also launched investigations into Hunter Biden. In an interview Monday night, Johnson denied that Biden’s win [in South Carolina] sparked his subpoena request, noting that ‘we’d still be asking for the same information’ regardless of Biden’s status as a Democratic presidential candidate. ... Last Monday, Johnson sent a letter to Sen. Gary Peters (Mich.), the top Democrat on the panel, advising him of his intent to issue the subpoena. Three days later, Peters wrote back to Johnson voicing his objections ... Johnson argued that the news of the planned subpoena would not have been made public on Monday had Peters not objected to his proposal.”

---

Quote of the day

“Look, we are taking on the establishment. And I fully understand — no great surprise to me — that establishment politicians are not going to endorse us,” Sanders told reporters in Salt Lake City. “The establishment will rally around the establishment candidate. That’s the simple reality.”

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

Powered by  LiveIntent

The new world order

A grocery store is out of hand sanitizer and face masks in Kirkland, Wash., the center of the nation's most serious coronavirus outbreak. (Jovelle Tamayo for The Washington Post)

The Fed is making emergency moves.

“The Federal Reserve slashed the benchmark U.S. interest rate by half a percentage point Tuesday, the biggest cut since the financial crisis and a sign that global central banks are prepared to act to contain the economic fallout from the coronavirus,” Heather Long reports. “The U.S. central bank has not made an emergency cut like this since 2008. Fed leaders voted unanimously in favor of the rate reduction. The highly unusual move comes on the heels of other central banks around the world lowering rates and calls by President Trump for a ‘big’ Fed rate cut. ‘The coronavirus poses evolving risks to economic activity. In light of these risks and in support of achieving its maximum employment and price stability goals, the [Fed] decided today to lower the target range for the federal funds rate by 1/2 percentage point,’ the Fed wrote in a statement. The move would reduce the current interest rate to just below 1.25 percent, down from 1.75 percent.”

The coronavirus has claimed six American lives. Patients are being treated in at least 15 states.

“Four deaths announced Monday and two others this weekend all occurred in Washington state, the center of the nation’s most serious outbreak,” Maria Sacchetti, Arelis Hernández, Siobhán O’Grady and William Wan report. “Nationwide, the number of cases topped 100, and U.S. officials used increasingly dire language, even as they sought to push back against waves of panic and misinformation online. ‘We know there will be more cases,’ Vice President Pence said at a White House news conference. ‘Now we’re focused on mitigation of the spread as well as treatment of people that are affected.’ Trump administration officials stressed Monday that the risk posed to the public by the coronavirus remains low but cautioned the outbreak could change course as the disease spreads through person-to-person contact.

“Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, Texas, Utah, Wisconsin and Washington state either have cases confirmed by health officials or have been treating patients with coronavirus-like symptoms. ... [Lawmakers on Capitol Hill] were closing in Monday on a $7.5 billion coronavirus package ... The legislation is likely to be unveiled on Tuesday and pass the House later this week before moving on to the Senate.

“At a meeting with leaders of the world’s largest pharmaceutical companies, [Trump] hinted he may enact new travel restrictions on unnamed nations with large outbreaks and touted his administration’s steps to fight the virus. The president listened and occasionally interjected to press pharmaceutical executives on how quickly a vaccine and treatments could be developed. Therapeutic human trials could begin as early as April, but a vaccine would take roughly 12 to 18 months to develop, said Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. ...

“In Texas, San Antonio lambasted the [CDC] after the agency

released a woman who later was found to have the novel coronavirus. The city unsuccessfully sought a temporary restraining order to prevent the release of dozens of people scheduled to leave quarantine in the San Antonio area and demanded another round of tests be performed. San Antonio Mayor Ron Nirenberg noted that the released woman had visited a mall, eaten at the food court and stayed at the Holiday Inn Express near the city's airport. The woman arrived in Texas last month from Wuhan, China, and was part of a 91-person group evacuated from Asia. ... 'We simply cannot have a screw-up like this from our federal partners,' said Nirenberg."

Worsening conditions abroad offered troubling signs for what may lie ahead: "Schools across Japan mostly closed their doors Monday [while] South Korea said it would extend its school closures by two weeks." The E.U.'s internal market commissioner said the virus "has led to about $1.1 billion in losses per month for the European tourism industry since the start of 2020. British Airways is cancelling hundreds of flights, including a dozen between London and New York. An adviser to Iran's supreme leader died after contracting the coronavirus, state media reported Monday. Iraq and Egypt confirmed more cases, many of them linked to Iran. Senegal confirmed its first case, marking the second one found in sub-Saharan Africa."

North Korea is holding at least 7,000 people under quarantine, a South Korean news agency reported. (Min Joo Kim)

India suspended entry to visitors from Italy, Iran, South Korea and Japan. It also suspended the visas of people of any nationality who have visited those four countries, plus China, since Feb. 1. India canceled the visas of Chinese citizens last month. (Joanna Slater)

A Washington state woman said she can't get answers about her husband, who is inside the facility experiencing the possible outbreak. The 73-year-old man was checked into the long-term Kirkland nursing facility that's been linked to four of the nation's six deaths. His wife said she's been unable to contact the hospital or its nursing station about his condition, per Teo Armus.

The number of cases worldwide has increased to about 90,000.

(The Washington Post)

U.S. officials are pressuring airlines to turn over more contact information for passengers.

“Government officials have said they need the data so they can warn local authorities about who might have been exposed to the virus,” Jeff Stein, Lena Sun, Lori Aratani report. “But the airline industry has balked, saying the federal government should instead share information it already collects among different agencies and come up with a system for obtaining the rest.”

Medical bill worries and fears of lost pay may hamper efforts to slow the spread.

“As the test for the virus becomes more widely available, health-care experts predict that some people with flu-like illnesses — or those who may have been exposed — will avoid finding out whether they have been infected because they are uninsured or have health plans that saddle them with much of the cost of their care,” Amy Goldstein reports. “The government has not yet begun to tell Americans where to go for testing, and neither public nor private insurers are changing their rules to buffer people from testing-related charges. Some preparations recommended by the [CDC] are incompatible with the way benefits work. Officials have urged people to keep an adequate supply of their routine medicines in case they end up quarantined. But insurance companies seldom permit refills until a patient is nearly out of pills. The agency also urges people with respiratory illnesses to stay home from work. But with no federal sick leave requirements, some experts predict the virus will spread more rapidly.”

Our colleagues Angela Fritz and Reis Thebault have launched a special newsletter focused on the coronavirus. (You can subscribe here.)

FEMA is preparing for a possible emergency declaration.

“FEMA officials are preparing for an ‘infectious disease emergency declaration’ by the president that would allow the agency to provide disaster relief funding to state and local governments, as well as federal assistance to support the coronavirus response,” per NBC News.

Congressional leaders are preparing for the virus to infect the Capitol.

Speaker Nancy Pelosi invited her fellow congressional leaders to a briefing to discuss a plan for congressional operations should the virus threaten Washington, Fox News reports. There have already been conversations among congressional staffers about potentially mandating that only “essential staff” come to work.

The Defense Intelligence Agency directed all employees not to travel.

“The DIA is the first known government agency to ban travel domestically in the face of the global outbreak, raising questions about whether other federal offices will issue the same guidance,” the Daily Beast reports.

At least the Pope is okay.

Pope Francis, who has been unwell in recent days, tested negative for the coronavirus. The pope had a cough and fever after spending most of last Wednesday outdoors in St. Peter's Square. His doctors immediately swabbed him to conduct tests, showing that his symptoms were "a slight indisposition," a Rome newspaper reported. (Armus)

In response to the virus, the NBA told players to avoid high-fiving fans or strangers and avoid taking items for autographs, the AP reported.

In Israel, Netanyahu scored a comeback in the latest election but fell short of a majority.

"The poll results put [Prime Minister Benjamin] Netanyahu's right-wing bloc two seats shy of achieving that governing majority in the 120-seat parliament, or Knesset, and breaking a year-long impasse in Israeli politics. Official results being tabulated overnight could hand his coalition an outright victory — or leave it even further out of reach," Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report. "With Israelis voting in national elections for the third time in less than year, the unexpectedly strong performance was a victory for Netanyahu, who had failed to wrest a governing majority in the past two votes and was indicted in November on charges of bribery, fraud and abuse of trust. His corruption trial is scheduled to start later this month. ... The exit poll results came as a jarring disappointment to Netanyahu's main rival, Benny Gantz, a ramrod-straight former military chief who presented himself as the ethical antithesis of Netanyahu. While Gantz's performance as a political newcomer produced solid results in the first two elections, he seems to have fallen short Monday. Gantz was defiant early Tuesday, telling supporters that he would fight on. ...

"Turnout outpaced the previous two elections, a surprise for many political observers who had predicted voters would stay away because of spiking coronavirus fears and electoral exhaustion. The final tally put turnout at 71 percent, the highest since 2015. Hundreds of voters who are in precautionary quarantine because of possible exposure to coronavirus donned masks and gloves and went to more than a dozen special biohazard voting places staffed by paramedics. The fears of infectious disease had been only the latest worry for an electorate anxious from nonstop politicking, adding hand-washing to the hand-wringing.”

The Trump administration ordered four Chinese news outlets in the U.S. to reduce their staffs.

Xinhua News Agency and the China Global Television Network, the parent company of the China Daily and China Radio International, were asked to “reduce the number of Chinese nationals working on their staffs by more than a third,” Carol Morello reports. The action comes after China expelled three Beijing-based Wall Street Journal reporters, condemning as “racist” an essay that ran in the newspaper’s opinion section criticizing China’s response to the coronavirus outbreak. “In announcing the move, senior administration officials cited the disappearance of citizen journalists chronicling the outbreak of the coronavirus in Wuhan.”

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be overlooked

Tornadoes in Nashville killed at least nine.

“Tornadoes ripped through central Tennessee early Tuesday, killing at least nine people, demolishing homes and businesses, causing multiple injuries and leaving tens of thousands of residents without power,” Timothy Bella, Kim Bellware and Andrew Freedman report. “The tornado touched down northwest of Nashville shortly before 12:40 a.m. Eastern time, the National Weather Service said. Damage was reported along a path that ended about 10 miles east of the city, in Hermitage, Tenn., according to the Associated Press. ... At least 20 people have been hospitalized ... Thirty-first responders have been injured, according to the fire department.”

Chris Matthews is out at MSNBC.

The long-running host of “Hardball” announced he’s retiring, an abrupt exit prompted by a series of recent gaffes and controversies. The 74-year-old made the surprise announcement at the top of his weeknight program. “He appeared for about two minutes at the start of his 7 p.m. program and effectively signed off on his television career,” Paul Farhi reports. “He thanked viewers and added, ‘The younger generations ... are improving the workplace, we’re talking here about better standards than we grew up with, fair standards. A lot of it has to do with how we talk to each other, compliments on a woman’s appearance that some men — including me — might have once incorrectly thought were okay were never okay. Not then and certainly not today, and for making such comments in the past, I’m sorry.’ ... The network immediately went to a commercial break. When the show resumed, political correspondent Steve Kornacki had taken Matthews’s seat. ... MSNBC has not announced Matthews’s replacement, which suggests his resignation was as sudden and unexpected as it appeared to viewers. A series of interim hosts will fill in for him ...

“His departure capped a week of embarrassments. Matthews apologized last week for comparing [Sanders’s] victory in the Nevada Democratic caucuses to the Nazi invasion of France. He also was criticized for a skeptical interview with [Warren] last week. Matthews asked Warren why she believes a female employee who sued [Bloomberg] accusing him of telling her to 'kill' her unborn child. Bloomberg denied making the statement, and Matthews asked Warren, 'You believe he's lying? Why would he lie?' ... Warren replied: 'Why shouldn't I believe her?' ... And on Saturday, journalist Laura Bassett wrote on GQ.com that Matthews made inappropriate comments to her and other women when they were guests on his show."

Trump's post-impeachment retaliation tour continues.

The White House yanked the nomination of a Pentagon official who raised questions about withholding military aid for Ukraine. "In a statement, the White House said it had withdrawn the nomination of Elaine McCusker as Pentagon comptroller, a position she has held on an acting basis," Missy Ryan reports. "It follows the departure last month of John Rood, a top policy official who likewise was a leading figure in the Pentagon's response to the delay of security aid to Ukraine ... Emails made public in recent months show that McCusker voiced concerns to White House budget officials last year about the delay in delivering congressional approved aid to Ukraine."

Sen. Jack Reed (R.I.), the top Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, called McCusker "another casualty of the Trump Administration's efforts to purge public servants who put country before fealty to the President."

Another big piece of Warren's legacy is on the line today.

The Supreme Court will hear oral arguments in a challenge to the constitutionality of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, the brainchild of Warren. The case could determine whether a president can fire the director of the agency "at will," and the ruling could shape the future of the 1,600-person bureau, as well as "throw into question the legitimacy of the billions of dollars in fines it has imposed on mortgage lenders, credit card companies and banks over the past eight years,"

Renaë Merle reports. “At the center of the fight is Richard Cordray, the bureau’s former director, who had long been a target of Republicans frustrated by the agency’s power, including the limits on the president’s ability to fire him. ... The court will be hearing the case of a California law firm, Seila Law, which has refused to cooperate with a CFPB investigation, arguing that the bureau’s leadership structure is unconstitutional. ...

"A 2007 paper by Warren, written when she was a Harvard law professor, was the guiding force behind what became the CFPB in the wake of a global financial crisis. But the bureau was controversial from the start ...

“Among justices deciding the bureau’s fate is Brett M. Kavanaugh, who while on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit said in a different case that the bureau’s structure was unconstitutional. Independent agencies such as the CFPB constitute ‘a headless fourth branch of the U.S. Government. They hold enormous power over the economic and social life of the United States,’ he wrote in a 73-page dissent. Kavanaugh is not obligated to recuse himself in the Seila case.”

The Supreme Court appears split over judicial review for asylum seekers facing quick removal.

“During [oral arguments on Monday], conservative justices were concerned over what a government lawyer said would be a ‘flood’ of such requests, frustrating Congress’s intention of subjecting those found quickly after crossing the border to expedited removal if their claims were unwarranted,” Robert Barnes reports. “The court’s liberals seemed worried about giving such power to administration officials without some check on whether they are following the rules.”

---

Social media speed read

Trump reacted to moderates consolidating behind Biden:

Rep. Abigail Spanberger, one of three freshman congresswomen who flipped red seats blue in Virginia in 2018, said she chose Klobuchar. The former CIA officer planned to keep her absentee ballot vote to herself, but she revealed her choice a few hours after Klobuchar dropped out. The other two Virginia freshmen, Elaine Luria and Jennifer Wexton, are backing Biden:

Biden and O'Rourke headed to Whataburger after their Dallas rally and met a young supporter:

 Dan Merica
@merica

Sofia, a seven-year old from Broken Bow, Oklahoma, asked Joe Biden and Beto O'Rourke for autographs at Whataburger on Monday night. They both wrote her notes.

Biden: "You are a lovely, bright young lady."

O'Rourke: "I am expecting great things from you."

 834  4:59 AM - Mar 3, 2020

 286 people are talking about this

Trump admitted that he wants to get on Democrats' nerves:

 Seung Min Kim
@seungminkim

Noting how he had traveled to the four early states to hold rallies just as Democrats were voting, Trump notes: "We like to troll."

 693  12:49 AM - Mar 3, 2020

 215 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Seth Meyers went after Trump for saying the coronavirus is a Democratic hoax:

Stephen Colbert explained how Biden's South Carolina win changed the Democratic race:

Trevor Noah pictured what Biden debating Trump would look like:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Super Tuesday tests Mike Bloomberg's money against Joe Biden's momentum
Date: Tuesday, March 3, 2020 8:20:52 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Super Tuesday tests Mike Bloomberg's money against Joe Biden's momentum

OKLAHOMA CITY – Pete Buttigieg dropped out of the presidential race while I was flying here to cover a rally he had scheduled for Monday. To salvage the trip, I decided to drive to Tulsa to see Amy Klobuchar. She suspended her campaign just as I hit the road. Instead, both trekked to Dallas to endorse Joe Biden.

As the field winnows, the former vice president is riding momentum from his win in South Carolina on Saturday and benefiting from the Democratic establishment's desperation to stop Bernie Sanders from securing an insurmountable delegate lead on Super Tuesday. Former Texas congressman Beto O'Rourke, who dropped out in November, also endorsed Biden in Dallas, a few hours after former Senate majority leader Harry Reid announced his support in Nevada.

In presidential politics, momentum historically is worth more than money. But no one has ever spent the kind of money that Mike Bloomberg has. Today is the first time the former New York mayor's name will appear on the ballot. He skipped the four early states to invest in the 14 states, plus American Samoa, that vote on Super Tuesday. Nearly a third of the delegates to the nominating convention will be awarded, the biggest haul of the year. "I'm in it to win it," Bloomberg said at a Monday event in Virginia, noting that he connected by phone with both Buttigieg and Klobuchar, who he said "behaved themselves well" in the race.

Biden is playing catch-up in his quest to consolidate support among moderates. He's been struggling to raise money – until $10 million poured in over the weekend. He has some of the weakest organizations in the states that vote on Super Tuesday. And his rivals were on the ground in the states that vote today while he was laser-focused on the Palmetto State.

Bloomberg has put about half a billion dollars into building the Death Star of campaigns. He has hired more than 2,400 paid staffers, including 400 at his Manhattan headquarters and 2,000 spread across 43 states and territories, including all that vote today. He has deployed more than 40 staffers in each of 19 states and more than 100 in each of six states. The campaign has opened more than 200 field offices, including more than 100 in the 14 states that vote today.

Three of those offices, and 23 of those full-time staffers, are here in Oklahoma. This state is far from Super Tuesday's biggest prize, but there are 37 delegates up for grabs. For context, the Iowa caucuses awarded 41 delegates. The state offers an interesting window into Bloomberg's strategy and a handy gauge of whether the gusher of investment, when his rivals were focused elsewhere, pays dividends.

After Klobuchar canceled her Tulsa rally, I dropped by Bloomberg's Oklahoma City field office on Monday afternoon. The campaign had advertised online that it was open for volunteers to come work the phone bank. There were four paid staffers in the office but just one volunteer actually making calls. One staffer sat at the front desk to check people in. Another assisted the volunteer as she used a campaign cellphone to work through a list of voters.

Regina Sabatini, the volunteer, turned out to be an amiable Bloomberg superfan. The 55-year-old from Mustang, on the outskirts of town, took the day off work as a project manager for software development so she could urge fellow Oklahomans to back Bloomberg. She also took off parts of last Thursday and Friday to come make calls. And over the weekend, from home, she texted a list of numbers given to her by the campaign. She said she's never volunteered before on a presidential campaign.

“The primary reason is I do feel he can truly beat Trump,” said Sabatini, wearing a Bloomberg campaign T-shirt. “Others talk about getting things done. He can actually get things done. ... I'm just horrified by how things are going with this administration. I truly believe we need to bring back civility to restore our democracy. ... I can sit and complain about it or I can do something about it.” Sabatini emphasized that she will support any Democratic nominee. “Vote blue,” she said, “no matter who.”

Bloomberg has spent at least $3.9 million on TV ads in Oklahoma, which has allowed him to run commercials more than 6,300 times. None of the other candidates spent more than a few hundred thousand dollars in the state. That could ultimately matter more than the fact that the office wasn't full of volunteers making calls, but there's a storied history of self-funders spending millions on television and having little to show for it. Just ask Tom Steyer, the billionaire environmentalist who dropped out of the race on Saturday night after he failed to earn any delegates, despite spending more than $250 million of his own money on his campaign and airing more ads in South Carolina than anyone else.

Sanders defeated Hillary Clinton in the Oklahoma primary four years ago by 10 points, 52 percent to 42 percent, carrying 75 of the state's 77 counties. But no one seems to have a strong sense of what will happen this time in the Sooner State. There's been no high-quality public polling. One local survey two weeks ago put Biden up 1 point over Bloomberg, well within the margin of error. Another poll the week before that had Bloomberg up 6 points, but that was before his bad debate performance in Las Vegas. Both surveys showed Sanders, the independent senator from Vermont, just under the 15 percent threshold required to get delegates. Obviously, the race is fluid. It's unclear where those who have been backing Klobuchar and Buttigieg will go. The senator from Minnesota and the former mayor from South Bend, Ind., both hoped to fare well here.

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Bloomberg has visited Oklahoma three times on his private jet since launching his campaign in November, including a speech in Oklahoma City last week. He unveiled what he calls his Greenwood Initiative during a trip to Tulsa on the eve of Martin Luther King Jr. Day. It's a plan to improve economic opportunities for African Americans. Greenwood was one of the most affluent black communities in the country until it was devastated in the 1921 Tulsa Race Massacre. About 8 percent of Oklahoma's population is black.

Bloomberg also held a roundtable with tribal leaders to solicit input on a Native American policy he subsequently unveiled. He has also secured endorsements from former governor Brad Henry, former Tulsa mayor Kathy Taylor and state Sen. Kevin Matthews, who represents Greenwood.

Bloomberg campaign officials said they've hosted 400 grass-roots events for voters around Oklahoma. They also said that there were more volunteers earlier in the afternoon at the field office in Oklahoma City, as well as Tulsa and Lawton, a rural area in southwestern Oklahoma where national campaigns don't typically invest.

Sanders benefits from a grass-roots army that's hard to buy. When I drove to his Oklahoma City office from Bloomberg's, there was one staffer present but that's because 26 volunteers were out door-knocking. The field organizer showed me the sign-in sheet to prove it. Sanders volunteers were also canvassing Monday afternoon in Tulsa and Norman, home to the University of Oklahoma. Neither Biden nor Elizabeth Warren have field offices in the state.

Jill Biden will drop by an elementary school in Oklahoma City later today to get out the vote for her husband, and actor Danny Glover will speak at a phone bank for Sanders in his field office here. Jane Sanders stumped last Thursday for her husband in Greenwood, the black neighborhood of Tulsa.

Warren was born and raised in Oklahoma, which she mentions

every chance she gets, and she visited here shortly before Christmas. She hung out with her brothers and tried to smooth over tensions with Native Americans who are upset that she spent decades falsely claiming to be one of them. Notably, the pro-Warren super PAC is not spending any money on TV here, a reflection of her prospects.

Today, though, Warren is focused on trying to survive by winning her adopted state of Massachusetts, where she taught law at Harvard and which she represents in the Senate. Sanders held big rallies in the Bay State over the weekend. Warren staying in the race hurts the senator from Vermont far more than anyone else, so he hopes to score a victory over her there.

Super Tuesday states have 10 times the population of earlier-voting states

Nearly 130 million people live in the 14 states with nominating contests on Super Tuesday – more than 10 times as many people who live in the four states with caucuses and primaries before Super Tuesday.

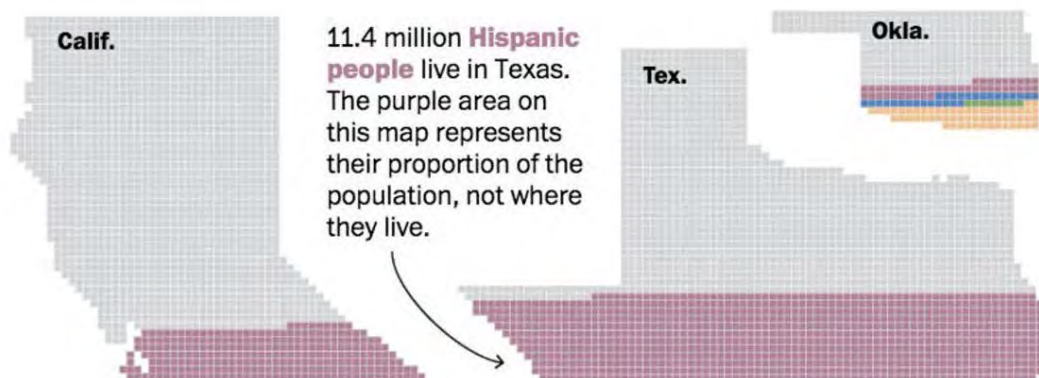

Each square ■ represents 10,000 people.

White non-Hispanic
  Black
  Asian
  Hispanic
  Other

Primaries or caucuses before Super Tuesday

Primaries on Super Tuesday

Super Tuesday states are more diverse than states that follow

"Other" includes Native Americans, people of multiple races and other races. U.S. territories other than Puerto Rico are not included.

Source: American Community Survey

ALYSSA FOWERS/THE WASHINGTON POST

During a town hall in Manassas, Va., that aired last night on Fox News, Bloomberg seemed a little annoyed when asked why he doesn't step aside for Biden. Fox host Martha MacCallum asked him whether he should follow the lead of Buttigieg and Klobuchar if he's as concerned about Sanders as he says. “I haven't even faced the voters once at a national level,” Bloomberg replied.

Fox’s Bret Baier pressed Bloomberg to name states where he might actually win the primary. “Well, keep in mind you don't have to win states, you have to win delegates,” Bloomberg replied. “The most likely scenario for the Democratic Party is that nobody has a majority, and then it goes to a convention, where there's horse-trading and everybody decides to compromise. It doesn't even have to be one of the two leading candidates.”

“The Sanders people would say they're trying to steal it,” Baier noted.

“Look, if the rules say that you can swap votes or make deals, then you can swap votes and make deals,” countered Bloomberg. “And if you don't like those rules, don't play.”

Bloomberg will spend tonight in Florida, which votes in two weeks, to signal that he plans to stick around no matter what happens tonight. He has events scheduled later this week in Michigan, which votes next Tuesday, and Pennsylvania, whose primary isn't until April 28.

Biden attacked Bloomberg during an interview last night on CNN. “He’s not a Democrat,” the former vice president told Anderson Cooper. “You can spend a billion dollars, but you can’t move away from what your record is.” Bloomberg was elected mayor of New York as a Republican and independent but never a Democrat. Asked about these criticisms on Fox, Bloomberg replied that he’s “in sync” with Democrats on taxes, climate change, and gun control. And he highlighted his generous contributions to liberal causes.

On Fox, asked to describe key differences between himself and Biden, Bloomberg touted his executive experience – building a company and leading a city for 12 years – as he argued that being former vice president is not really a managerial job. Mostly, though, Bloomberg focused his attacks on Sanders. “He’s not electable,” the billionaire said of the self-described democratic socialist. He described some of Sanders's ideas as "crazy," though he reiterated that he would vote for Sanders over Trump. "I would not be happy doing it," Bloomberg said. "But I have said I would."

The Sanders campaign seems to anticipate a two-way race with Biden coming out of Super Tuesday. "We are now entering the phase of the primary in which the differences between Bernie and Biden will take center stage," Sanders manager Faiz Shakir and senior adviser Jeff Weaver write in a new memo to surrogates and staff. "These differences make clear that the choice between these two candidates is stark — it is a choice between the party's core economic and social justice agenda, and the Washington establishment's agenda that aims to protect and enrich the wealthy and well-connected. The differences also spotlight how Bernie's agenda is a far more popular general election agenda than Biden."

Biden also seems to be itching to go mano a mano with Sanders. "The country is hungry — hungry, hungry, hungry — to be united," he said in Houston on Monday. "Most Americans ... don't want a promise of a revolution. They want a guarantee of results."

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost's essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

---

More from the states

Many Super Tuesday voters who already cast their ballots want a do-over. In California, Buttigieg’s exit “sparked some brief interest on social media about the rules governing a possible revote. ... The answer, in a word: no,” the Los Angeles Times reports. “There’s no provision in California election law for a second chance once a ballot has been mailed or cast in person at a polling place or regional vote center. ... There are no firm numbers on how many of California’s 20.7 million registered voters have already weighed in. Paul Mitchell, whose for-profit campaign research firm, Political Data Inc., tracks ballots as they are returned, said about 20% of all mailed ballots had been received by local elections officials as of Friday. But he said that underestimates how much of the race is already over, as millions of ballots that were mailed out won’t be returned. ‘Our data suggests 40% of those who will participate have already voted,’ Mitchell said.”

In Colorado, the procrastinators have the greatest shot at making a difference. “Colorado is switching back to a presidential primary system this year after several cycles of caucuses. As of mid-afternoon Monday, about 1.2 million ballots had been returned, and Democratic ballots overtook Republican ballots,” the Denver Post reports. “The total number of returned ballots nearly matched the total votes cast during the entirety of the 2018 primaries, when both parties had competitive statewide races. The slower pace for Democratic ballots this time signaled a likely avalanche of Democratic ballots coming late Monday and Tuesday, election watchers said. ... If the race is close here, it may take a day or two to learn if Sanders has held Warren, Biden and Bloomberg at bay.”

In Minnesota, tens of thousands of people have already probably cast ballots for Klobuchar. “Secretary of State Steve Simon released the final pre-election batch of early voting numbers on Friday, showing 94,287 people had requested early ballots,” the Star Tribune reports. “Simon said he’s been warning voters that the presidential primary isn’t like any other election. ‘I’ve been saying everywhere I go around the state, keep in mind, this kind of contest is different from an August primary election because candidates routinely drop out,’ he said.”

In North Carolina, 800,000 voters – mostly Democrats – voted early. “North Carolina allowed [recasts] for four years in the ’70s,” Wake County Board of Elections member Gerry Cohen told the News & Observer. “It was a nightmare for election officials.”

In Virginia, Biden is counting on suburban and African American voters to forge a coalition that can keep his momentum going. “Many of the state’s top Democrats have endorsed him, including top African American officials,” the Associated Press reports. “Bloomberg has been a regular visitor to Virginia and launched his race here. He’s spent millions of dollars helping elect Democrats in Virginia and spent lavishly on campaign staff and advertising. Sanders doesn’t need to win Virginia to have a good day ... A surprise showing in Virginia [for Warren] could be a much-needed boost.”

In Maine, Sanders rolled out endorsements from several local liberal leaders. Still, Warren has the most endorsements from state-level officials, the Bangor Daily News reports.

In Utah, Sanders spoke to a crowd of about 5,800 as he hopes for a repeat of his 2016 success. He has outraised Trump in the Beehive State, $728,000 to $463,000, the Salt Lake Tribune reports.

In Alabama, most of the focus is on the Republican Senate primary. Polling of the Democratic primary in the state has been almost nonexistent. Most attention is instead on the fight between seven Republicans to take on Sen. Doug Jones (D). Former attorney general Jeff Sessions, Rep. Bradley Byrne and former Auburn head football coach Tommy Tuberville appear most likely to make it to a runoff, the Montgomery Advertiser reports.

In Texas, Reps. Kay Granger (R) and Henry Cuellar (D) excel at securing federal funding for their districts, but they're struggling to beat back strong primary challenges from the insurgent wings of their parties. "Cuellar and Granger, both powerful players on Capitol Hill, are the Texas incumbents most at risk of losing reelection on Tuesday, in what will be the first primary contest for members of Congress anywhere in the United States," the Texas Tribune reports. "Whether these districts' voters opt to keep them in office or throw out their seniority, favoring ideological purity over congressional clout, will have sweeping consequences for Texans across the state."

In New York, Ivanka Trump changed her voter registration from Democrat to Republican so she could vote for her dad in the state's April primary. In 2016, the president's daughter missed the deadline to do so and couldn't vote for her dad. Her "transformation from a New York socialite who donated to Democratic politicians and vocally supported gay rights to a card-carrying member of her father's 'Make America Great Again' coalition is now complete," the New York Times reports. "Online, her persona has also become more aggressive and raw, a reflection of her own anger, aides said, over her father's impeachment. ... Ms. Trump declined to say which Democrat she would like to see face off against Mr. Trump in a general election. ... But, Ms. Trump said, she felt 'good about our chances of beating all of them.'"

Like clockwork, Senate Republicans are preparing their

first subpoena to Burisma, a Ukrainian oil and gas firm.

“Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) is preparing to subpoena a witness tied to Ukrainian natural gas company Burisma, in an escalation of the GOP probe of the firm,” Felicia Sonmez and Paul Kane report. “Johnson, the chairman of the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, sent a letter Sunday to members of the panel informing them of his plan to force a vote on subpoenaing the witness, political consultant and former Ukrainian diplomat Andrii Telizhenko, who worked for a company called Blue Star Strategies that was a representative for Burisma in the United States. Hunter Biden, Joe Biden’s son, sat on the board of Burisma while his father was the Obama administration’s point person on Ukraine policy. Trump and Republicans have claimed, without evidence, that there was something nefarious in the Bidens’ dealings with Ukraine. ...

“Two other GOP senators — Charles E. Grassley (Iowa) and Lindsey O. Graham (S.C.) — have also launched investigations into Hunter Biden. In an interview Monday night, Johnson denied that Biden’s win [in South Carolina] sparked his subpoena request, noting that ‘we’d still be asking for the same information’ regardless of Biden’s status as a Democratic presidential candidate. ... Last Monday, Johnson sent a letter to Sen. Gary Peters (Mich.), the top Democrat on the panel, advising him of his intent to issue the subpoena. Three days later, Peters wrote back to Johnson voicing his objections ... Johnson argued that the news of the planned subpoena would not have been made public on Monday had Peters not objected to his proposal.”

---

Quote of the day

“Look, we are taking on the establishment. And I fully understand — no great surprise to me — that establishment politicians are not going to endorse us,” Sanders told reporters in Salt Lake City. “The establishment will rally around the establishment candidate. That’s the simple reality.”

Share The Daily 202:

Listen to the podcast:

An advertisement featuring a photograph of a woman smiling and holding a young child. Overlaid on the image is the text "BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM" in large, bold, white letters. In the bottom left corner, the BlueCross BlueShield Association logo is displayed. In the bottom right corner, there is a blue button with the text "PASS THE MOMNIBUS" and a right-pointing arrow. Below the advertisement, it says "Powered by LiveIntent" with the LiveIntent logo and a small play button icon.

The new world order

A grocery store is out of hand sanitizer and face masks in Kirkland, Wash., the center of the nation's most serious coronavirus outbreak. (Jovelle Tamayo for The Washington Post)

The Fed is making emergency moves.

“The Federal Reserve slashed the benchmark U.S. interest rate by half a percentage point Tuesday, the biggest cut since the financial crisis and a sign that global central banks are prepared to act to contain the economic fallout from the coronavirus,” Heather Long reports. “The U.S. central bank has not made an emergency cut like this since 2008. Fed leaders voted unanimously in favor of the rate reduction. The highly unusual move comes on the heels of other central banks around the world lowering rates and calls by President Trump for a ‘big’ Fed rate cut. ‘The coronavirus poses evolving risks to economic activity. In light of these risks and in support of achieving its maximum employment and price stability goals, the [Fed] decided today to lower the target range for the federal funds rate by 1/2 percentage point,’ the Fed wrote in a statement. The move would reduce the current interest rate to just below 1.25 percent, down from 1.75 percent.”

The coronavirus has claimed six American lives. Patients are being treated in at least 15 states.

“Four deaths announced Monday and two others this weekend all occurred in Washington state, the center of the nation’s most serious outbreak,” Maria Sacchetti, Arelis Hernández, Siobhán O’Grady and William Wan report. “Nationwide, the number of cases topped 100, and U.S. officials used increasingly dire language, even as they sought to push back against waves of panic and misinformation online. ‘We know there will be more cases,’ Vice President Pence said at a White House news conference. ‘Now we’re focused on mitigation of the spread as well as treatment of people that are affected.’ Trump administration officials stressed Monday that the risk posed to the public by the coronavirus remains low but cautioned the outbreak could change course as the disease spreads through person-to-person contact.

“Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, Texas, Utah, Wisconsin and Washington state either have cases confirmed by health officials or have been treating patients with coronavirus-like symptoms. ... [Lawmakers on Capitol Hill] were closing in Monday on a $7.5 billion coronavirus package ... The legislation is likely to be unveiled on Tuesday and pass the House later this week before moving on to the Senate.

“At a meeting with leaders of the world’s largest pharmaceutical companies, [Trump] hinted he may enact new travel restrictions on unnamed nations with large outbreaks and touted his administration’s steps to fight the virus. The president listened and occasionally interjected to press pharmaceutical executives on how quickly a vaccine and treatments could be developed. Therapeutic human trials could begin as early as April, but a vaccine would take roughly 12 to 18 months to develop, said Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. ...

“In Texas, San Antonio lambasted the [CDC] after the agency

released a woman who later was found to have the novel coronavirus. The city unsuccessfully sought a temporary restraining order to prevent the release of dozens of people scheduled to leave quarantine in the San Antonio area and demanded another round of tests be performed. San Antonio Mayor Ron Nirenberg noted that the released woman had visited a mall, eaten at the food court and stayed at the Holiday Inn Express near the city's airport. The woman arrived in Texas last month from Wuhan, China, and was part of a 91-person group evacuated from Asia. ... 'We simply cannot have a screw-up like this from our federal partners,' said Nirenberg."

Worsening conditions abroad offered troubling signs for what may lie ahead: "Schools across Japan mostly closed their doors Monday [while] South Korea said it would extend its school closures by two weeks." The E.U.'s internal market commissioner said the virus "has led to about $1.1 billion in losses per month for the European tourism industry since the start of 2020. British Airways is cancelling hundreds of flights, including a dozen between London and New York. An adviser to Iran's supreme leader died after contracting the coronavirus, state media reported Monday. Iraq and Egypt confirmed more cases, many of them linked to Iran. Senegal confirmed its first case, marking the second one found in sub-Saharan Africa."

North Korea is holding at least 7,000 people under quarantine, a South Korean news agency reported. (Min Joo Kim)

India suspended entry to visitors from Italy, Iran, South Korea and Japan. It also suspended the visas of people of any nationality who have visited those four countries, plus China, since Feb. 1. India canceled the visas of Chinese citizens last month. (Joanna Slater)

A Washington state woman said she can't get answers about her husband, who is inside the facility experiencing the possible outbreak. The 73-year-old man was checked into the long-term Kirkland nursing facility that's been linked to four of the nation's six deaths. His wife said she's been unable to contact the hospital or its nursing station about his condition, per Teo Armus.

The number of cases worldwide has increased to about 90,000.

(The Washington Post)

U.S. officials are pressuring airlines to turn over more contact information for passengers.

“Government officials have said they need the data so they can warn local authorities about who might have been exposed to the virus,” Jeff Stein, Lena Sun, Lori Aratani report. “But the airline industry has balked, saying the federal government should instead share information it already collects among different agencies and come up with a system for obtaining the rest.”

Medical bill worries and fears of lost pay may hamper efforts to slow the spread.

“As the test for the virus becomes more widely available, health-care experts predict that some people with flu-like illnesses — or those who may have been exposed — will avoid finding out whether they have been infected because they are uninsured or have health plans that saddle them with much of the cost of their care,” Amy Goldstein reports. “The government has not yet begun to tell Americans where to go for testing, and neither public nor private insurers are changing their rules to buffer people from testing-related charges. Some preparations recommended by the [CDC] are incompatible with the way benefits work. Officials have urged people to keep an adequate supply of their routine medicines in case they end up quarantined. But insurance companies seldom permit refills until a patient is nearly out of pills. The agency also urges people with respiratory illnesses to stay home from work. But with no federal sick leave requirements, some experts predict the virus will spread more rapidly.”

Our colleagues Angela Fritz and Reis Thebault have launched a special newsletter focused on the coronavirus. (You can subscribe here.)

FEMA is preparing for a possible emergency declaration.

“FEMA officials are preparing for an ‘infectious disease emergency declaration’ by the president that would allow the agency to provide disaster relief funding to state and local governments, as well as federal assistance to support the coronavirus response,” per NBC News.

Congressional leaders are preparing for the virus to infect the Capitol.

Speaker Nancy Pelosi invited her fellow congressional leaders to a briefing to discuss a plan for congressional operations should the virus threaten Washington, Fox News reports. There have already been conversations among congressional staffers about potentially mandating that only “essential staff” come to work.

The Defense Intelligence Agency directed all employees not to travel.

“The DIA is the first known government agency to ban travel domestically in the face of the global outbreak, raising questions about whether other federal offices will issue the same guidance,” the Daily Beast reports.

At least the Pope is okay.

Pope Francis, who has been unwell in recent days, tested negative for the coronavirus. The pope had a cough and fever after spending most of last Wednesday outdoors in St. Peter's Square. His doctors immediately swabbed him to conduct tests, showing that his symptoms were "a slight indisposition," a Rome newspaper reported. (Armus)

In response to the virus, the NBA told players to avoid high-fiving fans or strangers and avoid taking items for autographs, the AP reported.

In Israel, Netanyahu scored a comeback in the latest election but fell short of a majority.

"The poll results put [Prime Minister Benjamin] Netanyahu's right-wing bloc two seats shy of achieving that governing majority in the 120-seat parliament, or Knesset, and breaking a year-long impasse in Israeli politics. Official results being tabulated overnight could hand his coalition an outright victory — or leave it even further out of reach," Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash report. "With Israelis voting in national elections for the third time in less than year, the unexpectedly strong performance was a victory for Netanyahu, who had failed to wrest a governing majority in the past two votes and was indicted in November on charges of bribery, fraud and abuse of trust. His corruption trial is scheduled to start later this month. ... The exit poll results came as a jarring disappointment to Netanyahu's main rival, Benny Gantz, a ramrod-straight former military chief who presented himself as the ethical antithesis of Netanyahu. While Gantz's performance as a political newcomer produced solid results in the first two elections, he seems to have fallen short Monday. Gantz was defiant early Tuesday, telling supporters that he would fight on. ...

"Turnout outpaced the previous two elections, a surprise for many political observers who had predicted voters would stay away because of spiking coronavirus fears and electoral exhaustion. The final tally put turnout at 71 percent, the highest since 2015. Hundreds of voters who are in precautionary quarantine because of possible exposure to coronavirus donned masks and gloves and went to more than a dozen special biohazard voting places staffed by paramedics. The fears of infectious disease had been only the latest worry for an electorate anxious from nonstop politicking, adding hand-washing to the hand-wringing.”

The Trump administration ordered four Chinese news outlets in the U.S. to reduce their staffs.

Xinhua News Agency and the China Global Television Network, the parent company of the China Daily and China Radio International, were asked to “reduce the number of Chinese nationals working on their staffs by more than a third,” Carol Morello reports. The action comes after China expelled three Beijing-based Wall Street Journal reporters, condemning as “racist” an essay that ran in the newspaper’s opinion section criticizing China’s response to the coronavirus outbreak. “In announcing the move, senior administration officials cited the disappearance of citizen journalists chronicling the outbreak of the coronavirus in Wuhan.”

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be overlooked

Tornadoes in Nashville killed at least nine.

“Tornadoes ripped through central Tennessee early Tuesday, killing at least nine people, demolishing homes and businesses, causing multiple injuries and leaving tens of thousands of residents without power,” Timothy Bella, Kim Bellware and Andrew Freedman report. “The tornado touched down northwest of Nashville shortly before 12:40 a.m. Eastern time, the National Weather Service said. Damage was reported along a path that ended about 10 miles east of the city, in Hermitage, Tenn., according to the Associated Press. ... At least 20 people have been hospitalized ... Thirty-first responders have been injured, according to the fire department.”

Chris Matthews is out at MSNBC.

The long-running host of “Hardball” announced he’s retiring, an abrupt exit prompted by a series of recent gaffes and controversies. The 74-year-old made the surprise announcement at the top of his weeknight program. “He appeared for about two minutes at the start of his 7 p.m. program and effectively signed off on his television career,” Paul Farhi reports. “He thanked viewers and added, ‘The younger generations ... are improving the workplace, we’re talking here about better standards than we grew up with, fair standards. A lot of it has to do with how we talk to each other, compliments on a woman’s appearance that some men — including me — might have once incorrectly thought were okay were never okay. Not then and certainly not today, and for making such comments in the past, I’m sorry.’ ... The network immediately went to a commercial break. When the show resumed, political correspondent Steve Kornacki had taken Matthews’s seat. ... MSNBC has not announced Matthews’s replacement, which suggests his resignation was as sudden and unexpected as it appeared to viewers. A series of interim hosts will fill in for him ...

“His departure capped a week of embarrassments. Matthews apologized last week for comparing [Sanders’s] victory in the Nevada Democratic caucuses to the Nazi invasion of France. He also was criticized for a skeptical interview with [Warren] last week. Matthews asked Warren why she believes a female employee who sued [Bloomberg] accusing him of telling her to 'kill' her unborn child. Bloomberg denied making the statement, and Matthews asked Warren, 'You believe he's lying? Why would he lie?' ... Warren replied: 'Why shouldn't I believe her?' ... And on Saturday, journalist Laura Bassett wrote on GQ.com that Matthews made inappropriate comments to her and other women when they were guests on his show."

Trump's post-impeachment retaliation tour continues.

The White House yanked the nomination of a Pentagon official who raised questions about withholding military aid for Ukraine. "In a statement, the White House said it had withdrawn the nomination of Elaine McCusker as Pentagon comptroller, a position she has held on an acting basis," Missy Ryan reports. "It follows the departure last month of John Rood, a top policy official who likewise was a leading figure in the Pentagon's response to the delay of security aid to Ukraine ... Emails made public in recent months show that McCusker voiced concerns to White House budget officials last year about the delay in delivering congressional approved aid to Ukraine."

Sen. Jack Reed (R.I.), the top Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, called McCusker "another casualty of the Trump Administration's efforts to purge public servants who put country before fealty to the President."

Another big piece of Warren's legacy is on the line today.

The Supreme Court will hear oral arguments in a challenge to the constitutionality of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, the brainchild of Warren. The case could determine whether a president can fire the director of the agency "at will," and the ruling could shape the future of the 1,600-person bureau, as well as "throw into question the legitimacy of the billions of dollars in fines it has imposed on mortgage lenders, credit card companies and banks over the past eight years,"

Renaë Merle reports. “At the center of the fight is Richard Cordray, the bureau’s former director, who had long been a target of Republicans frustrated by the agency’s power, including the limits on the president’s ability to fire him. ... The court will be hearing the case of a California law firm, Seila Law, which has refused to cooperate with a CFPB investigation, arguing that the bureau’s leadership structure is unconstitutional. ...

"A 2007 paper by Warren, written when she was a Harvard law professor, was the guiding force behind what became the CFPB in the wake of a global financial crisis. But the bureau was controversial from the start ...

“Among justices deciding the bureau’s fate is Brett M. Kavanaugh, who while on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit said in a different case that the bureau’s structure was unconstitutional. Independent agencies such as the CFPB constitute ‘a headless fourth branch of the U.S. Government. They hold enormous power over the economic and social life of the United States,’ he wrote in a 73-page dissent. Kavanaugh is not obligated to recuse himself in the Seila case.”

The Supreme Court appears split over judicial review for asylum seekers facing quick removal.

“During [oral arguments on Monday], conservative justices were concerned over what a government lawyer said would be a ‘flood’ of such requests, frustrating Congress’s intention of subjecting those found quickly after crossing the border to expedited removal if their claims were unwarranted,” Robert Barnes reports. “The court’s liberals seemed worried about giving such power to administration officials without some check on whether they are following the rules.”

---

Social media speed read

Trump reacted to moderates consolidating behind Biden:

Rep. Abigail Spanberger, one of three freshman congresswomen who flipped red seats blue in Virginia in 2018, said she chose Klobuchar. The former CIA officer planned to keep her absentee ballot vote to herself, but she revealed her choice a few hours after Klobuchar dropped out. The other two Virginia freshmen, Elaine Luria and Jennifer Wexton, are backing Biden:

Biden and O'Rourke headed to Whataburger after their Dallas rally and met a young supporter:

 Dan Merica
@merica

Sofia, a seven-year old from Broken Bow, Oklahoma, asked Joe Biden and Beto O'Rourke for autographs at Whataburger on Monday night. They both wrote her notes.

Biden: "You are a lovely, bright young lady."

O'Rourke: "I am expecting great things from you."

 834  4:59 AM - Mar 3, 2020

 286 people are talking about this

Trump admitted that he wants to get on Democrats' nerves:

 Seung Min Kim
@seungminkim

Noting how he had traveled to the four early states to hold rallies just as Democrats were voting, Trump notes: "We like to troll."

 693  12:49 AM - Mar 3, 2020

 215 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Seth Meyers went after Trump for saying the coronavirus is a Democratic hoax:

Stephen Colbert explained how Biden's South Carolina win changed the Democratic race:

Trevor Noah pictured what Biden debating Trump would look like:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 3 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 3, 2020 11:36:49 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 3, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PUBLIC LANDS:

Coal leasing sputters despite Trump's promises

The Trump administration frequently claims it ended the "war on coal." But the numbers tell a different story: Since former Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke officially halted President Obama's leasing pause, national coal production has fallen and so has demand for new coal.

TOP STORIES

2. AGRICULTURE:

'Climatic events': How farm groups skirt global warming

3. SUPREME COURT:

Fight over financial oversight places FERC in the crosshairs

4. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Spotlight turns to states as critics slam feds' salmon plan

POLITICS

5. PEOPLE:

Former EPA deputy, Hill aide joins Koch-backed group

CONGRESS

6. NOMINATIONS:

Democrats grumble as committee approves GOP FERC pick

NATURAL RESOURCES

7. LAW ENFORCEMENT:

Texas farmer pays the price for poisoning bald eagle

8. WILDLIFE:

E.U. warns of biodiversity loss

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Super Tuesday tornadoes shred buildings, kill 22 in Tenn.

10. FISHERIES:

NOAA says anglers must take fewer overfished bluefish

LAW

---

11. COAL:

Court scraps Colo. roadless exception — again

12. WILDFIRES:

PG&E says it can't commit to expanding tree-trimming force

AIR AND WATER

---

13. CHEMICALS:

DOD burns toxic foam, worrying nearby communities

14. AIR POLLUTION:

Emissions offer 'pandemic' level health problems — study

STATES

---

15. FLORIDA:

NOAA increases reward for info on slain dolphins to $54,000

16. INDIANA:

Senate panel alters bill that would slow coal plant closures

17. VIRGINIA:

Lawmakers split over bill banning foam to-go containers

18. CONNECTICUT:

Researchers ask for help in finding bobcat tracking collars

INTERNATIONAL

---

19. BRAZIL:

Torrential rains kill 12 on coast; dozens missing

20. INDONESIA:

Nation's most active volcano erupts, spews ash into sky

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

---

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 3 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 3, 2020 11:39:21 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 3, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PUBLIC LANDS:

Coal leasing sputters despite Trump's promises

The Trump administration frequently claims it ended the "war on coal." But the numbers tell a different story: Since former Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke officially halted President Obama's leasing pause, national coal production has fallen and so has demand for new coal.

TOP STORIES

2. AGRICULTURE:

'Climatic events': How farm groups skirt global warming

3. SUPREME COURT:

Fight over financial oversight places FERC in the crosshairs

4. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Spotlight turns to states as critics slam feds' salmon plan

POLITICS

5. PEOPLE:

Former EPA deputy, Hill aide joins Koch-backed group

CONGRESS

6. NOMINATIONS:

Democrats grumble as committee approves GOP FERC pick

NATURAL RESOURCES

7. LAW ENFORCEMENT:

Texas farmer pays the price for poisoning bald eagle

8. WILDLIFE:

E.U. warns of biodiversity loss

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Super Tuesday tornadoes shred buildings, kill 22 in Tenn.

10. FISHERIES:

NOAA says anglers must take fewer overfished bluefish

LAW

---

11. COAL:

Court scraps Colo. roadless exception — again

12. WILDFIRES:

PG&E says it can't commit to expanding tree-trimming force

AIR AND WATER

---

13. CHEMICALS:

DOD burns toxic foam, worrying nearby communities

14. AIR POLLUTION:

Emissions offer 'pandemic' level health problems — study

STATES

---

15. FLORIDA:

NOAA increases reward for info on slain dolphins to $54,000

16. INDIANA:

Senate panel alters bill that would slow coal plant closures

17. VIRGINIA:

Lawmakers split over bill banning foam to-go containers

18. CONNECTICUT:

Researchers ask for help in finding bobcat tracking collars

INTERNATIONAL

---

19. BRAZIL:

Torrential rains kill 12 on coast; dozens missing

20. INDONESIA:

Nation's most active volcano erupts, spews ash into sky

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

---

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 3 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 3, 2020 11:40:55 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 3, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PUBLIC LANDS:

Coal leasing sputters despite Trump's promises

The Trump administration frequently claims it ended the "war on coal." But the numbers tell a different story: Since former Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke officially halted President Obama's leasing pause, national coal production has fallen and so has demand for new coal.

TOP STORIES

---

2. AGRICULTURE:

'Climatic events': How farm groups skirt global warming

3. SUPREME COURT:

Fight over financial oversight places FERC in the crosshairs

4. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Spotlight turns to states as critics slam feds' salmon plan

POLITICS

---

5. PEOPLE:

Former EPA deputy, Hill aide joins Koch-backed group

CONGRESS

---

6. NOMINATIONS:

Democrats grumble as committee approves GOP FERC pick

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

7. LAW ENFORCEMENT:

Texas farmer pays the price for poisoning bald eagle

8. WILDLIFE:

E.U. warns of biodiversity loss

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Super Tuesday tornadoes shred buildings, kill 22 in Tenn.

10. FISHERIES:

NOAA says anglers must take fewer overfished bluefish

LAW

---

11. COAL:

Court scraps Colo. roadless exception — again

12. WILDFIRES:

PG&E says it can't commit to expanding tree-trimming force

AIR AND WATER

---

13. CHEMICALS:

DOD burns toxic foam, worrying nearby communities

14. AIR POLLUTION:

Emissions offer 'pandemic' level health problems — study

STATES

---

15. FLORIDA:

NOAA increases reward for info on slain dolphins to $54,000

16. INDIANA:

Senate panel alters bill that would slow coal plant closures

17. VIRGINIA:

Lawmakers split over bill banning foam to-go containers

18. CONNECTICUT:

Researchers ask for help in finding bobcat tracking collars

INTERNATIONAL

---

19. BRAZIL:

Torrential rains kill 12 on coast; dozens missing

20. INDONESIA:

Nation's most active volcano erupts, spews ash into sky

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

---

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Your guide to Super Tuesday and the next 24 hours
Date: Tuesday, March 3, 2020 12:17:09 PM

---

The Washington Post

Democracy Dies in Darkness

Your guide to Super Tuesday

Voters in 14 states and American Samoa will cast ballots in Democratic primaries today.

Exactly 1,357 delegates are up for grabs, and it could be a make-or-break moment for a few candidates. Here's what you need to know.

WHO'S VOTING?

Primaries are being held in delegate-rich California (415 delegates), Texas (228), North Carolina (110), Virginia (99), Massachusetts (91), and nine other states. Click here to see the full list.

WHEN DO THE POLLS CLOSE?

The first ones close at 7 p.m. EST.

WHERE TO FIND RESULTS:

Click the results page now. Bookmark it. Come back tonight. Refresh it.

We created an election data team dedicated to bringing you complete results continuously with data from three sources so you'll always be in the know.

WATCH OUR LIVE SHOW AT 7 p.m. EST

Take a break from the cable pundits and watch the results roll in with The Post's political reporters. The show launches on our homepage at 7. Our election data team will present results when they become available.

TODAY IS IMPORTANT, BUT THE RACE IS FAR FROM OVER

Democratic candidates need 1,991 delegates to win the party's nomination. Today's primaries won't get anyone over that threshold, but it could help determine who has a chance and who drops out. Here's where things stand right now.

WHAT IF YOUR CANDIDATE DROPS OUT?

Take this quiz to see which of the remaining candidates agrees with you most.

If you've already taken the quiz, watch this video to see how people reacted when they got their results.

More Super Tuesday coverage:

 Get alerts when there's a major development. Enable politics alerts in The Washington Post app. If you don't already have the app, download it now.

 Listen to voters talk about the issues that matter to them. "Post Reports" interviews people in every Super Tuesday state for a completely enlightening but unscientific survey.

 Visit Post Opinions for insights by columnists.

© 2020 The Washington Post
1301 K Street NW, Washington, DC, 20071

We respect your privacy. You received this email because you are a subscriber of The Washington Post and we wanted to recommend a new feature of our website that may be of interest to you. If you do not want to receive these emails from The Washington Post, click here. Contact us for help.

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden forged a Super Tuesday coalition that could win the Democratic nomination – and presidency
Date: Wednesday, March 4, 2020 7:44:52 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Joe Biden forged a Super Tuesday coalition that could win the Democratic nomination – and presidency

With a victory in Texas giving him a sweep of the South, plus the exclamation marks from winning outright in Massachusetts and Minnesota, Joe Biden is suddenly the front-runner again for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Bernie Sanders leads in California, the biggest prize of Super Tuesday, which will keep the delegate count tight and probably ensures the contest drags on for a few more months. The independent senator carried his home state of Vermont, as well as Colorado and Utah. But Sanders crashed into a brick wall down South, just as he did four years ago against Hillary Clinton, despite his efforts to court African Americans.

Biden won Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas, Alabama and Oklahoma by double digits. Maine, which the Sanders camp expected to carry, remains too close to call. Sanders won the Pine Tree State decisively in 2016.

“We increased turnout,” Biden told supporters in Los Angeles. “The turnout turned out for us!”

Joe Biden takes the stage at his victory party at Baldwin Hills Recreation Center in Los Angeles. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Turnout grew not because of Biden’s ground game, which was essentially nonexistent in the 14 states and one U.S. territory that voted on Tuesday. In fact, he won big in several places where he spent little time and made no real investment in a field program.

Momentum mattered more than money. After spending more than half a billion dollars of his personal fortune, former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg's only win came in American Samoa, where Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) also got a delegate.

Turnout also did not appear to grow because of a surge in young voters that Sanders keeps promising will materialize any time now. Exit polls show about 1 in 8 voters in Super Tuesday states were 18- to 29-year-olds, compared to 3 in 10 who were 65 or older. Sanders struggles with these older voters.

Instead, turnout appears to have spiked from 2016 to 2020 in key general election battlegrounds because antipathy toward President Trump continues to galvanize suburban moderates to get engaged in Democratic politics. A Washington Post statistical model suggests Biden won nearly 60 percent of voters who sat out the 2016 primary but cast ballots on Tuesday. Our turnout analysis, conducted by in-house data scientist Lenny Bronner, also shows that Biden possibly received nearly 90 percent of Clinton's 2016 voters.

Biden romped in the suburbs, excelling with the constituencies that fueled the Democratic takeover of the House in 2018. In addition to his stalwart base of African American voters, the foundation of his wins across the South, Biden fared well with white voters in suburbs from Richmond and Raleigh, N.C., to Houston and Hampton Roads, as well as Nashville and Minneapolis.

Bernie Sanders watches Super Tuesday results in a holding area before his speech in Essex Junction, Vt. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Exit polls show that many decided to back the former vice president in the days after his South Carolina landslide. These voters think he's the most electable choice to take back the White House and that beating Trump is more important to them than agreeing with a candidate on the issues. It also helped Biden that the field winnowed, and he received endorsements on Monday from former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.).

Biden credited his win in Minnesota, where Sanders invested heavily and held a massive rally on Monday night, to Klobuchar. Exit polls there showed 6 in 10 voters decided whom to vote for in the past few days. Biden won about half that group.

Consider Virginia as a window into why turnout grew. In 2016, 785,000 people participated in the Democratic primary. On Tuesday, about 1.3 million people did. This broke the turnout record set in the 2008 primary that pitted Clinton against Barack Obama. About a quarter of Virginia primary voters were African American, and roughly 6 in 10 chose Biden, according to the exit polls. But Biden also won 6 in 10 white voters older than 45. While Sanders won 3 to 1 among all younger voters, Biden still won the primary in Virginia by 30 points.

“The precincts that saw the biggest increases were largely clustered in Northern Virginia and the Hampton Roads metropolitan area,” Greg Schneider reports from Richmond. “In Henrico, Kate Giska, 39, a small-business owner and political independent, described Sanders as ‘just too extreme, just like Trump is a little too extreme. We’re kind of, like, in the middle, just, like, status quo, just get along.’ She voted for Biden, someone she thinks has appeal for ‘the middle voter, a candidate that can attract the masses.’ None of more than 50 voters interviewed at three Virginia Beach precincts on Tuesday said they planned to vote for Sanders, even if they liked some of his positions. Many said they simply thought Biden had a better chance of winning in November.”

Biden won from coast to coast among those who identify as “somewhat liberal.” He dominated among conservative and moderate primary voters across most of the 14 states that voted, with the exceptions of Colorado and Vermont. But he also fared very well among the large share of voters who self-identify as “somewhat liberal.” Biden won that group by a roughly 2 to 1 margin over Sanders in Alabama, Virginia and North Carolina. Those latter two states will both be battlegrounds this fall.

Sanders’s coalition is built around liberals and Latinos. One reason he’s widely expected to win California, although the race has not been called with 81 percent of precincts reporting, is that two-thirds of voters described themselves as liberal in the exit polling, and this group voted more than 2 to 1 for Sanders.

Hispanic voters also showed a strong preference for Sanders in the states where they made up the largest shares of the Democratic electorate. About 3 in 10 voters in Texas identified themselves as Hispanic, and just under half of them voted for Sanders. Biden got about 1 in 4 Hispanic votes in the Lone Star State. The share of Hispanic voters was slightly smaller in California, but Sanders won the group by a larger margin, capturing a majority. Biden got about 1 in 5 Latinos in the Golden State, giving Sanders a margin of about 30 percentage points, according to the exits.

Elsewhere, though, Biden made inroads with non-college-educated whites who backed Sanders four years ago. Exit polls suggested Biden had a greater than 2 to 1 lead among white voters in Alabama, and nearly as wide an edge in Virginia. Biden had a smaller but still visible lead among white voters in Minnesota and Oklahoma and a smaller edge in Tennessee, North Carolina and Massachusetts. In Maine and Texas, Biden and Sanders were neck and neck among white voters. And Sanders led among white voters in Vermont, Colorado and California.

Elizabeth Warren's humiliating third-place finish in Massachusetts, a state she's represented in the Senate for eight years, makes continuing her campaign increasingly difficult to rationalize. Warren also finished fourth in her native Oklahoma, with 13.4 percent, under the 15 percent threshold required to win any delegates, although not all the precincts have reported. Speaking early Tuesday evening in Detroit as polls remained open in several states, Warren pledged to forge ahead and seemed to plead with late deciders not to keep breaking for Biden. "What I see happening is a lot of folks trying to turn voting into some complicated strategy," she said, acting almost as if Super Tuesday hadn't happened. "They are playing games about prediction and strategy. Prediction has been a terrible business.”

After polls closed, Bloomberg campaign manager Kevin Sheekey backed away from his insistence that the former New York mayor would fight on until the Democratic convention in Milwaukee. “You make an assessment in any campaign like this after any time there is a vote,” he said. “As of right now we are committing to stay in, but we will see what happens tonight.” Another campaign aide told Michael Scherer that the campaign is regularly reevaluated, and that process would continue Wednesday, when Bloomberg is expected to return to New York from Florida.

Whether Warren and Bloomberg stay in or not, this has effectively become a two-man race, pitting the 77-year-old Biden – first elected to the Senate in 1972 – against the 78-year-old Sanders, who was first elected mayor of Burlington 39 years ago Tuesday and who has been in Congress since 1991. But the ideological contrast between the septuagenarians is stark. Sanders promises revolution. Biden pledges restoration.

Sanders is also struggling in some states he won last time because Biden is a less effective foil for him than Clinton. The self-described democratic socialist benefited four years ago in several red states like Indiana, West Virginia and Montana from being the sole alternative to Clinton. He ran up the score among self-identified conservative Democrats. With the benefit of hindsight, many of these folks were probably voting more against Clinton than they were voting for Sanders. But she’s not on the ballot this time. Biden has higher favorability ratings among conservative Democrats than she did, and there were other alternatives, including Bloomberg.

Consider Oklahoma. Sanders won the primary there four years ago by 10 points. “Clinton won self-identified Democrats by 9 points, according to exit polls. But independents, who were free to cross over, backed Sanders by 48 points,” Dave Weigel notes. “While Sanders ran to Clinton’s left, he beat her among self-identified ‘moderate or conservative’ voters by 11 points. Without Clinton as a foil, the Sanders vote fell apart. ... Sanders badly lost moderate and conservative voters [on Tuesday], losing them to Biden by 28 points. ... Bloomberg won 24 percent of the moderate vote, to just 11 percent for Sanders.”

The fight for the nomination could still drag into the convention in Milwaukee in July, even if Biden continues to consolidate support among moderate voters. Most delegates still have not been awarded, and 32 states still need to vote. Sanders expressed optimism in Vermont last night. “I tell you, with absolute confidence, we’re going to win the Democratic nomination,” he told thousands of supporters.

But, but, but: The calendar is going to get harder for Sanders. “The marquee primary next week will be in Michigan,” Dan Balz explains. “Sanders scored a major upset there four years ago against Clinton, although his victory margin was narrow. Also on the calendar next week is Missouri, a state Sanders lost by less than a percentage point and where the delegates split almost evenly. Missouri will provide another test of Biden’s and Sanders’s support among African Americans, who make up about a fifth of Democratic turnout in that state. Because Washington state has switched from a caucus to a primary, Sanders, though favored, will have a more difficult time piling up the kind of delegate margin he did in 2016. Meanwhile, Mississippi should be fertile ground for Biden, as African Americans made up about 70 percent of the Democratic electorate there in 2016 — even more than in South Carolina.

“The round of primaries on March 17 includes Arizona, Florida, Illinois and Ohio. Sanders lost Florida badly to Clinton and will face serious resistance again this year because of qualms about his left-wing agenda. He also lost Arizona and Ohio decisively. Only Illinois was close, though Sanders was on the losing end there, as well. A week after that, on March 24, Georgia holds a stand-alone primary, and there again, Biden will be favored based on the size of the African American vote.”

For his part, Biden will face growing scrutiny that he’s mostly avoided since stumbling in Iowa. He faced few attacks in the last three debates. His performances on the stump can be uneven. Trying to stay disciplined, he delivered his speech in Los Angeles from a teleprompter. Most of it duplicated what he said on Saturday night in his victory speech in South Carolina. “They don’t call it Super Tuesday for nothing,” he said. “For those who have been knocked down, counted out, left behind, this is your campaign.”

Scott Clement contributed exit poll analysis.

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost’s essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

More from the states

Powered by  LiveIntent

Supporters cheer Jeff Sessions as he reacts to being forced into a runoff on Tuesday night in Mobile, Ala. (Elijah Nouvelage/Reuters)

In Alabama, Jeff Sessions is headed to a March 31 Republican runoff against former Auburn University football coach Tommy Tuberville in his quest to win back his old Senate seat. “Other Republicans, including Rep. Bradley Byrne and former state Supreme Court chief justice Roy Moore, significantly trailed,” Mike DeBonis reports. “Trump has so far remained silent on the race, and Republicans in both Alabama and Washington are speculating whether he might now get involved to block Sessions. ... Meanwhile, in North Carolina, Democrats nominated a centrist favorite of national party leaders to take on GOP Sen. Thom Tillis in what promises to be a much more competitive race.”

Texas Reps. Key Granger (R) and Henry Cuellar (D) both claimed victory over primary challengers. “‘You know, we can keep waiting, but it remains 60-40 so far, so I’ll stay here,’ Granger said Tuesday evening ... Asked if she was declaring victory, she said ‘yes,’” the Texas Tribune reports. Cuellar “was still fighting a primary challenge from attorney Jessica Cisneros ... As of early Wednesday morning, Cuellar garnered 51.6% of the vote to Cisneros’ 48.4%, with incomplete returns. The Cuellar victory is a setback for a massive coalition of Democratic allied groups, ranging from the Justice Democrats to EMILY’s List to the League of Conservation Voters.”

- Pierce Bush, a grandson of George H.W. Bush, didn’t make the runoff in a crowded GOP race to represent Texas’s 22nd District. Early results indicated that he was headed to either a third- or fourth-place finish in a 15-way primary race. (Texas Tribune)
- Former White House physician Ronny Jackson advanced to a Republican runoff for Texas’s 13th District, a comfortably Republican seat. (AP)

Long lines kept some Texans waiting to vote until late into the night. “Dozens of Democratic voters were still waiting to cast ballots at midnight in Houston, turning Super Tuesday into a painful slog for some citizens amid questions about how the County Clerk’s office had allocated its voting machines across the county,” the Houston Chronicle reports. “Some people in line gave up and walked away ... Polls closed at 7 p.m., but voters still can cast ballots as long as they stay in line. ... After waiting four hours to cast his own ballot at TSU, Bryan Escobedo walked outside to a crowd cheering his patience. He spoke of voters sharing painkillers and water to keep their neighbors engaged. ... The nonprofit Texas Civil Rights Project took issue with the delays, noting that many polling places with long waits were in predominantly black and Latino neighborhoods.”

The special election in California to replace Katie Hill, the freshman Democratic congresswoman who resigned after admitting an extramarital affair, will head to a runoff.

“Democratic Assemblywoman Christy Smith of Santa Clarita and Republican defense contractor Mike Garcia were in a tight race ... in one of California’s most competitive congressional districts,” the Los Angeles Times reports. “Former Rep. Steve Knight, the Republican who was ousted in 2018 by Hill, a Democrat, was running third and on the verge of losing his shot at recapturing his seat representing the northern suburbs of Los Angeles. The primary appeared likely to yield two runoffs between Smith and Garcia, a former Navy pilot — one in May to fill Hill’s seat for the rest of the year and another in November for the full two-year term that starts in January. Trailing far behind [was] George Papadopoulos, a 2016 Trump campaign advisor who pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI in the Russia scandal.”

Commentary from the opinion page:

- Dana Milbank: “The Sanders revolution has stalled.”
  - David Byler: “The real winner of Super Tuesday is the Democratic Party itself.”
  - Megan McArdle: “Elizabeth Warren focused on her core voters. There weren’t enough of them.”
  - Jennifer Rubin: “Super Tuesday gave Joe Biden the historic surge he needed.”
-

The new world order

Vice President Pence said any American can get tested for coronavirus if a doctor orders it.

The comments “perplexed some public health officials, as physicians already have discretion to order testing. The announcement also raised questions about whether the government can rapidly accelerate the production of testing kits, as well as how much patients will ultimately have to pay for getting tested,” Seung Min Kim, Maria Sacchetti and Brady Dennis report. “Pence said roughly 2,500 testing kits approved by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention should be distributed by the end of the week, primarily to hospitals in affected areas as well as to others that have requested them. Those kits collectively represent about 1.5 million individual tests. Seema Verma, the administrator for the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, said testing for the coronavirus is covered under Medicare, Medicaid and health-care exchanges established under the Affordable Care Act, but it remained unclear how the costs would be handled for the estimated 27 million Americans who are uninsured.”

Washington state confirmed three additional fatalities, bringing the total to nine: “Overall, the U.S. has reported more than 100 confirmed cases. The previously unreported deaths were former residents of the Life Care Center of Kirkland, a nursing home facility that has emerged as the epicenter of the outbreak in the city northeast of Seattle. ... Meanwhile, North Carolina reported its first coronavirus case Tuesday, bringing the total to 14 states ... New York disclosed on Tuesday its second confirmed case. Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D) described the patient as a 50-year-old man from Westchester County, who had no recent history of foreign travel.”

Trump’s coronavirus effort has been undermined by mixed messages and falsehoods.

“The White House is handling the rapidly expanding coronavirus as a public relations problem as much as a public health crisis. Officials are insisting on message discipline among government scientists and political aides alike, part of what they say is a responsible effort to try to calm jittery Americans and provide uniform and transparent information,” Philip Rucker, Yasmeen Abutaleb and Ashley Parker report. Trump “has privately griped about what he considers to be hysteria from both the media and his own public health officials ... White House aides managing the response have also sought to focus on tamping down what they consider to be alarmist rhetoric. ...

“As Trump toured a laboratory at the National Institutes of Health on Tuesday afternoon, he and [National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Director] Anthony Fauci appeared chummy. The president heaped praise on the infectious-diseases expert, telling him, ‘The world is extremely happy that you’re involved.’ But their bonhomie belied the tensions in an administration where the president tolerates only one star: himself. Public health experts and other government officials have found themselves struggling to manage the delicate balance of performing their jobs while not angering the president or his political aides.”

---

Quote of the day

“You should never destroy your own credibility. And you don’t want to go to war with a president,” Director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Anthony Fauci told Politico. “But you got to walk the fine balance of making sure you continue to tell the truth.”

Across America, the virus has triggered cancellations, closures and contingency planning.

Trump has “said he did not agree with contingency plans being considered for the NCAA’s March Madness basketball tournament, including a proposal to play games in empty arenas,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Heather Kelly, Hannah Natanson and Julie Zauzmer report. “I don’t think it would be necessary,’ [he said]. With the lack of a coordinated national approach, local officials and individual communities are rushing to make their own plans. Some schools are considering closures, some companies have implemented restrictions on travel for employees, and religious organizations are altering how they conduct services.”

In turf warfare, the CDC temporarily blocked a top FDA scientist from its campus.

“Timothy Stenzel, who is the director of the Food and Drug Administration’s Office of In Vitro Diagnostics and Radiological Health, was made to wait overnight on the weekend of Feb. 22 — as senior health department officials negotiated his access in a series of calls — before Centers for Disease Control granted him permission to be on campus. Stenzel’s visit had been expected ... The FDA had dispatched Stenzel to the CDC in an effort to expedite the development of lab tests for the novel coronavirus outbreak,” Politico reported.

The outbreak continues to spread widely in the Middle East, Asia and Europe.

Iran has confirmed 92 deaths and 2,992 cases, while South Korea has 5,238 cases and Italy 2,263. China, which remains the worst-hit nation, announced 38 new deaths. Chile and Argentina reported their first cases yesterday, widening the numbers across Latin America. (Adam Taylor,

Teo Armus and Rick Noack)

The U.S. Travel Association anticipates international inbound travel to the country will drop 6 percent between now and May, the largest dip in global visitation since the financial crisis in 2007 and 2008. "The forecast takes into account factors including hotel bookings, airline data and consumer sentiment data," Hannah Sampson reports.

North Korea's isolation is a possible virus buffer – but also a concern.

"Kim Jong Un's insular world also could face a major crisis if the virus that causes covid-19 finds its way in. An outbreak could overwhelm the feeble health system — ranked 193 out of 195 on the Global Health Security Index — in a country already stalked by malnutrition and diseases such as tuberculosis," Simon Denyer reports.

Doctors in Italy are turning into patients.

"In an effort to cope, Italy is graduating nurses early and calling medical workers out of retirement. Hospitals in the hardest-hit regions are delaying nonessential surgeries and scrambling to add 50 percent more intensive-care beds," Loveday Morris reports.

Trump spoke with a senior Taliban leader by phone.

This was apparently the first direct verbal communication between a U.S. president and the Afghan insurgent force since the Afghanistan war began. Anne Gearan reports: "Trump confirmed the Taliban's announcement Tuesday that he had spoken by phone with Mullah Abdul Ghani Baradar, the Taliban's top political leader. 'I spoke to the leader of the Taliban today. We had a good conversation. We've agreed there's no violence, we don't want violence; we'll see what happens,' Trump told reporters at the White House. 'They're dealing with Afghanistan, but we'll see what happens. We had actually a very good talk.' Baradar is a senior figure representing the insurgent group in talks with the United States in Doha, Qatar. ...

"The phone call is notable for the stature it confers on Baradar. U.S. presidents typically deal directly with other heads of state or government ... In a statement, Baradar welcomed the phone call and said that 'we assure with full confidence that if the U.S. implements the agreement, this will have positive impact on the bilateral relations in future.' ... The Taliban statement quotes Trump as saying the Taliban has been 'fighting for your country' and that the time has come for the United States to leave. The Taliban said Trump also pledged that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo will speak to [Afghan President Ashraf] Ghani 'to remove hurdles in the way of intra-Afghan dialogue.'"

The Pentagon said overnight the U.S. military has conducted an airstrike against Taliban forces in southern Afghanistan, the AP reports: "Spokesman Col Sonny Leggett said in a tweet Wednesday that it was the first U.S. strike against the militant group in 11 days. He said the attack was to counter a Taliban assault on Afghan government forces in Nahr-e Saraj in the Helmand province."

Iran has sharply increased its uranium stockpile since Trump blew up the nuclear accord.

"Inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency reported a near-tripling of Iran's stockpile of low-enriched uranium just since November, with total holdings more than three times the 300-kilogram limit set by the nuclear accord," Joby Warrick reports. "Iran also substantially increased the number of machines it is using to enrich uranium, the agency said, allowing it to make more of the nuclear fuel faster. ... Iran's low-enriched uranium, the kind typically used in nuclear power plants, would have to undergo further processing to be converted into the highly enriched uranium needed for nuclear bombs. Independent analysts said the bigger stockpile and faster enrichment rate has substantially decreased Iran's theoretical 'breakout' time — the span needed for acquiring enough weapons-grade material for a single nuclear bomb."

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be

overlooked

The tornadoes in Tennessee killed at least 24.

“An EF-3 tornado with winds up to 165 mph tore across the Nashville area,” Brandon Gee, Meryl Kornfield and Kim Bellware report. Some of the dead were children. “Dozens more are still missing as of Wednesday morning. The destruction stretched for 50 miles across four counties, and Gov. Bill Lee (R), who surveyed the area via helicopter, said it will take days just to assess the scope of the damage.”

A Louisiana case is the first abortion test for the new Supreme Court.

Since Roe v. Wade in 1973, no state has passed more abortion restrictions than Louisiana. Today, a repopulated and more conservative Supreme Court will consider one of those laws. “Some politicians here wonder if it might be the breakthrough they’ve been waiting for in a decades-long effort to rid the state, and the nation, of abortion,” Robert Barnes reports from the Pelican State. “‘I prayed one day that it would come, but I never thought it would be with this bill,’ said state Sen. Katrina Jackson, a Democrat who calls herself ‘pro-whole life’ and says she has been ‘very aggressive’ in pursuing legislation to impose more restrictions. ... Abortion providers say Jackson’s law would force two of the state’s three abortion clinics to close. It's hard to overstate what a decision about this law — requiring difficult-to-obtain hospital admitting privileges for doctors who perform abortions in clinics — will reveal about this Supreme Court and its jurisprudence on [abortion] ... It will be the first time the two justices selected by President Trump, Neil M. Gorsuch and Brett M. Kavanaugh, confront the merits of an abortion case. It marks a key moment for Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr., who has never voted against an abortion restriction, in his pivotal role at the court's center.”

A new White House questionnaire includes a litmus test for prospective appointees.

“Candidates applying to join [Trump's] administration will now have to explain what part of Trump's campaign message ‘most appealed’ to them and why,” CNN reports. “The new questionnaire, distributed by the White House's Presidential Personnel Office to federal departments on Monday, ... is the latest move by the office's new head John McEntee to emphasize loyalty to the President in the hiring process.”

Speaking of loyalty, John Bolton's book release date was pushed back to May amid Trump's efforts to block publication, per Tom Hamburger.

---

Social media speed read

A former National Security Council spokesman under Obama noted the American people only learned about Trump's conversation with a Taliban official because the Taliban posted about it:

Ned Price ✓

@nedprice

The American President had a phone call with the head of the Taliban... and the American people learn about it from the Taliban. twitter.com/Zabehulah\_M33/...

Zabihullah ( ذبیح الله م ) @Zabehulah_M33

#Breaking

The President of the United States Trump @realDonaldTrump held a phone conversation with the Political Deputy of the Islamic Emirate, the respected Mullah Baradar Akhund. Details later.

♥ 15.8K 6:50 PM - Mar 3, 2020

💬 9.899 people are talking about this

Mike Pompeo tried to avoid being photographed with Taliban leaders, but a Wall Street Journal reporter obtained this picture:

The DNC's communications director pushed back on the idea that Tulsi Gabbard will appear in the next debate because she won a delegate in American Samoa. She noted that the bar will be raised to appear onstage in Phoenix:

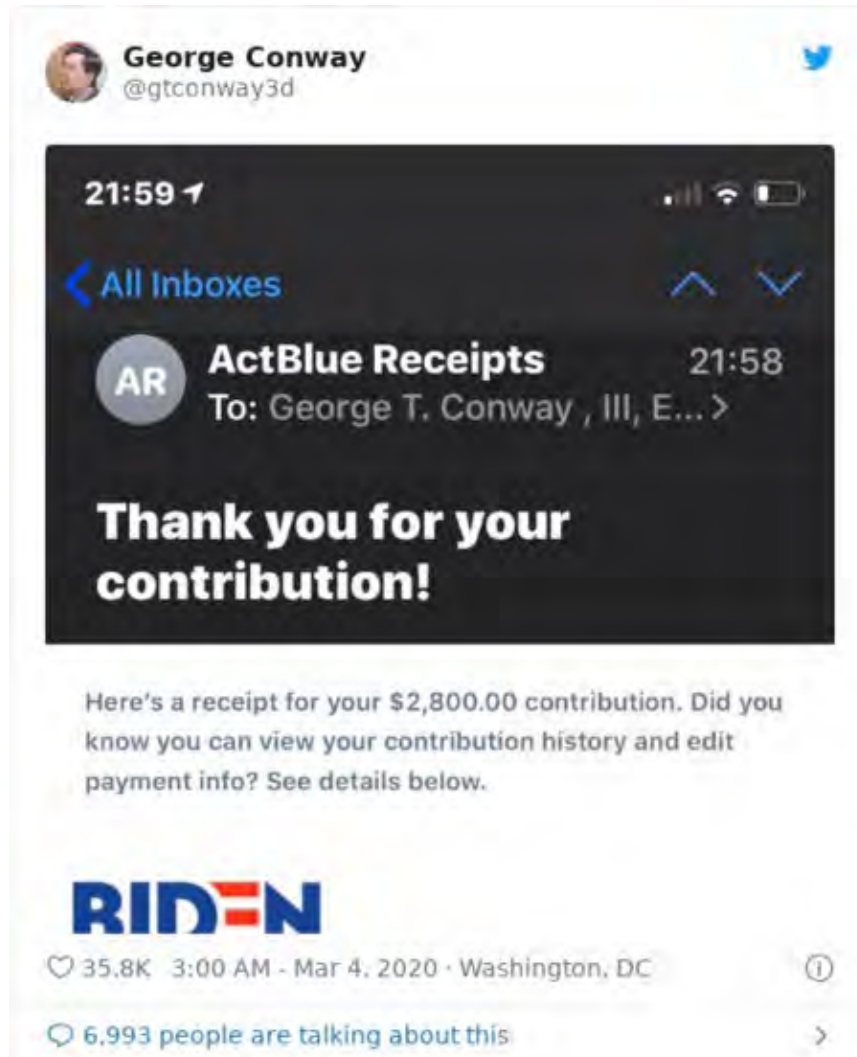

The former FBI director, a Republican until Trump fired him, voted for

Biden in Virginia:

Never Trumper George Conway, husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway, maxed out to Biden:

And Amy Klobuchar said goodbye to her “Saturday Night Live” counterpart:

A screenshot of a Twitter thread. The top tweet is from Amy Klobuchar (@amyklobuchar), who says she always said Rachel Dratch plays a good game and thanks her for memories, including their matching maroon dresses and moving bangs. Below it is a reply from Rachel Dratch (@TheRealDratch) thanking Amy for being a good sport during the SNL campaign season and admiring her, even suggesting she would have made a great president. A video thumbnail shows Rachel Dratch in a maroon dress peeking through a doorway. The tweet has 20.3K likes and was posted on March 3, 2020, at 2:11 PM. It also shows that 1,564 people are talking about it.

Amy Klobuchar @amyklobuchar

As I've always said @TheRealDratch you play a good game. Thanks for the memories (and our matching maroon dresses, not to mention the moving bangs).
twitter.com/therealdratch/...

Rachel Dratch @TheRealDratch

Thanks @amyklobuchar for being such a good sport throughout the SNL campaign season. I admire the heck out of you. and I think you would have made a great president.

20.3K 2:11 PM - Mar 3, 2020

1,564 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

A group of anti-dairy protesters rushed the stage during Biden's speech, but Jill Biden and campaign spokeswoman Symone Sanders stopped them cold:

"I broke a nail," Sanders quipped on Twitter afterward.

Stephen Colbert denounced the Trump administration's coronavirus response:

Seth Meyers held his own Democratic debate:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden forged a Super Tuesday coalition that could win the Democratic nomination – and presidency
Date: Wednesday, March 4, 2020 7:45:17 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Joe Biden forged a Super Tuesday coalition that could win the Democratic nomination – and presidency

With a victory in Texas giving him a sweep of the South, plus the exclamation marks from winning outright in Massachusetts and Minnesota, Joe Biden is suddenly the front-runner again for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Bernie Sanders leads in California, the biggest prize of Super Tuesday, which will keep the delegate count tight and probably ensures the contest drags on for a few more months. The independent senator carried his home state of Vermont, as well as Colorado and Utah. But Sanders crashed into a brick wall down South, just as he did four years ago against Hillary Clinton, despite his efforts to court African Americans.

Biden won Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas, Alabama and Oklahoma by double digits. Maine, which the Sanders camp expected to carry, remains too close to call. Sanders won the Pine Tree State decisively in 2016.

“We increased turnout,” Biden told supporters in Los Angeles. “The turnout turned out for us!”

Joe Biden takes the stage at his victory party at Baldwin Hills Recreation Center in Los Angeles. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Turnout grew not because of Biden’s ground game, which was essentially nonexistent in the 14 states and one U.S. territory that voted on Tuesday. In fact, he won big in several places where he spent little time and made no real investment in a field program.

Momentum mattered more than money. After spending more than half a billion dollars of his personal fortune, former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg's only win came in American Samoa, where Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) also got a delegate.

Turnout also did not appear to grow because of a surge in young voters that Sanders keeps promising will materialize any time now. Exit polls show about 1 in 8 voters in Super Tuesday states were 18- to 29-year-olds, compared to 3 in 10 who were 65 or older. Sanders struggles with these older voters.

Instead, turnout appears to have spiked from 2016 to 2020 in key general election battlegrounds because antipathy toward President Trump continues to galvanize suburban moderates to get engaged in Democratic politics. A Washington Post statistical model suggests Biden won nearly 60 percent of voters who sat out the 2016 primary but cast ballots on Tuesday. Our turnout analysis, conducted by in-house data scientist Lenny Bronner, also shows that Biden possibly received nearly 90 percent of Clinton's 2016 voters.

Biden romped in the suburbs, excelling with the constituencies that fueled the Democratic takeover of the House in 2018. In addition to his stalwart base of African American voters, the foundation of his wins across the South, Biden fared well with white voters in suburbs from Richmond and Raleigh, N.C., to Houston and Hampton Roads, as well as Nashville and Minneapolis.

Bernie Sanders watches Super Tuesday results in a holding area before his speech in Essex Junction, Vt. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Exit polls show that many decided to back the former vice president in the days after his South Carolina landslide. These voters think he's the most electable choice to take back the White House and that beating Trump is more important to them than agreeing with a candidate on the issues. It also helped Biden that the field winnowed, and he received endorsements on Monday from former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.).

Biden credited his win in Minnesota, where Sanders invested heavily and held a massive rally on Monday night, to Klobuchar. Exit polls there showed 6 in 10 voters decided whom to vote for in the past few days. Biden won about half that group.

Consider Virginia as a window into why turnout grew. In 2016, 785,000 people participated in the Democratic primary. On Tuesday, about 1.3 million people did. This broke the turnout record set in the 2008 primary that pitted Clinton against Barack Obama. About a quarter of Virginia primary voters were African American, and roughly 6 in 10 chose Biden, according to the exit polls. But Biden also won 6 in 10 white voters older than 45. While Sanders won 3 to 1 among all younger voters, Biden still won the primary in Virginia by 30 points.

“The precincts that saw the biggest increases were largely clustered in Northern Virginia and the Hampton Roads metropolitan area,” Greg Schneider reports from Richmond. “In Henrico, Kate Giska, 39, a small-business owner and political independent, described Sanders as ‘just too extreme, just like Trump is a little too extreme. We’re kind of, like, in the middle, just, like, status quo, just get along.’ She voted for Biden, someone she thinks has appeal for ‘the middle voter, a candidate that can attract the masses.’ None of more than 50 voters interviewed at three Virginia Beach precincts on Tuesday said they planned to vote for Sanders, even if they liked some of his positions. Many said they simply thought Biden had a better chance of winning in November.”

Biden won from coast to coast among those who identify as “somewhat liberal.” He dominated among conservative and moderate primary voters across most of the 14 states that voted, with the exceptions of Colorado and Vermont. But he also fared very well among the large share of voters who self-identify as “somewhat liberal.” Biden won that group by a roughly 2 to 1 margin over Sanders in Alabama, Virginia and North Carolina. Those latter two states will both be battlegrounds this fall.

Sanders’s coalition is built around liberals and Latinos. One reason he’s widely expected to win California, although the race has not been called with 81 percent of precincts reporting, is that two-thirds of voters described themselves as liberal in the exit polling, and this group voted more than 2 to 1 for Sanders.

Hispanic voters also showed a strong preference for Sanders in the states where they made up the largest shares of the Democratic electorate. About 3 in 10 voters in Texas identified themselves as Hispanic, and just under half of them voted for Sanders. Biden got about 1 in 4 Hispanic votes in the Lone Star State. The share of Hispanic voters was slightly smaller in California, but Sanders won the group by a larger margin, capturing a majority. Biden got about 1 in 5 Latinos in the Golden State, giving Sanders a margin of about 30 percentage points, according to the exits.

Elsewhere, though, Biden made inroads with non-college-educated whites who backed Sanders four years ago. Exit polls suggested Biden had a greater than 2 to 1 lead among white voters in Alabama, and nearly as wide an edge in Virginia. Biden had a smaller but still visible lead among white voters in Minnesota and Oklahoma and a smaller edge in Tennessee, North Carolina and Massachusetts. In Maine and Texas, Biden and Sanders were neck and neck among white voters. And Sanders led among white voters in Vermont, Colorado and California.

Elizabeth Warren’s humiliating third-place finish in Massachusetts, a state she’s represented in the Senate for eight years, makes continuing her campaign increasingly difficult to rationalize. Warren also finished fourth in her native Oklahoma, with 13.4 percent, under the 15 percent threshold required to win any delegates, although not all the precincts have reported. Speaking early Tuesday evening in Detroit as polls remained open in several states, Warren pledged to forge ahead and seemed to plead with late deciders not to keep breaking for Biden. “What I see happening is a lot of folks trying to turn voting into some complicated strategy,” she said, acting almost as if Super Tuesday hadn’t happened. “They are playing games about prediction and strategy. Prediction has been a terrible business.”

After polls closed, Bloomberg campaign manager Kevin Sheekey backed away from his insistence that the former New York mayor would fight on until the Democratic convention in Milwaukee. “You make an assessment in any campaign like this after any time there is a vote,” he said. “As of right now we are committing to stay in, but we will see what happens tonight.” Another campaign aide told Michael Scherer that the campaign is regularly reevaluated, and that process would continue Wednesday, when Bloomberg is expected to return to New York from Florida.

Whether Warren and Bloomberg stay in or not, this has effectively become a two-man race, pitting the 77-year-old Biden – first elected to the Senate in 1972 – against the 78-year-old Sanders, who was first elected mayor of Burlington 39 years ago Tuesday and who has been in Congress since 1991. But the ideological contrast between the septuagenarians is stark. Sanders promises revolution. Biden pledges restoration.

Sanders is also struggling in some states he won last time because Biden is a less effective foil for him than Clinton. The self-described democratic socialist benefited four years ago in several red states like Indiana, West Virginia and Montana from being the sole alternative to Clinton. He ran up the score among self-identified conservative Democrats. With the benefit of hindsight, many of these folks were probably voting more against Clinton than they were voting for Sanders. But she’s not on the ballot this time. Biden has higher favorability ratings among conservative Democrats than she did, and there were other alternatives, including Bloomberg.

Consider Oklahoma. Sanders won the primary there four years ago by 10 points. “Clinton won self-identified Democrats by 9 points, according to exit polls. But independents, who were free to cross over, backed Sanders by 48 points,” Dave Weigel notes. “While Sanders ran to Clinton’s left, he beat her among self-identified ‘moderate or conservative’ voters by 11 points. Without Clinton as a foil, the Sanders vote fell apart. ... Sanders badly lost moderate and conservative voters [on Tuesday], losing them to Biden by 28 points. ... Bloomberg won 24 percent of the moderate vote, to just 11 percent for Sanders.”

The fight for the nomination could still drag into the convention in Milwaukee in July, even if Biden continues to consolidate support among moderate voters. Most delegates still have not been awarded, and 32 states still need to vote. Sanders expressed optimism in Vermont last night. “I tell you, with absolute confidence, we’re going to win the Democratic nomination,” he told thousands of supporters.

But, but, but: The calendar is going to get harder for Sanders.

“The marquee primary next week will be in Michigan,” Dan Balz explains.

“Sanders scored a major upset there four years ago against Clinton, although his victory margin was narrow. Also on the calendar next week is Missouri, a state Sanders lost by less than a percentage point and where the delegates split almost evenly. Missouri will provide another test of Biden’s and Sanders’s support among African Americans, who make up about a fifth of Democratic turnout in that state. Because Washington state has switched from a caucus to a primary, Sanders, though favored, will have a more difficult time piling up the kind of delegate margin he did in 2016. Meanwhile, Mississippi should be fertile ground for Biden, as African Americans made up about 70 percent of the Democratic electorate there in 2016 — even more than in South Carolina.

“The round of primaries on March 17 includes Arizona, Florida, Illinois and Ohio. Sanders lost Florida badly to Clinton and will face serious resistance again this year because of qualms about his left-wing agenda. He also lost Arizona and Ohio decisively. Only Illinois was close, though Sanders was on the losing end there, as well. A week after that, on March 24, Georgia holds a stand-alone primary, and there again, Biden will be favored based on the size of the African American vote.”

For his part, Biden will face growing scrutiny that he’s mostly avoided since stumbling in Iowa. He faced few attacks in the last three debates. His performances on the stump can be uneven. Trying to stay disciplined, he delivered his speech in Los Angeles from a teleprompter. Most of it duplicated what he said on Saturday night in his victory speech in South Carolina. “They don’t call it Super Tuesday for nothing,” he said. “For those who have been knocked down, counted out, left behind, this is your campaign.”

Scott Clement contributed exit poll analysis.

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost’s essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

More from the states

Powered by  LiveIntent

Supporters cheer Jeff Sessions as he reacts to being forced into a runoff on Tuesday night in Mobile,

In Alabama, Jeff Sessions is headed to a March 31 Republican runoff against former Auburn University football coach Tommy Tuberville in his quest to win back his old Senate seat. “Other Republicans, including Rep. Bradley Byrne and former state Supreme Court chief justice Roy Moore, significantly trailed,” Mike DeBonis reports. “Trump has so far remained silent on the race, and Republicans in both Alabama and Washington are speculating whether he might now get involved to block Sessions. ... Meanwhile, in North Carolina, Democrats nominated a centrist favorite of national party leaders to take on GOP Sen. Thom Tillis in what promises to be a much more competitive race.”

Texas Reps. Key Granger (R) and Henry Cuellar (D) both claimed victory over primary challengers. “‘You know, we can keep waiting, but it remains 60-40 so far, so I’ll stay here,’ Granger said Tuesday evening ... Asked if she was declaring victory, she said ‘yes,’” the Texas Tribune reports. Cuellar “was still fighting a primary challenge from attorney Jessica Cisneros ... As of early Wednesday morning, Cuellar garnered 51.6% of the vote to Cisneros’ 48.4%, with incomplete returns. The Cuellar victory is a setback for a massive coalition of Democratic allied groups, ranging from the Justice Democrats to EMILY’s List to the League of Conservation Voters.”

- Pierce Bush, a grandson of George H.W. Bush, didn’t make the runoff in a crowded GOP race to represent Texas’s 22nd District. Early results indicated that he was headed to either a third- or fourth-place finish in a 15-way primary race. (Texas Tribune)
- Former White House physician Ronny Jackson advanced to a Republican runoff for Texas’s 13th District, a comfortably Republican seat. (AP)

Long lines kept some Texans waiting to vote until late into the night. “Dozens of Democratic voters were still waiting to cast ballots at midnight in Houston, turning Super Tuesday into a painful slog for some citizens amid questions about how the County Clerk’s office had allocated its voting machines across the county,” the Houston Chronicle reports. “Some people in line gave up and walked away ... Polls closed at 7 p.m., but voters still can cast ballots as long as they stay in line. ... After waiting four hours to cast his own ballot at TSU, Bryan Escobedo walked outside to a crowd cheering his patience. He spoke of voters sharing painkillers and water to keep their neighbors engaged. ... The nonprofit Texas Civil Rights Project took issue with the delays, noting that many polling places with long waits were in predominantly black and Latino neighborhoods.”

The special election in California to replace Katie Hill, the freshman Democratic congresswoman who resigned after admitting an extramarital affair, will head to a runoff.

“Democratic Assemblywoman Christy Smith of Santa Clarita and Republican defense contractor Mike Garcia were in a tight race ... in one of California’s most competitive congressional districts,” the Los Angeles Times reports. “Former Rep. Steve Knight, the Republican who was ousted in 2018 by Hill, a Democrat, was running third and on the verge of losing his shot at recapturing his seat representing the northern suburbs of Los Angeles. The primary appeared likely to yield two runoffs between Smith and Garcia, a former Navy pilot — one in May to fill Hill’s seat for the rest of the year and another in November for the full two-year term that starts in January. Trailing far behind [was] George Papadopoulos, a 2016 Trump campaign advisor who pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI in the Russia scandal.”

Commentary from the opinion page:

- Dana Milbank: “The Sanders revolution has stalled.”
  - David Byler: “The real winner of Super Tuesday is the Democratic Party itself.”
  - Megan McArdle: “Elizabeth Warren focused on her core voters. There weren’t enough of them.”
  - Jennifer Rubin: “Super Tuesday gave Joe Biden the historic surge he needed.”
-

The new world order

Vice President Pence said any American can get tested for coronavirus if a doctor orders it.

The comments “perplexed some public health officials, as physicians already have discretion to order testing. The announcement also raised questions about whether the government can rapidly accelerate the production of testing kits, as well as how much patients will ultimately have to pay for getting tested,” Seung Min Kim, Maria Sacchetti and Brady Dennis report. “Pence said roughly 2,500 testing kits approved by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention should be distributed by the end of the week, primarily to hospitals in affected areas as well as to others that have requested them. Those kits collectively represent about 1.5 million individual tests. Seema Verma, the administrator for the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, said testing for the coronavirus is covered under Medicare, Medicaid and health-care exchanges established under the Affordable Care Act, but it remained unclear how the costs would be handled for the estimated 27 million Americans who are uninsured.”

Washington state confirmed three additional fatalities, bringing the total to nine: “Overall, the U.S. has reported more than 100 confirmed cases. The previously unreported deaths were former residents of the Life Care Center of Kirkland, a nursing home facility that has emerged as the epicenter of the outbreak in the city northeast of Seattle. ... Meanwhile, North Carolina reported its first coronavirus case Tuesday, bringing the total to 14 states ... New York disclosed on Tuesday its second confirmed case. Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D) described the patient as a 50-year-old man from Westchester County, who had no recent history of foreign travel.”

Trump’s coronavirus effort has been undermined by mixed messages and falsehoods.

“The White House is handling the rapidly expanding coronavirus as a public relations problem as much as a public health crisis. Officials are insisting on message discipline among government scientists and political aides alike, part of what they say is a responsible effort to try to calm jittery Americans and provide uniform and transparent information,” Philip Rucker, Yasmeen Abutaleb and Ashley Parker report. Trump “has privately griped about what he considers to be hysteria from both the media and his own public health officials ... White House aides managing the response have also sought to focus on tamping down what they consider to be alarmist rhetoric. ...

“As Trump toured a laboratory at the National Institutes of Health on Tuesday afternoon, he and [National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Director] Anthony Fauci appeared chummy. The president heaped praise on the infectious-diseases expert, telling him, ‘The world is extremely happy that you’re involved.’ But their bonhomie belied the tensions in an administration where the president tolerates only one star: himself. Public health experts and other government officials have found themselves struggling to manage the delicate balance of performing their jobs while not angering the president or his political aides.”

---

Quote of the day

“You should never destroy your own credibility. And you don’t want to go to war with a president,” Director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Anthony Fauci told Politico. “But you got to walk the fine balance of making sure you continue to tell the truth.”

Across America, the virus has triggered cancellations, closures and contingency planning.

Trump has “said he did not agree with contingency plans being considered for the NCAA’s March Madness basketball tournament, including a proposal to play games in empty arenas,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Heather Kelly, Hannah Natanson and Julie Zauzmer report. “I don’t think it would be necessary,’ [he said]. With the lack of a coordinated national approach, local officials and individual communities are rushing to make their own plans. Some schools are considering closures, some companies have implemented restrictions on travel for employees, and religious organizations are altering how they conduct services.”

In turf warfare, the CDC temporarily blocked a top FDA scientist from its campus.

“Timothy Stenzel, who is the director of the Food and Drug Administration’s Office of In Vitro Diagnostics and Radiological Health, was made to wait overnight on the weekend of Feb. 22 — as senior health department officials negotiated his access in a series of calls — before Centers for Disease Control granted him permission to be on campus. Stenzel’s visit had been expected ... The FDA had dispatched Stenzel to the CDC in an effort to expedite the development of lab tests for the novel coronavirus outbreak,” Politico reported.

The outbreak continues to spread widely in the Middle East, Asia and Europe.

Iran has confirmed 92 deaths and 2,992 cases, while South Korea has 5,238 cases and Italy 2,263. China, which remains the worst-hit nation, announced 38 new deaths. Chile and Argentina reported their first cases yesterday, widening the numbers across Latin America. (Adam Taylor,

Teo Armus and Rick Noack)

The U.S. Travel Association anticipates international inbound travel to the country will drop 6 percent between now and May, the largest dip in global visitation since the financial crisis in 2007 and 2008. "The forecast takes into account factors including hotel bookings, airline data and consumer sentiment data," Hannah Sampson reports.

North Korea's isolation is a possible virus buffer – but also a concern.

"Kim Jong Un's insular world also could face a major crisis if the virus that causes covid-19 finds its way in. An outbreak could overwhelm the feeble health system — ranked 193 out of 195 on the Global Health Security Index — in a country already stalked by malnutrition and diseases such as tuberculosis," Simon Denyer reports.

Doctors in Italy are turning into patients.

"In an effort to cope, Italy is graduating nurses early and calling medical workers out of retirement. Hospitals in the hardest-hit regions are delaying nonessential surgeries and scrambling to add 50 percent more intensive-care beds," Loveday Morris reports.

Trump spoke with a senior Taliban leader by phone.

This was apparently the first direct verbal communication between a U.S. president and the Afghan insurgent force since the Afghanistan war began. Anne Gearan reports: "Trump confirmed the Taliban's announcement Tuesday that he had spoken by phone with Mullah Abdul Ghani Baradar, the Taliban's top political leader. 'I spoke to the leader of the Taliban today. We had a good conversation. We've agreed there's no violence, we don't want violence; we'll see what happens,' Trump told reporters at the White House. 'They're dealing with Afghanistan, but we'll see what happens. We had actually a very good talk.' Baradar is a senior figure representing the insurgent group in talks with the United States in Doha, Qatar. ...

"The phone call is notable for the stature it confers on Baradar. U.S. presidents typically deal directly with other heads of state or government ... In a statement, Baradar welcomed the phone call and said that 'we assure with full confidence that if the U.S. implements the agreement, this will have positive impact on the bilateral relations in future.' ... The Taliban statement quotes Trump as saying the Taliban has been 'fighting for your country' and that the time has come for the United States to leave. The Taliban said Trump also pledged that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo will speak to [Afghan President Ashraf] Ghani 'to remove hurdles in the way of intra-Afghan dialogue.'"

The Pentagon said overnight the U.S. military has conducted an airstrike against Taliban forces in southern Afghanistan, the AP reports: "Spokesman Col Sonny Leggett said in a tweet Wednesday that it was the first U.S. strike against the militant group in 11 days. He said the attack was to counter a Taliban assault on Afghan government forces in Nahr-e Saraj in the Helmand province."

Iran has sharply increased its uranium stockpile since Trump blew up the nuclear accord.

"Inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency reported a near-tripling of Iran's stockpile of low-enriched uranium just since November, with total holdings more than three times the 300-kilogram limit set by the nuclear accord," Joby Warrick reports. "Iran also substantially increased the number of machines it is using to enrich uranium, the agency said, allowing it to make more of the nuclear fuel faster. ... Iran's low-enriched uranium, the kind typically used in nuclear power plants, would have to undergo further processing to be converted into the highly enriched uranium needed for nuclear bombs. Independent analysts said the bigger stockpile and faster enrichment rate has substantially decreased Iran's theoretical 'breakout' time — the span needed for acquiring enough weapons-grade material for a single nuclear bomb."

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be

overlooked

The tornadoes in Tennessee killed at least 24.

“An EF-3 tornado with winds up to 165 mph tore across the Nashville area,” Brandon Gee, Meryl Kornfield and Kim Bellware report. Some of the dead were children. “Dozens more are still missing as of Wednesday morning. The destruction stretched for 50 miles across four counties, and Gov. Bill Lee (R), who surveyed the area via helicopter, said it will take days just to assess the scope of the damage.”

A Louisiana case is the first abortion test for the new Supreme Court.

Since Roe v. Wade in 1973, no state has passed more abortion restrictions than Louisiana. Today, a repopulated and more conservative Supreme Court will consider one of those laws. “Some politicians here wonder if it might be the breakthrough they’ve been waiting for in a decades-long effort to rid the state, and the nation, of abortion,” Robert Barnes reports from the Pelican State. “I prayed one day that it would come, but I never thought it would be with this bill,” said state Sen. Katrina Jackson, a Democrat who calls herself ‘pro-whole life’ and says she has been ‘very aggressive’ in pursuing legislation to impose more restrictions. ... Abortion providers say Jackson’s law would force two of the state’s three abortion clinics to close. It's hard to overstate what a decision about this law — requiring difficult-to-obtain hospital admitting privileges for doctors who perform abortions in clinics — will reveal about this Supreme Court and its jurisprudence on [abortion] ... It will be the first time the two justices selected by President Trump, Neil M. Gorsuch and Brett M. Kavanaugh, confront the merits of an abortion case. It marks a key moment for Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr., who has never voted against an abortion restriction, in his pivotal role at the court's center.”

A new White House questionnaire includes a litmus test for prospective appointees.

“Candidates applying to join [Trump's] administration will now have to explain what part of Trump's campaign message ‘most appealed’ to them and why,” CNN reports. “The new questionnaire, distributed by the White House's Presidential Personnel Office to federal departments on Monday, ... is the latest move by the office's new head John McEntee to emphasize loyalty to the President in the hiring process.”

Speaking of loyalty, John Bolton's book release date was pushed back to May amid Trump's efforts to block publication, per Tom Hamburger.

---

Social media speed read

A former National Security Council spokesman under Obama noted the American people only learned about Trump's conversation with a Taliban official because the Taliban posted about it:

Ned Price ✓

@nedprice

The American President had a phone call with the head of the Taliban... and the American people learn about it from the Taliban. twitter.com/Zabehulah\_M33/...

Zabihullah ( ذبیح اللہ م ) @Zabehulah_M33

#Breaking

The President of the United States Trump @realDonaldTrump held a phone conversation with the Political Deputy of the Islamic Emirate, the respected Mullah Baradar Akhund. Details later.

♥ 15.8K 6:50 PM - Mar 3, 2020

💬 9.899 people are talking about this

Mike Pompeo tried to avoid being photographed with Taliban leaders, but a Wall Street Journal reporter obtained this picture:

The DNC's communications director pushed back on the idea that Tulsi Gabbard will appear in the next debate because she won a delegate in American Samoa. She noted that the bar will be raised to appear onstage in Phoenix:

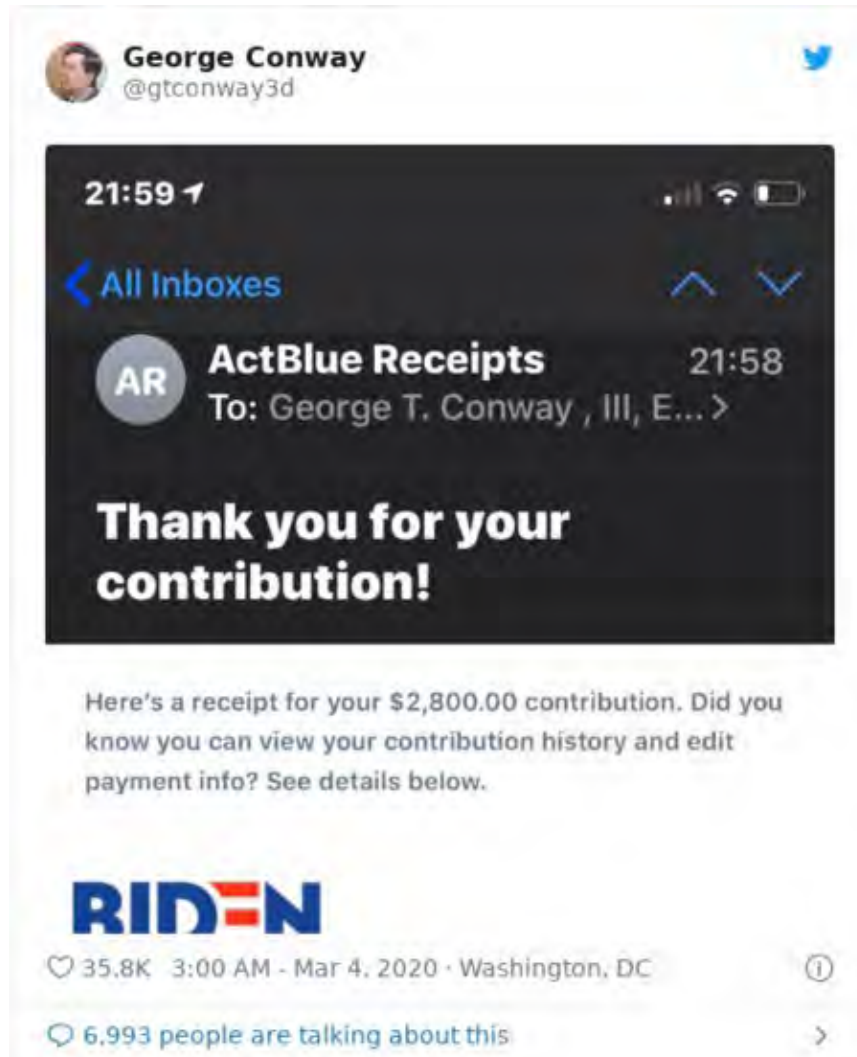

The former FBI director, a Republican until Trump fired him, voted for

Biden in Virginia:

Never Trumper George Conway, husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway, maxed out to Biden:

And Amy Klobuchar said goodbye to her “Saturday Night Live” counterpart:

A screenshot of a Twitter thread. The top tweet is from Amy Klobuchar (@amyklobuchar), who says she always said Rachel Dratch plays a good me and thanks her for memories, including their matching maroon dresses and moving bangs. The bottom tweet is a reply from Rachel Dratch (@TheRealDratch), who thanks Amy for being a good sport during the SNL campaign season and says she admires her and thinks she would have made a great president. Below the tweets is a video thumbnail showing Rachel Dratch in a maroon dress peeking through a doorway. The video has 20.3K likes and was posted on March 3, 2020, at 2:11 PM. There are 1,564 people talking about this video.

Amy Klobuchar @amyklobuchar

As I've always said @TheRealDratch you play a good me. Thanks for the memories (and our matching maroon dresses, not to mention the moving bangs). twitter.com/therealdratch/...

Rachel Dratch @TheRealDratch

Thanks @amyklobuchar for being such a good sport throughout the SNL campaign season. I admire the heck out of you. and I think you would have made a great president.

20.3K 2:11 PM - Mar 3, 2020

1,564 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

A group of anti-dairy protesters rushed the stage during Biden's speech, but Jill Biden and campaign spokeswoman Symone Sanders stopped them cold:

"I broke a nail," Sanders quipped on Twitter afterward.

Stephen Colbert denounced the Trump administration's coronavirus response:

Seth Meyers held his own Democratic debate:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Joe Biden forged a Super Tuesday coalition that could win the Democratic nomination – and presidency
Date: Wednesday, March 4, 2020 7:52:47 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Joe Biden forged a Super Tuesday coalition that could win the Democratic nomination – and presidency

With a victory in Texas giving him a sweep of the South, plus the exclamation marks from winning outright in Massachusetts and Minnesota, Joe Biden is suddenly the front-runner again for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Bernie Sanders leads in California, the biggest prize of Super Tuesday, which will keep the delegate count tight and probably ensures the contest drags on for a few more months. The independent senator carried his home state of Vermont, as well as Colorado and Utah. But Sanders crashed into a brick wall down South, just as he did four years ago against Hillary Clinton, despite his efforts to court African Americans.

Biden won Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas, Alabama and Oklahoma by double digits. Maine, which the Sanders camp expected to carry, remains too close to call. Sanders won the Pine Tree State decisively in 2016.

“We increased turnout,” Biden told supporters in Los Angeles. “The turnout turned out for us!”

Joe Biden takes the stage at his victory party at Baldwin Hills Recreation Center in Los Angeles. (Melina Mara/The Washington Post)

Turnout grew not because of Biden’s ground game, which was essentially nonexistent in the 14 states and one U.S. territory that voted on Tuesday. In fact, he won big in several places where he spent little time and made no real investment in a field program.

Momentum mattered more than money. After spending more than half a billion dollars of his personal fortune, former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg's only win came in American Samoa, where Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) also got a delegate.

Turnout also did not appear to grow because of a surge in young voters that Sanders keeps promising will materialize any time now. Exit polls show about 1 in 8 voters in Super Tuesday states were 18- to 29-year-olds, compared to 3 in 10 who were 65 or older. Sanders struggles with these older voters.

Instead, turnout appears to have spiked from 2016 to 2020 in key general election battlegrounds because antipathy toward President Trump continues to galvanize suburban moderates to get engaged in Democratic politics. A Washington Post statistical model suggests Biden won nearly 60 percent of voters who sat out the 2016 primary but cast ballots on Tuesday. Our turnout analysis, conducted by in-house data scientist Lenny Bronner, also shows that Biden possibly received nearly 90 percent of Clinton's 2016 voters.

Biden romped in the suburbs, excelling with the constituencies that fueled the Democratic takeover of the House in 2018. In addition to his stalwart base of African American voters, the foundation of his wins across the South, Biden fared well with white voters in suburbs from Richmond and Raleigh, N.C., to Houston and Hampton Roads, as well as Nashville and Minneapolis.

Bernie Sanders watches Super Tuesday results in a holding area before his speech in Essex Junction, Vt. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Exit polls show that many decided to back the former vice president in the days after his South Carolina landslide. These voters think he's the most electable choice to take back the White House and that beating Trump is more important to them than agreeing with a candidate on the issues. It also helped Biden that the field winnowed, and he received endorsements on Monday from former South Bend, Ind., mayor Pete Buttigieg and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.).

Biden credited his win in Minnesota, where Sanders invested heavily and held a massive rally on Monday night, to Klobuchar. Exit polls there showed 6 in 10 voters decided whom to vote for in the past few days. Biden won about half that group.

Consider Virginia as a window into why turnout grew. In 2016, 785,000 people participated in the Democratic primary. On Tuesday, about 1.3 million people did. This broke the turnout record set in the 2008 primary that pitted Clinton against Barack Obama. About a quarter of Virginia primary voters were African American, and roughly 6 in 10 chose Biden, according to the exit polls. But Biden also won 6 in 10 white voters older than 45. While Sanders won 3 to 1 among all younger voters, Biden still won the primary in Virginia by 30 points.

“The precincts that saw the biggest increases were largely clustered in Northern Virginia and the Hampton Roads metropolitan area,” Greg Schneider reports from Richmond. “In Henrico, Kate Giska, 39, a small-business owner and political independent, described Sanders as ‘just too extreme, just like Trump is a little too extreme. We’re kind of, like, in the middle, just, like, status quo, just get along.’ She voted for Biden, someone she thinks has appeal for ‘the middle voter, a candidate that can attract the masses.’ None of more than 50 voters interviewed at three Virginia Beach precincts on Tuesday said they planned to vote for Sanders, even if they liked some of his positions. Many said they simply thought Biden had a better chance of winning in November.”

Biden won from coast to coast among those who identify as “somewhat liberal.” He dominated among conservative and moderate primary voters across most of the 14 states that voted, with the exceptions of Colorado and Vermont. But he also fared very well among the large share of voters who self-identify as “somewhat liberal.” Biden won that group by a roughly 2 to 1 margin over Sanders in Alabama, Virginia and North Carolina. Those latter two states will both be battlegrounds this fall.

Sanders’s coalition is built around liberals and Latinos. One reason he’s widely expected to win California, although the race has not been called with 81 percent of precincts reporting, is that two-thirds of voters described themselves as liberal in the exit polling, and this group voted more than 2 to 1 for Sanders.

Hispanic voters also showed a strong preference for Sanders in the states where they made up the largest shares of the Democratic electorate. About 3 in 10 voters in Texas identified themselves as Hispanic, and just under half of them voted for Sanders. Biden got about 1 in 4 Hispanic votes in the Lone Star State. The share of Hispanic voters was slightly smaller in California, but Sanders won the group by a larger margin, capturing a majority. Biden got about 1 in 5 Latinos in the Golden State, giving Sanders a margin of about 30 percentage points, according to the exits.

Elsewhere, though, Biden made inroads with non-college-educated whites who backed Sanders four years ago. Exit polls suggested Biden had a greater than 2 to 1 lead among white voters in Alabama, and nearly as wide an edge in Virginia. Biden had a smaller but still visible lead among white voters in Minnesota and Oklahoma and a smaller edge in Tennessee, North Carolina and Massachusetts. In Maine and Texas, Biden and Sanders were neck and neck among white voters. And Sanders led among white voters in Vermont, Colorado and California.

Elizabeth Warren’s humiliating third-place finish in Massachusetts, a state she’s represented in the Senate for eight years, makes continuing her campaign increasingly difficult to rationalize. Warren also finished fourth in her native Oklahoma, with 13.4 percent, under the 15 percent threshold required to win any delegates, although not all the precincts have reported. Speaking early Tuesday evening in Detroit as polls remained open in several states, Warren pledged to forge ahead and seemed to plead with late deciders not to keep breaking for Biden. “What I see happening is a lot of folks trying to turn voting into some complicated strategy,” she said, acting almost as if Super Tuesday hadn’t happened. “They are playing games about prediction and strategy. Prediction has been a terrible business.”

After polls closed, Bloomberg campaign manager Kevin Sheekey backed away from his insistence that the former New York mayor would fight on until the Democratic convention in Milwaukee. “You make an assessment in any campaign like this after any time there is a vote,” he said. “As of right now we are committing to stay in, but we will see what happens tonight.” Another campaign aide told Michael Scherer that the campaign is regularly reevaluated, and that process would continue Wednesday, when Bloomberg is expected to return to New York from Florida.

Whether Warren and Bloomberg stay in or not, this has effectively become a two-man race, pitting the 77-year-old Biden – first elected to the Senate in 1972 – against the 78-year-old Sanders, who was first elected mayor of Burlington 39 years ago Tuesday and who has been in Congress since 1991. But the ideological contrast between the septuagenarians is stark. Sanders promises revolution. Biden pledges restoration.

Sanders is also struggling in some states he won last time because Biden is a less effective foil for him than Clinton. The self-described democratic socialist benefited four years ago in several red states like Indiana, West Virginia and Montana from being the sole alternative to Clinton. He ran up the score among self-identified conservative Democrats. With the benefit of hindsight, many of these folks were probably voting more against Clinton than they were voting for Sanders. But she’s not on the ballot this time. Biden has higher favorability ratings among conservative Democrats than she did, and there were other alternatives, including Bloomberg.

Consider Oklahoma. Sanders won the primary there four years ago by 10 points. “Clinton won self-identified Democrats by 9 points, according to exit polls. But independents, who were free to cross over, backed Sanders by 48 points,” Dave Weigel notes. “While Sanders ran to Clinton’s left, he beat her among self-identified ‘moderate or conservative’ voters by 11 points. Without Clinton as a foil, the Sanders vote fell apart. ... Sanders badly lost moderate and conservative voters [on Tuesday], losing them to Biden by 28 points. ... Bloomberg won 24 percent of the moderate vote, to just 11 percent for Sanders.”

The fight for the nomination could still drag into the convention in Milwaukee in July, even if Biden continues to consolidate support among moderate voters. Most delegates still have not been awarded, and 32 states still need to vote. Sanders expressed optimism in Vermont last night. “I tell you, with absolute confidence, we’re going to win the Democratic nomination,” he told thousands of supporters.

But, but, but: The calendar is going to get harder for Sanders. “The marquee primary next week will be in Michigan,” Dan Balz explains. “Sanders scored a major upset there four years ago against Clinton, although his victory margin was narrow. Also on the calendar next week is Missouri, a state Sanders lost by less than a percentage point and where the delegates split almost evenly. Missouri will provide another test of Biden’s and Sanders’s support among African Americans, who make up about a fifth of Democratic turnout in that state. Because Washington state has switched from a caucus to a primary, Sanders, though favored, will have a more difficult time piling up the kind of delegate margin he did in 2016. Meanwhile, Mississippi should be fertile ground for Biden, as African Americans made up about 70 percent of the Democratic electorate there in 2016 — even more than in South Carolina.

“The round of primaries on March 17 includes Arizona, Florida, Illinois and Ohio. Sanders lost Florida badly to Clinton and will face serious resistance again this year because of qualms about his left-wing agenda. He also lost Arizona and Ohio decisively. Only Illinois was close, though Sanders was on the losing end there, as well. A week after that, on March 24, Georgia holds a stand-alone primary, and there again, Biden will be favored based on the size of the African American vote.”

For his part, Biden will face growing scrutiny that he’s mostly avoided since stumbling in Iowa. He faced few attacks in the last three debates. His performances on the stump can be uneven. Trying to stay disciplined, he delivered his speech in Los Angeles from a teleprompter. Most of it duplicated what he said on Saturday night in his victory speech in South Carolina. “They don’t call it Super Tuesday for nothing,” he said. “For those who have been knocked down, counted out, left behind, this is your campaign.”

Scott Clement contributed exit poll analysis.

---

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost’s essential briefing for decision makers.

Sign up to receive the newsletter

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

More from the states

Powered by  LiveIntent

Supporters cheer Jeff Sessions as he reacts to being forced into a runoff on Tuesday night in Mobile, Ala. (Elijah Nouvelage/Reuters)

In Alabama, Jeff Sessions is headed to a March 31 Republican runoff against former Auburn University football coach Tommy Tuberville in his quest to win back his old Senate seat. “Other Republicans, including Rep. Bradley Byrne and former state Supreme Court chief justice Roy Moore, significantly trailed,” Mike DeBonis reports. “Trump has so far remained silent on the race, and Republicans in both Alabama and Washington are speculating whether he might now get involved to block Sessions. ... Meanwhile, in North Carolina, Democrats nominated a centrist favorite of national party leaders to take on GOP Sen. Thom Tillis in what promises to be a much more competitive race.”

Texas Reps. Key Granger (R) and Henry Cuellar (D) both claimed victory over primary challengers. “‘You know, we can keep waiting, but it remains 60-40 so far, so I’ll stay here,’ Granger said Tuesday evening ... Asked if she was declaring victory, she said ‘yes,’” the Texas Tribune reports. Cuellar “was still fighting a primary challenge from attorney Jessica Cisneros ... As of early Wednesday morning, Cuellar garnered 51.6% of the vote to Cisneros’ 48.4%, with incomplete returns. The Cuellar victory is a setback for a massive coalition of Democratic allied groups, ranging from the Justice Democrats to EMILY’s List to the League of Conservation Voters.”

- Pierce Bush, a grandson of George H.W. Bush, didn’t make the runoff in a crowded GOP race to represent Texas’s 22nd District. Early results indicated that he was headed to either a third- or fourth-place finish in a 15-way primary race. (Texas Tribune)
- Former White House physician Ronny Jackson advanced to a Republican runoff for Texas’s 13th District, a comfortably Republican seat. (AP)

Long lines kept some Texans waiting to vote until late into the night. “Dozens of Democratic voters were still waiting to cast ballots at midnight in Houston, turning Super Tuesday into a painful slog for some citizens amid questions about how the County Clerk’s office had allocated its voting machines across the county,” the Houston Chronicle reports. “Some people in line gave up and walked away ... Polls closed at 7 p.m., but voters still can cast ballots as long as they stay in line. ... After waiting four hours to cast his own ballot at TSU, Bryan Escobedo walked outside to a crowd cheering his patience. He spoke of voters sharing painkillers and water to keep their neighbors engaged. ... The nonprofit Texas Civil Rights Project took issue with the delays, noting that many polling places with long waits were in predominantly black and Latino neighborhoods.”

The special election in California to replace Katie Hill, the freshman Democratic congresswoman who resigned after admitting an extramarital affair, will head to a runoff.

“Democratic Assemblywoman Christy Smith of Santa Clarita and Republican defense contractor Mike Garcia were in a tight race ... in one of California’s most competitive congressional districts,” the Los Angeles Times reports. “Former Rep. Steve Knight, the Republican who was ousted in 2018 by Hill, a Democrat, was running third and on the verge of losing his shot at recapturing his seat representing the northern suburbs of Los Angeles. The primary appeared likely to yield two runoffs between Smith and Garcia, a former Navy pilot — one in May to fill Hill’s seat for the rest of the year and another in November for the full two-year term that starts in January. Trailing far behind [was] George Papadopoulos, a 2016 Trump campaign advisor who pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI in the Russia scandal.”

Commentary from the opinion page:

- Dana Milbank: “The Sanders revolution has stalled.”
  - David Byler: “The real winner of Super Tuesday is the Democratic Party itself.”
  - Megan McArdle: “Elizabeth Warren focused on her core voters. There weren’t enough of them.”
  - Jennifer Rubin: “Super Tuesday gave Joe Biden the historic surge he needed.”
-

The new world order

Vice President Pence said any American can get tested for coronavirus if a doctor orders it.

The comments “perplexed some public health officials, as physicians already have discretion to order testing. The announcement also raised questions about whether the government can rapidly accelerate the production of testing kits, as well as how much patients will ultimately have to pay for getting tested,” Seung Min Kim, Maria Sacchetti and Brady Dennis report. “Pence said roughly 2,500 testing kits approved by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention should be distributed by the end of the week, primarily to hospitals in affected areas as well as to others that have requested them. Those kits collectively represent about 1.5 million individual tests. Seema Verma, the administrator for the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, said testing for the coronavirus is covered under Medicare, Medicaid and health-care exchanges established under the Affordable Care Act, but it remained unclear how the costs would be handled for the estimated 27 million Americans who are uninsured.”

Washington state confirmed three additional fatalities, bringing the total to nine: “Overall, the U.S. has reported more than 100 confirmed cases. The previously unreported deaths were former residents of the Life Care Center of Kirkland, a nursing home facility that has emerged as the epicenter of the outbreak in the city northeast of Seattle. ... Meanwhile, North Carolina reported its first coronavirus case Tuesday, bringing the total to 14 states ... New York disclosed on Tuesday its second confirmed case. Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D) described the patient as a 50-year-old man from Westchester County, who had no recent history of foreign travel.”

Trump’s coronavirus effort has been undermined by mixed messages and falsehoods.

“The White House is handling the rapidly expanding coronavirus as a public relations problem as much as a public health crisis. Officials are insisting on message discipline among government scientists and political aides alike, part of what they say is a responsible effort to try to calm jittery Americans and provide uniform and transparent information,” Philip Rucker, Yasmeen Abutaleb and Ashley Parker report. Trump “has privately griped about what he considers to be hysteria from both the media and his own public health officials ... White House aides managing the response have also sought to focus on tamping down what they consider to be alarmist rhetoric. ...

“As Trump toured a laboratory at the National Institutes of Health on Tuesday afternoon, he and [National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Director] Anthony Fauci appeared chummy. The president heaped praise on the infectious-diseases expert, telling him, ‘The world is extremely happy that you’re involved.’ But their bonhomie belied the tensions in an administration where the president tolerates only one star: himself. Public health experts and other government officials have found themselves struggling to manage the delicate balance of performing their jobs while not angering the president or his political aides.”

---

Quote of the day

“You should never destroy your own credibility. And you don’t want to go to war with a president,” Director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Anthony Fauci told Politico. “But you got to walk the fine balance of making sure you continue to tell the truth.”

Across America, the virus has triggered cancellations, closures and contingency planning.

Trump has “said he did not agree with contingency plans being considered for the NCAA’s March Madness basketball tournament, including a proposal to play games in empty arenas,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Heather Kelly, Hannah Natanson and Julie Zauzmer report. “I don’t think it would be necessary,’ [he said]. With the lack of a coordinated national approach, local officials and individual communities are rushing to make their own plans. Some schools are considering closures, some companies have implemented restrictions on travel for employees, and religious organizations are altering how they conduct services.”

In turf warfare, the CDC temporarily blocked a top FDA scientist from its campus.

“Timothy Stenzel, who is the director of the Food and Drug Administration’s Office of In Vitro Diagnostics and Radiological Health, was made to wait overnight on the weekend of Feb. 22 — as senior health department officials negotiated his access in a series of calls — before Centers for Disease Control granted him permission to be on campus. Stenzel’s visit had been expected ... The FDA had dispatched Stenzel to the CDC in an effort to expedite the development of lab tests for the novel coronavirus outbreak,” Politico reported.

The outbreak continues to spread widely in the Middle East, Asia and Europe.

Iran has confirmed 92 deaths and 2,992 cases, while South Korea has 5,238 cases and Italy 2,263. China, which remains the worst-hit nation, announced 38 new deaths. Chile and Argentina reported their first cases yesterday, widening the numbers across Latin America. (Adam Taylor,

Teo Armus and Rick Noack)

The U.S. Travel Association anticipates international inbound travel to the country will drop 6 percent between now and May, the largest dip in global visitation since the financial crisis in 2007 and 2008. "The forecast takes into account factors including hotel bookings, airline data and consumer sentiment data," Hannah Sampson reports.

North Korea's isolation is a possible virus buffer – but also a concern.

"Kim Jong Un's insular world also could face a major crisis if the virus that causes covid-19 finds its way in. An outbreak could overwhelm the feeble health system — ranked 193 out of 195 on the Global Health Security Index — in a country already stalked by malnutrition and diseases such as tuberculosis," Simon Denyer reports.

Doctors in Italy are turning into patients.

"In an effort to cope, Italy is graduating nurses early and calling medical workers out of retirement. Hospitals in the hardest-hit regions are delaying nonessential surgeries and scrambling to add 50 percent more intensive-care beds," Loveday Morris reports.

Trump spoke with a senior Taliban leader by phone.

This was apparently the first direct verbal communication between a U.S. president and the Afghan insurgent force since the Afghanistan war began. Anne Gearan reports: "Trump confirmed the Taliban's announcement Tuesday that he had spoken by phone with Mullah Abdul Ghani Baradar, the Taliban's top political leader. 'I spoke to the leader of the Taliban today. We had a good conversation. We've agreed there's no violence, we don't want violence; we'll see what happens,' Trump told reporters at the White House. 'They're dealing with Afghanistan, but we'll see what happens. We had actually a very good talk.' Baradar is a senior figure representing the insurgent group in talks with the United States in Doha, Qatar. ...

"The phone call is notable for the stature it confers on Baradar. U.S. presidents typically deal directly with other heads of state or government ... In a statement, Baradar welcomed the phone call and said that 'we assure with full confidence that if the U.S. implements the agreement, this will have positive impact on the bilateral relations in future.' ... The Taliban statement quotes Trump as saying the Taliban has been 'fighting for your country' and that the time has come for the United States to leave. The Taliban said Trump also pledged that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo will speak to [Afghan President Ashraf] Ghani 'to remove hurdles in the way of intra-Afghan dialogue.'"

The Pentagon said overnight the U.S. military has conducted an airstrike against Taliban forces in southern Afghanistan, the AP reports: "Spokesman Col Sonny Leggett said in a tweet Wednesday that it was the first U.S. strike against the militant group in 11 days. He said the attack was to counter a Taliban assault on Afghan government forces in Nahr-e Saraj in the Helmand province."

Iran has sharply increased its uranium stockpile since Trump blew up the nuclear accord.

"Inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency reported a near-tripling of Iran's stockpile of low-enriched uranium just since November, with total holdings more than three times the 300-kilogram limit set by the nuclear accord," Joby Warrick reports. "Iran also substantially increased the number of machines it is using to enrich uranium, the agency said, allowing it to make more of the nuclear fuel faster. ... Iran's low-enriched uranium, the kind typically used in nuclear power plants, would have to undergo further processing to be converted into the highly enriched uranium needed for nuclear bombs. Independent analysts said the bigger stockpile and faster enrichment rate has substantially decreased Iran's theoretical 'breakout' time — the span needed for acquiring enough weapons-grade material for a single nuclear bomb."

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be

overlooked

The tornadoes in Tennessee killed at least 24.

“An EF-3 tornado with winds up to 165 mph tore across the Nashville area,” Brandon Gee, Meryl Kornfield and Kim Bellware report. Some of the dead were children. “Dozens more are still missing as of Wednesday morning. The destruction stretched for 50 miles across four counties, and Gov. Bill Lee (R), who surveyed the area via helicopter, said it will take days just to assess the scope of the damage.”

A Louisiana case is the first abortion test for the new Supreme Court.

Since Roe v. Wade in 1973, no state has passed more abortion restrictions than Louisiana. Today, a repopulated and more conservative Supreme Court will consider one of those laws. “Some politicians here wonder if it might be the breakthrough they’ve been waiting for in a decades-long effort to rid the state, and the nation, of abortion,” Robert Barnes reports from the Pelican State. “‘I prayed one day that it would come, but I never thought it would be with this bill,’ said state Sen. Katrina Jackson, a Democrat who calls herself ‘pro-whole life’ and says she has been ‘very aggressive’ in pursuing legislation to impose more restrictions. ... Abortion providers say Jackson’s law would force two of the state’s three abortion clinics to close. It's hard to overstate what a decision about this law — requiring difficult-to-obtain hospital admitting privileges for doctors who perform abortions in clinics — will reveal about this Supreme Court and its jurisprudence on [abortion] ... It will be the first time the two justices selected by President Trump, Neil M. Gorsuch and Brett M. Kavanaugh, confront the merits of an abortion case. It marks a key moment for Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr., who has never voted against an abortion restriction, in his pivotal role at the court's center.”

A new White House questionnaire includes a litmus test for prospective appointees.

“Candidates applying to join [Trump's] administration will now have to explain what part of Trump's campaign message ‘most appealed’ to them and why,” CNN reports. “The new questionnaire, distributed by the White House's Presidential Personnel Office to federal departments on Monday, ... is the latest move by the office's new head John McEntee to emphasize loyalty to the President in the hiring process.”

Speaking of loyalty, John Bolton's book release date was pushed back to May amid Trump's efforts to block publication, per Tom Hamburger.

---

Social media speed read

A former National Security Council spokesman under Obama noted the American people only learned about Trump's conversation with a Taliban official because the Taliban posted about it:

Ned Price ✓

@nedprice

The American President had a phone call with the head of the Taliban... and the American people learn about it from the Taliban. twitter.com/Zabehulah\_M33/...

Zabihullah ( ذبیح اللہ م ) @Zabehulah_M33

#Breaking

The President of the United States Trump @realDonaldTrump held a phone conversation with the Political Deputy of the Islamic Emirate, the respected Mullah Baradar Akhund. Details later.

♥ 15.8K 6:50 PM - Mar 3, 2020

💬 9.899 people are talking about this

Mike Pompeo tried to avoid being photographed with Taliban leaders, but a Wall Street Journal reporter obtained this picture:

The DNC's communications director pushed back on the idea that Tulsi Gabbard will appear in the next debate because she won a delegate in American Samoa. She noted that the bar will be raised to appear onstage in Phoenix:

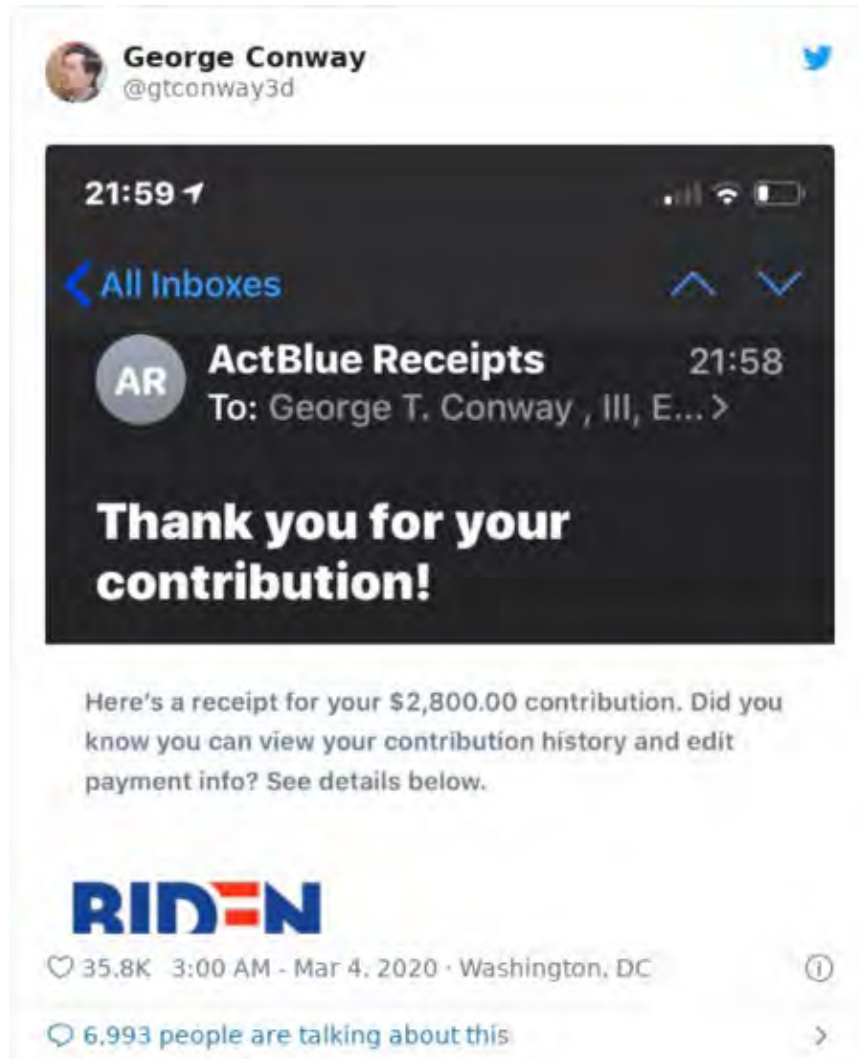

The former FBI director, a Republican until Trump fired him, voted for

Biden in Virginia:

Never Trumper George Conway, husband of counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway, maxed out to Biden:

And Amy Klobuchar said goodbye to her “Saturday Night Live” counterpart:

A screenshot of a Twitter thread. The top tweet is from Amy Klobuchar (@amyklobuchar), who says she always said Rachel Dratch plays a good game and thanks her for memories, including their matching maroon dresses and moving bangs. The bottom tweet is a reply from Rachel Dratch (@TheRealDratch), who thanks Amy for being a good sport during the SNL campaign season and says she admires her and thinks she would have made a great president. Below the tweets is a video thumbnail showing Rachel Dratch in a maroon dress peeking through a doorway.

Amy Klobuchar @amyklobuchar

As I've always said @TheRealDratch you play a good me. Thanks for the memories (and our matching maroon dresses, not to mention the moving bangs). twitter.com/therealdratch/...

Rachel Dratch @TheRealDratch

Thanks @amyklobuchar for being such a good sport throughout the SNL campaign season. I admire the heck out of you. and I think you would have made a great president.

20.3K 2:11 PM - Mar 3, 2020

1,564 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

A group of anti-dairy protesters rushed the stage during Biden's speech, but Jill Biden and campaign spokeswoman Symone Sanders stopped them cold:

“I broke a nail,” Sanders quipped on Twitter afterward.

Stephen Colbert denounced the Trump administration's coronavirus response:

Seth Meyers held his own Democratic debate:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: With Elizabeth Warren out, Bernie Sanders hankers for a one-on-one debate with Joe Biden
Date: Thursday, March 5, 2020 9:41:19 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

With Elizabeth Warren out, Bernie Sanders hankers for a one-on-one debate with Joe Biden

Sen. Elizabeth Warren suspended her presidential campaign this morning, probably clearing the way for Bernie Sanders to get the head-to-head debate with Joe Biden that he craves in Phoenix on March 15. It's the next obvious moment when the independent senator from Vermont might be able to rewrite the narrative of the contest for the Democratic nomination.

After moderates consolidated behind the former vice president, Sanders finds himself back in the role of underdog, just as he was against Hillary Clinton at this moment four years ago. Last week, he seemed poised – and pleased – to avoid this position. But Biden won 10 of the 14 states that voted on Super Tuesday, forging the kind of broad coalition that could win the nomination and presidency. Then former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg dropped out on Wednesday and endorsed the former vice president after his $600 million bet failed to pay off. With California still tallying results, Biden has 433 delegates to Sanders's 388.

With Warren (D-Mass.) out, the only other major candidate left is Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii). She earned a delegate from American Samoa on Tuesday, but Democratic National Committee officials signaled that they will raise the threshold to qualify for the Phoenix debate so that this is no longer sufficient to get onstage.

Sanders's messaging against Biden grew unfocused during the impeachment trial and stayed muddled in the run-up to South Carolina, which allowed Biden to get off the mat. Recognizing this, Sanders has crystalized what will be his five-part case against Biden. He previewed the message during a news conference yesterday afternoon in Burlington, Vt.

“Joe is going to have to explain to the people, the union workers in the Midwest, why he's supported disastrous trade agreements,” Sanders said. “Joe is going to have to explain to the American people why he voted for a Wall Street bailout, something that I vigorously opposed.” Sanders added that “Joe is also going to have to explain” his vote to authorize the Iraq War, “a disastrous bankruptcy bill which benefited the credit card companies” and his onetime advocacy for freezing Social Security benefits.

Sanders is up on the air now in Michigan and other states voting next week with two new attack ads against Biden, focused on trade and Social Security. He hopes to use Biden's vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement as a cudgel to prevent white working-class voters from rallying behind Biden in the Wolverine State's primary next Tuesday. This constituency allowed Sanders to win an upset over Clinton there in 2016. "Only one candidate for president has consistently opposed every disastrous trade deal, and that candidate is Bernie Sanders," a narrator says.

Glenn Kessler has a new fact check this morning of Sanders's attack against Biden over Social Security: "[It] mostly relates to a mid-1990s effort to rein in budget deficits through adoption of a balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution. Biden voted for it in 1996, though it did not pass. A balanced-budget amendment by itself would not require cuts in certain programs, but in the 1980s, Biden had co-sponsored a bill calling for a one-year across-the-board freeze in spending, including eliminating cost-of-living increases for one year for Social Security and Medicare.

"During the balanced-budget debate a decade later, Biden cited that proposal to show that he cared about budget deficits. ‘When I argued that we should freeze federal spending, I meant Social Security as well. I meant Medicare and Medicaid. I meant veterans benefits. I meant every single solitary thing in the government,’ Biden said in a Jan. 31, 1995, speech on the Senate floor. But the Biden campaign also cites dozens of examples of votes cast by Biden to shield Social Security from cuts or to expand benefits.”

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Sanders does not have much time to change the trajectory of this race. Michigan is one of the six states voting next Tuesday that will collectively award 352 delegates. Biden is expected to win Mississippi, on account of its sizable African American population, though Sanders will fly there on Friday to deliver a speech aimed at black voters. Missouri, Washington state, Idaho and North Dakota are the other four prizes. The following Tuesday, two days after the Phoenix debate, brings primaries in four states, with 577 delegates on the line: Arizona, Florida, Illinois and Ohio. By the end of March, about two-thirds of delegates will have been awarded.

Sanders said he wants a substantive debate over policy differences, not “Trump-type” personal attacks. “Joe and I have a very different vision for the future of this country, and Joe and I are running very different campaigns,” he said on Wednesday. “My hope is that, in the coming months, we will be able to debate and discuss the very significant differences that we have.”

Biden appears determined to portray Sanders as divisive and eager to avoid getting bogged down in a back-and-forth over issues of his opponent’s choosing. “What we can’t let happen in the next few weeks is let this primary turn into a campaign of negative attacks,” he told reporters in Los Angeles around the time Sanders spoke in Vermont. “The only thing that will do is help Donald Trump.”

There are clear echoes from Biden of Clinton’s messaging after Super Tuesday four years ago. In an interview that aired this morning on NBC’s “Today” show, Biden said “it’s ridiculous” for Sanders to say that “the establishment” was responsible for his wins on Super Tuesday. “You got beaten by overwhelming support I have from the African American community, Bernie,” said Biden. “You got beaten

because of suburban women, Bernie. You got beaten because of the middle-class, hardworking folks out there, Bernie. You've raised a lot more money than I have, Bernie.”

Meanwhile, members of the Democratic establishment continue to endorse Biden. Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer became the latest to jump on the Biden bandwagon this morning. She delivered the Democratic response to the State of the Union last month and sometimes gets mentioned as a possible running mate. Biden also rolled out support this morning from Rep. Val Demings (D-Fla.), one of the House impeachment managers, as well as Reps. Dutch Ruppersberger and David Trone, both Maryland Democrats.

Biden spent most of the past year focused on President Trump in his public comments. In recent weeks, he pivoted to present himself as the Democratic Party’s best alternative to stop Sanders from securing the nomination. Now that he’s essentially won that argument, Biden shifted back toward the Trump-focused message and seems intent to ignore Sanders’s attacks as much as possible while issuing vague calls for the party to unify. “Rhetorical question,” Biden said on the “Today” show, “have you ever, ever seen a sitting president get so involved in a Democratic primary and focus so much attention on not wanting a single person, me, to become the nominee?”

During a fundraiser last night in the Bel Air neighborhood of Los Angeles, Biden never referred to Sanders’s challenge during 20 minutes of remarks. Speaking to 350 people in a former studio executive’s backyard – Leonardo DiCaprio and his mother were in the crowd – he reminisced instead on the accomplishments of Barack Obama’s administration, including Obamacare, the auto industry bailout and the Paris climate accord. He remembered how bad the economy was when they took power in 2009. “Everything but locusts landed on his desk,” Biden said. Suggesting that Sanders’s attacks were on his mind, Biden mused as an aside at one point about his support for raising Social Security benefits for people over 85.

A third commercial released by Sanders on Wednesday features audio of Obama praising him in 2016 and footage of the two men walking chummily together along the White House colonnade. Asked about the ad, Sanders acknowledged that he and Obama aren’t best friends but added that they “talk every now and then.” Sanders said he signed off on the commercial to clear up “a lot of dishonesty” about his relationship with Obama, an apparent reference to news reports that he considered launching a primary challenge against the then-president in 2012.

Some of Warren’s aides privately hoped she would stay in the race through the Phoenix debate. The former high school debate state champion excelled in that format and raised money after recent strong performances. But she received only 28 of the 1,338 delegates that were available on Tuesday, finishing third in Massachusetts (which she represents in the Senate) and fourth in Oklahoma (where she grew up), although that number may rise slightly from the Golden State.

As she prepared to suspend her campaign, top surrogates and allies of Warren and Sanders started preliminary discussions about ways their two camps could unite and push a common liberal agenda. Annie Linskey and Sean Sullivan reported that these conversations largely involved members of Congress who back Sanders reaching out to those in Warren's camp to explore the prospect that she might endorse him. But Warren associates and Biden’s camp were also talking about a potential endorsement.

“It is not clear that Warren would immediately — or ever — back Sanders,” Annie and Sean report. “She stayed on the sidelines during the 2016 Democratic primary ... eventually throwing her support to Clinton and hoping to be selected as her running mate. Warren also met with Biden in 2015 as he was considering a presidential bid of his own. At the time Biden floated the idea that they could join forces on the same ticket, but soon he decided not to challenge Clinton.”

A silver lining of Sanders’s continuing attacks could be that Biden looks more moderate, which might work to his advantage in a general election match-up against Trump. It certainly makes it harder for the GOP to portray Biden as some kind of crypto socialist.

Sanders was candid during his news conference in Burlington about his failure to bring new voters into the process the way he needs. “I will be honest with you: We have not done as well in bringing young people into the political process,” he told reporters. “It is not easy.”

“In some parts of the Sanders orbit, there have been private discussions about how to reassure Democrats,” Sean Sullivan and Bob Costa report. “Some close Sanders allies believe the distance between the Sanders movement and the party have caused broader issues, especially when Biden is portraying himself as a unifier. ... As Sanders spoke in Vermont on Wednesday afternoon, a handful of his prominent supporters quietly connected by phone and text message ... In these discussions, some debated whether Sanders's anti-establishment message was enough. ‘We've got to be ready for when the party gets cold feet on Biden and looks to us,’ one of the Democrats said. ‘We can't just keep running the same playbook again and again.’ A second ... added that there are some leading liberals in Sanders's orbit who would like to see ‘less Michael Moore and the Squad’ on the campaign trail.”

It's a small consolation for Warren, but she outlasted Bloomberg in the race after torpedoing his candidacy during the Las Vegas debate. That's a moral victory of sorts for Warren, who ran as a populist, just as it was for Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) when she stayed in the race half a day longer than Pete Buttigieg, whose success in the race as the former mayor of a small town deeply annoyed her because she didn't think a woman with his same profile would have made it that far.

A billion-dollar question: How much does Bloomberg now help Biden in the upcoming primaries? "Bloomberg has pledged to employ large field staffs in six swing states in the general election, even though he is no longer a candidate. The billionaire's data operation, Hawkfish, will also continue operating to elect Democrats up and down the ballot," Matt Viser and Amy Wang report. "Bloomberg's aides, however, have not announced whether they will take out ads in the primary campaign to help Biden or whether Bloomberg campaign staffers in upcoming primary states will work for Biden's nomination. Campaign finance rules generally give self-funded campaigns significant leeway to spend money, even if the funds support other candidates. Bloomberg also has the option of renaming or rehiring his staff as part of a separate independent group to help Biden."

Where Bloomberg spent on ads, and where he won votes

In states with at least 95 percent of precincts reporting

| STATE | VOTE SHARE | AD SPENDING | VOTES   | SPENDING PER VOTE |   |
|-------|------------|-------------|---------|-------------------|---|
| Minn. | 8.3%       | $13M       | 62,000  | $220      |    |
| Tex.  | 14.9%      | $54M       | 313,000 | $170      |    |
| Vt.   | 9.1%       | $2.3M      | 13,000  | $170      |    |
| Ala.  | 11.7%      | $8.9M      | 53,000  | $170      |    |
| Okla. | 13.9%      | $5.6M      | 42,000  | $130      |    |
| Tenn. | 15.4%      | $7.9M      | 80,000  | $100      |    |
| N.C.  | 13.0%      | $15M       | 172,000 | $90       |    |
| Va.   | 9.7%       | $7.4M      | 128,000 | $60       |  |

Note: Vote totals as of March 4 at 1:14 p.m.

Sources: Advertising Analytics and Edison Research.

Biden is considering whether to ask for Secret Service protection.

The campaign began privately deliberating whether to formally request Secret Service protection for the candidate after protesters rushed the stage at his Tuesday night event in Los Angeles in what experts called a major security breach. “Both Biden and [Sanders] rely on private security firms to handle their public appearances, which is unusual this late in a presidential campaign cycle in comparison with 2016, 2012 and 2008,” David Nakamura and Carol Leonnig report. “Campaigns must request protection from the DHS, and a bipartisan congressional advisory committee — led by the Senate majority leader, currently Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) — helps review the request before the DHS secretary makes a decision. Outsourcing security to the federal government can be a boon for cash-strapped campaigns and also bestow a heightened legitimacy on candidates. But some candidates in past presidential campaign cycles have tried to hold off over concerns that a large security entourage could hamper their ability to interact more directly with supporters.” Sanders had protection for several months during the 2016 primaries, but his campaign did not immediately respond to questions on the subject.

Gov. Steve Bullock is expected to run for Senate in Montana.

In a recruiting coup for national Democrats, the former presidential candidate is telling people that “he is now inclined to run” against Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.), the New York Times reports. “Bullock has only a few days to finalize his decision: The filing deadline to run in Montana is Monday.”

A former prisoner of Cuba said Sanders asked him “what’s so wrong” with the country.

During a one-hour meeting in 2014, Sanders told American prisoner Alan Gross, who was jailed by the communist regime for five years, that he didn't understand why others criticized Cuba, Gross alleged in an interview with NPR: “He said, quote: 'I don't know what's so wrong with this country.'" Sanders's campaign declined to comment about the meeting with Gross, who said two other senators were present. Sen. Jon Tester (D-Mont.) said he did not recall the discussion. A source close to former senator Heidi Heitkamp (D-N.D.) told NPR she remembers Sanders seemed to disregard the meeting with Gross and that an uncomfortable exchange occurred, but she did not recall the exact remark.

Female activists are setting their sights on the No. 2 spot.

“They’re insisting that a woman — specifically a woman of color — be the running mate for whichever white man will probably be challenging Trump in November,” the 19th reports. “Rep. Marcia L. Fudge (D-Ohio) said she hears from voters nationwide who want a black woman as vice president. She said such a pick is ‘the only chance the Democratic Party has to win the presidency and to win down ballot.’”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The coronavirus

The House passed an $8.3 billion package, as the U.S. death toll reached 11.

The Senate could act on the measure to fund the coronavirus response as soon as today. "Trump is expected to sign the legislation, which is more than triple the size of the White House's budget request from last week," Erica Werner and Mike DeBonis report. "The vote in the House was 415-2. ... The political deal helped push financial markets to surge on Wednesday." The two "no" votes came from GOP Reps. Andy Biggs (Ariz.) and Ken Buck (Colo.), who argued that the bill's spending levels were excessive. "The package includes more than $3 billion for research and development on vaccines, therapeutics and other treatments, as well as $2.2 billion for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to support the response from federal, state, and local public health agencies, including for lab testing and infection control. Other parts of the deal include close to $1 billion for medical supplies, health-care preparedness and community health centers, among other things. Also included is $1 billion in loan subsidies for small businesses ... Some 85 percent of the money in the bill would be spent domestically, but there is also $1.25 billion for the State Department to assist in battling the spread of the coronavirus overseas. This would include evacuation expenses and humanitarian aid, among other things.”

Expanded coronavirus testing may overwhelm lab capacity, experts say.

“A day after Vice President Pence touted a new policy allowing ‘any American’ to be tested for the novel coronavirus with a doctor’s order ... Health experts warned the action might inadvertently send the wrong message, prompting a surge in demand for tests from people with mild symptoms who should simply stay home until they recover. They also noted that laboratory capacity for virus testing, while on the rise, is still lagging. Tests that can be done in doctor’s offices don’t exist,” Amy Goldstein, Carolyn Johnson, Lena Sun and Laurie McGinley report. “Sixty public health labs are now running the just-fixed CDC test. In the next several days and weeks, testing capacity is expected to increase as more labs come online and private companies ship thousands of test kits. Pence’s announcement took many officials at [HHS] and the CDC by surprise, according to an HHS official.”

In New York, the virus spread quickly from a man to his family to a neighbor to friends.

“By Wednesday afternoon, another friend, his wife and three of their children were also infected,” Ben Guarino, Sarah Pulliam Bailey and Paul Schwartzmann report. “In the span of 48 hours, what began as one family’s medical crisis had spiraled well beyond their Westchester County home, shuttering Jewish schools and synagogues and crystallizing the virus’s power to propel anxiety across a region that is among the nation’s most densely populated.”

Nearly 300 million kids are out of school right now. So far, 11 countries, plus Hong Kong and Macao, have shut down all schools to stop the spread of the virus. (Valerie Strauss)

America's health system is showing why it's not ready for a pandemic.

“Ventilators and intensive care units, necessary to keep the most acutely ill patients alive, are largely limited to larger hospitals and academic medical centers in cities. ... Nationwide, worries are growing about a lack of hospital beds to quarantine and treat infected patients. Major medical centers are typically full even without a flood of coronavirus patients,” Christopher Rowland and Peter Whoriskey report. “Despite weeks of preparations, health planners continue to fret about shortages of masks and gowns for hospital staff, as well as lifesaving mechanical respirators for patients with severe cases of the disease. ... Budget-conscious health systems do not maintain large volumes of reserve supplies just for the possibility of a pandemic, said William Jaquis, president of the American College of Emergency Physicians. That leaves the system vulnerable. ... Federal funding for emergency preparedness in health care has been in a slow, steady decline for more than 15 years.”

Coronavirus anxiety is everywhere, and there is no cure.

“Last week, you pressed elevator buttons with abandon. You weren't afraid of the free weights in the gym. You washed your hands for barely enough time to say 'Happy Birthday' once, let alone sing it twice. How bold are you now?” Maura Judkis and Avi Selk write. “Coronavirus anxiety has outpaced the virus itself. ... Nikhil Merchant, 38, has taken to meticulously wiping down the treadmill at his suburban Los Angeles gym before he uses it. ‘Your senses are heightened to kind of superimpose germs sitting on that machine,’ he says. Merchant had completed the ritual on Monday and was about to begin his run when he spotted a wad of chewing gum in the treadmill's cellphone pocket and fled the gym in ~~over~~overwhelming mysophobic disgust. ... Suspicion of treadmills and elevators mutates into suspicion of fellow humans: Are other people washing their hands for two Happy Birthdays? How much do I really know about the habits and histories all these friends and co-workers and strangers who are touching all the things I'm touching right before I forget not to touch my face?"

---

Quote of the day

"I haven't touched my face in weeks. It's been weeks. I miss it," Trump said during a White House update on the coronavirus response. (JM Rieger)

The virus spread from China. Now, China doesn't want the world to spread it back.

"Health authorities in the prosperous province of Zhejiang had finally lowered the alert level from one to two after six weeks, satisfied their draconian measures to contain the novel coronavirus had worked," Anna Fifield reports. "Then Wang, a 31-year-old waitress who had been working in the northern Italian city of Bergamo, came home to Qingtian county, west of the city of Wenzhou. ... Traveling with five others from the same restaurant, she changed planes in Moscow and took off for Shanghai. ... When Wang, whom authorities have identified only by her family name, arrived in China, she was immediately put into quarantine. On Sunday, she tested positive for the [virus] ... Seven others who worked in the Bergamo restaurant and flew back home were diagnosed this week, the Qingtian government said. This is China's new coronavirus challenge."

Conspiracy theorists claim the U.S. is to blame for the virus. China is happy to encourage them. "In recent days, run-of-the-mill mockery of the White House has taken a darker turn as the Chinese Internet became inundated by the theory, subtly stoked by the Chinese government, that the coronavirus originated in the United States. The U.S. government, one version of the theory goes, has been covering up mounting cases, and perhaps thousands of deaths, by classifying them as regular flu," Gerry Shih reports.

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be overlooked

John Roberts released a statement criticizing Chuck Schumer.

The chief justice issued a rare rebuke of a sitting member of Congress, chastising the Senate's top Democrat for saying at a rally outside the Supreme Court that Trump's two nominees to the court would "pay the price" if they vote against abortion rights. "Justices know that criticism comes with the territory, but threatening statements of this sort from the highest levels of government are not only inappropriate, they are dangerous," Roberts said. "All members of the court will continue to do their job, without fear or favor, from whatever quarter." Schumer, speaking as the Supreme Court heard arguments in an important abortion case from Louisiana, called out Brett M. Kavanaugh and Neil M. Gorsuch by name: "I want to tell you, Gorsuch; I want to tell you, Kavanaugh: You have released the whirlwind, and you will pay the price. You won't know what hit you if you go forward with these awful decisions."

“The GOP denounced Schumer and criticized the media for what they said was a lack of outrage,” Robert Barnes and Colby Itkowitz report.

“Democrats demanded to know why Roberts had not spoken out last week when Trump singled out liberal Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor for criticism, or why he did not defend the federal judge Trump denounced for her oversight of the trial of the president’s friend Roger Stone. The episode underscored the partisan politics that have engulfed the fight over the judiciary, which is supposed to be the nonpartisan branch of the government.”

With Roe v. Wade in jeopardy, the Louisiana case will probably come down to Roberts.

“The court’s four liberals appeared convinced that the Louisiana law at issue, requiring admitting privileges at nearby hospitals for abortion-clinic doctors, is identical to one from Texas that the Supreme Court struck down four years ago. That appeared to leave Roberts, now at the court’s ideological center, holding the deciding vote,” Barnes and Ann Marimow report. “As the case was argued, he asked a variation of the same question to all three lawyers addressing the justices: Should the court undertake a fact-dependent, state-by-state analysis when reviewing such restrictions? That could indicate he felt he could distinguish Louisiana’s law from the Texas statute. Or it could mean he agreed with challengers that similar laws were doomed because of the court’s precedent from 2016. Roberts, a dissenter in the Texas case, did not indicate what he believed was the proper answer. ... Among Wednesday’s spectators was Roberts’s wife, Jane Roberts, who before the chief justice joined the court was legal counsel for Feminists for Life of America, a group that opposes abortion.”

The FBI fell short in assessing homegrown terror threats.

“In a 41-page report, Inspector General Michael Horowitz wrote that while the bureau seemed to recognize its failings, it had ‘not taken sufficient action’ to fix the problems,” Matt Zapposky reports. “Horowitz noted that in the more than 20 homegrown terrorist attacks in the United States since Sept. 11, 2001, several suspects had been previously assessed by the bureau as a potential threat but not fully investigated.”

A noose was found on the gunman’s locker at a Milwaukee Coors facility years before his shooting rampage there last week. “Current and former employees of the Molson Coors brewery here say there is a long-held culture of racism, including racist cartoons placed in workspaces, the n-word scrawled in break rooms and bathrooms and nooses hung at the facility — one on the locker of an employee who killed five co-workers there last week,” Annie Gowen and Katie Zezima report. While police have not provided a motive for the Feb. 26 rampage, they said in a statement that, based on a preliminary investigation, neither race nor racism played a role in the shooting.

A Pentagon contract linguist was charged with espionage.

The woman, assigned to a U.S. Special Operations task force in Iraq, was charged with turning over the names of human informants and other classified data to a Lebanese man with ties to the militant group Hezbollah. “The Justice Department said Mariam Taha Thompson, 61, formerly of Rochester, Minn., was charged with one count of conspiracy and one count of delivering defense information to aid a foreign government. Prosecutors alleged that she passed the information to a man in whom she had a romantic interest,” Spencer Hsu reports. “Thompson appeared in federal court in Washington on Wednesday. The FBI arrested her Feb. 27 at a U.S. military facility in Irbil, Iraq, where she worked.”

A federal judge ordered attorneys for 9/11 victims to detail threats allegedly made against potential witnesses in a lawsuit targeting Saudi Arabia. The victims' attorneys have argued they need to protect the identities of potential witnesses, pointing to the murder of Washington Post contributing columnist Jamal Khashoggi as an example of the kind of danger faced by those who speak out against the regime in Riyadh, Shayna Jacobs reports.

---

Social media speed read

Trump mocked Bloomberg for dropping out of the race, and Bloomberg responded with a clip from “Star Wars”:

Trump, saying the quiet part out loud, admitted that he opposes Jeff Sessions because he didn't take control of the Russia probe:

Washington state asked voters not to lick envelopes to mail in their ballots, in light of the coronavirus:

WA Secretary of State ✓

@secstatewa

As recommended by @WADeptHealth, please use alternative methods to seal your ballot return envelopes, such as a wet sponge or cloth.

Washington's Presidential Primary is March 10. Use a ballot drop box to return your ballot by 8 p.m. Election Day. #waelex

♥ 64 10:58 PM - Mar 3, 2020

🗨 91 people are talking about this

And Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) wore this to the House floor as members voted on the coronavirus spending bill:

Jim Himes ✓

@jahimes

You won't believe the shoes Matt Gaetz is wearing today.
#FloridaMan

♥ 8,458 9:26 PM - Mar 4, 2020

💬 3,356 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

“Jeopardy” host Alex Trebek provided an inspiring update a year after his pancreatic cancer diagnosis:

Seth Meyers thinks Trump is lying when he claims that he hasn't touched his face in weeks:

Sam Bee joked that Democrats now face a close race between Sanders, Biden and the coronavirus:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Trailer for news and insight on political campaigns around the country, from David Weigel. 435 districts. 50 states. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: With Elizabeth Warren out, Bernie Sanders hankers for a one-on-one debate with Joe Biden
Date: Thursday, March 5, 2020 9:42:19 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

With Elizabeth Warren out, Bernie Sanders hankers for a one-on-one debate with Joe Biden

Sen. Elizabeth Warren suspended her presidential campaign this morning, probably clearing the way for Bernie Sanders to get the head-to-head debate with Joe Biden that he craves in Phoenix on March 15. It's the next obvious moment when the independent senator from Vermont might be able to rewrite the narrative of the contest for the Democratic nomination.

After moderates consolidated behind the former vice president, Sanders finds himself back in the role of underdog, just as he was against Hillary Clinton at this moment four years ago. Last week, he seemed poised – and pleased – to avoid this position. But Biden won 10 of the 14 states that voted on Super Tuesday, forging the kind of broad coalition that could win the nomination and presidency. Then former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg dropped out on Wednesday and endorsed the former vice president after his $600 million bet failed to pay off. With California still tallying results, Biden has 433 delegates to Sanders's 388.

With Warren (D-Mass.) out, the only other major candidate left is Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii). She earned a delegate from American Samoa on Tuesday, but Democratic National Committee officials signaled that they will raise the threshold to qualify for the Phoenix debate so that this is no longer sufficient to get onstage.

Sanders's messaging against Biden grew unfocused during the impeachment trial and stayed muddled in the run-up to South Carolina, which allowed Biden to get off the mat. Recognizing this, Sanders has crystalized what will be his five-part case against Biden. He previewed the message during a news conference yesterday afternoon in Burlington, Vt.

“Joe is going to have to explain to the people, the union workers in the Midwest, why he's supported disastrous trade agreements,” Sanders said. “Joe is going to have to explain to the American people why he voted for a Wall Street bailout, something that I vigorously opposed.” Sanders added that “Joe is also going to have to explain” his vote to authorize the Iraq War, “a disastrous bankruptcy bill which benefited the credit card companies” and his onetime advocacy for freezing Social Security benefits.

Sanders is up on the air now in Michigan and other states voting next week with two new attack ads against Biden, focused on trade and Social Security. He hopes to use Biden's vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement as a cudgel to prevent white working-class voters from rallying behind Biden in the Wolverine State's primary next Tuesday. This constituency allowed Sanders to win an upset over Clinton there in 2016. "Only one candidate for president has consistently opposed every disastrous trade deal, and that candidate is Bernie Sanders," a narrator says.

Glenn Kessler has a new fact check this morning of Sanders's attack against Biden over Social Security: "[It] mostly relates to a mid-1990s effort to rein in budget deficits through adoption of a balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution. Biden voted for it in 1996, though it did not pass. A balanced-budget amendment by itself would not require cuts in certain programs, but in the 1980s, Biden had co-sponsored a bill calling for a one-year across-the-board freeze in spending, including eliminating cost-of-living increases for one year for Social Security and Medicare.

"During the balanced-budget debate a decade later, Biden cited that proposal to show that he cared about budget deficits. ‘When I argued that we should freeze federal spending, I meant Social Security as well. I meant Medicare and Medicaid. I meant veterans benefits. I meant every single solitary thing in the government,’ Biden said in a Jan. 31, 1995, speech on the Senate floor. But the Biden campaign also cites dozens of examples of votes cast by Biden to shield Social Security from cuts or to expand benefits.”

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Sanders does not have much time to change the trajectory of this race. Michigan is one of the six states voting next Tuesday that will collectively award 352 delegates. Biden is expected to win Mississippi, on account of its sizable African American population, though Sanders will fly there on Friday to deliver a speech aimed at black voters. Missouri, Washington state, Idaho and North Dakota are the other four prizes. The following Tuesday, two days after the Phoenix debate, brings primaries in four states, with 577 delegates on the line: Arizona, Florida, Illinois and Ohio. By the end of March, about two-thirds of delegates will have been awarded.

Sanders said he wants a substantive debate over policy differences, not “Trump-type” personal attacks. “Joe and I have a very different vision for the future of this country, and Joe and I are running very different campaigns,” he said on Wednesday. “My hope is that, in the coming months, we will be able to debate and discuss the very significant differences that we have.”

Biden appears determined to portray Sanders as divisive and eager to avoid getting bogged down in a back-and-forth over issues of his opponent’s choosing. “What we can’t let happen in the next few weeks is let this primary turn into a campaign of negative attacks,” he told reporters in Los Angeles around the time Sanders spoke in Vermont. “The only thing that will do is help Donald Trump.”

There are clear echoes from Biden of Clinton’s messaging after Super Tuesday four years ago. In an interview that aired this morning on NBC’s “Today” show, Biden said “it’s ridiculous” for Sanders to say that “the establishment” was responsible for his wins on Super Tuesday. “You got beaten by overwhelming support I have from the African American community, Bernie,” said Biden. “You got beaten

because of suburban women, Bernie. You got beaten because of the middle-class, hardworking folks out there, Bernie. You've raised a lot more money than I have, Bernie.”

Meanwhile, members of the Democratic establishment continue to endorse Biden. Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer became the latest to jump on the Biden bandwagon this morning. She delivered the Democratic response to the State of the Union last month and sometimes gets mentioned as a possible running mate. Biden also rolled out support this morning from Rep. Val Demings (D-Fla.), one of the House impeachment managers, as well as Reps. Dutch Ruppersberger and David Trone, both Maryland Democrats.

Biden spent most of the past year focused on President Trump in his public comments. In recent weeks, he pivoted to present himself as the Democratic Party’s best alternative to stop Sanders from securing the nomination. Now that he’s essentially won that argument, Biden shifted back toward the Trump-focused message and seems intent to ignore Sanders’s attacks as much as possible while issuing vague calls for the party to unify. “Rhetorical question,” Biden said on the “Today” show, “have you ever, ever seen a sitting president get so involved in a Democratic primary and focus so much attention on not wanting a single person, me, to become the nominee?”

During a fundraiser last night in the Bel Air neighborhood of Los Angeles, Biden never referred to Sanders’s challenge during 20 minutes of remarks. Speaking to 350 people in a former studio executive’s backyard – Leonardo DiCaprio and his mother were in the crowd – he reminisced instead on the accomplishments of Barack Obama’s administration, including Obamacare, the auto industry bailout and the Paris climate accord. He remembered how bad the economy was when they took power in 2009. “Everything but locusts landed on his desk,” Biden said. Suggesting that Sanders’s attacks were on his mind, Biden mused as an aside at one point about his support for raising Social Security benefits for people over 85.

A third commercial released by Sanders on Wednesday features audio of Obama praising him in 2016 and footage of the two men walking chummily together along the White House colonnade. Asked about the ad, Sanders acknowledged that he and Obama aren’t best friends but added that they “talk every now and then.” Sanders said he signed off on the commercial to clear up “a lot of dishonesty” about his relationship with Obama, an apparent reference to news reports that he considered launching a primary challenge against the then-president in 2012.

Some of Warren’s aides privately hoped she would stay in the race through the Phoenix debate. The former high school debate state champion excelled in that format and raised money after recent strong performances. But she received only 28 of the 1,338 delegates that were available on Tuesday, finishing third in Massachusetts (which she represents in the Senate) and fourth in Oklahoma (where she grew up), although that number may rise slightly from the Golden State.

As she prepared to suspend her campaign, top surrogates and allies of Warren and Sanders started preliminary discussions about ways their two camps could unite and push a common liberal agenda. Annie Linskey and Sean Sullivan reported that these conversations largely involved members of Congress who back Sanders reaching out to those in Warren's camp to explore the prospect that she might endorse him. But Warren associates and Biden’s camp were also talking about a potential endorsement.

“It is not clear that Warren would immediately — or ever — back Sanders,” Annie and Sean report. “She stayed on the sidelines during the 2016 Democratic primary ... eventually throwing her support to Clinton and hoping to be selected as her running mate. Warren also met with Biden in

2015 as he was considering a presidential bid of his own. At the time Biden floated the idea that they could join forces on the same ticket, but soon he decided not to challenge Clinton.”

A silver lining of Sanders’s continuing attacks could be that Biden looks more moderate, which might work to his advantage in a general election match-up against Trump. It certainly makes it harder for the GOP to portray Biden as some kind of crypto socialist.

Sanders was candid during his news conference in Burlington about his failure to bring new voters into the process the way he needs. “I will be honest with you: We have not done as well in bringing young people into the political process,” he told reporters. “It is not easy.”

“In some parts of the Sanders orbit, there have been private discussions about how to reassure Democrats,” Sean Sullivan and Bob Costa report. “Some close Sanders allies believe the distance between the Sanders movement and the party have caused broader issues, especially when Biden is portraying himself as a unifier. ... As Sanders spoke in Vermont on Wednesday afternoon, a handful of his prominent supporters quietly connected by phone and text message ... In these discussions, some debated whether Sanders's anti-establishment message was enough. ‘We've got to be ready for when the party gets cold feet on Biden and looks to us,’ one of the Democrats said. ‘We can't just keep running the same playbook again and again.’ A second ... added that there are some leading liberals in Sanders's orbit who would like to see ‘less Michael Moore and the Squad’ on the campaign trail.”

It's a small consolation for Warren, but she outlasted Bloomberg in the race after torpedoing his candidacy during the Las Vegas debate. That's a moral victory of sorts for Warren, who ran as a populist, just as it was for Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) when she stayed in the race half a day longer than Pete Buttigieg, whose success in the race as the former mayor of a small town deeply annoyed her because she didn't think a woman with his same profile would have made it that far.

A billion-dollar question: How much does Bloomberg now help Biden in the upcoming primaries? "Bloomberg has pledged to employ large field staffs in six swing states in the general election, even though he is no longer a candidate. The billionaire's data operation, Hawkfish, will also continue operating to elect Democrats up and down the ballot," Matt Viser and Amy Wang report. "Bloomberg's aides, however, have not announced whether they will take out ads in the primary campaign to help Biden or whether Bloomberg campaign staffers in upcoming primary states will work for Biden's nomination. Campaign finance rules generally give self-funded campaigns significant leeway to spend money, even if the funds support other candidates. Bloomberg also has the option of renaming or rehiring his staff as part of a separate independent group to help Biden."

Where Bloomberg spent on ads, and where he won votes

In states with at least 95 percent of precincts reporting

| STATE | VOTE SHARE | AD SPENDING | VOTES   | SPENDING PER VOTE |   |
|-------|------------|-------------|---------|-------------------|---|
| Minn. | 8.3%       | $13M       | 62,000  | $220      |    |
| Tex.  | 14.9%      | $54M       | 313,000 | $170      |    |
| Vt.   | 9.1%       | $2.3M      | 13,000  | $170      |    |
| Ala.  | 11.7%      | $8.9M      | 53,000  | $170      |    |
| Okla. | 13.9%      | $5.6M      | 42,000  | $130      |    |
| Tenn. | 15.4%      | $7.9M      | 80,000  | $100      |    |
| N.C.  | 13.0%      | $15M       | 172,000 | $90       |    |
| Va.   | 9.7%       | $7.4M      | 128,000 | $60       |  |

Note: Vote totals as of March 4 at 1:14 p.m.

Sources: Advertising Analytics and Edison Research.

Biden is considering whether to ask for Secret Service protection.

The campaign began privately deliberating whether to formally request Secret Service protection for the candidate after protesters rushed the stage at his Tuesday night event in Los Angeles in what experts called a major security breach. “Both Biden and [Sanders] rely on private security firms to handle their public appearances, which is unusual this late in a presidential campaign cycle in comparison with 2016, 2012 and 2008,” David Nakamura and Carol Leonnig report. “Campaigns must request protection from the DHS, and a bipartisan congressional advisory committee — led by the Senate majority leader, currently Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) — helps review the request before the DHS secretary makes a decision. Outsourcing security to the federal government can be a boon for cash-strapped campaigns and also bestow a heightened legitimacy on candidates. But some candidates in past presidential campaign cycles have tried to hold off over concerns that a large security entourage could hamper their ability to interact more directly with supporters.” Sanders had protection for several months during the 2016 primaries, but his campaign did not immediately respond to questions on the subject.

Gov. Steve Bullock is expected to run for Senate in Montana.

In a recruiting coup for national Democrats, the former presidential candidate is telling people that “he is now inclined to run” against Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.), the New York Times reports. “Bullock has only a few days to finalize his decision: The filing deadline to run in Montana is Monday.”

A former prisoner of Cuba said Sanders asked him “what’s so wrong” with the country.

During a one-hour meeting in 2014, Sanders told American prisoner Alan Gross, who was jailed by the communist regime for five years, that he didn't understand why others criticized Cuba, Gross alleged in an interview with NPR: “He said, quote: 'I don't know what's so wrong with this country.'" Sanders's campaign declined to comment about the meeting with Gross, who said two other senators were present. Sen. Jon Tester (D-Mont.) said he did not recall the discussion. A source close to former senator Heidi Heitkamp (D-N.D.) told NPR she remembers Sanders seemed to disregard the meeting with Gross and that an uncomfortable exchange occurred, but she did not recall the exact remark.

Female activists are setting their sights on the No. 2 spot.

“They’re insisting that a woman — specifically a woman of color — be the running mate for whichever white man will probably be challenging Trump in November,” the 19th reports. “Rep. Marcia L. Fudge (D-Ohio) said she hears from voters nationwide who want a black woman as vice president. She said such a pick is ‘the only chance the Democratic Party has to win the presidency and to win down ballot.’”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The coronavirus

The House passed an $8.3 billion package, as the U.S. death toll reached 11.

The Senate could act on the measure to fund the coronavirus response as soon as today. "Trump is expected to sign the legislation, which is more than triple the size of the White House's budget request from last week," Erica Werner and Mike DeBonis report. "The vote in the House was 415-2. ... The political deal helped push financial markets to surge on Wednesday." The two "no" votes came from GOP Reps. Andy Biggs (Ariz.) and Ken Buck (Colo.), who argued that the bill's spending levels were excessive. "The package includes more than $3 billion for research and development on vaccines, therapeutics and other treatments, as well as $2.2 billion for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to support the response from federal, state, and local public health agencies, including for lab testing and infection control. Other parts of the deal include close to $1 billion for medical supplies, health-care preparedness and community health centers, among other things. Also included is $1 billion in loan subsidies for small businesses ... Some 85 percent of the money in the bill would be spent domestically, but there is also $1.25 billion for the State Department to assist in battling the spread of the coronavirus overseas. This would include evacuation expenses and humanitarian aid, among other things.”

Expanded coronavirus testing may overwhelm lab capacity, experts say.

“A day after Vice President Pence touted a new policy allowing ‘any American’ to be tested for the novel coronavirus with a doctor’s order ... Health experts warned the action might inadvertently send the wrong message, prompting a surge in demand for tests from people with mild symptoms who should simply stay home until they recover. They also noted that laboratory capacity for virus testing, while on the rise, is still lagging. Tests that can be done in doctor’s offices don’t exist,” Amy Goldstein, Carolyn Johnson, Lena Sun and Laurie McGinley report. “Sixty public health labs are now running the just-fixed CDC test. In the next several days and weeks, testing capacity is expected to increase as more labs come online and private companies ship thousands of test kits. Pence’s announcement took many officials at [HHS] and the CDC by surprise, according to an HHS official.”

In New York, the virus spread quickly from a man to his family to a neighbor to friends.

“By Wednesday afternoon, another friend, his wife and three of their children were also infected,” Ben Guarino, Sarah Pulliam Bailey and Paul Schwartzmann report. “In the span of 48 hours, what began as one family’s medical crisis had spiraled well beyond their Westchester County home, shuttering Jewish schools and synagogues and crystallizing the virus’s power to propel anxiety across a region that is among the nation’s most densely populated.”

Nearly 300 million kids are out of school right now. So far, 11 countries, plus Hong Kong and Macao, have shut down all schools to stop the spread of the virus. (Valerie Strauss)

America's health system is showing why it's not ready for a pandemic.

“Ventilators and intensive care units, necessary to keep the most acutely ill patients alive, are largely limited to larger hospitals and academic medical centers in cities. ... Nationwide, worries are growing about a lack of hospital beds to quarantine and treat infected patients. Major medical centers are typically full even without a flood of coronavirus patients,” Christopher Rowland and Peter Whoriskey report. “Despite weeks of preparations, health planners continue to fret about shortages of masks and gowns for hospital staff, as well as lifesaving mechanical respirators for patients with severe cases of the disease. ... Budget-conscious health systems do not maintain large volumes of reserve supplies just for the possibility of a pandemic, said William Jaquis, president of the American College of Emergency Physicians. That leaves the system vulnerable. ... Federal funding for emergency preparedness in health care has been in a slow, steady decline for more than 15 years.”

Coronavirus anxiety is everywhere, and there is no cure.

“Last week, you pressed elevator buttons with abandon. You weren't afraid of the free weights in the gym. You washed your hands for barely enough time to say 'Happy Birthday' once, let alone sing it twice. How bold are you now?” Maura Judkis and Avi Selk write. “Coronavirus anxiety has outpaced the virus itself. ... Nikhil Merchant, 38, has taken to meticulously wiping down the treadmill at his suburban Los Angeles gym before he uses it. ‘Your senses are heightened to kind of superimpose germs sitting on that machine,’ he says. Merchant had completed the ritual on Monday and was about to begin his run when he spotted a wad of chewing gum in the treadmill's cellphone pocket and fled the gym in ~~over~~overwhelming mysophobic disgust. ... Suspicion of treadmills and elevators mutates into suspicion of fellow humans: Are other people washing their hands for two Happy Birthdays? How much do I really know about the habits and histories all these friends and co-workers and strangers who are touching all the things I'm touching right before I forget not to touch my face?"

---

Quote of the day

"I haven't touched my face in weeks. It's been weeks. I miss it," Trump said during a White House update on the coronavirus response. (JM Rieger)

The virus spread from China. Now, China doesn't want the world to spread it back.

"Health authorities in the prosperous province of Zhejiang had finally lowered the alert level from one to two after six weeks, satisfied their draconian measures to contain the novel coronavirus had worked," Anna Fifield reports. "Then Wang, a 31-year-old waitress who had been working in the northern Italian city of Bergamo, came home to Qingtian county, west of the city of Wenzhou. ... Traveling with five others from the same restaurant, she changed planes in Moscow and took off for Shanghai. ... When Wang, whom authorities have identified only by her family name, arrived in China, she was immediately put into quarantine. On Sunday, she tested positive for the [virus] ... Seven others who worked in the Bergamo restaurant and flew back home were diagnosed this week, the Qingtian government said. This is China's new coronavirus challenge."

Conspiracy theorists claim the U.S. is to blame for the virus. China is happy to encourage them. "In recent days, run-of-the-mill mockery of the White House has taken a darker turn as the Chinese Internet became inundated by the theory, subtly stoked by the Chinese government, that the coronavirus originated in the United States. The U.S. government, one version of the theory goes, has been covering up mounting cases, and perhaps thousands of deaths, by classifying them as regular flu," Gerry Shih reports.

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be overlooked

John Roberts released a statement criticizing Chuck Schumer.

The chief justice issued a rare rebuke of a sitting member of Congress, chastising the Senate's top Democrat for saying at a rally outside the Supreme Court that Trump's two nominees to the court would "pay the price" if they vote against abortion rights. "Justices know that criticism comes with the territory, but threatening statements of this sort from the highest levels of government are not only inappropriate, they are dangerous," Roberts said. "All members of the court will continue to do their job, without fear or favor, from whatever quarter." Schumer, speaking as the Supreme Court heard arguments in an important abortion case from Louisiana, called out Brett M. Kavanaugh and Neil M. Gorsuch by name: "I want to tell you, Gorsuch; I want to tell you, Kavanaugh: You have released the whirlwind, and you will pay the price. You won't know what hit you if you go forward with these awful decisions."

“The GOP denounced Schumer and criticized the media for what they said was a lack of outrage,” Robert Barnes and Colby Itkowitz report.

“Democrats demanded to know why Roberts had not spoken out last week when Trump singled out liberal Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor for criticism, or why he did not defend the federal judge Trump denounced for her oversight of the trial of the president’s friend Roger Stone. The episode underscored the partisan politics that have engulfed the fight over the judiciary, which is supposed to be the nonpartisan branch of the government.”

With Roe v. Wade in jeopardy, the Louisiana case will probably come down to Roberts.

“The court’s four liberals appeared convinced that the Louisiana law at issue, requiring admitting privileges at nearby hospitals for abortion-clinic doctors, is identical to one from Texas that the Supreme Court struck down four years ago. That appeared to leave Roberts, now at the court’s ideological center, holding the deciding vote,” Barnes and Ann Marimow report. “As the case was argued, he asked a variation of the same question to all three lawyers addressing the justices: Should the court undertake a fact-dependent, state-by-state analysis when reviewing such restrictions? That could indicate he felt he could distinguish Louisiana’s law from the Texas statute. Or it could mean he agreed with challengers that similar laws were doomed because of the court’s precedent from 2016. Roberts, a dissenter in the Texas case, did not indicate what he believed was the proper answer. ... Among Wednesday’s spectators was Roberts’s wife, Jane Roberts, who before the chief justice joined the court was legal counsel for Feminists for Life of America, a group that opposes abortion.”

The FBI fell short in assessing homegrown terror threats.

“In a 41-page report, Inspector General Michael Horowitz wrote that while the bureau seemed to recognize its failings, it had ‘not taken sufficient action’ to fix the problems,” Matt Zapposky reports. “Horowitz noted that in the more than 20 homegrown terrorist attacks in the United States since Sept. 11, 2001, several suspects had been previously assessed by the bureau as a potential threat but not fully investigated.”

A noose was found on the gunman’s locker at a Milwaukee Coors facility years before his shooting rampage there last week. “Current and former employees of the Molson Coors brewery here say there is a long-held culture of racism, including racist cartoons placed in workspaces, the n-word scrawled in break rooms and bathrooms and nooses hung at the facility — one on the locker of an employee who killed five co-workers there last week,” Annie Gowen and Katie Zezima report. While police have not provided a motive for the Feb. 26 rampage, they said in a statement that, based on a preliminary investigation, neither race nor racism played a role in the shooting.

A Pentagon contract linguist was charged with espionage.

The woman, assigned to a U.S. Special Operations task force in Iraq, was charged with turning over the names of human informants and other classified data to a Lebanese man with ties to the militant group Hezbollah. “The Justice Department said Mariam Taha Thompson, 61, formerly of Rochester, Minn., was charged with one count of conspiracy and one count of delivering defense information to aid a foreign government. Prosecutors alleged that she passed the information to a man in whom she had a romantic interest,” Spencer Hsu reports. “Thompson appeared in federal court in Washington on Wednesday. The FBI arrested her Feb. 27 at a U.S. military facility in Irbil, Iraq, where she worked.”

A federal judge ordered attorneys for 9/11 victims to detail threats allegedly made against potential witnesses in a lawsuit targeting Saudi Arabia. The victims' attorneys have argued they need to protect the identities of potential witnesses, pointing to the murder of Washington Post contributing columnist Jamal Khashoggi as an example of the kind of danger faced by those who speak out against the regime in Riyadh, Shayna Jacobs reports.

---

Social media speed read

Trump mocked Bloomberg for dropping out of the race, and Bloomberg responded with a clip from “Star Wars”:

Trump, saying the quiet part out loud, admitted that he opposes Jeff Sessions because he didn't take control of the Russia probe:

Washington state asked voters not to lick envelopes to mail in their ballots, in light of the coronavirus:

WA Secretary of State ✓

@secstatewa

As recommended by @WADeptHealth, please use alternative methods to seal your ballot return envelopes, such as a wet sponge or cloth.

Washington's Presidential Primary is March 10. Use a ballot drop box to return your ballot by 8 p.m. Election Day. #waelex

♥ 64 10:58 PM - Mar 3, 2020

🗨 91 people are talking about this

And Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) wore this to the House floor as members voted on the coronavirus spending bill:

Jim Himes ✓

@jahimes

You won't believe the shoes Matt Gaetz is wearing today.
#FloridaMan

♥ 8,458 9:26 PM - Mar 4, 2020

💬 3,356 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

“Jeopardy” host Alex Trebek provided an inspiring update a year after his pancreatic cancer diagnosis:

Seth Meyers thinks Trump is lying when he claims that he hasn't touched his face in weeks:

Sam Bee joked that Democrats now face a close race between Sanders, Biden and the coronavirus:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Trailer for news and insight on political campaigns around the country, from David Weigel. 435 districts. 50 states. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Most of Trump's own supporters think he's self-centered. His coronavirus response helps show why.
Date: Friday, March 6, 2020 8:43:45 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Most of Trump's own supporters think he's self-centered. His coronavirus response helps show why.

A national survey published Thursday by the Pew Research Center showed that 73 percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents believe "self-centered" describes President Trump either very or fairly well. Overall, 8 in 10 U.S. adults agree.

Eighty percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents said they agree with Trump on many or nearly all of the important issues facing the country; the same percentage approve of his job performance in the poll. But only 31 percent said they like the way Trump conducts himself as president. Half said they have mixed feelings, and 16 percent say they don't like his conduct.

Among the Republicans and GOP-leaning independents surveyed by Pew, 35 percent said he's prejudiced, 49 percent said he's even-tempered, 62 percent said he's morally upstanding and 71 percent said he's honest. But 87 percent said he fights for what they believe in. That's the key to his reservoir of support on the right.

---

Republicans widely view Trump as a fighter, but also self-centered

% who say each describes Trump very or fairly well

Source: Survey of U.S. adults conducted Feb. 4-15, 2020.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

---

Trump's town hall on Thursday night in Scranton, Pa., which aired live on Fox News and focused extensively on the novel coronavirus outbreak, captured these dynamics in miniature. The first audience question came from Katherine Pugh, an undecided voter, who said the Trump administration's initial response to the coronavirus “seemed to some as being confusing or minimizing.” She wondered “what plans are being considered on a federal level for the possibility of a long-term disruption” from its spread. Rather than discuss what’s next, Trump focused on touting his initial response.

He credited his own moves with the relatively small death toll – he said 11 Americans have died, though the number is now 12 – compared to other countries. “Well, actually, we are being given really tremendous marks – you look at Gallup, you look at other polls – for the way we have handled it,” he said. “And one of the things I did is I closed down the borders to China and to other areas that are very badly affected. ... And I closed them down very early against the advice of almost everybody. And we have been given rave reviews.”

There is no public evidence that there was widespread opposition to the travel restrictions in the administration. Moreover, the Gallup poll Trump referred to, conducted from Feb. 3 to Feb. 16, did not ask about Trump’s handling of the situation. Instead, it asked Americans about their confidence in the federal government’s ability to handle an outbreak in the United States. A lot has changed in the past three weeks, including the seesawing stock market and a spike in the number of confirmed cases in the country. The Dow fell 700 points Friday morning in the first few minutes after the opening bell.

An Economist-YouGov poll conducted earlier this week found that 41 percent of Americans thought Trump’s policies were not taking the risks seriously enough. Another 34 percent said his policy was appropriate. This poll finds that 68 percent of Americans are now either “somewhat” or “very” concerned about a coronavirus epidemic in the United States, up from 62 percent in an Economist-YouGov survey last month.

Trump himself has emerged as the administration’s greatest obstacle to sending a clear and consistent message about the coronavirus. Leading public health experts from across the government have found their messages undercut, drowned out and muddled by Trump’s push to downplay the outbreak with a mix of optimism, bombast and pseudoscience, Toluse Olorunnipa reports: “The president has repeatedly misstated the number of Americans who have tested positive for the virus and claimed it would ‘miraculously’ disappear in the spring. He has given a false timeline for the development of a vaccine, publicly questioned whether vaccinations for the flu could be used to treat the novel coronavirus and dismissed the World Health Organization’s coronavirus death rate estimate, substituting a much lower figure and citing a ‘hunch.’ On Wednesday night, Trump made an uncritical reference to people who continue to go to work while infected with the coronavirus — placing himself at odds with doctors who have strongly urged those with even minor symptoms to stay home.”

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Fox News anchor Bret Baier told Trump during the town hall that, while he's said he wants to take politics out of the crisis, the president also keeps blaming former president Barack Obama for delays in distributing test kits. “Well, I don't blame anybody,” he said, before blaming Obama. “I want to get everybody to understand they made some decisions which were not good decisions. We inherited decisions that they made.”

Trump added that his own performance will get criticized no matter what. “If we found a cure, and everybody's better tomorrow morning at nine o'clock, they would say, he's done a terrible job,” he said. “It's just automatic. ... And we have done a great job. Again, we have gotten the highest poll numbers of anybody for this kind of a thing.”

Fact-checker Glenn Kessler awards Four Pinocchios to Trump for his “bogus” effort to blame Obama for sluggish coronavirus testing: “The administration has been under fire for its failure to quickly expand testing for coronavirus across the United States; the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention had distributed flawed tests to state and local health departments. The lack of tests, compared with countries like South Korea that have tested tens of thousands of people, has meant the possible spread of the virus in the United States may be hidden.

“Trump suggested the problem instead was an ‘Obama rule’ on testing that his administration had recently overturned. But this turns out to be completely wrong. ...There was no Obama rule, simply ‘guidance’ that was never acted on because Congress stepped in and decided it would craft the necessary legislation, according to experts we consulted. The Trump administration, in fact, has been working with Congress on such legislation.”

Baier asked Trump why he didn’t expedite testing when the world learned of the virus spreading in January. “I’m thinking about a lot of other things too, like trade and millions of other things,” the president answered. “I mean, we are doing some job with the economy and all. So I’m not thinking about this. But as soon as I heard that China had a problem, I said, what’s going on with China? How many people are coming in? Nobody but me asked that question. ... And we were given A-pluses for that. ... Saved a lot of lives.”

Later in the town hall, a self-described “big supporter” of the president – identified by the network only as Robert – thanked Trump effusively for “everything that you have done for this country and continue to do for this country.” But then he lamented how “insult politics have become a staple of this political environment.” And he wondered: “Could there be a way that we can deliver your message without the controversial rhetoric in efforts to reunite this country during these divisive times?”

Trump’s answer boiled down to no. “When they hit us, we have to hit back,” he said. “I wouldn’t be sitting up here if I turned my cheek.” He added that Fox News wouldn’t be interviewing him if he wasn’t a counterpuncher because it’s good for ratings. “We get hit so hard,” Trump added. “If we don’t fight back, you won’t be a fan of mine very long. But I appreciate the question. Thank you.” The crowd cheered. Robert applauded. And the Trump campaign war room quickly blasted out the clip.

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the spread of coronavirus

A cruise ship with thousands aboard awaits test results.

“The Grand Princess, which was returning to San Francisco after a two-week cruise to Hawaii, remained offshore and in limbo at the request of California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D). About 100 people were expected to be tested, among them 11 passengers and 10 crew members who have shown potential signs of covid-19,” Reed Albergotti, Hannah Sampson and Brady Dennis report. “Even as the military ferried tests to the cruise ship and thousands of passengers waited uneasily on board, public health officials on land were investigating a cluster of coronavirus cases among the roughly 2,500 people who had taken an earlier cruise on the same ship. One of those passengers, a 71-year-old man, has since died of covid-19.

...The virus spread to new states — including three cases in

Montgomery County, Md. ... Meanwhile, the Senate on Thursday voted nearly unanimously to approve emergency spending to combat the coronavirus outbreak [and the president signed the measure on Friday morning.]

“But many questions remain about just how prepared the country is for an expanded outbreak. Vice President Pence, who on Tuesday said that any American with a doctor’s orders could get tested for the coronavirus, acknowledged Thursday that ‘we don’t have enough tests today to meet what we anticipate will be the demand going forward.’ Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar told lawmakers Thursday that the government will have shipped enough tests by the end of the week for 75,000 people to be tested. ... Earlier in the week, the Trump administration said it could have 1 million tests ready by the end of the week.”

Pence is reportedly sidelining Azar. The health secretary wasn’t at a Wednesday televised briefing because officials wanted to make space for housing secretary Ben Carson on stage, Politico reports. He was also left out of a Thursday trip to Washington state, which Pence and Azar allies said was because of “other commitments.”

Globally, the virus has infected nearly 100,000 people and caused 3,200 deaths.

“A French lawmaker tested positive; the Vatican reported its first case; the Netherlands recorded its first fatality; a rabbi was infected in New York state,” Adam Taylor, Teo Armus and Rick Noack report. “Health officials in the Houston area reported two likely cases.”

- California ordered insurers to waive out-of-pocket costs for coronavirus testing. (San Francisco Chronicle)
- A Chinese health expert said he expects the number of new infections in Wuhan, where the outbreak started, to decline to “near zero” by the end of the month. (Lyric Li)

- Coronavirus cases jumped from zero to four in Senegal this week, raising fears that upcoming religious festivals could fuel a wider outbreak. (Danielle Paquette and Borso Tall)

Health-care workers are worried about protections against the virus.

“Some advocates for health-care workers say hospital administrators are not adequately protecting their staff members. This week, National Nurses United (NNU), the largest labor union for nurses, said that only 30 percent of the 6,000 nurses it has surveyed in 48 states think their workplace has sufficient protective gear to handle an influx of coronavirus patients. Only 29 percent said their hospital or clinic has plans for isolating patients if they are infected,” Katie Mettler, Arelis Hernández, William Wan and Lenny Bernstein report.

A proposed regulation could protect these workers from the virus. It’s hanging in limbo.

“The draft regulation would require employers to provide protective gear for health-care workers and to create infection-control plans, which could include building isolation rooms. The Obama administration was working to adopt the regulation, but the Trump administration in 2017 moved it to a less urgent, long-term agenda and work on it stopped,” Kimberly Kindy reports.

A New York college closed and others cancelled classes.

Yeshiva University’s president announced a student had tested positive and classes would be canceled at their Washington Heights and Midtown campuses until after March 10. Lake Washington Institute of Technology closed on Sunday outside Seattle. Susan Svrluga reports that workers cleaned and disinfected the school on Monday and Tuesday, and the more than 20 students and faculty possibly exposed were advised to remain in isolation for two weeks. The campus briefly reopened Wednesday — before closing again that night. A faculty member had tested positive for covid-19, the school announced, and the campus will close at least through the weekend.

The Education Department issued guidance providing schools with the flexibility to accommodate students who studies are being upended by the outbreak. For example, to help students continue their classes, the Education Department is allowing schools to temporarily expand their online learning programs or partner with other schools that can meet the demands, without requiring federal approval. (Danielle Douglas-Gabriel)

A dog tested positive in Hong Kong.

A pet dog in Hong Kong has a “low-level” infection of the coronavirus, in what may be the first known case. Public health officials say the virus “does not appear to infect or be spread by pets. But experts say much remains unknown about the dog’s infection, and they emphasized the lone case is not yet cause for alarm or reassessments about interactions with pets,” Karin Brulliard reports.

Scientists were close to a coronavirus vaccine years ago. Then money dried up.

“Dr. Peter Hotez says he made the pitch to anyone who would listen. After years of research, his team of scientists in Texas had helped develop a vaccine to protect against a deadly strain of coronavirus. Now they needed money to begin testing it in humans,” NBC News reports. “But this was 2016. More than a decade had passed since the viral disease known as severe acute respiratory syndrome, or SARS, had spread through China, killing more than 770 people. That disease, an earlier coronavirus similar to the one now sweeping the globe, was a distant memory by the time Hotez and his team sought funding to test whether their vaccine would work in humans.”

If you're quarantined, you can still eat well.

The Post's culinary team surveyed some of the country's best-known cooks for ideas on what people might stock up on in their pantries to prepare for a coronavirus quarantine. Celebrity author Padma Lakshmi suggests families stock up on frozen veggies and pick a weekend to cook huge batches of different dishes that are stew-y and freeze well, like turkey chili. Chef Nina Compton suggested keeping lots of snacks in the fridge, including pickles, nuts and frozen pizzas. For the pantry, have some bags of dried pasta, dried beans and rice. Chef and author Edward Lee said you should buy a few packets of instant ramen and glamorize them with frozen green beans, curry powder and some cheese.

While you were sleeping

Afghan health workers walk with a wounded man from a hospital after gunmen attacked a political gathering in Kabul on Friday. (Jawad Jalali/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

Gunfire at a Shiite gathering in Kabul left more than 20 dead and dozens wounded. Afghan opposition leader Abdullah Abdullah was there, but he escaped the scene unhurt, according to his spokesman. The attack comes amid heightened political tensions in Afghanistan following disputed election results. Both the Afghan president and Abdullah had declared victory last month. (Susannah George)

Explosives that detonated near the U.S. Embassy in Tunisia were part of an apparent attack by two suicide bombers. The large explosion injured six people, including five security agents and a woman, Tunisia's Interior Ministry said. (Claire Parker and Sudarsan Raghavan)

---

2020 watch

Elizabeth Warren's exit raises questions about the role of women in politics.

“Now as Warren ... decides whether to endorse either of the two male candidates remaining, her supporters are left to contemplate a factor that many believe contributed significantly to her loss: She's female." Annie Linskey and Amy Wang report. “It's not that Warren ran an error-free campaign... But her male counterparts made big mistakes as well. ... The exit by Warren, who spent much of 2019 leading in many polls, was a reminder of four years ago, when Hillary Clinton's loss sparked a national debate over whether a woman could ever win election to the country's highest political office. ... 'Women will not be perceived by some as electable until we're elected,' said Valerie Jarrett, a top adviser to former president Barack Obama and a friend of Warren's."

Linskey asked Warren outside her home in Cambridge, Mass., about the role gender played in the race. "That is the trap question for every woman," the senator answered. "If you say, 'Yeah, there was sexism in this race,' everyone says, 'Whiner!' And if you say, 'No, there was no sexism,' about a bazillion women think, 'What planet do you live on?'"

"Warren's withdrawal also prompted other leading women in Washington to reflect on why the 'highest and hardest' glass ceiling that Clinton once talked about was still intact. 'Every time I get introduced as the most powerful woman in the United States, I almost cry, because I'm thinking, 'I wish that were not true,'" House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) told reporters. 'I so wish that we had a woman president.' ... Still, the Democratic primary has been unusually complicated this year, and many argue that other factors besides sexism were at play in Warren's fate. Her initial strategy rested on quickly consolidating the left, for example, [but many liberals] were more drawn to [Bernie] Sanders's brand of fiery democratic socialism."

Speaking to Rachel Maddow on MSNBC last night, Warren called out Sanders for not taking steps to control the "organized nastiness" of some of his supporters. (Fred Barbash)

Many women saw Warren as one of them, writes columnist Monica Hesse. "Finally, a presidential candidate who took things like maternal health and paid parental leave seriously, and who also knew exactly what Nora Ephron meant when she wrote that she felt bad about her neck. It was an impossible tightrope, but she made it look easy; she made most things look easy."

---

Quote of the day

Bill Clinton discussed his extramarital affair with intern Monica Lewinsky in a new four-part documentary, "Hillary," that premiered this morning on Hulu. "You feel like you're staggering around — you've been in a 15-round prizefight that was extended to 30 rounds, and here's something that'll take your mind off it for a while. Everybody's life has pressures and disappointments and terrors, fears of whatever, things I did to manage my anxieties for years," the former president explained. "Nobody sits down and thinks, 'I think I'll take a really irresponsible risk.'" (NYT)

Mike Bloomberg is forming an outside group to support the Democratic nominee.

"Bloomberg has decided to form an independent expenditure campaign that will absorb hundreds of his presidential campaign staffers in six swing states to work to elect the Democratic nominee this fall," Michael Scherer reports. "The group, with a name that is still undisclosed because its trademark application is in process, would also be a vehicle for Bloomberg to spend money on advertising to attack [Trump] and support the Democratic nominee..."

Monday was the day everything went Joe Biden's way, but the two days before that were full of intrigue.

With news that Pete Buttigieg, Amy Klobuchar and Beto O'Rourke were interested in endorsing Biden, his campaign scrambled to "maximize a sense of drama and momentum that Biden's campaign had rarely, if ever, enjoyed," Jenna Johnson, Matt Viser and Chelsea Janes report in a tick-tock on the hours before the fateful day that secured Biden front-runner status.

Sanders canceled a speech scheduled for later today in Mississippi, where Biden is heavily favored, so he can focus on winning Michigan next Tuesday. The Detroit Free Press endorsed Biden ahead of Michigan's primary next week. Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.) also backed the former vice president. Also happening in Michigan: "Former United Auto Workers President Gary Jones was charged with embezzling more than $1 million, according to a criminal filing that indicates he will plead guilty," the Detroit News reports.

Previously unseen documents from a Soviet archive show how Moscow saw a chance for propaganda in Sanders's attempts to find a sister city in Russia when he was a Vermont mayor in the 1980s. Sanders "wrote to a Soviet counterpart in a provincial city that he wanted the United States and the Soviet Union to 'live together as friends.' Unbeknown to him, his desire for friendship meshed with the efforts of Soviet officials in Moscow to 'reveal American imperialism as the main source of the danger of war,'" the Times reports.

Biden's team is eager to expand staff. The campaign is scaling up and looking to tap into the pool of Democratic talent now available because of all the candidates who have recently dropped out, the Times reports. "In the Democratic contest, any candidate who gets at least 15 percent statewide or in any congressional district gets a cut of the delegates at stake. In the abstract, it's a feature that rewards candidates who stick around and continue to campaign. In practice, though, it very quickly means that a candidate with a lead can hold it," Philip Bump explains. "That's one of the reasons that [Biden] now has a significant advantage over [Sanders]."

Mitt Romney could derail a GOP subpoena targeting the Bidens.

“The Senate Homeland Security Committee is set to vote next Wednesday on a subpoena for records from a Democratic public relations firm related to the panel’s investigation of conflict-of-interest allegations against the Bidens. But [the Republican senator from Utah], a member of the panel, has hinted that he could vote against issuing the subpoena, noting the committee’s investigation might look political in nature given Biden’s resurgence and the increasing likelihood that he’ll become the Democratic presidential nominee,” Politico reports.

Facebook took down deceptive Trump campaign ads – after initially allowing them.

“The Trump ads urged Facebook users to ‘take the official 2020 Congressional District Census today,’ but despite the look and language of the ad, they were not related to the once-a-decade national count of U.S. citizens happening this year,” Craig Timberg and Tara Bahrapour report. “Instead, the ads linked to a survey on the ‘Certified Website of President Donald J. Trump,’ which collected information and requested a donation. Facebook initially said it would permit the ads, ruling that they were clearly not a part of the U.S. census ... Facebook reversed its position hours later, saying that the ads indeed violated its policy against ‘misrepresentation of the dates, locations, times and methods for census participation.’”

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be overlooked

Attorney General Bill Barr speaks during a news conference at the Department of Justice. (Mandel Ngan/AFP)

A federal judge criticized Barr's “lack of candor” in his summary of Mueller's conclusions.

“U.S. District Judge Reggie Walton, overseeing a lawsuit brought by EPIC, a watchdog group, and BuzzFeed News, said he saw serious discrepancies between [Bill] Barr’s public statements about [Bob] Mueller’s findings and the public, partially redacted version of that report detailing the special counsel’s investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election,” Spencer Hsu and Devlin Barrett report. “Because of those discrepancies, Walton ruled, the judge would conduct an independent review of Mueller’s full report to see whether the Justice Department’s redactions were appropriate. ... In his 23-page opinion, Walton said he had ‘grave concerns about the objectivity of the process’ that led up to the public release of the Mueller report. ... ‘Barr’s lack of candor specifically, call into question Attorney General Barr’s credibility,’ [he wrote]. The judge said he would not take Justice Department lawyers at their word that redactions in the report were all done for appropriate reasons.” [Walton was appointed by George W. Bush.]

On immigration, Barr is acting like his own Supreme Court.

"Barr quietly intervened in an immigration asylum case last week when he issued a decision that narrowed the definition of torture for asylum seekers who invoke it as a grounds for staying in the United States," Kim Bellware reports. "Barr used a process known as 'certification,' a historically little-used power of the attorney general that allows him to overrule decisions made by the Board of Immigration Appeals and set binding precedent. Immigration lawyers and judges say the Trump administration is using the power with greater frequency — to the point of abuse — as it seeks to severely limit the number of immigrants who can remain in the United States. The administration is also using it as a check on immigration judges whose decisions don't align with the administration's immigration agenda, experts say."

Trump's border crackdown stalled as illegal crossings increased for the first time in nine months.

"U.S. Customs and Border Protection officials said 37,119 unauthorized border crossers were taken into custody in February, up from 36,660 in January. While the number of migrants arriving in family groups continues to decline, the number of single adult migrants from Mexico and unaccompanied children rose last month, the figures show," Nick Miroff and Abigail Hauslohner report. Meanwhile, ICE is targeting "sanctuary cities" with increased surveillance. The agency's leadership has requested at least 500 special agents to joined an enhanced arrest campaign rolling out in these cities, per the NYT.

A blind man failed the U.S. citizenship test because he couldn't read in English.

"Born 100 percent blind, the 23-year-old legal permanent resident had been studying English for the past six years since coming to the United States from Mexico as a teenager," Meagan Flynn reports. "He got a vision exam by an optometrist so he could prove he is legally blind, asking in his application that he be given the test in Braille. ... But then came the big problem: the reading portion of the exam. The agent said they received his request for Braille, but, unfortunately, USCIS did not have Braille available. ... For the record, the officer gave him 'three attempts to read a sentence' in English, as USCIS describes it in a letter Delgado provided. And, predictably, whether the print was large or small, Delgado couldn't read what he couldn't see."

An ex-Nazi concentration camp guard, who's lived in the U.S. since 1959, faces deportation. An index card found submerged in a sunken ship in the Baltic Sea helped federal prosecutors prove their case that Friedrich Karl Berger, a German citizen and longtime Tennessee resident who acknowledged having served as a guard at a German concentration camp, had to be deported. He's still receiving a German pension for work that includes his wartime service, per Debbie Cenziper and Rachel Baldauf.

Chuck Schumer expressed regret for calling out two Supreme Court justices.

The Senate minority leader, a Democrat from New York, said Justices Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh would "pay the price" for a vote against abortion rights on Wednesday, drawing the ire of Chief Justice John Roberts. While he defended his passion on the issue on the Senate floor on Thursday, Schumer conceded that his comments went too far. (Paul Kane, John Wagner, Felicia Sonmez)

Trump's company charged the Secret Service $157,000 more than was previously known.

According to a new trove of receipts released by the agency, Trump billed taxpayers for rooms at his clubs at rates far higher than his company has claimed. David Fahrenthold, Joshua Partlow, Jonathan O'Connell and

Carol D. Leonnig report: “Many of the new receipts were obtained by the watchdog group Public Citizen, which spent three years battling the Secret Service over a public-records request from January 2017. When added to dozens of charges already reported by The Post, the new documents show that Trump’s company has charged the Secret Service more than $628,000 since he took office in 2017. The payments show Trump has an unprecedented — and still partially hidden — business relationship with his own government. The full scope of that relationship is still unknown because the publicly available records are largely from 2017 and 2018, leaving huge gaps in the data.”

---

Social media speed read

A protester brought Nazi propaganda to a Sanders rally last night:

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer · 5h
Reporters at Bernie Sanders's rally tonight in Phoenix witnessed multiple incidents involving protesters, including one who waved a large flag with a swastika on it. The man was immediately removed. Disturbing and scary.

Unclear if Sen. Sanders saw the flag.

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer

Here is video of the incident. Incredibly disturbing. twitter.com/siddakahuja/st...
twitter.com/siddakahuja/st...

Siddak Ahuja @SiddakAhuja

A man brought a literal Nazi flag to the rally of a Jewish Socialist candidate for President

He was escorted out by security forces

1,206 4:35 AM - Mar 6, 2020 · Phoenix, AZ

532 people are talking about this

“The moment, captured in videos and photos that circulated on social media Thursday night, was denounced as an act of anti-Semitism and prompted increased concerns about Sanders’s safety on the campaign trail,” Allyson Chiu reports. “Sanders did not appear to see the flag as he thanked the crowd for coming out Thursday night. Videos showed him only turning around in time to witness the man being escorted out. ‘Whoever it was, I think they’re a little outnumbered tonight,’ he told the crowd with a smile.”

Warren’s dog, seemingly aware that he no longer has to be in the spotlight, broke his diet:

Harvard Law honored one of its former professors:

Drew Goins ✓

@drewgoins

The Elizabeth Warren portrait at Harvard Law right now

♥ 24.1K 11:22 PM - Mar 5, 2020

💬 3,646 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert said Warren's exit from the race is proof that America "can't have nice things":

Trevor Noah said goodbye to Warren's campaign:

Seth Meyers said we need truth, transparency and testing when it comes to coronavirus, and he doesn't think we're going to get that from Trump:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Most of Trump's own supporters think he's self-centered. His coronavirus response helps show why.
Date: Friday, March 6, 2020 8:44:09 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Most of Trump's own supporters think he's self-centered. His coronavirus response helps show why.

A national survey published Thursday by the Pew Research Center showed that 73 percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents believe "self-centered" describes President Trump either very or fairly well. Overall, 8 in 10 U.S. adults agree.

Eighty percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents said they agree with Trump on many or nearly all of the important issues facing the country; the same percentage approve of his job performance in the poll. But only 31 percent said they like the way Trump conducts himself as president. Half said they have mixed feelings, and 16 percent say they don't like his conduct.

Among the Republicans and GOP-leaning independents surveyed by Pew, 35 percent said he's prejudiced, 49 percent said he's even-tempered, 62 percent said he's morally upstanding and 71 percent said he's honest. But 87 percent said he fights for what they believe in. That's the key to his reservoir of support on the right.

---

Republicans widely view Trump as a fighter, but also self-centered

% who say each describes Trump very or fairly well

Source: Survey of U.S. adults conducted Feb. 4-15, 2020.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

---

Trump's town hall on Thursday night in Scranton, Pa., which aired live on Fox News and focused extensively on the novel coronavirus outbreak, captured these dynamics in miniature. The first audience question came from Katherine Pugh, an undecided voter, who said the Trump administration's initial response to the coronavirus “seemed to some as being confusing or minimizing.” She wondered “what plans are being considered on a federal level for the possibility of a long-term disruption” from its spread. Rather than discuss what’s next, Trump focused on touting his initial response.

He credited his own moves with the relatively small death toll – he said 11 Americans have died, though the number is now 12 – compared to other countries. “Well, actually, we are being given really tremendous marks – you look at Gallup, you look at other polls – for the way we have handled it,” he said. “And one of the things I did is I closed down the borders to China and to other areas that are very badly affected. ... And I closed them down very early against the advice of almost everybody. And we have been given rave reviews.”

There is no public evidence that there was widespread opposition to the travel restrictions in the administration. Moreover, the Gallup poll Trump referred to, conducted from Feb. 3 to Feb. 16, did not ask about Trump’s handling of the situation. Instead, it asked Americans about their confidence in the federal government’s ability to handle an outbreak in the United States. A lot has changed in the past three weeks, including the seesawing stock market and a spike in the number of confirmed cases in the country. The Dow fell 700 points Friday morning in the first few minutes after the opening bell.

An Economist-YouGov poll conducted earlier this week found that 41 percent of Americans thought Trump’s policies were not taking the risks seriously enough. Another 34 percent said his policy was appropriate. This poll finds that 68 percent of Americans are now either “somewhat” or “very” concerned about a coronavirus epidemic in the United States, up from 62 percent in an Economist-YouGov survey last month.

Trump himself has emerged as the administration’s greatest obstacle to sending a clear and consistent message about the coronavirus. Leading public health experts from across the government have found their messages undercut, drowned out and muddled by Trump’s push to downplay the outbreak with a mix of optimism, bombast and pseudoscience, Toluse Olorunnipa reports: “The president has repeatedly misstated the number of Americans who have tested positive for the virus and claimed it would ‘miraculously’ disappear in the spring. He has given a false timeline for the development of a vaccine, publicly questioned whether vaccinations for the flu could be used to treat the novel coronavirus and dismissed the World Health Organization’s coronavirus death rate estimate, substituting a much lower figure and citing a ‘hunch.’ On Wednesday night, Trump made an uncritical reference to people who continue to go to work while infected with the coronavirus — placing himself at odds with doctors who have strongly urged those with even minor symptoms to stay home.”

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Fox News anchor Bret Baier told Trump during the town hall that, while he's said he wants to take politics out of the crisis, the president also keeps blaming former president Barack Obama for delays in distributing test kits. “Well, I don't blame anybody,” he said, before blaming Obama. “I want to get everybody to understand they made some decisions which were not good decisions. We inherited decisions that they made.”

Trump added that his own performance will get criticized no matter what. “If we found a cure, and everybody's better tomorrow morning at nine o'clock, they would say, he's done a terrible job,” he said. “It's just automatic. ... And we have done a great job. Again, we have gotten the highest poll numbers of anybody for this kind of a thing.”

Fact-checker Glenn Kessler awards Four Pinocchios to Trump for his “bogus” effort to blame Obama for sluggish coronavirus testing: “The administration has been under fire for its failure to quickly expand testing for coronavirus across the United States; the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention had distributed flawed tests to state and local health departments. The lack of tests, compared with countries like South Korea that have tested tens of thousands of people, has meant the possible spread of the virus in the United States may be hidden.

“Trump suggested the problem instead was an ‘Obama rule’ on testing that his administration had recently overturned. But this turns out to be completely wrong. ...There was no Obama rule, simply ‘guidance’ that was never acted on because Congress stepped in and decided it would craft the necessary legislation, according to experts we consulted. The Trump administration, in fact, has been working with Congress on such legislation.”

Baier asked Trump why he didn’t expedite testing when the world learned of the virus spreading in January. “I’m thinking about a lot of other things too, like trade and millions of other things,” the president answered. “I mean, we are doing some job with the economy and all. So I’m not thinking about this. But as soon as I heard that China had a problem, I said, what’s going on with China? How many people are coming in? Nobody but me asked that question. ... And we were given A-pluses for that. ... Saved a lot of lives.”

Later in the town hall, a self-described “big supporter” of the president – identified by the network only as Robert – thanked Trump effusively for “everything that you have done for this country and continue to do for this country.” But then he lamented how “insult politics have become a staple of this political environment.” And he wondered: “Could there be a way that we can deliver your message without the controversial rhetoric in efforts to reunite this country during these divisive times?”

Trump’s answer boiled down to no. “When they hit us, we have to hit back,” he said. “I wouldn’t be sitting up here if I turned my cheek.” He added that Fox News wouldn’t be interviewing him if he wasn’t a counterpuncher because it’s good for ratings. “We get hit so hard,” Trump added. “If we don’t fight back, you won’t be a fan of mine very long. But I appreciate the question. Thank you.” The crowd cheered. Robert applauded. And the Trump campaign war room quickly blasted out the clip.

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the spread of coronavirus

A cruise ship with thousands aboard awaits test results.

“The Grand Princess, which was returning to San Francisco after a two-week cruise to Hawaii, remained offshore and in limbo at the request of California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D). About 100 people were expected to be tested, among them 11 passengers and 10 crew members who have shown potential signs of covid-19,” Reed Albergotti, Hannah Sampson and Brady Dennis report. “Even as the military ferried tests to the cruise ship and thousands of passengers waited uneasily on board, public health officials on land were investigating a cluster of coronavirus cases among the roughly 2,500 people who had taken an earlier cruise on the same ship. One of those passengers, a 71-year-old man, has since died of covid-19.

...The virus spread to new states — including three cases in

Montgomery County, Md. ... Meanwhile, the Senate on Thursday voted nearly unanimously to approve emergency spending to combat the coronavirus outbreak [and the president signed the measure on Friday morning.]

“But many questions remain about just how prepared the country is for an expanded outbreak. Vice President Pence, who on Tuesday said that any American with a doctor’s orders could get tested for the coronavirus, acknowledged Thursday that ‘we don’t have enough tests today to meet what we anticipate will be the demand going forward.’ Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar told lawmakers Thursday that the government will have shipped enough tests by the end of the week for 75,000 people to be tested. ... Earlier in the week, the Trump administration said it could have 1 million tests ready by the end of the week.”

Pence is reportedly sidelining Azar. The health secretary wasn’t at a Wednesday televised briefing because officials wanted to make space for housing secretary Ben Carson on stage, Politico reports. He was also left out of a Thursday trip to Washington state, which Pence and Azar allies said was because of “other commitments.”

Globally, the virus has infected nearly 100,000 people and caused 3,200 deaths.

“A French lawmaker tested positive; the Vatican reported its first case; the Netherlands recorded its first fatality; a rabbi was infected in New York state,” Adam Taylor, Teo Armus and Rick Noack report. “Health officials in the Houston area reported two likely cases.”

- California ordered insurers to waive out-of-pocket costs for coronavirus testing. (San Francisco Chronicle)
- A Chinese health expert said he expects the number of new infections in Wuhan, where the outbreak started, to decline to “near zero” by the end of the month. (Lyric Li)

- Coronavirus cases jumped from zero to four in Senegal this week, raising fears that upcoming religious festivals could fuel a wider outbreak. (Danielle Paquette and Borso Tall)

Health-care workers are worried about protections against the virus.

“Some advocates for health-care workers say hospital administrators are not adequately protecting their staff members. This week, National Nurses United (NNU), the largest labor union for nurses, said that only 30 percent of the 6,000 nurses it has surveyed in 48 states think their workplace has sufficient protective gear to handle an influx of coronavirus patients. Only 29 percent said their hospital or clinic has plans for isolating patients if they are infected,” Katie Mettler, Arelis Hernández, William Wan and Lenny Bernstein report.

A proposed regulation could protect these workers from the virus. It’s hanging in limbo.

“The draft regulation would require employers to provide protective gear for health-care workers and to create infection-control plans, which could include building isolation rooms. The Obama administration was working to adopt the regulation, but the Trump administration in 2017 moved it to a less urgent, long-term agenda and work on it stopped,” Kimberly Kindy reports.

A New York college closed and others cancelled classes.

Yeshiva University’s president announced a student had tested positive and classes would be canceled at their Washington Heights and Midtown campuses until after March 10. Lake Washington Institute of Technology closed on Sunday outside Seattle. Susan Svrluga reports that workers cleaned and disinfected the school on Monday and Tuesday, and the more than 20 students and faculty possibly exposed were advised to remain in isolation for two weeks. The campus briefly reopened Wednesday — before closing again that night. A faculty member had tested positive for covid-19, the school announced, and the campus will close at least through the weekend.

The Education Department issued guidance providing schools with the flexibility to accommodate students who studies are being upended by the outbreak. For example, to help students continue their classes, the Education Department is allowing schools to temporarily expand their online learning programs or partner with other schools that can meet the demands, without requiring federal approval. (Danielle Douglas-Gabriel)

A dog tested positive in Hong Kong.

A pet dog in Hong Kong has a “low-level” infection of the coronavirus, in what may be the first known case. Public health officials say the virus “does not appear to infect or be spread by pets. But experts say much remains unknown about the dog’s infection, and they emphasized the lone case is not yet cause for alarm or reassessments about interactions with pets,” Karin Brulliard reports.

Scientists were close to a coronavirus vaccine years ago. Then money dried up.

“Dr. Peter Hotez says he made the pitch to anyone who would listen. After years of research, his team of scientists in Texas had helped develop a vaccine to protect against a deadly strain of coronavirus. Now they needed money to begin testing it in humans,” NBC News reports. “But this was 2016. More than a decade had passed since the viral disease known as severe acute respiratory syndrome, or SARS, had spread through China, killing more than 770 people. That disease, an earlier coronavirus similar to the one now sweeping the globe, was a distant memory by the time Hotez and his team sought funding to test whether their vaccine would work in humans.”

If you're quarantined, you can still eat well.

The Post's culinary team surveyed some of the country's best-known cooks for ideas on what people might stock up on in their pantries to prepare for a coronavirus quarantine. Celebrity author Padma Lakshmi suggests families stock up on frozen veggies and pick a weekend to cook huge batches of different dishes that are stew-y and freeze well, like turkey chili. Chef Nina Compton suggested keeping lots of snacks in the fridge, including pickles, nuts and frozen pizzas. For the pantry, have some bags of dried pasta, dried beans and rice. Chef and author Edward Lee said you should buy a few packets of instant ramen and glamorize them with frozen green beans, curry powder and some cheese.

While you were sleeping

Afghan health workers walk with a wounded man from a hospital after gunmen attacked a political gathering in Kabul on Friday. (Jawad Jalali/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

Gunfire at a Shiite gathering in Kabul left more than 20 dead and dozens wounded. Afghan opposition leader Abdullah Abdullah was there, but he escaped the scene unhurt, according to his spokesman. The attack comes amid heightened political tensions in Afghanistan following disputed election results. Both the Afghan president and Abdullah had declared victory last month. (Susannah George)

Explosives that detonated near the U.S. Embassy in Tunisia were part of an apparent attack by two suicide bombers. The large explosion injured six people, including five security agents and a woman, Tunisia's Interior Ministry said. (Claire Parker and Sudarsan Raghavan)

---

2020 watch

Elizabeth Warren's exit raises questions about the role of women in politics.

“Now as Warren ... decides whether to endorse either of the two male candidates remaining, her supporters are left to contemplate a factor that many believe contributed significantly to her loss: She's female." Annie Linskey and Amy Wang report. “It's not that Warren ran an error-free campaign... But her male counterparts made big mistakes as well. ... The exit by Warren, who spent much of 2019 leading in many polls, was a reminder of four years ago, when Hillary Clinton's loss sparked a national debate over whether a woman could ever win election to the country's highest political office. ... 'Women will not be perceived by some as electable until we're elected,' said Valerie Jarrett, a top adviser to former president Barack Obama and a friend of Warren's."

Linskey asked Warren outside her home in Cambridge, Mass., about the role gender played in the race. "That is the trap question for every woman," the senator answered. "If you say, 'Yeah, there was sexism in this race,' everyone says, 'Whiner!' And if you say, 'No, there was no sexism,' about a bazillion women think, 'What planet do you live on?'"

"Warren's withdrawal also prompted other leading women in Washington to reflect on why the 'highest and hardest' glass ceiling that Clinton once talked about was still intact. 'Every time I get introduced as the most powerful woman in the United States, I almost cry, because I'm thinking, 'I wish that were not true,'" House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) told reporters. 'I so wish that we had a woman president.' ... Still, the Democratic primary has been unusually complicated this year, and many argue that other factors besides sexism were at play in Warren's fate. Her initial strategy rested on quickly consolidating the left, for example, [but many liberals] were more drawn to [Bernie] Sanders's brand of fiery democratic socialism."

Speaking to Rachel Maddow on MSNBC last night, Warren called out Sanders for not taking steps to control the "organized nastiness" of some of his supporters. (Fred Barbash)

Many women saw Warren as one of them, writes columnist Monica Hesse. "Finally, a presidential candidate who took things like maternal health and paid parental leave seriously, and who also knew exactly what Nora Ephron meant when she wrote that she felt bad about her neck. It was an impossible tightrope, but she made it look easy; she made most things look easy."

---

Quote of the day

Bill Clinton discussed his extramarital affair with intern Monica Lewinsky in a new four-part documentary, "Hillary," that premiered this morning on Hulu. "You feel like you're staggering around — you've been in a 15-round prizefight that was extended to 30 rounds, and here's something that'll take your mind off it for a while. Everybody's life has pressures and disappointments and terrors, fears of whatever, things I did to manage my anxieties for years," the former president explained. "Nobody sits down and thinks, 'I think I'll take a really irresponsible risk.'" (NYT)

Mike Bloomberg is forming an outside group to support the Democratic nominee.

"Bloomberg has decided to form an independent expenditure campaign that will absorb hundreds of his presidential campaign staffers in six swing states to work to elect the Democratic nominee this fall," Michael Scherer reports. "The group, with a name that is still undisclosed because its trademark application is in process, would also be a vehicle for Bloomberg to spend money on advertising to attack [Trump] and support the Democratic nominee..."

Monday was the day everything went Joe Biden's way, but the two days before that were full of intrigue.

With news that Pete Buttigieg, Amy Klobuchar and Beto O'Rourke were interested in endorsing Biden, his campaign scrambled to "maximize a sense of drama and momentum that Biden's campaign had rarely, if ever, enjoyed," Jenna Johnson, Matt Viser and Chelsea Janes report in a tick-tock on the hours before the fateful day that secured Biden front-runner status.

Sanders canceled a speech scheduled for later today in Mississippi, where Biden is heavily favored, so he can focus on winning Michigan next Tuesday. The Detroit Free Press endorsed Biden ahead of Michigan's primary next week. Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.) also backed the former vice president. Also happening in Michigan: "Former United Auto Workers President Gary Jones was charged with embezzling more than $1 million, according to a criminal filing that indicates he will plead guilty," the Detroit News reports.

Previously unseen documents from a Soviet archive show how Moscow saw a chance for propaganda in Sanders's attempts to find a sister city in Russia when he was a Vermont mayor in the 1980s. Sanders "wrote to a Soviet counterpart in a provincial city that he wanted the United States and the Soviet Union to 'live together as friends.' Unbeknown to him, his desire for friendship meshed with the efforts of Soviet officials in Moscow to 'reveal American imperialism as the main source of the danger of war,'" the Times reports.

Biden's team is eager to expand staff. The campaign is scaling up and looking to tap into the pool of Democratic talent now available because of all the candidates who have recently dropped out, the Times reports. "In the Democratic contest, any candidate who gets at least 15 percent statewide or in any congressional district gets a cut of the delegates at stake. In the abstract, it's a feature that rewards candidates who stick around and continue to campaign. In practice, though, it very quickly means that a candidate with a lead can hold it," Philip Bump explains. "That's one of the reasons that [Biden] now has a significant advantage over [Sanders]."

Mitt Romney could derail a GOP subpoena targeting the Bidens.

“The Senate Homeland Security Committee is set to vote next Wednesday on a subpoena for records from a Democratic public relations firm related to the panel’s investigation of conflict-of-interest allegations against the Bidens. But [the Republican senator from Utah], a member of the panel, has hinted that he could vote against issuing the subpoena, noting the committee’s investigation might look political in nature given Biden’s resurgence and the increasing likelihood that he’ll become the Democratic presidential nominee,” Politico reports.

Facebook took down deceptive Trump campaign ads – after initially allowing them.

“The Trump ads urged Facebook users to ‘take the official 2020 Congressional District Census today,’ but despite the look and language of the ad, they were not related to the once-a-decade national count of U.S. citizens happening this year,” Craig Timberg and Tara Bahrapour report. “Instead, the ads linked to a survey on the ‘Certified Website of President Donald J. Trump,’ which collected information and requested a donation. Facebook initially said it would permit the ads, ruling that they were clearly not a part of the U.S. census ... Facebook reversed its position hours later, saying that the ads indeed violated its policy against ‘misrepresentation of the dates, locations, times and methods for census participation.’”

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be overlooked

Attorney General Bill Barr speaks during a news conference at the Department of Justice. (Mandel Ngan/AFP)

A federal judge criticized Barr's “lack of candor” in his summary of Mueller's conclusions.

“U.S. District Judge Reggie Walton, overseeing a lawsuit brought by EPIC, a watchdog group, and BuzzFeed News, said he saw serious discrepancies between [Bill] Barr’s public statements about [Bob] Mueller’s findings and the public, partially redacted version of that report detailing the special counsel’s investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election,” Spencer Hsu and Devlin Barrett report. “Because of those discrepancies, Walton ruled, the judge would conduct an independent review of Mueller’s full report to see whether the Justice Department’s redactions were appropriate. ... In his 23-page opinion, Walton said he had ‘grave concerns about the objectivity of the process’ that led up to the public release of the Mueller report. ... ‘Barr’s lack of candor specifically, call into question Attorney General Barr’s credibility,’ [he wrote]. The judge said he would not take Justice Department lawyers at their word that redactions in the report were all done for appropriate reasons.” [Walton was appointed by George W. Bush.]

On immigration, Barr is acting like his own Supreme Court.

"Barr quietly intervened in an immigration asylum case last week when he issued a decision that narrowed the definition of torture for asylum seekers who invoke it as a grounds for staying in the United States," Kim Bellware reports. "Barr used a process known as 'certification,' a historically little-used power of the attorney general that allows him to overrule decisions made by the Board of Immigration Appeals and set binding precedent. Immigration lawyers and judges say the Trump administration is using the power with greater frequency — to the point of abuse — as it seeks to severely limit the number of immigrants who can remain in the United States. The administration is also using it as a check on immigration judges whose decisions don't align with the administration's immigration agenda, experts say."

Trump's border crackdown stalled as illegal crossings increased for the first time in nine months.

"U.S. Customs and Border Protection officials said 37,119 unauthorized border crossers were taken into custody in February, up from 36,660 in January. While the number of migrants arriving in family groups continues to decline, the number of single adult migrants from Mexico and unaccompanied children rose last month, the figures show," Nick Miroff and Abigail Hauslohner report. Meanwhile, ICE is targeting "sanctuary cities" with increased surveillance. The agency's leadership has requested at least 500 special agents to joined an enhanced arrest campaign rolling out in these cities, per the NYT.

A blind man failed the U.S. citizenship test because he couldn't read in English.

"Born 100 percent blind, the 23-year-old legal permanent resident had been studying English for the past six years since coming to the United States from Mexico as a teenager," Meagan Flynn reports. "He got a vision exam by an optometrist so he could prove he is legally blind, asking in his application that he be given the test in Braille. ... But then came the big problem: the reading portion of the exam. The agent said they received his request for Braille, but, unfortunately, USCIS did not have Braille available. ... For the record, the officer gave him ‘three attempts to read a sentence’ in English, as USCIS describes it in a letter Delgado provided. And, predictably, whether the print was large or small, Delgado couldn’t read what he couldn’t see.”

An ex-Nazi concentration camp guard, who’s lived in the U.S. since 1959, faces deportation. An index card found submerged in a sunken ship in the Baltic Sea helped federal prosecutors prove their case that Friedrich Karl Berger, a German citizen and longtime Tennessee resident who acknowledged having served as a guard at a German concentration camp, had to be deported. He’s still receiving a German pension for work that includes his wartime service, per Debbie Cenziper and Rachel Baldauf.

Chuck Schumer expressed regret for calling out two Supreme Court justices.

The Senate minority leader, a Democrat from New York, said Justices Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh would “pay the price” for a vote against abortion rights on Wednesday, drawing the ire of Chief Justice John Roberts. While he defended his passion on the issue on the Senate floor on Thursday, Schumer conceded that his comments went too far. (Paul Kane, John Wagner, Felicia Sonmez)

Trump’s company charged the Secret Service $157,000 more than was previously known.

According to a new trove of receipts released by the agency, Trump billed taxpayers for rooms at his clubs at rates far higher than his company has claimed. David Fahrenthold, Joshua Partlow, Jonathan O’Connell and

Carol D. Leonnig report: “Many of the new receipts were obtained by the watchdog group Public Citizen, which spent three years battling the Secret Service over a public-records request from January 2017. When added to dozens of charges already reported by The Post, the new documents show that Trump’s company has charged the Secret Service more than $628,000 since he took office in 2017. The payments show Trump has an unprecedented — and still partially hidden — business relationship with his own government. The full scope of that relationship is still unknown because the publicly available records are largely from 2017 and 2018, leaving huge gaps in the data.”

---

Social media speed read

A protester brought Nazi propaganda to a Sanders rally last night:

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer · 5h
Reporters at Bernie Sanders's rally tonight in Phoenix witnessed multiple incidents involving protesters, including one who waved a large flag with a swastika on it. The man was immediately removed. Disturbing and scary.

Unclear if Sen. Sanders saw the flag.

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer

Here is video of the incident. Incredibly disturbing. twitter.com/siddakahuja/st...
twitter.com/siddakahuja/st...

Siddak Ahuja @SiddakAhuja

A man brought a literal Nazi flag to the rally of a Jewish Socialist candidate for President

He was escorted out by security forces

1,206 4:35 AM - Mar 6, 2020 · Phoenix, AZ

532 people are talking about this

“The moment, captured in videos and photos that circulated on social media Thursday night, was denounced as an act of anti-Semitism and prompted increased concerns about Sanders’s safety on the campaign trail,” Allyson Chiu reports. “Sanders did not appear to see the flag as he thanked the crowd for coming out Thursday night. Videos showed him only turning around in time to witness the man being escorted out. ‘Whoever it was, I think they’re a little outnumbered tonight,’ he told the crowd with a smile.”

Warren’s dog, seemingly aware that he no longer has to be in the spotlight, broke his diet:

Harvard Law honored one of its former professors:

Drew Goins ✓

@drewgoins

The Elizabeth Warren portrait at Harvard Law right now

♥ 24.1K 11:22 PM - Mar 5, 2020

💬 3,646 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert said Warren's exit from the race is proof that America "can't have nice things":

Trevor Noah said goodbye to Warren's campaign:

Seth Meyers said we need truth, transparency and testing when it comes to coronavirus, and he doesn't think we're going to get that from Trump:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Most of Trump's own supporters think he's self-centered. His coronavirus response helps show why.
Date: Friday, March 6, 2020 8:44:12 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Most of Trump's own supporters think he's self-centered. His coronavirus response helps show why.

A national survey published Thursday by the Pew Research Center showed that 73 percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents believe “self-centered” describes President Trump either very or fairly well. Overall, 8 in 10 U.S. adults agree.

Eighty percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents said they agree with Trump on many or nearly all of the important issues facing the country; the same percentage approve of his job performance in the poll. But only 31 percent said they like the way Trump conducts himself as president. Half said they have mixed feelings, and 16 percent say they don't like his conduct.

Among the Republicans and GOP-leaning independents surveyed by Pew, 35 percent said he's prejudiced, 49 percent said he's even-tempered, 62 percent said he's morally upstanding and 71 percent said he's honest. But 87 percent said he fights for what they believe in. That's the key to his reservoir of support on the right.

---

Republicans widely view Trump as a fighter, but also self-centered

% who say each describes Trump very or fairly well

Source: Survey of U.S. adults conducted Feb. 4-15, 2020.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

---

Trump's town hall on Thursday night in Scranton, Pa., which aired live on Fox News and focused extensively on the novel coronavirus outbreak, captured these dynamics in miniature.

The first audience question came from Katherine Pugh, an undecided voter, who said the Trump administration's initial response to the coronavirus “seemed to some as being confusing or minimizing.” She wondered “what plans are being considered on a federal level for the possibility of a long-term disruption” from its spread. Rather than discuss what’s next, Trump focused on touting his initial response.

He credited his own moves with the relatively small death toll – he said 11 Americans have died, though the number is now 12 – compared to other countries. “Well, actually, we are being given really tremendous marks – you look at Gallup, you look at other polls – for the way we have handled it,” he said. “And one of the things I did is I closed down the borders to China and to other areas that are very badly affected. ... And I closed them down very early against the advice of almost everybody. And we have been given rave reviews.”

There is no public evidence that there was widespread opposition to the travel restrictions in the administration. Moreover, the Gallup poll Trump referred to, conducted from Feb. 3 to Feb. 16, did not ask about Trump’s handling of the situation. Instead, it asked Americans about their confidence in the federal government’s ability to handle an outbreak in the United States. A lot has changed in the past three weeks, including the seesawing stock market and a spike in the number of confirmed cases in the country. The Dow fell 700 points Friday morning in the first few minutes after the opening bell.

An Economist-YouGov poll conducted earlier this week found that 41 percent of Americans thought Trump’s policies were not taking the risks seriously enough. Another 34 percent said his policy was appropriate. This poll finds that 68 percent of Americans are now either “somewhat” or “very” concerned about a coronavirus epidemic in the United States, up from 62 percent in an Economist-YouGov survey last month.

Trump himself has emerged as the administration’s greatest obstacle to sending a clear and consistent message about the coronavirus. Leading public health experts from across the government have found their messages undercut, drowned out and muddled by Trump’s push to downplay the outbreak with a mix of optimism, bombast and pseudoscience, Toluse Olorunnipa reports: “The president has repeatedly misstated the number of Americans who have tested positive for the virus and claimed it would ‘miraculously’ disappear in the spring. He has given a false timeline for the development of a vaccine, publicly questioned whether vaccinations for the flu could be used to treat the novel coronavirus and dismissed the World Health Organization’s coronavirus death rate estimate, substituting a much lower figure and citing a ‘hunch.’ On Wednesday night, Trump made an uncritical reference to people who continue to go to work while infected with the coronavirus — placing himself at odds with doctors who have strongly urged those with even minor symptoms to stay home.”

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Fox News anchor Bret Baier told Trump during the town hall that, while he's said he wants to take politics out of the crisis, the president also keeps blaming former president Barack Obama for delays in distributing test kits. “Well, I don't blame anybody,” he said, before blaming Obama. “I want to get everybody to understand they made some decisions which were not good decisions. We inherited decisions that they made.”

Trump added that his own performance will get criticized no matter what. “If we found a cure, and everybody's better tomorrow morning at nine o'clock, they would say, he's done a terrible job,” he said. “It's just automatic. ... And we have done a great job. Again, we have gotten the highest poll numbers of anybody for this kind of a thing.”

Fact-checker Glenn Kessler awards Four Pinocchios to Trump for his “bogus” effort to blame Obama for sluggish coronavirus testing: “The administration has been under fire for its failure to quickly expand testing for coronavirus across the United States; the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention had distributed flawed tests to state and local health departments. The lack of tests, compared with countries like South Korea that have tested tens of thousands of people, has meant the possible spread of the virus in the United States may be hidden.

“Trump suggested the problem instead was an ‘Obama rule’ on testing that his administration had recently overturned. But this turns out to be completely wrong. ...There was no Obama rule, simply ‘guidance’ that was never acted on because Congress stepped in and decided it would craft the necessary legislation, according to experts we consulted. The Trump administration, in fact, has been working with Congress on such legislation.”

Baier asked Trump why he didn’t expedite testing when the world learned of the virus spreading in January. “I’m thinking about a lot of other things too, like trade and millions of other things,” the president answered. “I mean, we are doing some job with the economy and all. So I’m not thinking about this. But as soon as I heard that China had a problem, I said, what’s going on with China? How many people are coming in? Nobody but me asked that question. ... And we were given A-pluses for that. ... Saved a lot of lives.”

Later in the town hall, a self-described “big supporter” of the president – identified by the network only as Robert – thanked Trump effusively for “everything that you have done for this country and continue to do for this country.” But then he lamented how “insult politics have become a staple of this political environment.” And he wondered: “Could there be a way that we can deliver your message without the controversial rhetoric in efforts to reunite this country during these divisive times?”

Trump’s answer boiled down to no. “When they hit us, we have to hit back,” he said. “I wouldn’t be sitting up here if I turned my cheek.” He added that Fox News wouldn’t be interviewing him if he wasn’t a counterpuncher because it’s good for ratings. “We get hit so hard,” Trump added. “If we don’t fight back, you won’t be a fan of mine very long. But I appreciate the question. Thank you.” The crowd cheered. Robert applauded. And the Trump campaign war room quickly blasted out the clip.

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the spread of coronavirus

A cruise ship with thousands aboard awaits test results.

“The Grand Princess, which was returning to San Francisco after a two-week cruise to Hawaii, remained offshore and in limbo at the request of California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D). About 100 people were expected to be tested, among them 11 passengers and 10 crew members who have shown potential signs of covid-19,” Reed Albergotti, Hannah Sampson and Brady Dennis report. “Even as the military ferried tests to the cruise ship and thousands of passengers waited uneasily on board, public health officials on land were investigating a cluster of coronavirus cases among the roughly 2,500 people who had taken an earlier cruise on the same ship. One of those passengers, a 71-year-old man, has since died of covid-19.

...The virus spread to new states — including three cases in

Montgomery County, Md. ... Meanwhile, the Senate on Thursday voted nearly unanimously to approve emergency spending to combat the coronavirus outbreak [and the president signed the measure on Friday morning.]

“But many questions remain about just how prepared the country is for an expanded outbreak. Vice President Pence, who on Tuesday said that any American with a doctor’s orders could get tested for the coronavirus, acknowledged Thursday that ‘we don’t have enough tests today to meet what we anticipate will be the demand going forward.’ Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar told lawmakers Thursday that the government will have shipped enough tests by the end of the week for 75,000 people to be tested. ... Earlier in the week, the Trump administration said it could have 1 million tests ready by the end of the week.”

Pence is reportedly sidelining Azar. The health secretary wasn’t at a Wednesday televised briefing because officials wanted to make space for housing secretary Ben Carson on stage, Politico reports. He was also left out of a Thursday trip to Washington state, which Pence and Azar allies said was because of “other commitments.”

Globally, the virus has infected nearly 100,000 people and caused 3,200 deaths.

“A French lawmaker tested positive; the Vatican reported its first case; the Netherlands recorded its first fatality; a rabbi was infected in New York state,” Adam Taylor, Teo Armus and Rick Noack report. “Health officials in the Houston area reported two likely cases.”

- California ordered insurers to waive out-of-pocket costs for coronavirus testing. (San Francisco Chronicle)
- A Chinese health expert said he expects the number of new infections in Wuhan, where the outbreak started, to decline to “near zero” by the end of the month. (Lyric Li)

- Coronavirus cases jumped from zero to four in Senegal this week, raising fears that upcoming religious festivals could fuel a wider outbreak. (Danielle Paquette and Borso Tall)

Health-care workers are worried about protections against the virus.

“Some advocates for health-care workers say hospital administrators are not adequately protecting their staff members. This week, National Nurses United (NNU), the largest labor union for nurses, said that only 30 percent of the 6,000 nurses it has surveyed in 48 states think their workplace has sufficient protective gear to handle an influx of coronavirus patients. Only 29 percent said their hospital or clinic has plans for isolating patients if they are infected,” Katie Mettler, Arelis Hernández, William Wan and Lenny Bernstein report.

A proposed regulation could protect these workers from the virus. It’s hanging in limbo.

“The draft regulation would require employers to provide protective gear for health-care workers and to create infection-control plans, which could include building isolation rooms. The Obama administration was working to adopt the regulation, but the Trump administration in 2017 moved it to a less urgent, long-term agenda and work on it stopped,” Kimberly Kindy reports.

A New York college closed and others cancelled classes.

Yeshiva University’s president announced a student had tested positive and classes would be canceled at their Washington Heights and Midtown campuses until after March 10. Lake Washington Institute of Technology closed on Sunday outside Seattle. Susan Svrluga reports that workers cleaned and disinfected the school on Monday and Tuesday, and the more than 20 students and faculty possibly exposed were advised to remain in isolation for two weeks. The campus briefly reopened Wednesday — before closing again that night. A faculty member had tested positive for covid-19, the school announced, and the campus will close at least through the weekend.

The Education Department issued guidance providing schools with the flexibility to accommodate students who studies are being upended by the outbreak. For example, to help students continue their classes, the Education Department is allowing schools to temporarily expand their online learning programs or partner with other schools that can meet the demands, without requiring federal approval. (Danielle Douglas-Gabriel)

A dog tested positive in Hong Kong.

A pet dog in Hong Kong has a “low-level” infection of the coronavirus, in what may be the first known case. Public health officials say the virus “does not appear to infect or be spread by pets. But experts say much remains unknown about the dog’s infection, and they emphasized the lone case is not yet cause for alarm or reassessments about interactions with pets,” Karin Brulliard reports.

Scientists were close to a coronavirus vaccine years ago. Then money dried up.

“Dr. Peter Hotez says he made the pitch to anyone who would listen. After years of research, his team of scientists in Texas had helped develop a vaccine to protect against a deadly strain of coronavirus. Now they needed money to begin testing it in humans,” NBC News reports. “But this was 2016. More than a decade had passed since the viral disease known as severe acute respiratory syndrome, or SARS, had spread through China, killing more than 770 people. That disease, an earlier coronavirus similar to the one now sweeping the globe, was a distant memory by the time Hotez and his team sought funding to test whether their vaccine would work in humans.”

If you're quarantined, you can still eat well.

The Post's culinary team surveyed some of the country's best-known cooks for ideas on what people might stock up on in their pantries to prepare for a coronavirus quarantine. Celebrity author Padma Lakshmi suggests families stock up on frozen veggies and pick a weekend to cook huge batches of different dishes that are stew-y and freeze well, like turkey chili. Chef Nina Compton suggested keeping lots of snacks in the fridge, including pickles, nuts and frozen pizzas. For the pantry, have some bags of dried pasta, dried beans and rice. Chef and author Edward Lee said you should buy a few packets of instant ramen and glamorize them with frozen green beans, curry powder and some cheese.

While you were sleeping

Afghan health workers walk with a wounded man from a hospital after gunmen attacked a political gathering in Kabul on Friday. (Jawad Jalali/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

Gunfire at a Shiite gathering in Kabul left more than 20 dead and dozens wounded. Afghan opposition leader Abdullah Abdullah was there, but he escaped the scene unhurt, according to his spokesman. The attack comes amid heightened political tensions in Afghanistan following disputed election results. Both the Afghan president and Abdullah had declared victory last month. (Susannah George)

Explosives that detonated near the U.S. Embassy in Tunisia were part of an apparent attack by two suicide bombers. The large explosion injured six people, including five security agents and a woman, Tunisia's Interior Ministry said. (Claire Parker and Sudarsan Raghavan)

---

2020 watch

Elizabeth Warren's exit raises questions about the role of women in politics.

“Now as Warren ... decides whether to endorse either of the two male candidates remaining, her supporters are left to contemplate a factor that many believe contributed significantly to her loss: She's female." Annie Linskey and Amy Wang report. “It's not that Warren ran an error-free campaign... But her male counterparts made big mistakes as well. ... The exit by Warren, who spent much of 2019 leading in many polls, was a reminder of four years ago, when Hillary Clinton's loss sparked a national debate over whether a woman could ever win election to the country's highest political office. ... 'Women will not be perceived by some as electable until we're elected,' said Valerie Jarrett, a top adviser to former president Barack Obama and a friend of Warren's."

Linskey asked Warren outside her home in Cambridge, Mass., about the role gender played in the race. "That is the trap question for every woman," the senator answered. "If you say, 'Yeah, there was sexism in this race,' everyone says, 'Whiner!' And if you say, 'No, there was no sexism,' about a bazillion women think, 'What planet do you live on?'"

"Warren's withdrawal also prompted other leading women in Washington to reflect on why the 'highest and hardest' glass ceiling that Clinton once talked about was still intact. 'Every time I get introduced as the most powerful woman in the United States, I almost cry, because I'm thinking, 'I wish that were not true,'" House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) told reporters. 'I so wish that we had a woman president.' ... Still, the Democratic primary has been unusually complicated this year, and many argue that other factors besides sexism were at play in Warren's fate. Her initial strategy rested on quickly consolidating the left, for example, [but many liberals] were more drawn to [Bernie] Sanders's brand of fiery democratic socialism."

Speaking to Rachel Maddow on MSNBC last night, Warren called out Sanders for not taking steps to control the "organized nastiness" of some of his supporters. (Fred Barbash)

Many women saw Warren as one of them, writes columnist Monica Hesse. "Finally, a presidential candidate who took things like maternal health and paid parental leave seriously, and who also knew exactly what Nora Ephron meant when she wrote that she felt bad about her neck. It was an impossible tightrope, but she made it look easy; she made most things look easy."

---

Quote of the day

Bill Clinton discussed his extramarital affair with intern Monica Lewinsky in a new four-part documentary, "Hillary," that premiered this morning on Hulu. "You feel like you're staggering around — you've been in a 15-round prizefight that was extended to 30 rounds, and here's something that'll take your mind off it for a while. Everybody's life has pressures and disappointments and terrors, fears of whatever, things I did to manage my anxieties for years," the former president explained. "Nobody sits down and thinks, 'I think I'll take a really irresponsible risk.'" (NYT)

Mike Bloomberg is forming an outside group to support the Democratic nominee.

"Bloomberg has decided to form an independent expenditure campaign that will absorb hundreds of his presidential campaign staffers in six swing states to work to elect the Democratic nominee this fall," Michael Scherer reports. "The group, with a name that is still undisclosed because its trademark application is in process, would also be a vehicle for Bloomberg to spend money on advertising to attack [Trump] and support the Democratic nominee..."

Monday was the day everything went Joe Biden's way, but the two days before that were full of intrigue.

With news that Pete Buttigieg, Amy Klobuchar and Beto O'Rourke were interested in endorsing Biden, his campaign scrambled to "maximize a sense of drama and momentum that Biden's campaign had rarely, if ever, enjoyed," Jenna Johnson, Matt Viser and Chelsea Janes report in a tick-tock on the hours before the fateful day that secured Biden front-runner status.

Sanders canceled a speech scheduled for later today in Mississippi, where Biden is heavily favored, so he can focus on winning Michigan next Tuesday. The Detroit Free Press endorsed Biden ahead of Michigan's primary next week. Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.) also backed the former vice president. Also happening in Michigan: "Former United Auto Workers President Gary Jones was charged with embezzling more than $1 million, according to a criminal filing that indicates he will plead guilty," the Detroit News reports.

Previously unseen documents from a Soviet archive show how Moscow saw a chance for propaganda in Sanders's attempts to find a sister city in Russia when he was a Vermont mayor in the 1980s. Sanders "wrote to a Soviet counterpart in a provincial city that he wanted the United States and the Soviet Union to 'live together as friends.' Unbeknown to him, his desire for friendship meshed with the efforts of Soviet officials in Moscow to 'reveal American imperialism as the main source of the danger of war,'" the Times reports.

Biden's team is eager to expand staff. The campaign is scaling up and looking to tap into the pool of Democratic talent now available because of all the candidates who have recently dropped out, the Times reports. "In the Democratic contest, any candidate who gets at least 15 percent statewide or in any congressional district gets a cut of the delegates at stake. In the abstract, it's a feature that rewards candidates who stick around and continue to campaign. In practice, though, it very quickly means that a candidate with a lead can hold it," Philip Bump explains. "That's one of the reasons that [Biden] now has a significant advantage over [Sanders]."

Mitt Romney could derail a GOP subpoena targeting the Bidens.

“The Senate Homeland Security Committee is set to vote next Wednesday on a subpoena for records from a Democratic public relations firm related to the panel’s investigation of conflict-of-interest allegations against the Bidens. But [the Republican senator from Utah], a member of the panel, has hinted that he could vote against issuing the subpoena, noting the committee’s investigation might look political in nature given Biden’s resurgence and the increasing likelihood that he’ll become the Democratic presidential nominee,” Politico reports.

Facebook took down deceptive Trump campaign ads – after initially allowing them.

“The Trump ads urged Facebook users to ‘take the official 2020 Congressional District Census today,’ but despite the look and language of the ad, they were not related to the once-a-decade national count of U.S. citizens happening this year,” Craig Timberg and Tara Bahrapour report. “Instead, the ads linked to a survey on the ‘Certified Website of President Donald J. Trump,’ which collected information and requested a donation. Facebook initially said it would permit the ads, ruling that they were clearly not a part of the U.S. census ... Facebook reversed its position hours later, saying that the ads indeed violated its policy against ‘misrepresentation of the dates, locations, times and methods for census participation.’”

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be overlooked

Attorney General Bill Barr speaks during a news conference at the Department of Justice. (Mandel Ngan/AFP)

A federal judge criticized Barr's "lack of candor" in his summary of Mueller's conclusions.

“U.S. District Judge Reggie Walton, overseeing a lawsuit brought by EPIC, a watchdog group, and BuzzFeed News, said he saw serious discrepancies between [Bill] Barr’s public statements about [Bob] Mueller’s findings and the public, partially redacted version of that report detailing the special counsel’s investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election,” Spencer Hsu and Devlin Barrett report. “Because of those discrepancies, Walton ruled, the judge would conduct an independent review of Mueller’s full report to see whether the Justice Department’s redactions were appropriate. ... In his 23-page opinion, Walton said he had ‘grave concerns about the objectivity of the process’ that led up to the public release of the Mueller report. ... ‘Barr’s lack of candor specifically, call into question Attorney General Barr’s credibility,’ [he wrote]. The judge said he would not take Justice Department lawyers at their word that redactions in the report were all done for appropriate reasons.” [Walton was appointed by George W. Bush.]

On immigration, Barr is acting like his own Supreme Court.

"Barr quietly intervened in an immigration asylum case last week when he issued a decision that narrowed the definition of torture for asylum seekers who invoke it as a grounds for staying in the United States," Kim Bellware reports. "Barr used a process known as 'certification,' a historically little-used power of the attorney general that allows him to overrule decisions made by the Board of Immigration Appeals and set binding precedent. Immigration lawyers and judges say the Trump administration is using the power with greater frequency — to the point of abuse — as it seeks to severely limit the number of immigrants who can remain in the United States. The administration is also using it as a check on immigration judges whose decisions don't align with the administration's immigration agenda, experts say."

Trump's border crackdown stalled as illegal crossings increased for the first time in nine months.

"U.S. Customs and Border Protection officials said 37,119 unauthorized border crossers were taken into custody in February, up from 36,660 in January. While the number of migrants arriving in family groups continues to decline, the number of single adult migrants from Mexico and unaccompanied children rose last month, the figures show," Nick Miroff and Abigail Hauslohner report. Meanwhile, ICE is targeting "sanctuary cities" with increased surveillance. The agency's leadership has requested at least 500 special agents to joined an enhanced arrest campaign rolling out in these cities, per the NYT.

A blind man failed the U.S. citizenship test because he couldn't read in English.

"Born 100 percent blind, the 23-year-old legal permanent resident had been studying English for the past six years since coming to the United States from Mexico as a teenager," Meagan Flynn reports. "He got a vision exam by an optometrist so he could prove he is legally blind, asking in his application that he be given the test in Braille. ... But then came the big problem: the reading portion of the exam. The agent said they received his request for Braille, but, unfortunately, USCIS did not have Braille available. ... For the record, the officer gave him ‘three attempts to read a sentence’ in English, as USCIS describes it in a letter Delgado provided. And, predictably, whether the print was large or small, Delgado couldn’t read what he couldn’t see.”

An ex-Nazi concentration camp guard, who’s lived in the U.S. since 1959, faces deportation. An index card found submerged in a sunken ship in the Baltic Sea helped federal prosecutors prove their case that Friedrich Karl Berger, a German citizen and longtime Tennessee resident who acknowledged having served as a guard at a German concentration camp, had to be deported. He’s still receiving a German pension for work that includes his wartime service, per Debbie Cenziper and Rachel Baldauf.

Chuck Schumer expressed regret for calling out two Supreme Court justices.

The Senate minority leader, a Democrat from New York, said Justices Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh would “pay the price” for a vote against abortion rights on Wednesday, drawing the ire of Chief Justice John Roberts. While he defended his passion on the issue on the Senate floor on Thursday, Schumer conceded that his comments went too far. (Paul Kane, John Wagner, Felicia Sonmez)

Trump’s company charged the Secret Service $157,000 more than was previously known.

According to a new trove of receipts released by the agency, Trump billed taxpayers for rooms at his clubs at rates far higher than his company has claimed. David Fahrenthold, Joshua Partlow, Jonathan O’Connell and

Carol D. Leonnig report: “Many of the new receipts were obtained by the watchdog group Public Citizen, which spent three years battling the Secret Service over a public-records request from January 2017. When added to dozens of charges already reported by The Post, the new documents show that Trump’s company has charged the Secret Service more than $628,000 since he took office in 2017. The payments show Trump has an unprecedented — and still partially hidden — business relationship with his own government. The full scope of that relationship is still unknown because the publicly available records are largely from 2017 and 2018, leaving huge gaps in the data.”

---

Social media speed read

A protester brought Nazi propaganda to a Sanders rally last night:

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer · 5h
Reporters at Bernie Sanders's rally tonight in Phoenix witnessed multiple incidents involving protesters, including one who waved a large flag with a swastika on it. The man was immediately removed. Disturbing and scary.

Unclear if Sen. Sanders saw the flag.

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer

Here is video of the incident. Incredibly disturbing. twitter.com/siddakahuja/st...
twitter.com/siddakahuja/st...

Siddak Ahuja @SiddakAhuja
A man brought a literal Nazi flag to the rally of a Jewish Socialist candidate for President

He was escorted out by security forces

1,206 4:35 AM - Mar 6, 2020 · Phoenix, AZ

532 people are talking about this

“The moment, captured in videos and photos that circulated on social media Thursday night, was denounced as an act of anti-Semitism and prompted increased concerns about Sanders's safety on the campaign trail," Allyson Chiu reports. "Sanders did not appear to see the flag as he thanked the crowd for coming out Thursday night. Videos showed him only turning around in time to witness the man being escorted out. 'Whoever it was, I think they're a little outnumbered tonight,' he told the crowd with a smile."

Warren's dog, seemingly aware that he no longer has to be in the spotlight, broke his diet:

Harvard Law honored one of its former professors:

Drew Goins ✓

@drewgoins

The Elizabeth Warren portrait at Harvard Law right now

♥ 24.1K 11:22 PM - Mar 5, 2020

💬 3,646 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert said Warren's exit from the race is proof that America "can't have nice things":

Trevor Noah said goodbye to Warren's campaign:

Seth Meyers said we need truth, transparency and testing when it comes to coronavirus, and he doesn't think we're going to get that from Trump:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Most of Trump's own supporters think he's self-centered. His coronavirus response helps show why.
Date: Friday, March 6, 2020 8:44:32 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Most of Trump's own supporters think he's self-centered. His coronavirus response helps show why.

A national survey published Thursday by the Pew Research Center showed that 73 percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents believe “self-centered” describes President Trump either very or fairly well. Overall, 8 in 10 U.S. adults agree.

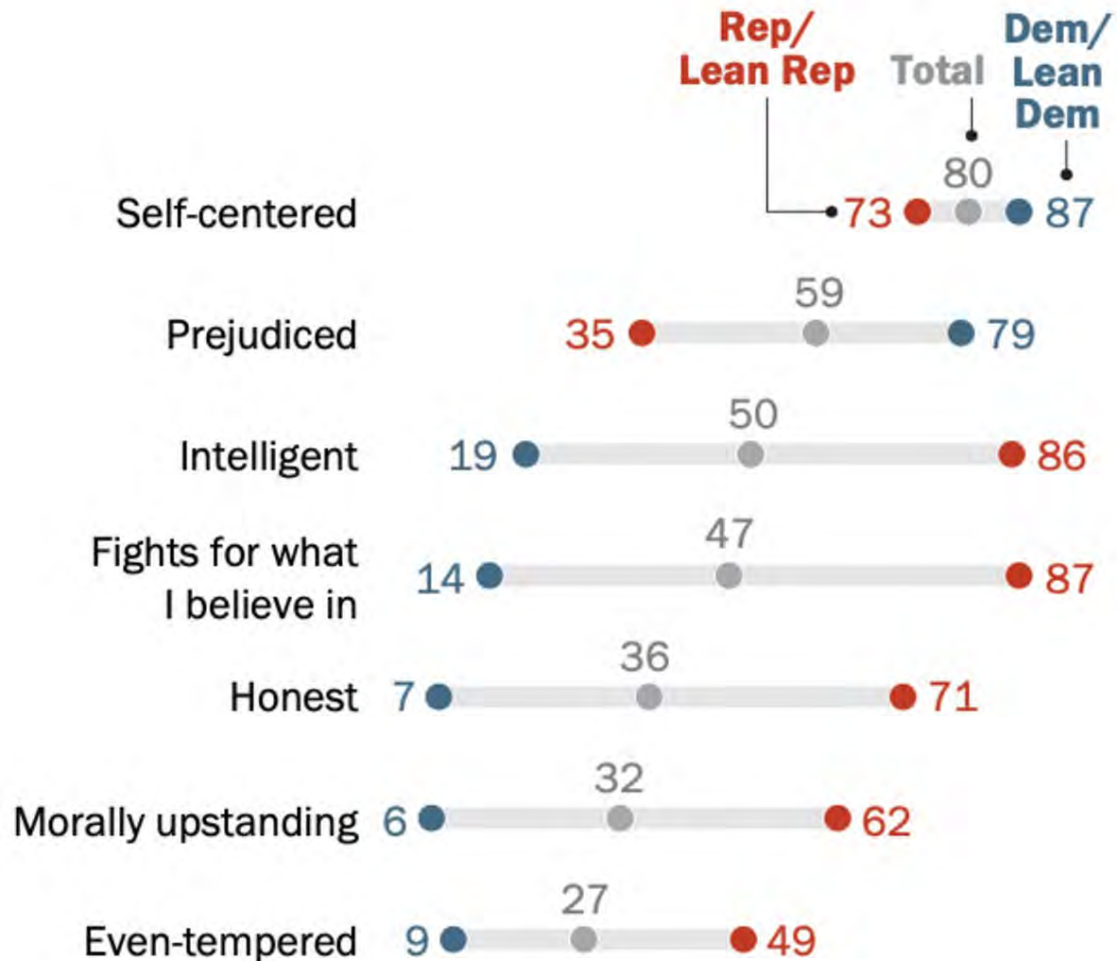

Eighty percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents said they agree with Trump on many or nearly all of the important issues facing the country; the same percentage approve of his job performance in the poll. But only 31 percent said they like the way Trump conducts himself as president. Half said they have mixed feelings, and 16 percent say they don't like his conduct.

Among the Republicans and GOP-leaning independents surveyed by Pew, 35 percent said he's prejudiced, 49 percent said he's even-tempered, 62 percent said he's morally upstanding and 71 percent said he's honest. But 87 percent said he fights for what they believe in. That's the key to his reservoir of support on the right.

---

Republicans widely view Trump as a fighter, but also self-centered

% who say each describes Trump very or fairly well

Source: Survey of U.S. adults conducted Feb. 4-15, 2020.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

---

Trump's town hall on Thursday night in Scranton, Pa., which aired live on Fox News and focused extensively on the novel coronavirus outbreak, captured these dynamics in miniature.

The first audience question came from Katherine Pugh, an undecided voter, who said the Trump administration's initial response to the coronavirus “seemed to some as being confusing or minimizing.” She wondered “what plans are being considered on a federal level for the possibility of a long-term disruption” from its spread. Rather than discuss what’s next, Trump focused on touting his initial response.

He credited his own moves with the relatively small death toll – he said 11 Americans have died, though the number is now 12 – compared to other countries. “Well, actually, we are being given really tremendous marks – you look at Gallup, you look at other polls – for the way we have handled it,” he said. “And one of the things I did is I closed down the borders to China and to other areas that are very badly affected. ... And I closed them down very early against the advice of almost everybody. And we have been given rave reviews.”

There is no public evidence that there was widespread opposition to the travel restrictions in the administration. Moreover, the Gallup poll Trump referred to, conducted from Feb. 3 to Feb. 16, did not ask about Trump’s handling of the situation. Instead, it asked Americans about their confidence in the federal government’s ability to handle an outbreak in the United States. A lot has changed in the past three weeks, including the seesawing stock market and a spike in the number of confirmed cases in the country. The Dow fell 700 points Friday morning in the first few minutes after the opening bell.

An Economist-YouGov poll conducted earlier this week found that 41 percent of Americans thought Trump’s policies were not taking the risks seriously enough. Another 34 percent said his policy was appropriate. This poll finds that 68 percent of Americans are now either “somewhat” or “very” concerned about a coronavirus epidemic in the United States, up from 62 percent in an Economist-YouGov survey last month.

Trump himself has emerged as the administration’s greatest obstacle to sending a clear and consistent message about the coronavirus. Leading public health experts from across the government have found their messages undercut, drowned out and muddled by Trump’s push to downplay the outbreak with a mix of optimism, bombast and pseudoscience, Toluse Olorunnipa reports: “The president has repeatedly misstated the number of Americans who have tested positive for the virus and claimed it would ‘miraculously’ disappear in the spring. He has given a false timeline for the development of a vaccine, publicly questioned whether vaccinations for the flu could be used to treat the novel coronavirus and dismissed the World Health Organization’s coronavirus death rate estimate, substituting a much lower figure and citing a ‘hunch.’ On Wednesday night, Trump made an uncritical reference to people who continue to go to work while infected with the coronavirus — placing himself at odds with doctors who have strongly urged those with even minor symptoms to stay home.”

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

Fox News anchor Bret Baier told Trump during the town hall that, while he's said he wants to take politics out of the crisis, the president also keeps blaming former president Barack Obama for delays in distributing test kits. “Well, I don't blame anybody,” he said, before blaming Obama. “I want to get everybody to understand they made some decisions which were not good decisions. We inherited decisions that they made.”

Trump added that his own performance will get criticized no matter what. “If we found a cure, and everybody's better tomorrow morning at nine o'clock, they would say, he's done a terrible job,” he said. “It's just automatic. ... And we have done a great job. Again, we have gotten the highest poll numbers of anybody for this kind of a thing.”

Fact-checker Glenn Kessler awards Four Pinocchios to Trump for his “bogus” effort to blame Obama for sluggish coronavirus testing: “The administration has been under fire for its failure to quickly expand testing for coronavirus across the United States; the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention had distributed flawed tests to state and local health departments. The lack of tests, compared with countries like South Korea that have tested tens of thousands of people, has meant the possible spread of the virus in the United States may be hidden.

“Trump suggested the problem instead was an ‘Obama rule’ on testing that his administration had recently overturned. But this turns out to be completely wrong. ...There was no Obama rule, simply ‘guidance’ that was never acted on because Congress stepped in and decided it would craft the necessary legislation, according to experts we consulted. The Trump administration, in fact, has been working with Congress on such legislation.”

Baier asked Trump why he didn’t expedite testing when the world learned of the virus spreading in January. “I’m thinking about a lot of other things too, like trade and millions of other things,” the president answered. “I mean, we are doing some job with the economy and all. So I’m not thinking about this. But as soon as I heard that China had a problem, I said, what’s going on with China? How many people are coming in? Nobody but me asked that question. ... And we were given A-pluses for that. ... Saved a lot of lives.”

Later in the town hall, a self-described “big supporter” of the president – identified by the network only as Robert – thanked Trump effusively for “everything that you have done for this country and continue to do for this country.” But then he lamented how “insult politics have become a staple of this political environment.” And he wondered: “Could there be a way that we can deliver your message without the controversial rhetoric in efforts to reunite this country during these divisive times?”

Trump’s answer boiled down to no. “When they hit us, we have to hit back,” he said. “I wouldn’t be sitting up here if I turned my cheek.” He added that Fox News wouldn’t be interviewing him if he wasn’t a counterpuncher because it’s good for ratings. “We get hit so hard,” Trump added. “If we don’t fight back, you won’t be a fan of mine very long. But I appreciate the question. Thank you.” The crowd cheered. Robert applauded. And the Trump campaign war room quickly blasted out the clip.

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the spread of coronavirus

A cruise ship with thousands aboard awaits test results.

“The Grand Princess, which was returning to San Francisco after a two-week cruise to Hawaii, remained offshore and in limbo at the request of California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D). About 100 people were expected to be tested, among them 11 passengers and 10 crew members who have shown potential signs of covid-19,” Reed Albergotti, Hannah Sampson and Brady Dennis report. “Even as the military ferried tests to the cruise ship and thousands of passengers waited uneasily on board, public health officials on land were investigating a cluster of coronavirus cases among the roughly 2,500 people who had taken an earlier cruise on the same ship. One of those passengers, a 71-year-old man, has since died of covid-19.

...The virus spread to new states — including three cases in

Montgomery County, Md. ... Meanwhile, the Senate on Thursday voted nearly unanimously to approve emergency spending to combat the coronavirus outbreak [and the president signed the measure on Friday morning.]

“But many questions remain about just how prepared the country is for an expanded outbreak. Vice President Pence, who on Tuesday said that any American with a doctor’s orders could get tested for the coronavirus, acknowledged Thursday that ‘we don’t have enough tests today to meet what we anticipate will be the demand going forward.’ Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar told lawmakers Thursday that the government will have shipped enough tests by the end of the week for 75,000 people to be tested. ... Earlier in the week, the Trump administration said it could have 1 million tests ready by the end of the week.”

Pence is reportedly sidelining Azar. The health secretary wasn’t at a Wednesday televised briefing because officials wanted to make space for housing secretary Ben Carson on stage, Politico reports. He was also left out of a Thursday trip to Washington state, which Pence and Azar allies said was because of “other commitments.”

Globally, the virus has infected nearly 100,000 people and caused 3,200 deaths.

“A French lawmaker tested positive; the Vatican reported its first case; the Netherlands recorded its first fatality; a rabbi was infected in New York state,” Adam Taylor, Teo Armus and Rick Noack report. “Health officials in the Houston area reported two likely cases.”

- California ordered insurers to waive out-of-pocket costs for coronavirus testing. (San Francisco Chronicle)
- A Chinese health expert said he expects the number of new infections in Wuhan, where the outbreak started, to decline to “near zero” by the end of the month. (Lyric Li)

- Coronavirus cases jumped from zero to four in Senegal this week, raising fears that upcoming religious festivals could fuel a wider outbreak. (Danielle Paquette and Borso Tall)

Health-care workers are worried about protections against the virus.

“Some advocates for health-care workers say hospital administrators are not adequately protecting their staff members. This week, National Nurses United (NNU), the largest labor union for nurses, said that only 30 percent of the 6,000 nurses it has surveyed in 48 states think their workplace has sufficient protective gear to handle an influx of coronavirus patients. Only 29 percent said their hospital or clinic has plans for isolating patients if they are infected,” Katie Mettler, Arelis Hernández, William Wan and Lenny Bernstein report.

A proposed regulation could protect these workers from the virus. It’s hanging in limbo.

“The draft regulation would require employers to provide protective gear for health-care workers and to create infection-control plans, which could include building isolation rooms. The Obama administration was working to adopt the regulation, but the Trump administration in 2017 moved it to a less urgent, long-term agenda and work on it stopped,” Kimberly Kindy reports.

A New York college closed and others cancelled classes.

Yeshiva University’s president announced a student had tested positive and classes would be canceled at their Washington Heights and Midtown campuses until after March 10. Lake Washington Institute of Technology closed on Sunday outside Seattle. Susan Svrluga reports that workers cleaned and disinfected the school on Monday and Tuesday, and the more than 20 students and faculty possibly exposed were advised to remain in isolation for two weeks. The campus briefly reopened Wednesday — before closing again that night. A faculty member had tested positive for covid-19, the school announced, and the campus will close at least through the weekend.

The Education Department issued guidance providing schools with the flexibility to accommodate students who studies are being upended by the outbreak. For example, to help students continue their classes, the Education Department is allowing schools to temporarily expand their online learning programs or partner with other schools that can meet the demands, without requiring federal approval. (Danielle Douglas-Gabriel)

A dog tested positive in Hong Kong.

A pet dog in Hong Kong has a “low-level” infection of the coronavirus, in what may be the first known case. Public health officials say the virus “does not appear to infect or be spread by pets. But experts say much remains unknown about the dog’s infection, and they emphasized the lone case is not yet cause for alarm or reassessments about interactions with pets,” Karin Brulliard reports.

Scientists were close to a coronavirus vaccine years ago. Then money dried up.

“Dr. Peter Hotez says he made the pitch to anyone who would listen. After years of research, his team of scientists in Texas had helped develop a vaccine to protect against a deadly strain of coronavirus. Now they needed money to begin testing it in humans,” NBC News reports. “But this was 2016. More than a decade had passed since the viral disease known as severe acute respiratory syndrome, or SARS, had spread through China, killing more than 770 people. That disease, an earlier coronavirus similar to the one now sweeping the globe, was a distant memory by the time Hotez and his team sought funding to test whether their vaccine would work in humans.”

If you're quarantined, you can still eat well.

The Post's culinary team surveyed some of the country's best-known cooks for ideas on what people might stock up on in their pantries to prepare for a coronavirus quarantine. Celebrity author Padma Lakshmi suggests families stock up on frozen veggies and pick a weekend to cook huge batches of different dishes that are stew-y and freeze well, like turkey chili. Chef Nina Compton suggested keeping lots of snacks in the fridge, including pickles, nuts and frozen pizzas. For the pantry, have some bags of dried pasta, dried beans and rice. Chef and author Edward Lee said you should buy a few packets of instant ramen and glamorize them with frozen green beans, curry powder and some cheese.

While you were sleeping

Afghan health workers walk with a wounded man from a hospital after gunmen attacked a political gathering in Kabul on Friday. (Jawad Jalali/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

Gunfire at a Shiite gathering in Kabul left more than 20 dead and dozens wounded. Afghan opposition leader Abdullah Abdullah was there, but he escaped the scene unhurt, according to his spokesman. The attack comes amid heightened political tensions in Afghanistan following disputed election results. Both the Afghan president and Abdullah had declared victory last month. (Susannah George)

Explosives that detonated near the U.S. Embassy in Tunisia were part of an apparent attack by two suicide bombers. The large explosion injured six people, including five security agents and a woman, Tunisia's Interior Ministry said. (Claire Parker and Sudarsan Raghavan)

---

2020 watch

Elizabeth Warren's exit raises questions about the role of women in politics.

“Now as Warren ... decides whether to endorse either of the two male candidates remaining, her supporters are left to contemplate a factor that many believe contributed significantly to her loss: She's female." Annie Linskey and Amy Wang report. “It's not that Warren ran an error-free campaign... But her male counterparts made big mistakes as well. ... The exit by Warren, who spent much of 2019 leading in many polls, was a reminder of four years ago, when Hillary Clinton's loss sparked a national debate over whether a woman could ever win election to the country's highest political office. ... 'Women will not be perceived by some as electable until we're elected,' said Valerie Jarrett, a top adviser to former president Barack Obama and a friend of Warren's."

Linskey asked Warren outside her home in Cambridge, Mass., about the role gender played in the race. "That is the trap question for every woman," the senator answered. "If you say, 'Yeah, there was sexism in this race,' everyone says, 'Whiner!' And if you say, 'No, there was no sexism,' about a bazillion women think, 'What planet do you live on?'"

"Warren's withdrawal also prompted other leading women in Washington to reflect on why the 'highest and hardest' glass ceiling that Clinton once talked about was still intact. 'Every time I get introduced as the most powerful woman in the United States, I almost cry, because I'm thinking, 'I wish that were not true,'" House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) told reporters. 'I so wish that we had a woman president.' ... Still, the Democratic primary has been unusually complicated this year, and many argue that other factors besides sexism were at play in Warren's fate. Her initial strategy rested on quickly consolidating the left, for example, [but many liberals] were more drawn to [Bernie] Sanders's brand of fiery democratic socialism."

Speaking to Rachel Maddow on MSNBC last night, Warren called out Sanders for not taking steps to control the "organized nastiness" of some of his supporters. (Fred Barbash)

Many women saw Warren as one of them, writes columnist Monica Hesse. "Finally, a presidential candidate who took things like maternal health and paid parental leave seriously, and who also knew exactly what Nora Ephron meant when she wrote that she felt bad about her neck. It was an impossible tightrope, but she made it look easy; she made most things look easy."

---

Quote of the day

Bill Clinton discussed his extramarital affair with intern Monica Lewinsky in a new four-part documentary, "Hillary," that premiered this morning on Hulu. "You feel like you're staggering around — you've been in a 15-round prizefight that was extended to 30 rounds, and here's something that'll take your mind off it for a while. Everybody's life has pressures and disappointments and terrors, fears of whatever, things I did to manage my anxieties for years," the former president explained. "Nobody sits down and thinks, 'I think I'll take a really irresponsible risk.'" (NYT)

Mike Bloomberg is forming an outside group to support the Democratic nominee.

"Bloomberg has decided to form an independent expenditure campaign that will absorb hundreds of his presidential campaign staffers in six swing states to work to elect the Democratic nominee this fall," Michael Scherer reports. "The group, with a name that is still undisclosed because its trademark application is in process, would also be a vehicle for Bloomberg to spend money on advertising to attack [Trump] and support the Democratic nominee..."

Monday was the day everything went Joe Biden's way, but the two days before that were full of intrigue.

With news that Pete Buttigieg, Amy Klobuchar and Beto O'Rourke were interested in endorsing Biden, his campaign scrambled to "maximize a sense of drama and momentum that Biden's campaign had rarely, if ever, enjoyed," Jenna Johnson, Matt Viser and Chelsea Janes report in a tick-tock on the hours before the fateful day that secured Biden front-runner status.

Sanders canceled a speech scheduled for later today in Mississippi, where Biden is heavily favored, so he can focus on winning Michigan next Tuesday. The Detroit Free Press endorsed Biden ahead of Michigan's primary next week. Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-Mich.) also backed the former vice president. Also happening in Michigan: "Former United Auto Workers President Gary Jones was charged with embezzling more than $1 million, according to a criminal filing that indicates he will plead guilty," the Detroit News reports.

Previously unseen documents from a Soviet archive show how Moscow saw a chance for propaganda in Sanders's attempts to find a sister city in Russia when he was a Vermont mayor in the 1980s. Sanders "wrote to a Soviet counterpart in a provincial city that he wanted the United States and the Soviet Union to 'live together as friends.' Unbeknown to him, his desire for friendship meshed with the efforts of Soviet officials in Moscow to 'reveal American imperialism as the main source of the danger of war,'" the Times reports.

Biden's team is eager to expand staff. The campaign is scaling up and looking to tap into the pool of Democratic talent now available because of all the candidates who have recently dropped out, the Times reports. "In the Democratic contest, any candidate who gets at least 15 percent statewide or in any congressional district gets a cut of the delegates at stake. In the abstract, it's a feature that rewards candidates who stick around and continue to campaign. In practice, though, it very quickly means that a candidate with a lead can hold it," Philip Bump explains. "That's one of the reasons that [Biden] now has a significant advantage over [Sanders]."

Mitt Romney could derail a GOP subpoena targeting the Bidens.

“The Senate Homeland Security Committee is set to vote next Wednesday on a subpoena for records from a Democratic public relations firm related to the panel’s investigation of conflict-of-interest allegations against the Bidens. But [the Republican senator from Utah], a member of the panel, has hinted that he could vote against issuing the subpoena, noting the committee’s investigation might look political in nature given Biden’s resurgence and the increasing likelihood that he’ll become the Democratic presidential nominee,” Politico reports.

Facebook took down deceptive Trump campaign ads – after initially allowing them.

“The Trump ads urged Facebook users to ‘take the official 2020 Congressional District Census today,’ but despite the look and language of the ad, they were not related to the once-a-decade national count of U.S. citizens happening this year,” Craig Timberg and Tara Bahrapour report. “Instead, the ads linked to a survey on the ‘Certified Website of President Donald J. Trump,’ which collected information and requested a donation. Facebook initially said it would permit the ads, ruling that they were clearly not a part of the U.S. census ... Facebook reversed its position hours later, saying that the ads indeed violated its policy against ‘misrepresentation of the dates, locations, times and methods for census participation.’”

---

Domestic developments that shouldn't be overlooked

Attorney General Bill Barr speaks during a news conference at the Department of Justice. (Mandel Ngan/AFP)

A federal judge criticized Barr's “lack of candor” in his summary of Mueller's conclusions.

“U.S. District Judge Reggie Walton, overseeing a lawsuit brought by EPIC, a watchdog group, and BuzzFeed News, said he saw serious discrepancies between [Bill] Barr’s public statements about [Bob] Mueller’s findings and the public, partially redacted version of that report detailing the special counsel’s investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election,” Spencer Hsu and Devlin Barrett report. “Because of those discrepancies, Walton ruled, the judge would conduct an independent review of Mueller’s full report to see whether the Justice Department’s redactions were appropriate. ... In his 23-page opinion, Walton said he had ‘grave concerns about the objectivity of the process’ that led up to the public release of the Mueller report. ... ‘Barr’s lack of candor specifically, call into question Attorney General Barr’s credibility,’ [he wrote]. The judge said he would not take Justice Department lawyers at their word that redactions in the report were all done for appropriate reasons.” [Walton was appointed by George W. Bush.]

On immigration, Barr is acting like his own Supreme Court.

"Barr quietly intervened in an immigration asylum case last week when he issued a decision that narrowed the definition of torture for asylum seekers who invoke it as a grounds for staying in the United States," Kim Bellware reports. "Barr used a process known as 'certification,' a historically little-used power of the attorney general that allows him to overrule decisions made by the Board of Immigration Appeals and set binding precedent. Immigration lawyers and judges say the Trump administration is using the power with greater frequency — to the point of abuse — as it seeks to severely limit the number of immigrants who can remain in the United States. The administration is also using it as a check on immigration judges whose decisions don't align with the administration's immigration agenda, experts say."

Trump's border crackdown stalled as illegal crossings increased for the first time in nine months.

"U.S. Customs and Border Protection officials said 37,119 unauthorized border crossers were taken into custody in February, up from 36,660 in January. While the number of migrants arriving in family groups continues to decline, the number of single adult migrants from Mexico and unaccompanied children rose last month, the figures show," Nick Miroff and Abigail Hauslohner report. Meanwhile, ICE is targeting "sanctuary cities" with increased surveillance. The agency's leadership has requested at least 500 special agents to joined an enhanced arrest campaign rolling out in these cities, per the NYT.

A blind man failed the U.S. citizenship test because he couldn't read in English.

"Born 100 percent blind, the 23-year-old legal permanent resident had been studying English for the past six years since coming to the United States from Mexico as a teenager," Meagan Flynn reports. "He got a vision exam by an optometrist so he could prove he is legally blind, asking in his application that he be given the test in Braille. ... But then came the big problem: the reading portion of the exam. The agent said they received his request for Braille, but, unfortunately, USCIS did not have Braille available. ... For the record, the officer gave him ‘three attempts to read a sentence’ in English, as USCIS describes it in a letter Delgado provided. And, predictably, whether the print was large or small, Delgado couldn’t read what he couldn’t see.”

An ex-Nazi concentration camp guard, who’s lived in the U.S. since 1959, faces deportation. An index card found submerged in a sunken ship in the Baltic Sea helped federal prosecutors prove their case that Friedrich Karl Berger, a German citizen and longtime Tennessee resident who acknowledged having served as a guard at a German concentration camp, had to be deported. He’s still receiving a German pension for work that includes his wartime service, per Debbie Cenziper and Rachel Baldauf.

Chuck Schumer expressed regret for calling out two Supreme Court justices.

The Senate minority leader, a Democrat from New York, said Justices Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh would “pay the price” for a vote against abortion rights on Wednesday, drawing the ire of Chief Justice John Roberts. While he defended his passion on the issue on the Senate floor on Thursday, Schumer conceded that his comments went too far. (Paul Kane, John Wagner, Felicia Sonmez)

Trump’s company charged the Secret Service $157,000 more than was previously known.

According to a new trove of receipts released by the agency, Trump billed taxpayers for rooms at his clubs at rates far higher than his company has claimed. David Fahrenthold, Joshua Partlow, Jonathan O’Connell and

Carol D. Leonnig report: “Many of the new receipts were obtained by the watchdog group Public Citizen, which spent three years battling the Secret Service over a public-records request from January 2017. When added to dozens of charges already reported by The Post, the new documents show that Trump’s company has charged the Secret Service more than $628,000 since he took office in 2017. The payments show Trump has an unprecedented — and still partially hidden — business relationship with his own government. The full scope of that relationship is still unknown because the publicly available records are largely from 2017 and 2018, leaving huge gaps in the data.”

---

Social media speed read

A protester brought Nazi propaganda to a Sanders rally last night:

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer · 5h
Reporters at Bernie Sanders's rally tonight in Phoenix witnessed multiple incidents involving protesters, including one who waved a large flag with a swastika on it. The man was immediately removed. Disturbing and scary.

Unclear if Sen. Sanders saw the flag.

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer

Here is video of the incident. Incredibly disturbing. twitter.com/siddakahuja/st...
twitter.com/siddakahuja/st...

Siddak Ahuja @SiddakAhuja
A man brought a literal Nazi flag to the rally of a Jewish Socialist candidate for President

He was escorted out by security forces

1,206 4:35 AM - Mar 6, 2020 · Phoenix, AZ

532 people are talking about this

“The moment, captured in videos and photos that circulated on social media Thursday night, was denounced as an act of anti-Semitism and prompted increased concerns about Sanders’s safety on the campaign trail,” Allyson Chiu reports. “Sanders did not appear to see the flag as he thanked the crowd for coming out Thursday night. Videos showed him only turning around in time to witness the man being escorted out. ‘Whoever it was, I think they’re a little outnumbered tonight,’ he told the crowd with a smile.”

Warren’s dog, seemingly aware that he no longer has to be in the spotlight, broke his diet:

Harvard Law honored one of its former professors:

Drew Goins ✓

@drewgoins

The Elizabeth Warren portrait at Harvard Law right now

♥ 24.1K 11:22 PM - Mar 5, 2020

💬 3,646 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert said Warren's exit from the race is proof that America "can't have nice things":

Trevor Noah said goodbye to Warren's campaign:

Seth Meyers said we need truth, transparency and testing when it comes to coronavirus, and he doesn't think we're going to get that from Trump:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Week in Ideas: How we will figure out how deadly the coronavirus really is
Date: Sunday, March 8, 2020 5:12:40 AM

Read online

The Washington Post

The Week in Ideas

Opinions you may have missed.

By Fred Hiatt
✉ Email

China kidnapped Angela Gui's father, held him mostly incommunicado for four years, and last month sentenced him to 10 more years in prison. Here Gui tells how she heard the news — and explains why we should all care that “anyone, of any nationality, could travel to China, be detained and then be forced to renounce their citizenship and any rights protected by it. Or, as in my father's case, one doesn't even need to travel to China.”

Two contrasting reactions to Elizabeth Warren exiting the race:

- Our satirist Alexandra Petri writes from the vantage point of the year 2148: “Too bad! Look, there was, once again, a problem with the female candidate, and I am very sorry about it. . . . But the good news is that there are a lot of women who are already getting my hopes up for 2152.”
- Megan McArdle argues that it's not about gender: “Democratic voters had good reason to prefer someone else.”

Did Vladimir Putin win? In an Opinions Essay, David Von Drehle looks at

how easily the Russian president has infected our national trust.

Richard E. Besser was in charge of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in 2009, when the H1N1 influenza virus blossomed into a pandemic. Here he shows how societal failures, from child care to sick leave to immigration policy, are crimping our response to coronavirus.

And everyone wants to know how deadly this new virus really is. Harvard epidemiologist Marc Lipsitch explains how we will figure that out — and why we don't know the answer yet.

Thanks for reading.

Why China's cruel imprisonment of my father should terrify us all

The surreal charge against him signifies a new level of Chinese brazenness.

By Angela Gui • Read more »

So 2148 was a bust. But next time a woman runs for president will be different!

I am excited for her to be better.

By Alexandra Petri • Read more »

Elizabeth Warren is out. And no, it's not because of her gender.

Sexism toward women in prominent positions is real. But let's consider the other reasons voters might have preferred someone else.

By Megan McArdle • Read more »

Did Vladimir Putin turn America on itself?

It's up to the American public to decide whether we are going to resist Putin's game or play it for him.

By David Von Drehle • Read more »

As coronavirus spreads, the bill for our public health failures is due

The greatest strain of the disease will fall on the most vulnerable.

By Richard E. Besser • Read more »

Why it's so hard to pin down the risk of dying from coronavirus

Scientists are doing their best to make sense of imperfect data.

By Marc Lipsitch • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Week in Ideas | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Week in Ideas or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Week in Ideas: How we will figure out how deadly the coronavirus really is
Date: Sunday, March 8, 2020 5:12:50 AM

Read online

The Washington Post

The Week in Ideas

Opinions you may have missed.

By Fred Hiatt
✉ Email

China kidnapped Angela Gui's father, held him mostly incommunicado for four years, and last month sentenced him to 10 more years in prison. Here Gui tells how she heard the news — and explains why we should all care that “anyone, of any nationality, could travel to China, be detained and then be forced to renounce their citizenship and any rights protected by it. Or, as in my father's case, one doesn't even need to travel to China.”

Two contrasting reactions to Elizabeth Warren exiting the race:

- Our satirist Alexandra Petri writes from the vantage point of the year 2148: “Too bad! Look, there was, once again, a problem with the female candidate, and I am very sorry about it. . . . But the good news is that there are a lot of women who are already getting my hopes up for 2152.”
- Megan McArdle argues that it's not about gender: “Democratic voters had good reason to prefer someone else.”

Did Vladimir Putin win? In an Opinions Essay, David Von Drehle looks at

how easily the Russian president has infected our national trust.

Richard E. Besser was in charge of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in 2009, when the H1N1 influenza virus blossomed into a pandemic. Here he shows how societal failures, from child care to sick leave to immigration policy, are crimping our response to coronavirus.

And everyone wants to know how deadly this new virus really is. Harvard epidemiologist Marc Lipsitch explains how we will figure that out — and why we don't know the answer yet.

Thanks for reading.

Why China's cruel imprisonment of my father should terrify us all

The surreal charge against him signifies a new level of Chinese brazenness.

By Angela Gui • Read more »

So 2148 was a bust. But next time a woman runs for president will be different!

I am excited for her to be better.

By Alexandra Petri • Read more »

Elizabeth Warren is out. And no, it's not because of her gender.

Sexism toward women in prominent positions is real. But let's consider the other reasons voters might have preferred someone else.

By Megan McArdle • Read more »

Did Vladimir Putin turn America on itself?

It's up to the American public to decide whether we are going to resist Putin's game or play it for him.

By David Von Drehle • Read more »

As coronavirus spreads, the bill for our public health failures is due

The greatest strain of the disease will fall on the most vulnerable.

By Richard E. Besser • Read more »

Why it's so hard to pin down the risk of dying from coronavirus

Scientists are doing their best to make sense of imperfect data.

By Marc Lipsitch • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Week in Ideas | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Week in Ideas or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Bernie Sanders sharpens his pitch to women, as moms in Michigan oscillate between him and Biden
Date: Monday, March 9, 2020 9:51:26 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Bernie Sanders sharpens his pitch to women, as moms in Michigan oscillate between him and Biden

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — Bernie Sanders has massively stepped up efforts to woo female voters since Joe Biden took the lead in delegates and Elizabeth Warren dropped out of the race.

The independent senator from Vermont unveiled a “reproductive health care and justice for all” plan on Saturday evening. He’s attacking the former vice president for supporting the Hyde Amendment, which banned Medicaid funds from being used to cover abortions, until reversing himself under pressure last year. He's reading aloud a quote from the 1970s in which Biden said that Roe v. Wade "went too far."

"Women have a right to control their own bodies, not the government," Sanders said during an outdoor rally here on a sunny Sunday afternoon. "Here is my promise to you: I will never nominate anyone to the Supreme Court or the federal bench who is not 100 percent pro-Roe v. Wade. ... We're in this together."

Jesse Jackson told the crowd of 7,600 that he endorsed Sanders only after receiving an ironclad commitment that he would nominate an African American woman to the Supreme Court and a promise that he would give "serious consideration" to naming a black woman as his running mate. "Bernie can win, will win and must win," said Jackson.

Bernie Sanders introduces Jesse Jackson during a rally on Sunday at Calder Plaza in Grand Rapids, Mich. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Michigan is the most populous, and symbolically significant, of

six states voting tomorrow. An EPIC-MRA poll released this morning showed Biden leading Sanders 51 percent to 27 percent in the state, with 13 percent undecided and 9 percent saying they plan to vote for another candidate. The survey of 400 likely Democratic voters, conducted Wednesday through Friday, has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percent. But this should be taken with a grain of salt. The pre-primary polls four years ago showed Hillary Clinton with a similarly huge lead, and Sanders pulled off an upset. Clinton's weakness foreshadowed Donald Trump narrowly carrying the state in November.

The Sanders campaign rushed resources and staff to Michigan over the weekend, going all-in on the Wolverine State the way that Biden did before South Carolina's primary. The other states with primaries on Tuesday are Missouri, Washington, Idaho, Mississippi and North Dakota.

Women are the centerpiece of Sanders's comeback strategy here, including an effort to win over former supporters of Warren. Biden led him among women by 12 points on Super Tuesday, 37 percent to 25 percent, based on median support in available exit polling, with Warren (D-Mass.) pulling 15 percent and former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg getting 13 percent. Biden led Sanders among men by a narrower 4 points, 36 percent to 32 percent, with Warren in single digits.

"My heart wants to vote for Bernie. My gut wants to vote for Biden," said Melissa Courtade, 46, who sits on the Kenowa Hills school board. She had planned to vote for Warren on Tuesday and remains undecided after watching Sanders speak. Courtade likes Sanders's plan to raise teacher pay to a minimum of $60,000 per year but doesn't think it's realistic. She likes the idea of Medicare-for-all, but she isn't sure that's realistic either. She really likes Sanders personally, and many of her friends support him, but she's not sure he can beat Trump.

Courtade, who voted for Clinton in the 2016 primary, said her 19-year-old daughter is supporting Biden because she thinks Sanders is too liberal to carry Michigan in the general election. “She jokingly teases me and says you’re ADD when it comes to this election, and I really am,” Courtade said after Sanders’s rally. “I just don’t know where my head is at right now. It’s so hard. I’ve never not known who I was going to vote for.”

She was one of about two dozen women I spoke with at Sanders’s rally on Sunday afternoon. Several said they had planned to back Warren or one of the other female candidates but now reluctantly needed to decide between Sanders and Biden.

A February Washington Post-ABC News poll found that while Sanders was ranked higher as a second choice by many Warren voters, a significant chunk favored moderate candidates, including Biden. Warren herself has not endorsed. The Massachusetts senator is trying to balance playing an inside game versus an outside game. Whether she backs someone or not, her ideas won’t go away and neither will she.

Sanders won his upset four years ago by running up the score in rural and conservative parts of Michigan. He managed to eke out a 1.4-point win statewide despite losing the Detroit metropolitan area, including Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties. But Sanders won Kent County, which includes Gerald Ford’s hometown of Grand Rapids, by 25 points, a 17,000-vote margin of victory. That was almost exactly his statewide margin. He’s trying to replicate this on Tuesday.

Kim Sapkowski, 55 of Belmont, had planned to vote for Warren but will now support Sanders because, in her view, Biden’s plans are too incremental. Her position as an administrative assistant at a local university was eliminated last month because of budget cuts. Now she’s unemployed and has two kids of her own in college. She worries a recession is looming, which bolsters her conviction that this is no time for “the half-measures” that she believes Biden wants to pursue. “I’m disappointed that we still are hesitant about electing a woman as president, but we've just got to beat Trump," said Sapkowski. "The biggest response that the crowd gave Bernie was when he said that the government should get its hands off women's bodies. That was the strongest response he got, and you're in maybe the most conservative part of Michigan."

Sanders speaks in Grand Rapids. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

An advertisement for the BlueCross BlueShield Association. The main image shows a woman in a red shirt holding a young child. Overlaid on the image is the text "BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM" in large, white, bold letters. At the bottom left is the BlueCross BlueShield Association logo. At the bottom right is a blue button with the text "PASS THE MOMNIBUS" and a right-pointing arrow. Below the main image, it says "Powered by LivIntent" with the LivIntent logo and a small play button icon.

Biden will hold his own rally in Grand Rapids on Monday in a

bid to blunt Sanders's strength in Western Michigan. Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.), who dropped out a week ago today, also came here to campaign for Biden on Saturday. "People are looking for someone who is a rock, someone who is a safe place, and that is Joe Biden," she said at a brewery here.

Carolyn Ferrari, the regional manager for a theater company and one of the relatively few black faces at Sanders's rally here, had leaned toward supporting Klobuchar. But she decided to support Sanders on Sunday after hearing him commit to nominate a black woman to the Supreme Court. "Warren spoke very well, but something about her didn't seem genuine to me, and I don't think Biden can really get the job done," said Ferrari.

A hundred years after the ratification of the 19th Amendment granted women the right to vote, the 49-year-old said she assumed all along over the past year that no women would be left in the race at this stage because sexism remains so endemic in American politics. "You hope, but you never really expect," she said, with a sigh. "I'm almost 50, and I don't know that it's going to change in my lifetime. But to be honest, I also didn't think we'd see a black president in my lifetime."

Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) remains in the race, but she only has two delegates from American Samoa. The Democratic National Committee announced qualification requirements for Sunday night's debate in Phoenix that ensure only Biden and Sanders appear onstage.

Leslie Schwartz-Thomas, who retired as a 911 dispatcher to focus on being a grandmother to triplets, loved Warren. "The chance to vote for a woman had something to do with it," she said. "I'd be lying if I said it didn't, but I wouldn't vote for somebody just because they're a woman." Her son who lives in Seattle is a diehard Sanders supporter and urged his mom to feel the Bern after Warren suspended her campaign. The 59-year-old agreed to go to Sanders's rally to hear him out. "A lot of what Bernie talks about, I agree with," she said, "but I worry he won't beat that man who is in the White House – I won't even say his name."

Women, especially in the suburbs, powered the Democratic takeover of the House in the 2018 midterm elections. Several first-term congresswomen who flipped seats have endorsed Biden in recent days, including Elissa Slotkin and Haley Stevens in Michigan. Gretchen Whitmer, the state's Democratic governor who also won in 2018, endorsed Biden last week. But Sanders had the early support of Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.). Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) – another member of the Squad elected in 2018 – introduced him on Sunday night before a crowd of 10,240 in Ann Arbor, home to the University of Michigan.

Indeed, Sanders fares better among women than the saturation coverage of the "Bernie Bros" might lead you to believe. "His main supporters are teachers," said Sanders supporter Nichole Biber, 45, an elementary school librarian in East Lansing. "Every time I go canvassing, it's women and men. The grass-roots movements that endorse him are made up of a lot of mothers. All the women I know voted for him four years ago too."

Sanders has flushed out what once seemed like a box-checking afterthought toward the end of his stump speech with a robust commitment to make fighting for women a top priority. He now says one of his top legislative goals would be codifying the protections of Roe into federal law and "significantly" increasing funding for Planned Parenthood. The reproductive health-care plan Sanders put out on Saturday pledges to use executive authority to reverse "Trump's anti-choice actions," require preclearance by the Justice Department for all new state abortion laws, block any federal funding for "crisis pregnancy centers" that don't perform abortions, make birth control available over-the-counter (it would also be free under Medicare-for-all) and ban abstinence-only sex education in schools.

The plan includes an emphasis on increasing access to reproductive services in communities of color, with provisions for eliminating “contraceptive deserts” and increasing funding to hospitals where most patients are African American. Discussing this plan in Grand Rapids, Sanders said: “We’re tired of black mothers dying at three times the rate of white mothers.”

Supporters cheer as Sanders takes the stage in Grand Rapids. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Biden has been trying to stay above the fray as Sanders intensifies his criticism. His campaign didn’t respond directly to the abortion-focused attacks. Instead, he is running a commercial here that touts past praise from former president Barack Obama, as well as a response ad to a Sanders attack that he once supported cutting Social Security benefits.

On Sunday, Biden released a lengthy statement commemorating International Women’s Day. “Four years after more than 65 million Americans proudly cast their ballot hoping to elect our first female president, we are fighting for the very soul of our nation and to rid the White House of a man who has fostered misogyny, bigotry, racism, and division all across our country,” he wrote. “I promise that, as president, I will use every tool available to me and take every opportunity to push our nation closer to that aspirational American creed – that all of us are equal in rights and dignity and deserve equal opportunity. ... I have pledged to seek gender parity and full diversity in my national security appointments, and that will be true across my government.”

On the other hand, many feminists remain angry at Biden for his shoddy treatment of Anita Hill during Clarence Thomas’s confirmation hearing to the Supreme Court in 1991. Biden, who was chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee at the time, has expressed regret over his handling of her allegations of sexual harassment. Lucy Flores, a former Nevada state legislator, accused Biden last spring of smelling her hair and kissing the back of her head at a 2014 rally in Las Vegas.

After Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) backed Biden on Sunday, her aides told reporters that she waited to support him until there were no other major female candidates left in the race.

Harris plans to introduce Biden at a rally tonight in Detroit. “Like many women, I watched with sadness as women exited the race one by one,” she said in her video announcement. “This is something we must reckon with, and it is something I will have more to say about in the future. But we must rise to unite the party and country behind a candidate who reflects the decency and dignity of the American people and who can ultimately defeat Donald Trump.”

Shannon Koneracki, a 42-year-old stay-at-home mom from Sparta, never thought Sanders would get this far. She supported Clinton in the 2016 primary because she didn’t think Sanders could win, but the fact that Trump managed to get elected that fall led her to conclude that Sanders probably could too. So she will vote for him on Tuesday. “I would love to have Bernie pick a vice president like Warren because it would help with the women's vote," said Koneracki, as her 6-year-old daughter Genesis ran in circles around her.

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

Powered by  LiveIntent

Markets tanked this morning.

“The threat of a coronavirus-fueled oil war and continued panic around the outbreak brought markets to unprecedented lows Monday, triggering the first-ever forced halt on trading after the Standard & Poor’s 500 index sank 7 percent shortly after the open. The Dow Jones industrial average cratered as much as 2,000 points before clawing back,” Thomas Heath, Will Englund and Taylor Telford report. “The forced freeze was a sign of unprecedented volatility for Wall Street amid the most turbulent trading in recent memory. Another 15-minute halt will be triggered if the S&P 500’s losses hit the 13 percent threshold. In the event of a 20 percent decline, markets would shut down for the day.

“Oil prices tumbled into the $30s, after Saudi Arabia and Russia deadlocked over production. The Saudis had been pushing for a cut in output to prop up prices, but did a reversal when Russia balked and decided, instead, to flood the market with hundreds of thousands of additional barrels per day at a steep discount — a move analysts fear may trigger a price war.”

The White House and the Fed are at odds over how to stabilize the economy.

“The coronavirus is threatening the economy ... Yet U.S. economic leaders are divided about how to respond, with [Fed Chair Jerome] Powell and his Trump administration counterparts, [economic adviser] Kudlow and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, differing in their assessments of the risks as well as the policies best suited to address the economic threat,” Heather Long and Jeff Stein report. “Not only do the Fed and the White House appear to disagree on the severity of the potential economic hit, they’re at odds about the power of interest rate cuts to stem the panic. Trump and Kudlow have emphasized the Fed’s power to cut interest rates as the primary economic response to the crisis. But although they have moved to cut rates, Powell and others at the Fed have suggested that they have only a limited role to play ... The White House hasn’t, however, shown consistent support for such stimulus.”

The number of U.S. cases has topped 500.

“Saudi Arabia followed Italy in enacting new travel restrictions, Iran suspended flights to Europe, and the [U.S. government] warned citizens against cruise travel,” Felicia Sonmez, Juliet Eilperin and Kim Bellware report. “A virus-stricken cruise ship made its way to California to dock ... The Department of Health and Human Services [said] that the Grand Princess cruise ship’s more than 3,500 passengers, at least 21 of whom have tested positive for the coronavirus, will be quarantined in California, Texas and Georgia. Some White House officials privately believe the number of U.S. cases will double — or more — in the next 48 hours. At least 21 people have died.” More than 30 states have announced infections.

The District's first confirmed case is the Rev. Timothy Cole, rector of Christ Church Georgetown: “A church spokesman said Cole was present for three services last Sunday attended by 550 people. Virginia announced a second case on Sunday, bringing the total number of cases in the Washington area to nine.”

- D.C. officials urged hundreds who attended Christ Church Georgetown on several recent days to self-quarantine. This is the first broad self-quarantine order in the Washington region. (Ferit Nirappil and Darran Simon)
- The School Without Walls, a D.C. public high school, is closed today. City officials determined that a staff member had close contact with a person who tested positive. (Perry Stein and Martin Weil)

A case of the virus at CPAC brought the virus closer to Trump.

“Trump was photographed shaking hands with Matt Schlapp, the chairman of the American Conservative Union, who confirmed that he had been in direct contact with the infected man during the Conservative Political Action Conference last month,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Josh Dawsey and Juliet Eilperin report. “The handshake at CPAC put Trump just two degrees of separation away from the virus ... While the White House has maintained that Trump was never in direct contact with the infected person and does not have any symptoms, the potential close call at a political event underscores how the outbreak threatens to upend the president’s routine as he campaigns for reelection.

"There is growing tension among Trump administration officials, who now view the rapidly spreading outbreak as a black swan event that could consume the president’s fourth year in office, even as Trump remains reluctant to see much cause for concern ... Concerns for the president’s personal health have also escalated as the death toll from the virus has risen, with most of the victims being senior citizens. Trump’s personal doctor, Sean Conley, now attends some White House meetings on the coronavirus, tracking where new cases are being reported ... The White House is also being cleaned more regularly and people with flu-like symptoms are being urged not to come into the complex, with the added warning that they may infect the leader of the free world ...

"Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.) said in a statement Sunday that he ‘briefly interacted’ with the infected person while at CPAC and would self-quarantine at his Texas home 'out of an abundance of caution.' He said he does not have any symptoms associated with the virus. Rep. Paul A. Gosar (R-Ariz.) tweeted Sunday that he and three of his staff members are under self-quarantine ‘after sustained contact at CPAC’ with the person who has the virus. He added: ‘We are all asymptomatic and feel great.’”

Sanders and Biden both plan to forge ahead with campaigning.

“With the outbreak in the United States now affecting 30 states, some political organizations have reassessed their plans for conferences and large-scale events. The AFL-CIO, the largest group of labor unions in the country, announced that it is canceling its presidential forum, which had been scheduled for Thursday in Orlando. Sanders and [Biden] had been planning to attend,” Felicia Sonmez, Juliet Eilperin and Paige Winfield Cunningham report.

- “We are in communications with public health officials wherever we go,” Sanders said on CNN. “We will not endanger the health of anybody in this country. ... We are watching this thing very, very carefully.”
- Sanders will hold a roundtable this afternoon with public health experts in Detroit to discuss how the country should address the coronavirus.
- During a campaign stop in Jackson, Miss., Biden answered a question about the coronavirus while rubbing sanitizer on his hands. “We’re listening to the experts at the CDC and doing everything they recommend,” he said.
- Trump has typically held a rally on the eve of each Democratic primary or caucus. But he does not have one planned for tonight. His last rally was this past Monday in North Carolina. Erin Perrine, a Trump campaign spokeswoman, said the campaign is “proceeding normally” and will announce further events at a later date.

Coronavirus anxiety is growing in an aging Congress.

“Members of Congress are becoming increasingly anxious about coronavirus, and there is growing pressure on leadership to take steps to protect lawmakers — even potentially recessing for a period of weeks,” NBC News reports. “Members plan to raise concerns with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., at their weekly leadership meeting [today]. ... It’s Pelosi’s decision whether to keep the House in session or make changes in the schedule.”

One of America's largest hospitals, is already feeling the virus's pressure.

“Mass General is a renowned medical center with just over 1,000 beds and top research facilities, the kind of place many patients want to be when something terrible happens. Yet in a sign of the enormous challenge covid-19 poses to the health-care system, even emergency-response teams here were bracing for an outbreak that seemed increasingly likely to test staff and resources,” Emma Brown reports. “At the ground level — observed during several days at Mass General and in interviews with key planning leaders — teams were working long hours to deal with challenges that the White House was playing down or insisting did not exist. ... Mass General health-care workers who encounter a patient with fever, cough and other symptoms of covid-19 can call a ‘biothreats’ pager at the hospital for advice and help determining whether that patient should be tested. On Tuesday, the pager buzzed about 20 times, according to Erica Shenoy, an infectious diseases doctor and associate chief of infection control. By Thursday afternoon, the buzzes sounded every 10 minutes and had become a full-time job for Amir Mohareb, the young infectious diseases doctor.”

Italian authorities are struggling to lock down about 16 million people.

“The plan to lock down large swaths of the north was the first major attempt by a democracy during the coronavirus crisis to radically halt the routines of daily life — an effort that will have significant impacts on civil liberties,” Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. “But in the hours before and after the measure became law, people continued to stream out of the northern hubs of Milan and Venice on trains and planes for southern Italy or elsewhere in Europe. Sunday, then, provided the first glimpse of a coronavirus lockdown, European-style ... Data released by Italy on Sunday night only underscored the urgency. Active cases jumped more than 1,300 in a single day to 6,387, and deaths jumped by 133 to

366. ... Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte described a series of emergency steps: People across the north, in the region of Lombardy and in 14 other provinces would be barred from exiting or entering other than for emergencies or essential work or health matters. But Conte also said some transportation would continue. He framed the measures as part of a broader message to keep distance from others and not ‘throw parties.’”

---

Quote of the day

"It turns out that the truth matters, and epidemics can't be subdued by tweet," said Marie Yovanovitch, the former ambassador to Ukraine who was recalled by Trump.
(Bloomington Herald-Times)

---

The new world order

Blasts disrupted the Afghan president's swearing-in ceremony.

“An attack disrupted Afghan President Ashraf Ghani's inauguration

Monday amid a deepening political crisis that threatens to undermine the future of peace talks with the Taliban,” Susannah George and Sharif Hassan report. “Both Ghani and his main rival, Abdullah Abdullah, held swearing-in ceremonies Monday after weeks of efforts to mediate between the two men failed. Afghanistan's election commission named Ghani the winner of the September presidential contest, with just enough of the vote to avoid a second round, but Abdullah declared the results fraudulent and claimed victory. The spectacle of dueling inaugurations held just yards apart in separate compounds reflect worsening divisions among Afghanistan's political elite as the country prepares to enter talks with the Taliban. The peace deal signed between the militants and the United States called for intra-Afghan talks to begin Tuesday. It is unclear if that benchmark will be met. Mediation efforts were held late into the night Sunday and continued until just moments before the ceremonies.”

The U.S. envoy to Afghanistan now faces his greatest challenge.

Zalmay Khalilzad “is expected to be closely involved when representatives from the Taliban, the Afghan government and Afghan society sit down as early as this week to begin mapping out a future governing structure and finding consensus on divisive issues such as the role of Islam and women’s rights,” Missy Ryan and John Hudson report. “Already there are signs of trouble. Afghan and Taliban leaders are disputing the terms of Khalilzad’s initial deal, and the militants have launched a series of deadly attacks. The format, objectives and even precise location of the next negotiations remain a mystery. ‘This is his biggest challenge,’ said Carter Malkasian, a former Pentagon official who took part in some of the talks Khalilzad conducted with militant leaders over the past two years ... Looming over the negotiations is officials’ hazy understanding of what Trump wants and will tolerate. While the president has consistently voiced his desire to get U.S. troops out of the country, it is less clear how he will define American interests in what is likely to be a protracted effort to shape Afghanistan’s future."

North Korea fired three projectiles after threatening “momentous” action.

“South Korea’s national security director, defense minister and spy chief held an emergency video conference and agreed the North Korean action were not helpful to efforts to establish a peace on the Korean Peninsula, according to South Korea’s presidential Blue House,” the AP reports.

Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman detained two other Saudi princes in villas.

“Two senior princes detained in a crackdown against potential rivals of Saudi Arabia’s powerful crown prince are being held in private villas and have been allowed to call their families, according to a person with ties to the royal family,” Liz Sly, Ellen Nakashima and Kareem Fahim report.

“The detention on Friday of [King Salman’s] younger brother, Ahmed bin Abdulaziz, and one of his nephews, Mohammed bin Nayef, sparked rumors that Salman’s health might have deteriorated, prompting the bold move by [the Crown Prince], the king’s son and heir, against some of the most senior members of the royal family. ... The princes have in the past been considered possible heirs to the crown. ... The person said the princes contacted family members on Saturday and told them that they were being held not in prisons but in private royal villas. Ahmed asked relatives to send him his ‘bisht,’ a robe worn for official engagements, prompting the person to speculate that he might soon make a public appearance, perhaps under duress.”

Gaza militants targeted Israel with party balloons bearing bombs.

“In recent months, hundreds of booby-trapped balloons — sometimes bearing the messages ‘I Love You’ and ‘Happy Birthday’ along with small improvised explosives dangling by a string — have descended [on communities] downwind of the nearby Gaza Strip, according to Israeli police,” Steve Hendrix, Hazem Balousha and Ruth Eglash report. “Most land in open countryside, and none has yet caused injury or death, something a local police commander described as a miracle bound to give way to a tragedy.”

Tens of thousands of Mexican women protested femicide and gender-based violence.

“Women poured into the streets on Sunday to start a two-day protest and national strike against gender-based violence, in what organizers hope will be a turning point for women's rights in a country disfigured by violence and machismo,” Mary Beth Sheridan reports. “Many wore purple, the color symbolizing International Women’s Day, celebrated throughout the world on Sunday, and waved signs reading ‘Fight today so we don’t die tomorrow’ and ‘We are the voice of those who are no longer with us.’ ... Mexico’s femicide rate rose about 10 percent in 2019 to 1,010 cases; an average of 10 women are killed per day. Surveys have found a majority of women have been victims of violence at some point in their lives.”

Meanwhile, a 22-year-old Guatemalan woman became the eighth migrant to die in ICE custody this fiscal year, per BuzzFeed News.

---

More on 2020

Steve Bullock attends the Iowa State Fair last August. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Steve Bullock officially announced he'll run for Senate.

Montana's Democratic governor will challenge Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.). This reversal by the former presidential candidate boosts Democratic fortunes in their bid to unseat and reclaim the Senate majority. (Felicia Sonmez and Paul Kane)

Twitter debuted its "manipulated media" label.

A deceptively edited video of Biden was shared by White House social media director Dan Scavino and retweeted by Trump. "The video was the first test of a new policy the social media company implemented on March 5 to label tweets that contain manipulated or synthetic media, ranging from edited videos to more sophisticated examples known as 'deepfakes' that can fabricate events that never happened," Cat Zakrzewski reports. "In this case, the altered video of Biden ... is based on a speech he gave in Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday. It was then shared on Twitter by Scavino, only edited to make it appear as if Biden inadvertently endorsed Trump for reelection."

The Russian media is freaking out about Biden's resurrection.

“The pro-Kremlin newspaper Vzglyad complained that Biden ‘rose from the ashes like a phoenix,’ prevailing ‘in spite of the corruption scandals’ that have long been alleged and cultivated by the Russians—and the Republicans—concerning his son, Hunter, and his own activities in Ukraine,” the Daily Beast reports. “With notable irritation, Vzglyad griped about [Biden’s] primary victories in North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Alabama, claiming that the pro-Biden votes in rural states were secured by ‘rednecks, who shoot skunks for fun, bowl, beat their wives and associate the word ‘socialist’ with the communist threat.’ The newspaper bitterly surmised that through Biden’s anticipated nomination, the U.S. elites won yet another Cold War against socialism.”

A watchdog warned the administration that it “urgently” needs to address problems with election security.

“The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), part of the Department of Homeland Security, was to have finalized plans by January to support states and localities with their election security operations. That did not happen, according to a Government Accountability Office report,” Joe Davidson reports. “The report said the agency ‘is not well-positioned to execute a nationwide strategy for securing election infrastructure prior to the start of the 2020 election cycle’ because it has not completed plans. According to the report, cybersecurity agency officials said they are unlikely to develop plans for election security assistance to political parties or come up with strategies for raising public awareness about foreign threats.”

James Biden's health-care ventures face growing scrutiny.

In January, the FBI raided Americore Health hospital, a health-care business linked to Joe Biden's brother, seizing boxes of documents and deepening the legal morass surrounding James Biden's recent venture into health-care investing, Politico reports: "In the weeks since the raid, two small medical firms that did business with James Biden have claimed in civil court proceedings to have obtained evidence that he may have fraudulently transferred funds from Americore 'outside of the ordinary course of business' ... The purpose of the Jan. 30 raid of an Ellwood City, Pa., hospital remains unclear, and there is no indication it was related to the actions of Biden's younger brother ... In 2017 and 2018, James Biden was embarking on a foray into healthcare investing, telling potential partners, including at Americore, that his last name could open doors and that Joe Biden was excited about the public policy implications of their business models, according to court filings and interviews with former business contacts of James's."

Donald Trump Jr. challenged Hunter Biden to a debate.

In an interview with Axios's Jim VandeHei, the president's son said he wants to debate the former vice president's son over who has benefited more financially from their fathers' government service. "We can go full transparency, we show everything, and we can talk about all of the places where I am supposedly gifting but Hunter Biden isn't," said Don Jr., also claiming that he'd be willing to release his own tax returns if Hunter Biden put his out. "If we do it both, 100 percent. Let's talk about who profited off of whose public service." A Biden campaign spokesman replied that it's "hard to believe anything a Trump says on tax returns."

---

Social media speed read

Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) endorsed Biden's candidacy:

Cory Booker ✓

@CoryBooker

The answer to hatred & division is to reignite our spirit of common purpose. @JoeBiden won't only win - he'll show there's more that unites us than divides us.

He'll restore honor to the Oval Office and tackle our most pressing challenges.

That's why I'm proud to endorse Joe.

♥ 1,091 11:05 AM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 358 people are talking about this

On International Women's Day, a Post reporter noticed inequity even among cleaning sponges:

 Sonia Rao
@missoniarao

Lol Scrub Mommy costs less than Scrub Daddy but does twice the work

 1.958 8:10 PM - Mar 8, 2020

 296 people are talking about this

Ex-FBI lawyer Lisa Page, who has been a regular target of gendered attacks by Trump, shared a message from Monica Lewinsky:

Amid the coronavirus outbreak, Trump golfed with players for the Nationals who are in West Palm Beach for spring training:

Videos of the day

Trump's former top adviser on Russia, Fiona Hill, gave her first sit-down interview since testifying during the impeachment hearings:

There are thousands of sheriffs up for reelection this year, and John Oliver looked into what the job entails:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Bernie Sanders sharpens his pitch to women, as moms in Michigan oscillate between him and Biden
Date: Monday, March 9, 2020 9:51:57 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Bernie Sanders sharpens his pitch to women, as moms in Michigan oscillate between him and Biden

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — Bernie Sanders has massively stepped up efforts to woo female voters since Joe Biden took the lead in delegates and Elizabeth Warren dropped out of the race.

The independent senator from Vermont unveiled a “reproductive health care and justice for all” plan on Saturday evening. He’s attacking the former vice president for supporting the Hyde Amendment, which banned Medicaid funds from being used to cover abortions, until reversing himself under pressure last year. He's reading aloud a quote from the 1970s in which Biden said that Roe v. Wade "went too far."

"Women have a right to control their own bodies, not the government," Sanders said during an outdoor rally here on a sunny Sunday afternoon. "Here is my promise to you: I will never nominate anyone to the Supreme Court or the federal bench who is not 100 percent pro-Roe v. Wade. ... We're in this together."

Jesse Jackson told the crowd of 7,600 that he endorsed Sanders only after receiving an ironclad commitment that he would nominate an African American woman to the Supreme Court and a promise that he would give "serious consideration" to naming a black woman as his running mate. "Bernie can win, will win and must win," said Jackson.

Bernie Sanders introduces Jesse Jackson during a rally on Sunday at Calder Plaza in Grand Rapids, Mich. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Michigan is the most populous, and symbolically significant, of

six states voting tomorrow. An EPIC-MRA poll released this morning showed Biden leading Sanders 51 percent to 27 percent in the state, with 13 percent undecided and 9 percent saying they plan to vote for another candidate. The survey of 400 likely Democratic voters, conducted Wednesday through Friday, has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percent. But this should be taken with a grain of salt. The pre-primary polls four years ago showed Hillary Clinton with a similarly huge lead, and Sanders pulled off an upset. Clinton's weakness foreshadowed Donald Trump narrowly carrying the state in November.

The Sanders campaign rushed resources and staff to Michigan over the weekend, going all-in on the Wolverine State the way that Biden did before South Carolina's primary. The other states with primaries on Tuesday are Missouri, Washington, Idaho, Mississippi and North Dakota.

Women are the centerpiece of Sanders's comeback strategy here, including an effort to win over former supporters of Warren. Biden led him among women by 12 points on Super Tuesday, 37 percent to 25 percent, based on median support in available exit polling, with Warren (D-Mass.) pulling 15 percent and former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg getting 13 percent. Biden led Sanders among men by a narrower 4 points, 36 percent to 32 percent, with Warren in single digits.

"My heart wants to vote for Bernie. My gut wants to vote for Biden," said Melissa Courtade, 46, who sits on the Kenowa Hills school board. She had planned to vote for Warren on Tuesday and remains undecided after watching Sanders speak. Courtade likes Sanders's plan to raise teacher pay to a minimum of $60,000 per year but doesn't think it's realistic. She likes the idea of Medicare-for-all, but she isn't sure that's realistic either. She really likes Sanders personally, and many of her friends support him, but she's not sure he can beat Trump.

Courtade, who voted for Clinton in the 2016 primary, said her 19-year-old daughter is supporting Biden because she thinks Sanders is too liberal to carry Michigan in the general election. “She jokingly teases me and says you’re ADD when it comes to this election, and I really am,” Courtade said after Sanders’s rally. “I just don’t know where my head is at right now. It’s so hard. I’ve never not known who I was going to vote for.”

She was one of about two dozen women I spoke with at Sanders’s rally on Sunday afternoon. Several said they had planned to back Warren or one of the other female candidates but now reluctantly needed to decide between Sanders and Biden.

A February Washington Post-ABC News poll found that while Sanders was ranked higher as a second choice by many Warren voters, a significant chunk favored moderate candidates, including Biden. Warren herself has not endorsed. The Massachusetts senator is trying to balance playing an inside game versus an outside game. Whether she backs someone or not, her ideas won’t go away and neither will she.

Sanders won his upset four years ago by running up the score in rural and conservative parts of Michigan. He managed to eke out a 1.4-point win statewide despite losing the Detroit metropolitan area, including Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties. But Sanders won Kent County, which includes Gerald Ford’s hometown of Grand Rapids, by 25 points, a 17,000-vote margin of victory. That was almost exactly his statewide margin. He’s trying to replicate this on Tuesday.

Kim Sapkowski, 55 of Belmont, had planned to vote for Warren but will now support Sanders because, in her view, Biden’s plans are too incremental. Her position as an administrative assistant at a local university was eliminated last month because of budget cuts. Now she’s unemployed and has two kids of her own in college. She worries a recession is looming, which bolsters her conviction that this is no time for “the half-measures” that she believes Biden wants to pursue. “I’m disappointed that we still are hesitant about electing a woman as president, but we've just got to beat Trump," said Sapkowski. "The biggest response that the crowd gave Bernie was when he said that the government should get its hands off women's bodies. That was the strongest response he got, and you're in maybe the most conservative part of Michigan."

Sanders speaks in Grand Rapids. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

An advertisement for the BlueCross BlueShield Association. The main image shows a woman in a red shirt holding a young child. Overlaid on the image is the text "BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM" in large, white, bold letters. At the bottom left is the BlueCross BlueShield Association logo. At the bottom right is a blue button with the text "PASS THE MOMNIBUS" and a right-pointing arrow. Below the main image, it says "Powered by LivIntent" with the LivIntent logo and a small play button icon.

Biden will hold his own rally in Grand Rapids on Monday in a

bid to blunt Sanders's strength in Western Michigan. Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.), who dropped out a week ago today, also came here to campaign for Biden on Saturday. "People are looking for someone who is a rock, someone who is a safe place, and that is Joe Biden," she said at a brewery here.

Carolyn Ferrari, the regional manager for a theater company and one of the relatively few black faces at Sanders's rally here, had leaned toward supporting Klobuchar. But she decided to support Sanders on Sunday after hearing him commit to nominate a black woman to the Supreme Court. "Warren spoke very well, but something about her didn't seem genuine to me, and I don't think Biden can really get the job done," said Ferrari.

A hundred years after the ratification of the 19th Amendment granted women the right to vote, the 49-year-old said she assumed all along over the past year that no women would be left in the race at this stage because sexism remains so endemic in American politics. "You hope, but you never really expect," she said, with a sigh. "I'm almost 50, and I don't know that it's going to change in my lifetime. But to be honest, I also didn't think we'd see a black president in my lifetime."

Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) remains in the race, but she only has two delegates from American Samoa. The Democratic National Committee announced qualification requirements for Sunday night's debate in Phoenix that ensure only Biden and Sanders appear onstage.

Leslie Schwartz-Thomas, who retired as a 911 dispatcher to focus on being a grandmother to triplets, loved Warren. "The chance to vote for a woman had something to do with it," she said. "I'd be lying if I said it didn't, but I wouldn't vote for somebody just because they're a woman." Her son who lives in Seattle is a diehard Sanders supporter and urged his mom to feel the Bern after Warren suspended her campaign. The 59-year-old agreed to go to Sanders's rally to hear him out. "A lot of what Bernie talks about, I agree with," she said, "but I worry he won't beat that man who is in the White House – I won't even say his name."

Women, especially in the suburbs, powered the Democratic takeover of the House in the 2018 midterm elections. Several first-term congresswomen who flipped seats have endorsed Biden in recent days, including Elissa Slotkin and Haley Stevens in Michigan. Gretchen Whitmer, the state's Democratic governor who also won in 2018, endorsed Biden last week. But Sanders had the early support of Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.). Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) – another member of the Squad elected in 2018 – introduced him on Sunday night before a crowd of 10,240 in Ann Arbor, home to the University of Michigan.

Indeed, Sanders fares better among women than the saturation coverage of the "Bernie Bros" might lead you to believe. "His main supporters are teachers," said Sanders supporter Nichole Biber, 45, an elementary school librarian in East Lansing. "Every time I go canvassing, it's women and men. The grass-roots movements that endorse him are made up of a lot of mothers. All the women I know voted for him four years ago too."

Sanders has flushed out what once seemed like a box-checking afterthought toward the end of his stump speech with a robust commitment to make fighting for women a top priority. He now says one of his top legislative goals would be codifying the protections of Roe into federal law and "significantly" increasing funding for Planned Parenthood. The reproductive health-care plan Sanders put out on Saturday pledges to use executive authority to reverse "Trump's anti-choice actions," require preclearance by the Justice Department for all new state abortion laws, block any federal funding for "crisis pregnancy centers" that don't perform abortions, make birth control available over-the-counter (it would also be free under Medicare-for-all) and ban abstinence-only sex education in schools.

The plan includes an emphasis on increasing access to reproductive services in communities of color, with provisions for eliminating “contraceptive deserts” and increasing funding to hospitals where most patients are African American. Discussing this plan in Grand Rapids, Sanders said: “We’re tired of black mothers dying at three times the rate of white mothers.”

Supporters cheer as Sanders takes the stage in Grand Rapids. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Biden has been trying to stay above the fray as Sanders intensifies his criticism. His campaign didn’t respond directly to the abortion-focused attacks. Instead, he is running a commercial here that touts past praise from former president Barack Obama, as well as a response ad to a Sanders attack that he once supported cutting Social Security benefits.

On Sunday, Biden released a lengthy statement commemorating International Women’s Day. “Four years after more than 65 million Americans proudly cast their ballot hoping to elect our first female president, we are fighting for the very soul of our nation and to rid the White House of a man who has fostered misogyny, bigotry, racism, and division all across our country,” he wrote. “I promise that, as president, I will use every tool available to me and take every opportunity to push our nation closer to that aspirational American creed – that all of us are equal in rights and dignity and deserve equal opportunity. ... I have pledged to seek gender parity and full diversity in my national security appointments, and that will be true across my government.”

On the other hand, many feminists remain angry at Biden for his shoddy treatment of Anita Hill during Clarence Thomas’s confirmation hearing to the Supreme Court in 1991. Biden, who was chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee at the time, has expressed regret over his handling of her allegations of sexual harassment. Lucy Flores, a former Nevada state legislator, accused Biden last spring of smelling her hair and kissing the back of her head at a 2014 rally in Las Vegas.

After Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) backed Biden on Sunday, her aides told reporters that she waited to support him until there were no other major female candidates left in the race.

Harris plans to introduce Biden at a rally tonight in Detroit. “Like many women, I watched with sadness as women exited the race one by one,” she said in her video announcement. “This is something we must reckon with, and it is something I will have more to say about in the future. But we must rise to unite the party and country behind a candidate who reflects the decency and dignity of the American people and who can ultimately defeat Donald Trump.”

Shannon Koneracki, a 42-year-old stay-at-home mom from Sparta, never thought Sanders would get this far. She supported Clinton in the 2016 primary because she didn’t think Sanders could win, but the fact that Trump managed to get elected that fall led her to conclude that Sanders probably could too. So she will vote for him on Tuesday. “I would love to have Bernie pick a vice president like Warren because it would help with the women's vote," said Koneracki, as her 6-year-old daughter Genesis ran in circles around her.

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

Powered by  LiveIntent

Markets tanked this morning.

“The threat of a coronavirus-fueled oil war and continued panic around the outbreak brought markets to unprecedented lows Monday, triggering the first-ever forced halt on trading after the Standard & Poor’s 500 index sank 7 percent shortly after the open. The Dow Jones industrial average cratered as much as 2,000 points before clawing back,” Thomas Heath, Will Englund and Taylor Telford report. “The forced freeze was a sign of unprecedented volatility for Wall Street amid the most turbulent trading in recent memory. Another 15-minute halt will be triggered if the S&P 500’s losses hit the 13 percent threshold. In the event of a 20 percent decline, markets would shut down for the day.

“Oil prices tumbled into the $30s, after Saudi Arabia and Russia deadlocked over production. The Saudis had been pushing for a cut in output to prop up prices, but did a reversal when Russia balked and decided, instead, to flood the market with hundreds of thousands of additional barrels per day at a steep discount — a move analysts fear may trigger a price war.”

The White House and the Fed are at odds over how to stabilize the economy.

“The coronavirus is threatening the economy ... Yet U.S. economic leaders are divided about how to respond, with [Fed Chair Jerome] Powell and his Trump administration counterparts, [economic adviser] Kudlow and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, differing in their assessments of the risks as well as the policies best suited to address the economic threat,” Heather Long and Jeff Stein report. “Not only do the Fed and the White House appear to disagree on the severity of the potential economic hit, they’re at odds about the power of interest rate cuts to stem the panic. Trump and Kudlow have emphasized the Fed’s power to cut interest rates as the primary economic response to the crisis. But although they have moved to cut rates, Powell and others at the Fed have suggested that they have only a limited role to play ... The White House hasn’t, however,

shown consistent support for such stimulus.”

The number of U.S. cases has topped 500.

“Saudi Arabia followed Italy in enacting new travel restrictions, Iran suspended flights to Europe, and the [U.S. government] warned citizens against cruise travel,” Felicia Sonmez, Juliet Eilperin and Kim Bellware report. “A virus-stricken cruise ship made its way to California to dock ... The Department of Health and Human Services [said] that the Grand Princess cruise ship’s more than 3,500 passengers, at least 21 of whom have tested positive for the coronavirus, will be quarantined in California, Texas and Georgia. Some White House officials privately believe the number of U.S. cases will double — or more — in the next 48 hours. At least 21 people have died.” More than 30 states have announced infections.

The District's first confirmed case is the Rev. Timothy Cole, rector of Christ Church Georgetown: “A church spokesman said Cole was present for three services last Sunday attended by 550 people. Virginia announced a second case on Sunday, bringing the total number of cases in the Washington area to nine.”

- D.C. officials urged hundreds who attended Christ Church Georgetown on several recent days to self-quarantine. This is the first broad self-quarantine order in the Washington region. (Ferit Nirappil and Darran Simon)
- The School Without Walls, a D.C. public high school, is closed today. City officials determined that a staff member had close contact with a person who tested positive. (Perry Stein and Martin Weil)

A case of the virus at CPAC brought the virus closer to Trump.

“Trump was photographed shaking hands with Matt Schlapp, the chairman of the American Conservative Union, who confirmed that he had been in direct contact with the infected man during the Conservative Political Action Conference last month,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Josh Dawsey and Juliet Eilperin report. “The handshake at CPAC put Trump just two degrees of separation away from the virus ... While the White House has maintained that Trump was never in direct contact with the infected person and does not have any symptoms, the potential close call at a political event underscores how the outbreak threatens to upend the president’s routine as he campaigns for reelection.

"There is growing tension among Trump administration officials, who now view the rapidly spreading outbreak as a black swan event that could consume the president’s fourth year in office, even as Trump remains reluctant to see much cause for concern ... Concerns for the president’s personal health have also escalated as the death toll from the virus has risen, with most of the victims being senior citizens. Trump’s personal doctor, Sean Conley, now attends some White House meetings on the coronavirus, tracking where new cases are being reported ... The White House is also being cleaned more regularly and people with flu-like symptoms are being urged not to come into the complex, with the added warning that they may infect the leader of the free world ...

"Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.) said in a statement Sunday that he ‘briefly interacted’ with the infected person while at CPAC and would self-quarantine at his Texas home 'out of an abundance of caution.' He said he does not have any symptoms associated with the virus. Rep. Paul A. Gosar (R-Ariz.) tweeted Sunday that he and three of his staff members are under self-quarantine ‘after sustained contact at CPAC’ with the person who has the virus. He added: ‘We are all asymptomatic and feel great.’”

Sanders and Biden both plan to forge ahead with campaigning.

“With the outbreak in the United States now affecting 30 states, some political organizations have reassessed their plans for conferences and large-scale events. The AFL-CIO, the largest group of labor unions in the country, announced that it is canceling its presidential forum, which had been scheduled for Thursday in Orlando. Sanders and [Biden] had been planning to attend,” Felicia Sonmez, Juliet Eilperin and Paige Winfield Cunningham report.

- “We are in communications with public health officials wherever we go,” Sanders said on CNN. “We will not endanger the health of anybody in this country. ... We are watching this thing very, very carefully.”
- Sanders will hold a roundtable this afternoon with public health experts in Detroit to discuss how the country should address the coronavirus.
- During a campaign stop in Jackson, Miss., Biden answered a question about the coronavirus while rubbing sanitizer on his hands. “We’re listening to the experts at the CDC and doing everything they recommend,” he said.
- Trump has typically held a rally on the eve of each Democratic primary or caucus. But he does not have one planned for tonight. His last rally was this past Monday in North Carolina. Erin Perrine, a Trump campaign spokeswoman, said the campaign is “proceeding normally” and will announce further events at a later date.

Coronavirus anxiety is growing in an aging Congress.

“Members of Congress are becoming increasingly anxious about coronavirus, and there is growing pressure on leadership to take steps to protect lawmakers — even potentially recessing for a period of weeks,” NBC News reports. “Members plan to raise concerns with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., at their weekly leadership meeting [today]. ... It’s Pelosi’s decision whether to keep the House in session or make changes in the schedule.”

One of America's largest hospitals, is already feeling the virus's pressure.

“Mass General is a renowned medical center with just over 1,000 beds and top research facilities, the kind of place many patients want to be when something terrible happens. Yet in a sign of the enormous challenge covid-19 poses to the health-care system, even emergency-response teams here were bracing for an outbreak that seemed increasingly likely to test staff and resources,” Emma Brown reports. “At the ground level — observed during several days at Mass General and in interviews with key planning leaders — teams were working long hours to deal with challenges that the White House was playing down or insisting did not exist. ... Mass General health-care workers who encounter a patient with fever, cough and other symptoms of covid-19 can call a ‘biothreats’ pager at the hospital for advice and help determining whether that patient should be tested. On Tuesday, the pager buzzed about 20 times, according to Erica Shenoy, an infectious diseases doctor and associate chief of infection control. By Thursday afternoon, the buzzes sounded every 10 minutes and had become a full-time job for Amir Mohareb, the young infectious diseases doctor.”

Italian authorities are struggling to lock down about 16 million people.

“The plan to lock down large swaths of the north was the first major attempt by a democracy during the coronavirus crisis to radically halt the routines of daily life — an effort that will have significant impacts on civil liberties,” Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. “But in the hours before and after the measure became law, people continued to stream out of the northern hubs of Milan and Venice on trains and planes for southern Italy or elsewhere in Europe. Sunday, then, provided the first glimpse of a coronavirus lockdown, European-style ... Data released by Italy on Sunday night only underscored the urgency. Active cases jumped more than 1,300 in a single day to 6,387, and deaths jumped by 133 to

366. ... Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte described a series of emergency steps: People across the north, in the region of Lombardy and in 14 other provinces would be barred from exiting or entering other than for emergencies or essential work or health matters. But Conte also said some transportation would continue. He framed the measures as part of a broader message to keep distance from others and not ‘throw parties.’”

---

Quote of the day

"It turns out that the truth matters, and epidemics can't be subdued by tweet," said Marie Yovanovitch, the former ambassador to Ukraine who was recalled by Trump.
(Bloomington Herald-Times)

---

The new world order

Blasts disrupted the Afghan president's swearing-in ceremony.

“An attack disrupted Afghan President Ashraf Ghani's inauguration

Monday amid a deepening political crisis that threatens to undermine the future of peace talks with the Taliban,” Susannah George and Sharif Hassan report. “Both Ghani and his main rival, Abdullah Abdullah, held swearing-in ceremonies Monday after weeks of efforts to mediate between the two men failed. Afghanistan's election commission named Ghani the winner of the September presidential contest, with just enough of the vote to avoid a second round, but Abdullah declared the results fraudulent and claimed victory. The spectacle of dueling inaugurations held just yards apart in separate compounds reflect worsening divisions among Afghanistan's political elite as the country prepares to enter talks with the Taliban. The peace deal signed between the militants and the United States called for intra-Afghan talks to begin Tuesday. It is unclear if that benchmark will be met. Mediation efforts were held late into the night Sunday and continued until just moments before the ceremonies.”

The U.S. envoy to Afghanistan now faces his greatest challenge.

Zalmay Khalilzad “is expected to be closely involved when representatives from the Taliban, the Afghan government and Afghan society sit down as early as this week to begin mapping out a future governing structure and finding consensus on divisive issues such as the role of Islam and women’s rights,” Missy Ryan and John Hudson report. “Already there are signs of trouble. Afghan and Taliban leaders are disputing the terms of Khalilzad’s initial deal, and the militants have launched a series of deadly attacks. The format, objectives and even precise location of the next negotiations remain a mystery. ‘This is his biggest challenge,’ said Carter Malkasian, a former Pentagon official who took part in some of the talks Khalilzad conducted with militant leaders over the past two years ... Looming over the negotiations is officials’ hazy understanding of what Trump wants and will tolerate. While the president has consistently voiced his desire to get U.S. troops out of the country, it is less clear how he will define American interests in what is likely to be a protracted effort to shape Afghanistan’s future."

North Korea fired three projectiles after threatening “momentous” action.

“South Korea’s national security director, defense minister and spy chief held an emergency video conference and agreed the North Korean action were not helpful to efforts to establish a peace on the Korean Peninsula, according to South Korea’s presidential Blue House,” the AP reports.

Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman detained two other Saudi princes in villas.

“Two senior princes detained in a crackdown against potential rivals of Saudi Arabia’s powerful crown prince are being held in private villas and have been allowed to call their families, according to a person with ties to the royal family,” Liz Sly, Ellen Nakashima and Kareem Fahim report.

“The detention on Friday of [King Salman’s] younger brother, Ahmed bin Abdulaziz, and one of his nephews, Mohammed bin Nayef, sparked rumors that Salman’s health might have deteriorated, prompting the bold move by [the Crown Prince], the king’s son and heir, against some of the most senior members of the royal family. ... The princes have in the past been considered possible heirs to the crown. ... The person said the princes contacted family members on Saturday and told them that they were being held not in prisons but in private royal villas. Ahmed asked relatives to send him his ‘bisht,’ a robe worn for official engagements, prompting the person to speculate that he might soon make a public appearance, perhaps under duress.”

Gaza militants targeted Israel with party balloons bearing bombs.

“In recent months, hundreds of booby-trapped balloons — sometimes bearing the messages ‘I Love You’ and ‘Happy Birthday’ along with small improvised explosives dangling by a string — have descended [on communities] downwind of the nearby Gaza Strip, according to Israeli police,” Steve Hendrix, Hazem Balousha and Ruth Eglash report. “Most land in open countryside, and none has yet caused injury or death, something a local police commander described as a miracle bound to give way to a tragedy.”

Tens of thousands of Mexican women protested femicide and gender-based violence.

“Women poured into the streets on Sunday to start a two-day protest and national strike against gender-based violence, in what organizers hope will be a turning point for women's rights in a country disfigured by violence and machismo,” Mary Beth Sheridan reports. “Many wore purple, the color symbolizing International Women’s Day, celebrated throughout the world on Sunday, and waved signs reading ‘Fight today so we don’t die tomorrow’ and ‘We are the voice of those who are no longer with us.’ ... Mexico’s femicide rate rose about 10 percent in 2019 to 1,010 cases; an average of 10 women are killed per day. Surveys have found a majority of women have been victims of violence at some point in their lives.”

Meanwhile, a 22-year-old Guatemalan woman became the eighth migrant to die in ICE custody this fiscal year, per BuzzFeed News.

---

More on 2020

Steve Bullock attends the Iowa State Fair last August. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Steve Bullock officially announced he'll run for Senate.

Montana's Democratic governor will challenge Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.). This reversal by the former presidential candidate boosts Democratic fortunes in their bid to unseat and reclaim the Senate majority. (Felicia Sonmez and Paul Kane)

Twitter debuted its "manipulated media" label.

A deceptively edited video of Biden was shared by White House social media director Dan Scavino and retweeted by Trump. "The video was the first test of a new policy the social media company implemented on March 5 to label tweets that contain manipulated or synthetic media, ranging from edited videos to more sophisticated examples known as 'deepfakes' that can fabricate events that never happened," Cat Zakrzewski reports. "In this case, the altered video of Biden ... is based on a speech he gave in Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday. It was then shared on Twitter by Scavino, only edited to make it appear as if Biden inadvertently endorsed Trump for reelection."

The Russian media is freaking out about Biden's resurrection.

“The pro-Kremlin newspaper Vzglyad complained that Biden ‘rose from the ashes like a phoenix,’ prevailing ‘in spite of the corruption scandals’ that have long been alleged and cultivated by the Russians—and the Republicans—concerning his son, Hunter, and his own activities in Ukraine,” the Daily Beast reports. “With notable irritation, Vzglyad griped about [Biden’s] primary victories in North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Alabama, claiming that the pro-Biden votes in rural states were secured by ‘rednecks, who shoot skunks for fun, bowl, beat their wives and associate the word ‘socialist’ with the communist threat.’ The newspaper bitterly surmised that through Biden’s anticipated nomination, the U.S. elites won yet another Cold War against socialism.”

A watchdog warned the administration that it “urgently” needs to address problems with election security.

“The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), part of the Department of Homeland Security, was to have finalized plans by January to support states and localities with their election security operations. That did not happen, according to a Government Accountability Office report,” Joe Davidson reports. “The report said the agency ‘is not well-positioned to execute a nationwide strategy for securing election infrastructure prior to the start of the 2020 election cycle’ because it has not completed plans. According to the report, cybersecurity agency officials said they are unlikely to develop plans for election security assistance to political parties or come up with strategies for raising public awareness about foreign threats.”

James Biden's health-care ventures face growing scrutiny.

In January, the FBI raided Americore Health hospital, a health-care

business linked to Joe Biden's brother, seizing boxes of documents and deepening the legal morass surrounding James Biden's recent venture into health-care investing, Politico reports: "In the weeks since the raid, two small medical firms that did business with James Biden have claimed in civil court proceedings to have obtained evidence that he may have fraudulently transferred funds from Americore 'outside of the ordinary course of business' ... The purpose of the Jan. 30 raid of an Ellwood City, Pa., hospital remains unclear, and there is no indication it was related to the actions of Biden's younger brother ... In 2017 and 2018, James Biden was embarking on a foray into healthcare investing, telling potential partners, including at Americore, that his last name could open doors and that Joe Biden was excited about the public policy implications of their business models, according to court filings and interviews with former business contacts of James's."

Donald Trump Jr. challenged Hunter Biden to a debate.

In an interview with Axios's Jim VandeHei, the president's son said he wants to debate the former vice president's son over who has benefited more financially from their fathers' government service. "We can go full transparency, we show everything, and we can talk about all of the places where I am supposedly gifting but Hunter Biden isn't," said Don Jr., also claiming that he'd be willing to release his own tax returns if Hunter Biden put his out. "If we do it both, 100 percent. Let's talk about who profited off of whose public service." A Biden campaign spokesman replied that it's "hard to believe anything a Trump says on tax returns."

---

Social media speed read

Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) endorsed Biden's candidacy:

Cory Booker ✓

@CoryBooker

The answer to hatred & division is to reignite our spirit of common purpose. @JoeBiden won't only win - he'll show there's more that unites us than divides us.

He'll restore honor to the Oval Office and tackle our most pressing challenges.

That's why I'm proud to endorse Joe.

♥ 1,091 11:05 AM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 358 people are talking about this

On International Women's Day, a Post reporter noticed inequity even among cleaning sponges:

 Sonia Rao
@missoniarao

Lol Scrub Mommy costs less than Scrub Daddy but does twice the work

 1.958 8:10 PM - Mar 8, 2020

 296 people are talking about this

Ex-FBI lawyer Lisa Page, who has been a regular target of gendered attacks by Trump, shared a message from Monica Lewinsky:

Amid the coronavirus outbreak, Trump golfed with players for the Nationals who are in West Palm Beach for spring training:

Videos of the day

Trump's former top adviser on Russia, Fiona Hill, gave her first sit-down interview since testifying during the impeachment hearings:

There are thousands of sheriffs up for reelection this year, and John Oliver looked into what the job entails:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Bernie Sanders sharpens his pitch to women, as moms in Michigan oscillate between him and Biden
Date: Monday, March 9, 2020 9:52:03 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Bernie Sanders sharpens his pitch to women, as moms in Michigan oscillate between him and Biden

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. – Bernie Sanders has massively stepped up efforts to woo female voters since Joe Biden took the lead in delegates and Elizabeth Warren dropped out of the race.

The independent senator from Vermont unveiled a “reproductive health care and justice for all” plan on Saturday evening. He’s attacking the former vice president for supporting the Hyde Amendment, which banned Medicaid funds from being used to cover abortions, until reversing himself under pressure last year. He's reading aloud a quote from the 1970s in which Biden said that Roe v. Wade "went too far."

"Women have a right to control their own bodies, not the government," Sanders said during an outdoor rally here on a sunny Sunday afternoon. "Here is my promise to you: I will never nominate anyone to the Supreme Court or the federal bench who is not 100 percent pro-Roe v. Wade. ... We're in this together."

Jesse Jackson told the crowd of 7,600 that he endorsed Sanders only after receiving an ironclad commitment that he would nominate an African American woman to the Supreme Court and a promise that he would give "serious consideration" to naming a black woman as his running mate. "Bernie can win, will win and must win," said Jackson.

Bernie Sanders introduces Jesse Jackson during a rally on Sunday at Calder Plaza in Grand Rapids, Mich. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Michigan is the most populous, and symbolically significant, of

six states voting tomorrow. An EPIC-MRA poll released this morning showed Biden leading Sanders 51 percent to 27 percent in the state, with 13 percent undecided and 9 percent saying they plan to vote for another candidate. The survey of 400 likely Democratic voters, conducted Wednesday through Friday, has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percent. But this should be taken with a grain of salt. The pre-primary polls four years ago showed Hillary Clinton with a similarly huge lead, and Sanders pulled off an upset. Clinton's weakness foreshadowed Donald Trump narrowly carrying the state in November.

The Sanders campaign rushed resources and staff to Michigan over the weekend, going all-in on the Wolverine State the way that Biden did before South Carolina's primary. The other states with primaries on Tuesday are Missouri, Washington, Idaho, Mississippi and North Dakota.

Women are the centerpiece of Sanders's comeback strategy here, including an effort to win over former supporters of Warren. Biden led him among women by 12 points on Super Tuesday, 37 percent to 25 percent, based on median support in available exit polling, with Warren (D-Mass.) pulling 15 percent and former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg getting 13 percent. Biden led Sanders among men by a narrower 4 points, 36 percent to 32 percent, with Warren in single digits.

"My heart wants to vote for Bernie. My gut wants to vote for Biden," said Melissa Courtade, 46, who sits on the Kenowa Hills school board. She had planned to vote for Warren on Tuesday and remains undecided after watching Sanders speak. Courtade likes Sanders's plan to raise teacher pay to a minimum of $60,000 per year but doesn't think it's realistic. She likes the idea of Medicare-for-all, but she isn't sure that's realistic either. She really likes Sanders personally, and many of her friends support him, but she's not sure he can beat Trump.

Courtade, who voted for Clinton in the 2016 primary, said her 19-year-old daughter is supporting Biden because she thinks Sanders is too liberal to carry Michigan in the general election. “She jokingly teases me and says you’re ADD when it comes to this election, and I really am,” Courtade said after Sanders’s rally. “I just don’t know where my head is at right now. It’s so hard. I’ve never not known who I was going to vote for.”

She was one of about two dozen women I spoke with at Sanders’s rally on Sunday afternoon. Several said they had planned to back Warren or one of the other female candidates but now reluctantly needed to decide between Sanders and Biden.

A February Washington Post-ABC News poll found that while Sanders was ranked higher as a second choice by many Warren voters, a significant chunk favored moderate candidates, including Biden. Warren herself has not endorsed. The Massachusetts senator is trying to balance playing an inside game versus an outside game. Whether she backs someone or not, her ideas won’t go away and neither will she.

Sanders won his upset four years ago by running up the score in rural and conservative parts of Michigan. He managed to eke out a 1.4-point win statewide despite losing the Detroit metropolitan area, including Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties. But Sanders won Kent County, which includes Gerald Ford’s hometown of Grand Rapids, by 25 points, a 17,000-vote margin of victory. That was almost exactly his statewide margin. He’s trying to replicate this on Tuesday.

Kim Sapkowski, 55 of Belmont, had planned to vote for Warren but will now support Sanders because, in her view, Biden’s plans are too incremental. Her position as an administrative assistant at a local university was eliminated last month because of budget cuts. Now she’s unemployed and has two kids of her own in college. She worries a recession is looming, which bolsters her conviction that this is no time for “the half-measures” that she believes Biden wants to pursue. “I’m disappointed that we still are hesitant about electing a woman as president, but we've just got to beat Trump," said Sapkowski. "The biggest response that the crowd gave Bernie was when he said that the government should get its hands off women's bodies. That was the strongest response he got, and you're in maybe the most conservative part of Michigan."

Sanders speaks in Grand Rapids. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

An advertisement for BlueCross BlueShield Association. The main image shows a woman in a red shirt holding a young child. Overlaid on the image is the text "BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM" in large, white, bold letters. At the bottom left is the BlueCross BlueShield Association logo. At the bottom right is a blue button with the text "PASS THE MOMNIBUS" and a right-pointing arrow. Below the main image, it says "Powered by LivIntent" with the LivIntent logo and a small play button icon.

Biden will hold his own rally in Grand Rapids on Monday in a

bid to blunt Sanders's strength in Western Michigan. Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.), who dropped out a week ago today, also came here to campaign for Biden on Saturday. "People are looking for someone who is a rock, someone who is a safe place, and that is Joe Biden," she said at a brewery here.

Carolyn Ferrari, the regional manager for a theater company and one of the relatively few black faces at Sanders's rally here, had leaned toward supporting Klobuchar. But she decided to support Sanders on Sunday after hearing him commit to nominate a black woman to the Supreme Court. "Warren spoke very well, but something about her didn't seem genuine to me, and I don't think Biden can really get the job done," said Ferrari.

A hundred years after the ratification of the 19th Amendment granted women the right to vote, the 49-year-old said she assumed all along over the past year that no women would be left in the race at this stage because sexism remains so endemic in American politics. "You hope, but you never really expect," she said, with a sigh. "I'm almost 50, and I don't know that it's going to change in my lifetime. But to be honest, I also didn't think we'd see a black president in my lifetime."

Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) remains in the race, but she only has two delegates from American Samoa. The Democratic National Committee announced qualification requirements for Sunday night's debate in Phoenix that ensure only Biden and Sanders appear onstage.

Leslie Schwartz-Thomas, who retired as a 911 dispatcher to focus on being a grandmother to triplets, loved Warren. "The chance to vote for a woman had something to do with it," she said. "I'd be lying if I said it didn't, but I wouldn't vote for somebody just because they're a woman." Her son who lives in Seattle is a diehard Sanders supporter and urged his mom to feel the Bern after Warren suspended her campaign. The 59-year-old agreed to go to Sanders's rally to hear him out. "A lot of what Bernie talks about, I agree with," she said, "but I worry he won't beat that man who is in the White House – I won't even say his name."

Women, especially in the suburbs, powered the Democratic takeover of the House in the 2018 midterm elections. Several first-term congresswomen who flipped seats have endorsed Biden in recent days, including Elissa Slotkin and Haley Stevens in Michigan. Gretchen Whitmer, the state's Democratic governor who also won in 2018, endorsed Biden last week. But Sanders had the early support of Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.). Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) – another member of the Squad elected in 2018 – introduced him on Sunday night before a crowd of 10,240 in Ann Arbor, home to the University of Michigan.

Indeed, Sanders fares better among women than the saturation coverage of the "Bernie Bros" might lead you to believe. "His main supporters are teachers," said Sanders supporter Nichole Biber, 45, an elementary school librarian in East Lansing. "Every time I go canvassing, it's women and men. The grass-roots movements that endorse him are made up of a lot of mothers. All the women I know voted for him four years ago too."

Sanders has flushed out what once seemed like a box-checking afterthought toward the end of his stump speech with a robust commitment to make fighting for women a top priority. He now says one of his top legislative goals would be codifying the protections of Roe into federal law and "significantly" increasing funding for Planned Parenthood. The reproductive health-care plan Sanders put out on Saturday pledges to use executive authority to reverse "Trump's anti-choice actions," require preclearance by the Justice Department for all new state abortion laws, block any federal funding for "crisis pregnancy centers" that don't perform abortions, make birth control available over-the-counter (it would also be free under Medicare-for-all) and ban abstinence-only sex education in schools.

The plan includes an emphasis on increasing access to reproductive services in communities of color, with provisions for eliminating “contraceptive deserts” and increasing funding to hospitals where most patients are African American. Discussing this plan in Grand Rapids, Sanders said: “We’re tired of black mothers dying at three times the rate of white mothers.”

Supporters cheer as Sanders takes the stage in Grand Rapids. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Biden has been trying to stay above the fray as Sanders intensifies his criticism. His campaign didn’t respond directly to the abortion-focused attacks. Instead, he is running a commercial here that touts past praise from former president Barack Obama, as well as a response ad to a Sanders attack that he once supported cutting Social Security benefits.

On Sunday, Biden released a lengthy statement commemorating International Women’s Day. “Four years after more than 65 million Americans proudly cast their ballot hoping to elect our first female president, we are fighting for the very soul of our nation and to rid the White House of a man who has fostered misogyny, bigotry, racism, and division all across our country,” he wrote. “I promise that, as president, I will use every tool available to me and take every opportunity to push our nation closer to that aspirational American creed – that all of us are equal in rights and dignity and deserve equal opportunity. ... I have pledged to seek gender parity and full diversity in my national security appointments, and that will be true across my government.”

On the other hand, many feminists remain angry at Biden for his shoddy treatment of Anita Hill during Clarence Thomas’s confirmation hearing to the Supreme Court in 1991. Biden, who was chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee at the time, has expressed regret over his handling of her allegations of sexual harassment. Lucy Flores, a former Nevada state legislator, accused Biden last spring of smelling her hair and kissing the back of her head at a 2014 rally in Las Vegas.

After Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) backed Biden on Sunday, her aides told reporters that she waited to support him until there were no other major female candidates left in the race.

Harris plans to introduce Biden at a rally tonight in Detroit. “Like many women, I watched with sadness as women exited the race one by one,” she said in her video announcement. “This is something we must reckon with, and it is something I will have more to say about in the future. But we must rise to unite the party and country behind a candidate who reflects the decency and dignity of the American people and who can ultimately defeat Donald Trump.”

Shannon Koneracki, a 42-year-old stay-at-home mom from Sparta, never thought Sanders would get this far. She supported Clinton in the 2016 primary because she didn’t think Sanders could win, but the fact that Trump managed to get elected that fall led her to conclude that Sanders probably could too. So she will vote for him on Tuesday. “I would love to have Bernie pick a vice president like Warren because it would help with the women's vote," said Koneracki, as her 6-year-old daughter Genesis ran in circles around her.

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

Markets tanked this morning.

“The threat of a coronavirus-fueled oil war and continued panic around the outbreak brought markets to unprecedented lows Monday, triggering the first-ever forced halt on trading after the Standard & Poor’s 500 index sank 7 percent shortly after the open. The Dow Jones industrial average cratered as much as 2,000 points before clawing back,” Thomas Heath, Will Englund and Taylor Telford report. “The forced freeze was a sign of unprecedented volatility for Wall Street amid the most turbulent trading in recent memory. Another 15-minute halt will be triggered if the S&P 500’s losses hit the 13 percent threshold. In the event of a 20 percent decline, markets would shut down for the day.

“Oil prices tumbled into the $30s, after Saudi Arabia and Russia deadlocked over production. The Saudis had been pushing for a cut in output to prop up prices, but did a reversal when Russia balked and decided, instead, to flood the market with hundreds of thousands of additional barrels per day at a steep discount — a move analysts fear may trigger a price war.”

The White House and the Fed are at odds over how to stabilize the economy.

“The coronavirus is threatening the economy ... Yet U.S. economic leaders are divided about how to respond, with [Fed Chair Jerome] Powell and his Trump administration counterparts, [economic adviser] Kudlow and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, differing in their assessments of the risks as well as the policies best suited to address the economic threat,” Heather Long and Jeff Stein report. “Not only do the Fed and the White House appear to disagree on the severity of the potential economic hit, they’re at odds about the power of interest rate cuts to stem the panic. Trump and Kudlow have emphasized the Fed’s power to cut interest rates as the primary economic response to the crisis. But although they have moved to cut rates, Powell and others at the Fed have suggested that they have only a limited role to play ... The White House hasn’t, however,

shown consistent support for such stimulus.”

The number of U.S. cases has topped 500.

“Saudi Arabia followed Italy in enacting new travel restrictions, Iran suspended flights to Europe, and the [U.S. government] warned citizens against cruise travel,” Felicia Sonmez, Juliet Eilperin and Kim Bellware report. “A virus-stricken cruise ship made its way to California to dock ... The Department of Health and Human Services [said] that the Grand Princess cruise ship’s more than 3,500 passengers, at least 21 of whom have tested positive for the coronavirus, will be quarantined in California, Texas and Georgia. Some White House officials privately believe the number of U.S. cases will double — or more — in the next 48 hours. At least 21 people have died.” More than 30 states have announced infections.

The District's first confirmed case is the Rev. Timothy Cole, rector of Christ Church Georgetown: “A church spokesman said Cole was present for three services last Sunday attended by 550 people. Virginia announced a second case on Sunday, bringing the total number of cases in the Washington area to nine.”

- D.C. officials urged hundreds who attended Christ Church Georgetown on several recent days to self-quarantine. This is the first broad self-quarantine order in the Washington region. (Ferit Nirappil and Darran Simon)
- The School Without Walls, a D.C. public high school, is closed today. City officials determined that a staff member had close contact with a person who tested positive. (Perry Stein and Martin Weil)

A case of the virus at CPAC brought the virus closer to Trump.

“Trump was photographed shaking hands with Matt Schlapp, the chairman of the American Conservative Union, who confirmed that he had been in direct contact with the infected man during the Conservative Political Action Conference last month,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Josh Dawsey and Juliet Eilperin report. “The handshake at CPAC put Trump just two degrees of separation away from the virus ... While the White House has maintained that Trump was never in direct contact with the infected person and does not have any symptoms, the potential close call at a political event underscores how the outbreak threatens to upend the president’s routine as he campaigns for reelection.

"There is growing tension among Trump administration officials, who now view the rapidly spreading outbreak as a black swan event that could consume the president’s fourth year in office, even as Trump remains reluctant to see much cause for concern ... Concerns for the president’s personal health have also escalated as the death toll from the virus has risen, with most of the victims being senior citizens. Trump’s personal doctor, Sean Conley, now attends some White House meetings on the coronavirus, tracking where new cases are being reported ... The White House is also being cleaned more regularly and people with flu-like symptoms are being urged not to come into the complex, with the added warning that they may infect the leader of the free world ...

"Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.) said in a statement Sunday that he ‘briefly interacted’ with the infected person while at CPAC and would self-quarantine at his Texas home 'out of an abundance of caution.' He said he does not have any symptoms associated with the virus. Rep. Paul A. Gosar (R-Ariz.) tweeted Sunday that he and three of his staff members are under self-quarantine ‘after sustained contact at CPAC’ with the person who has the virus. He added: ‘We are all asymptomatic and feel great.’”

Sanders and Biden both plan to forge ahead with campaigning.

“With the outbreak in the United States now affecting 30 states, some political organizations have reassessed their plans for conferences and large-scale events. The AFL-CIO, the largest group of labor unions in the country, announced that it is canceling its presidential forum, which had been scheduled for Thursday in Orlando. Sanders and [Biden] had been planning to attend,” Felicia Sonmez, Juliet Eilperin and Paige Winfield Cunningham report.

- “We are in communications with public health officials wherever we go,” Sanders said on CNN. “We will not endanger the health of anybody in this country. ... We are watching this thing very, very carefully.”
- Sanders will hold a roundtable this afternoon with public health experts in Detroit to discuss how the country should address the coronavirus.
- During a campaign stop in Jackson, Miss., Biden answered a question about the coronavirus while rubbing sanitizer on his hands. “We’re listening to the experts at the CDC and doing everything they recommend,” he said.
- Trump has typically held a rally on the eve of each Democratic primary or caucus. But he does not have one planned for tonight. His last rally was this past Monday in North Carolina. Erin Perrine, a Trump campaign spokeswoman, said the campaign is “proceeding normally” and will announce further events at a later date.

Coronavirus anxiety is growing in an aging Congress.

“Members of Congress are becoming increasingly anxious about coronavirus, and there is growing pressure on leadership to take steps to protect lawmakers — even potentially recessing for a period of weeks,” NBC News reports. “Members plan to raise concerns with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., at their weekly leadership meeting [today]. ... It’s Pelosi’s decision whether to keep the House in session or make changes in the schedule.”

One of America's largest hospitals, is already feeling the virus's pressure.

“Mass General is a renowned medical center with just over 1,000 beds and top research facilities, the kind of place many patients want to be when something terrible happens. Yet in a sign of the enormous challenge covid-19 poses to the health-care system, even emergency-response teams here were bracing for an outbreak that seemed increasingly likely to test staff and resources,” Emma Brown reports. “At the ground level — observed during several days at Mass General and in interviews with key planning leaders — teams were working long hours to deal with challenges that the White House was playing down or insisting did not exist. ... Mass General health-care workers who encounter a patient with fever, cough and other symptoms of covid-19 can call a ‘biothreats’ pager at the hospital for advice and help determining whether that patient should be tested. On Tuesday, the pager buzzed about 20 times, according to Erica Shenoy, an infectious diseases doctor and associate chief of infection control. By Thursday afternoon, the buzzes sounded every 10 minutes and had become a full-time job for Amir Mohareb, the young infectious diseases doctor.”

Italian authorities are struggling to lock down about 16 million people.

“The plan to lock down large swaths of the north was the first major attempt by a democracy during the coronavirus crisis to radically halt the routines of daily life — an effort that will have significant impacts on civil liberties,” Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. “But in the hours before and after the measure became law, people continued to stream out of the northern hubs of Milan and Venice on trains and planes for southern Italy or elsewhere in Europe. Sunday, then, provided the first glimpse of a coronavirus lockdown, European-style ... Data released by Italy on Sunday night only underscored the urgency. Active cases jumped more than 1,300 in a single day to 6,387, and deaths jumped by 133 to

366. ... Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte described a series of emergency steps: People across the north, in the region of Lombardy and in 14 other provinces would be barred from exiting or entering other than for emergencies or essential work or health matters. But Conte also said some transportation would continue. He framed the measures as part of a broader message to keep distance from others and not ‘throw parties.’”

---

Quote of the day

"It turns out that the truth matters, and epidemics can't be subdued by tweet," said Marie Yovanovitch, the former ambassador to Ukraine who was recalled by Trump.
(Bloomington Herald-Times)

---

The new world order

Blasts disrupted the Afghan president's swearing-in ceremony.

“An attack disrupted Afghan President Ashraf Ghani's inauguration

Monday amid a deepening political crisis that threatens to undermine the future of peace talks with the Taliban,” Susannah George and Sharif Hassan report. “Both Ghani and his main rival, Abdullah Abdullah, held swearing-in ceremonies Monday after weeks of efforts to mediate between the two men failed. Afghanistan's election commission named Ghani the winner of the September presidential contest, with just enough of the vote to avoid a second round, but Abdullah declared the results fraudulent and claimed victory. The spectacle of dueling inaugurations held just yards apart in separate compounds reflect worsening divisions among Afghanistan's political elite as the country prepares to enter talks with the Taliban. The peace deal signed between the militants and the United States called for intra-Afghan talks to begin Tuesday. It is unclear if that benchmark will be met. Mediation efforts were held late into the night Sunday and continued until just moments before the ceremonies.”

The U.S. envoy to Afghanistan now faces his greatest challenge.

Zalmay Khalilzad “is expected to be closely involved when representatives from the Taliban, the Afghan government and Afghan society sit down as early as this week to begin mapping out a future governing structure and finding consensus on divisive issues such as the role of Islam and women’s rights,” Missy Ryan and John Hudson report. “Already there are signs of trouble. Afghan and Taliban leaders are disputing the terms of Khalilzad’s initial deal, and the militants have launched a series of deadly attacks. The format, objectives and even precise location of the next negotiations remain a mystery. ‘This is his biggest challenge,’ said Carter Malkasian, a former Pentagon official who took part in some of the talks Khalilzad conducted with militant leaders over the past two years ... Looming over the negotiations is officials’ hazy understanding of what Trump wants and will tolerate. While the president has consistently voiced his desire to get U.S. troops out of the country, it is less clear how he will define American interests in what is likely to be a protracted effort to shape Afghanistan’s future."

North Korea fired three projectiles after threatening “momentous” action.

“South Korea’s national security director, defense minister and spy chief held an emergency video conference and agreed the North Korean action were not helpful to efforts to establish a peace on the Korean Peninsula, according to South Korea’s presidential Blue House,” the AP reports.

Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman detained two other Saudi princes in villas.

“Two senior princes detained in a crackdown against potential rivals of Saudi Arabia’s powerful crown prince are being held in private villas and have been allowed to call their families, according to a person with ties to the royal family,” Liz Sly, Ellen Nakashima and Kareem Fahim report.

“The detention on Friday of [King Salman’s] younger brother, Ahmed bin Abdulaziz, and one of his nephews, Mohammed bin Nayef, sparked rumors that Salman’s health might have deteriorated, prompting the bold move by [the Crown Prince], the king’s son and heir, against some of the most senior members of the royal family. ... The princes have in the past been considered possible heirs to the crown. ... The person said the princes contacted family members on Saturday and told them that they were being held not in prisons but in private royal villas. Ahmed asked relatives to send him his ‘bisht,’ a robe worn for official engagements, prompting the person to speculate that he might soon make a public appearance, perhaps under duress.”

Gaza militants targeted Israel with party balloons bearing bombs.

“In recent months, hundreds of booby-trapped balloons — sometimes bearing the messages ‘I Love You’ and ‘Happy Birthday’ along with small improvised explosives dangling by a string — have descended [on communities] downwind of the nearby Gaza Strip, according to Israeli police,” Steve Hendrix, Hazem Balousha and Ruth Eglash report. “Most land in open countryside, and none has yet caused injury or death, something a local police commander described as a miracle bound to give way to a tragedy.”

Tens of thousands of Mexican women protested femicide and gender-based violence.

“Women poured into the streets on Sunday to start a two-day protest and national strike against gender-based violence, in what organizers hope will be a turning point for women's rights in a country disfigured by violence and machismo,” Mary Beth Sheridan reports. “Many wore purple, the color symbolizing International Women’s Day, celebrated throughout the world on Sunday, and waved signs reading ‘Fight today so we don’t die tomorrow’ and ‘We are the voice of those who are no longer with us.’ ... Mexico’s femicide rate rose about 10 percent in 2019 to 1,010 cases; an average of 10 women are killed per day. Surveys have found a majority of women have been victims of violence at some point in their lives.”

Meanwhile, a 22-year-old Guatemalan woman became the eighth migrant to die in ICE custody this fiscal year, per BuzzFeed News.

---

More on 2020

Steve Bullock attends the Iowa State Fair last August. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Steve Bullock officially announced he'll run for Senate.

Montana's Democratic governor will challenge Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.). This reversal by the former presidential candidate boosts Democratic fortunes in their bid to unseat and reclaim the Senate majority. (Felicia Sonmez and Paul Kane)

Twitter debuted its "manipulated media" label.

A deceptively edited video of Biden was shared by White House social media director Dan Scavino and retweeted by Trump. "The video was the first test of a new policy the social media company implemented on March 5 to label tweets that contain manipulated or synthetic media, ranging from edited videos to more sophisticated examples known as 'deepfakes' that can fabricate events that never happened," Cat Zakrzewski reports. "In this case, the altered video of Biden ... is based on a speech he gave in Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday. It was then shared on Twitter by Scavino, only edited to make it appear as if Biden inadvertently endorsed Trump for reelection."

The Russian media is freaking out about Biden's resurrection.

“The pro-Kremlin newspaper Vzglyad complained that Biden ‘rose from the ashes like a phoenix,’ prevailing ‘in spite of the corruption scandals’ that have long been alleged and cultivated by the Russians—and the Republicans—concerning his son, Hunter, and his own activities in Ukraine,” the Daily Beast reports. “With notable irritation, Vzglyad griped about [Biden’s] primary victories in North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Alabama, claiming that the pro-Biden votes in rural states were secured by ‘rednecks, who shoot skunks for fun, bowl, beat their wives and associate the word ‘socialist’ with the communist threat.’ The newspaper bitterly surmised that through Biden’s anticipated nomination, the U.S. elites won yet another Cold War against socialism.”

A watchdog warned the administration that it “urgently” needs to address problems with election security.

“The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), part of the Department of Homeland Security, was to have finalized plans by January to support states and localities with their election security operations. That did not happen, according to a Government Accountability Office report,” Joe Davidson reports. “The report said the agency ‘is not well-positioned to execute a nationwide strategy for securing election infrastructure prior to the start of the 2020 election cycle’ because it has not completed plans. According to the report, cybersecurity agency officials said they are unlikely to develop plans for election security assistance to political parties or come up with strategies for raising public awareness about foreign threats.”

James Biden's health-care ventures face growing scrutiny.

In January, the FBI raided Americore Health hospital, a health-care

business linked to Joe Biden's brother, seizing boxes of documents and deepening the legal morass surrounding James Biden's recent venture into health-care investing, Politico reports: "In the weeks since the raid, two small medical firms that did business with James Biden have claimed in civil court proceedings to have obtained evidence that he may have fraudulently transferred funds from Americore 'outside of the ordinary course of business' ... The purpose of the Jan. 30 raid of an Ellwood City, Pa., hospital remains unclear, and there is no indication it was related to the actions of Biden's younger brother ... In 2017 and 2018, James Biden was embarking on a foray into healthcare investing, telling potential partners, including at Americore, that his last name could open doors and that Joe Biden was excited about the public policy implications of their business models, according to court filings and interviews with former business contacts of James's."

Donald Trump Jr. challenged Hunter Biden to a debate.

In an interview with Axios's Jim VandeHei, the president's son said he wants to debate the former vice president's son over who has benefited more financially from their fathers' government service. "We can go full transparency, we show everything, and we can talk about all of the places where I am supposedly gifting but Hunter Biden isn't," said Don Jr., also claiming that he'd be willing to release his own tax returns if Hunter Biden put his out. "If we do it both, 100 percent. Let's talk about who profited off of whose public service." A Biden campaign spokesman replied that it's "hard to believe anything a Trump says on tax returns."

---

Social media speed read

Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) endorsed Biden's candidacy:

Cory Booker ✓

@CoryBooker

The answer to hatred & division is to reignite our spirit of common purpose. @JoeBiden won't only win - he'll show there's more that unites us than divides us.

He'll restore honor to the Oval Office and tackle our most pressing challenges.

That's why I'm proud to endorse Joe.

♥ 1,091 11:05 AM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 358 people are talking about this

On International Women's Day, a Post reporter noticed inequity even among cleaning sponges:

Sonia Rao
@missoniarao

Lol Scrub Mommy costs less than Scrub Daddy but does twice the work

♥ 1.958 8:10 PM - Mar 8, 2020

💬 296 people are talking about this

Ex-FBI lawyer Lisa Page, who has been a regular target of gendered attacks by Trump, shared a message from Monica Lewinsky:

Amid the coronavirus outbreak, Trump golfed with players for the Nationals who are in West Palm Beach for spring training:

Videos of the day

Trump's former top adviser on Russia, Fiona Hill, gave her first sit-down interview since testifying during the impeachment hearings:

There are thousands of sheriffs up for reelection this year, and John Oliver looked into what the job entails:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Bernie Sanders sharpens his pitch to women, as moms in Michigan oscillate between him and Biden
Date: Monday, March 9, 2020 9:52:23 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Bernie Sanders sharpens his pitch to women, as moms in Michigan oscillate between him and Biden

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. – Bernie Sanders has massively stepped up efforts to woo female voters since Joe Biden took the lead in delegates and Elizabeth Warren dropped out of the race.

The independent senator from Vermont unveiled a “reproductive health care and justice for all” plan on Saturday evening. He’s attacking the former vice president for supporting the Hyde Amendment, which banned Medicaid funds from being used to cover abortions, until reversing himself under pressure last year. He's reading aloud a quote from the 1970s in which Biden said that Roe v. Wade "went too far."

"Women have a right to control their own bodies, not the government," Sanders said during an outdoor rally here on a sunny Sunday afternoon. "Here is my promise to you: I will never nominate anyone to the Supreme Court or the federal bench who is not 100 percent pro-Roe v. Wade. ... We're in this together."

Jesse Jackson told the crowd of 7,600 that he endorsed Sanders only after receiving an ironclad commitment that he would nominate an African American woman to the Supreme Court and a promise that he would give "serious consideration" to naming a black woman as his running mate. "Bernie can win, will win and must win," said Jackson.

Bernie Sanders introduces Jesse Jackson during a rally on Sunday at Calder Plaza in Grand Rapids, Mich. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Michigan is the most populous, and symbolically significant, of

six states voting tomorrow. An EPIC-MRA poll released this morning showed Biden leading Sanders 51 percent to 27 percent in the state, with 13 percent undecided and 9 percent saying they plan to vote for another candidate. The survey of 400 likely Democratic voters, conducted Wednesday through Friday, has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percent. But this should be taken with a grain of salt. The pre-primary polls four years ago showed Hillary Clinton with a similarly huge lead, and Sanders pulled off an upset. Clinton's weakness foreshadowed Donald Trump narrowly carrying the state in November.

The Sanders campaign rushed resources and staff to Michigan over the weekend, going all-in on the Wolverine State the way that Biden did before South Carolina's primary. The other states with primaries on Tuesday are Missouri, Washington, Idaho, Mississippi and North Dakota.

Women are the centerpiece of Sanders's comeback strategy here, including an effort to win over former supporters of Warren. Biden led him among women by 12 points on Super Tuesday, 37 percent to 25 percent, based on median support in available exit polling, with Warren (D-Mass.) pulling 15 percent and former New York mayor Mike Bloomberg getting 13 percent. Biden led Sanders among men by a narrower 4 points, 36 percent to 32 percent, with Warren in single digits.

"My heart wants to vote for Bernie. My gut wants to vote for Biden," said Melissa Courtade, 46, who sits on the Kenowa Hills school board. She had planned to vote for Warren on Tuesday and remains undecided after watching Sanders speak. Courtade likes Sanders's plan to raise teacher pay to a minimum of $60,000 per year but doesn't think it's realistic. She likes the idea of Medicare-for-all, but she isn't sure that's realistic either. She really likes Sanders personally, and many of her friends support him, but she's not sure he can beat Trump.

Courtade, who voted for Clinton in the 2016 primary, said her 19-year-old daughter is supporting Biden because she thinks Sanders is too liberal to carry Michigan in the general election. “She jokingly teases me and says you’re ADD when it comes to this election, and I really am,” Courtade said after Sanders’s rally. “I just don’t know where my head is at right now. It’s so hard. I’ve never not known who I was going to vote for.”

She was one of about two dozen women I spoke with at Sanders’s rally on Sunday afternoon. Several said they had planned to back Warren or one of the other female candidates but now reluctantly needed to decide between Sanders and Biden.

A February Washington Post-ABC News poll found that while Sanders was ranked higher as a second choice by many Warren voters, a significant chunk favored moderate candidates, including Biden. Warren herself has not endorsed. The Massachusetts senator is trying to balance playing an inside game versus an outside game. Whether she backs someone or not, her ideas won’t go away and neither will she.

Sanders won his upset four years ago by running up the score in rural and conservative parts of Michigan. He managed to eke out a 1.4-point win statewide despite losing the Detroit metropolitan area, including Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties. But Sanders won Kent County, which includes Gerald Ford’s hometown of Grand Rapids, by 25 points, a 17,000-vote margin of victory. That was almost exactly his statewide margin. He’s trying to replicate this on Tuesday.

Kim Sapkowski, 55 of Belmont, had planned to vote for Warren but will now support Sanders because, in her view, Biden’s plans are too incremental. Her position as an administrative assistant at a local university was eliminated last month because of budget cuts. Now she’s unemployed and has two kids of her own in college. She worries a recession is looming, which bolsters her conviction that this is no time for “the half-measures” that she believes Biden wants to pursue. “I’m disappointed that we still are hesitant about electing a woman as president, but we've just got to beat Trump," said Sapkowski. "The biggest response that the crowd gave Bernie was when he said that the government should get its hands off women's bodies. That was the strongest response he got, and you're in maybe the most conservative part of Michigan."

Sanders speaks in Grand Rapids. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

An advertisement for the BlueCross BlueShield Association. The main image shows a woman in a red shirt holding a young child. Overlaid on the right side of the image is the text "BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM" in large, white, bold letters. At the bottom left, there is the BlueCross BlueShield Association logo. At the bottom right, there is a blue button with the text "PASS THE MOMNIBUS" and a right-pointing arrow. Below the main image, it says "Powered by LivIntent" with the LivIntent logo.

Biden will hold his own rally in Grand Rapids on Monday in a

bid to blunt Sanders's strength in Western Michigan. Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.), who dropped out a week ago today, also came here to campaign for Biden on Saturday. "People are looking for someone who is a rock, someone who is a safe place, and that is Joe Biden," she said at a brewery here.

Carolyn Ferrari, the regional manager for a theater company and one of the relatively few black faces at Sanders's rally here, had leaned toward supporting Klobuchar. But she decided to support Sanders on Sunday after hearing him commit to nominate a black woman to the Supreme Court. "Warren spoke very well, but something about her didn't seem genuine to me, and I don't think Biden can really get the job done," said Ferrari.

A hundred years after the ratification of the 19th Amendment granted women the right to vote, the 49-year-old said she assumed all along over the past year that no women would be left in the race at this stage because sexism remains so endemic in American politics. "You hope, but you never really expect," she said, with a sigh. "I'm almost 50, and I don't know that it's going to change in my lifetime. But to be honest, I also didn't think we'd see a black president in my lifetime."

Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) remains in the race, but she only has two delegates from American Samoa. The Democratic National Committee announced qualification requirements for Sunday night's debate in Phoenix that ensure only Biden and Sanders appear onstage.

Leslie Schwartz-Thomas, who retired as a 911 dispatcher to focus on being a grandmother to triplets, loved Warren. "The chance to vote for a woman had something to do with it," she said. "I'd be lying if I said it didn't, but I wouldn't vote for somebody just because they're a woman." Her son who lives in Seattle is a diehard Sanders supporter and urged his mom to feel the Bern after Warren suspended her campaign. The 59-year-old agreed to go to Sanders's rally to hear him out. "A lot of what Bernie talks about, I agree with," she said, "but I worry he won't beat that man who is in the White House – I won't even say his name."

Women, especially in the suburbs, powered the Democratic takeover of the House in the 2018 midterm elections. Several first-term congresswomen who flipped seats have endorsed Biden in recent days, including Elissa Slotkin and Haley Stevens in Michigan. Gretchen Whitmer, the state's Democratic governor who also won in 2018, endorsed Biden last week. But Sanders had the early support of Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.). Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) – another member of the Squad elected in 2018 – introduced him on Sunday night before a crowd of 10,240 in Ann Arbor, home to the University of Michigan.

Indeed, Sanders fares better among women than the saturation coverage of the "Bernie Bros" might lead you to believe. "His main supporters are teachers," said Sanders supporter Nichole Biber, 45, an elementary school librarian in East Lansing. "Every time I go canvassing, it's women and men. The grass-roots movements that endorse him are made up of a lot of mothers. All the women I know voted for him four years ago too."

Sanders has flushed out what once seemed like a box-checking afterthought toward the end of his stump speech with a robust commitment to make fighting for women a top priority. He now says one of his top legislative goals would be codifying the protections of Roe into federal law and "significantly" increasing funding for Planned Parenthood. The reproductive health-care plan Sanders put out on Saturday pledges to use executive authority to reverse "Trump's anti-choice actions," require preclearance by the Justice Department for all new state abortion laws, block any federal funding for "crisis pregnancy centers" that don't perform abortions, make birth control available over-the-counter (it would also be free under Medicare-for-all) and ban abstinence-only sex education in schools.

The plan includes an emphasis on increasing access to reproductive services in communities of color, with provisions for eliminating “contraceptive deserts” and increasing funding to hospitals where most patients are African American. Discussing this plan in Grand Rapids, Sanders said: “We’re tired of black mothers dying at three times the rate of white mothers.”

Supporters cheer as Sanders takes the stage in Grand Rapids. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Biden has been trying to stay above the fray as Sanders intensifies his criticism. His campaign didn’t respond directly to the abortion-focused attacks. Instead, he is running a commercial here that touts past praise from former president Barack Obama, as well as a response ad to a Sanders attack that he once supported cutting Social Security benefits.

On Sunday, Biden released a lengthy statement commemorating International Women’s Day. “Four years after more than 65 million Americans proudly cast their ballot hoping to elect our first female president, we are fighting for the very soul of our nation and to rid the White House of a man who has fostered misogyny, bigotry, racism, and division all across our country,” he wrote. “I promise that, as president, I will use every tool available to me and take every opportunity to push our nation closer to that aspirational American creed – that all of us are equal in rights and dignity and deserve equal opportunity. ... I have pledged to seek gender parity and full diversity in my national security appointments, and that will be true across my government.”

On the other hand, many feminists remain angry at Biden for his shoddy treatment of Anita Hill during Clarence Thomas’s confirmation hearing to the Supreme Court in 1991. Biden, who was chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee at the time, has expressed regret over his handling of her allegations of sexual harassment. Lucy Flores, a former Nevada state legislator, accused Biden last spring of smelling her hair and kissing the back of her head at a 2014 rally in Las Vegas.

After Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) backed Biden on Sunday, her aides told reporters that she waited to support him until there were no other major female candidates left in the race.

Harris plans to introduce Biden at a rally tonight in Detroit. “Like many women, I watched with sadness as women exited the race one by one,” she said in her video announcement. “This is something we must reckon with, and it is something I will have more to say about in the future. But we must rise to unite the party and country behind a candidate who reflects the decency and dignity of the American people and who can ultimately defeat Donald Trump.”

Shannon Koneracki, a 42-year-old stay-at-home mom from Sparta, never thought Sanders would get this far. She supported Clinton in the 2016 primary because she didn’t think Sanders could win, but the fact that Trump managed to get elected that fall led her to conclude that Sanders probably could too. So she will vote for him on Tuesday. “I would love to have Bernie pick a vice president like Warren because it would help with the women's vote," said Koneracki, as her 6-year-old daughter Genesis ran in circles around her.

Share The Daily 202 [!\[\]\(d0a1791f26d167e866e44ebbf83efebe_img.jpg\)](#) [!\[\]\(cb1960474df5b19cdeae2009c7323e63_img.jpg\)](#) [!\[\]\(d08b0fd4d750d53eedcbf354f1702398_img.jpg\)](#)

Listen to the podcast [!\[\]\(5eb1325dfdc3f1cad8426726c0db51cd_img.jpg\)](#)

The latest on the coronavirus

Markets tanked this morning.

“The threat of a coronavirus-fueled oil war and continued panic around the outbreak brought markets to unprecedented lows Monday, triggering the first-ever forced halt on trading after the Standard & Poor’s 500 index sank 7 percent shortly after the open. The Dow Jones industrial average cratered as much as 2,000 points before clawing back,” Thomas Heath, Will Englund and Taylor Telford report. “The forced freeze was a sign of unprecedented volatility for Wall Street amid the most turbulent trading in recent memory. Another 15-minute halt will be triggered if the S&P 500’s losses hit the 13 percent threshold. In the event of a 20 percent decline, markets would shut down for the day.

“Oil prices tumbled into the $30s, after Saudi Arabia and Russia deadlocked over production. The Saudis had been pushing for a cut in output to prop up prices, but did a reversal when Russia balked and decided, instead, to flood the market with hundreds of thousands of additional barrels per day at a steep discount — a move analysts fear may trigger a price war.”

The White House and the Fed are at odds over how to stabilize the economy.

“The coronavirus is threatening the economy ... Yet U.S. economic leaders are divided about how to respond, with [Fed Chair Jerome] Powell and his Trump administration counterparts, [economic adviser] Kudlow and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, differing in their assessments of the risks as well as the policies best suited to address the economic threat,” Heather Long and Jeff Stein report. “Not only do the Fed and the White House appear to disagree on the severity of the potential economic hit, they’re at odds about the power of interest rate cuts to stem the panic. Trump and Kudlow have emphasized the Fed’s power to cut interest rates as the primary economic response to the crisis. But although they have moved to cut rates, Powell and others at the Fed have suggested that they have only a limited role to play ... The White House hasn’t, however,

shown consistent support for such stimulus.”

The number of U.S. cases has topped 500.

“Saudi Arabia followed Italy in enacting new travel restrictions, Iran suspended flights to Europe, and the [U.S. government] warned citizens against cruise travel,” Felicia Sonmez, Juliet Eilperin and Kim Bellware report. “A virus-stricken cruise ship made its way to California to dock ... The Department of Health and Human Services [said] that the Grand Princess cruise ship’s more than 3,500 passengers, at least 21 of whom have tested positive for the coronavirus, will be quarantined in California, Texas and Georgia. Some White House officials privately believe the number of U.S. cases will double — or more — in the next 48 hours. At least 21 people have died.” More than 30 states have announced infections.

The District's first confirmed case is the Rev. Timothy Cole, rector of Christ Church Georgetown: “A church spokesman said Cole was present for three services last Sunday attended by 550 people. Virginia announced a second case on Sunday, bringing the total number of cases in the Washington area to nine.”

- D.C. officials urged hundreds who attended Christ Church Georgetown on several recent days to self-quarantine. This is the first broad self-quarantine order in the Washington region. (Ferit Nirappil and Darran Simon)
- The School Without Walls, a D.C. public high school, is closed today. City officials determined that a staff member had close contact with a person who tested positive. (Perry Stein and Martin Weil)

A case of the virus at CPAC brought the virus closer to Trump.

“Trump was photographed shaking hands with Matt Schlapp, the chairman of the American Conservative Union, who confirmed that he had been in direct contact with the infected man during the Conservative Political Action Conference last month,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Josh Dawsey and Juliet Eilperin report. “The handshake at CPAC put Trump just two degrees of separation away from the virus ... While the White House has maintained that Trump was never in direct contact with the infected person and does not have any symptoms, the potential close call at a political event underscores how the outbreak threatens to upend the president’s routine as he campaigns for reelection.

"There is growing tension among Trump administration officials, who now view the rapidly spreading outbreak as a black swan event that could consume the president’s fourth year in office, even as Trump remains reluctant to see much cause for concern ... Concerns for the president’s personal health have also escalated as the death toll from the virus has risen, with most of the victims being senior citizens. Trump’s personal doctor, Sean Conley, now attends some White House meetings on the coronavirus, tracking where new cases are being reported ... The White House is also being cleaned more regularly and people with flu-like symptoms are being urged not to come into the complex, with the added warning that they may infect the leader of the free world ...

"Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.) said in a statement Sunday that he ‘briefly interacted’ with the infected person while at CPAC and would self-quarantine at his Texas home 'out of an abundance of caution.' He said he does not have any symptoms associated with the virus. Rep. Paul A. Gosar (R-Ariz.) tweeted Sunday that he and three of his staff members are under self-quarantine ‘after sustained contact at CPAC’ with the person who has the virus. He added: ‘We are all asymptomatic and feel great.’”

Sanders and Biden both plan to forge ahead with campaigning.

“With the outbreak in the United States now affecting 30 states, some political organizations have reassessed their plans for conferences and large-scale events. The AFL-CIO, the largest group of labor unions in the country, announced that it is canceling its presidential forum, which had been scheduled for Thursday in Orlando. Sanders and [Biden] had been planning to attend,” Felicia Sonmez, Juliet Eilperin and Paige Winfield Cunningham report.

- “We are in communications with public health officials wherever we go,” Sanders said on CNN. “We will not endanger the health of anybody in this country. ... We are watching this thing very, very carefully.”
- Sanders will hold a roundtable this afternoon with public health experts in Detroit to discuss how the country should address the coronavirus.
- During a campaign stop in Jackson, Miss., Biden answered a question about the coronavirus while rubbing sanitizer on his hands. “We’re listening to the experts at the CDC and doing everything they recommend,” he said.
- Trump has typically held a rally on the eve of each Democratic primary or caucus. But he does not have one planned for tonight. His last rally was this past Monday in North Carolina. Erin Perrine, a Trump campaign spokeswoman, said the campaign is “proceeding normally” and will announce further events at a later date.

Coronavirus anxiety is growing in an aging Congress.

“Members of Congress are becoming increasingly anxious about coronavirus, and there is growing pressure on leadership to take steps to protect lawmakers — even potentially recessing for a period of weeks,” NBC News reports. “Members plan to raise concerns with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., at their weekly leadership meeting [today]. ... It’s Pelosi’s decision whether to keep the House in session or make changes in the schedule.”

One of America's largest hospitals, is already feeling the virus's pressure.

“Mass General is a renowned medical center with just over 1,000 beds and top research facilities, the kind of place many patients want to be when something terrible happens. Yet in a sign of the enormous challenge covid-19 poses to the health-care system, even emergency-response teams here were bracing for an outbreak that seemed increasingly likely to test staff and resources,” Emma Brown reports. “At the ground level — observed during several days at Mass General and in interviews with key planning leaders — teams were working long hours to deal with challenges that the White House was playing down or insisting did not exist. ... Mass General health-care workers who encounter a patient with fever, cough and other symptoms of covid-19 can call a ‘biothreats’ pager at the hospital for advice and help determining whether that patient should be tested. On Tuesday, the pager buzzed about 20 times, according to Erica Shenoy, an infectious diseases doctor and associate chief of infection control. By Thursday afternoon, the buzzes sounded every 10 minutes and had become a full-time job for Amir Mohareb, the young infectious diseases doctor.”

Italian authorities are struggling to lock down about 16 million people.

“The plan to lock down large swaths of the north was the first major attempt by a democracy during the coronavirus crisis to radically halt the routines of daily life — an effort that will have significant impacts on civil liberties,” Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. “But in the hours before and after the measure became law, people continued to stream out of the northern hubs of Milan and Venice on trains and planes for southern Italy or elsewhere in Europe. Sunday, then, provided the first glimpse of a coronavirus lockdown, European-style ... Data released by Italy on Sunday night only underscored the urgency. Active cases jumped more than 1,300 in a single day to 6,387, and deaths jumped by 133 to

366. ... Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte described a series of emergency steps: People across the north, in the region of Lombardy and in 14 other provinces would be barred from exiting or entering other than for emergencies or essential work or health matters. But Conte also said some transportation would continue. He framed the measures as part of a broader message to keep distance from others and not ‘throw parties.’”

---

Quote of the day

"It turns out that the truth matters, and epidemics can't be subdued by tweet," said Marie Yovanovitch, the former ambassador to Ukraine who was recalled by Trump.
(Bloomington Herald-Times)

---

The new world order

Blasts disrupted the Afghan president's swearing-in ceremony.

“An attack disrupted Afghan President Ashraf Ghani's inauguration

Monday amid a deepening political crisis that threatens to undermine the future of peace talks with the Taliban,” Susannah George and Sharif Hassan report. “Both Ghani and his main rival, Abdullah Abdullah, held swearing-in ceremonies Monday after weeks of efforts to mediate between the two men failed. Afghanistan's election commission named Ghani the winner of the September presidential contest, with just enough of the vote to avoid a second round, but Abdullah declared the results fraudulent and claimed victory. The spectacle of dueling inaugurations held just yards apart in separate compounds reflect worsening divisions among Afghanistan's political elite as the country prepares to enter talks with the Taliban. The peace deal signed between the militants and the United States called for intra-Afghan talks to begin Tuesday. It is unclear if that benchmark will be met. Mediation efforts were held late into the night Sunday and continued until just moments before the ceremonies.”

The U.S. envoy to Afghanistan now faces his greatest challenge.

Zalmay Khalilzad “is expected to be closely involved when representatives from the Taliban, the Afghan government and Afghan society sit down as early as this week to begin mapping out a future governing structure and finding consensus on divisive issues such as the role of Islam and women’s rights,” Missy Ryan and John Hudson report. “Already there are signs of trouble. Afghan and Taliban leaders are disputing the terms of Khalilzad’s initial deal, and the militants have launched a series of deadly attacks. The format, objectives and even precise location of the next negotiations remain a mystery. ‘This is his biggest challenge,’ said Carter Malkasian, a former Pentagon official who took part in some of the talks Khalilzad conducted with militant leaders over the past two years ... Looming over the negotiations is officials’ hazy understanding of what Trump wants and will tolerate. While the president has consistently voiced his desire to get U.S. troops out of the country, it is less clear how he will define American interests in what is likely to be a protracted effort to shape Afghanistan’s future."

North Korea fired three projectiles after threatening “momentous” action.

“South Korea’s national security director, defense minister and spy chief held an emergency video conference and agreed the North Korean action were not helpful to efforts to establish a peace on the Korean Peninsula, according to South Korea’s presidential Blue House,” the AP reports.

Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman detained two other Saudi princes in villas.

“Two senior princes detained in a crackdown against potential rivals of Saudi Arabia’s powerful crown prince are being held in private villas and have been allowed to call their families, according to a person with ties to the royal family,” Liz Sly, Ellen Nakashima and Kareem Fahim report.

“The detention on Friday of [King Salman’s] younger brother, Ahmed bin Abdulaziz, and one of his nephews, Mohammed bin Nayef, sparked rumors that Salman’s health might have deteriorated, prompting the bold move by [the Crown Prince], the king’s son and heir, against some of the most senior members of the royal family. ... The princes have in the past been considered possible heirs to the crown. ... The person said the princes contacted family members on Saturday and told them that they were being held not in prisons but in private royal villas. Ahmed asked relatives to send him his ‘bisht,’ a robe worn for official engagements, prompting the person to speculate that he might soon make a public appearance, perhaps under duress.”

Gaza militants targeted Israel with party balloons bearing bombs.

“In recent months, hundreds of booby-trapped balloons — sometimes bearing the messages ‘I Love You’ and ‘Happy Birthday’ along with small improvised explosives dangling by a string — have descended [on communities] downwind of the nearby Gaza Strip, according to Israeli police,” Steve Hendrix, Hazem Balousha and Ruth Eglash report. “Most land in open countryside, and none has yet caused injury or death, something a local police commander described as a miracle bound to give way to a tragedy.”

Tens of thousands of Mexican women protested femicide and gender-based violence.

“Women poured into the streets on Sunday to start a two-day protest and national strike against gender-based violence, in what organizers hope will be a turning point for women's rights in a country disfigured by violence and machismo,” Mary Beth Sheridan reports. “Many wore purple, the color symbolizing International Women’s Day, celebrated throughout the world on Sunday, and waved signs reading ‘Fight today so we don’t die tomorrow’ and ‘We are the voice of those who are no longer with us.’ ... Mexico’s femicide rate rose about 10 percent in 2019 to 1,010 cases; an average of 10 women are killed per day. Surveys have found a majority of women have been victims of violence at some point in their lives.”

Meanwhile, a 22-year-old Guatemalan woman became the eighth migrant to die in ICE custody this fiscal year, per BuzzFeed News.

---

More on 2020

Steve Bullock attends the Iowa State Fair last August. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Steve Bullock officially announced he'll run for Senate.

Montana's Democratic governor will challenge Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.). This reversal by the former presidential candidate boosts Democratic fortunes in their bid to unseat and reclaim the Senate majority. (Felicia Sonmez and Paul Kane)

Twitter debuted its "manipulated media" label.

A deceptively edited video of Biden was shared by White House social media director Dan Scavino and retweeted by Trump. "The video was the first test of a new policy the social media company implemented on March 5 to label tweets that contain manipulated or synthetic media, ranging from edited videos to more sophisticated examples known as 'deepfakes' that can fabricate events that never happened," Cat Zakrzewski reports. "In this case, the altered video of Biden ... is based on a speech he gave in Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday. It was then shared on Twitter by Scavino, only edited to make it appear as if Biden inadvertently endorsed Trump for reelection."

The Russian media is freaking out about Biden's resurrection.

“The pro-Kremlin newspaper Vzglyad complained that Biden ‘rose from the ashes like a phoenix,’ prevailing ‘in spite of the corruption scandals’ that have long been alleged and cultivated by the Russians—and the Republicans—concerning his son, Hunter, and his own activities in Ukraine,” the Daily Beast reports. “With notable irritation, Vzglyad griped about [Biden’s] primary victories in North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Alabama, claiming that the pro-Biden votes in rural states were secured by ‘rednecks, who shoot skunks for fun, bowl, beat their wives and associate the word ‘socialist’ with the communist threat.’ The newspaper bitterly surmised that through Biden’s anticipated nomination, the U.S. elites won yet another Cold War against socialism.”

A watchdog warned the administration that it “urgently” needs to address problems with election security.

“The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), part of the Department of Homeland Security, was to have finalized plans by January to support states and localities with their election security operations. That did not happen, according to a Government Accountability Office report,” Joe Davidson reports. “The report said the agency ‘is not well-positioned to execute a nationwide strategy for securing election infrastructure prior to the start of the 2020 election cycle’ because it has not completed plans. According to the report, cybersecurity agency officials said they are unlikely to develop plans for election security assistance to political parties or come up with strategies for raising public awareness about foreign threats.”

James Biden's health-care ventures face growing scrutiny.

In January, the FBI raided Americore Health hospital, a health-care

business linked to Joe Biden's brother, seizing boxes of documents and deepening the legal morass surrounding James Biden's recent venture into health-care investing, Politico reports: "In the weeks since the raid, two small medical firms that did business with James Biden have claimed in civil court proceedings to have obtained evidence that he may have fraudulently transferred funds from Americore 'outside of the ordinary course of business' ... The purpose of the Jan. 30 raid of an Ellwood City, Pa., hospital remains unclear, and there is no indication it was related to the actions of Biden's younger brother ... In 2017 and 2018, James Biden was embarking on a foray into healthcare investing, telling potential partners, including at Americore, that his last name could open doors and that Joe Biden was excited about the public policy implications of their business models, according to court filings and interviews with former business contacts of James's."

Donald Trump Jr. challenged Hunter Biden to a debate.

In an interview with Axios's Jim VandeHei, the president's son said he wants to debate the former vice president's son over who has benefited more financially from their fathers' government service. "We can go full transparency, we show everything, and we can talk about all of the places where I am supposedly gifting but Hunter Biden isn't," said Don Jr., also claiming that he'd be willing to release his own tax returns if Hunter Biden put his out. "If we do it both, 100 percent. Let's talk about who profited off of whose public service." A Biden campaign spokesman replied that it's "hard to believe anything a Trump says on tax returns."

---

Social media speed read

Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) endorsed Biden's candidacy:

Cory Booker ✓

@CoryBooker

The answer to hatred & division is to reignite our spirit of common purpose. @JoeBiden won't only win - he'll show there's more that unites us than divides us.

He'll restore honor to the Oval Office and tackle our most pressing challenges.

That's why I'm proud to endorse Joe.

♥ 1,091 11:05 AM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 358 people are talking about this

On International Women's Day, a Post reporter noticed inequity even among cleaning sponges:

 Sonia Rao
@missoniarao

Lol Scrub Mommy costs less than Scrub Daddy but does twice the work

♥ 1.958 8:10 PM - Mar 8, 2020

💬 296 people are talking about this

Ex-FBI lawyer Lisa Page, who has been a regular target of gendered attacks by Trump, shared a message from Monica Lewinsky:

Amid the coronavirus outbreak, Trump golfed with players for the Nationals who are in West Palm Beach for spring training:

Videos of the day

Trump's former top adviser on Russia, Fiona Hill, gave her first sit-down interview since testifying during the impeachment hearings:

There are thousands of sheriffs up for reelection this year, and John Oliver looked into what the job entails:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 10 -- E&E Daily is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 5:16:15 AM

Read today's E&E Daily on the web

E&E DAILY

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

E&E DAILY — Tue., March 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. ENERGY POLICY:

Senate bill 'dead as a doornail' for now over HFCs

Bipartisan frustration over the lack of a vote on curbing superpolluting hydrofluorocarbons spilled onto the Senate floor last night, derailing — at least for now — the energy package that was widely expected to pass before the end of the week.

TOP STORIES

2. POLITICS:

Climate science skeptics grasp for power in changing GOP

3. PUBLIC LANDS:

Senators move to expedite debate on conservation legislation

CORONAVIRUS

4. AGENDA:

Congress scrambling to prepare for spreading virus

5. ENERGY MARKETS:

Republicans lukewarm on oil industry rescue

ON THE HILL

6. INTERIOR:

Grijalva to Bernhardt: Hand over BLM docs or face subpoenas

7. COAL:

Activists rally for bills to help mining communities, workers

IN COMMITTEE

8. WATER POLLUTION:

Bills would close fracking 'loophole,' create EPA office

9. DEFENSE:

Bill calls for Pentagon analysis of climate and security

10. HOUSE:

Lawmakers move to keep drones away from wildfire operations

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

---

11. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 9 - March 15, 2020

---

Get all of the stories in today's E&E Daily, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eedaily.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E DAILY – CONGRESS. LEGISLATION. POLITICS.

---

E&E Daily is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Designed for policy players who need to know what's happening to their issues on Capitol Hill, from federal agency appropriations to comprehensive energy legislation, E&E Daily is the place insiders go to track their environmental and energy issues in Congress. E&E Daily publishes daily by 7:30 a.m. while Congress is in session.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 10 -- E&E Daily is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 5:16:38 AM

Read today's E&E Daily on the web

E&E DAILY

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

E&E DAILY — Tue., March 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. ENERGY POLICY:

Senate bill 'dead as a doornail' for now over HFCs

Bipartisan frustration over the lack of a vote on curbing superpolluting hydrofluorocarbons spilled onto the Senate floor last night, derailing — at least for now — the energy package that was widely expected to pass before the end of the week.

TOP STORIES

2. POLITICS:

Climate science skeptics grasp for power in changing GOP

3. PUBLIC LANDS:

Senators move to expedite debate on conservation legislation

CORONAVIRUS

4. AGENDA:

Congress scrambling to prepare for spreading virus

5. ENERGY MARKETS:

Republicans lukewarm on oil industry rescue

ON THE HILL

6. INTERIOR:

Grijalva to Bernhardt: Hand over BLM docs or face subpoenas

7. COAL:

Activists rally for bills to help mining communities, workers

IN COMMITTEE

8. WATER POLLUTION:

Bills would close fracking 'loophole,' create EPA office

9. DEFENSE:

Bill calls for Pentagon analysis of climate and security

10. HOUSE:

Lawmakers move to keep drones away from wildfire operations

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

---

11. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 9 - March 15, 2020

---

Get all of the stories in today's E&E Daily, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eedaily.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E DAILY – CONGRESS. LEGISLATION. POLITICS.

---

E&E Daily is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Designed for policy players who need to know what's happening to their issues on Capitol Hill, from federal agency appropriations to comprehensive energy legislation, E&E Daily is the place insiders go to track their environmental and energy issues in Congress. E&E Daily publishes daily by 7:30 a.m. while Congress is in session.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: The coronavirus crisis plays to a strength, and weakness, of both Sanders and Biden
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 8:19:45 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann

with Mariana Alfaro

Email

The coronavirus crisis plays to a strength, and weakness, of both Sanders and Biden

DETROIT – At the end of a roundtable discussion about the novel coronavirus that Sen. Bernie Sanders convened here on Monday afternoon with five public health experts, a reporter asked the Democratic presidential candidate whether he plans to scale back the size of his events to reduce the risk of community spread. “You obviously are holding rallies with more than 10,000 people,” the reporter said.

Sanders corrected him.

“15,000,” he said, boastfully.

Appearing to realize he sounded flip, Sanders praised the “very good question” but added that his campaign’s challenge is no different than ones faced by basketball teams or theater companies. “We do not go forward without consultation with local health officials,” he added.

It was vintage Sanders. Falling behind Joe Biden in the polls, including here in Michigan ahead of today’s primary, the independent senator from Vermont has seized on the outbreak to make the case for Medicare-for-all. Health care has been the top concern of voters all election cycle. This new crisis only makes the issue more salient. And Sanders’s decades-long crusade to upend the system is more popular than not among the Democratic rank-and-file. On the other hand, Sanders lacks executive experience beyond serving three decades ago as the mayor of Burlington, Vt., which has a population of about 40,000.

Biden could benefit politically if the outbreak increases the desire among voters for a calm, steady and experienced hand who has a record of managing crises. On the other hand, the former vice president often sticks to generalities and almost never comes across as deeply versed in the nuances of public policy. He’s a back-slapping pol who prefers yakking it up in call time and can sometimes seem confused. In contrast to Sanders, Biden has not outlined any plan or vision for how he’d respond to the coronavirus beyond deferring to the wisdom of experts, which has been his go-to line. He didn’t bring up the fast-spreading virus during a visit to a community health center in Grand Rapids on Monday morning or during an evening rally in Detroit. Instead, he stuck closely to his script.

Bernie Sanders listens during a coronavirus roundtable at the Westin in the Detroit airport on Monday afternoon. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Both Sanders and Biden benefit from being perceived by Democrats as straight shooters who tell it like it is, even if people don't agree with them. A Quinnipiac University survey released Monday found that 62 percent of registered voters nationally say Sanders is honest and 51 percent say Biden is honest, compared to 33 percent who say the same about President Trump. While 52 percent say Biden has good leadership skills, 45 percent say Sanders does and 42 percent say Trump does. On empathy, 64 percent say Sanders cares about average Americans, compared to 59 percent for Biden and 43 percent for Trump. Asked who would do a better job of handling a crisis, Biden led Trump 56 percent to 40 percent while Sanders also led Trump by a narrower margin of 50 percent to 44 percent.

Frank McKenney, 71, a retired systems analyst and Vietnam veteran who considers himself politically independent, said the coronavirus puts in stark relief why he's supporting Biden. "He's an honest man, from all the years I've seen him, and we've had such a rough time on that with Trump,"

McKenney said as he waited to see Biden here. “I’m real concerned this is being mismanaged at the White House. People want to be told the truth. We can handle the truth. What we can’t handle is everything being put through a political lens.”

On the coronavirus specifically, 43 percent of Americans approve of the president’s response so far, which is on par with his 41 percent overall approval rating in the same poll. Tribalism is a factor: 87 percent of Republicans approve and 83 percent of Democrats disapprove, while 50 percent of independents disapprove of Trump’s coronavirus response. Overall, 54 percent of respondents say they are either very or somewhat concerned that they or someone they know will be infected with the coronavirus, and 58 percent say they are either very or somewhat concerned the coronavirus will disrupt their daily lives, regardless of whether they know someone who is infected.

Joe Biden locks hands with Cory Booker, Gretchen Whitmer and Kamala Harris at Renaissance High School in Detroit on Monday night. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

While Sanders’s roundtable was somber and serious, Biden’s rally at a Detroit public high school a few hours later was raucous. Two volunteers squirted bottles of Purell sanitizer onto the hands of everyone entering the gymnasium to watch him speak. A marching band warmed up the crowd. Almost as soon as Biden started speaking, protesters began interrupting him. First, someone tried to draw attention to his vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement. As a Biden supporter tried to rip the sign away (“NAFTA killed our jobs”), the candidate urged everyone to keep it cool. “The Bernie Bros are here,” Biden said. “Let him go.” Then several activists heckled Biden for not endorsing the Green New Deal, and some tussles appeared to break out in the crowd as police escorted them out a back entrance. A few minutes later, Biden finally got back on track.

Biden never mentioned the coronavirus, but parts of his stump speech made it sound like it was on his mind. “At this moment, when there’s so much fear in this country, we need honest, trustworthy, truthful, reassuring leadership. I promise you that will be what I provide,” he said. “We choose hope over fear ... and we choose truth over lies.”

Asked about the coronavirus during an interview with NBC earlier in the afternoon, Biden said Trump should “just be quiet.” “I think there's no confidence in the president and anything he says or does,” Biden said. “He turns everything into what he thinks is a political benefit for himself, and he's actually imploding in the process. But there's a lot of innocent bystanders that are being badly hurt. I wish he would just be quiet. I really mean it. Just let the experts speak and acknowledge whatever they suggest to him is what we should be doing.” He added that he will “follow the recommendations” of experts: “And if they conclude that there shouldn't be big indoor rallies, then we'll stop indoor, big indoor rallies. We're going to do whatever they say.”

More than 700 people in the United States have tested positive for the virus and 26 have died. Michigan, though, has no confirmed cases. At Biden’s rally last night, a handful of attendees I interviewed at Biden’s rally last night told me, with no evidence, that they think the virus is just a hoax that’s been invented to help Trump get reelected. I assured them it was not.

Health care has been the top issue for Democratic voters in every state that’s had exit polls this primary season. On Super Tuesday, across the states that voted, 47 percent of voters identified it as their No. 1 concern, followed by race relations and income inequality, which tied for second at 18 percent. Across those states, per the exits, 51 percent of voters said they supported replacing all private health insurance with a single government plan for everyone, while 43 percent opposed that.

Bernie Sanders speaks about the coronavirus at the Westin in the Detroit airport. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Sanders cited the outbreak to offer a broader critique not just of the health-care system but of the failure to provide for the neediest in “the richest country on Earth.” He noted that water has been cut off to thousands of homes in Detroit because people couldn’t pay their bills. While praising the city for stopping these water shutoffs earlier in the day in preparation for a possible coronavirus outbreak, Sanders said they’re nonetheless emblematic of something rotten in the American system. “Can you believe in the year 2020, in a major American city, people have no water because they cannot afford to pay their water bills? Now we’re told wash our hands,” he said. “It’s a little hard to wash your hands and keep clean if you don’t have water!”

The self-described democratic socialist has made clear that he embraces the old political adage that you should never let a crisis go to waste. Reading from notes but not a script, he balanced attacks on Trump’s handling of the outbreak with calls for paid sick leave. In a meeting room in the bowels of a Westin hotel inside the Detroit airport, which was eerily quiet because so many people have stopped traveling, the audience for Sanders's roundtable included about 50 journalists, including local TV news crews. There was no one to applaud, only the clicks of shutters, during an event that lasted almost an hour.

Sanders can be short with you when he doesn't like a question.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has urged people over the age of 60 who have underlying health conditions to take special precautions to avoid covid-19, including staying home as much as possible, avoiding non-essential air travel and limiting close contact with other people. The 78-year-old Sanders had a heart attack in October while campaigning in Nevada and has declined to release his full medical records, despite promising to do so.

Asked what specific precautions he's taking in light of the CDC advisory, Sanders brushed off the question: "Well, I'm surrounded by medical personnel," he said, pointing to the five doctors who spoke during the roundtable organized by his campaign. "I'm running for president of the United States, and that requires a whole lot of work." He left it at that and moved onto the next question.

Asked if he's spoken with Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) since Thursday about seeking her endorsement, Sanders declined to answer: "We're here to discuss a major health-care crisis."

When a third journalist asked Sanders how he would pay for his plan to make any coronavirus-related vaccine available free of charge, he bristled. "Do I approve of spending a few cents for a vaccine rather than see people die? Yeah," he said. "This is a no-brainer. That you would ask a question like that almost talks about the nature of the problems facing this country. Does anybody in their right mind believe that, if you're rich, you should be able to afford a vaccine that will save your life? But, if you're poor, you're going to die? Is that really where we're at in the United States of America?"

“I, of course, would take that proposition a lot further,” Sanders continued. “There are people rationing insulin right now. ... I will tell the pharmaceutical industry that if you don’t lower your prices, we will make generic drugs that are affordable for all people.”

Sanders also praised New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) for ordering the state to produce generic hand sanitizer to respond to “price gouging.” “That’s exactly the right thing,” he said.

A woman wears surgical gloves at Biden's rally as she takes a picture of Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

Contingency planning is underway among all the leading campaigns if the outbreak gets worse. Biden’s digital staff has envisioned options for virtual campaigning if sweeping changes were necessary, and Sanders’s campaign already has an elaborate streaming operation, which it said it could tap in the event that rallies are curtailed. “Trump’s reelection campaign said it was ‘proceeding as normal,’ denying that a ‘Women for Trump’ bus tour had been postponed because of the coronavirus, pointing instead to a ‘scheduling conflict,’” Isaac Stanley-

Becker and Elise Viebeck report. “The Spanish flu of 1918 was active during that year’s midterm campaign and election season. Local news reports from the weeks before and after that election suggested that the virus did impact planning, with some officials ordering voters to wear masks or advising against congregating publicly to hear election results.”

With Teleprompters set up during his Detroit rally, and wearing a full suit, Biden tried to exude an aura of inevitability ahead of Super Tuesday II, when six states vote. He touted his role in the bailout of the auto industry a decade ago and investments the Obama administration made to clean up the Great Lakes. Much of his pitch, though, was about the need for decency and dignity. Biden even made a case against being angry. “We cannot become like him,” he said. “I refuse to accept the notion that we’re in a perpetual state of war with the other party.” And he cited a story in The Washington Post last month about how kids emulate Trump’s language to bully classmates. “Our children are listening,” he said. “What do we expect to happen?”

Now that he’s the front-runner again, Biden has started giving shorter speeches. This reduces the odds he will say something politically problematic. Cleve Wootson, our reporter assigned to follow Biden, noticed this weekend that he spoke for just seven minutes in St. Louis, 12 minutes in Kansas City and 14 minutes and change in Jackson, Miss. It is a seismic shift for someone who has never had a reputation for breviloquence, Cleve writes: “Mostly gone are the not-so-brief diversions into Biden family lore, wonky dispositions on complex policy points and anecdotes about the history of the phrase ‘rule of thumb.’”

At a fundraiser at the Detroit Athletic Club before the rally, Biden didn’t refer to Sanders by name but took a dig at Medicare-for-all. He told the 350 donors that he will “be able to get health care for everyone,” adding: “We can do it without spending $35 trillion.”

At the bigger rally later in the evening, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, who backed Biden last week and delivered the Democratic response to the State of the Union last month, introduced Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.), who endorsed Biden earlier in the day. He then brought Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) onstage. Booker and Harris, who both dropped out before the Iowa caucuses, are the only two Democratic senators who are African American, and they were both well received in the heart of a city that is 82 percent black. “We are sparing nothing to make sure that Joe Biden wins in the state of Michigan,” said Booker.

“I believe there has been a conscious attempt to try to disillusion us, trying to have us believe that the system cannot and will not work for us,” added Harris. “Donald Trump, he does not see people. The only people who he sees [is the person] he sees when he looks in the mirror. We need a president who sees us, who understands us.”

All three warm-up speakers have been mentioned as potential picks as Biden’s running mate. “I view myself as a bridge, not as anything else,” said Biden, 77, motioning toward the trio. “There’s an entire generation of leaders you saw stand behind me. They are the future of this country.”

Biden shook a few hands on his way out of the gym but did not linger on the rope line. The campaign said it mitigates risk when reasonable. “At the same time,” Biden’s press team said in a statement, “we will continue to run an aggressive, national campaign to win the Democratic nomination and defeat Donald Trump.”

Share The Daily 202

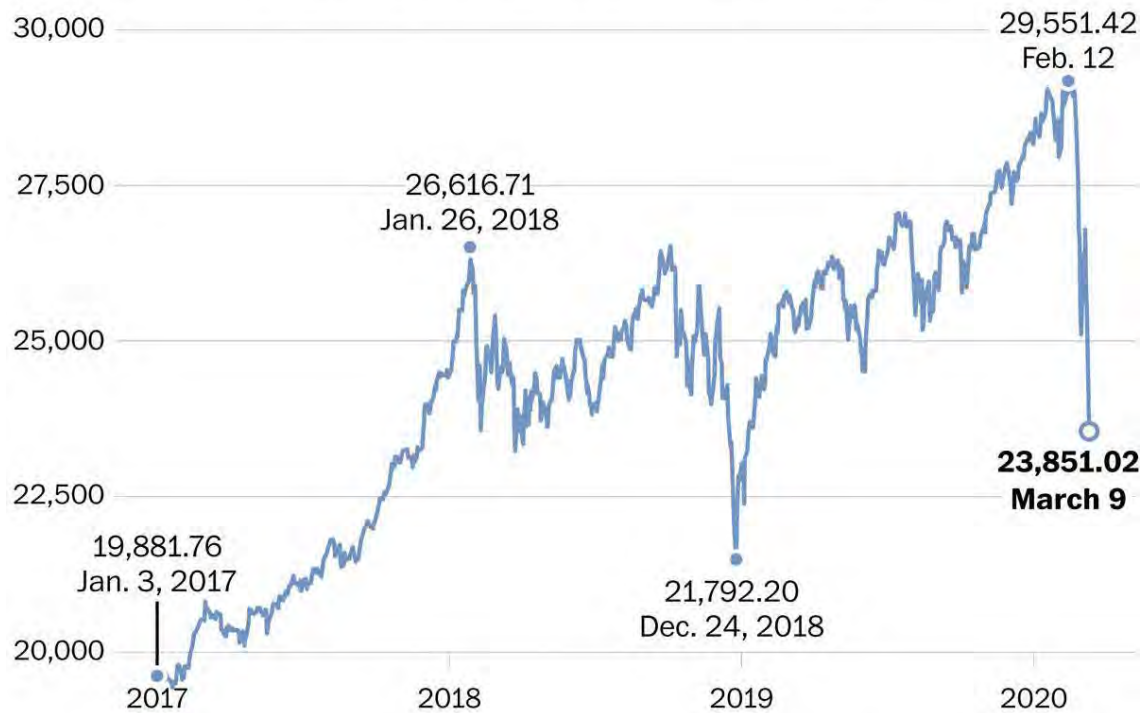

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

Virus panic evaporates Dow Jones gains from 2019

Source: Bloomberg

THE WASHINGTON POST

U.S. markets staged a comeback at the open.

After their worst day of trading since the 2008 financial crisis, the Dow Jones Industrial Average surged roughly 800 points this morning as investors cheered potential stimulus measures from the White House.

“The move came a day after U.S. markets cratered more than 7 percent on the dual threat of the coronavirus’s spread in the United States and the oil price war that erupted between Russia and Saudi Arabia over production targets,” Taylor Telford and Thomas Heath report.

Trump’s proposals were brushed aside by Democrats, who are working on their own plan.

“Trump said he will ask Congress to cut payroll taxes and provide relief to hourly workers suffering from the economic fallout of the coronavirus. He also said he was seeking to provide assistance to the airline, hotel and cruise industries, which are all suffering as Americans rapidly cancel travel plans,” Jeff Stein, Seung Min Kim, Erica Werner and Mike DeBonis report. “It was unclear, based on Trump’s comments, whether he would ask Congress to help these industries or if he thought he could do it on his own. ... Reducing the payroll tax by a single percentage point would cut between $55 billion and $75 billion in revenue ... House Majority Leader Steny H. Hoyer (D-Md.) expressed skepticism about the idea. ... Later in the day, [Pelosi] and Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) went into more detail about the Democrats’ planned proposal. They said they would pursue legislation that provided free coronavirus testing for all Americans, paid leave for those affected by the epidemic, expanded food subsidies and an expansion of the federal unemployment insurance program. Still, other senior Democrats said it was inevitable that Washington will have to step in with measures to stimulate the economy.”

The president's proposals are aimed at calming the markets.

“Trump confronted one of the most perilous days of his presidency Monday by first erupting in a barrage of commentary that failed to calm

the cratering financial markets, struggling to inspire confidence that his administration could stop the spread of the novel coronavirus. But by the time the sun set in Washington, Trump sounded momentarily chastened by the turbulence and previewed a raft of emergency measures to shore up the economy," Philip Rucker, Robert Costa, Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey report. "Inside the White House, some officials privately acknowledged Monday that Trump has exacerbated the problem with his misleading and false statements, as well as his callous comments — such as saying last Friday that he hoped infected cruise passengers would stay aboard the Grand Princess at sea because he didn't want domestic coronavirus case numbers to rise. ... Members of Trump's coronavirus task force have also discussed declaring a national emergency ...

"People who interacted with Trump over the weekend at his Mar-a-Lago Club in Palm Beach, Fla., or the nearby Trump International Golf Club, said the president was in gleeful spirits. ... Doug Deason, a Trump donor in attendance, said the president shook almost every hand in sight. ... Even as Trump continued to glad-hand constituents, two Republican congressmen who interacted with him in recent days, Reps. Douglas A. Collins (Ga.) and Matt Gaetz (Fla.), said Monday that they were quarantining themselves because of contact with a confirmed carrier of the coronavirus at a conservative conference. Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), named Friday as Trump's new chief of staff, also announced Monday that he was isolating himself after coming in contact with same unidentified person."

"A seventh lawmaker, Rep. Louie Gohmert (R-Tex.), said he possibly had been exposed to the carrier at CPAC, but after discussing his situation with a CDC physician, he decided to return to work," Mike DeBonis reports. In a letter to Democrats, Nancy Pelosi said her caucus will hear today from several health officials for an update on protocols, but she said that, "at the present time, there is no reason for us not to continue" with work. There have been private discussions about whether the coming recess could be extended indefinitely, House aides said. Congress must act by March 15 to extend some critical foreign surveillance authorities but has no other pressing deadlines until May 22.

Italy is now under a nationwide lockdown.

“Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte said Monday that Italy would restrict freedom of movement on a scale unprecedented in a democracy, locking down the entire country — 60 million people — in an attempt to contain the accelerating coronavirus,” Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. “If Italy succeeds, a version of its tactics could be used in other countries where cases are multiplying, including across Europe, where cross-border movement is a cherished right for many citizens.” Here are other international developments:

- Chinese leader Xi Jinping made a surprise visit to Wuhan, the city where the outbreak emerged, as he asserts China’s domestic triumph in its “war” against the epidemic. (Anna Fifield)
- Japan will punish the reselling of face masks for profit, with up to one year in jail. (Simon Denyer)
- South Korea touted the benefits of mass testing, as new virus cases slowed down. (Adam Taylor)
- The United Arab Emirates announced 15 new cases of the coronavirus on Monday, raising the national total to 74, as it closed its ports to cruise ships. (Paul Schemm)
- Pence urged Israel not to target the U.S. with a coronavirus quarantine. (Axios)

---

Quote of the day

Pope Francis, giving Catholic mass in the Vatican on Tuesday as Italy began its lockdown, said he hopes priests have the courage to “get out” and meet the sick. “May priests have the courage to get out, going to the sick to bring them

the comfort of God [and] to bring them the Eucharist,” the pope said, according to the Catholic news site Crux.

The number of people stricken with the virus in the D.C. area rose overnight.

Three new cases were reported in the District, one in Prince George’s County and two in Virginia. The number of known cases in the DMV is now 16. (Fenit Nirappil and Rebecca Tan)

- Los Angeles County announced its first case of community spread, with the total number of coronavirus cases rising to 19. (Los Angeles Times)
- Live audiences were banished from “Wheel of Fortune” and “Jeopardy!” tapings, as a precaution for both audience members and show employees. “Jeopardy!” is hosted by Alex Trebek, who is currently undergoing chemotherapy. (Katie Shepherd)

The Securities and Exchange Commission asked employees at its D.C. headquarters to stay away from the office because of a potential coronavirus case, becoming the first major federal employer to turn to telework to avoid the spreading virus. “The agency’s notice, which was emailed shortly after 8 p.m., required employees working on the ninth floor of its office to stay home and encouraged all others to do the same,” Rena Merle reports. “The email to SEC employees said an employee was treated for respiratory symptoms earlier Monday and was informed by a physician that the person could have the coronavirus. The worker had not been in the office since Thursday.”

School closures are raising concerns about disruption.

“More than 380 schools, including three in the District, have closed their doors because of the outbreak, moves that have affected nearly 260,000 students, according to a count by the education publication EdWeek. Many of those closures were for just a day or two so workers could deep-clean schools where officials worried about exposure to the virus,” Moriah Balingit and Laura Meckler report. “Many others, heeding the advice of the Education Department and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, were preparing for potential for long-term closures. Some systems closed schools to train teachers and prepare lessons in case students have to learn remotely.... U.S. school officials in many places are grappling with how to proceed, weighing the potential benefits of closures in slowing the spread of the disease against the severe disruption it could cause, particularly for students who rely on schools for meals, or who have parents who would struggle to find child care. There are also questions of how effective school closures are in slowing down the spread of disease, especially if people congregate elsewhere and pass the illness on to one another outside of the schools.”

Universities are also scrambling. “In recent days, many universities have upended academic traditions in an effort to protect health on campus in the face of an uncertain threat. Classes at Princeton University will be held online and students are being encouraged to consider staying home after spring break, the school’s president announced Monday,” Susan Svrluga and Nick Anderson report. “Some colleges closed temporarily to disinfect buildings and some moved rapidly to virtual instruction.”

Millions of Americans lack sick pay. Many of their employers campaign against it.

“Major U.S. companies and business groups have put out hand sanitizer and discussed precautions they are taking to keep sick workers away from customers,” Abha Bhattarai and Peter Whoriskey report. “Although most Americans say businesses should offer sick pay, at least a dozen states, including Florida and much of the Southeast, have passed legislation since 2011 to block efforts to require medical leave.”

Texans are “mad and scared” as the state braces for more

cruise evacuees.

“On Monday, as the Grand Princess cruise ship prepared to offload more sick and exposed passengers in Oakland, Calif., San Antonio Mayor Ron Nirenberg was bracing for a third set of evacuees — and losing patience with a chaotic federal evacuation and quarantine process that he fears is endangering residents. ‘It’s disconcerting,’ said Nirenberg (D).

‘Throughout the course of this, what I’ve seen is that the lack of coordination at the highest levels of this president’s administration is simply stunning,’” Arelis Hernández and Neena Satija. “Texas is one of three states that so far have accepted hundreds of evacuees ... In nearly every location, local officials say they have been blindsided by the sudden requests, alarmed by the lack of information and exasperated by haphazard protocols.”

---

More on 2020

Biden is chipping away at Sanders's 2016 edge with white working-class voters.

“The duel will play out largely in Michigan and Missouri,” Annie Gowen

reports. “Exit polls from last week's Super Tuesday contests, in which Biden surged to take a national delegate lead, showed that he beat Sanders among non-college-educated whites by four points. ... In Missouri this weekend, Biden touted his working-class roots. ... [He] held a campaign rally Saturday at the National World War I Memorial and Museum in Kansas City, with workers from firefighters and electrical unions carefully arrayed behind him in the setting sun. ... Biden’s wife, Jill, appeared at events in St. Louis, Columbia and Kansas City on Monday ... Union workers will be knocking on doors throughout the Midwest for Biden, and surrogates such as Sen. Thomas R. Carper (D-Del.) joined picketing Teamsters in Michigan over the weekend.”

A second survey on Monday showed Biden opening a wide lead over Sanders in Michigan. The Monmouth University Poll released Monday afternoon showed Biden leading Sanders 51 percent to 36 percent among likely primary voters, though it should be noted that the polls were way off when Sanders won an upset here against Hillary Clinton in 2016.

Getting by can be a juggling act in Michigan, where 12 counties flipped from Obama to Trump in 2016.

Employment at the General Motors engine plant in Bay City, Mich., is now a fraction of what it once was. During last fall’s United Auto Workers strike, it wasn’t “far from anyone’s mind was the fact that Bay County flipped to Republican in 2016, against the wishes of the U.A.W.,” the Times's Rebecca Blumenstein reports from her hometown. “Workers were infuriated that [Trump] did not offer support for the strikers.”

More coverage from the six states voting today

- Turnout could hit a record in Washington state's primary, where more than 1 million mail-in ballots were received by Monday. (Seattle Times)
- Biden took a Southern victory lap in Mississippi on Sunday, where

he's received the endorsement of some of the state's most prominent black politicians and is expected to win big today. (Mississippi Today)

- Idaho was last year's fastest-growing state, and today's election might provide clues as to whether those new residents are turning the state a little bluer. (AP)
- Participation in North Dakota's presidential caucuses is expected to rise dramatically from four years ago, and state Democrats saying they don't expect coronavirus fears to dampen turnout. A procedural change in the state's caucuses make them function more like a traditional election, with citizens given the ability to drop in at a caucus site, cast their ballot and leave. (Bismarck Tribune)
- Sanders jabbed Biden for voting for the Iraq War during a Monday rally in St. Louis. (St. Louis Post-Dispatch)
- Sterling Heights, Mich., Mayor Michael Taylor, a life-long Republican who voted for Trump in 2016, endorsed Biden, saying he's the candidate who can "appeal to moderates and Republicans like me who don't want to see four more years of President Trump."
(Newsweek)

The Trump campaign has sent paychecks to Eric's and Don Jr.'s significant others.

Parscale Strategy, the firm run by the president's campaign manager Brad Parscale, has been used to make payments out of public view to Lara Trump, the wife of the president's son Eric, and Kimberly Guilfoyle, the girlfriend of Donald Trump Jr., who have been surrogates and taken on advisory roles. (NYT)

Tech experts don't think social media companies are doing enough to safeguard their platforms.

The Technology 202's Cat Zakrzewski asked more than 100 experts if social media companies have done enough to prevent manipulation of voters on their platforms. The resounding answer: No. The Technology 202 Network, from Cat and researcher Tonya Riley, launches today. It's an invitation-only panel of experts from across government, industry and the consumer advocacy community who will vote in regular surveys on the most pressing issues in the field. (Check it out here.)

---

The new world order

The sun sets behind a C-17 cargo plane in Iraq, as U.S. service members wait to board. (Tech. Sgt. Erik Gudmundson/Air Force)

Two Americans were killed in Iraq.

“Two members of a Marine Special Operations team were killed in Iraq during an operation targeting a mountain cave complex that Islamic State militants were using as a hideout, marking the first U.S. combat deaths in the country since last summer,” Dan Lamothe and Louisa Loveluck report.

“The operation Sunday required the coalition to dispatch reinforcement forces to recover the remains of the Americans who were killed from the caves ... It took nearly six hours to do so ... The service members’ identities were being withheld as family members were notified.”

The Trump Organization reported a drop in profits from foreign governments.

“Trump’s company said it donated $105,465 to the U.S. Treasury last month, an amount that it said reflects its profits from foreign-government bookings at its hotels last year. The number is down sharply from its 2019 donation of about $191,000, showing a drop in spending by foreign governments at Trump hotels,” Jonathan O’Connell and David Fahrenthold report.

A jury failed to reach a verdict in the case that the CIA called the “biggest leak” in agency history.

“A jury in New York failed to reach a verdict Monday on whether a former CIA employee gave government hacking tools to WikiLeaks,” Shayna Jacobs and Shane Harris report. “Jurors, who had begun their deliberations last week, told Judge Paul Crotty that they were ‘extremely deadlocked’ on many of the charges. Joshua Schulte, 31, had been accused of disclosing the hacking tools and disclosing information to a reporter at The Post while in jail awaiting trial. The jury did find Schulte guilty on two counts of making false statements to investigators and contempt of court. But the failure to reach a unanimous agreement on the most serious charges of disclosing classified information was a significant blow to the government’s case.”

Ethiopian investigators blamed design flaws for the Boeing 737 Max crash a year ago.

“The interim findings came as families of the victims from around the world gathered in Ethiopia for events commemorating the crash anniversary,” Lori Aratani, Ian Duncan and Michael Laris report.

“According to the report, the ‘differences’ training provided to the airline’s pilots — meant to instruct them on how the Max would behave differently than an earlier version of the 737 — was found to be ‘inadequate.’”

Netanyahu's self-declared victory is looking less certain in Israel.

“In an effort to break the country’s year-long political deadlock, [Benny] Gantz reached out publicly to some unlikely coalition partners, betting that their shared goal of ousting [Benjamin] Netanyahu could bring them together,” Ruth Eglash reports. “Success would require Gantz winning — and accepting — support from the Joint List, a slate of four Arab-majority parties representing Israel’s roughly 1.8 million Arab citizens. If he does manage to secure their backing, his allies in Israel’s 120-seat parliament, or Knesset, would outnumber those of Netanyahu’s bloc of right-wing and religious parties, affording Gantz the chance to scrape together a narrow coalition government. While it would not include the Arab party members directly, this coalition would rely on them to pass essential legislation.”

---

Social media speed read

Rep. Paul Gosar (R-Ariz), who went into self-quarantine after being exposed to the virus, mused about death. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) replied:

The virus isn't stopping Trump, a known germaphobe, from shaking hands with supporters:

David Nakamura ✓

@DavidNakamura

I was literally talking on the phone about coronavirus with a former Secret Service agent who said: "Forget about rope lines. Those are the ultimate threat given hand-to-hand contact is the way this spreads" ... when this @robcrilly pool photo of Trump in Florida hit my inbox.

♥ 1,666 3:22 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 745 people are talking about this

Nancy Pelosi didn't hold back after being asked about Trump not being tested for the virus:

Manu Raju ✓

@mkraju

Asked Pelosi if she thinks Trump should be tested after his interactions with Doug Collins and Matt Gaetz.
Pelosi: "Tested for what?"
me: coronavirus
Pelosi: "Oh, I thought he should be tested for a long time now."
And she walked off

♥ 57,6K 11:11 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 12K people are talking about this

Ted Cruz is handling his quarantine – and an old conspiracy theory about his past -- with humor:

---

Videos of the day

Montana Gov. Steve Bullock's daughter celebrated her dad's decision to run for Senate with a TikTok:

Caroline Bullock

@c_g_bullock

Celebrating as Stevie B shimmies his way into the Senate!! 🤘❤️ #stevieb2020 @GovernorBullock @stevebullockmt

♥️ 2,381 6:39 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 424 people are talking about this

Stephen Colbert said he's "not testing positive, just staying positive":

Seth Meyers doesn't think the New York governor's coronavirus advice to subway commuters was helpful:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: The coronavirus crisis plays to a strength, and weakness, of both Sanders and Biden
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 8:20:04 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann

with Mariana Alfaro

Email

The coronavirus crisis plays to a strength, and weakness, of both Sanders and Biden

DETROIT – At the end of a roundtable discussion about the novel coronavirus that Sen. Bernie Sanders convened here on Monday afternoon with five public health experts, a reporter asked the Democratic presidential candidate whether he plans to scale back the size of his events to reduce the risk of community spread. “You obviously are holding rallies with more than 10,000 people,” the reporter said.

Sanders corrected him.

“15,000,” he said, boastfully.

Appearing to realize he sounded flip, Sanders praised the “very good question” but added that his campaign’s challenge is no different than ones faced by basketball teams or theater companies. “We do not go forward without consultation with local health officials,” he added.

It was vintage Sanders. Falling behind Joe Biden in the polls, including here in Michigan ahead of today’s primary, the independent senator from Vermont has seized on the outbreak to make the case for Medicare-for-all. Health care has been the top concern of voters all election cycle. This new crisis only makes the issue more salient. And Sanders’s decades-long crusade to upend the system is more popular than not among the Democratic rank-and-file. On the other hand, Sanders lacks executive experience beyond serving three decades ago as the mayor of Burlington, Vt., which has a population of about 40,000.

Biden could benefit politically if the outbreak increases the desire among voters for a calm, steady and experienced hand who has a record of managing crises. On the other hand, the former vice president often sticks to generalities and almost never comes across as deeply versed in the nuances of public policy. He’s a back-slapping pol who prefers yakking it up in call time and can sometimes seem confused. In contrast to Sanders, Biden has not outlined any plan or vision for how he’d respond to the coronavirus beyond deferring to the wisdom of experts, which has been his go-to line. He didn’t bring up the fast-spreading virus during a visit to a community health center in Grand Rapids on Monday morning or during an evening rally in Detroit. Instead, he stuck closely to his script.

Bernie Sanders listens during a coronavirus roundtable at the Westin in the Detroit airport on Monday afternoon. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Both Sanders and Biden benefit from being perceived by Democrats as straight shooters who tell it like it is, even if people don't agree with them. A Quinnipiac University survey released Monday found that 62 percent of registered voters nationally say Sanders is honest and 51 percent say Biden is honest, compared to 33 percent who say the same about President Trump. While 52 percent say Biden has good leadership skills, 45 percent say Sanders does and 42 percent say Trump does. On empathy, 64 percent say Sanders cares about average Americans, compared to 59 percent for Biden and 43 percent for Trump. Asked who would do a better job of handling a crisis, Biden led Trump 56 percent to 40 percent while Sanders also led Trump by a narrower margin of 50 percent to 44 percent.

Frank McKenney, 71, a retired systems analyst and Vietnam veteran who considers himself politically independent, said the coronavirus puts in stark relief why he's supporting Biden. "He's an honest man, from all the years I've seen him, and we've had such a rough time on that with Trump,"

McKenney said as he waited to see Biden here. “I’m real concerned this is being mismanaged at the White House. People want to be told the truth. We can handle the truth. What we can’t handle is everything being put through a political lens.”

On the coronavirus specifically, 43 percent of Americans approve of the president’s response so far, which is on par with his 41 percent overall approval rating in the same poll. Tribalism is a factor: 87 percent of Republicans approve and 83 percent of Democrats disapprove, while 50 percent of independents disapprove of Trump’s coronavirus response. Overall, 54 percent of respondents say they are either very or somewhat concerned that they or someone they know will be infected with the coronavirus, and 58 percent say they are either very or somewhat concerned the coronavirus will disrupt their daily lives, regardless of whether they know someone who is infected.

Joe Biden locks hands with Cory Booker, Gretchen Whitmer and Kamala Harris at Renaissance High School in Detroit on Monday night. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

While Sanders’s roundtable was somber and serious, Biden’s rally at a Detroit public high school a few hours later was raucous. Two volunteers squirted bottles of Purell sanitizer onto the hands of everyone entering the gymnasium to watch him speak. A marching band warmed up the crowd. Almost as soon as Biden started speaking, protesters began interrupting him. First, someone tried to draw attention to his vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement. As a Biden supporter tried to rip the sign away (“NAFTA killed our jobs”), the candidate urged everyone to keep it cool. “The Bernie Bros are here,” Biden said. “Let him go.” Then several activists heckled Biden for not endorsing the Green New Deal, and some tussles appeared to break out in the crowd as police escorted them out a back entrance. A few minutes later, Biden finally got back on track.

Biden never mentioned the coronavirus, but parts of his stump speech made it sound like it was on his mind. “At this moment, when there’s so much fear in this country, we need honest, trustworthy, truthful, reassuring leadership. I promise you that will be what I provide,” he said. “We choose hope over fear ... and we choose truth over lies.”

Asked about the coronavirus during an interview with NBC earlier in the afternoon, Biden said Trump should “just be quiet.” “I think there's no confidence in the president and anything he says or does,” Biden said. “He turns everything into what he thinks is a political benefit for himself, and he's actually imploding in the process. But there's a lot of innocent bystanders that are being badly hurt. I wish he would just be quiet. I really mean it. Just let the experts speak and acknowledge whatever they suggest to him is what we should be doing.” He added that he will “follow the recommendations” of experts: “And if they conclude that there shouldn't be big indoor rallies, then we'll stop indoor, big indoor rallies. We're going to do whatever they say.”

More than 700 people in the United States have tested positive for the virus and 26 have died. Michigan, though, has no confirmed cases. At Biden’s rally last night, a handful of attendees I interviewed at Biden’s rally last night told me, with no evidence, that they think the virus is just a hoax that’s been invented to help Trump get reelected. I assured them it was not.

Health care has been the top issue for Democratic voters in every state that’s had exit polls this primary season. On Super Tuesday, across the states that voted, 47 percent of voters identified it as their No. 1 concern, followed by race relations and income inequality, which tied for second at 18 percent. Across those states, per the exits, 51 percent of voters said they supported replacing all private health insurance with a single government plan for everyone, while 43 percent opposed that.

Bernie Sanders speaks about the coronavirus at the Westin in the Detroit airport. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Sanders cited the outbreak to offer a broader critique not just of the health-care system but of the failure to provide for the neediest in “the richest country on Earth.” He noted that water has been cut off to thousands of homes in Detroit because people couldn’t pay their bills. While praising the city for stopping these water shutoffs earlier in the day in preparation for a possible coronavirus outbreak, Sanders said they’re nonetheless emblematic of something rotten in the American system. “Can you believe in the year 2020, in a major American city, people have no water because they cannot afford to pay their water bills? Now we’re told wash our hands,” he said. “It’s a little hard to wash your hands and keep clean if you don’t have water!”

The self-described democratic socialist has made clear that he embraces the old political adage that you should never let a crisis go to waste. Reading from notes but not a script, he balanced attacks on Trump’s handling of the outbreak with calls for paid sick leave. In a meeting room in the bowels of a Westin hotel inside the Detroit airport, which was eerily quiet because so many people have stopped traveling, the audience for Sanders's roundtable included about 50 journalists, including local TV news crews. There was no one to applaud, only the clicks of shutters, during an event that lasted almost an hour.

Sanders can be short with you when he doesn't like a question.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has urged people over the age of 60 who have underlying health conditions to take special precautions to avoid covid-19, including staying home as much as possible, avoiding non-essential air travel and limiting close contact with other people. The 78-year-old Sanders had a heart attack in October while campaigning in Nevada and has declined to release his full medical records, despite promising to do so.

Asked what specific precautions he's taking in light of the CDC advisory, Sanders brushed off the question: "Well, I'm surrounded by medical personnel," he said, pointing to the five doctors who spoke during the roundtable organized by his campaign. "I'm running for president of the United States, and that requires a whole lot of work." He left it at that and moved onto the next question.

Asked if he's spoken with Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) since Thursday about seeking her endorsement, Sanders declined to answer: "We're here to discuss a major health-care crisis."

When a third journalist asked Sanders how he would pay for his plan to make any coronavirus-related vaccine available free of charge, he bristled. "Do I approve of spending a few cents for a vaccine rather than see people die? Yeah," he said. "This is a no-brainer. That you would ask a question like that almost talks about the nature of the problems facing this country. Does anybody in their right mind believe that, if you're rich, you should be able to afford a vaccine that will save your life? But, if you're poor, you're going to die? Is that really where we're at in the United States of America?"

“I, of course, would take that proposition a lot further,” Sanders continued. “There are people rationing insulin right now. ... I will tell the pharmaceutical industry that if you don’t lower your prices, we will make generic drugs that are affordable for all people.”

Sanders also praised New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) for ordering the state to produce generic hand sanitizer to respond to “price gouging.” “That’s exactly the right thing,” he said.

A woman wears surgical gloves at Biden's rally as she takes a picture of Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

Contingency planning is underway among all the leading campaigns if the outbreak gets worse. Biden’s digital staff has envisioned options for virtual campaigning if sweeping changes were necessary, and Sanders’s campaign already has an elaborate streaming operation, which it said it could tap in the event that rallies are curtailed. “Trump’s reelection campaign said it was ‘proceeding as normal,’ denying that a ‘Women for Trump’ bus tour had been postponed because of the coronavirus, pointing instead to a ‘scheduling conflict,’” Isaac Stanley-

Becker and Elise Viebeck report. “The Spanish flu of 1918 was active during that year’s midterm campaign and election season. Local news reports from the weeks before and after that election suggested that the virus did impact planning, with some officials ordering voters to wear masks or advising against congregating publicly to hear election results.”

With Teleprompters set up during his Detroit rally, and wearing a full suit, Biden tried to exude an aura of inevitability ahead of Super Tuesday II, when six states vote. He touted his role in the bailout of the auto industry a decade ago and investments the Obama administration made to clean up the Great Lakes. Much of his pitch, though, was about the need for decency and dignity. Biden even made a case against being angry. “We cannot become like him,” he said. “I refuse to accept the notion that we’re in a perpetual state of war with the other party.” And he cited a story in The Washington Post last month about how kids emulate Trump’s language to bully classmates. “Our children are listening,” he said. “What do we expect to happen?”

Now that he’s the front-runner again, Biden has started giving shorter speeches. This reduces the odds he will say something politically problematic. Cleve Wootson, our reporter assigned to follow Biden, noticed this weekend that he spoke for just seven minutes in St. Louis, 12 minutes in Kansas City and 14 minutes and change in Jackson, Miss. It is a seismic shift for someone who has never had a reputation for breviloquence, Cleve writes: “Mostly gone are the not-so-brief diversions into Biden family lore, wonky dispositions on complex policy points and anecdotes about the history of the phrase ‘rule of thumb.’”

At a fundraiser at the Detroit Athletic Club before the rally, Biden didn’t refer to Sanders by name but took a dig at Medicare-for-all. He told the 350 donors that he will “be able to get health care for everyone,” adding: “We can do it without spending $35 trillion.”

At the bigger rally later in the evening, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, who backed Biden last week and delivered the Democratic response to the State of the Union last month, introduced Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.), who endorsed Biden earlier in the day. He then brought Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) onstage. Booker and Harris, who both dropped out before the Iowa caucuses, are the only two Democratic senators who are African American, and they were both well received in the heart of a city that is 82 percent black. “We are sparing nothing to make sure that Joe Biden wins in the state of Michigan,” said Booker.

“I believe there has been a conscious attempt to try to disillusion us, trying to have us believe that the system cannot and will not work for us,” added Harris. “Donald Trump, he does not see people. The only people who he sees [is the person] he sees when he looks in the mirror. We need a president who sees us, who understands us.”

All three warm-up speakers have been mentioned as potential picks as Biden’s running mate. “I view myself as a bridge, not as anything else,” said Biden, 77, motioning toward the trio. “There’s an entire generation of leaders you saw stand behind me. They are the future of this country.”

Biden shook a few hands on his way out of the gym but did not linger on the rope line. The campaign said it mitigates risk when reasonable. “At the same time,” Biden’s press team said in a statement, “we will continue to run an aggressive, national campaign to win the Democratic nomination and defeat Donald Trump.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

Virus panic evaporates Dow Jones gains from 2019

Source: Bloomberg

THE WASHINGTON POST

U.S. markets staged a comeback at the open.

After their worst day of trading since the 2008 financial crisis, the Dow Jones Industrial Average surged roughly 800 points this morning as investors cheered potential stimulus measures from the White House.

“The move came a day after U.S. markets cratered more than 7 percent on the dual threat of the coronavirus’s spread in the United States and the oil price war that erupted between Russia and Saudi Arabia over production targets,” Taylor Telford and Thomas Heath report.

Trump’s proposals were brushed aside by Democrats, who are working on their own plan.

“Trump said he will ask Congress to cut payroll taxes and provide relief to hourly workers suffering from the economic fallout of the coronavirus. He also said he was seeking to provide assistance to the airline, hotel and cruise industries, which are all suffering as Americans rapidly cancel travel plans,” Jeff Stein, Seung Min Kim, Erica Werner and Mike DeBonis report. “It was unclear, based on Trump’s comments, whether he would ask Congress to help these industries or if he thought he could do it on his own. ... Reducing the payroll tax by a single percentage point would cut between $55 billion and $75 billion in revenue ... House Majority Leader Steny H. Hoyer (D-Md.) expressed skepticism about the idea. ... Later in the day, [Pelosi] and Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) went into more detail about the Democrats’ planned proposal. They said they would pursue legislation that provided free coronavirus testing for all Americans, paid leave for those affected by the epidemic, expanded food subsidies and an expansion of the federal unemployment insurance program. Still, other senior Democrats said it was inevitable that Washington will have to step in with measures to stimulate the economy.”

The president's proposals are aimed at calming the markets.

“Trump confronted one of the most perilous days of his presidency Monday by first erupting in a barrage of commentary that failed to calm

the cratering financial markets, struggling to inspire confidence that his administration could stop the spread of the novel coronavirus. But by the time the sun set in Washington, Trump sounded momentarily chastened by the turbulence and previewed a raft of emergency measures to shore up the economy,” Philip Rucker, Robert Costa, Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey report. “Inside the White House, some officials privately acknowledged Monday that Trump has exacerbated the problem with his misleading and false statements, as well as his callous comments — such as saying last Friday that he hoped infected cruise passengers would stay aboard the Grand Princess at sea because he didn’t want domestic coronavirus case numbers to rise. ... Members of Trump’s coronavirus task force have also discussed declaring a national emergency ...

“People who interacted with Trump over the weekend at his Mar-a-Lago Club in Palm Beach, Fla., or the nearby Trump International Golf Club, said the president was in gleeful spirits. ... Doug Deason, a Trump donor in attendance, said the president shook almost every hand in sight. ... Even as Trump continued to glad-hand constituents, two Republican congressmen who interacted with him in recent days, Reps. Douglas A. Collins (Ga.) and Matt Gaetz (Fla.), said Monday that they were quarantining themselves because of contact with a confirmed carrier of the coronavirus at a conservative conference. Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), named Friday as Trump’s new chief of staff, also announced Monday that he was isolating himself after coming in contact with same unidentified person.”

“A seventh lawmaker, Rep. Louie Gohmert (R-Tex.), said he possibly had been exposed to the carrier at CPAC, but after discussing his situation with a CDC physician, he decided to return to work,” Mike DeBonis reports. In a letter to Democrats, Nancy Pelosi said her caucus will hear today from several health officials for an update on protocols, but she said that, “at the present time, there is no reason for us not to continue” with work. There have been private discussions about whether the coming recess could be extended indefinitely, House aides said. Congress must act by March 15 to extend some critical foreign surveillance authorities but has no other pressing deadlines until May 22.

Italy is now under a nationwide lockdown.

“Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte said Monday that Italy would restrict freedom of movement on a scale unprecedented in a democracy, locking down the entire country — 60 million people — in an attempt to contain the accelerating coronavirus,” Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. “If Italy succeeds, a version of its tactics could be used in other countries where cases are multiplying, including across Europe, where cross-border movement is a cherished right for many citizens.” Here are other international developments:

- Chinese leader Xi Jinping made a surprise visit to Wuhan, the city where the outbreak emerged, as he asserts China’s domestic triumph in its “war” against the epidemic. (Anna Fifield)
- Japan will punish the reselling of face masks for profit, with up to one year in jail. (Simon Denyer)
- South Korea touted the benefits of mass testing, as new virus cases slowed down. (Adam Taylor)
- The United Arab Emirates announced 15 new cases of the coronavirus on Monday, raising the national total to 74, as it closed its ports to cruise ships. (Paul Schemm)
- Pence urged Israel not to target the U.S. with a coronavirus quarantine. (Axios)

---

Quote of the day

Pope Francis, giving Catholic mass in the Vatican on Tuesday as Italy began its lockdown, said he hopes priests have the courage to “get out” and meet the sick. “May priests have the courage to get out, going to the sick to bring them

the comfort of God [and] to bring them the Eucharist,” the pope said, according to the Catholic news site Crux.

The number of people stricken with the virus in the D.C. area rose overnight.

Three new cases were reported in the District, one in Prince George’s County and two in Virginia. The number of known cases in the DMV is now 16. (Fenit Nirappil and Rebecca Tan)

- Los Angeles County announced its first case of community spread, with the total number of coronavirus cases rising to 19. (Los Angeles Times)
- Live audiences were banished from “Wheel of Fortune” and “Jeopardy!” tapings, as a precaution for both audience members and show employees. “Jeopardy!” is hosted by Alex Trebek, who is currently undergoing chemotherapy. (Katie Shepherd)

The Securities and Exchange Commission asked employees at its D.C. headquarters to stay away from the office because of a potential coronavirus case, becoming the first major federal employer to turn to telework to avoid the spreading virus. “The agency’s notice, which was emailed shortly after 8 p.m., required employees working on the ninth floor of its office to stay home and encouraged all others to do the same,” Rena Merle reports. “The email to SEC employees said an employee was treated for respiratory symptoms earlier Monday and was informed by a physician that the person could have the coronavirus. The worker had not been in the office since Thursday.”

School closures are raising concerns about disruption.

“More than 380 schools, including three in the District, have closed their doors because of the outbreak, moves that have affected nearly 260,000 students, according to a count by the education publication EdWeek. Many of those closures were for just a day or two so workers could deep-clean schools where officials worried about exposure to the virus,” Moriah Balingit and Laura Meckler report. “Many others, heeding the advice of the Education Department and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, were preparing for potential for long-term closures. Some systems closed schools to train teachers and prepare lessons in case students have to learn remotely.... U.S. school officials in many places are grappling with how to proceed, weighing the potential benefits of closures in slowing the spread of the disease against the severe disruption it could cause, particularly for students who rely on schools for meals, or who have parents who would struggle to find child care. There are also questions of how effective school closures are in slowing down the spread of disease, especially if people congregate elsewhere and pass the illness on to one another outside of the schools.”

Universities are also scrambling. “In recent days, many universities have upended academic traditions in an effort to protect health on campus in the face of an uncertain threat. Classes at Princeton University will be held online and students are being encouraged to consider staying home after spring break, the school’s president announced Monday,” Susan Svrluga and Nick Anderson report. “Some colleges closed temporarily to disinfect buildings and some moved rapidly to virtual instruction.”

Millions of Americans lack sick pay. Many of their employers campaign against it.

“Major U.S. companies and business groups have put out hand sanitizer and discussed precautions they are taking to keep sick workers away from customers,” Abha Bhattarai and Peter Whoriskey report. “Although most Americans say businesses should offer sick pay, at least a dozen states, including Florida and much of the Southeast, have passed legislation since 2011 to block efforts to require medical leave.”

Texans are “mad and scared” as the state braces for more

cruise evacuees.

“On Monday, as the Grand Princess cruise ship prepared to offload more sick and exposed passengers in Oakland, Calif., San Antonio Mayor Ron Nirenberg was bracing for a third set of evacuees — and losing patience with a chaotic federal evacuation and quarantine process that he fears is endangering residents. ‘It’s disconcerting,’ said Nirenberg (D).

‘Throughout the course of this, what I’ve seen is that the lack of coordination at the highest levels of this president’s administration is simply stunning,’” Arelis Hernández and Neena Satija. “Texas is one of three states that so far have accepted hundreds of evacuees ... In nearly every location, local officials say they have been blindsided by the sudden requests, alarmed by the lack of information and exasperated by haphazard protocols.”

---

More on 2020

Biden is chipping away at Sanders's 2016 edge with white working-class voters.

“The duel will play out largely in Michigan and Missouri,” Annie Gowen

reports. “Exit polls from last week's Super Tuesday contests, in which Biden surged to take a national delegate lead, showed that he beat Sanders among non-college-educated whites by four points. ... In Missouri this weekend, Biden touted his working-class roots. ... [He] held a campaign rally Saturday at the National World War I Memorial and Museum in Kansas City, with workers from firefighters and electrical unions carefully arrayed behind him in the setting sun. ... Biden’s wife, Jill, appeared at events in St. Louis, Columbia and Kansas City on Monday ... Union workers will be knocking on doors throughout the Midwest for Biden, and surrogates such as Sen. Thomas R. Carper (D-Del.) joined picketing Teamsters in Michigan over the weekend.”

A second survey on Monday showed Biden opening a wide lead over Sanders in Michigan. The Monmouth University Poll released Monday afternoon showed Biden leading Sanders 51 percent to 36 percent among likely primary voters, though it should be noted that the polls were way off when Sanders won an upset here against Hillary Clinton in 2016.

Getting by can be a juggling act in Michigan, where 12 counties flipped from Obama to Trump in 2016.

Employment at the General Motors engine plant in Bay City, Mich., is now a fraction of what it once was. During last fall’s United Auto Workers strike, it wasn’t “far from anyone’s mind was the fact that Bay County flipped to Republican in 2016, against the wishes of the U.A.W.,” the Times's Rebecca Blumenstein reports from her hometown. “Workers were infuriated that [Trump] did not offer support for the strikers.”

More coverage from the six states voting today

- Turnout could hit a record in Washington state's primary, where more than 1 million mail-in ballots were received by Monday. (Seattle Times)
- Biden took a Southern victory lap in Mississippi on Sunday, where

he's received the endorsement of some of the state's most prominent black politicians and is expected to win big today. (Mississippi Today)

- Idaho was last year's fastest-growing state, and today's election might provide clues as to whether those new residents are turning the state a little bluer. (AP)
- Participation in North Dakota's presidential caucuses is expected to rise dramatically from four years ago, and state Democrats saying they don't expect coronavirus fears to dampen turnout. A procedural change in the state's caucuses make them function more like a traditional election, with citizens given the ability to drop in at a caucus site, cast their ballot and leave. (Bismarck Tribune)
- Sanders jabbed Biden for voting for the Iraq War during a Monday rally in St. Louis. (St. Louis Post-Dispatch)
- Sterling Heights, Mich., Mayor Michael Taylor, a life-long Republican who voted for Trump in 2016, endorsed Biden, saying he's the candidate who can "appeal to moderates and Republicans like me who don't want to see four more years of President Trump."
(Newsweek)

The Trump campaign has sent paychecks to Eric's and Don Jr.'s significant others.

Parscale Strategy, the firm run by the president's campaign manager Brad Parscale, has been used to make payments out of public view to Lara Trump, the wife of the president's son Eric, and Kimberly Guilfoyle, the girlfriend of Donald Trump Jr., who have been surrogates and taken on advisory roles. (NYT)

Tech experts don't think social media companies are doing enough to safeguard their platforms.

The Technology 202's Cat Zakrzewski asked more than 100 experts if social media companies have done enough to prevent manipulation of voters on their platforms. The resounding answer: No. The Technology 202 Network, from Cat and researcher Tonya Riley, launches today. It's an invitation-only panel of experts from across government, industry and the consumer advocacy community who will vote in regular surveys on the most pressing issues in the field. (Check it out here.)

---

The new world order

The sun sets behind a C-17 cargo plane in Iraq, as U.S. service members wait to board. (Tech. Sgt. Erik Gudmundson/Air Force)

Two Americans were killed in Iraq.

“Two members of a Marine Special Operations team were killed in Iraq during an operation targeting a mountain cave complex that Islamic State militants were using as a hideout, marking the first U.S. combat deaths in the country since last summer,” Dan Lamothe and Louisa Loveluck report.

“The operation Sunday required the coalition to dispatch reinforcement forces to recover the remains of the Americans who were killed from the caves ... It took nearly six hours to do so ... The service members’ identities were being withheld as family members were notified.”

The Trump Organization reported a drop in profits from foreign governments.

“Trump’s company said it donated $105,465 to the U.S. Treasury last month, an amount that it said reflects its profits from foreign-government bookings at its hotels last year. The number is down sharply from its 2019 donation of about $191,000, showing a drop in spending by foreign governments at Trump hotels,” Jonathan O’Connell and David Fahrenthold report.

A jury failed to reach a verdict in the case that the CIA called the “biggest leak” in agency history.

“A jury in New York failed to reach a verdict Monday on whether a former CIA employee gave government hacking tools to WikiLeaks,” Shayna Jacobs and Shane Harris report. “Jurors, who had begun their deliberations last week, told Judge Paul Crotty that they were ‘extremely deadlocked’ on many of the charges. Joshua Schulte, 31, had been accused of disclosing the hacking tools and disclosing information to a reporter at The Post while in jail awaiting trial. The jury did find Schulte guilty on two counts of making false statements to investigators and contempt of court. But the failure to reach a unanimous agreement on the most serious charges of disclosing classified information was a significant blow to the government’s case.”

Ethiopian investigators blamed design flaws for the Boeing 737 Max crash a year ago.

“The interim findings came as families of the victims from around the world gathered in Ethiopia for events commemorating the crash anniversary,” Lori Aratani, Ian Duncan and Michael Laris report.

“According to the report, the ‘differences’ training provided to the airline’s pilots — meant to instruct them on how the Max would behave differently than an earlier version of the 737 — was found to be ‘inadequate.’”

Netanyahu's self-declared victory is looking less certain in Israel.

“In an effort to break the country’s year-long political deadlock, [Benny] Gantz reached out publicly to some unlikely coalition partners, betting that their shared goal of ousting [Benjamin] Netanyahu could bring them together,” Ruth Eglash reports. “Success would require Gantz winning — and accepting — support from the Joint List, a slate of four Arab-majority parties representing Israel’s roughly 1.8 million Arab citizens. If he does manage to secure their backing, his allies in Israel’s 120-seat parliament, or Knesset, would outnumber those of Netanyahu’s bloc of right-wing and religious parties, affording Gantz the chance to scrape together a narrow coalition government. While it would not include the Arab party members directly, this coalition would rely on them to pass essential legislation.”

---

Social media speed read

Rep. Paul Gosar (R-Ariz), who went into self-quarantine after being exposed to the virus, mused about death. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) replied:

Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez ✓

@AOC

If it helps at all Rep. Gosar, you get roasted in committee almost every week so that's kind of the same thing
twitter.com/drpaulgosar/st...

Paul Gosar ✓ @DrPaulGosar

Been thinking about life and mortality today. I'd rather die gloriously in battle than from a virus. In a way it doesn't matter. But it kinda does.

♥ 113K 1:19 AM - Mar 10, 2020

💬 13.5K people are talking about this

The virus isn't stopping Trump, a known germaphobe, from shaking hands with supporters:

David Nakamura ✓

@DavidNakamura

I was literally talking on the phone about coronavirus with a former Secret Service agent who said: "Forget about rope lines. Those are the ultimate threat given hand-to-hand contact is the way this spreads" ... when this @robcrilly pool photo of Trump in Florida hit my inbox.

♥ 1,666 3:22 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 745 people are talking about this

Nancy Pelosi didn't hold back after being asked about Trump not being tested for the virus:

Manu Raju ✓

@mkraju

Asked Pelosi if she thinks Trump should be tested after his interactions with Doug Collins and Matt Gaetz.
Pelosi: "Tested for what?"
me: coronavirus
Pelosi: "Oh, I thought he should be tested for a long time now."
And she walked off

♥ 57,6K 11:11 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 12K people are talking about this

Ted Cruz is handling his quarantine – and an old conspiracy theory about his past -- with humor:

---

Videos of the day

Montana Gov. Steve Bullock's daughter celebrated her dad's decision to run for Senate with a TikTok:

Caroline Bullock

@c_g_bullock

Celebrating as Stevie B shimmies his way into the Senate!! 🤘❤️ #stevieb2020 @GovernorBullock @stevebullockmt

♥️ 2,381 6:39 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 424 people are talking about this

Stephen Colbert said he's "not testing positive, just staying positive":

Seth Meyers doesn't think the New York governor's coronavirus advice to subway commuters was helpful:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: The coronavirus crisis plays to a strength, and weakness, of both Sanders and Biden
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 8:20:26 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann

with Mariana Alfaro

Email

The coronavirus crisis plays to a strength, and weakness, of both Sanders and Biden

DETROIT – At the end of a roundtable discussion about the novel coronavirus that Sen. Bernie Sanders convened here on Monday afternoon with five public health experts, a reporter asked the Democratic presidential candidate whether he plans to scale back the size of his events to reduce the risk of community spread. “You obviously are holding rallies with more than 10,000 people,” the reporter said.

Sanders corrected him.

“15,000,” he said, boastfully.

Appearing to realize he sounded flip, Sanders praised the “very good question” but added that his campaign’s challenge is no different than ones faced by basketball teams or theater companies. “We do not go forward without consultation with local health officials,” he added.

It was vintage Sanders. Falling behind Joe Biden in the polls, including here in Michigan ahead of today’s primary, the independent senator from Vermont has seized on the outbreak to make the case for Medicare-for-all. Health care has been the top concern of voters all election cycle. This new crisis only makes the issue more salient. And Sanders’s decades-long crusade to upend the system is more popular than not among the Democratic rank-and-file. On the other hand, Sanders lacks executive experience beyond serving three decades ago as the mayor of Burlington, Vt., which has a population of about 40,000.

Biden could benefit politically if the outbreak increases the desire among voters for a calm, steady and experienced hand who has a record of managing crises. On the other hand, the former vice president often sticks to generalities and almost never comes across as deeply versed in the nuances of public policy. He’s a back-slapping pol who prefers yakking it up in call time and can sometimes seem confused. In contrast to Sanders, Biden has not outlined any plan or vision for how he’d respond to the coronavirus beyond deferring to the wisdom of experts, which has been his go-to line. He didn’t bring up the fast-spreading virus during a visit to a community health center in Grand Rapids on Monday morning or during an evening rally in Detroit. Instead, he stuck closely to his script.

Bernie Sanders listens during a coronavirus roundtable at the Westin in the Detroit airport on Monday afternoon. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Both Sanders and Biden benefit from being perceived by Democrats as straight shooters who tell it like it is, even if people don't agree with them. A Quinnipiac University survey released Monday found that 62 percent of registered voters nationally say Sanders is honest and 51 percent say Biden is honest, compared to 33 percent who say the same about President Trump. While 52 percent say Biden has good leadership skills, 45 percent say Sanders does and 42 percent say Trump does. On empathy, 64 percent say Sanders cares about average Americans, compared to 59 percent for Biden and 43 percent for Trump. Asked who would do a better job of handling a crisis, Biden led Trump 56 percent to 40 percent while Sanders also led Trump by a narrower margin of 50 percent to 44 percent.

Frank McKenney, 71, a retired systems analyst and Vietnam veteran who considers himself politically independent, said the coronavirus puts in stark relief why he's supporting Biden. "He's an honest man, from all the years I've seen him, and we've had such a rough time on that with Trump,"

McKenney said as he waited to see Biden here. “I’m real concerned this is being mismanaged at the White House. People want to be told the truth. We can handle the truth. What we can’t handle is everything being put through a political lens.”

On the coronavirus specifically, 43 percent of Americans approve of the president’s response so far, which is on par with his 41 percent overall approval rating in the same poll. Tribalism is a factor: 87 percent of Republicans approve and 83 percent of Democrats disapprove, while 50 percent of independents disapprove of Trump’s coronavirus response. Overall, 54 percent of respondents say they are either very or somewhat concerned that they or someone they know will be infected with the coronavirus, and 58 percent say they are either very or somewhat concerned the coronavirus will disrupt their daily lives, regardless of whether they know someone who is infected.

Joe Biden locks hands with Cory Booker, Gretchen Whitmer and Kamala Harris at Renaissance High School in Detroit on Monday night. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

While Sanders’s roundtable was somber and serious, Biden’s rally at a Detroit public high school a few hours later was raucous. Two volunteers squirted bottles of Purell sanitizer onto the hands of everyone entering the gymnasium to watch him speak. A marching band warmed up the crowd. Almost as soon as Biden started speaking, protesters began interrupting him. First, someone tried to draw attention to his vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement. As a Biden supporter tried to rip the sign away (“NAFTA killed our jobs”), the candidate urged everyone to keep it cool. “The Bernie Bros are here,” Biden said. “Let him go.” Then several activists heckled Biden for not endorsing the Green New Deal, and some tussles appeared to break out in the crowd as police escorted them out a back entrance. A few minutes later, Biden finally got back on track.

Biden never mentioned the coronavirus, but parts of his stump speech made it sound like it was on his mind. “At this moment, when there’s so much fear in this country, we need honest, trustworthy, truthful, reassuring leadership. I promise you that will be what I provide,” he said. “We choose hope over fear ... and we choose truth over lies.”

Asked about the coronavirus during an interview with NBC earlier in the afternoon, Biden said Trump should “just be quiet.” “I think there's no confidence in the president and anything he says or does,” Biden said. “He turns everything into what he thinks is a political benefit for himself, and he's actually imploding in the process. But there's a lot of innocent bystanders that are being badly hurt. I wish he would just be quiet. I really mean it. Just let the experts speak and acknowledge whatever they suggest to him is what we should be doing.” He added that he will “follow the recommendations” of experts: “And if they conclude that there shouldn't be big indoor rallies, then we'll stop indoor, big indoor rallies. We're going to do whatever they say.”

More than 700 people in the United States have tested positive for the virus and 26 have died. Michigan, though, has no confirmed cases. At Biden’s rally last night, a handful of attendees I interviewed at Biden’s rally last night told me, with no evidence, that they think the virus is just a hoax that’s been invented to help Trump get reelected. I assured them it was not.

Health care has been the top issue for Democratic voters in every state that’s had exit polls this primary season. On Super Tuesday, across the states that voted, 47 percent of voters identified it as their No. 1 concern, followed by race relations and income inequality, which tied for second at 18 percent. Across those states, per the exits, 51 percent of voters said they supported replacing all private health insurance with a single government plan for everyone, while 43 percent opposed that.

Bernie Sanders speaks about the coronavirus at the Westin in the Detroit airport. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Sanders cited the outbreak to offer a broader critique not just of the health-care system but of the failure to provide for the neediest in “the richest country on Earth.” He noted that water has been cut off to thousands of homes in Detroit because people couldn’t pay their bills. While praising the city for stopping these water shutoffs earlier in the day in preparation for a possible coronavirus outbreak, Sanders said they’re nonetheless emblematic of something rotten in the American system. “Can you believe in the year 2020, in a major American city, people have no water because they cannot afford to pay their water bills? Now we’re told wash our hands,” he said. “It’s a little hard to wash your hands and keep clean if you don’t have water!”

The self-described democratic socialist has made clear that he embraces the old political adage that you should never let a crisis go to waste. Reading from notes but not a script, he balanced attacks on Trump’s handling of the outbreak with calls for paid sick leave. In a meeting room in the bowels of a Westin hotel inside the Detroit airport, which was eerily quiet because so many people have stopped traveling, the audience for Sanders's roundtable included about 50 journalists, including local TV news crews. There was no one to applaud, only the clicks of shutters, during an event that lasted almost an hour.

Sanders can be short with you when he doesn't like a question.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has urged people over the age of 60 who have underlying health conditions to take special precautions to avoid covid-19, including staying home as much as possible, avoiding non-essential air travel and limiting close contact with other people. The 78-year-old Sanders had a heart attack in October while campaigning in Nevada and has declined to release his full medical records, despite promising to do so.

Asked what specific precautions he's taking in light of the CDC advisory, Sanders brushed off the question: "Well, I'm surrounded by medical personnel," he said, pointing to the five doctors who spoke during the roundtable organized by his campaign. "I'm running for president of the United States, and that requires a whole lot of work." He left it at that and moved onto the next question.

Asked if he's spoken with Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) since Thursday about seeking her endorsement, Sanders declined to answer: "We're here to discuss a major health-care crisis."

When a third journalist asked Sanders how he would pay for his plan to make any coronavirus-related vaccine available free of charge, he bristled. "Do I approve of spending a few cents for a vaccine rather than see people die? Yeah," he said. "This is a no-brainer. That you would ask a question like that almost talks about the nature of the problems facing this country. Does anybody in their right mind believe that, if you're rich, you should be able to afford a vaccine that will save your life? But, if you're poor, you're going to die? Is that really where we're at in the United States of America?"

“I, of course, would take that proposition a lot further,” Sanders continued. “There are people rationing insulin right now. ... I will tell the pharmaceutical industry that if you don’t lower your prices, we will make generic drugs that are affordable for all people.”

Sanders also praised New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) for ordering the state to produce generic hand sanitizer to respond to “price gouging.” “That’s exactly the right thing,” he said.

A woman wears surgical gloves at Biden's rally as she takes a picture of Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

Contingency planning is underway among all the leading campaigns if the outbreak gets worse. Biden’s digital staff has envisioned options for virtual campaigning if sweeping changes were necessary, and Sanders’s campaign already has an elaborate streaming operation, which it said it could tap in the event that rallies are curtailed. “Trump’s reelection campaign said it was ‘proceeding as normal,’ denying that a ‘Women for Trump’ bus tour had been postponed because of the coronavirus, pointing instead to a ‘scheduling conflict,’” Isaac Stanley-

Becker and Elise Viebeck report. “The Spanish flu of 1918 was active during that year’s midterm campaign and election season. Local news reports from the weeks before and after that election suggested that the virus did impact planning, with some officials ordering voters to wear masks or advising against congregating publicly to hear election results.”

With Teleprompters set up during his Detroit rally, and wearing a full suit, Biden tried to exude an aura of inevitability ahead of Super Tuesday II, when six states vote. He touted his role in the bailout of the auto industry a decade ago and investments the Obama administration made to clean up the Great Lakes. Much of his pitch, though, was about the need for decency and dignity. Biden even made a case against being angry. “We cannot become like him,” he said. “I refuse to accept the notion that we’re in a perpetual state of war with the other party.” And he cited a story in The Washington Post last month about how kids emulate Trump’s language to bully classmates. “Our children are listening,” he said. “What do we expect to happen?”

Now that he’s the front-runner again, Biden has started giving shorter speeches. This reduces the odds he will say something politically problematic. Cleve Wootson, our reporter assigned to follow Biden, noticed this weekend that he spoke for just seven minutes in St. Louis, 12 minutes in Kansas City and 14 minutes and change in Jackson, Miss. It is a seismic shift for someone who has never had a reputation for breviloquence, Cleve writes: “Mostly gone are the not-so-brief diversions into Biden family lore, wonky dispositions on complex policy points and anecdotes about the history of the phrase ‘rule of thumb.’”

At a fundraiser at the Detroit Athletic Club before the rally, Biden didn’t refer to Sanders by name but took a dig at Medicare-for-all. He told the 350 donors that he will “be able to get health care for everyone,” adding: “We can do it without spending $35 trillion.”

At the bigger rally later in the evening, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, who backed Biden last week and delivered the Democratic response to the State of the Union last month, introduced Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.), who endorsed Biden earlier in the day. He then brought Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) onstage. Booker and Harris, who both dropped out before the Iowa caucuses, are the only two Democratic senators who are African American, and they were both well received in the heart of a city that is 82 percent black. “We are sparing nothing to make sure that Joe Biden wins in the state of Michigan,” said Booker.

“I believe there has been a conscious attempt to try to disillusion us, trying to have us believe that the system cannot and will not work for us,” added Harris. “Donald Trump, he does not see people. The only people who he sees [is the person] he sees when he looks in the mirror. We need a president who sees us, who understands us.”

All three warm-up speakers have been mentioned as potential picks as Biden’s running mate. “I view myself as a bridge, not as anything else,” said Biden, 77, motioning toward the trio. “There’s an entire generation of leaders you saw stand behind me. They are the future of this country.”

Biden shook a few hands on his way out of the gym but did not linger on the rope line. The campaign said it mitigates risk when reasonable. “At the same time,” Biden’s press team said in a statement, “we will continue to run an aggressive, national campaign to win the Democratic nomination and defeat Donald Trump.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

Virus panic evaporates Dow Jones gains from 2019

Source: Bloomberg

THE WASHINGTON POST

U.S. markets staged a comeback at the open.

After their worst day of trading since the 2008 financial crisis, the Dow Jones Industrial Average surged roughly 800 points this morning as investors cheered potential stimulus measures from the White House.

“The move came a day after U.S. markets cratered more than 7 percent on the dual threat of the coronavirus’s spread in the United States and the oil price war that erupted between Russia and Saudi Arabia over production targets,” Taylor Telford and Thomas Heath report.

Trump’s proposals were brushed aside by Democrats, who are working on their own plan.

“Trump said he will ask Congress to cut payroll taxes and provide relief to hourly workers suffering from the economic fallout of the coronavirus. He also said he was seeking to provide assistance to the airline, hotel and cruise industries, which are all suffering as Americans rapidly cancel travel plans,” Jeff Stein, Seung Min Kim, Erica Werner and Mike DeBonis report. “It was unclear, based on Trump’s comments, whether he would ask Congress to help these industries or if he thought he could do it on his own. ... Reducing the payroll tax by a single percentage point would cut between $55 billion and $75 billion in revenue ... House Majority Leader Steny H. Hoyer (D-Md.) expressed skepticism about the idea. ... Later in the day, [Pelosi] and Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) went into more detail about the Democrats’ planned proposal. They said they would pursue legislation that provided free coronavirus testing for all Americans, paid leave for those affected by the epidemic, expanded food subsidies and an expansion of the federal unemployment insurance program. Still, other senior Democrats said it was inevitable that Washington will have to step in with measures to stimulate the economy.”

The president's proposals are aimed at calming the markets.

“Trump confronted one of the most perilous days of his presidency Monday by first erupting in a barrage of commentary that failed to calm

the cratering financial markets, struggling to inspire confidence that his administration could stop the spread of the novel coronavirus. But by the time the sun set in Washington, Trump sounded momentarily chastened by the turbulence and previewed a raft of emergency measures to shore up the economy," Philip Rucker, Robert Costa, Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey report. "Inside the White House, some officials privately acknowledged Monday that Trump has exacerbated the problem with his misleading and false statements, as well as his callous comments — such as saying last Friday that he hoped infected cruise passengers would stay aboard the Grand Princess at sea because he didn't want domestic coronavirus case numbers to rise. ... Members of Trump's coronavirus task force have also discussed declaring a national emergency ...

"People who interacted with Trump over the weekend at his Mar-a-Lago Club in Palm Beach, Fla., or the nearby Trump International Golf Club, said the president was in gleeful spirits. ... Doug Deason, a Trump donor in attendance, said the president shook almost every hand in sight. ... Even as Trump continued to glad-hand constituents, two Republican congressmen who interacted with him in recent days, Reps. Douglas A. Collins (Ga.) and Matt Gaetz (Fla.), said Monday that they were quarantining themselves because of contact with a confirmed carrier of the coronavirus at a conservative conference. Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), named Friday as Trump's new chief of staff, also announced Monday that he was isolating himself after coming in contact with same unidentified person."

"A seventh lawmaker, Rep. Louie Gohmert (R-Tex.), said he possibly had been exposed to the carrier at CPAC, but after discussing his situation with a CDC physician, he decided to return to work," Mike DeBonis reports. In a letter to Democrats, Nancy Pelosi said her caucus will hear today from several health officials for an update on protocols, but she said that, "at the present time, there is no reason for us not to continue" with work. There have been private discussions about whether the coming recess could be extended indefinitely, House aides said. Congress must act by March 15 to extend some critical foreign surveillance authorities but has no other pressing deadlines until May 22.

Italy is now under a nationwide lockdown.

“Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte said Monday that Italy would restrict freedom of movement on a scale unprecedented in a democracy, locking down the entire country — 60 million people — in an attempt to contain the accelerating coronavirus,” Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. “If Italy succeeds, a version of its tactics could be used in other countries where cases are multiplying, including across Europe, where cross-border movement is a cherished right for many citizens.” Here are other international developments:

- Chinese leader Xi Jinping made a surprise visit to Wuhan, the city where the outbreak emerged, as he asserts China’s domestic triumph in its “war” against the epidemic. (Anna Fifield)
- Japan will punish the reselling of face masks for profit, with up to one year in jail. (Simon Denyer)
- South Korea touted the benefits of mass testing, as new virus cases slowed down. (Adam Taylor)
- The United Arab Emirates announced 15 new cases of the coronavirus on Monday, raising the national total to 74, as it closed its ports to cruise ships. (Paul Schemm)
- Pence urged Israel not to target the U.S. with a coronavirus quarantine. (Axios)

---

Quote of the day

Pope Francis, giving Catholic mass in the Vatican on Tuesday as Italy began its lockdown, said he hopes priests have the courage to “get out” and meet the sick. “May priests have the courage to get out, going to the sick to bring them

the comfort of God [and] to bring them the Eucharist,” the pope said, according to the Catholic news site Crux.

The number of people stricken with the virus in the D.C. area rose overnight.

Three new cases were reported in the District, one in Prince George’s County and two in Virginia. The number of known cases in the DMV is now 16. (Fenit Nirappil and Rebecca Tan)

- Los Angeles County announced its first case of community spread, with the total number of coronavirus cases rising to 19. (Los Angeles Times)
- Live audiences were banished from “Wheel of Fortune” and “Jeopardy!” tapings, as a precaution for both audience members and show employees. “Jeopardy!” is hosted by Alex Trebek, who is currently undergoing chemotherapy. (Katie Shepherd)

The Securities and Exchange Commission asked employees at its D.C. headquarters to stay away from the office because of a potential coronavirus case, becoming the first major federal employer to turn to telework to avoid the spreading virus. “The agency’s notice, which was emailed shortly after 8 p.m., required employees working on the ninth floor of its office to stay home and encouraged all others to do the same,” Rena Merle reports. “The email to SEC employees said an employee was treated for respiratory symptoms earlier Monday and was informed by a physician that the person could have the coronavirus. The worker had not been in the office since Thursday.”

School closures are raising concerns about disruption.

“More than 380 schools, including three in the District, have closed their doors because of the outbreak, moves that have affected nearly 260,000 students, according to a count by the education publication EdWeek. Many of those closures were for just a day or two so workers could deep-clean schools where officials worried about exposure to the virus,” Moriah Balingit and Laura Meckler report. “Many others, heeding the advice of the Education Department and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, were preparing for potential for long-term closures. Some systems closed schools to train teachers and prepare lessons in case students have to learn remotely.... U.S. school officials in many places are grappling with how to proceed, weighing the potential benefits of closures in slowing the spread of the disease against the severe disruption it could cause, particularly for students who rely on schools for meals, or who have parents who would struggle to find child care. There are also questions of how effective school closures are in slowing down the spread of disease, especially if people congregate elsewhere and pass the illness on to one another outside of the schools.”

Universities are also scrambling. “In recent days, many universities have upended academic traditions in an effort to protect health on campus in the face of an uncertain threat. Classes at Princeton University will be held online and students are being encouraged to consider staying home after spring break, the school’s president announced Monday,” Susan Svrluga and Nick Anderson report. “Some colleges closed temporarily to disinfect buildings and some moved rapidly to virtual instruction.”

Millions of Americans lack sick pay. Many of their employers campaign against it.

“Major U.S. companies and business groups have put out hand sanitizer and discussed precautions they are taking to keep sick workers away from customers,” Abha Bhattarai and Peter Whoriskey report. “Although most Americans say businesses should offer sick pay, at least a dozen states, including Florida and much of the Southeast, have passed legislation since 2011 to block efforts to require medical leave.”

Texans are “mad and scared” as the state braces for more

cruise evacuees.

“On Monday, as the Grand Princess cruise ship prepared to offload more sick and exposed passengers in Oakland, Calif., San Antonio Mayor Ron Nirenberg was bracing for a third set of evacuees — and losing patience with a chaotic federal evacuation and quarantine process that he fears is endangering residents. ‘It’s disconcerting,’ said Nirenberg (D).

‘Throughout the course of this, what I’ve seen is that the lack of coordination at the highest levels of this president’s administration is simply stunning,’” Arelis Hernández and Neena Satija. “Texas is one of three states that so far have accepted hundreds of evacuees ... In nearly every location, local officials say they have been blindsided by the sudden requests, alarmed by the lack of information and exasperated by haphazard protocols.”

---

More on 2020

Biden is chipping away at Sanders's 2016 edge with white working-class voters.

“The duel will play out largely in Michigan and Missouri,” Annie Gowen

reports. “Exit polls from last week's Super Tuesday contests, in which Biden surged to take a national delegate lead, showed that he beat Sanders among non-college-educated whites by four points. ... In Missouri this weekend, Biden touted his working-class roots. ... [He] held a campaign rally Saturday at the National World War I Memorial and Museum in Kansas City, with workers from firefighters and electrical unions carefully arrayed behind him in the setting sun. ... Biden’s wife, Jill, appeared at events in St. Louis, Columbia and Kansas City on Monday ... Union workers will be knocking on doors throughout the Midwest for Biden, and surrogates such as Sen. Thomas R. Carper (D-Del.) joined picketing Teamsters in Michigan over the weekend.”

A second survey on Monday showed Biden opening a wide lead over Sanders in Michigan. The Monmouth University Poll released Monday afternoon showed Biden leading Sanders 51 percent to 36 percent among likely primary voters, though it should be noted that the polls were way off when Sanders won an upset here against Hillary Clinton in 2016.

Getting by can be a juggling act in Michigan, where 12 counties flipped from Obama to Trump in 2016.

Employment at the General Motors engine plant in Bay City, Mich., is now a fraction of what it once was. During last fall’s United Auto Workers strike, it wasn’t “far from anyone’s mind was the fact that Bay County flipped to Republican in 2016, against the wishes of the U.A.W.,” the Times's Rebecca Blumenstein reports from her hometown. “Workers were infuriated that [Trump] did not offer support for the strikers.”

More coverage from the six states voting today

- Turnout could hit a record in Washington state's primary, where more than 1 million mail-in ballots were received by Monday. (Seattle Times)
- Biden took a Southern victory lap in Mississippi on Sunday, where

he's received the endorsement of some of the state's most prominent black politicians and is expected to win big today. (Mississippi Today)

- Idaho was last year's fastest-growing state, and today's election might provide clues as to whether those new residents are turning the state a little bluer. (AP)
- Participation in North Dakota's presidential caucuses is expected to rise dramatically from four years ago, and state Democrats saying they don't expect coronavirus fears to dampen turnout. A procedural change in the state's caucuses make them function more like a traditional election, with citizens given the ability to drop in at a caucus site, cast their ballot and leave. (Bismarck Tribune)
- Sanders jabbed Biden for voting for the Iraq War during a Monday rally in St. Louis. (St. Louis Post-Dispatch)
- Sterling Heights, Mich., Mayor Michael Taylor, a life-long Republican who voted for Trump in 2016, endorsed Biden, saying he's the candidate who can "appeal to moderates and Republicans like me who don't want to see four more years of President Trump."
(Newsweek)

The Trump campaign has sent paychecks to Eric's and Don Jr.'s significant others.

Parscale Strategy, the firm run by the president's campaign manager Brad Parscale, has been used to make payments out of public view to Lara Trump, the wife of the president's son Eric, and Kimberly Guilfoyle, the girlfriend of Donald Trump Jr., who have been surrogates and taken on advisory roles. (NYT)

Tech experts don't think social media companies are doing enough to safeguard their platforms.

The Technology 202's Cat Zakrzewski asked more than 100 experts if social media companies have done enough to prevent manipulation of voters on their platforms. The resounding answer: No. The Technology 202 Network, from Cat and researcher Tonya Riley, launches today. It's an invitation-only panel of experts from across government, industry and the consumer advocacy community who will vote in regular surveys on the most pressing issues in the field. (Check it out here.)

---

The new world order

The sun sets behind a C-17 cargo plane in Iraq, as U.S. service members wait to board. (Tech. Sgt. Erik Gudmundson/Air Force)

Two Americans were killed in Iraq.

“Two members of a Marine Special Operations team were killed in Iraq during an operation targeting a mountain cave complex that Islamic State militants were using as a hideout, marking the first U.S. combat deaths in the country since last summer,” Dan Lamothe and Louisa Loveluck report.

“The operation Sunday required the coalition to dispatch reinforcement forces to recover the remains of the Americans who were killed from the caves ... It took nearly six hours to do so ... The service members’ identities were being withheld as family members were notified.”

The Trump Organization reported a drop in profits from foreign governments.

“Trump’s company said it donated $105,465 to the U.S. Treasury last month, an amount that it said reflects its profits from foreign-government bookings at its hotels last year. The number is down sharply from its 2019 donation of about $191,000, showing a drop in spending by foreign governments at Trump hotels,” Jonathan O’Connell and David Fahrenthold report.

A jury failed to reach a verdict in the case that the CIA called the “biggest leak” in agency history.

“A jury in New York failed to reach a verdict Monday on whether a former CIA employee gave government hacking tools to WikiLeaks,” Shayna Jacobs and Shane Harris report. “Jurors, who had begun their deliberations last week, told Judge Paul Crotty that they were ‘extremely deadlocked’ on many of the charges. Joshua Schulte, 31, had been accused of disclosing the hacking tools and disclosing information to a reporter at The Post while in jail awaiting trial. The jury did find Schulte guilty on two counts of making false statements to investigators and contempt of court. But the failure to reach a unanimous agreement on the most serious charges of disclosing classified information was a significant blow to the government’s case.”

Ethiopian investigators blamed design flaws for the Boeing 737 Max crash a year ago.

“The interim findings came as families of the victims from around the world gathered in Ethiopia for events commemorating the crash anniversary,” Lori Aratani, Ian Duncan and Michael Laris report.

“According to the report, the ‘differences’ training provided to the airline’s pilots — meant to instruct them on how the Max would behave differently than an earlier version of the 737 — was found to be ‘inadequate.’”

Netanyahu's self-declared victory is looking less certain in Israel.

“In an effort to break the country’s year-long political deadlock, [Benny] Gantz reached out publicly to some unlikely coalition partners, betting that their shared goal of ousting [Benjamin] Netanyahu could bring them together,” Ruth Eglash reports. “Success would require Gantz winning — and accepting — support from the Joint List, a slate of four Arab-majority parties representing Israel’s roughly 1.8 million Arab citizens. If he does manage to secure their backing, his allies in Israel’s 120-seat parliament, or Knesset, would outnumber those of Netanyahu’s bloc of right-wing and religious parties, affording Gantz the chance to scrape together a narrow coalition government. While it would not include the Arab party members directly, this coalition would rely on them to pass essential legislation.”

---

Social media speed read

Rep. Paul Gosar (R-Ariz), who went into self-quarantine after being exposed to the virus, mused about death. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) replied:

The virus isn't stopping Trump, a known germaphobe, from shaking hands with supporters:

David Nakamura ✓

@DavidNakamura

I was literally talking on the phone about coronavirus with a former Secret Service agent who said: "Forget about rope lines. Those are the ultimate threat given hand-to-hand contact is the way this spreads" ... when this @robcrilly pool photo of Trump in Florida hit my inbox.

♥ 1,666 3:22 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 745 people are talking about this

Nancy Pelosi didn't hold back after being asked about Trump not being tested for the virus:

Manu Raju ✓

@mkraju

Asked Pelosi if she thinks Trump should be tested after his interactions with Doug Collins and Matt Gaetz.
Pelosi: "Tested for what?"
me: coronavirus
Pelosi: "Oh, I thought he should be tested for a long time now."
And she walked off

♥ 57,6K 11:11 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 12K people are talking about this

Ted Cruz is handling his quarantine – and an old conspiracy theory about his past -- with humor:

---

Videos of the day

Montana Gov. Steve Bullock's daughter celebrated her dad's decision to run for Senate with a TikTok:

Caroline Bullock

@c_g_bullock

Celebrating as Stevie B shimmies his way into the Senate!! 🤪❤️ #stevieb2020 @GovernorBullock @stevebullockmt

♥️ 2,381 6:39 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 424 people are talking about this

Stephen Colbert said he's "not testing positive, just staying positive":

Seth Meyers doesn't think the New York governor's coronavirus advice to subway commuters was helpful:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: The coronavirus crisis plays to a strength, and weakness, of both Sanders and Biden
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 8:20:46 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann

with Mariana Alfaro

Email

The coronavirus crisis plays to a strength, and weakness, of both Sanders and Biden

DETROIT – At the end of a roundtable discussion about the novel coronavirus that Sen. Bernie Sanders convened here on Monday afternoon with five public health experts, a reporter asked the Democratic presidential candidate whether he plans to scale back the size of his events to reduce the risk of community spread. “You obviously are holding rallies with more than 10,000 people,” the reporter said.

Sanders corrected him.

“15,000,” he said, boastfully.

Appearing to realize he sounded flip, Sanders praised the “very good question” but added that his campaign’s challenge is no different than ones faced by basketball teams or theater companies. “We do not go forward without consultation with local health officials,” he added.

It was vintage Sanders. Falling behind Joe Biden in the polls, including here in Michigan ahead of today’s primary, the independent senator from Vermont has seized on the outbreak to make the case for Medicare-for-all. Health care has been the top concern of voters all election cycle. This new crisis only makes the issue more salient. And Sanders’s decades-long crusade to upend the system is more popular than not among the Democratic rank-and-file. On the other hand, Sanders lacks executive experience beyond serving three decades ago as the mayor of Burlington, Vt., which has a population of about 40,000.

Biden could benefit politically if the outbreak increases the desire among voters for a calm, steady and experienced hand who has a record of managing crises. On the other hand, the former vice president often sticks to generalities and almost never comes across as deeply versed in the nuances of public policy. He’s a back-slapping pol who prefers yakking it up in call time and can sometimes seem confused. In contrast to Sanders, Biden has not outlined any plan or vision for how he’d respond to the coronavirus beyond deferring to the wisdom of experts, which has been his go-to line. He didn’t bring up the fast-spreading virus during a visit to a community health center in Grand Rapids on Monday morning or during an evening rally in Detroit. Instead, he stuck closely to his script.

Bernie Sanders listens during a coronavirus roundtable at the Westin in the Detroit airport on Monday afternoon. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Both Sanders and Biden benefit from being perceived by Democrats as straight shooters who tell it like it is, even if people don't agree with them. A Quinnipiac University survey released Monday found that 62 percent of registered voters nationally say Sanders is honest and 51 percent say Biden is honest, compared to 33 percent who say the same about President Trump. While 52 percent say Biden has good leadership skills, 45 percent say Sanders does and 42 percent say Trump does. On empathy, 64 percent say Sanders cares about average Americans, compared to 59 percent for Biden and 43 percent for Trump. Asked who would do a better job of handling a crisis, Biden led Trump 56 percent to 40 percent while Sanders also led Trump by a narrower margin of 50 percent to 44 percent.

Frank McKenney, 71, a retired systems analyst and Vietnam veteran who considers himself politically independent, said the coronavirus puts in stark relief why he's supporting Biden. "He's an honest man, from all the years I've seen him, and we've had such a rough time on that with Trump,"

McKenney said as he waited to see Biden here. “I’m real concerned this is being mismanaged at the White House. People want to be told the truth. We can handle the truth. What we can’t handle is everything being put through a political lens.”

On the coronavirus specifically, 43 percent of Americans approve of the president’s response so far, which is on par with his 41 percent overall approval rating in the same poll. Tribalism is a factor: 87 percent of Republicans approve and 83 percent of Democrats disapprove, while 50 percent of independents disapprove of Trump’s coronavirus response. Overall, 54 percent of respondents say they are either very or somewhat concerned that they or someone they know will be infected with the coronavirus, and 58 percent say they are either very or somewhat concerned the coronavirus will disrupt their daily lives, regardless of whether they know someone who is infected.

Joe Biden locks hands with Cory Booker, Gretchen Whitmer and Kamala Harris at Renaissance High School in Detroit on Monday night. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

While Sanders’s roundtable was somber and serious, Biden’s rally at a Detroit public high school a few hours later was raucous. Two volunteers squirted bottles of Purell sanitizer onto the hands of everyone entering the gymnasium to watch him speak. A marching band warmed up the crowd. Almost as soon as Biden started speaking, protesters began interrupting him. First, someone tried to draw attention to his vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement. As a Biden supporter tried to rip the sign away (“NAFTA killed our jobs”), the candidate urged everyone to keep it cool. “The Bernie Bros are here,” Biden said. “Let him go.” Then several activists heckled Biden for not endorsing the Green New Deal, and some tussles appeared to break out in the crowd as police escorted them out a back entrance. A few minutes later, Biden finally got back on track.

Biden never mentioned the coronavirus, but parts of his stump speech made it sound like it was on his mind. “At this moment, when there’s so much fear in this country, we need honest, trustworthy, truthful, reassuring leadership. I promise you that will be what I provide,” he said. “We choose hope over fear ... and we choose truth over lies.”

Asked about the coronavirus during an interview with NBC earlier in the afternoon, Biden said Trump should “just be quiet.” “I think there's no confidence in the president and anything he says or does,” Biden said. “He turns everything into what he thinks is a political benefit for himself, and he's actually imploding in the process. But there's a lot of innocent bystanders that are being badly hurt. I wish he would just be quiet. I really mean it. Just let the experts speak and acknowledge whatever they suggest to him is what we should be doing.” He added that he will “follow the recommendations” of experts: “And if they conclude that there shouldn't be big indoor rallies, then we'll stop indoor, big indoor rallies. We're going to do whatever they say.”

More than 700 people in the United States have tested positive for the virus and 26 have died. Michigan, though, has no confirmed cases. At Biden’s rally last night, a handful of attendees I interviewed at Biden’s rally last night told me, with no evidence, that they think the virus is just a hoax that’s been invented to help Trump get reelected. I assured them it was not.

Health care has been the top issue for Democratic voters in every state that’s had exit polls this primary season. On Super Tuesday, across the states that voted, 47 percent of voters identified it as their No. 1 concern, followed by race relations and income inequality, which tied for second at 18 percent. Across those states, per the exits, 51 percent of voters said they supported replacing all private health insurance with a single government plan for everyone, while 43 percent opposed that.

Bernie Sanders speaks about the coronavirus at the Westin in the Detroit airport. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

Sanders cited the outbreak to offer a broader critique not just of the health-care system but of the failure to provide for the neediest in “the richest country on Earth.” He noted that water has been cut off to thousands of homes in Detroit because people couldn’t pay their bills. While praising the city for stopping these water shutoffs earlier in the day in preparation for a possible coronavirus outbreak, Sanders said they’re nonetheless emblematic of something rotten in the American system. “Can you believe in the year 2020, in a major American city, people have no water because they cannot afford to pay their water bills? Now we’re told wash our hands,” he said. “It’s a little hard to wash your hands and keep clean if you don’t have water!”

The self-described democratic socialist has made clear that he embraces the old political adage that you should never let a crisis go to waste. Reading from notes but not a script, he balanced attacks on Trump’s handling of the outbreak with calls for paid sick leave. In a meeting room in the bowels of a Westin hotel inside the Detroit airport, which was eerily quiet because so many people have stopped traveling, the audience for Sanders's roundtable included about 50 journalists, including local TV news crews. There was no one to applaud, only the clicks of shutters, during an event that lasted almost an hour.

Sanders can be short with you when he doesn't like a question.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has urged people over the age of 60 who have underlying health conditions to take special precautions to avoid covid-19, including staying home as much as possible, avoiding non-essential air travel and limiting close contact with other people. The 78-year-old Sanders had a heart attack in October while campaigning in Nevada and has declined to release his full medical records, despite promising to do so.

Asked what specific precautions he's taking in light of the CDC advisory, Sanders brushed off the question: "Well, I'm surrounded by medical personnel," he said, pointing to the five doctors who spoke during the roundtable organized by his campaign. "I'm running for president of the United States, and that requires a whole lot of work." He left it at that and moved onto the next question.

Asked if he's spoken with Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) since Thursday about seeking her endorsement, Sanders declined to answer: "We're here to discuss a major health-care crisis."

When a third journalist asked Sanders how he would pay for his plan to make any coronavirus-related vaccine available free of charge, he bristled. "Do I approve of spending a few cents for a vaccine rather than see people die? Yeah," he said. "This is a no-brainer. That you would ask a question like that almost talks about the nature of the problems facing this country. Does anybody in their right mind believe that, if you're rich, you should be able to afford a vaccine that will save your life? But, if you're poor, you're going to die? Is that really where we're at in the United States of America?"

“I, of course, would take that proposition a lot further,” Sanders continued. “There are people rationing insulin right now. ... I will tell the pharmaceutical industry that if you don’t lower your prices, we will make generic drugs that are affordable for all people.”

Sanders also praised New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) for ordering the state to produce generic hand sanitizer to respond to “price gouging.” “That’s exactly the right thing,” he said.

A woman wears surgical gloves at Biden's rally as she takes a picture of Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer. (Carolyn Van Houten/The Washington Post)

Contingency planning is underway among all the leading campaigns if the outbreak gets worse. Biden’s digital staff has envisioned options for virtual campaigning if sweeping changes were necessary, and Sanders’s campaign already has an elaborate streaming operation, which it said it could tap in the event that rallies are curtailed. “Trump’s reelection campaign said it was ‘proceeding as normal,’ denying that a ‘Women for Trump’ bus tour had been postponed because of the coronavirus, pointing instead to a ‘scheduling conflict,’” Isaac Stanley-

Becker and Elise Viebeck report. “The Spanish flu of 1918 was active during that year’s midterm campaign and election season. Local news reports from the weeks before and after that election suggested that the virus did impact planning, with some officials ordering voters to wear masks or advising against congregating publicly to hear election results.”

With Teleprompters set up during his Detroit rally, and wearing a full suit, Biden tried to exude an aura of inevitability ahead of Super Tuesday II, when six states vote. He touted his role in the bailout of the auto industry a decade ago and investments the Obama administration made to clean up the Great Lakes. Much of his pitch, though, was about the need for decency and dignity. Biden even made a case against being angry. “We cannot become like him,” he said. “I refuse to accept the notion that we’re in a perpetual state of war with the other party.” And he cited a story in The Washington Post last month about how kids emulate Trump’s language to bully classmates. “Our children are listening,” he said. “What do we expect to happen?”

Now that he’s the front-runner again, Biden has started giving shorter speeches. This reduces the odds he will say something politically problematic. Cleve Wootson, our reporter assigned to follow Biden, noticed this weekend that he spoke for just seven minutes in St. Louis, 12 minutes in Kansas City and 14 minutes and change in Jackson, Miss. It is a seismic shift for someone who has never had a reputation for breviloquence, Cleve writes: “Mostly gone are the not-so-brief diversions into Biden family lore, wonky dispositions on complex policy points and anecdotes about the history of the phrase ‘rule of thumb.’”

At a fundraiser at the Detroit Athletic Club before the rally, Biden didn’t refer to Sanders by name but took a dig at Medicare-for-all. He told the 350 donors that he will “be able to get health care for everyone,” adding: “We can do it without spending $35 trillion.”

At the bigger rally later in the evening, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, who backed Biden last week and delivered the Democratic response to the State of the Union last month, introduced Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.), who endorsed Biden earlier in the day. He then brought Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) onstage. Booker and Harris, who both dropped out before the Iowa caucuses, are the only two Democratic senators who are African American, and they were both well received in the heart of a city that is 82 percent black. “We are sparing nothing to make sure that Joe Biden wins in the state of Michigan,” said Booker.

“I believe there has been a conscious attempt to try to disillusion us, trying to have us believe that the system cannot and will not work for us,” added Harris. “Donald Trump, he does not see people. The only people who he sees [is the person] he sees when he looks in the mirror. We need a president who sees us, who understands us.”

All three warm-up speakers have been mentioned as potential picks as Biden’s running mate. “I view myself as a bridge, not as anything else,” said Biden, 77, motioning toward the trio. “There’s an entire generation of leaders you saw stand behind me. They are the future of this country.”

Biden shook a few hands on his way out of the gym but did not linger on the rope line. The campaign said it mitigates risk when reasonable. “At the same time,” Biden’s press team said in a statement, “we will continue to run an aggressive, national campaign to win the Democratic nomination and defeat Donald Trump.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

Virus panic evaporates Dow Jones gains from 2019

Source: Bloomberg

THE WASHINGTON POST

U.S. markets staged a comeback at the open.

After their worst day of trading since the 2008 financial crisis, the Dow Jones Industrial Average surged roughly 800 points this morning as investors cheered potential stimulus measures from the White House.

“The move came a day after U.S. markets cratered more than 7 percent on the dual threat of the coronavirus’s spread in the United States and the oil price war that erupted between Russia and Saudi Arabia over production targets,” Taylor Telford and Thomas Heath report.

Trump’s proposals were brushed aside by Democrats, who are working on their own plan.

“Trump said he will ask Congress to cut payroll taxes and provide relief to hourly workers suffering from the economic fallout of the coronavirus. He also said he was seeking to provide assistance to the airline, hotel and cruise industries, which are all suffering as Americans rapidly cancel travel plans,” Jeff Stein, Seung Min Kim, Erica Werner and Mike DeBonis report. “It was unclear, based on Trump’s comments, whether he would ask Congress to help these industries or if he thought he could do it on his own. ... Reducing the payroll tax by a single percentage point would cut between $55 billion and $75 billion in revenue ... House Majority Leader Steny H. Hoyer (D-Md.) expressed skepticism about the idea. ... Later in the day, [Pelosi] and Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) went into more detail about the Democrats’ planned proposal. They said they would pursue legislation that provided free coronavirus testing for all Americans, paid leave for those affected by the epidemic, expanded food subsidies and an expansion of the federal unemployment insurance program. Still, other senior Democrats said it was inevitable that Washington will have to step in with measures to stimulate the economy.”

The president's proposals are aimed at calming the markets.

“Trump confronted one of the most perilous days of his presidency Monday by first erupting in a barrage of commentary that failed to calm

the cratering financial markets, struggling to inspire confidence that his administration could stop the spread of the novel coronavirus. But by the time the sun set in Washington, Trump sounded momentarily chastened by the turbulence and previewed a raft of emergency measures to shore up the economy,” Philip Rucker, Robert Costa, Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey report. “Inside the White House, some officials privately acknowledged Monday that Trump has exacerbated the problem with his misleading and false statements, as well as his callous comments — such as saying last Friday that he hoped infected cruise passengers would stay aboard the Grand Princess at sea because he didn’t want domestic coronavirus case numbers to rise. ... Members of Trump’s coronavirus task force have also discussed declaring a national emergency ...

“People who interacted with Trump over the weekend at his Mar-a-Lago Club in Palm Beach, Fla., or the nearby Trump International Golf Club, said the president was in gleeful spirits. ... Doug Deason, a Trump donor in attendance, said the president shook almost every hand in sight. ... Even as Trump continued to glad-hand constituents, two Republican congressmen who interacted with him in recent days, Reps. Douglas A. Collins (Ga.) and Matt Gaetz (Fla.), said Monday that they were quarantining themselves because of contact with a confirmed carrier of the coronavirus at a conservative conference. Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), named Friday as Trump’s new chief of staff, also announced Monday that he was isolating himself after coming in contact with same unidentified person.”

“A seventh lawmaker, Rep. Louie Gohmert (R-Tex.), said he possibly had been exposed to the carrier at CPAC, but after discussing his situation with a CDC physician, he decided to return to work,” Mike DeBonis reports. In a letter to Democrats, Nancy Pelosi said her caucus will hear today from several health officials for an update on protocols, but she said that, “at the present time, there is no reason for us not to continue” with work. There have been private discussions about whether the coming recess could be extended indefinitely, House aides said. Congress must act by March 15 to extend some critical foreign surveillance authorities but has no other pressing deadlines until May 22.

Italy is now under a nationwide lockdown.

“Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte said Monday that Italy would restrict freedom of movement on a scale unprecedented in a democracy, locking down the entire country — 60 million people — in an attempt to contain the accelerating coronavirus,” Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. “If Italy succeeds, a version of its tactics could be used in other countries where cases are multiplying, including across Europe, where cross-border movement is a cherished right for many citizens.” Here are other international developments:

- Chinese leader Xi Jinping made a surprise visit to Wuhan, the city where the outbreak emerged, as he asserts China’s domestic triumph in its “war” against the epidemic. (Anna Fifield)
- Japan will punish the reselling of face masks for profit, with up to one year in jail. (Simon Denyer)
- South Korea touted the benefits of mass testing, as new virus cases slowed down. (Adam Taylor)
- The United Arab Emirates announced 15 new cases of the coronavirus on Monday, raising the national total to 74, as it closed its ports to cruise ships. (Paul Schemm)
- Pence urged Israel not to target the U.S. with a coronavirus quarantine. (Axios)

---

Quote of the day

Pope Francis, giving Catholic mass in the Vatican on Tuesday as Italy began its lockdown, said he hopes priests have the courage to “get out” and meet the sick. “May priests have the courage to get out, going to the sick to bring them

the comfort of God [and] to bring them the Eucharist,” the pope said, according to the Catholic news site Crux.

The number of people stricken with the virus in the D.C. area rose overnight.

Three new cases were reported in the District, one in Prince George’s County and two in Virginia. The number of known cases in the DMV is now 16. (Fenit Nirappil and Rebecca Tan)

- Los Angeles County announced its first case of community spread, with the total number of coronavirus cases rising to 19. (Los Angeles Times)
- Live audiences were banished from “Wheel of Fortune” and “Jeopardy!” tapings, as a precaution for both audience members and show employees. “Jeopardy!” is hosted by Alex Trebek, who is currently undergoing chemotherapy. (Katie Shepherd)

The Securities and Exchange Commission asked employees at its D.C. headquarters to stay away from the office because of a potential coronavirus case, becoming the first major federal employer to turn to telework to avoid the spreading virus. “The agency’s notice, which was emailed shortly after 8 p.m., required employees working on the ninth floor of its office to stay home and encouraged all others to do the same,” Rena Merle reports. “The email to SEC employees said an employee was treated for respiratory symptoms earlier Monday and was informed by a physician that the person could have the coronavirus. The worker had not been in the office since Thursday.”

School closures are raising concerns about disruption.

“More than 380 schools, including three in the District, have closed their doors because of the outbreak, moves that have affected nearly 260,000 students, according to a count by the education publication EdWeek. Many of those closures were for just a day or two so workers could deep-clean schools where officials worried about exposure to the virus,” Moriah Balingit and Laura Meckler report. “Many others, heeding the advice of the Education Department and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, were preparing for potential for long-term closures. Some systems closed schools to train teachers and prepare lessons in case students have to learn remotely.... U.S. school officials in many places are grappling with how to proceed, weighing the potential benefits of closures in slowing the spread of the disease against the severe disruption it could cause, particularly for students who rely on schools for meals, or who have parents who would struggle to find child care. There are also questions of how effective school closures are in slowing down the spread of disease, especially if people congregate elsewhere and pass the illness on to one another outside of the schools.”

Universities are also scrambling. “In recent days, many universities have upended academic traditions in an effort to protect health on campus in the face of an uncertain threat. Classes at Princeton University will be held online and students are being encouraged to consider staying home after spring break, the school’s president announced Monday,” Susan Svrluga and Nick Anderson report. “Some colleges closed temporarily to disinfect buildings and some moved rapidly to virtual instruction.”

Millions of Americans lack sick pay. Many of their employers campaign against it.

“Major U.S. companies and business groups have put out hand sanitizer and discussed precautions they are taking to keep sick workers away from customers,” Abha Bhattarai and Peter Whoriskey report. “Although most Americans say businesses should offer sick pay, at least a dozen states, including Florida and much of the Southeast, have passed legislation since 2011 to block efforts to require medical leave.”

Texans are “mad and scared” as the state braces for more

cruise evacuees.

“On Monday, as the Grand Princess cruise ship prepared to offload more sick and exposed passengers in Oakland, Calif., San Antonio Mayor Ron Nirenberg was bracing for a third set of evacuees — and losing patience with a chaotic federal evacuation and quarantine process that he fears is endangering residents. ‘It’s disconcerting,’ said Nirenberg (D).

‘Throughout the course of this, what I’ve seen is that the lack of coordination at the highest levels of this president’s administration is simply stunning,’” Arelis Hernández and Neena Satija. “Texas is one of three states that so far have accepted hundreds of evacuees ... In nearly every location, local officials say they have been blindsided by the sudden requests, alarmed by the lack of information and exasperated by haphazard protocols.”

---

More on 2020

Biden is chipping away at Sanders's 2016 edge with white working-class voters.

“The duel will play out largely in Michigan and Missouri,” Annie Gowen

reports. “Exit polls from last week's Super Tuesday contests, in which Biden surged to take a national delegate lead, showed that he beat Sanders among non-college-educated whites by four points. ... In Missouri this weekend, Biden touted his working-class roots. ... [He] held a campaign rally Saturday at the National World War I Memorial and Museum in Kansas City, with workers from firefighters and electrical unions carefully arrayed behind him in the setting sun. ... Biden’s wife, Jill, appeared at events in St. Louis, Columbia and Kansas City on Monday ... Union workers will be knocking on doors throughout the Midwest for Biden, and surrogates such as Sen. Thomas R. Carper (D-Del.) joined picketing Teamsters in Michigan over the weekend.”

A second survey on Monday showed Biden opening a wide lead over Sanders in Michigan. The Monmouth University Poll released Monday afternoon showed Biden leading Sanders 51 percent to 36 percent among likely primary voters, though it should be noted that the polls were way off when Sanders won an upset here against Hillary Clinton in 2016.

Getting by can be a juggling act in Michigan, where 12 counties flipped from Obama to Trump in 2016.

Employment at the General Motors engine plant in Bay City, Mich., is now a fraction of what it once was. During last fall’s United Auto Workers strike, it wasn’t “far from anyone’s mind was the fact that Bay County flipped to Republican in 2016, against the wishes of the U.A.W.,” the Times's Rebecca Blumenstein reports from her hometown. “Workers were infuriated that [Trump] did not offer support for the strikers.”

More coverage from the six states voting today

- Turnout could hit a record in Washington state's primary, where more than 1 million mail-in ballots were received by Monday. (Seattle Times)
- Biden took a Southern victory lap in Mississippi on Sunday, where

he's received the endorsement of some of the state's most prominent black politicians and is expected to win big today. (Mississippi Today)

- Idaho was last year's fastest-growing state, and today's election might provide clues as to whether those new residents are turning the state a little bluer. (AP)
- Participation in North Dakota's presidential caucuses is expected to rise dramatically from four years ago, and state Democrats saying they don't expect coronavirus fears to dampen turnout. A procedural change in the state's caucuses make them function more like a traditional election, with citizens given the ability to drop in at a caucus site, cast their ballot and leave. (Bismarck Tribune)
- Sanders jabbed Biden for voting for the Iraq War during a Monday rally in St. Louis. (St. Louis Post-Dispatch)
- Sterling Heights, Mich., Mayor Michael Taylor, a life-long Republican who voted for Trump in 2016, endorsed Biden, saying he's the candidate who can "appeal to moderates and Republicans like me who don't want to see four more years of President Trump." (Newsweek)

The Trump campaign has sent paychecks to Eric's and Don Jr.'s significant others.

Parscale Strategy, the firm run by the president's campaign manager Brad Parscale, has been used to make payments out of public view to Lara Trump, the wife of the president's son Eric, and Kimberly Guilfoyle, the girlfriend of Donald Trump Jr., who have been surrogates and taken on advisory roles. (NYT)

Tech experts don't think social media companies are doing enough to safeguard their platforms.

The Technology 202's Cat Zakrzewski asked more than 100 experts if social media companies have done enough to prevent manipulation of voters on their platforms. The resounding answer: No. The Technology 202 Network, from Cat and researcher Tonya Riley, launches today. It's an invitation-only panel of experts from across government, industry and the consumer advocacy community who will vote in regular surveys on the most pressing issues in the field. (Check it out here.)

---

The new world order

The sun sets behind a C-17 cargo plane in Iraq, as U.S. service members wait to board. (Tech. Sgt. Erik Gudmundson/Air Force)

Two Americans were killed in Iraq.

“Two members of a Marine Special Operations team were killed in Iraq during an operation targeting a mountain cave complex that Islamic State militants were using as a hideout, marking the first U.S. combat deaths in the country since last summer,” Dan Lamothe and Louisa Loveluck report.

“The operation Sunday required the coalition to dispatch reinforcement forces to recover the remains of the Americans who were killed from the caves ... It took nearly six hours to do so ... The service members’ identities were being withheld as family members were notified.”

The Trump Organization reported a drop in profits from foreign governments.

“Trump’s company said it donated $105,465 to the U.S. Treasury last month, an amount that it said reflects its profits from foreign-government bookings at its hotels last year. The number is down sharply from its 2019 donation of about $191,000, showing a drop in spending by foreign governments at Trump hotels,” Jonathan O’Connell and David Fahrenthold report.

A jury failed to reach a verdict in the case that the CIA called the “biggest leak” in agency history.

“A jury in New York failed to reach a verdict Monday on whether a former CIA employee gave government hacking tools to WikiLeaks,” Shayna Jacobs and Shane Harris report. “Jurors, who had begun their deliberations last week, told Judge Paul Crotty that they were ‘extremely deadlocked’ on many of the charges. Joshua Schulte, 31, had been accused of disclosing the hacking tools and disclosing information to a reporter at The Post while in jail awaiting trial. The jury did find Schulte guilty on two counts of making false statements to investigators and contempt of court. But the failure to reach a unanimous agreement on the most serious charges of disclosing classified information was a significant blow to the government’s case.”

Ethiopian investigators blamed design flaws for the Boeing 737 Max crash a year ago.

“The interim findings came as families of the victims from around the world gathered in Ethiopia for events commemorating the crash anniversary,” Lori Aratani, Ian Duncan and Michael Laris report.

“According to the report, the ‘differences’ training provided to the airline’s pilots — meant to instruct them on how the Max would behave differently than an earlier version of the 737 — was found to be ‘inadequate.’”

Netanyahu's self-declared victory is looking less certain in Israel.

“In an effort to break the country’s year-long political deadlock, [Benny] Gantz reached out publicly to some unlikely coalition partners, betting that their shared goal of ousting [Benjamin] Netanyahu could bring them together,” Ruth Eglash reports. “Success would require Gantz winning — and accepting — support from the Joint List, a slate of four Arab-majority parties representing Israel’s roughly 1.8 million Arab citizens. If he does manage to secure their backing, his allies in Israel’s 120-seat parliament, or Knesset, would outnumber those of Netanyahu’s bloc of right-wing and religious parties, affording Gantz the chance to scrape together a narrow coalition government. While it would not include the Arab party members directly, this coalition would rely on them to pass essential legislation.”

---

Social media speed read

Rep. Paul Gosar (R-Ariz), who went into self-quarantine after being exposed to the virus, mused about death. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) replied:

Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez ✓

@AOC

If it helps at all Rep. Gosar, you get roasted in committee almost every week so that's kind of the same thing
twitter.com/drpaulgosar/st...

Paul Gosar ✓ @DrPaulGosar

Been thinking about life and mortality today. I'd rather die gloriously in battle than from a virus. In a way it doesn't matter. But it kinda does.

♥ 113K 1:19 AM - Mar 10, 2020

💬 13.5K people are talking about this

The virus isn't stopping Trump, a known germaphobe, from shaking hands with supporters:

David Nakamura ✓

@DavidNakamura

I was literally talking on the phone about coronavirus with a former Secret Service agent who said: "Forget about rope lines. Those are the ultimate threat given hand-to-hand contact is the way this spreads" ... when this @robcrilly pool photo of Trump in Florida hit my inbox.

♥ 1,666 3:22 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 745 people are talking about this

Nancy Pelosi didn't hold back after being asked about Trump not being tested for the virus:

Manu Raju ✓

@mkraju

Asked Pelosi if she thinks Trump should be tested after his interactions with Doug Collins and Matt Gaetz.
Pelosi: "Tested for what?"
me: coronavirus
Pelosi: "Oh, I thought he should be tested for a long time now."
And she walked off

♥ 57,6K 11:11 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 12K people are talking about this

Ted Cruz is handling his quarantine – and an old conspiracy theory about his past -- with humor:

Videos of the day

Montana Gov. Steve Bullock's daughter celebrated her dad's decision to run for Senate with a TikTok:

Caroline Bullock

@c_g_bullock

Celebrating as Stevie B shimmies his way into the Senate!! 🤘❤️ #stevieb2020 @GovernorBullock @stevebullockmt

♥️ 2,381 6:39 PM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 424 people are talking about this

Stephen Colbert said he's "not testing positive, just staying positive":

Seth Meyers doesn't think the New York governor's coronavirus advice to subway commuters was helpful:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 11:40:02 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. INTERIOR:

Department dusts off decade-old pandemic plan

The Interior Department is digging into a pandemic influenza plan first prepared in 2007, Secretary David Bernhardt said today, detailing how the agency is hoping to adapt it to the needs of about 70,000 employees amid the rapidly unfolding coronavirus crisis.

TOP STORIES

2. EPA:

White House spills red ink on 'secret science' rule

3. WETLANDS:

FWS softens enforcement of Prairie Pothole drainage

4. INTERIOR:

BLM official skirts questions on headquarters move

POLITICS

5. EPA:

NYC office eases telework, leave rules over virus concerns

6. ADVOCACY:

D.C. Environmental Film Festival canceled over coronavirus

CONGRESS

7. CHEMICALS:

Del. lawmakers want Air Force brass visit over contamination

NATURAL RESOURCES

8. WILDLIFE:

Sea turtles mistake the smell of plastic for food — study

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Tornado relief agencies ask volunteers to take a day off

10. FISHERIES:

Idaho wildlife officials investigate sturgeon poaching

AIR AND WATER

---

11. WATER POLICY:

Detroit plan aims to thwart spread of coronavirus

ENERGY

---

12. OIL AND GAS:

Market turmoil forces DOE to scrap sale from strategic reserve

STATES

---

13. NEW MEXICO:

Governor vetoes spending on oil price, coronavirus concerns

14. ALASKA:

Dunleavy seeks to assert calm over outbreak, energy prices

15. ALABAMA:

4-year-old red panda dies at Birmingham Zoo

16. NEBRASKA:

Fire blackens thousands of acres north of North Platte

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. JAPAN:

Sea release debate spotlights safety of Fukushima wastewater

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 11:40:19 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. INTERIOR:

Department dusts off decade-old pandemic plan

The Interior Department is digging into a pandemic influenza plan first prepared in 2007, Secretary David Bernhardt said today, detailing how the agency is hoping to adapt it to the needs of about 70,000 employees amid the rapidly unfolding coronavirus crisis.

TOP STORIES

2. EPA:

White House spills red ink on 'secret science' rule

3. WETLANDS:

FWS softens enforcement of Prairie Pothole drainage

4. INTERIOR:

BLM official skirts questions on headquarters move

POLITICS

5. EPA:

NYC office eases telework, leave rules over virus concerns

6. ADVOCACY:

D.C. Environmental Film Festival canceled over coronavirus

CONGRESS

7. CHEMICALS:

Del. lawmakers want Air Force brass visit over contamination

NATURAL RESOURCES

8. WILDLIFE:

Sea turtles mistake the smell of plastic for food — study

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Tornado relief agencies ask volunteers to take a day off

10. FISHERIES:

Idaho wildlife officials investigate sturgeon poaching

AIR AND WATER

---

11. WATER POLICY:

Detroit plan aims to thwart spread of coronavirus

ENERGY

---

12. OIL AND GAS:

Market turmoil forces DOE to scrap sale from strategic reserve

STATES

---

13. NEW MEXICO:

Governor vetoes spending on oil price, coronavirus concerns

14. ALASKA:

Dunleavy seeks to assert calm over outbreak, energy prices

15. ALABAMA:

4-year-old red panda dies at Birmingham Zoo

16. NEBRASKA:

Fire blackens thousands of acres north of North Platte

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. JAPAN:

Sea release debate spotlights safety of Fukushima wastewater

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 11:41:16 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. INTERIOR:

Department dusts off decade-old pandemic plan

The Interior Department is digging into a pandemic influenza plan first prepared in 2007, Secretary David Bernhardt said today, detailing how the agency is hoping to adapt it to the needs of about 70,000 employees amid the rapidly unfolding coronavirus crisis.

TOP STORIES

---

2. EPA:

White House spills red ink on 'secret science' rule

3. WETLANDS:

FWS softens enforcement of Prairie Pothole drainage

4. INTERIOR:

BLM official skirts questions on headquarters move

POLITICS

---

5. EPA:

NYC office eases telework, leave rules over virus concerns

6. ADVOCACY:

D.C. Environmental Film Festival canceled over coronavirus

CONGRESS

---

7. CHEMICALS:

Del. lawmakers want Air Force brass visit over contamination

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

8. WILDLIFE:

Sea turtles mistake the smell of plastic for food — study

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Tornado relief agencies ask volunteers to take a day off

10. FISHERIES:

Idaho wildlife officials investigate sturgeon poaching

AIR AND WATER

---

11. WATER POLICY:

Detroit plan aims to thwart spread of coronavirus

ENERGY

---

12. OIL AND GAS:

Market turmoil forces DOE to scrap sale from strategic reserve

STATES

---

13. NEW MEXICO:

Governor vetoes spending on oil price, coronavirus concerns

14. ALASKA:

Dunleavy seeks to assert calm over outbreak, energy prices

15. ALABAMA:

4-year-old red panda dies at Birmingham Zoo

16. NEBRASKA:

Fire blackens thousands of acres north of North Platte

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. JAPAN:

Sea release debate spotlights safety of Fukushima wastewater

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 11:41:45 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. INTERIOR:

Department dusts off decade-old pandemic plan

The Interior Department is digging into a pandemic influenza plan first prepared in 2007, Secretary David Bernhardt said today, detailing how the agency is hoping to adapt it to the needs of about 70,000 employees amid the rapidly unfolding coronavirus crisis.

TOP STORIES

2. EPA:

White House spills red ink on 'secret science' rule

3. WETLANDS:

FWS softens enforcement of Prairie Pothole drainage

4. INTERIOR:

BLM official skirts questions on headquarters move

POLITICS

5. EPA:

NYC office eases telework, leave rules over virus concerns

6. ADVOCACY:

D.C. Environmental Film Festival canceled over coronavirus

CONGRESS

7. CHEMICALS:

Del. lawmakers want Air Force brass visit over contamination

NATURAL RESOURCES

8. WILDLIFE:

Sea turtles mistake the smell of plastic for food — study

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Tornado relief agencies ask volunteers to take a day off

10. FISHERIES:

Idaho wildlife officials investigate sturgeon poaching

AIR AND WATER

---

11. WATER POLICY:

Detroit plan aims to thwart spread of coronavirus

ENERGY

---

12. OIL AND GAS:

Market turmoil forces DOE to scrap sale from strategic reserve

STATES

---

13. NEW MEXICO:

Governor vetoes spending on oil price, coronavirus concerns

14. ALASKA:

Dunleavy seeks to assert calm over outbreak, energy prices

15. ALABAMA:

4-year-old red panda dies at Birmingham Zoo

16. NEBRASKA:

Fire blackens thousands of acres north of North Platte

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. JAPAN:

Sea release debate spotlights safety of Fukushima wastewater

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 11:41:48 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. INTERIOR:

Department dusts off decade-old pandemic plan

The Interior Department is digging into a pandemic influenza plan first prepared in 2007, Secretary David Bernhardt said today, detailing how the agency is hoping to adapt it to the needs of about 70,000 employees amid the rapidly unfolding coronavirus crisis.

TOP STORIES

2. EPA:

White House spills red ink on 'secret science' rule

3. WETLANDS:

FWS softens enforcement of Prairie Pothole drainage

4. INTERIOR:

BLM official skirts questions on headquarters move

POLITICS

5. EPA:

NYC office eases telework, leave rules over virus concerns

6. ADVOCACY:

D.C. Environmental Film Festival canceled over coronavirus

CONGRESS

7. CHEMICALS:

Del. lawmakers want Air Force brass visit over contamination

NATURAL RESOURCES

8. WILDLIFE:

Sea turtles mistake the smell of plastic for food — study

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Tornado relief agencies ask volunteers to take a day off

10. FISHERIES:

Idaho wildlife officials investigate sturgeon poaching

AIR AND WATER

---

11. WATER POLICY:

Detroit plan aims to thwart spread of coronavirus

ENERGY

---

12. OIL AND GAS:

Market turmoil forces DOE to scrap sale from strategic reserve

STATES

---

13. NEW MEXICO:

Governor vetoes spending on oil price, coronavirus concerns

14. ALASKA:

Dunleavy seeks to assert calm over outbreak, energy prices

15. ALABAMA:

4-year-old red panda dies at Birmingham Zoo

16. NEBRASKA:

Fire blackens thousands of acres north of North Platte

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. JAPAN:

Sea release debate spotlights safety of Fukushima wastewater

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2020 11:42:07 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. INTERIOR:

Department dusts off decade-old pandemic plan

The Interior Department is digging into a pandemic influenza plan first prepared in 2007, Secretary David Bernhardt said today, detailing how the agency is hoping to adapt it to the needs of about 70,000 employees amid the rapidly unfolding coronavirus crisis.

TOP STORIES

2. EPA:

White House spills red ink on 'secret science' rule

3. WETLANDS:

FWS softens enforcement of Prairie Pothole drainage

4. INTERIOR:

BLM official skirts questions on headquarters move

POLITICS

5. EPA:

NYC office eases telework, leave rules over virus concerns

6. ADVOCACY:

D.C. Environmental Film Festival canceled over coronavirus

CONGRESS

7. CHEMICALS:

Del. lawmakers want Air Force brass visit over contamination

NATURAL RESOURCES

8. WILDLIFE:

Sea turtles mistake the smell of plastic for food — study

9. SEVERE WEATHER:

Tornado relief agencies ask volunteers to take a day off

10. FISHERIES:

Idaho wildlife officials investigate sturgeon poaching

AIR AND WATER

---

11. WATER POLICY:

Detroit plan aims to thwart spread of coronavirus

ENERGY

---

12. OIL AND GAS:

Market turmoil forces DOE to scrap sale from strategic reserve

STATES

---

13. NEW MEXICO:

Governor vetoes spending on oil price, coronavirus concerns

14. ALASKA:

Dunleavy seeks to assert calm over outbreak, energy prices

15. ALABAMA:

4-year-old red panda dies at Birmingham Zoo

16. NEBRASKA:

Fire blackens thousands of acres north of North Platte

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. JAPAN:

Sea release debate spotlights safety of Fukushima wastewater

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: The anatomy of the Michigan win that put Joe Biden on a glide path to the Democratic nomination
Date: Wednesday, March 11, 2020 8:23:48 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

The anatomy of the Michigan win that put Joe Biden on a glide path to the Democratic nomination

Joe Biden appears to have swept every county in Missouri and Mississippi on Tuesday, and he's currently leading in 82 of the 83 counties in Michigan. The lone holdout is Ingham County, which includes the state capital of Lansing, where Bernie Sanders leads by just nine votes out of more than 52,000 ballots cast.

Four years after the independent senator from Vermont won a major upset in the Wolverine State over Hillary Clinton, beating her in all but 10 counties, Biden bested him statewide by 16 points. The decisive victory puts the former vice president on a trajectory to clinch the nomination without a contested convention.

Sanders avoided being swept by winning North Dakota, which offered only 14 delegates, the smallest prize of the six states that voted on what's being referred to as Super Tuesday II. Washington state remains too close to call, with both candidates tied at 32 percent, as mail-in ballots are counted. Biden also won Idaho, another state Sanders claimed four years ago, which switched from caucuses to a primary.

The Michigan results recast the storyline of the 2016 election in a fresh light and undercut a central rationale of Sanders's second bid for the nomination. The senator's team incorrectly assumed coming into this cycle that the bulk of people who voted for him in 2016 agreed with his calls for political revolution when, in fact, many appear to have mainly been casting protest votes against Clinton. This was especially true among moderates, who wouldn't naturally gravitate toward a self-described democratic socialist, and in rural areas.

In 2016, the exit polls showed that Sanders won 44 percent of Michigan primary voters who identified as moderate or conservative. On Tuesday, he garnered just 25 percent of this constituency, which accounted for 39 percent of the electorate, according to exit polling.

Three in 10 voters in Michigan's open Democratic primary identified as independent. Sanders led Biden among this group by 5 points, 48 percent to 43 percent. But he beat Clinton by 43 points among indies. Meanwhile, Biden won self-identified Democrats by 22 points compared to Clinton's 18 points.

Michigan is worthy of special attention because Sanders's upset was so symbolically significant in 2016 but also because it was a harbinger of Donald Trump's narrow victory that fall. Trump became the first Republican since George H.W. Bush in 1988 to carry the state, and Democrats need these 16 electoral votes from the industrial Midwest in almost any realistic scenario that wins them the White House.

Here are five other notable factors behind Biden's win in the Wolverine State:

1. Sanders's advantage with the white working class has eroded. Biden won among voters who didn't graduate from college by the same margin (14 points) as he did those who have degrees, according to the exits. Last time, Sanders won white voters in the state by 14 points. Exit polls show Biden led by 11 points among whites this time.

2. Turnout spiked, thanks largely to the suburbs. A key reason that Clinton lost Michigan four years ago was lower-than-expected turnout, especially in the suburbs around Detroit. In 2016, about 1.2 million ballots were cast in the Democratic primary. That rose to an estimated 1.7 million in 2020. This is among the sharpest increases in any of the 23 states that have voted over the last six weeks.

The biggest surge in turnout came in suburban areas like Oakland County outside Detroit, where Democrats also unseated a House Republican in the 2018 midterms. Biden won Oakland County by 22 points, whereas Clinton carried it by 5 points. To understand Biden's win statewide, it's equally important to consider that there were about 175,000 Democratic votes cast there in 2016 but more than 250,000 votes this year.

3. Women broke hard for Biden. He won among female voters by 23 points, and they made up 54 percent of the electorate. Men, who accounted for 46 percent of voters, were split more evenly, with 47 percent backing Biden to 43 percent for Sanders. The senator's team saw this problem coming in their internal polling, and they tried to adjust accordingly. I wrote from Grand Rapids on Monday about how Sanders had sharpened his attacks on Biden's record related to abortion rights in an unsuccessful effort to prevent women from coalescing behind Biden.

4. Biden's firewall among African American voters held. He won black voters by 39 points, with higher turnout in urban Detroit. In Mississippi, black voters made up almost two-thirds of the electorate, with more than 8 in 10 going for Biden. In Missouri, Biden won 3 of 4 black voters.

5. College students didn't turn out in force for Sanders. Biden beat Sanders in Washtenaw County, which is home to the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. Sanders held a rally there on Sunday night that drew more than 10,000 people. Since his victory in the Nevada caucuses, where he fared especially well with younger Latinos, Sanders has not been able to expand the electorate with new voters enough to offset the surge in turnout among more traditional Democrats who harbor doubts about his electability.

To be sure, Sanders won 18- to 29-year-olds by 57 points. But they made up 16 percent of the electorate. Meanwhile, Biden won voters 65 and older by 51 points, according to the same exit polling, and they accounted for 20 percent of voters. He also won 45- to 64-year-olds, who accounted for 42 percent of voters, by 36 points. Older voters tend to view Sanders leerily, especially the democratic socialism he espouses and the political revolution he promises. It remains a problem for Sanders that he has not been able to make inroads with seniors, who most reliably turn out in primaries.

---

Quote of the day

Powered by  LiveIntent

“There’s no sugarcoating it,” said Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.), 30, who introduced Sanders at his rally in Ann Arbor. “It’s a tough night for the movement overall.”

Supporters take selfies with Bernie Sanders after he visited a polling place on Tuesday in Dearborn Heights, Mich. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

What’s next for Sanders: Hard choices about the path ahead.

The outbreak of the novel coronavirus prompted local public health officials to ask Biden and Sanders to cancel their planned rallies on Tuesday night in Cleveland. Biden flew to Philadelphia, where he spoke to members of his campaign staff and the press corps that travels with him, while Sanders went home to Burlington, Vt. His decision not to speak publicly last night after his defeats raised questions about the future of his campaign and his strategy going forward.

Andrew Yang, who supported Sanders in 2016, became the latest former presidential candidate to board the Biden bandwagon. “The math shows

Joe is our prohibitive nominee,” the entrepreneur said on CNN, where he’s now a paid contributor. “We need to bring the party together. We need to start working on defeating Donald Trump in the fall.”

“The past week showcased how much the Sanders campaign is an unruly coalition rather than a tight operation, as allies voiced various conflicting theories about what he needed to do,” writes Sean Sullivan, who has been following Sanders full-time for a year. “Some said Sanders needs to show a more personal side, a recurring suggestion that Sanders has repeatedly been reluctant or unable to embrace. ... The campaign has also experienced a push-and-pull over strategic decisions, debating in recent days whether to release internal polling showing a competitive race with Biden in Michigan, for example ... In the end, the campaign did not release any polling data, opting not to risk setting expectations and then falling short.”

Sanders’s efforts to improve his standing among black voters have been especially awkward in recent days. “When the campaign scrapped plans for Sanders to spend time in Mississippi in favor of Michigan, it signaled to many Democrats that he was effectively giving up on black voters in the South,” Sean notes. “Sanders appeared [on Saturday night] in Flint, Mich., at an event billed as a town hall on racial justice. Yet of the 1,200 attendees, only about three dozen were black. Then the senator decided at the last minute not to deliver his planned speech contrasting his record with Biden’s on racial justice issues — because, a spokesman said, he wanted to let the African American panelists onstage speak about their own experiences. Still, the effect was to suggest that Sanders continues to be uncomfortable delving personally into issues that affect black people’s lives.”

There are few game-changing opportunities left for Sanders. “The candidates are scheduled to face off in a two-hour debate on Sunday night in Phoenix, perhaps the last chance for a shift,” Sean, Matt Viser and

Michael Scherer report. “Next Tuesday, four more states will vote: delegate-rich Florida, Illinois, Ohio and Arizona. A spokeswoman for the Democratic National Committee said Tuesday there were no plans to cancel the Arizona debate, though organizers continue to speak daily with local health officials. The DNC did alter the format, however, by banning the live audience that has attended each of the previous debates.”

What’s next for Biden: A front porch campaign?

Biden canceled a Thursday rally in Tampa. Instead, he will deliver an address on how he would respond to the coronavirus from his hometown of Wilmington, Del. The former vice president has been shortening his stump speech, which he now mostly reads from a teleprompter. His advisers are trying to limit his opportunities for gaffes and keep him as above the fray as possible. If the coronavirus outbreak keeps him off the trail, perhaps he could try to replicate the strategy of giving speeches and greeting people on his front porch that allowed James Garfield to win the 1880 election.

In a sober-minded speech at the National Constitution Center in Philadelphia on Tuesday night, Biden praised Sanders supporters “for their tireless energy and their passion.” The remarks appeared crafted to exude inevitability, that he will win the nomination, and to convey a presidential aura. “We share a common goal,” Biden said to Sanders backers, “and together we’ll defeat Donald Trump.”

Biden’s allies are going further in trying to push Sanders out of the race. “I think it is time for us to shut this primary down,” House Majority Whip Jim Clyburn (D), who delivered a pivotal endorsement before South Carolina’s primary, told NPR. “It is time for us to cancel the rest of these debates because you don’t do anything but get yourself in trouble if you continue in this contest when it’s obvious that the numbers will not shake out for you.”

“Even if Sanders chooses to keep running far into the spring, Biden will have to begin to make a swift pivot toward the general election, with the goal of turning a campaign operation that has drawn criticism even from prominent supporters into a machine capable of waging a general election against the Trump forces,” Dan Balz writes. “He will need to scale up his operation, sharpen his message and reach beyond to voters who either shifted to Trump in 2016 or sat on the sidelines.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

People walk into a martial arts school in New Rochelle, N.Y. Residents are free to move within a one-mile radius, but schools and other gathering places are closed. (John Taggart for The Washington Post)

Confirmed cases in the U.S. topped 1,000.

“Five more deaths — including two in Washington state and one each in California, New Jersey and South Dakota — were reported Tuesday, bringing the total number of deaths in the country to 31,” our colleagues report in a coronavirus live blog. “A growing list of at least 19 states have declared a state of emergency, including Colorado, North Carolina and Michigan, the latter of which reported its first two cases.”

- The National Guard was deployed to New Rochelle, N.Y., to stem the spread of the virus. Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) took the drastic step of creating what he called a “containment zone” within a one-mile radius of this suburb after 104 residents tested positive. (Ben Guarino, Sarah Pulliam Bailey, Laura Meckler and Katie Zezima)
- Students at the University of Dayton in Ohio clashed with police in riot gear last night after they were ordered to leave campus over virus fears. (Journal-News)

- Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) has restricted gatherings of more than 250 people in three counties around Seattle. (Seattle Times)
- A meeting for managers at the Boston-area biotech company Biogen late last month has been linked to dozens of infections across the country. (WSJ)
- More passengers are expected to disembark from the Grand Princess cruise ship, which is docked in Oakland, Calif. More than 1,400 people left the ship as of last night out more than 3,000 who were onboard. (Teo Armus)
- Wall Street is poised for losses today. The Dow tumbled 700 points, or about 3 percent, at the open. (Taylor Telford and Thomas Heath)
- Coachella, the California musical festival, was postponed from April to October. The news come days after Austin's SXSW festival was canceled, sending a shock through the city's economy. (Sonia Rao)
- A quarter of Florida's population is older than 60, and many people have chronic illnesses that make them more vulnerable to the disease, putting the state's health system at risk of being overloaded. The virus is already having a major effect on the state's largest industry – tourism. (Lori Rozsa, Tim Craig and Joel Achenbach)

Shortages are causing problems.

The nation's face mask stockpile hasn't been substantially replenished since 2009. The reserves weren't significantly restored after the 2009 H1N1 pandemic, Beth Reinhard and Emma Brown report.

- CDC Director Robert Redfield said he is not confident that labs in the U.S. have an adequate stock of the supplies used to extract genetic material from any virus in a patient's sample — a critical step in coronavirus testing. (Politico)
- Two Trump allies got tested despite the shortage. Reps. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) and Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), the incoming White House chief of staff, said their tests showed no infection. They also said they were exhibiting no symptoms of respiratory illness, raising questions of why they were tested at all. (Mike DeBonis and Carolyn Johnson) Gaetz told the Pensacola News Journal that he slept in a Walmart parking lot on Monday night after potentially exposing Trump to the coronavirus because he didn't want to accidentally spread the virus to anyone else.

- A coronavirus conference was canceled because of the coronavirus. The Council on Foreign Relations canceled a “Doing Business Under Coronavirus” roundtable in New York that was scheduled for Friday. (Bloomberg News)

The total number of cases worldwide surpassed 120,000.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel announced the “virus has arrived,” warning that up to 70 percent of her country could end up infected. There are more than 80,000 cases in China and more than 10,000 in Italy. Both Iran and South Korea have around 8,000 confirmed cases and other nations are suggesting they will reach similar levels soon. China announced an increase in cases of the virus that had been imported from outside the country, with one case apparently coming from the U.S., per our live blog. Some residents can go back to work in the Chinese province of Hubei, where the outbreak started, but travel restrictions remain.

- China’s next challenge is repairing the broken links in the world’s supply chain. (Anna Fifield)
- Italy’s lockdown has stripped the country of its most basic routines and joys. (Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli)
- U.K. health official Nadine Dorries tested positive for the virus, and the Bank of England announced that it would cut interest rates by from 0.75 percent to 0.25 percent, a record low for Britain’s central bank. (BBC)
- Bahrain’s Ministry of Health said of the 165 of its citizens just flown back from Iran, 77 of them tested positive. (Paul Schemm)
- Coronavirus cases in Africa passed 100. Nearly all are imported from Europe’s hotspots. (Max Bearak)

Allergy season is coming in full force.

“Doctors worry allergy sufferers will conflate their routine reactions to pollen with coronavirus symptoms and overwhelm an already-strained health care system with panicked visits,” Sindya Bhanoo reports, especially in D.C., where pollen counts are already at moderate to high levels. “Because of warmer temperatures, allergy season started in February this year instead of March ... so Washington-area residents are already exhibiting symptoms. Data show that some people infected with the coronavirus experience similar symptoms, such as coughing, nasal congestion, runny nose and sore throat. ... Allergies, which are an overreaction of the immune system to foreign particles, should not trigger chills, body aches or fevers ... Those are the classic signs of a viral infection, such as covid-19. In addition, while patients with coronavirus can have nasal congestion, it is not common. The World Health Organization found that only about 5 percent of the coronavirus patients in China had nasal congestion. About 14 percent had a sore throat.”

The uneven federal response

Trump discussed his ideas for economic stimulus with

Senate Republicans.

Visiting the Capitol on Tuesday, Trump said he “wants to dramatically reduce the payroll tax through at least the end of the year, a plan that could deliver a massive — but expensive — boost to many businesses and voters as he heads into the November presidential election,” Erica Werner, Josh Dawsey, Seung Min Kim and Robert Costa report. “But his proposal was not warmly received by Republicans, and it was also panned by Democrats, leaving policymakers searching for any common ground as the coronavirus’s outbreak continues to take its toll on the economy. One area of consensus, though, could be around the issue of paid sick leave for employees, an idea Democrats support and in which Trump has shown some interest. But in the past the two sides have taken different approaches, and it’s not clear whether agreement can be reached. ... One senator at Tuesday’s lunch meeting with Trump said the president also floated the idea of allowing Americans to delay filing their tax returns in April ... and providing aid to the travel industry.

"In addition to large tax cuts, Trump talked with Republican senators about what steps they could take to extend emergency aid to U.S. oil and gas companies hurt by the drop in oil prices. ... The payroll tax cut alone could reduce taxes by around $400 billion through the end of the year. White House officials would not say whether they had any plans to offset those losses, which would cause the budget deficit to grow by about 40 percent. ...

"Top House Democrats, meanwhile, said Tuesday they planned to move quickly on a relief package that narrowly targeted individuals and families affected by the coronavirus outbreak. The measures floated by [Nancy] Pelosi and other leaders included an expansion of unemployment insurance, food stamps and other public assistance programs as well as allowing for more sick and family leave. The legislation could be released as soon as Wednesday with a vote coming as soon as Thursday.”

Providing federal assistance to oil and gas companies would face resistance from those who support direct aid to workers. “The federal assistance is likely to take the form of low-interest government loans to the shale companies, whose lines of credit to major financial institutions have been choked off,” Jeff Stein, Will Englund, Steven Mufson and Costa report. “But help for oil and gas producers may prove a politically difficult lift for the administration, in part because they faced sagging prices even before the coronavirus outbreak, some experts said. It may be hard to sort out which sectors are deserving of help ... Some economists also oppose providing assistance to companies rather than ensuring it goes to workers hit by a downturn.”

The administration wants federal workers to be ready to telework full time.

“The Trump administration is racing to develop contingency plans that would allow hundreds of thousands of employees to work remotely full time,” Lisa Rein reports. “The Office of Personnel Management, which oversees policy for the workforce of 2.1 million, has urged agency heads in recent days to ‘immediately review’ their telework policies, sign paperwork with employees laying out their duties, issue laptops and grant access to computer networks. ... That emergency decision follows similar steps by more than a dozen Seattle-area federal field offices, the Interior Department in Denver and NASA’s Silicon Valley research center, which either have closed or shifted to telework as some employees tested positive for the virus. On Tuesday, the International Trade Administration started sending staffers home to self-quarantine if they had traveled out of the country. The State Department told its staff to set up emergency teleconference drills — and alternate who comes into the office to use classified systems, to ensure that colleagues gather only in small groups. ... The Trump administration scaled back working from home as a regular practice at multiple large agencies.”

The CDC blocked thousands of flu samples from being tested for coronavirus.

“For months, as part of a research project into the flu, [infectious disease expert Helen Chu] and a team of researchers had been collecting nasal swabs from residents experiencing symptoms throughout the Puget Sound region. To repurpose the tests for monitoring the coronavirus, they would need the support of state and federal officials. But nearly everywhere Dr. Chu turned, officials repeatedly rejected the idea, interviews and emails show, even as weeks crawled by and outbreaks emerged in countries outside of China,” the NYT reports. “By Feb. 25, Dr. Chu and her colleagues could not bear to wait any longer. They began performing coronavirus tests, without government approval. What came back confirmed their worst fear.”

A GOP congressman criticized Trump's proposed CDC cuts.

“This was the day Rep. Tom Cole (R-Okla.) has been warning about,” Aaron Blake reports. “Back in 2017, when the Trump administration first proposed steep cuts to programs that handle disease outbreaks, Cole said, ‘I promise you the president is much more likely in his term to have a deal with a pandemic than an act of terrorism. I hope he doesn’t have to deal with either one, but you have to be ready to deal with both.’ Now that the potential pandemic has come, Cole is re-upping his long-standing criticisms of the Trump administration’s posture toward preparedness. ... At a House subcommittee hearing featuring [the CDC director], Cole offered some veiled rebukes of how the administration has worked with people like him on this issue.”

---

Other developments that shouldn't be overlooked

William Evanina, director of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center, takes media questions in Washington. (Bill O'Leary/The Washington Post)

An intelligence official claimed there's no evidence Russia has taken steps to help any 2020 candidate.

In closed briefings to the House and Senate, “the head of national counterintelligence, William Evanina, appeared to be tempering an assessment delivered to lawmakers in the House last month that Russia had developed a ‘preference’ for [Trump],” Ellen Nakashima and Seung Min Kim report. “Evanina told senators that the Russians ‘continue to be broadly engaged in social media activities designed to divide us further, to discredit our electoral system and to disrupt our election,’ said one official present at the all-members meeting. In the Senate, Evanina’s carefully worded answer came in response to the first question asked — by Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (Ky.) — and ‘felt orchestrated,’ said a second official, who was briefed on the meeting. ‘Both question and response were clearly pre-drafted.’

“The intelligence officials who gave the briefing, including National Security Agency Director Paul M. Nakasone and FBI Director Christopher A. Wray, did not give senators an impression that the Trump administration has a solid grip on dealing with foreign interference in the coming election, said a third official briefed on the session. ... In the House, [Pelosi] and Rep. Adam B. Schiff (D-Calif.), the Intelligence Committee chairman, challenged the briefer on what struck them as an effort to play down the assessment given last month by Shelby Pierson, the intelligence community’s point person on foreign election threats, a fourth official said. ...

“Senators also were disconcerted that [Richard] Grenell, as the head of the intelligence community, was not present ... The heads of other agencies, including acting homeland security secretary Chad Wolf, were there, and Grenell had been scheduled to appear, according to a list of participants circulated to lawmakers on Monday. But Grenell declined to go to the Hill, citing apprehension about his preparedness to address sensitive subjects that tend to upset the president, according to three people familiar with the matter.”

Russia’s parliament offered a path for Vladimir Putin to stay in power for an additional 12 years after his term expires in 2024.

The plan, floated and supported by Putin’s ruling United Russia party, is part of a sweeping rewrite of Russia’s constitution and would reset the current term limits to zero. (Isabelle Khurshudyan)

The D.C. Circuit ruled that DOJ must disclose Bob Mueller’s secret grand jury evidence to the House.

“The divided ruling, which can be appealed, is a victory for Democratic lawmakers in one of a set of separation-of-powers lawsuits filed before the House voted to impeach Trump in December and before the Senate acquitted him,” Ann Marimow reports. “The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit upheld a lower court order that gives Congress access to certain secret material from [Mueller's] investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election. ... Judge Judith W. Rogers found the House in its impeachment investigation was legally engaged in a judicial process that exempts Congress from secrecy rules that typically shield grand jury materials from disclosure. Grand jury records, she noted, are court records — not Justice Department records — and have historically been released to Congress in the course of impeachment investigations involving three federal judges and two presidents. ... Judge Neomi Rao [a Trump appointee] dissented."

Lawmakers proposed bipartisan limits on the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act.

"House Democrats and Republicans proposed a surveillance bill Tuesday that would extend provisions used for counterterrorism investigations while putting new restrictions and safeguards on the FBI to address criticism of how agents investigated a Trump campaign adviser in 2016," Devlin Barrett reports. "To address those concerns, the new bill would require the attorney general to sign off on any FISA surveillance targeting a federal officeholder or a candidate for federal office. ... [The bill] would step up internal reviews and data reporting requirements on FISA cases; increase the potential prison sentence for unauthorized disclosures about FISA surveillance; and require FISA applicants to assure the court they have provided information that might call into question their factual assertions ... The bill would also bring to an official end a controversial phone records collection program that the government has abandoned as costly and ineffective."

Sonia Sotomayor recused herself from a case with consequences for the electoral college.

The justice will "not participate in one of the two cases the Supreme Court will hear in April to decide whether the Constitution forbids states from dictating how members of the electoral college cast their votes for president,” Robert Barnes reports. “The clerk of the court informed lawyers in the case Tuesday that Sotomayor realized she is friends with one of the parties in one of the cases, from Colorado. Sotomayor will still participate in the other case, from the state of Washington.”

---

Social media speed read

Trump endorsed former attorney general Jeff Sessions' opponent in the Alabama GOP Senate runoff:

The stage was set up for Sanders's rally in Ohio before it was canceled:

Ohio's governor defended the decision to ask the candidates to cancel their events:

The New York City mayor and former 2020 contender called on Elizabeth Warren to endorse Sanders:

A man sent anti-Muslim tweets to a Virginia congressional candidate, who responded by helping pay down his medical bills:

Qasim Rashid for Congress ✓

@QasimRashid

Last week a Conservative constituent sent me deeply hurtful anti-Muslim tweets 😞

I replied by donating to his GoFundMe to help cover his crushing medical debt

He wrote me a thoughtful & compassionate apology & asked me to visit him

Today I met my new friend Oz 🤝 #WinTheHearts

♥ 77.2K 2:40 AM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 12K people are talking about this

The University of Dayton's student newspaper shared images from the clash between students and police after the campus was closed to contain the coronavirus:

Flyer News @FlyerNews · 5h
Replying to @FlyerNews
Multiple students have reported to Flyer News that what is presumed to be tear gas was shot at students. Students were seen vomiting.

Flyer News
@FlyerNews

We have video of police officers shooting what appears to be non-lethal weapons at students.

140 4:35 AM - Mar 11, 2020

119 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert said Andrew Cuomo's coronavirus measures in New York resemble those one would take during a zombie apocalypse:

Trevor Noah explored the consequences of “social distancing”:

Seth Meyers checked in on a Trump policy that may be enriching his family:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: The anatomy of the Michigan win that put Joe Biden on a glide path to the Democratic nomination
Date: Wednesday, March 11, 2020 8:24:14 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

The anatomy of the Michigan win that put Joe Biden on a glide path to the Democratic nomination

Joe Biden appears to have swept every county in Missouri and Mississippi on Tuesday, and he's currently leading in 82 of the 83 counties in Michigan. The lone holdout is Ingham County, which includes the state capital of Lansing, where Bernie Sanders leads by just nine votes out of more than 52,000 ballots cast.

Four years after the independent senator from Vermont won a major upset in the Wolverine State over Hillary Clinton, beating her in all but 10 counties, Biden bested him statewide by 16 points. The decisive victory puts the former vice president on a trajectory to clinch the nomination without a contested convention.

Sanders avoided being swept by winning North Dakota, which offered only 14 delegates, the smallest prize of the six states that voted on what's being referred to as Super Tuesday II. Washington state remains too close to call, with both candidates tied at 32 percent, as mail-in ballots are counted. Biden also won Idaho, another state Sanders claimed four years ago, which switched from caucuses to a primary.

The Michigan results recast the storyline of the 2016 election in a fresh light and undercut a central rationale of Sanders's second bid for the nomination. The senator's team incorrectly assumed coming into this cycle that the bulk of people who voted for him in 2016 agreed with his calls for political revolution when, in fact, many appear to have mainly been casting protest votes against Clinton. This was especially true among moderates, who wouldn't naturally gravitate toward a self-described democratic socialist, and in rural areas.

In 2016, the exit polls showed that Sanders won 44 percent of Michigan primary voters who identified as moderate or conservative. On Tuesday, he garnered just 25 percent of this constituency, which accounted for 39 percent of the electorate, according to exit polling.

Three in 10 voters in Michigan's open Democratic primary identified as independent. Sanders led Biden among this group by 5 points, 48 percent to 43 percent. But he beat Clinton by 43 points among indies. Meanwhile, Biden won self-identified Democrats by 22 points compared to Clinton's 18 points.

Michigan is worthy of special attention because Sanders's upset was so symbolically significant in 2016 but also because it was a harbinger of Donald Trump's narrow victory that fall. Trump became the first Republican since George H.W. Bush in 1988 to carry the state, and Democrats need these 16 electoral votes from the industrial Midwest in almost any realistic scenario that wins them the White House.

Here are five other notable factors behind Biden's win in the Wolverine State:

1. Sanders's advantage with the white working class has eroded.

Biden won among voters who didn't graduate from college by the same margin (14 points) as he did those who have degrees, according to the exits. Last time, Sanders won white voters in the state by 14 points. Exit polls show Biden led by 11 points among whites this time.

2. Turnout spiked, thanks largely to the suburbs. A key reason that Clinton lost Michigan four years ago was lower-than-expected turnout, especially in the suburbs around Detroit. In 2016, about 1.2 million ballots were cast in the Democratic primary. That rose to an estimated 1.7 million in 2020. This is among the sharpest increases in any of the 23 states that have voted over the last six weeks.

The biggest surge in turnout came in suburban areas like Oakland County outside Detroit, where Democrats also unseated a House Republican in the 2018 midterms. Biden won Oakland County by 22 points, whereas Clinton carried it by 5 points. To understand Biden's win statewide, it's equally important to consider that there were about 175,000 Democratic votes cast there in 2016 but more than 250,000 votes this year.

3. Women broke hard for Biden. He won among female voters by 23 points, and they made up 54 percent of the electorate. Men, who accounted for 46 percent of voters, were split more evenly, with 47 percent backing Biden to 43 percent for Sanders. The senator's team saw this problem coming in their internal polling, and they tried to adjust accordingly. I wrote from Grand Rapids on Monday about how Sanders had sharpened his attacks on Biden's record related to abortion rights in an unsuccessful effort to prevent women from coalescing behind Biden.

4. Biden's firewall among African American voters held. He won black voters by 39 points, with higher turnout in urban Detroit. In Mississippi, black voters made up almost two-thirds of the electorate, with more than 8 in 10 going for Biden. In Missouri, Biden won 3 of 4 black voters.

5. College students didn't turn out in force for Sanders. Biden beat Sanders in Washtenaw County, which is home to the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. Sanders held a rally there on Sunday night that drew more than 10,000 people. Since his victory in the Nevada caucuses, where he fared especially well with younger Latinos, Sanders has not been able to expand the electorate with new voters enough to offset the surge in turnout among more traditional Democrats who harbor doubts about his electability.

To be sure, Sanders won 18- to 29-year-olds by 57 points. But they made up 16 percent of the electorate. Meanwhile, Biden won voters 65 and older by 51 points, according to the same exit polling, and they accounted for 20 percent of voters. He also won 45- to 64-year-olds, who accounted for 42 percent of voters, by 36 points. Older voters tend to view Sanders leerily, especially the democratic socialism he espouses and the political revolution he promises. It remains a problem for Sanders that he has not been able to make inroads with seniors, who most reliably turn out in primaries.

---

Quote of the day

Powered by  LiveIntent

“There’s no sugarcoating it,” said Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.), 30, who introduced Sanders at his rally in Ann Arbor. “It’s a tough night for the movement overall.”

Supporters take selfies with Bernie Sanders after he visited a polling place on Tuesday in Dearborn Heights, Mich. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

What’s next for Sanders: Hard choices about the path ahead.

The outbreak of the novel coronavirus prompted local public health officials to ask Biden and Sanders to cancel their planned rallies on Tuesday night in Cleveland. Biden flew to Philadelphia, where he spoke to members of his campaign staff and the press corps that travels with him, while Sanders went home to Burlington, Vt. His decision not to speak publicly last night after his defeats raised questions about the future of his campaign and his strategy going forward.

Andrew Yang, who supported Sanders in 2016, became the latest former presidential candidate to board the Biden bandwagon. “The math shows

Joe is our prohibitive nominee,” the entrepreneur said on CNN, where he’s now a paid contributor. “We need to bring the party together. We need to start working on defeating Donald Trump in the fall.”

“The past week showcased how much the Sanders campaign is an unruly coalition rather than a tight operation, as allies voiced various conflicting theories about what he needed to do,” writes Sean Sullivan, who has been following Sanders full-time for a year. “Some said Sanders needs to show a more personal side, a recurring suggestion that Sanders has repeatedly been reluctant or unable to embrace. ... The campaign has also experienced a push-and-pull over strategic decisions, debating in recent days whether to release internal polling showing a competitive race with Biden in Michigan, for example ... In the end, the campaign did not release any polling data, opting not to risk setting expectations and then falling short.”

Sanders’s efforts to improve his standing among black voters have been especially awkward in recent days. “When the campaign scrapped plans for Sanders to spend time in Mississippi in favor of Michigan, it signaled to many Democrats that he was effectively giving up on black voters in the South,” Sean notes. “Sanders appeared [on Saturday night] in Flint, Mich., at an event billed as a town hall on racial justice. Yet of the 1,200 attendees, only about three dozen were black. Then the senator decided at the last minute not to deliver his planned speech contrasting his record with Biden’s on racial justice issues — because, a spokesman said, he wanted to let the African American panelists onstage speak about their own experiences. Still, the effect was to suggest that Sanders continues to be uncomfortable delving personally into issues that affect black people’s lives.”

There are few game-changing opportunities left for Sanders. “The candidates are scheduled to face off in a two-hour debate on Sunday night in Phoenix, perhaps the last chance for a shift,” Sean, Matt Viser and

Michael Scherer report. “Next Tuesday, four more states will vote: delegate-rich Florida, Illinois, Ohio and Arizona. A spokeswoman for the Democratic National Committee said Tuesday there were no plans to cancel the Arizona debate, though organizers continue to speak daily with local health officials. The DNC did alter the format, however, by banning the live audience that has attended each of the previous debates.”

What’s next for Biden: A front porch campaign?

Biden canceled a Thursday rally in Tampa. Instead, he will deliver an address on how he would respond to the coronavirus from his hometown of Wilmington, Del. The former vice president has been shortening his stump speech, which he now mostly reads from a teleprompter. His advisers are trying to limit his opportunities for gaffes and keep him as above the fray as possible. If the coronavirus outbreak keeps him off the trail, perhaps he could try to replicate the strategy of giving speeches and greeting people on his front porch that allowed James Garfield to win the 1880 election.

In a sober-minded speech at the National Constitution Center in Philadelphia on Tuesday night, Biden praised Sanders supporters “for their tireless energy and their passion.” The remarks appeared crafted to exude inevitability, that he will win the nomination, and to convey a presidential aura. “We share a common goal,” Biden said to Sanders backers, “and together we’ll defeat Donald Trump.”

Biden’s allies are going further in trying to push Sanders out of the race. “I think it is time for us to shut this primary down,” House Majority Whip Jim Clyburn (D), who delivered a pivotal endorsement before South Carolina’s primary, told NPR. “It is time for us to cancel the rest of these debates because you don’t do anything but get yourself in trouble if you continue in this contest when it’s obvious that the numbers will not shake out for you.”

“Even if Sanders chooses to keep running far into the spring, Biden will have to begin to make a swift pivot toward the general election, with the goal of turning a campaign operation that has drawn criticism even from prominent supporters into a machine capable of waging a general election against the Trump forces,” Dan Balz writes. “He will need to scale up his operation, sharpen his message and reach beyond to voters who either shifted to Trump in 2016 or sat on the sidelines.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

People walk into a martial arts school in New Rochelle, N.Y. Residents are free to move within a one-mile radius, but schools and other gathering places are closed. (John Taggart for The Washington Post)

Confirmed cases in the U.S. topped 1,000.

“Five more deaths — including two in Washington state and one each in California, New Jersey and South Dakota — were reported Tuesday, bringing the total number of deaths in the country to 31,” our colleagues report in a coronavirus live blog. “A growing list of at least 19 states have declared a state of emergency, including Colorado, North Carolina and Michigan, the latter of which reported its first two cases.”

- The National Guard was deployed to New Rochelle, N.Y., to stem the spread of the virus. Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) took the drastic step of creating what he called a “containment zone” within a one-mile radius of this suburb after 104 residents tested positive. (Ben Guarino, Sarah Pulliam Bailey, Laura Meckler and Katie Zezima)
- Students at the University of Dayton in Ohio clashed with police in riot gear last night after they were ordered to leave campus over virus fears. (Journal-News)

- Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) has restricted gatherings of more than 250 people in three counties around Seattle. (Seattle Times)
- A meeting for managers at the Boston-area biotech company Biogen late last month has been linked to dozens of infections across the country. (WSJ)
- More passengers are expected to disembark from the Grand Princess cruise ship, which is docked in Oakland, Calif. More than 1,400 people left the ship as of last night out more than 3,000 who were onboard. (Teo Armus)
- Wall Street is poised for losses today. The Dow tumbled 700 points, or about 3 percent, at the open. (Taylor Telford and Thomas Heath)
- Coachella, the California musical festival, was postponed from April to October. The news come days after Austin's SXSW festival was canceled, sending a shock through the city's economy. (Sonia Rao)
- A quarter of Florida's population is older than 60, and many people have chronic illnesses that make them more vulnerable to the disease, putting the state's health system at risk of being overloaded. The virus is already having a major effect on the state's largest industry – tourism. (Lori Rozsa, Tim Craig and Joel Achenbach)

Shortages are causing problems.

The nation's face mask stockpile hasn't been substantially replenished since 2009. The reserves weren't significantly restored after the 2009 H1N1 pandemic, Beth Reinhard and Emma Brown report.

- CDC Director Robert Redfield said he is not confident that labs in the U.S. have an adequate stock of the supplies used to extract genetic material from any virus in a patient's sample — a critical step in coronavirus testing. (Politico)
- Two Trump allies got tested despite the shortage. Reps. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) and Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), the incoming White House chief of staff, said their tests showed no infection. They also said they were exhibiting no symptoms of respiratory illness, raising questions of why they were tested at all. (Mike DeBonis and Carolyn Johnson) Gaetz told the Pensacola News Journal that he slept in a Walmart parking lot on Monday night after potentially exposing Trump to the coronavirus because he didn't want to accidentally spread the virus to anyone else.

- A coronavirus conference was canceled because of the coronavirus. The Council on Foreign Relations canceled a “Doing Business Under Coronavirus” roundtable in New York that was scheduled for Friday. (Bloomberg News)

The total number of cases worldwide surpassed 120,000.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel announced the “virus has arrived,” warning that up to 70 percent of her country could end up infected. There are more than 80,000 cases in China and more than 10,000 in Italy. Both Iran and South Korea have around 8,000 confirmed cases and other nations are suggesting they will reach similar levels soon. China announced an increase in cases of the virus that had been imported from outside the country, with one case apparently coming from the U.S., per our live blog. Some residents can go back to work in the Chinese province of Hubei, where the outbreak started, but travel restrictions remain.

- China’s next challenge is repairing the broken links in the world’s supply chain. (Anna Fifield)
- Italy’s lockdown has stripped the country of its most basic routines and joys. (Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli)
- U.K. health official Nadine Dorries tested positive for the virus, and the Bank of England announced that it would cut interest rates by from 0.75 percent to 0.25 percent, a record low for Britain’s central bank. (BBC)
- Bahrain’s Ministry of Health said of the 165 of its citizens just flown back from Iran, 77 of them tested positive. (Paul Schemm)
- Coronavirus cases in Africa passed 100. Nearly all are imported from Europe’s hotspots. (Max Bearak)

Allergy season is coming in full force.

“Doctors worry allergy sufferers will conflate their routine reactions to pollen with coronavirus symptoms and overwhelm an already-strained health care system with panicked visits,” Sindya Bhanoo reports, especially in D.C., where pollen counts are already at moderate to high levels. “Because of warmer temperatures, allergy season started in February this year instead of March ... so Washington-area residents are already exhibiting symptoms. Data show that some people infected with the coronavirus experience similar symptoms, such as coughing, nasal congestion, runny nose and sore throat. ... Allergies, which are an overreaction of the immune system to foreign particles, should not trigger chills, body aches or fevers ... Those are the classic signs of a viral infection, such as covid-19. In addition, while patients with coronavirus can have nasal congestion, it is not common. The World Health Organization found that only about 5 percent of the coronavirus patients in China had nasal congestion. About 14 percent had a sore throat.”

The uneven federal response

Trump discussed his ideas for economic stimulus with

Senate Republicans.

Visiting the Capitol on Tuesday, Trump said he “wants to dramatically reduce the payroll tax through at least the end of the year, a plan that could deliver a massive — but expensive — boost to many businesses and voters as he heads into the November presidential election,” Erica Werner, Josh Dawsey, Seung Min Kim and Robert Costa report. “But his proposal was not warmly received by Republicans, and it was also panned by Democrats, leaving policymakers searching for any common ground as the coronavirus’s outbreak continues to take its toll on the economy. One area of consensus, though, could be around the issue of paid sick leave for employees, an idea Democrats support and in which Trump has shown some interest. But in the past the two sides have taken different approaches, and it’s not clear whether agreement can be reached. ... One senator at Tuesday’s lunch meeting with Trump said the president also floated the idea of allowing Americans to delay filing their tax returns in April ... and providing aid to the travel industry.

"In addition to large tax cuts, Trump talked with Republican senators about what steps they could take to extend emergency aid to U.S. oil and gas companies hurt by the drop in oil prices. ... The payroll tax cut alone could reduce taxes by around $400 billion through the end of the year. White House officials would not say whether they had any plans to offset those losses, which would cause the budget deficit to grow by about 40 percent. ...

"Top House Democrats, meanwhile, said Tuesday they planned to move quickly on a relief package that narrowly targeted individuals and families affected by the coronavirus outbreak. The measures floated by [Nancy] Pelosi and other leaders included an expansion of unemployment insurance, food stamps and other public assistance programs as well as allowing for more sick and family leave. The legislation could be released as soon as Wednesday with a vote coming as soon as Thursday.”

Providing federal assistance to oil and gas companies would face resistance from those who support direct aid to workers.

“The federal assistance is likely to take the form of low-interest government loans to the shale companies, whose lines of credit to major financial institutions have been choked off,” Jeff Stein, Will Englund, Steven Mufson and Costa report. “But help for oil and gas producers may prove a politically difficult lift for the administration, in part because they faced sagging prices even before the coronavirus outbreak, some experts said. It may be hard to sort out which sectors are deserving of help ... Some economists also oppose providing assistance to companies rather than ensuring it goes to workers hit by a downturn.”

The administration wants federal workers to be ready to telework full time.

“The Trump administration is racing to develop contingency plans that would allow hundreds of thousands of employees to work remotely full time,” Lisa Rein reports. “The Office of Personnel Management, which oversees policy for the workforce of 2.1 million, has urged agency heads in recent days to ‘immediately review’ their telework policies, sign paperwork with employees laying out their duties, issue laptops and grant access to computer networks. ... That emergency decision follows similar steps by more than a dozen Seattle-area federal field offices, the Interior Department in Denver and NASA’s Silicon Valley research center, which either have closed or shifted to telework as some employees tested positive for the virus. On Tuesday, the International Trade Administration started sending staffers home to self-quarantine if they had traveled out of the country. The State Department told its staff to set up emergency teleconference drills — and alternate who comes into the office to use classified systems, to ensure that colleagues gather only in small groups. ... The Trump administration scaled back working from home as a regular practice at multiple large agencies.”

The CDC blocked thousands of flu samples from being tested for coronavirus.

“For months, as part of a research project into the flu, [infectious disease expert Helen Chu] and a team of researchers had been collecting nasal swabs from residents experiencing symptoms throughout the Puget Sound region. To repurpose the tests for monitoring the coronavirus, they would need the support of state and federal officials. But nearly everywhere Dr. Chu turned, officials repeatedly rejected the idea, interviews and emails show, even as weeks crawled by and outbreaks emerged in countries outside of China,” the NYT reports. “By Feb. 25, Dr. Chu and her colleagues could not bear to wait any longer. They began performing coronavirus tests, without government approval. What came back confirmed their worst fear.”

A GOP congressman criticized Trump's proposed CDC cuts.

“This was the day Rep. Tom Cole (R-Okla.) has been warning about,” Aaron Blake reports. “Back in 2017, when the Trump administration first proposed steep cuts to programs that handle disease outbreaks, Cole said, ‘I promise you the president is much more likely in his term to have a deal with a pandemic than an act of terrorism. I hope he doesn’t have to deal with either one, but you have to be ready to deal with both.’ Now that the potential pandemic has come, Cole is re-upping his long-standing criticisms of the Trump administration’s posture toward preparedness. ... At a House subcommittee hearing featuring [the CDC director], Cole offered some veiled rebukes of how the administration has worked with people like him on this issue.”

---

Other developments that shouldn't be overlooked

William Evanina, director of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center, takes media questions in Washington. (Bill O'Leary/The Washington Post)

An intelligence official claimed there's no evidence Russia has taken steps to help any 2020 candidate.

In closed briefings to the House and Senate, “the head of national counterintelligence, William Evanina, appeared to be tempering an assessment delivered to lawmakers in the House last month that Russia had developed a ‘preference’ for [Trump],” Ellen Nakashima and Seung Min Kim report. “Evanina told senators that the Russians ‘continue to be broadly engaged in social media activities designed to divide us further, to discredit our electoral system and to disrupt our election,’ said one official present at the all-members meeting. In the Senate, Evanina’s carefully worded answer came in response to the first question asked — by Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (Ky.) — and ‘felt orchestrated,’ said a second official, who was briefed on the meeting. ‘Both question and response were clearly pre-drafted.’

“The intelligence officials who gave the briefing, including National Security Agency Director Paul M. Nakasone and FBI Director Christopher A. Wray, did not give senators an impression that the Trump administration has a solid grip on dealing with foreign interference in the coming election, said a third official briefed on the session. ... In the House, [Pelosi] and Rep. Adam B. Schiff (D-Calif.), the Intelligence Committee chairman, challenged the briefer on what struck them as an effort to play down the assessment given last month by Shelby Pierson, the intelligence community’s point person on foreign election threats, a fourth official said. ...

“Senators also were disconcerted that [Richard] Grenell, as the head of the intelligence community, was not present ... The heads of other agencies, including acting homeland security secretary Chad Wolf, were there, and Grenell had been scheduled to appear, according to a list of participants circulated to lawmakers on Monday. But Grenell declined to go to the Hill, citing apprehension about his preparedness to address sensitive subjects that tend to upset the president, according to three people familiar with the matter.”

Russia’s parliament offered a path for Vladimir Putin to stay in power for an additional 12 years after his term expires in 2024.

The plan, floated and supported by Putin’s ruling United Russia party, is part of a sweeping rewrite of Russia’s constitution and would reset the current term limits to zero. (Isabelle Khurshudyan)

The D.C. Circuit ruled that DOJ must disclose Bob Mueller’s secret grand jury evidence to the House.

“The divided ruling, which can be appealed, is a victory for Democratic lawmakers in one of a set of separation-of-powers lawsuits filed before the House voted to impeach Trump in December and before the Senate acquitted him,” Ann Marimow reports. “The U.S. Court of Appeals for the

D.C. Circuit upheld a lower court order that gives Congress access to certain secret material from [Mueller's] investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election. ... Judge Judith W. Rogers found the House in its impeachment investigation was legally engaged in a judicial process that exempts Congress from secrecy rules that typically shield grand jury materials from disclosure. Grand jury records, she noted, are court records — not Justice Department records — and have historically been released to Congress in the course of impeachment investigations involving three federal judges and two presidents. ... Judge Neomi Rao [a Trump appointee] dissented."

Lawmakers proposed bipartisan limits on the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act.

"House Democrats and Republicans proposed a surveillance bill Tuesday that would extend provisions used for counterterrorism investigations while putting new restrictions and safeguards on the FBI to address criticism of how agents investigated a Trump campaign adviser in 2016," Devlin Barrett reports. "To address those concerns, the new bill would require the attorney general to sign off on any FISA surveillance targeting a federal officeholder or a candidate for federal office. ... [The bill] would step up internal reviews and data reporting requirements on FISA cases; increase the potential prison sentence for unauthorized disclosures about FISA surveillance; and require FISA applicants to assure the court they have provided information that might call into question their factual assertions ... The bill would also bring to an official end a controversial phone records collection program that the government has abandoned as costly and ineffective."

Sonia Sotomayor recused herself from a case with consequences for the electoral college.

The justice will "not participate in one of the two cases the Supreme Court will hear in April to decide whether the Constitution forbids states from dictating how members of the electoral college cast their votes for president,” Robert Barnes reports. “The clerk of the court informed lawyers in the case Tuesday that Sotomayor realized she is friends with one of the parties in one of the cases, from Colorado. Sotomayor will still participate in the other case, from the state of Washington.”

---

Social media speed read

Trump endorsed former attorney general Jeff Sessions' opponent in the Alabama GOP Senate runoff:

The stage was set up for Sanders's rally in Ohio before it was canceled:

Ohio's governor defended the decision to ask the candidates to cancel their events:

The New York City mayor and former 2020 contender called on Elizabeth Warren to endorse Sanders:

A man sent anti-Muslim tweets to a Virginia congressional candidate, who responded by helping pay down his medical bills:

Qasim Rashid for Congress ✓

@QasimRashid

Last week a Conservative constituent sent me deeply hurtful anti-Muslim tweets 😞

I replied by donating to his GoFundMe to help cover his crushing medical debt

He wrote me a thoughtful & compassionate apology & asked me to visit him

Today I met my new friend Oz 🤝 #WinTheHearts

♥ 77.2K 2:40 AM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 12K people are talking about this

The University of Dayton's student newspaper shared images from the clash between students and police after the campus was closed to contain the coronavirus:

Flyer News @FlyerNews · 5h

Replying to @FlyerNews

Multiple students have reported to Flyer News that what is presumed to be tear gas was shot at students. Students were seen vomiting.

Flyer News

@FlyerNews

We have video of police officers shooting what appears to be non-lethal weapons at students.

140 4:35 AM - Mar 11, 2020

119 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert said Andrew Cuomo's coronavirus measures in New York resemble those one would take during a zombie apocalypse:

Trevor Noah explored the consequences of “social distancing”:

Seth Meyers checked in on a Trump policy that may be enriching his family:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: The anatomy of the Michigan win that put Joe Biden on a glide path to the Democratic nomination
Date: Wednesday, March 11, 2020 8:24:23 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

The anatomy of the Michigan win that put Joe Biden on a glide path to the Democratic nomination

Joe Biden appears to have swept every county in Missouri and Mississippi on Tuesday, and he's currently leading in 82 of the 83 counties in Michigan. The lone holdout is Ingham County, which includes the state capital of Lansing, where Bernie Sanders leads by just nine votes out of more than 52,000 ballots cast.

Four years after the independent senator from Vermont won a major upset in the Wolverine State over Hillary Clinton, beating her in all but 10 counties, Biden bested him statewide by 16 points. The decisive victory puts the former vice president on a trajectory to clinch the nomination without a contested convention.

Sanders avoided being swept by winning North Dakota, which offered only 14 delegates, the smallest prize of the six states that voted on what's being referred to as Super Tuesday II. Washington state remains too close to call, with both candidates tied at 32 percent, as mail-in ballots are counted. Biden also won Idaho, another state Sanders claimed four years ago, which switched from caucuses to a primary.

The Michigan results recast the storyline of the 2016 election in a fresh light and undercut a central rationale of Sanders's second bid for the nomination. The senator's team incorrectly assumed coming into this cycle that the bulk of people who voted for him in 2016 agreed with his calls for political revolution when, in fact, many appear to have mainly been casting protest votes against Clinton. This was especially true among moderates, who wouldn't naturally gravitate toward a self-described democratic socialist, and in rural areas.

In 2016, the exit polls showed that Sanders won 44 percent of Michigan primary voters who identified as moderate or conservative. On Tuesday, he garnered just 25 percent of this constituency, which accounted for 39 percent of the electorate, according to exit polling.

Three in 10 voters in Michigan's open Democratic primary identified as independent. Sanders led Biden among this group by 5 points, 48 percent to 43 percent. But he beat Clinton by 43 points among indies. Meanwhile, Biden won self-identified Democrats by 22 points compared to Clinton's 18 points.

Michigan is worthy of special attention because Sanders's upset was so symbolically significant in 2016 but also because it was a harbinger of Donald Trump's narrow victory that fall. Trump became the first Republican since George H.W. Bush in 1988 to carry the state, and Democrats need these 16 electoral votes from the industrial Midwest in almost any realistic scenario that wins them the White House.

Here are five other notable factors behind Biden's win in the Wolverine State:

1. Sanders's advantage with the white working class has eroded. Biden won among voters who didn't graduate from college by the same margin (14 points) as he did those who have degrees, according to the exits. Last time, Sanders won white voters in the state by 14 points. Exit polls show Biden led by 11 points among whites this time.

2. Turnout spiked, thanks largely to the suburbs. A key reason that Clinton lost Michigan four years ago was lower-than-expected turnout, especially in the suburbs around Detroit. In 2016, about 1.2 million ballots were cast in the Democratic primary. That rose to an estimated 1.7 million in 2020. This is among the sharpest increases in any of the 23 states that have voted over the last six weeks.

The biggest surge in turnout came in suburban areas like Oakland County outside Detroit, where Democrats also unseated a House Republican in the 2018 midterms. Biden won Oakland County by 22 points, whereas Clinton carried it by 5 points. To understand Biden's win statewide, it's equally important to consider that there were about 175,000 Democratic votes cast there in 2016 but more than 250,000 votes this year.

3. Women broke hard for Biden. He won among female voters by 23 points, and they made up 54 percent of the electorate. Men, who accounted for 46 percent of voters, were split more evenly, with 47 percent backing Biden to 43 percent for Sanders. The senator's team saw this problem coming in their internal polling, and they tried to adjust accordingly. I wrote from Grand Rapids on Monday about how Sanders had sharpened his attacks on Biden's record related to abortion rights in an unsuccessful effort to prevent women from coalescing behind Biden.

4. Biden's firewall among African American voters held. He won black voters by 39 points, with higher turnout in urban Detroit. In Mississippi, black voters made up almost two-thirds of the electorate, with more than 8 in 10 going for Biden. In Missouri, Biden won 3 of 4 black voters.

5. College students didn't turn out in force for Sanders. Biden beat Sanders in Washtenaw County, which is home to the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. Sanders held a rally there on Sunday night that drew more than 10,000 people. Since his victory in the Nevada caucuses, where he fared especially well with younger Latinos, Sanders has not been able to expand the electorate with new voters enough to offset the surge in turnout among more traditional Democrats who harbor doubts about his electability.

To be sure, Sanders won 18- to 29-year-olds by 57 points. But they made up 16 percent of the electorate. Meanwhile, Biden won voters 65 and older by 51 points, according to the same exit polling, and they accounted for 20 percent of voters. He also won 45- to 64-year-olds, who accounted for 42 percent of voters, by 36 points. Older voters tend to view Sanders leerily, especially the democratic socialism he espouses and the political revolution he promises. It remains a problem for Sanders that he has not been able to make inroads with seniors, who most reliably turn out in primaries.

---

Quote of the day

Powered by  LiveIntent

“There’s no sugarcoating it,” said Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.), 30, who introduced Sanders at his rally in Ann Arbor. “It’s a tough night for the movement overall.”

Supporters take selfies with Bernie Sanders after he visited a polling place on Tuesday in Dearborn Heights, Mich. (Salwan Georges/The Washington Post)

What’s next for Sanders: Hard choices about the path ahead.

The outbreak of the novel coronavirus prompted local public health officials to ask Biden and Sanders to cancel their planned rallies on Tuesday night in Cleveland. Biden flew to Philadelphia, where he spoke to members of his campaign staff and the press corps that travels with him, while Sanders went home to Burlington, Vt. His decision not to speak publicly last night after his defeats raised questions about the future of his campaign and his strategy going forward.

Andrew Yang, who supported Sanders in 2016, became the latest former presidential candidate to board the Biden bandwagon. “The math shows

Joe is our prohibitive nominee,” the entrepreneur said on CNN, where he’s now a paid contributor. “We need to bring the party together. We need to start working on defeating Donald Trump in the fall.”

“The past week showcased how much the Sanders campaign is an unruly coalition rather than a tight operation, as allies voiced various conflicting theories about what he needed to do,” writes Sean Sullivan, who has been following Sanders full-time for a year. “Some said Sanders needs to show a more personal side, a recurring suggestion that Sanders has repeatedly been reluctant or unable to embrace. ... The campaign has also experienced a push-and-pull over strategic decisions, debating in recent days whether to release internal polling showing a competitive race with Biden in Michigan, for example ... In the end, the campaign did not release any polling data, opting not to risk setting expectations and then falling short.”

Sanders’s efforts to improve his standing among black voters have been especially awkward in recent days. “When the campaign scrapped plans for Sanders to spend time in Mississippi in favor of Michigan, it signaled to many Democrats that he was effectively giving up on black voters in the South,” Sean notes. “Sanders appeared [on Saturday night] in Flint, Mich., at an event billed as a town hall on racial justice. Yet of the 1,200 attendees, only about three dozen were black. Then the senator decided at the last minute not to deliver his planned speech contrasting his record with Biden’s on racial justice issues — because, a spokesman said, he wanted to let the African American panelists onstage speak about their own experiences. Still, the effect was to suggest that Sanders continues to be uncomfortable delving personally into issues that affect black people’s lives.”

There are few game-changing opportunities left for Sanders. “The candidates are scheduled to face off in a two-hour debate on Sunday night in Phoenix, perhaps the last chance for a shift,” Sean, Matt Viser and

Michael Scherer report. “Next Tuesday, four more states will vote: delegate-rich Florida, Illinois, Ohio and Arizona. A spokeswoman for the Democratic National Committee said Tuesday there were no plans to cancel the Arizona debate, though organizers continue to speak daily with local health officials. The DNC did alter the format, however, by banning the live audience that has attended each of the previous debates.”

What’s next for Biden: A front porch campaign?

Biden canceled a Thursday rally in Tampa. Instead, he will deliver an address on how he would respond to the coronavirus from his hometown of Wilmington, Del. The former vice president has been shortening his stump speech, which he now mostly reads from a teleprompter. His advisers are trying to limit his opportunities for gaffes and keep him as above the fray as possible. If the coronavirus outbreak keeps him off the trail, perhaps he could try to replicate the strategy of giving speeches and greeting people on his front porch that allowed James Garfield to win the 1880 election.

In a sober-minded speech at the National Constitution Center in Philadelphia on Tuesday night, Biden praised Sanders supporters “for their tireless energy and their passion.” The remarks appeared crafted to exude inevitability, that he will win the nomination, and to convey a presidential aura. “We share a common goal,” Biden said to Sanders backers, “and together we’ll defeat Donald Trump.”

Biden’s allies are going further in trying to push Sanders out of the race. “I think it is time for us to shut this primary down,” House Majority Whip Jim Clyburn (D), who delivered a pivotal endorsement before South Carolina’s primary, told NPR. “It is time for us to cancel the rest of these debates because you don’t do anything but get yourself in trouble if you continue in this contest when it’s obvious that the numbers will not shake out for you.”

“Even if Sanders chooses to keep running far into the spring, Biden will have to begin to make a swift pivot toward the general election, with the goal of turning a campaign operation that has drawn criticism even from prominent supporters into a machine capable of waging a general election against the Trump forces,” Dan Balz writes. “He will need to scale up his operation, sharpen his message and reach beyond to voters who either shifted to Trump in 2016 or sat on the sidelines.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus

People walk into a martial arts school in New Rochelle, N.Y. Residents are free to move within a one-mile radius, but schools and other gathering places are closed. (John Taggart for The Washington Post)

Confirmed cases in the U.S. topped 1,000.

“Five more deaths — including two in Washington state and one each in California, New Jersey and South Dakota — were reported Tuesday, bringing the total number of deaths in the country to 31,” our colleagues report in a coronavirus live blog. “A growing list of at least 19 states have declared a state of emergency, including Colorado, North Carolina and Michigan, the latter of which reported its first two cases.”

- The National Guard was deployed to New Rochelle, N.Y., to stem the spread of the virus. Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) took the drastic step of creating what he called a “containment zone” within a one-mile radius of this suburb after 104 residents tested positive. (Ben Guarino, Sarah Pulliam Bailey, Laura Meckler and Katie Zezima)
- Students at the University of Dayton in Ohio clashed with police in riot gear last night after they were ordered to leave campus over virus fears. (Journal-News)

- Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) has restricted gatherings of more than 250 people in three counties around Seattle. (Seattle Times)
- A meeting for managers at the Boston-area biotech company Biogen late last month has been linked to dozens of infections across the country. (WSJ)
- More passengers are expected to disembark from the Grand Princess cruise ship, which is docked in Oakland, Calif. More than 1,400 people left the ship as of last night out more than 3,000 who were onboard. (Teo Armus)
- Wall Street is poised for losses today. The Dow tumbled 700 points, or about 3 percent, at the open. (Taylor Telford and Thomas Heath)
- Coachella, the California musical festival, was postponed from April to October. The news come days after Austin's SXSW festival was canceled, sending a shock through the city's economy. (Sonia Rao)
- A quarter of Florida's population is older than 60, and many people have chronic illnesses that make them more vulnerable to the disease, putting the state's health system at risk of being overloaded. The virus is already having a major effect on the state's largest industry – tourism. (Lori Rozsa, Tim Craig and Joel Achenbach)

Shortages are causing problems.

The nation's face mask stockpile hasn't been substantially replenished since 2009. The reserves weren't significantly restored after the 2009 H1N1 pandemic, Beth Reinhard and Emma Brown report.

- CDC Director Robert Redfield said he is not confident that labs in the U.S. have an adequate stock of the supplies used to extract genetic material from any virus in a patient's sample — a critical step in coronavirus testing. (Politico)
- Two Trump allies got tested despite the shortage. Reps. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) and Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), the incoming White House chief of staff, said their tests showed no infection. They also said they were exhibiting no symptoms of respiratory illness, raising questions of why they were tested at all. (Mike DeBonis and Carolyn Johnson) Gaetz told the Pensacola News Journal that he slept in a Walmart parking lot on Monday night after potentially exposing Trump to the coronavirus because he didn't want to accidentally spread the virus to anyone else.

- A coronavirus conference was canceled because of the coronavirus. The Council on Foreign Relations canceled a “Doing Business Under Coronavirus” roundtable in New York that was scheduled for Friday. (Bloomberg News)

The total number of cases worldwide surpassed 120,000.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel announced the “virus has arrived,” warning that up to 70 percent of her country could end up infected. There are more than 80,000 cases in China and more than 10,000 in Italy. Both Iran and South Korea have around 8,000 confirmed cases and other nations are suggesting they will reach similar levels soon. China announced an increase in cases of the virus that had been imported from outside the country, with one case apparently coming from the U.S., per our live blog. Some residents can go back to work in the Chinese province of Hubei, where the outbreak started, but travel restrictions remain.

- China’s next challenge is repairing the broken links in the world’s supply chain. (Anna Fifield)
- Italy’s lockdown has stripped the country of its most basic routines and joys. (Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli)
- U.K. health official Nadine Dorries tested positive for the virus, and the Bank of England announced that it would cut interest rates by from 0.75 percent to 0.25 percent, a record low for Britain’s central bank. (BBC)
- Bahrain’s Ministry of Health said of the 165 of its citizens just flown back from Iran, 77 of them tested positive. (Paul Schemm)
- Coronavirus cases in Africa passed 100. Nearly all are imported from Europe’s hotspots. (Max Bearak)

Allergy season is coming in full force.

“Doctors worry allergy sufferers will conflate their routine reactions to pollen with coronavirus symptoms and overwhelm an already-strained health care system with panicked visits,” Sindya Bhanoo reports, especially in D.C., where pollen counts are already at moderate to high levels. “Because of warmer temperatures, allergy season started in February this year instead of March ... so Washington-area residents are already exhibiting symptoms. Data show that some people infected with the coronavirus experience similar symptoms, such as coughing, nasal congestion, runny nose and sore throat. ... Allergies, which are an overreaction of the immune system to foreign particles, should not trigger chills, body aches or fevers ... Those are the classic signs of a viral infection, such as covid-19. In addition, while patients with coronavirus can have nasal congestion, it is not common. The World Health Organization found that only about 5 percent of the coronavirus patients in China had nasal congestion. About 14 percent had a sore throat.”

The uneven federal response

Trump discussed his ideas for economic stimulus with

Senate Republicans.

Visiting the Capitol on Tuesday, Trump said he “wants to dramatically reduce the payroll tax through at least the end of the year, a plan that could deliver a massive — but expensive — boost to many businesses and voters as he heads into the November presidential election,” Erica Werner, Josh Dawsey, Seung Min Kim and Robert Costa report. “But his proposal was not warmly received by Republicans, and it was also panned by Democrats, leaving policymakers searching for any common ground as the coronavirus’s outbreak continues to take its toll on the economy. One area of consensus, though, could be around the issue of paid sick leave for employees, an idea Democrats support and in which Trump has shown some interest. But in the past the two sides have taken different approaches, and it’s not clear whether agreement can be reached. ... One senator at Tuesday’s lunch meeting with Trump said the president also floated the idea of allowing Americans to delay filing their tax returns in April ... and providing aid to the travel industry.

"In addition to large tax cuts, Trump talked with Republican senators about what steps they could take to extend emergency aid to U.S. oil and gas companies hurt by the drop in oil prices. ... The payroll tax cut alone could reduce taxes by around $400 billion through the end of the year. White House officials would not say whether they had any plans to offset those losses, which would cause the budget deficit to grow by about 40 percent. ...

"Top House Democrats, meanwhile, said Tuesday they planned to move quickly on a relief package that narrowly targeted individuals and families affected by the coronavirus outbreak. The measures floated by [Nancy] Pelosi and other leaders included an expansion of unemployment insurance, food stamps and other public assistance programs as well as allowing for more sick and family leave. The legislation could be released as soon as Wednesday with a vote coming as soon as Thursday.”

Providing federal assistance to oil and gas companies would face resistance from those who support direct aid to workers. “The federal assistance is likely to take the form of low-interest government loans to the shale companies, whose lines of credit to major financial institutions have been choked off,” Jeff Stein, Will Englund, Steven Mufson and Costa report. “But help for oil and gas producers may prove a politically difficult lift for the administration, in part because they faced sagging prices even before the coronavirus outbreak, some experts said. It may be hard to sort out which sectors are deserving of help ... Some economists also oppose providing assistance to companies rather than ensuring it goes to workers hit by a downturn.”

The administration wants federal workers to be ready to telework full time.

“The Trump administration is racing to develop contingency plans that would allow hundreds of thousands of employees to work remotely full time,” Lisa Rein reports. “The Office of Personnel Management, which oversees policy for the workforce of 2.1 million, has urged agency heads in recent days to ‘immediately review’ their telework policies, sign paperwork with employees laying out their duties, issue laptops and grant access to computer networks. ... That emergency decision follows similar steps by more than a dozen Seattle-area federal field offices, the Interior Department in Denver and NASA’s Silicon Valley research center, which either have closed or shifted to telework as some employees tested positive for the virus. On Tuesday, the International Trade Administration started sending staffers home to self-quarantine if they had traveled out of the country. The State Department told its staff to set up emergency teleconference drills — and alternate who comes into the office to use classified systems, to ensure that colleagues gather only in small groups. ... The Trump administration scaled back working from home as a regular practice at multiple large agencies.”

The CDC blocked thousands of flu samples from being tested for coronavirus.

“For months, as part of a research project into the flu, [infectious disease expert Helen Chu] and a team of researchers had been collecting nasal swabs from residents experiencing symptoms throughout the Puget Sound region. To repurpose the tests for monitoring the coronavirus, they would need the support of state and federal officials. But nearly everywhere Dr. Chu turned, officials repeatedly rejected the idea, interviews and emails show, even as weeks crawled by and outbreaks emerged in countries outside of China,” the NYT reports. “By Feb. 25, Dr. Chu and her colleagues could not bear to wait any longer. They began performing coronavirus tests, without government approval. What came back confirmed their worst fear.”

A GOP congressman criticized Trump's proposed CDC cuts.

“This was the day Rep. Tom Cole (R-Okla.) has been warning about,” Aaron Blake reports. “Back in 2017, when the Trump administration first proposed steep cuts to programs that handle disease outbreaks, Cole said, ‘I promise you the president is much more likely in his term to have a deal with a pandemic than an act of terrorism. I hope he doesn’t have to deal with either one, but you have to be ready to deal with both.’ Now that the potential pandemic has come, Cole is re-upping his long-standing criticisms of the Trump administration’s posture toward preparedness. ... At a House subcommittee hearing featuring [the CDC director], Cole offered some veiled rebukes of how the administration has worked with people like him on this issue.”

---

Other developments that shouldn't be overlooked

William Evanina, director of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center, takes media questions in Washington. (Bill O'Leary/The Washington Post)

An intelligence official claimed there's no evidence Russia has taken steps to help any 2020 candidate.

In closed briefings to the House and Senate, “the head of national counterintelligence, William Evanina, appeared to be tempering an assessment delivered to lawmakers in the House last month that Russia had developed a ‘preference’ for [Trump],” Ellen Nakashima and Seung Min Kim report. “Evanina told senators that the Russians ‘continue to be broadly engaged in social media activities designed to divide us further, to discredit our electoral system and to disrupt our election,’ said one official present at the all-members meeting. In the Senate, Evanina’s carefully worded answer came in response to the first question asked — by Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (Ky.) — and ‘felt orchestrated,’ said a second official, who was briefed on the meeting. ‘Both question and response were clearly pre-drafted.’

“The intelligence officials who gave the briefing, including National Security Agency Director Paul M. Nakasone and FBI Director Christopher A. Wray, did not give senators an impression that the Trump administration has a solid grip on dealing with foreign interference in the coming election, said a third official briefed on the session. ... In the House, [Pelosi] and Rep. Adam B. Schiff (D-Calif.), the Intelligence Committee chairman, challenged the briefer on what struck them as an effort to play down the assessment given last month by Shelby Pierson, the intelligence community’s point person on foreign election threats, a fourth official said. ...

“Senators also were disconcerted that [Richard] Grenell, as the head of the intelligence community, was not present ... The heads of other agencies, including acting homeland security secretary Chad Wolf, were there, and Grenell had been scheduled to appear, according to a list of participants circulated to lawmakers on Monday. But Grenell declined to go to the Hill, citing apprehension about his preparedness to address sensitive subjects that tend to upset the president, according to three people familiar with the matter.”

Russia’s parliament offered a path for Vladimir Putin to stay in power for an additional 12 years after his term expires in 2024.

The plan, floated and supported by Putin’s ruling United Russia party, is part of a sweeping rewrite of Russia’s constitution and would reset the current term limits to zero. (Isabelle Khurshudyan)

The D.C. Circuit ruled that DOJ must disclose Bob Mueller’s secret grand jury evidence to the House.

“The divided ruling, which can be appealed, is a victory for Democratic lawmakers in one of a set of separation-of-powers lawsuits filed before the House voted to impeach Trump in December and before the Senate acquitted him,” Ann Marimow reports. “The U.S. Court of Appeals for the

D.C. Circuit upheld a lower court order that gives Congress access to certain secret material from [Mueller's] investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election. ... Judge Judith W. Rogers found the House in its impeachment investigation was legally engaged in a judicial process that exempts Congress from secrecy rules that typically shield grand jury materials from disclosure. Grand jury records, she noted, are court records — not Justice Department records — and have historically been released to Congress in the course of impeachment investigations involving three federal judges and two presidents. ... Judge Neomi Rao [a Trump appointee] dissented."

Lawmakers proposed bipartisan limits on the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act.

"House Democrats and Republicans proposed a surveillance bill Tuesday that would extend provisions used for counterterrorism investigations while putting new restrictions and safeguards on the FBI to address criticism of how agents investigated a Trump campaign adviser in 2016," Devlin Barrett reports. "To address those concerns, the new bill would require the attorney general to sign off on any FISA surveillance targeting a federal officeholder or a candidate for federal office. ... [The bill] would step up internal reviews and data reporting requirements on FISA cases; increase the potential prison sentence for unauthorized disclosures about FISA surveillance; and require FISA applicants to assure the court they have provided information that might call into question their factual assertions ... The bill would also bring to an official end a controversial phone records collection program that the government has abandoned as costly and ineffective."

Sonia Sotomayor recused herself from a case with consequences for the electoral college.

The justice will "not participate in one of the two cases the Supreme Court will hear in April to decide whether the Constitution forbids states from dictating how members of the electoral college cast their votes for president,” Robert Barnes reports. “The clerk of the court informed lawyers in the case Tuesday that Sotomayor realized she is friends with one of the parties in one of the cases, from Colorado. Sotomayor will still participate in the other case, from the state of Washington.”

---

Social media speed read

Trump endorsed former attorney general Jeff Sessions' opponent in the Alabama GOP Senate runoff:

The stage was set up for Sanders's rally in Ohio before it was canceled:

Ohio's governor defended the decision to ask the candidates to cancel their events:

The New York City mayor and former 2020 contender called on Elizabeth Warren to endorse Sanders:

A man sent anti-Muslim tweets to a Virginia congressional candidate, who responded by helping pay down his medical bills:

Qasim Rashid for Congress ✓

@QasimRashid

Last week a Conservative constituent sent me deeply hurtful anti-Muslim tweets 😞

I replied by donating to his GoFundMe to help cover his crushing medical debt

He wrote me a thoughtful & compassionate apology & asked me to visit him

Today I met my new friend Oz 🤝 #WinTheHearts

♥ 77.2K 2:40 AM - Mar 9, 2020

💬 12K people are talking about this

The University of Dayton's student newspaper shared images from the clash between students and police after the campus was closed to contain the coronavirus:

Flyer News @FlyerNews · 5h
Replying to @FlyerNews
Multiple students have reported to Flyer News that what is presumed to be tear gas was shot at students. Students were seen vomiting.

Flyer News
@FlyerNews

We have video of police officers shooting what appears to be non-lethal weapons at students.

140 4:35 AM - Mar 11, 2020

119 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert said Andrew Cuomo's coronavirus measures in New York resemble those one would take during a zombie apocalypse:

Trevor Noah explored the consequences of “social distancing”:

Seth Meyers checked in on a Trump policy that may be enriching his family:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 11 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Wednesday, March 11, 2020 2:23:16 PM

---

Read today's E&E News PM on the web

E&E NEWS PM

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

E&E NEWS PM — Wed., March 11, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

---

1. NOAA:

Agency plans telework day to prepare for coronavirus

NOAA employees will take their laptops, power cords and other equipment home today to prepare for a "large-scale telework day" tomorrow as part of the agency's response to the new coronavirus pandemic.

---

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

2. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

Union calls for scrutiny of coronavirus protections

3. NATURAL RESOURCES:

House panel advances water bills amid heated debate

4. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

FEMA sends Atlanta workers home after coronavirus contact

5. MINING:

Cleanup cost taxpayers billions, billions more to go — GAO

6. AIR POLLUTION:

EPA won't tighten asphalt emission standards

---

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

7. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 9 - March 15, 2020

---

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

---

ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – LATE-BREAKING NEWS

E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 11 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Wednesday, March 11, 2020 2:23:26 PM

---

NOAA: Agency plans telework day to prepare for coronavirus. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
FEDERAL WORKFORCE: Union calls for scrutiny of coronavirus protections.
NATURAL RESOURCES: House panel advances water bills amid heated debate.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Wed., March 11, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/11/full? utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL
EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/11/stories/1062578115?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

1. NOAA:

Agency plans telework day to prepare for coronavirus

NOAA employees will take their laptops, power cords and other equipment home today to prepare for a "large-scale telework day" tomorrow as part of the agency's response to the new coronavirus pandemic.

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/11/stories/1062578375?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

2. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

Union calls for scrutiny of coronavirus protections

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/11/stories/1062578361?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

3. NATURAL RESOURCES:

House panel advances water bills amid heated debate

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/11/stories/1062578129?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

4. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

FEMA sends Atlanta workers home after coronavirus contact

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/11/stories/1062578323?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

5. MINING:

Cleanup cost taxpayers billions, billions more to go — GAO

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/11/stories/1062578389?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

6. AIR POLLUTION:

EPA won't tighten asphalt emission standards

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/11/calendars?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

7. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 9 - March 15, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News

E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?
utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our
Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 12 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Thursday, March 12, 2020 4:58:05 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Thu., March 12, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Faster traffic, more clicks. How COVID-19 affects emissions

Americans are driving less and using more delivery services as the virus alters daily life. These changes affect our emissions in ways that are not always good for the climate.

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

Democrats eye climate policy in economic relief bill

3. POLITICS:

Utility workers endorse carbon pricing

4. RISK:

Just one-third of Americans in flood zones have insurance

POLITICS

5. LAW:

State AGs: Courtroom clashes to follow NEPA overhaul

6. ADAPTATION:

Big grapple: New Yorkers compete for $3B in resilience funds

7. FINANCE:

U.S. firms bankroll oil extraction in the Amazon — report

GLOBAL

8. UNITED NATIONS:

Coronavirus spurs mass cancellation of climate meetings

9. BRITAIN:

Electric cars, carbon capture get boost in U.K. budget

10. EXTREME WEATHER:

Climate denial risks worse wildfires in Australia — report

IN THE STATES

11. CALIFORNIA:

Human composting could become a green option

ACTIVISM

---

12. ADVOCACY:

Greta Thunberg: Try other ways to protest amid outbreak

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Clarifications after Trump's Oval Office address are emblematic of his uneven coronavirus response
Date: Thursday, March 12, 2020 8:26:01 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Clarifications after Trump's Oval Office address are emblematic of his uneven coronavirus response

The unforced errors in President Trump's address to the nation on Wednesday night captured in miniature his uneven, muddled and often confused response to the novel coronavirus pandemic.

This was not some off-the-cuff riff as Trump prepared to board Marine One. It was a formal speech, read from a teleprompter, in prime time.

Networks cut into regularly scheduled programming at 9 p.m. Eastern so that the American people could hear directly from their commander in chief about what is perhaps the gravest crisis of his tenure. It was only the second time during his three years in office that Trump requested the opportunity to address the country this way. Yet he still could not manage to get the basic facts straight.

The president opened with huge news: The United States “will be suspending all travel from Europe to the United States for the next 30 days,” with the exception of the United Kingdom, starting at midnight on Friday. “These prohibitions will not only apply to the tremendous amount of trade and cargo but various other things as we get approval,” he said. “Anything coming from Europe to the United States is what we are discussing.”

But the text of the order released by the White House stated that the ban would not include cargo. The president later tweeted a correction to the speech. “Trade will in no way be affected,” he wrote. “The restriction stops people not goods.”

Ken Cuccinelli, the acting deputy secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, tweeted after the speech that the restrictions announced by Trump do not actually apply “to American citizens or legal permanent residents or their families.” The president had not said his restrictions would apply only to foreign nationals. In fact, much of the community transmission of coronavirus in the United States has been linked to U.S. travelers who visited foreign countries or who contracted the disease at gatherings in the United States.

Trump also declared in his televised address that health insurance companies “have agreed to waive all co-payments for coronavirus treatments.” AHIP, the trade association for insurers, clarified that the companies have agreed to cover testing, not treatment. There’s a huge difference: Treatment will be much more costly for people infected with the virus than the underlying test.

None of these three clarifications inspire confidence that the president is fully in command of the crisis. The speech certainly didn't calm the markets: The Dow Jones industrial average plunged nearly 1,700 points at the open this morning – a day after shedding nearly 1,500 points to fall into a bear market, which marks a 20-percent drop from its all-time high.

The president used the bulk of last night's speech to defend his handling of the coronavirus outbreak, emphasizing that he's acting "with great speed." In fact, he has not. It has been 51 days since the first case was confirmed in the United States. Squandering precious time, Trump claimed Democrats were using the virus as "their new hoax," downplayed the danger, repeatedly contradicted public health experts and spread falsehoods, such as saying the virus will go away when it gets warmer. Two weeks ago, Trump said the virus was "very much under control" and that the number of people infected was "going very substantially down, not up." Soon, he declared on Feb. 26, the total number of cases will be "close to zero."

There are now more than 1,300 confirmed cases in the United States, with at least 38 deaths. Even in his televised address last night, Trump maintained that the risk to most Americans is “very, very low.” Anthony Fauci, the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, testified earlier in the day at a congressional hearing: “Bottom line, it’s going to get worse.”

The build-the-wall president spoke of the “foreign virus,” which he noted “started in China and is now spreading throughout the world,” as if it were an invading army that must be repelled.

When everything looks like a foreign invasion, every problem seems like it can be solved with walls. “We made a life-saving move with early action on China. Now we must take the same action with Europe,” he said. “I will never hesitate to take any necessary steps to protect the lives, health and safety of the American people. I will always put the well-being of America first.”

Trump’s emphasis on the European Union flows from his isolationist foreign policy impulses. Stephen Miller, the White House domestic policy adviser best known for his ardent advocacy of nativist immigration policies, reportedly crafted Trump’s address.

European officials strongly condemned Trump’s sudden announcement, which caught them by surprise. “Of all the slights between Washington and Europe in recent years, the new travel restrictions represented a blow an order of magnitude beyond previous disputes,” James McAuley and Michael Birnbaum report from Paris. “Some in Europe wondered on Thursday if Britain and Ireland were exempted because they contain Trump-owned properties. In any case, the decision appeared to confound even leaders of the British government ... Trump’s announcement led to panic at various European airports on Thursday morning, as American travelers in Europe scrambled to change their tickets onto U.S. bound flights at the last minute, often at premium prices.”

“The Coronavirus is a global crisis, not limited to any continent and it requires cooperation rather than unilateral action,” the top leaders of the E.U. said in an official statement. “The European Union disapproves of the fact that the U.S. decision to impose a travel ban was taken unilaterally and without consultation.”

The travel ban is also contrary to the recommendations of experts, including at the World Health Organization. “It’s entirely unwise,” Lawrence Gostin, a global health law professor at Georgetown University, told William Wan. “First of all, it violates WHO recommendations and treaties that the U.S. has signed on to. But it doesn’t even do anything to impact the epidemic. Many of the countries in Europe besides Italy have just as many cases or less than the United States. The idea this would reduce transmission here is not based on evidence. The reality is germs don’t respect borders.”

Even Trump’s own former homeland security adviser questioned the efficacy of what Trump announced:

France’s most recent ambassador to the United States said Trump is looking for a scapegoat:

Indeed, Trump’s 11-minute speech was packed with nationalistic rhetoric. Trump effusively praised the United States government, even though South Korea and other countries are doing a vastly more effective job testing their citizens for the virus. “The virus will not have a chance against us,” Trump said. “No nation is more prepared or more resilient than the United States.”

“Trump turned in a laboring performance — one intended to project calm competence that instead seemed to reveal uncertainty,” Phil Rucker and Anne Gearan report. “Seated behind the Resolute Desk, the president

struggled at moments to read the words on the teleprompter. He clasped his hands and twiddled his thumbs. He spoke with a curious affect, his voice sounding raspy and his delivery lacking the passion typically evident in his speeches.”

On this side of the Atlantic, Democrats focused on what Trump did not discuss. “Alarmingly, the president did not say how the administration will address the lack of coronavirus testing kits throughout the United States,” Democratic congressional leaders Chuck Schumer and Nancy Pelosi said in a joint statement.

Bigger picture, the president seemed more focused during his speech on the economy’s health than the public’s health. Trump rattled off several policy proposals to stimulate the economy, even as he insisted that the economy has never been stronger, including loans to small businesses, allowing businesses and individuals to defer tax payments without interest and calling on Congress to cut the payroll tax – an idea that appears dead on arrival. Trump had appeared in the Cabinet Room earlier in the day with the chief executives of major banks to urge calm.

“Trump, in an explosive tirade Monday, urged Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to encourage Federal Reserve Chair Jerome H. Powell to do more to stimulate the economy,” Bob Costa, Josh Dawsey, Jeff Stein and Ashley Parker scoop. “During that tense Monday meeting in the Oval Office, Trump fumed that Powell never should have been appointed and is damaging the nation and his presidency. He then told Mnuchin, who had encouraged Trump to nominate Powell in 2017, to engage with the chair and ask him to take more dramatic steps to arrest the stock market’s plummet ... Trump’s push to prod Powell came during an Oval Office meeting during which he also suggested to other officials that they call the Fed chair and ask him to consider further interest rate cuts.”

In keeping with its penchant for secrecy, the White House has ordered federal health officials to classify coronavirus meetings. This is keeping some experts out of the loop. “Dozens of classified discussions about such topics as the scope of infections, quarantines and travel restrictions have been held since mid-January in a high-security meeting room at the Department of Health and Human Services,” Reuters reports. “Staffers without security clearances, including government experts, were excluded from the interagency meetings... ‘We had some very critical people who did not have security clearances who could not go,’ one official said. ‘These should not be classified meetings. It was unnecessary.’”

There are signs, though, that Trump himself has begun to appreciate the risk of the outbreak to his own health. White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham announced after Trump’s speech that the president will no longer travel to Nevada and Colorado later this week, as scheduled, for campaign fundraisers and a speech to the Republican Jewish Coalition. “Out of an abundance of caution,” she said. The Trump campaign also canceled a “Catholics for Trump” rally scheduled for next week in Milwaukee, which had been announced just the day before. These moves are a reluctant nod to the ground truth after weeks of trying to maintain his business-as-usual routine.

---

The latest on the pandemic

Drastic measures are being taken across America.

The World Health Organization declared on Wednesday that covid-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus, is officially a pandemic. The virus has infected more than 125,000 people and killed more than 4,600 globally.

At least 44 states now have confirmed cases. Delaware, North Dakota and Mississippi reported their first cases. And the five new U.S. fatalities all happened at an assisted-living facility in Washington state, Teo Armus, Anna Fifield and Rick Noack report on our live blog.

- A D.C.-based staffer for Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.) tested positive, the first confirmed case on Capitol Hill. (Timothy Bella)
- Mayor Muriel Bowser declared a state of emergency in D.C. after person-to-person transmissions occurred, giving herself the power to order mandatory quarantines and to crack down on price gouging. Health officials said six more people tested positive in the District, bringing the total number of confirmed cases in the District, Maryland and Virginia to at least 34. (Justin Wm. Moyer, Jenna Portnoy, Fenit Nirappil and Darran Simon)
- The NBA indefinitely suspended the rest of its season after Rudy Gobert, the Utah Jazz center, tested positive. Teams that played against the Jazz within the past 10 days have been advised to self-quarantine. The announcement came shortly after a game between the Jazz and the Oklahoma City Thunder was abruptly postponed right before tip-off. (Ben Golliver)
- The NCAA said the March Madness basketball tournaments will be played without spectators. (Adam Kilgore and Golliver)
- After California, Oregon and Washington state banned gatherings of more than 250 people, the Seattle Mariners, Oakland Athletics and San Francisco Giants will be forced to postpone or relocate games scheduled at their home stadiums this month or play them without fans. (Dave Sheinin)
- Kentucky's governor asked all churches to cancel services. Many are doing so without being asked, including the Washington National Cathedral. The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Seattle suspended all public celebrations of Mass. Episcopal bishops in Virginia and D.C. announced that all churches in the dioceses would be closed for two weeks. (Michelle Boorstein and Sarah Pulliam Bailey)

- New York City and Chicago canceled their St. Patrick's Day parades. (New York Daily News and Chicago Tribune)
- A Broadway usher tested positive for the virus, sparking a cleaning frenzy in theaters as shows, hoping to stay open, suggest that its stars keep their distance from fans. (NYT)
- For now, health officials have not declared polling sites off-limits. But elections officials in states holding primaries on Tuesday — Ohio, Florida, Arizona and Illinois — are developing on-the-fly contingency plans to mitigate the risks to voters and encourage them to participate. (Elise Viebeck)
- The hospital industry asked the White House to declare a national emergency. The American Hospital Association's president and several hospital chief executives said the federal public health emergency that was declared at the end of January is inadequate. (Amy Goldstein)
- Colorado opened its first drive-up testing facility in Denver. People will need a doctor's note, but it's free to get tested if they show up with one. (KOAA)
- And Tom Hanks tested positive. The 63-year-old and his wife, actress Rita Wilson, are being treated in Australia. (Sonia Rao, Bethonie Butler and J. Freedom du Lac)
- Amtrak ridership has plummeted. Cancellations are up 300 percent. (Luz Lazo)
- Princess Cruises announced it will cancel voyages on its 18 ships around the world through May 10. The cruise line has seen passengers and crew on two of its ships face quarantines.
- Norwegian Cruise Line managers urged salespeople to spread falsehoods about the virus to help land bookings with potential customers. Leaked emails from a company whistleblower show the lengths the cruise giant's leaders have gone to protect the company. (Drew Harwell)

People in Italy are trapped at home with their loved ones' bodies.

“Attempts to slow the spread of the disease have led to unintended consequences, including several instances where funeral homes reportedly refused to collect the bodies of those infected with the virus,” Antonia Noori Farzan reports. “Teresa Franzese, 47, suffered from epilepsy but was healthy up until last week, when she began showing symptoms of coronavirus. She died on Saturday evening, in her Naples home. In a series of videos posted to Facebook the following afternoon, Luca Franzese said that his sister had been tested for the virus only after her death. The results came back positive, and he and several other relatives were placed under quarantine. That left a dilemma: What to do with Teresa’s body? After various authorities failed to come up with an answer, Franzese said, the city of Naples finally referred him to a funeral home. But the funeral home refused, telling him it wasn’t equipped to deal with the situation. ... On Sunday evening, Franzese posted an emotional appeal to his followers on Facebook, urging them to take the virus seriously as he stood in the same room where his sister lay dead in the background. ‘We are ruined,’ he said. ‘Italy has abandoned us.’”

- Italy ordered all stores to close, except supermarkets and pharmacies. The country, under an unprecedented national lockdown, has more than 12,000 confirmed cases and 827 deaths. (Chico Harlan and Loveday Morris)
- Saudi Arabia banned all travel to and from the E.U., following Trump's lead. (Paul Schemm)
- The U.S. Embassy branch office in Tel Aviv isolated some staffers after a visitor who had stopped by the visa office test positive. (Steve Hendrix)
- El Salvador began a mandatory nationwide quarantine, despite having no confirmed cases. Honduras reported its first two cases. (Kevin Sieff)
- The Caribbean is starting to suffer. The region depends on cruises and travel. (Kate Chappell, Anthony Faiola and Jasper Ward)
- A quarantine center in China collapsed, killing 29. A total of 71 were trapped when the building collapsed. (Liu Yang)
- Wuhan is preparing to reopen its airport as the end of its lockdown comes into view. China's National Health Commission said that of the 80,763 confirmed cases there, 62,793 of patients have now recovered. (Lyric Li)

- Austria and Greece reported their first deaths from the virus. (Teo Armus)

Experts are struggling to forecast how bad this will get in the U.S.

Former CDC director Tom Frieden said deaths in the United States could range widely, depending on what percentage of the population becomes infected and how lethal the disease proves to be. “Frieden, who oversaw the U.S. response to the 2009 H1N1 influenza pandemic, the 2014 Ebola epidemic and the 2016 Zika epidemic, says that in a worst-case scenario, but one that is not implausible, half the U.S. population would become infected and more than 1 million people would die,” Joel Achenbach, William Wan and Lena H. Sun report. “U.S. officials have said they are working with 50 academic modeling groups around the country. But so far, no projections of the outbreak’s trajectory have been publicly released by the CDC or the White House coronavirus task force. Still, Frieden said, ‘anyone who says that they know where this is going with confidence doesn’t know enough about it.’ ... In his Capitol Hill testimony, [Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases,] said that a plausible covid-19 fatality rate could be 1 percent. That, he said, is 10 times as lethal as seasonal influenza. He was clear: This is more dangerous than the flu.”

Congress’s in-house physician, Brian Monahan, expects 70 million to 150 million Americans will contract the virus. He told Hill staffers during a closed-door meeting that 80 percent of people who contract the virus will ultimately be fine, Axios reports. Capitol tours have been canceled.

The coronavirus can live on some surfaces for up to three days.

“The new coronavirus can live in the air for several hours and on some surfaces for as long as two to three days, tests by U.S. government and other scientists have found,” the AP reports. “Their work, published Wednesday, doesn’t prove that anyone has been infected through breathing it from the air or by touching contaminated surfaces, researchers stress. ... For this study, researchers used a nebulizer device to put samples of the new virus into the air, imitating what might happen if an infected person coughed or made the virus airborne some other way. They found that viable virus could be detected up to three hours later in the air, up to four hours on copper, up to 24 hours on cardboard and up to two to three days on plastic and stainless steel.”

The first U.S. layoffs from the virus are here.

“Interviews with more than two dozen firms and workers reveal that the pain is now translating into layoffs in a wider circle of industries, including a bakery and a chain restaurant,” Abha Bhattarai, Heather Long and Rachel Siegel report. “At the Port of Los Angeles, 145 drivers have been laid off and others have been sent home without pay as massive ships from China stopped arriving and work dried up. At travel agencies in Atlanta and Los Angeles, several workers lost their jobs as bookings evaporated. ... Meanwhile a hotel in Seattle is closing an entire department, a former employee said, and as many as 50 people lost their jobs after the South by Southwest festival in Austin got canceled. Economists fear more layoffs in the coming weeks as supply chains come to a halt and people stay home and spend less.”

As schools decide whether to close, confusion and second-guessing reign.

“In Washington state, a center of the outbreak, a suburban district was closed, but Seattle Public Schools said it would remain open — until Wednesday ... Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) advised all schools to prepare contingency plans in case they, too, need to close,” Laura Meckler and Moriah Balingit report. “In other systems, including D.C. Public Schools, classes are being canceled for a day to give teachers time to prepare for distance learning, should schools be forced to close....As of Wednesday, 1,251 public and private schools have been closed or are scheduled to close, affecting more than 856,000 students, according to a tally by the journal EdWeek.”

Chaos has spread across college campuses after administrations told students to stay away. “Low-income students wondered whether they could afford to go home. International students had questions about their visas, which usually did not permit online learning. Graduate students worried about the effects on research projects years in the making,” the Times reports.

House Democrats will vote today on a partisan relief package.

“Outlines of the plan were shared Wednesday evening with Trump administration officials, although chances of reaching a bipartisan deal ahead of the vote appeared slim,” Erica Werner, Mike DeBonis and Seung Min Kim report. “The legislation includes free coronavirus testing, up to three months of emergency paid leave benefits to all workers affected by the coronavirus and could also include an 8 percentage point increase in the federal share of Medicaid payments to states ... Although the Senate may not have time to act before a congressional recess scheduled for next week, a number of Republican senators indicated openness Wednesday to at least some elements of the House plan and said it was important to act quickly.”

---

Quote of the day

Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) was asked what the punishment will be if more than 250 people gather against his orders. “The penalties are you might be killing your granddad if you don’t do it,” he answered. (NBC News)

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

2020 watch

Bernie Sanders didn’t drop out, but he’s not going full speed ahead either.

“In an extraordinary 10-minute appearance in his hometown after faring poorly in another set of primaries, [the independent senator from Vermont] conceded that he was losing the nominating contest to Joe Biden and had failed to persuade Democrats that he was more electable, sounding the notes of a candidate who had come to terms with his shortcomings and was ready to accept defeat,” Sean Sullivan reports. “But he also made clear that he was staying in the race, at least for a few more days, determined to meet Biden in a one-on-one debate Sunday that he said would expose important distinctions between their records. ... And he issued a warning to party leaders not to take lightly the resonance of his sweeping liberal ideas or his dominance among younger voters — showing how it is in his and the party's interest to forge the common ground that eluded Democrats after his loss to Hillary Clinton four years ago.”

Biden's focus has shifted from Sanders to Trump.

His campaign canceled planned rallies in Illinois and Florida, saying they'll be replaced by “virtual events.” The former vice president announced a public health advisory committee and plans to deliver his own address this afternoon in Delaware on how he'd respond to the pandemic. “Biden's campaign was working to reboot amid broad concerns within the party that his current operation is ill-equipped to match Trump's behemoth reelection effort,” Matt Viser and Michael Scherer report. “Biden's advisers are taking steps to expand virtually all parts of his shoestring campaign operation, from finance, field and communications departments to the senior leadership team. ... [Biden senior adviser Anita Dunn] suggested that would be done at least in part by embracing aides to former candidates, many of whom have endorsed Biden in recent days. ... At the same time as he tries to finish off Sanders and bulk up his campaign, Biden also is planning for a vice presidential selection process later this spring.”

Elizabeth Warren is unlikely to endorse.

“Ms. Warren is expected to withhold her endorsement from Mr. Sanders as well as Mr. Biden at this point, choosing to let the primary play out rather than seek to change its course, according to several people familiar with Ms. Warren's thinking,” the New York Times reports. “Even before Mr. Sanders lost four states in Tuesday's primaries, dealing a huge blow to his presidential hopes, Ms. Warren was reluctant to support him ... Her camp also viewed Mr. Sanders's electoral standing as fading in recent weeks, raising doubts about whether an endorsement would be a lost cause.”

Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) abruptly postponed a vote on a Biden-related subpoena.

The chairman of the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee has been attacked by Democrats for pursuing a politically motivated probe amid a national crisis. “Johnson said he would indefinitely postpone the subpoena for documents and testimony from Andrii Telizhenko, a Ukrainian national who worked for a U.S. lobbying firm that acted on behalf of Burisma, the Ukrainian energy company that employed Hunter Biden as a board member,” Mike DeBonis reports.

“Johnson said he was doing so ‘[o]ut of an abundance of caution and to allow time for [senators] to receive additional briefings.’ But Johnson indicated that the investigation would continue. He said in an interview Wednesday that he would instead seek to directly subpoena the lobbying firm, Blue Star Strategies.”

Trump’s reelection odds suddenly look shakier.

“‘If it was Warren or Bernie and you don’t have coronavirus, I think Trump might sneak by,’ said Kevin DeWine, the former chairman of the Ohio Republican Party. ‘But if it’s Biden, ‘My I.R.A. has tanked,’ and we’re going to have complete disruption because of coronavirus, I think it’s a totally different story,’” the NYT reports. “Of course, what happens in March may ultimately have little bearing in November. ... And if there’s any constant in the Trump era, it is that what’s in the news at a given moment will change in a matter of hours, days or at most weeks.”

---

Other developments that shouldn't be overlooked

Harvey Weinstein was sentenced to 23 years in prison.

“In its verdict Feb. 24, a jury found that Weinstein, 67, forced oral sex on former production assistant Mimi Haley, now 42, at his apartment in 2006 and raped onetime aspiring actress Jessica Mann, now 34, at a DoubleTree hotel in 2013,” Shayna Jacobs reports. “The sentence is seen as a victory for the #MeToo movement ... Weinstein’s trial was hailed by advocates as a step forward for assault survivors, especially given that Mann and Haley continued their relationship with him after the incidents and such scenarios were previously considered very difficult to prosecute. Before Justice James Burke announced the sentence, both of the women read impact statements and prosecutor Joan Illuzzi-Orbon argued for the maximum of 29 years in prison. The judge also heard from Weinstein’s attorneys and the client himself, who compared the #MeToo movement to McCarthyism while playing down his clout in Hollywood and touting his charitable work.”

The Supreme Court said the Trump administration may continue its “Remain in Mexico” asylum policy.

“The justices reversed a decision of a panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit that had ordered the policy be suspended Thursday along parts of the border. As is usual in emergency rulings, the court's unsigned, one-paragraph order did not provide the majority's reasoning. Only Justice Sonia Sotomayor noted her dissent," Robert Barnes reports.

U.S. troops were killed in a rocket attack in Iraq, potentially spiking tensions with Iran.

Two Americans and one other member of the coalition were killed in the attack last night, a U.S. military spokesman said. "At least 12 people were wounded in the attack at Camp Taji, about 17 miles north of Baghdad, according to the spokesman, Navy Capt. Bill Urban. About 18 Katyusha rockets hit the base, and five of the wounded were evacuated in serious condition, Urban said," Dan Lamothe and Louisa Loveluck report. "The rockets were launched from the Rashediya area of northeast Baghdad, Iraqi military officials said in a statement.... U.S. officials have attributed the use of such rockets in attacks to Iranian-backed militias in Iraq, prompting questions how the United States and its allies might respond." The House passed a war powers resolution limiting Trump's ability to strike Iran on a 227 to 186 vote, sending the bill to the president's desk for a certain veto.

Chelsea Manning attempted suicide.

The former Army intelligence analyst attempted suicide inside an Alexandria jail yesterday and was hospitalized just days before a federal judge is scheduled to hear a motion to release her from custody, her lawyers said. (Clarence Williams)

---

Social media speed read

Obama's former national security adviser reacted to Trump's coronavirus speech:

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.), who remains in self-quarantine at home in Houston, received a gift basket:

And Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) commended a fellow member of the Squad for showing grace in response to a death threat:

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert announced that, starting Monday, all late-night shows in New York City will be taped without studio audiences:

Seth Meyers remixed Trump's speech with a classic song:

And the 2008 Republican nominee for vice president sang "Baby Got Back" on national television:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Clarifications after Trump's Oval Office address are emblematic of his uneven coronavirus response
Date: Thursday, March 12, 2020 8:26:26 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Clarifications after Trump's Oval Office address are emblematic of his uneven coronavirus response

The unforced errors in President Trump's address to the nation on Wednesday night captured in miniature his uneven, muddled and often confused response to the novel coronavirus pandemic.

This was not some off-the-cuff riff as Trump prepared to board Marine One. It was a formal speech, read from a teleprompter, in prime time.

Networks cut into regularly scheduled programming at 9 p.m. Eastern so that the American people could hear directly from their commander in chief about what is perhaps the gravest crisis of his tenure. It was only the second time during his three years in office that Trump requested the opportunity to address the country this way. Yet he still could not manage to get the basic facts straight.

The president opened with huge news: The United States “will be suspending all travel from Europe to the United States for the next 30 days,” with the exception of the United Kingdom, starting at midnight on Friday. “These prohibitions will not only apply to the tremendous amount of trade and cargo but various other things as we get approval,” he said. “Anything coming from Europe to the United States is what we are discussing.”

But the text of the order released by the White House stated that the ban would not include cargo. The president later tweeted a correction to the speech. “Trade will in no way be affected,” he wrote. “The restriction stops people not goods.”

Ken Cuccinelli, the acting deputy secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, tweeted after the speech that the restrictions announced by Trump do not actually apply “to American citizens or legal permanent residents or their families.” The president had not said his restrictions would apply only to foreign nationals. In fact, much of the community transmission of coronavirus in the United States has been linked to U.S. travelers who visited foreign countries or who contracted the disease at gatherings in the United States.

Trump also declared in his televised address that health insurance companies “have agreed to waive all co-payments for coronavirus treatments.” AHIP, the trade association for insurers, clarified that the companies have agreed to cover testing, not treatment. There’s a huge difference: Treatment will be much more costly for people infected with the virus than the underlying test.

None of these three clarifications inspire confidence that the president is fully in command of the crisis. The speech certainly didn't calm the markets: The Dow Jones industrial average plunged nearly 1,700 points at the open this morning – a day after shedding nearly 1,500 points to fall into a bear market, which marks a 20-percent drop from its all-time high.

The president used the bulk of last night's speech to defend his handling of the coronavirus outbreak, emphasizing that he's acting "with great speed." In fact, he has not. It has been 51 days since the first case was confirmed in the United States. Squandering precious time, Trump claimed Democrats were using the virus as "their new hoax," downplayed the danger, repeatedly contradicted public health experts and spread falsehoods, such as saying the virus will go away when it gets warmer. Two weeks ago, Trump said the virus was "very much under control" and that the number of people infected was "going very substantially down, not up." Soon, he declared on Feb. 26, the total number of cases will be "close to zero."

There are now more than 1,300 confirmed cases in the United States, with at least 38 deaths. Even in his televised address last night, Trump maintained that the risk to most Americans is “very, very low.” Anthony Fauci, the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, testified earlier in the day at a congressional hearing: “Bottom line, it’s going to get worse.”

The build-the-wall president spoke of the “foreign virus,” which he noted “started in China and is now spreading throughout the world,” as if it were an invading army that must be repelled.

When everything looks like a foreign invasion, every problem seems like it can be solved with walls. “We made a life-saving move with early action on China. Now we must take the same action with Europe,” he said. “I will never hesitate to take any necessary steps to protect the lives, health and safety of the American people. I will always put the well-being of America first.”

Trump’s emphasis on the European Union flows from his isolationist foreign policy impulses. Stephen Miller, the White House domestic policy adviser best known for his ardent advocacy of nativist immigration policies, reportedly crafted Trump’s address.

European officials strongly condemned Trump’s sudden announcement, which caught them by surprise. “Of all the slights between Washington and Europe in recent years, the new travel restrictions represented a blow an order of magnitude beyond previous disputes,” James McAuley and Michael Birnbaum report from Paris. “Some in Europe wondered on Thursday if Britain and Ireland were exempted because they contain Trump-owned properties. In any case, the decision appeared to confound even leaders of the British government ... Trump’s announcement led to panic at various European airports on Thursday morning, as American travelers in Europe scrambled to change their tickets onto U.S. bound flights at the last minute, often at premium prices.”

“The Coronavirus is a global crisis, not limited to any continent and it requires cooperation rather than unilateral action,” the top leaders of the E.U. said in an official statement. “The European Union disapproves of the fact that the U.S. decision to impose a travel ban was taken unilaterally and without consultation.”

The travel ban is also contrary to the recommendations of experts, including at the World Health Organization. “It’s entirely unwise,” Lawrence Gostin, a global health law professor at Georgetown University, told William Wan. “First of all, it violates WHO recommendations and treaties that the U.S. has signed on to. But it doesn’t even do anything to impact the epidemic. Many of the countries in Europe besides Italy have just as many cases or less than the United States. The idea this would reduce transmission here is not based on evidence. The reality is germs don’t respect borders.”

Even Trump’s own former homeland security adviser questioned the efficacy of what Trump announced:

France’s most recent ambassador to the United States said Trump is looking for a scapegoat:

Indeed, Trump’s 11-minute speech was packed with nationalistic rhetoric. Trump effusively praised the United States government, even though South Korea and other countries are doing a vastly more effective job testing their citizens for the virus. “The virus will not have a chance against us,” Trump said. “No nation is more prepared or more resilient than the United States.”

“Trump turned in a laboring performance — one intended to project calm competence that instead seemed to reveal uncertainty,” Phil Rucker and Anne Gearan report. “Seated behind the Resolute Desk, the president

struggled at moments to read the words on the teleprompter. He clasped his hands and twiddled his thumbs. He spoke with a curious affect, his voice sounding raspy and his delivery lacking the passion typically evident in his speeches.”

On this side of the Atlantic, Democrats focused on what Trump did not discuss. “Alarming, the president did not say how the administration will address the lack of coronavirus testing kits throughout the United States,” Democratic congressional leaders Chuck Schumer and Nancy Pelosi said in a joint statement.

Bigger picture, the president seemed more focused during his speech on the economy’s health than the public’s health. Trump rattled off several policy proposals to stimulate the economy, even as he insisted that the economy has never been stronger, including loans to small businesses, allowing businesses and individuals to defer tax payments without interest and calling on Congress to cut the payroll tax – an idea that appears dead on arrival. Trump had appeared in the Cabinet Room earlier in the day with the chief executives of major banks to urge calm.

“Trump, in an explosive tirade Monday, urged Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to encourage Federal Reserve Chair Jerome H. Powell to do more to stimulate the economy,” Bob Costa, Josh Dawsey, Jeff Stein and Ashley Parker scoop. “During that tense Monday meeting in the Oval Office, Trump fumed that Powell never should have been appointed and is damaging the nation and his presidency. He then told Mnuchin, who had encouraged Trump to nominate Powell in 2017, to engage with the chair and ask him to take more dramatic steps to arrest the stock market’s plummet ... Trump’s push to prod Powell came during an Oval Office meeting during which he also suggested to other officials that they call the Fed chair and ask him to consider further interest rate cuts.”

In keeping with its penchant for secrecy, the White House has ordered federal health officials to classify coronavirus meetings. This is keeping some experts out of the loop. “Dozens of classified discussions about such topics as the scope of infections, quarantines and travel restrictions have been held since mid-January in a high-security meeting room at the Department of Health and Human Services,” Reuters reports. “Staffers without security clearances, including government experts, were excluded from the interagency meetings... ‘We had some very critical people who did not have security clearances who could not go,’ one official said. ‘These should not be classified meetings. It was unnecessary.’”

There are signs, though, that Trump himself has begun to appreciate the risk of the outbreak to his own health. White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham announced after Trump’s speech that the president will no longer travel to Nevada and Colorado later this week, as scheduled, for campaign fundraisers and a speech to the Republican Jewish Coalition. “Out of an abundance of caution,” she said. The Trump campaign also canceled a “Catholics for Trump” rally scheduled for next week in Milwaukee, which had been announced just the day before. These moves are a reluctant nod to the ground truth after weeks of trying to maintain his business-as-usual routine.

---

The latest on the pandemic

Drastic measures are being taken across America.

The World Health Organization declared on Wednesday that covid-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus, is officially a pandemic. The virus has infected more than 125,000 people and killed more than 4,600 globally.

At least 44 states now have confirmed cases. Delaware, North Dakota and Mississippi reported their first cases. And the five new U.S. fatalities all happened at an assisted-living facility in Washington state, Teo Armus, Anna Fifield and Rick Noack report on our live blog.

- A D.C.-based staffer for Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.) tested positive, the first confirmed case on Capitol Hill. (Timothy Bella)
- Mayor Muriel Bowser declared a state of emergency in D.C. after person-to-person transmissions occurred, giving herself the power to order mandatory quarantines and to crack down on price gouging. Health officials said six more people tested positive in the District, bringing the total number of confirmed cases in the District, Maryland and Virginia to at least 34. (Justin Wm. Moyer, Jenna Portnoy, Fenit Nirappil and Darran Simon)
- The NBA indefinitely suspended the rest of its season after Rudy Gobert, the Utah Jazz center, tested positive. Teams that played against the Jazz within the past 10 days have been advised to self-quarantine. The announcement came shortly after a game between the Jazz and the Oklahoma City Thunder was abruptly postponed right before tip-off. (Ben Golliver)
- The NCAA said the March Madness basketball tournaments will be played without spectators. (Adam Kilgore and Golliver)
- After California, Oregon and Washington state banned gatherings of more than 250 people, the Seattle Mariners, Oakland Athletics and San Francisco Giants will be forced to postpone or relocate games scheduled at their home stadiums this month or play them without fans. (Dave Sheinin)
- Kentucky's governor asked all churches to cancel services. Many are doing so without being asked, including the Washington National Cathedral. The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Seattle suspended all public celebrations of Mass. Episcopal bishops in Virginia and D.C. announced that all churches in the dioceses would be closed for two weeks. (Michelle Boorstein and Sarah Pulliam Bailey)

- New York City and Chicago canceled their St. Patrick's Day parades. (New York Daily News and Chicago Tribune)
- A Broadway usher tested positive for the virus, sparking a cleaning frenzy in theaters as shows, hoping to stay open, suggest that its stars keep their distance from fans. (NYT)
- For now, health officials have not declared polling sites off-limits. But elections officials in states holding primaries on Tuesday — Ohio, Florida, Arizona and Illinois — are developing on-the-fly contingency plans to mitigate the risks to voters and encourage them to participate. (Elise Viebeck)
- The hospital industry asked the White House to declare a national emergency. The American Hospital Association's president and several hospital chief executives said the federal public health emergency that was declared at the end of January is inadequate. (Amy Goldstein)
- Colorado opened its first drive-up testing facility in Denver. People will need a doctor's note, but it's free to get tested if they show up with one. (KOAA)
- And Tom Hanks tested positive. The 63-year-old and his wife, actress Rita Wilson, are being treated in Australia. (Sonia Rao, Bethonie Butler and J. Freedom du Lac)
- Amtrak ridership has plummeted. Cancellations are up 300 percent. (Luz Lazo)
- Princess Cruises announced it will cancel voyages on its 18 ships around the world through May 10. The cruise line has seen passengers and crew on two of its ships face quarantines.
- Norwegian Cruise Line managers urged salespeople to spread falsehoods about the virus to help land bookings with potential customers. Leaked emails from a company whistleblower show the lengths the cruise giant's leaders have gone to protect the company. (Drew Harwell)

People in Italy are trapped at home with their loved ones' bodies.

“Attempts to slow the spread of the disease have led to unintended consequences, including several instances where funeral homes reportedly refused to collect the bodies of those infected with the virus,” Antonia Noori Farzan reports. “Teresa Franzese, 47, suffered from epilepsy but was healthy up until last week, when she began showing symptoms of coronavirus. She died on Saturday evening, in her Naples home. In a series of videos posted to Facebook the following afternoon, Luca Franzese said that his sister had been tested for the virus only after her death. The results came back positive, and he and several other relatives were placed under quarantine. That left a dilemma: What to do with Teresa’s body? After various authorities failed to come up with an answer, Franzese said, the city of Naples finally referred him to a funeral home. But the funeral home refused, telling him it wasn’t equipped to deal with the situation. ... On Sunday evening, Franzese posted an emotional appeal to his followers on Facebook, urging them to take the virus seriously as he stood in the same room where his sister lay dead in the background. ‘We are ruined,’ he said. ‘Italy has abandoned us.’”

- Italy ordered all stores to close, except supermarkets and pharmacies. The country, under an unprecedented national lockdown, has more than 12,000 confirmed cases and 827 deaths. (Chico Harlan and Loveday Morris)
- Saudi Arabia banned all travel to and from the E.U., following Trump's lead. (Paul Schemm)
- The U.S. Embassy branch office in Tel Aviv isolated some staffers after a visitor who had stopped by the visa office test positive. (Steve Hendrix)
- El Salvador began a mandatory nationwide quarantine, despite having no confirmed cases. Honduras reported its first two cases. (Kevin Sieff)
- The Caribbean is starting to suffer. The region depends on cruises and travel. (Kate Chappell, Anthony Faiola and Jasper Ward)
- A quarantine center in China collapsed, killing 29. A total of 71 were trapped when the building collapsed. (Liu Yang)
- Wuhan is preparing to reopen its airport as the end of its lockdown comes into view. China's National Health Commission said that of the 80,763 confirmed cases there, 62,793 of patients have now recovered. (Lyric Li)

- Austria and Greece reported their first deaths from the virus. (Teo Armus)

Experts are struggling to forecast how bad this will get in the U.S.

Former CDC director Tom Frieden said deaths in the United States could range widely, depending on what percentage of the population becomes infected and how lethal the disease proves to be. “Frieden, who oversaw the U.S. response to the 2009 H1N1 influenza pandemic, the 2014 Ebola epidemic and the 2016 Zika epidemic, says that in a worst-case scenario, but one that is not implausible, half the U.S. population would become infected and more than 1 million people would die,” Joel Achenbach, William Wan and Lena H. Sun report. “U.S. officials have said they are working with 50 academic modeling groups around the country. But so far, no projections of the outbreak’s trajectory have been publicly released by the CDC or the White House coronavirus task force. Still, Frieden said, ‘anyone who says that they know where this is going with confidence doesn’t know enough about it.’ ... In his Capitol Hill testimony, [Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases,] said that a plausible covid-19 fatality rate could be 1 percent. That, he said, is 10 times as lethal as seasonal influenza. He was clear: This is more dangerous than the flu.”

Congress’s in-house physician, Brian Monahan, expects 70 million to 150 million Americans will contract the virus. He told Hill staffers during a closed-door meeting that 80 percent of people who contract the virus will ultimately be fine, Axios reports. Capitol tours have been canceled.

The coronavirus can live on some surfaces for up to three days.

“The new coronavirus can live in the air for several hours and on some surfaces for as long as two to three days, tests by U.S. government and other scientists have found,” the AP reports. “Their work, published Wednesday, doesn’t prove that anyone has been infected through breathing it from the air or by touching contaminated surfaces, researchers stress. ... For this study, researchers used a nebulizer device to put samples of the new virus into the air, imitating what might happen if an infected person coughed or made the virus airborne some other way. They found that viable virus could be detected up to three hours later in the air, up to four hours on copper, up to 24 hours on cardboard and up to two to three days on plastic and stainless steel.”

The first U.S. layoffs from the virus are here.

“Interviews with more than two dozen firms and workers reveal that the pain is now translating into layoffs in a wider circle of industries, including a bakery and a chain restaurant,” Abha Bhattarai, Heather Long and Rachel Siegel report. “At the Port of Los Angeles, 145 drivers have been laid off and others have been sent home without pay as massive ships from China stopped arriving and work dried up. At travel agencies in Atlanta and Los Angeles, several workers lost their jobs as bookings evaporated. ... Meanwhile a hotel in Seattle is closing an entire department, a former employee said, and as many as 50 people lost their jobs after the South by Southwest festival in Austin got canceled. Economists fear more layoffs in the coming weeks as supply chains come to a halt and people stay home and spend less.”

As schools decide whether to close, confusion and second-guessing reign.

“In Washington state, a center of the outbreak, a suburban district was closed, but Seattle Public Schools said it would remain open — until Wednesday ... Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) advised all schools to prepare contingency plans in case they, too, need to close,” Laura Meckler and Moriah Balingit report. “In other systems, including D.C. Public Schools, classes are being canceled for a day to give teachers time to prepare for distance learning, should schools be forced to close....As of Wednesday, 1,251 public and private schools have been closed or are scheduled to close, affecting more than 856,000 students, according to a tally by the journal EdWeek.”

Chaos has spread across college campuses after administrations told students to stay away. “Low-income students wondered whether they could afford to go home. International students had questions about their visas, which usually did not permit online learning. Graduate students worried about the effects on research projects years in the making,” the Times reports.

House Democrats will vote today on a partisan relief package.

“Outlines of the plan were shared Wednesday evening with Trump administration officials, although chances of reaching a bipartisan deal ahead of the vote appeared slim,” Erica Werner, Mike DeBonis and Seung Min Kim report. “The legislation includes free coronavirus testing, up to three months of emergency paid leave benefits to all workers affected by the coronavirus and could also include an 8 percentage point increase in the federal share of Medicaid payments to states ... Although the Senate may not have time to act before a congressional recess scheduled for next week, a number of Republican senators indicated openness Wednesday to at least some elements of the House plan and said it was important to act quickly.”

---

Quote of the day

Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) was asked what the punishment will be if more than 250 people gather against his orders. “The penalties are you might be killing your granddad if you don’t do it,” he answered. (NBC News)

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

2020 watch

Bernie Sanders didn’t drop out, but he’s not going full speed ahead either.

“In an extraordinary 10-minute appearance in his hometown after faring poorly in another set of primaries, [the independent senator from Vermont] conceded that he was losing the nominating contest to Joe Biden and had failed to persuade Democrats that he was more electable, sounding the notes of a candidate who had come to terms with his shortcomings and was ready to accept defeat,” Sean Sullivan reports. “But he also made clear that he was staying in the race, at least for a few more days, determined to meet Biden in a one-on-one debate Sunday that he said would expose important distinctions between their records. ... And he issued a warning to party leaders not to take lightly the resonance of his sweeping liberal ideas or his dominance among younger voters — showing how it is in his and the party's interest to forge the common ground that eluded Democrats after his loss to Hillary Clinton four years ago.”

Biden's focus has shifted from Sanders to Trump.

His campaign canceled planned rallies in Illinois and Florida, saying they'll be replaced by “virtual events.” The former vice president announced a public health advisory committee and plans to deliver his own address this afternoon in Delaware on how he'd respond to the pandemic. “Biden's campaign was working to reboot amid broad concerns within the party that his current operation is ill-equipped to match Trump's behemoth reelection effort,” Matt Viser and Michael Scherer report. “Biden's advisers are taking steps to expand virtually all parts of his shoestring campaign operation, from finance, field and communications departments to the senior leadership team. ... [Biden senior adviser Anita Dunn] suggested that would be done at least in part by embracing aides to former candidates, many of whom have endorsed Biden in recent days. ... At the same time as he tries to finish off Sanders and bulk up his campaign, Biden also is planning for a vice presidential selection process later this spring.”

Elizabeth Warren is unlikely to endorse.

“Ms. Warren is expected to withhold her endorsement from Mr. Sanders as well as Mr. Biden at this point, choosing to let the primary play out rather than seek to change its course, according to several people familiar with Ms. Warren's thinking,” the New York Times reports. “Even before Mr. Sanders lost four states in Tuesday's primaries, dealing a huge blow to his presidential hopes, Ms. Warren was reluctant to support him ... Her camp also viewed Mr. Sanders's electoral standing as fading in recent weeks, raising doubts about whether an endorsement would be a lost cause.”

Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) abruptly postponed a vote on a Biden-related subpoena.

The chairman of the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee has been attacked by Democrats for pursuing a politically motivated probe amid a national crisis. “Johnson said he would indefinitely postpone the subpoena for documents and testimony from Andrii Telizhenko, a Ukrainian national who worked for a U.S. lobbying firm that acted on behalf of Burisma, the Ukrainian energy company that employed Hunter Biden as a board member,” Mike DeBonis reports.

“Johnson said he was doing so ‘[o]ut of an abundance of caution and to allow time for [senators] to receive additional briefings.’ But Johnson indicated that the investigation would continue. He said in an interview Wednesday that he would instead seek to directly subpoena the lobbying firm, Blue Star Strategies.”

Trump’s reelection odds suddenly look shakier.

“‘If it was Warren or Bernie and you don’t have coronavirus, I think Trump might sneak by,’ said Kevin DeWine, the former chairman of the Ohio Republican Party. ‘But if it’s Biden, ‘My I.R.A. has tanked,’ and we’re going to have complete disruption because of coronavirus, I think it’s a totally different story,’” the NYT reports. “Of course, what happens in March may ultimately have little bearing in November. ... And if there’s any constant in the Trump era, it is that what’s in the news at a given moment will change in a matter of hours, days or at most weeks.”

---

Other developments that shouldn't be overlooked

Harvey Weinstein was sentenced to 23 years in prison.

“In its verdict Feb. 24, a jury found that Weinstein, 67, forced oral sex on former production assistant Mimi Haley, now 42, at his apartment in 2006 and raped onetime aspiring actress Jessica Mann, now 34, at a DoubleTree hotel in 2013,” Shayna Jacobs reports. “The sentence is seen as a victory for the #MeToo movement ... Weinstein’s trial was hailed by advocates as a step forward for assault survivors, especially given that Mann and Haley continued their relationship with him after the incidents and such scenarios were previously considered very difficult to prosecute. Before Justice James Burke announced the sentence, both of the women read impact statements and prosecutor Joan Illuzzi-Orbon argued for the maximum of 29 years in prison. The judge also heard from Weinstein’s attorneys and the client himself, who compared the #MeToo movement to McCarthyism while playing down his clout in Hollywood and touting his charitable work.”

The Supreme Court said the Trump administration may continue its “Remain in Mexico” asylum policy.

“The justices reversed a decision of a panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit that had ordered the policy be suspended Thursday along parts of the border. As is usual in emergency rulings, the court's unsigned, one-paragraph order did not provide the majority's reasoning. Only Justice Sonia Sotomayor noted her dissent," Robert Barnes reports.

U.S. troops were killed in a rocket attack in Iraq, potentially spiking tensions with Iran.

Two Americans and one other member of the coalition were killed in the attack last night, a U.S. military spokesman said. "At least 12 people were wounded in the attack at Camp Taji, about 17 miles north of Baghdad, according to the spokesman, Navy Capt. Bill Urban. About 18 Katyusha rockets hit the base, and five of the wounded were evacuated in serious condition, Urban said," Dan Lamothe and Louisa Loveluck report. "The rockets were launched from the Rashediya area of northeast Baghdad, Iraqi military officials said in a statement.... U.S. officials have attributed the use of such rockets in attacks to Iranian-backed militias in Iraq, prompting questions how the United States and its allies might respond." The House passed a war powers resolution limiting Trump's ability to strike Iran on a 227 to 186 vote, sending the bill to the president's desk for a certain veto.

Chelsea Manning attempted suicide.

The former Army intelligence analyst attempted suicide inside an Alexandria jail yesterday and was hospitalized just days before a federal judge is scheduled to hear a motion to release her from custody, her lawyers said. (Clarence Williams)

---

Social media speed read

Obama's former national security adviser reacted to Trump's coronavirus speech:

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.), who remains in self-quarantine at home in Houston, received a gift basket:

And Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) commended a fellow member of the Squad for showing grace in response to a death threat:

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert announced that, starting Monday, all late-night shows in New York City will be taped without studio audiences:

Seth Meyers remixed Trump's speech with a classic song:

And the 2008 Republican nominee for vice president sang "Baby Got Back" on national television:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 12 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Thursday, March 12, 2020 7:05:23 PM

---

SENATE: McConnell cancels recess to tackle coronavirus. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
NOMINATIONS: Senate approves Danly as new FERC commissioner.
EPA: Incoming chief of staff defends pro-Trump advocacy work.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Thu., March 12, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/12/full?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/12/stories/1062586971?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

1. SENATE:
McConnell cancels recess to tackle coronavirus

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) is scrapping next week's recess to work on an economic aid package as the nation reels from the fast-moving coronavirus.

TODAY'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/12/stories/1062586891?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

2. NOMINATIONS:
Senate approves Danly as new FERC commissioner

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/12/stories/1062586841?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

3. EPA:
Incoming chief of staff defends pro-Trump advocacy work

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/12/stories/1062586945?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

4. LAW:
Supreme Court closed to public during pandemic

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/12/stories/1062586973?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

5. FERC:
Meeting closed to public over virus fears

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/12/stories/1062586905?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

6. POLITICS:
LCV gives Democrats high marks for 2019

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/12/calendars?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

7. CALENDAR:
Activity for March 9 - March 15, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.
ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News
E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Letter from Executive Editor Marty Baron
Date: Friday, March 13, 2020 9:33:25 PM

---

The Washington Post

From Martin Baron, executive editor

Dear subscriber,

On January 8 this year, Washington Post reporters Gerry Shih and Lena Sun reported an outbreak of an “unidentified and possibly new viral disease in central China” that was sending alarms across Asia in advance of the Lunar New Year travel season.

Already, Taiwan, Hong Kong, South Korea, Thailand and the Philippines were contemplating quarantine zones and scanning travelers from China for “signs of fever or other pneumonia-like symptoms that may indicate a new disease possibly linked to a wild animal market in Wuhan.”

Gerry is a correspondent for us in China, with extensive journalistic experience in the country. Lena, a former Beijing bureau chief for The Post, is a veteran national reporter covering health, with a particular focus on public health and infectious diseases. Both are fluent in Mandarin.

These two reporters launched our coverage of the coronavirus and the disease Covid-19, declared this month to be a pandemic by the World Health Organization. Lena and Gerry are emblematic of the highly skilled journalists The Washington Post has deployed to cover this complex, ever-expanding and profoundly serious story.

We have drawn on our entire staff – throughout the world and in the United States – to bring you essential health information and the latest news while also digging into the reasons for the rapid spread of this disease, the sometimes chaotic and counterproductive decision-making by governments and the impact on citizens and medical systems. Hundreds of our journalists have been enlisted in this effort, and they are working tirelessly around the clock.

As the spread of coronavirus has touched our beloved schools, our favorite sports teams, our places of work and prayer, our entertainment venues and our family incomes and investments – just about every aspect of our daily lives – we at The Post fully understand our responsibility to keep you informed. We also aim to keep close watch on what public officials, private companies, health providers and others are doing – or failing to do – to respond to a crisis of sprawling, unprecedented proportions.

I'm proud of the dedication and talent my colleagues have brought to this important story. They need stamina, too, and they have plenty of it. We're prepared to cover every aspect of this story for a long period, with the clarity and command of the subject that is required.

We are deeply grateful to our subscribers for making this coverage possible. The journalistic resources necessary are immense and growing, and we could not do our work without subscriber support. Because the health crisis is so urgent and is likely to spare no one, we have made a substantial portion of our coverage free to all. That includes our stories about core news developments as well as stories that communicate critical health information. We also offer a free newsletter with links to stories for which there is no charge. You can get that newsletter by signing up here.

News continues on many other fronts as well. There is a lot to cover, particularly in the midst of a presidential campaign and persistent foreign conflicts. We will stay on top of those stories with expertise and vigor.

Thank you again for subscribing to The Washington Post, and please stay safe and healthy during a period unlike any of us has ever seen before.

Sincerely,

Martin Baron, executive editor

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 18 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Wednesday, March 18, 2020 4:55:36 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Wed., March 18, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

'It's all around us.' Why U.S. fails to prepare for crises

The coronavirus pandemic is not a climate crisis. But what if it were? The virus is revealing the risks of not adapting to climate change, experts say.

TOP STORIES

2. ARCTIC:

Scientists: Pack the tundra with animals to slow melting

3. CLIMATE IMPACTS:

Wildfires plummeted in 2019. Experts say it won't last

4. FINANCE:

U.S. banks fuel 'climate chaos' — report

IN THE STATES

5. LAW:

Federal judge moves Mass. climate lawsuit to state court

6. POLITICS:

Trump official knocks ruling on Calif. cap-and-trade case

EMISSIONS

7. TRANSPORTATION:

Groups pitch a Green New Deal for cars

GLOBAL

8. BUSINESS:

Coronavirus won't sidetrack China's clean tech, experts say

9. PANDEMIC:

As virus shuts down cities in Europe, pollution drops

10. SOUTH AFRICA:

Town struggles with life next to world's biggest GHG emitter

SCIENCE

---

11. EMISSIONS:

Global victory over ozone-killing chemicals is coming undone

TRADE

---

12. COMMERCE:

Large online retailers produce less emissions, report says

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Six chilling estimates underscore danger of coronavirus to public health and the economy
Date: Wednesday, March 18, 2020 8:51:11 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann

Email

Six chilling estimates underscore danger of coronavirus to public health and the economy

Joe Biden's sweeping victories in the Florida, Illinois and Arizona primaries make it nearly impossible to stop him from clinching the Democratic presidential nomination. Yet the former vice president's address to supporters – via a live stream from his home in Wilmington, Del. – focused on the novel coronavirus pandemic. "I know that we as a people are up to this challenge," he said.

His rival Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) didn't address the election at all on Tuesday evening. Instead, in his own live-streamed comments from Washington, he exclusively made the case for a $2 trillion plan to combat the pandemic.

“The next primary contest is at least three weeks away,” Sanders campaign manager Faiz Shakir said in a statement on Wednesday morning. “Sen. Sanders is going to be having conversations with supporters to assess his campaign. In the immediate term, however, he is focused on the government response to the coronavirus outbreak and ensuring that we take care of working people and the most vulnerable.”

The Democratic candidates are not alone. Many Americans seem far less interested in partisan politics now than the virus's potential impact on their lives and their livelihoods. And national attention is increasingly much more fixed on the coronavirus's exponential spread – and the social distancing measures necessary to flatten the curve of transmission – than on what remains of the 2020 nominating contest.

There are good reasons for this. All 50 states, with West Virginia being the last, now have confirmed cases of covid-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus. More than 110 people infected with the virus have died in the United States, a toll that experts expect to rise quickly. Confirmed cases have topped 6,000 domestically and 200,000 worldwide.

Here are six frightening estimates that illustrate the potential peril to the economy and public health posed by a virus that scientists are still trying to fully understand:

1) Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin warned GOP senators that the unemployment rate could spike to nearly 20 percent if they fail to act dramatically, according to three people familiar with his comments during a private meeting. It was 3.5 percent last month. Mnuchin told reporters afterward that the Trump administration could support a stimulus package with an overall price tag of around $1 trillion. Americans could receive checks for $1,000 or more in the coming weeks, as political support coalesces around the idea. Mnuchin said President Trump wants checks in the mail “in the next two weeks.”

U.S. markets nose-dived this morning, as fearful investors sent the Dow plunging 1,300 points at the open.

Asked about his warning of 20 percent unemployment, Treasury Department spokeswoman Monica Crowley said “Mnuchin used several mathematical examples for illustrative purposes, but he never implied this would be the case.”

“Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) vowed Tuesday that the Senate would not recess before reaching bipartisan agreement on the stimulus legislation, which would be the third coronavirus relief bill advanced on Capitol Hill in recent weeks,” Erica Werner, Jeff Stein and Mike DeBonis report. “However, reservations expressed by Democrats on Tuesday over various aspects of the package taking shape between Senate Republicans and the White House suggested that it could take some time to arrive at a bipartisan agreement that could pass both chambers.”

2) The United States is expected to lose 4.6 million travel-related jobs this year as the coronavirus outbreak levies an $809 billion blow to the economy, according to a projection released yesterday by the U.S. Travel Association. “Furthermore, 4 million jobs have been eliminated already or are on the verge of being lost in the next few weeks, the American Hotel & Lodging Association said. In some of the hardest-hit markets — such as Seattle, San Francisco, Austin and Boston — properties are shutting down and occupancy rates are at unprecedented lows,” Rachel Siegel reports. “Total spending on travel in the United States — including from transportation, retail, lodging and restaurants — is expected to drop by $355 billion for the year, or 31 percent — more than six times the impact of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. The projected 4.6 million jobs lost would, by themselves, nearly double the U.S. unemployment rate, from 3.5 percent to 6.3 percent ...

“The hotel industry is asking for $150 billion, largely in the form of direct grants, to keep employees on the payroll and small businesses afloat. The broader travel industry is also seeking an additional $100 billion, executives said on a press call. Those tallies are separate from the more than $50 billion being sought by the airline industry.”

United Airlines announced last night that it will cut flights by 60 percent next month because of a drop in demand. And Trump said during a news conference on Tuesday that he supports a bailout for Boeing. “Shortly after the president’s comments, Boeing published a statement saying there should be a minimum of $60 billion in ‘public and private liquidity, including loan guarantees’ for the aerospace manufacturing industry,”

Aaron Gregg reports.

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

3) Research from Imperial College London, endorsed by the U.K. government, suggests that 2.2 million would die in the United States and 510,000 would die in Britain if nothing is done by governments and individuals to stop the pandemic. The new forecasts, by Neil Ferguson and his colleagues, show that more-ambitious measures to mitigate the spread of the coronavirus, to slow but not necessarily stop the epidemic over the coming few months, could reduce mortality by half, to 260,000 people in the United Kingdom and 1.1 million in the United States. The new report concludes that the British government might be able to keep the number of dead below 20,000 by enforcing social distancing for the entire population, isolating all cases, demanding quarantines of entire households where anyone is sick and closing all schools and universities — for 12 to 18 months, until a vaccine is available. The modelers did not give numbers for the United States for these most intense suppression efforts.

Seeing these numbers from some of Britain's top modelers of infectious disease inspired Prime Minister Boris Johnson to take a much more severe approach to suppress the spread. "The report is also influencing planning by the Trump administration," William Booth reports. "Deborah Birx, who serves as the coordinator of the White House coronavirus task force, cited the British analysis at a news conference Monday, saying her response team was especially focused on the report's conclusion that an entire household should self-quarantine for 14 days if one of its members is stricken by the virus."

4) At least 60 American health-care workers have tested positive for the coronavirus, and many more are quarantined after exposure to it. This is not unexpected, but it's keeping emergency responders off the front lines when they're needed the most. "We all suspect it's the tip of the iceberg," said Liam Yore, a board member of the Washington state chapter of the American College of Emergency Physicians. "The risk to our health-care workers is one of the great vulnerabilities of our health-care system in an epidemic like this. Most ERs and health-care systems are running at capacity in normal times."

"Gauging how badly providers have been hit is difficult because no nationwide data has been released by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, medical associations or health-care worker unions. A federal official who was not authorized to talk with the media ... said the government has received reports of more than 60 infections among health-care workers,” Lenny Bernstein, Shawn Boburg, Maria Sacchetti and Emma Brown report. “In previous outbreaks of infectious disease, and in other countries where the current pandemic arrived earlier, health-care workers have experienced a disproportionate share of infections. They have been put at risk in the United States not only by the nature of their jobs, but by shortages of protective equipment such as N95 face masks and government bungling of the testing program, which was delayed for weeks while the virus spread around the country undetected.

“At the EvergreenHealth hospital in Kirkland, Wash. — just a few miles from the nursing home at the center of the U.S. outbreak — and in Paterson, N.J., two emergency physicians are hospitalized in critical condition ... In Pittsfield, Mass., 160 employees of Berkshire Medical Center have been quarantined at home after exposure to patients who tested positive, forcing the medical center to hire 54 temporary nurses.”

In a stark sign of the dwindling supplies, Vice President Pence called on construction companies yesterday to donate protective masks to hospitals.

5) An internal report from the Department of Health and Human Services concluded that the “pandemic will last 18 months or longer and could include multiple waves of illness.”

The 103-page document, leaked yesterday to the New York Times, assumed that there will be “significant shortages for government, private sector, and individual U.S. consumers.”

6) If 60 percent of the population falls sick with covid-19 within six months, the United States would require more than seven times the number of available hospital beds that it currently has. That's the worst-case scenario in a model released yesterday by the Harvard Global Health Institute. Ashish Jha, the director of the institute who led a team of researchers that developed the analysis, said "vast communities in America are not prepared" even for the more optimal scenarios.

"Under the researchers' best-case scenario, Americans will act quickly to slow the spread of the virus through social distancing, and the infection rate among adults will remain relatively low at 20%, or 49.4 million people over the age of 18, less than twice the number of people who get the flu each year," ProPublica reports. "Even in a best-case scenario, with cases of coronavirus spread out over 18 months, American hospital beds would be about 95% full. ... But in most other scenarios where the virus spreads faster or infects more people, hospitals would quickly fill their available beds with patients, and they would be forced to either expand capacity, limit elective surgeries and other non-necessary treatments, or make life-and-death decisions about care, similar to what has happened in the worst-hit regions of Italy, where some doctors have received guidance to only treat patients 'deemed worthy of intensive care.'

"In the Harvard team's moderate scenario — where 40% of the adult population contracts the disease over the course of a year — 98.9 million Americans would develop the coronavirus, though many will have mild or no symptoms, and will not have their diagnoses confirmed by tests. Slightly more than a fifth of all cases will require hospitalization. (That's roughly the average number of patients requiring hospitalization in other countries.) To treat all hospitalized patients over that time, the country would have to more than double available hospital beds by freeing up existing beds or adding new ones. If that moderate estimate holds, about a fifth of hospitalized patients, or nearly 5% of those infected, would become critically ill ... and would need intensive care, such as the use of a ventilator."

The latest on the coronavirus response

The United States and Canada have mutually agreed to close their border to non-essential traffic to stem the flow of the virus. “Trade will not be affected!” Trump tweeted. “The Trump administration is also developing a plan to impose emergency border controls that would immediately send migrants who cross illegally back to Mexico, including those who arrive seeking asylum, according to administration officials involved in the preparations. 'All options are on the table,' said one senior official," per Nick Miroff and Marisa Iati.

The U.S. government is in talks with Facebook, Google and a wide array of tech companies and health experts about using location data gleaned from Americans' phones to combat the coronavirus, including tracking whether people are keeping one another at safe distances. "Public-health experts are interested in the possibility that private-sector companies could compile the data in anonymous, aggregated form, which they could then use to map the spread of the infection," Tony Romm, Elizabeth Dwoskin and Craig Timberg report.

"Analyzing trends in smartphone owners' whereabouts could prove to be a powerful tool for health authorities ... But it's also an approach that could leave some Americans uncomfortable, depending on how it's implemented, given the sensitivity when it comes to details of their daily whereabouts. Multiple sources stressed that — if they proceed — they are not building a government database."

The director of the Office of Personnel Management resigned in protest with no notice after five months on the job, leaving the agency that oversees workplace policy for 2.1 million civil servants with no leader. "Dale Cabaniss resigned in frustration following months of tension with the White House budget office and more recently with its newly configured staffing office and a political appointee the office installed at OPM in the last month," Lisa Rein reports. "Cabaniss thought that she was being micromanaged and that her authority was not respected ... As human resources manager of the federal workforce, Cabaniss was unable to communicate clear, timely messages to agency managers on how they should respond to the growing public health threat ... Guidance to managers on when they should send their staffs home to telework was often vague and came weeks after U.S. health officials urged Americans to work from home and minimize contact with others. Even now, managers say privately they have not received clear instruction from the Trump administration on how to manage their workforce during the crisis."

The Internal Revenue Service began closing field offices in Northern California, Seattle, Puerto Rico and the New York City area — and all of its tax counseling sites for the elderly. "The Social Security Administration closed 1,400 field and hearing offices Monday night," Rein and Kimberly Kindy report. "Federal courts are rescheduling trials. The Food and Drug Administration has suspended inspections of imported food and medical devices ... The federal government, the nation's largest employer, was until this week a holdout."

The Federal Reserve launched a special fund to keep credit flowing, another emergency measure as the world spirals toward a recession. (Heather Long)

Federalism means an uneven patchwork of reactions to the virus across the country.

"Mark Estee spent his Tuesday laying off 100 cooks, waiters and dishwashers, having been forced by city decree in Reno, Nev., to close two restaurants that had been thriving just days ago. Less than an hour down the road, in Nevada's Carson Valley, the threat of coronavirus had inspired no such restrictions. Estee's three other restaurants were preparing to serve dinner," Griff Witte, Katie Zezima, Ariana Eunjung Cha and Tim Craig report. "The gaps are increasingly drawing the ire of state and local officials who have acted decisively to halt the spread, but worry that their efforts will be for naught if their neighbors don't follow suit ...

"In some Republican-run states, governors have resisted restrictive action while allowing mayors to take their own initiative. In Tennessee, Gov. Bill Lee (R) has not ordered restaurants and bars to shut down, but Nashville Mayor John Cooper closed bars in the city and reduced restaurant capacity. ... Beyond the city's limits, it's a very different story. Natasha Hendrix, the owner of McCreary's Irish Pub and Eatery in Franklin, Tenn., said about 40 people were in the bar's dining room for St. Patrick's Day lunch, eating a corned beef and cabbage special and drinking green beer. Hendrix is sure a lot of the clientele came from Nashville."

Kansas will close its schools for the rest of the year, but 11 states are still sending students to in-person classes this week.

\(Education Week\)

Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) banned gatherings of 10 or more people in restaurants, gyms and theaters, and Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) postponed the state's April 28 primary election. "With nearly every local county and jurisdiction now affected by the coronavirus, the region's total had climbed to 162 by Tuesday evening," Antonio Olivo, Rachel Chason and Greg Schneider report. "The District reported nine new coronavirus patients Tuesday evening, also the largest increase for the city reported in a single day, bringing its total to 32 cases. A D.C. firefighter-paramedic has tested positive for the coronavirus and is in self-isolation at home."

Supermarkets are limiting the number of shoppers at one time. Temperature checks and delivery-only stores may follow, Abha Bhattarai reports. Some grocers and retailers have implemented custom hours for elderly shoppers, even as experts debate whether such a move would prevent the vulnerable from contracting the virus. Dollar General and Stop and Shop will open their doors early just to senior citizens and those with compromised immune systems, Lateshia Beachum reports.

The Brooklyn Nets announced four of their basketball players tested positive, including superstar forward Kevin Durant. Two players from the Utah Jazz and another from the Detroit Pistons previously tested positive, per Ben Golliver. An Ottawa Senators player became the National Hockey League's first athlete to test positive. The player, who the team did not identify, has had mild symptoms and is in isolation, per Samantha Pell.

Sen. Cory Gardner (R-Colo.) announced last night that he's decided to self-quarantine after a constituent who met with him in his D.C. office last week tested positive. The senator said he's not showing any symptoms. (Amber Phillips is keeping a running list of lawmakers who have isolated themselves.)

Americans are desperate for more testing.

"A small commercial laboratory in Georgia has been selling do-it-yourself coronavirus testing kits, despite the fact that the Food and Drug Administration has not approved at-home testing ... A physician at the health clinic working with the Georgia lab said there is no time to waste on federal bureaucracy," Carolyn Johnson, Laurie McGinley, Juliet Eilperin and Emma Brown report. "The push to accelerate coronavirus testing nationwide made significant advances this week, from the Pacific Northwest to the Northeast. On Tuesday, Adm. Brett Giroir said that nearly 59,000 tests had been done, with commercial labs administering 8,200 on Monday alone. A handful of drive-through testing operations have been set up in large and small cities: Giroir said 47 would start up in a dozen states 'over the next few days.'"

Researchers in Senegal say they're making progress. "The West African laboratory that made one of the world's first yellow fever vaccines has teamed up with the British creator of pee-on-a-stick pregnancy technology," Danielle Paquette and Borso Tall report from Dakar, Senegal. "Researchers at the Pasteur Institute in coastal Senegal — a World Health Organization partner that has battled viral outbreaks for more than a century — say they're as little as three months away from releasing $1 diagnostic kits that can detect the respiratory contagion in 10 minutes. ...

More than 200 companies are working to develop similarly speedy tests, according to the Foundation for Innovative New Diagnostics in Geneva, which is tracking progress. None has met the international standard of shelf life and accuracy yet. Today the process takes hours in sophisticated labs, and wait times are stretching across the globe, alarming health authorities.”

And D.C.-area hospitals are racing to expand testing capability while freeing up beds. “Montgomery County hospitals are installing treatment and triage tents. Kaiser Permanente set up five drive-through testing sites in Maryland and Virginia for patients who have a prescription, and a health-care system in Hampton Roads, Va., is testing people via drive-through if they meet certain criteria,” Jenna Portnoy, Rachel Chason and Kyle Swenson report. “Gov. Larry Hogan (R) said Tuesday that Maryland will repurpose vehicle inspection program sites as drive-through testing centers, but testing will not begin until labs have the capability to actually run the tests. Otherwise, it would create ‘false hope,’ he said.”

Powered by  LiveIntent

One D.C. woman's case helps illustrate the human impact.

Alison McGrath Howard’s week-long passage from perfect health to the grip of a ferocious virus is emblematic of what government officials fear awaits tens of thousands of Americans now ordered to remain at home. “Somehow, she drove herself to Sibley Memorial Hospital,” Paul Schwartzman writes. “After three hours, she was led to a room where the sign on the door read, ‘Airborne Illness.’ Another patient there was talking on her cellphone to her mother in Chinese. The woman’s cough reminded Howard of her own. ...

“As she lies listless in her Cathedral Heights apartment, [the psychotherapist] thinks about whom she could have unwittingly infected: a patient with a heart condition; the pregnant woman who sat next to her at book group; her son and daughter, both of whom are now staying with her ex-husband. While she does not know how she became infected, Howard suspects it was while she was in New York in early March, attending a conference of the American Group Psychotherapy Association.”

Of the first 100 reported fatalities, many had underlying health conditions.

“Some had diabetes, kidney failure, hypertension or pulmonary ailments. Nearly all — about 85 percent — were older than 60, and about 45 percent were older than 80,” Reis Thebault, Abigail Hauslohner and Jacqueline Dupree report. “It’s unclear how some of them contracted the disease, but more than a third were living in residential care facilities when they became ill. What is known about the scale of transmission and the high number of deaths among vulnerable populations — like at the Life Care Center of Kirkland in Washington state, where 27 of the facility’s 120 residents have died — has experts deeply concerned. ‘I see that as the “canary in a coal mine” situation,’ said Fred Buckner, an attending physician at the University of Washington Medical Center. ‘I suspect it’s going to be taking off in other locations just like it is in the Seattle area. There’s no reason not to think that. Obviously, that means more deaths.’ In addition to the cluster of cases at Life Care Center, health authorities are monitoring cases at Lambeth House Retirement Community in New Orleans, a high-rise with about 250 residences and rooms. Of the four people who have died in New Orleans, two had been at Lambeth, where there are 12 additional cases.”

New research suggests infants are more vulnerable than thought.

A paper in the journal Pediatrics, based on 2,143 young people in China, provides the most extensive evidence on the spread of the virus in children, and there is bad and good news. “The study provides confirmation that coronavirus infections are in fact generally less severe in kids, with more than 90 percent having mild to moderate disease or even being asymptomatic. But it contains worrisome information about one subset — infants — and suggests that children may be a critical factor in the disease’s rapid spread,” Ariana Eunjung Cha reports. “The first thing to know is that children are getting infected across all age groups and genders. ... According to the analysis by Shanghai Children’s Medical Center, ... mild cases (52 percent) were marked by the typical symptoms of a cold — fever, fatigue, cough, sore throat, runny nose and sneezing. Some patients had no fever and only digestive symptoms such as nausea, vomiting, abdominal pain and diarrhea. Those with moderate infection (39 percent) had pneumonia with frequent fever and cough, mostly dry cough, followed by a wetter cough. ... Severe cases were rare (5 percent), as were those who required critical care (0.4 percent.)”

A student at a Dallas middle school tested positive after being sent home by a school nurse. Dallas County in Texas has reported 28 cases. (Dallas Morning News)

Europe is closing its borders. They may be hard to reopen.

“Leaders of the 26 European countries that are part of what is normally a free-movement zone also agreed Tuesday to shut their external borders to most nonresidents for the first time. The about-face in Europe is proving as disruptive as it would be if American states imposed border controls on one another," Michael Birnbaum reports from Brussels. "And since Europe's countries are no longer built for self-sufficiency and no country manufactures or grows everything it needs, the effect of the internal blockade could quickly become catastrophic. Trucks trying to enter Poland from Germany were backed up 25 miles on Tuesday as Polish border guards checked drivers' temperatures, overall health and documents before allowing them through. Meanwhile, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, whose only connection to the rest of the E.U. is through Poland, have had to mount a rescue operation by air and sea to help their citizens trying to get home. The Baltic states have deployed the Latvian national airline and even chartered ferries so their nationals can scramble to German ports and sail around Poland. ...

"Leaders of the E.U. institutions in Brussels, watching national leaders erect walls all around them, have been desperately trying to keep the internal borders open, at least partially. One major risk, they say, is that medical supplies necessary to combat the coronavirus will pile up in trucks that have been stopped at national frontiers ... France and Germany last week threw up political borders around crucial medical equipment produced in their territory, banning the export of protective gear, including masks, to any other country, even Italy, which is struggling with shortages. After entreaties by E.U. leaders, the countries loosened their bans, but not before the message was sent to Italians and others: In a crisis, don't count on your neighbors to help you out."

Taiwan will deny entry to many foreigners. The island has recorded 100 cases, per Reuters.

Chinese citizens abroad, including in the U.S., are seeking refuge from the coronavirus pandemic by returning home, per Anna Fifield.

---

Quote of the day

“If a person were just completely ignorant about what the Bible says about the End Times, they may think ... this is it,” said Jeff Kinley, a writer of books on biblical prophecy who lives in Harrison, Ark. Pointing to Revelation 6:8, he added: “I don’t think this is an actual fulfillment of that.” For one major thing, he added, the ancient temple in Jerusalem is supposed to be rebuilt first. (Julie Zauzmer and Sarah Pulliam Bailey)

---

More on Tuesday's primary results

The Democratic race has passed a point of no return, with Biden firmly in control.

“From the start of the nomination battle, March 17 — the day by which roughly 60 percent of all pledged delegates were to be allocated — was circled on the calendars of many strategists and campaign staffers as the day the contest could be settled and the party would know who its challenger would be to President Trump in November. That turned out to be accurate,” Dan Balz writes. “For all practical purposes, the contest between Biden and Sanders is over. Numerically, the former vice president is still well short of a majority of delegates needed to win a first-ballot victory. But the reality is that it would take a radical change in fortunes for Sanders to start winning primaries by the margins he would need to catch up to Biden, let alone overtake him to claim the nomination. ... Voter turnout was up compared with 2016 in Florida and Arizona, thanks to lots of early voting, but down in Illinois, which had the lowest level of early voting of the three states — an indication of the impact of the virus on Election Day turnout.”

Sanders faces pressure to withdraw, but an adviser says the coronavirus might keep him in.

“Sanders and his wife, Jane, are expected to reach a decision together about the future of the campaign, people in frequent contact with them said, taking input from advisers but making the call on their own. Many Democrats are waiting anxiously to see what Sanders says on Wednesday about the future of the race, if anything,” Sean Sullivan reports. “Sanders spent Tuesday in Washington, where the Senate was hashing out legislation to combat the vast impact of the virus. Jane Sanders traveled to Washington with him ... Pressure from Democrats to unify against a president they revile has been intensified by the sense of national crisis, which could make running a doomed race seem less appropriate. ... As a longtime advocate of creating a Medicare-for-all system in which the government is the sole provider of health insurance, Sanders has said the pandemic shows precisely why universal healthcare needs to be enacted swiftly.”

Biden romped in Florida.

In the biggest prize of the night, with 219 pledged delegates, Biden leads Sanders 62 percent to 23 percent with 96 percent of precincts reporting. “He won every county in the state, claiming voters at least 45 years old by 6 to 1, according to a statewide voter poll by Edison Media Research. Sanders won voters younger than 45 by just over 10 percentage points, far too little to overcome Biden’s lead with older voters,” Michael Scherer, Annie Linskey and Sullivan report. “In Illinois, with 155 delegates at stake, over 6 in 10 voters said they trusted Biden more than Sanders to handle a major crisis, and nearly 7 in 10 said Biden has the better chance of defeating President Trump in November. ... Reports of polling place disruptions — with unopened precincts, a dearth of cleaning supplies and long lines in some places — emerged across the country. ...

“Voting in Ohio, the fourth state that was to cast ballots Tuesday, was delayed at the last minute by Gov. Mike DeWine (R) as a result of the growing viral infection, despite a court ruling that voting should take place. ... Under Democratic Party rules, states have until June 9 to complete their delegate selection primaries or caucuses, and party leaders have the authority to seek rule changes to accommodate states that fail to meet the deadlines. Democratic Party Chair Tom Perez urged states to adopt vote-by-mail, no-excuse absentee voting and to expand polling place hours to prevent more delays in the primary calendar.”

The first congressional incumbent went down in a 2020 primary.

Rep. Daniel Lipinski (D-Ill.), one of the last antiabortion Democrats in Congress, lost his bid for a ninth term to liberal challenger Marie Newman. “With 95 percent of precincts reporting, Newman held a roughly 3,800-vote lead — about four percentage points. The Associated Press declared Newman the winner shortly after midnight,” Mike DeBonis reports. “The race was a rematch of the 2018 Democratic primary in the 3rd Congressional District, which is anchored in the working-class neighborhoods of Chicago’s South Side but stretches westward along the Des Plaines River into more affluent suburbs. Lipinski won a two-point victory in the last primary by marshaling voters in Chicago precincts to overcome Newman's strength in the suburbs ... Lipinski's unapologetic antiabortion views — and Newman's outspoken support for abortion rights — had been the dominant topic in a district that is heavily Democratic but also has a socially conservative strain rooted in the largely Catholic ethnic communities of Chicago."

A Democratic super PAC will spend $5 million flaying Trump for his coronavirus response.

"The campaign from Pacronym — a political action committee affiliated with the nonprofit group Acronym — represents the first major pivot to coronavirus-related advertising fewer than 250 days from the election," Isaac Stanley-Becker reports. "It is a bet that the pandemic, which is also causing a deep economic downturn, will be the defining issue of the campaign."

---

Other news that should be on your radar

Tom Brady will sign with Tampa.

“The Buccaneers and Los Angeles Chargers were believed to have made contract offers to Brady worth $30 million per season or more,” Mark Maske reports. “But Brady apparently wanted to keep his family on the East Coast, and the Chargers were reported by early Tuesday evening to have resigned themselves to losing out. The Buccaneers were thought to be selling Brady on the prospect of playing for their well-regarded coach, Bruce Arians. Brady, 42, faces a potentially difficult transition, changing teams for the first time in the NFL during an offseason in which normal routines have been interrupted by coronavirus-related issues. The league has postponed teams’ offseason workouts indefinitely, potentially affecting Brady’s ability to adapt to Arians’s offense and to his new teammates.”

Duncan Hunter was sentenced to 11 months in federal prison.

The former California Republican congressman won reelection in 2018 while under federal indictment only to later admit wrongdoing in the case and resign. “The penalty brings to a close a dramatic case that saw prosecutors air publicly how the congressman used hundreds of thousands of dollars in campaign funds to pay for family vacations, theater tickets and even to facilitate extramarital affairs,” Matt Zapotosky reports. “Prosecutors argued in court filings that his reelection, fueled by lies and attacks on the Justice Department, warranted a stiff sentence. They argued for a term of 14 months.”

The DHS inspector general’s office is nearly dormant under Trump.

“The Department of Homeland Security’s internal watchdog division has been so weakened under the Trump administration that it is failing to provide basic oversight of the government’s third-largest federal agency, according to whistleblowers and lawmakers from both parties,” Nick Mirossoff reports. “DHS’s Office of the Inspector General is on pace to publish fewer than 40 audits and reports this fiscal year, the smallest number since 2003 and one-quarter of the agency's output in 2016, when it published 143 ... The audits and reports cover everything from contracts and spending to allegations of waste and misconduct. ...

“Inspector General Joseph Cuffari ducked requests to appear on Capitol Hill for routine testimony, a decision congressional staffers describe as unprecedented. Adding to the turmoil, the office's second-in-command and former acting director, Jennifer Costello, was placed on administrative leave last month for alleged ethical violations, three current DHS officials said. An attorney for Costello said her client was not given a reason for her removal, but Costello believes she has been retaliated against for trying to denounce Cuffari's mismanagement and wrongdoing.”

Beijing pulled press credentials for three U.S. news outlets.

“Chinese authorities announced that U.S. journalists from The Washington Post, the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal will effectively be expelled from the country as part of retaliation for Trump administration limits on U.S.-based Chinese state media,” Emily Rauhala reports. “The move widens another rift in U.S.-China relations already strained by trade disputes and questions over how the world's two biggest economies will recalibrate their ties after the corona-virus pandemic. In a statement published Tuesday, China's Ministry of Foreign Affairs said the three U.S. outlets, plus Voice of America and Time magazine, will be designated as ‘foreign missions’ and must report information about their staffs, finances, operations and real estate in China. ... The moves came after the United States took measures in February against Chinese Communist Party-controlled news outlets operating in the United States.”

---

Social media speed read

People across the country are finding ways to drink together, alone, online. “Raising a glass virtually is taking off as people are discouraged from leaving their homes,” Heather Kelly reports. “They are getting together with their regular happy hour crew, or with family members and people they haven’t seen in ages. Some are finding new friends to bond with over their shared unshakable sense of dread and a fondness for mezcal. There’s even a new cocktail emerging online: the ‘quarantini.’ Although its recipe varies, it is best served chilled in front of a laptop or smartphone camera and enjoyed with a twist of levity.”

Ivanka Trump is at home with her kids after coming into close contact with an Australian minister who tested positive:

Ivanka Trump ✓

@IvankaTrump

Staying home today w/ kids?

Plan living room camp out!

Throw a bedsheet over some taped together brooms.
Plan a menu & 'pack' sandwiches, salads (S'mores optional 😊)

A fun activity that also brings family together for a meal!

Share your ideas & use the hashtag #TogetherApart

♥ 43.8K 12:34 PM - Mar 17, 2020

💬 24.7K people are talking about this

U.S. Surgeon General Jerome Adams made a special plea to millennials, those between the ages of 23 and 39, to avoid gatherings of 10 or more people:

An evangelical leader denounced Trump for referring to covid-19 as “the Chinese virus”:

Hillary Clinton's spokesman took a dig at Sanders after Tuesday's primaries:

Videos of the day

Over the past month, many Fox News anchors and personalities have gone from doubting the seriousness of the coronavirus pandemic to calling it a public health crisis. Our video team captures the shift with this two-minute mash-up:

Mark Tonelli, a critical-care physician and bioethics expert at the University of Washington Medical Center, discusses how his hospital is getting ready for an expected surge of coronavirus patients:

At the center of the coronavirus outbreak, a hospital prepares for the worst

The cancellation of Ireland's annual St. Patrick's Day festivities, to contain the spread of covid-19, inspired some creative alternative celebrations:

Irish host private St. Patrick's Day celebrations after parades canceled over coronavirus

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: denise.germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 18 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Wednesday, March 18, 2020 11:51:32 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Wed., March 18, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

White House seeks $45B for agencies

Congress is rushing to respond to the novel coronavirus on multiple fronts, including eyeing a new $45 billion White House request to bolster agencies and a far broader $1 trillion package that would include help for the ailing airline industry.

TOP STORIES

2. NATIONAL PARKS:

With Bernhardt's green light, superintendents shut down

3. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

COVID-19 vs. FOIA: The virus is winning

4. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

Office of Personnel Management chief resigns

CORONAVIRUS

5. WATER POLLUTION:

Venice waters run clear during Italy's nationwide quarantine

6. INTERIOR:

Refuge visitor centers start to shutter amid pandemic

7. EPA:

3 Chicago staffers had contact with virus carriers

8. PANDEMIC:

Water utilities aim to quell concerns amid outbreak

POLITICS

9. ADVOCACY:

Nature Conservancy names new chief executive

10. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Sanders reassesses his options after more losses

LAW

---

11. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Court rejects critical habitat for jaguar

12. MINING:

Judge upholds Twin Metals lease renewal

13. WATER POLICY:

Judge: Well shut-offs exceeded Ore. regulators' authority

WASTES & HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

---

14. CHEMICALS:

EPA reduces reporting burden with new rule

15. RECYCLING:

New Yorkers who depend on bottles and cans still hit streets

STATES

---

16. CALIFORNIA:

Tesla factory could be shut under health order

17. UTAH:

5.7 magnitude quake shakes Salt Lake City, closes airport

18. NEVADA:

Snow snarls traffic, causes 18 crashes

INTERNATIONAL

---

19. ECUADOR:

Virus hits tourism on iconic Galapagos Islands

20. COLOMBIA:

Bikes vs. virus: Bogotá expands paths in novel strategy

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: The chilling new study that's guiding policymakers
Date: Wednesday, March 18, 2020 2:46:08 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

By Angela Fritz

with Avi Selk

✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

Layoffs are mounting by the tens of thousands, and economists warn millions of jobs could disappear this year. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin told lawmakers that the unemployment rate could spike to almost 20 percent (from its current level of 3.5 percent), people familiar with his comments told The Washington Post.

The scale of a $1 trillion economic plan is coming into sharper focus. The White House is working with Republicans in Congress on a package that could send $2,000 to many Americans and devote $300 billion to small businesses.

U.S. markets tanked as stimulus talks failed to ease worried investors. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index was forced to halt trading at one point Wednesday because the sell-off was so sharp. Nearly all of the advances the market has made under the Trump presidency have been erased.

A chilling new study forced the United Kingdom to sit up and take coronavirus seriously, and the White House task force is also reportedly using it to guide strategy. The study predicts that if we only try to slow the spread, the number of hospital beds could be overwhelmed, leading to about 250,000 deaths in the U.K. and more than a million in the United States. The study, by London's Imperial College COVID-19 Response Team, recommended stronger measures would need to be taken to reduce the death toll further.

British Prime Minister Boris Johnson's government is using that study to implement more extreme measures to suppress the spread of the virus. On Wednesday, Johnson announced all schools across the U.K. will close starting Friday, until further notice.

In a rare pre-recorded televised message, Chancellor Angela Merkel said Germany is facing its gravest challenge since World War II. "Take it seriously," she said. "Since German reunification, not since World War II, there's not been a challenge to our country that depends as much on our united actions done in solidarity."

The United States and Canada have mutually agreed to close their border to nonessential traffic. Trump said trade would not be affected. The administration also plans to immediately send back to Mexico migrants who cross the southern border illegally, including those who are seeking asylum.

New York confirmed 1,008 new cases Tuesday, raising the state's total to 2,382, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D) told reporters Wednesday. He attributed the rise to more testing. New York has the most cases of any U.S. state. Of people who are ill, 549 are hospitalized.

Italy reported 475 new deaths from the virus Wednesday — the largest one-day spike recorded in one country. The nation's surging fatality rate has been blamed in part on overloaded hospitals, raising fears of a similar spike in the United States, where cash-strapped hospitals have been reluctant to order ventilators they could soon need in the tens of thousands.

Faced with such shortages, authorities are turning to quarantines, business closures and bans on large gatherings in an attempt to “flatten the curve.” You can use our new interactive graphic to get a rough idea of how much your town or city may have to restrict public life to save people’s lives.

Lately, President Trump has been trying to rebrand the coronavirus as the “Chinese virus,” despite concerns that the term is unscientific, misleading and could incite racial attacks. “It’s not racist at all,” Trump told reporters Wednesday. “It comes from China, that’s why.” Researchers believe the disease originated in bats or pangolins.

Slightly more than half of Americans think Trump has downplayed the virus too much, a new Pew Research Center survey found. The president, who last month suggested U.S. coronavirus cases would peak at 15, defended himself by noting his decision to restrict travel from China early in the outbreak. “I always treated the Chinese Virus very seriously, and have done a very good job from the beginning,” he tweeted this morning.

---

Tracking the U.S. cases

As of yesterday, covid-19 cases are confirmed in all 50 states. Click through for a closer look at how the virus is spreading across the nation, death tolls and hot spots in the United States and around the world.

(Washington Post Staff)

Your questions, answered

Why aren't we gearing up to produce more ventilators? —Gail Beggs, West Chester, Pa.

Today's answer comes from reporting by Christopher Rowland, a Post business writer focused on the health-care economy.

Mechanical ventilators, which help patients breathe (or breathe for them), are considered critical to the nation's effort to contain the worst effects of the pandemic and avoid a crisis like the one Italy is facing. Depending on how bad the coronavirus pandemic gets in the United States, individual cities could come up thousands of ventilators short as patients flood hospitals, researchers say.

But the problem in the United States isn't about not having enough — it's that they are too expensive.

Ventilator manufacturers could achieve, within a few months, a significant boost in production from about 50,000 units a year currently, said Julie Letwat, a health-care lawyer in Chicago who is monitoring the industry. Orders have not flooded in, she said, because most hospitals can't afford to increase inventory of expensive equipment for what could turn out to be a short-term event.

"The risk is that they'll never be used, and hospitals can't eat the cost," she said. "Most hospitals in this country are not profitable."

Ventilators range from $25,000 for a basic model to $50,000 for a machine used in the most advanced intensive-care units. Buying them also requires additional large investments in staff and training. Letwat said federal government investment would be the surest way to boost supply.

Read more about what's behind the U.S. shortage in ventilators.

---

More answers tomorrow

Join anchor Libby Casey, health policy reporter Yasmeen Abutaleb and epidemiologist Giovanni Filardo Thursday at 3 p.m. Eastern for a chance to have your question answered in a live video Q&A.

---

Live updates

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Follow live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

Find answers to common questions and terms to know.

Want to know more? Submit your question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- 12 historic sites you can tour virtually from your couch
- How parents of young kids can keep them busy and learning while they're out of school
- What 'discretionary travel' means
- How to work out without going to the gym

DIY nasal swabs, drive-throughs and labs in overdrive: Americans are desperate for more coronavirus testing

By Carolyn Y. Johnson, Laurie McGinley, Juliet Eilperin and Emma Brown • Read more »

---

Coronavirus news has us anxious and sad. Here are 11 things we've seen that lifted our spirits.

By Marisa Iati • Read more »

---

Thinking about canceling your flight because of coronavirus? What to know before you do.

By Natalie Compton • Read more »

How to practice social distancing while helping the economy

Opinion • By Susan Athey and Dean Karlan • Read more »

---

Fact Checker: What did Dr. Anthony Fauci say about coronavirus testing ‘failing’?

Analysis • By Glenn Kessler • Read more »

Can you pet that dog?

Gideon Kidd is an 11-year-old who loves to pet dogs. He has a 367,000-person following on his Twitter account @IvePetThatDog — which he has devoted to his love of dogs (and petting them).

But Gideon stopped petting dogs last week because he was concerned about the outbreak. He wanted to practice safe social distancing. Now he posts photos of dogs that his fans submit, saying he'd “love to pet” them.

Health experts don't think dogs (or cats) can catch the coronavirus, and the American Veterinary Medical Association isn't that concerned about people contracting covid-19 from a pet. But perhaps the best approach, from a public health perspective, would be to follow in Gideon's footsteps, and avoid person-to-person contact, even if you really just want to pet the dog they are walking.

Read more about how to pet dogs in the age of coronavirus.

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 19 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Thursday, March 19, 2020 4:47:49 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Thu., March 19, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

N.Y. seeks disaster status for virus. It's never been done

Andrew Cuomo of New York became the first governor to ask President Trump to declare his state a "major disaster" due to the coronavirus. It's a watershed moment that could open the door for millions of people nationwide to get unemployment checks, housing assistance and other disaster relief.

TOP STORIES

---

2. CONGRESS:

Democrats want climate action included in coronavirus aid

3. EXTREME EVENTS:

Disasters worsened by warming in last 10 years — study

PANDEMIC

---

4. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

'We're seeing cancellations.' Virus hits solar industry

5. CALIFORNIA:

Chair of coastal agency has COVID-19

CLIMATE IMPACTS

---

6. EXTREME WEATHER:

U.N. struggles with spreading crises: Locust swarm and virus

7. CONSERVATION:

Trend of 're-wilding' lawns aims to help wildlife

GLOBAL

---

8. BRITAIN:

Adviser Carney says virus won't change emissions cut plans

9. OUTBREAK:

Clean water access for India's poor spawns virus concerns

SPECIES

---

10. WILDLIFE:

Endangered gray wolf population on the rise in Southwest

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 19 -- E&E Daily is ready
Date: Thursday, March 19, 2020 5:28:20 AM

Read today's E&E Daily on the web

E&E DAILY

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

E&E DAILY — Thu., March 19, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Congress races to strike a trillion-dollar deal

Senators yesterday approved the second coronavirus response bill with wide bipartisan support. With the biggest of them all in the drafting stages, lawmakers and groups are eager to push their priorities.

TOP STORIES

2. HOUSE:

First lawmakers diagnosed with coronavirus

3. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Clean energy backers want in on stimulus talks

4. OIL AND GAS:

Lawmakers weigh options for helping industry

ON THE HILL

5. EPA:

Carper slams 'anti-science' rule amid coronavirus fears

6. CHEMICALS:

Senator introduces bill to reauthorize security program

POLITICS

7. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Bill Weld drops quixotic campaign against Trump

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

8. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 16 - March 22, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E Daily, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eedaily.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E DAILY – CONGRESS. LEGISLATION. POLITICS.

---

E&E Daily is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Designed for policy players who need to know what's happening to their issues on Capitol Hill, from federal agency appropriations to comprehensive energy legislation, E&E Daily is the place insiders go to track their environmental and energy issues in Congress. E&E Daily publishes daily by 7:30 a.m. while Congress is in session.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 19 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Thursday, March 19, 2020 5:39:00 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Thu., March 19, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus oil crash: What it means for one state

The economic freeze caused by COVID-19 could do lasting damage to states like Wyoming and Alaska that are dependent on energy revenues to fund everything from education to health care.

TOP STORIES

2. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

DOE confirms first employee case of coronavirus

3. CORONAVIRUS:

Grid overseers ease rules due to 'unprecedented' pandemic

4. CORONAVIRUS:

Utilities under pressure to ban electricity shut-offs

ENERGY TRANSITIONS

5. ELECTRICITY:

Minn. Supreme Court to review natural gas climate fight

FEDERAL AGENCIES

6. OIL AND GAS:

Gulf lease sale nets lowest revenue of Trump administration

7. PIPELINES:

Feds: Ex-Mariner East technician falsified safety docs

CONGRESS

8. OIL AND GAS:

Hoeven, Cramer push Trump to help beleaguered industry

LAW

9. PIPELINES:

Judge promises fast answer on shutting down Dakota Access

10. COLORADO:

Federal judge tosses 'forced pooling' oil lawsuit

ELECTRICITY

---

11. PLANT VOGTLE:

More workers quarantined to await coronavirus test results

BUSINESS

---

12. ELECTRIC VEHICLES:

VW shuts Europe plants, says EV rollout on track

13. BUSINESS:

China bent over backward to help Tesla when virus hit

14. MAINE:

Regulators approve sale of electric utility to Canadian firm

OIL AND GAS

---

15. ENERGY MARKETS:

Price of oil plummets 24% on recession fears

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Trump's corporatist response to coronavirus shows no concern for national debt
Date: Thursday, March 19, 2020 8:39:04 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Trump's corporatist response to coronavirus shows no concern for national debt

A trillion here, a trillion there and soon you're talking real money.

The national debt has surged from $20 trillion to $23 trillion since President Trump took office, even though the economy was at or near full employment, despite his campaign promises in 2016 to eliminate it altogether if he's elected to two terms.

The $1.5 trillion tax cuts in 2017, which the GOP passed on a party-line vote and overwhelmingly benefit the biggest corporations and the richest individuals, made trillion-dollar federal deficits the new normal – long before the novel coronavirus sent lawmakers scrambling for emergency spending.

Many companies that are now seeking lifelines from taxpayers, especially the airlines, used the windfall from those tax breaks to buy back their own shares, which increased share prices and therefore boosted executive compensation.

The Trump administration outlined a $1 trillion stimulus plan on Wednesday to respond to the pandemic, including $500 billion in cash payments to individuals and $300 billion toward helping small businesses, as well as $50 billion for bailing out airlines and $150 billion for other unspecified sectors. This will likely include hospitality, in which the president has a significant personal financial stake. “We’re coming up with numbers,” Trump told reporters on Wednesday. “Haven’t gotten there yet, but certainly the hotel industry, cruise ship industry, the airlines – those are all prime candidates.”

A few hours later, the Senate approved and Trump quickly signed the House-passed bill that would spend some $100 billion on paid leave, unemployment insurance and free testing to people affected by the coronavirus fallout. That's on top of the $8.3 billion emergency spending package that passed earlier this month. And it's distinct from the $46 billion emergency funding request the White House sent Congress yesterday for "ongoing preparedness and response efforts" by various agencies.

All told, between the various packages and other actions the government is taking, a senior administration official said the White House is pushing an economic plan that is "over $2 trillion and counting" to stop the coronavirus from wrecking the economy. Compare that to the $800 billion stimulus package enacted under Barack Obama and the $700 billion Troubled Asset Relief Program enacted under George W. Bush to respond to the Great Recession.

The tea party movement on the right and the Occupy Wall Street movement on the left stemmed from animosity to the bailouts for Wall Street. Conservatives spent the entire Obama era loudly decrying him for supposedly trying to "pick winners and losers." In 2012, Trump himself accused "Obama's auto bailout" of "ruining American industry." Now he promises to help Boeing specifically in the White House briefing room – and few in his party balk.

When aides presented Trump with a $850 billion stimulus proposal earlier this week, he encouraged them to go bigger and ask for $1 trillion, Bob Costa and Phil Rucker report. "Trump 'doesn't give a [expletive]' about how his rescue plan affects the federal debt, according to a White House official who spoke on the condition of anonymity to be frank. 'It's all about the markets and the economy for him. It's all about the jobs numbers.' ... One adviser who has discussed the matter with Trump said the president does not believe voters will be concerned about adding to the debt.”

There is certainly some political sensitivity inside the Trump administration to the optics of bailouts for big companies. When Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin met with Senate Republicans on Tuesday, he pleaded with them not to use the word “bailout” to describe the proposed bailout for Boeing, one of many large corporations that stands to get a windfall from the administration’s plan. “One senator raised a hand and asked if they should instead call them ‘freedom payments,’ which prompted laughter,” per Bob and Phil.

A bailout by any other name is still a bailout. And corporate lobbyists are rushing to get their hands in the cookie jar. “When the banks that were saved in 2008 paid out $140 billion in executive bonuses in 2009, voters on both sides erupted,” David Lynch and Jeff Stein report. “Today, Democrats — who lost the House in 2010 amid a conservative rebellion over bailouts — demand strict conditions on aid. And many Republicans, including National Economic Council Director Larry Kudlow — who wrote in 2008 that such programs make ‘a mockery of free-market capitalism’ — have ditched their objections. ... Asked Tuesday whether the bailouts would carry any restrictions, the president looked to the vice president, saying: ‘I think I’m going to ask Mike. Answer that question, please.’ Pence parried, saying only that the industry aid package is ‘a work in progress.’

“Democrats see the administration’s bailout requests as potential leverage in negotiations about the spending package. On a conference call with party members, [Senate Minority Leader Chuck] Schumer highlighted the industry bailouts as an opportunity to secure increased spending on programs such as Medicaid and unemployment insurance. But Democrats may face their own divisions. Members representing states such as casino-rich Nevada and Florida, home to many cruise operators, might break with the party’s united front.”

One person briefed on internal White House deliberations, who was not authorized to speak to reporters, told David and Jeff: “Every industry is affected. Every restaurant is affected. How are you going to draw the line between who gets government aid and who doesn’t? It becomes a real corporate welfare scramble.”

This is part of a pattern: Trump campaigns like a populist but, for the most part, governs like a plutocrat.

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more. Companies are playing a central role in shaping the government response. Consider the special group of private industry representatives that Jared Kushner has enlisted in what's being likened to a shadow coronavirus response task force. Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser has added another layer of confusion and conflicting signals within the White House's disjointed response to the crisis, Yasmeen Abutaleb, Ashley Parker and Josh Dawsey report: "Kushner, who joined the administration's coronavirus efforts last week, is primarily focused on attempting to set up drive-through testing sites with the help of technology and retail executives, as well as experts in health-care delivery. ... Kushner regularly briefs the president separately from the rest of the task force ... Some members of Kushner's team are working out of offices on the seventh floor of Health and Human Services headquarters — one floor above the office of HHS secretary Alex Azar — while others are working out of an office in the West Wing of the White House ... They include representatives of companies such as UPS, FedEx and Flatiron Health ...

---

"Two senior officials said some government officials have become increasingly confused as they have received emails from private industry employees on Kushner's team and have been on conference calls with them, unsure what their exact role is in the government response. Several people involved in the response said the involvement of outside advisers — who are emailing large groups of government employees from private email addresses — also raises legitimate security concerns about whether these advisers are following proper government protocols. 'We don't know who these people are,' one senior official said. 'Who is this? We're all getting these emails.' ...

“Kushner defended his role in an interview, saying his team’s goal was to bring ‘an entrepreneurial approach’ to the crisis. ... One potential conflict for Kushner is the fact that Oscar, a health insurance company co-founded by Kushner’s younger brother, Joshua, last week launched its own digital portal that helps direct people to virus testing centers and assess their own risk of becoming infected. A spokeswoman did not respond to a request for comment, including about whether Oscar plans to seek a government contract.”

To be sure, there are good reasons for the government to spend heavily to avert a depression. The Dow Jones industrial average closed down 1,339 points on Wednesday, or 6.3 percent, after plunging 2,300 points earlier in the day. It opened on Thursday down more than 150 points. Most of the equity gains seen during Trump’s presidency have evaporated. No sector has been spared. “The lamps are going out all across the economy,” JP Morgan Chase says in a report that forecasts a 14 percent decline in gross domestic product in the second quarter.

Dow Jones index nears its level at Trump's inauguration date

Source: Yahoo Finance

THE WASHINGTON POST

The Federal Reserve announced at 11:30 last night that it's establishing a special backstop for money market mutual funds, which typically serve as risk-free places for investors to store cash. This morning, the Fed announced more "swap lines" with other central banks around the world to ensure they have sufficient U.S. dollars.

"More than a million workers are expected to lose their jobs by the end of March, economists say, a dramatic turnaround from February when the unemployment rate was near a record low," Heather Long and Abha Bhattarai report. "Ball State University economist Michael Hicks predicts this month could be the worst for layoffs in U.S. history. ... The Labor Department reported Thursday that 281,000 people applied for jobless benefits last week, up 33 percent from the prior week.”

But perhaps that’s a reason why Republicans, who think of themselves as fiscally responsible, should have listened to the experts and the Congressional Budget Office projections when they voted for the tax cuts. Only eight Republican senators voted yesterday against the $100 billion package, mostly citing concerns about its largesse: Marsha Blackburn (Tenn.), James Inhofe and James Lankford (Okla.), Ron Johnson (Wis.), Mike Lee (Utah), Rand Paul (Ky.), Ben Sasse (Neb.) and Tim Scott (S.C.). “My counsel to them is to gag and vote for it anyway, even if they think it has some shortcomings, and to address those shortcomings in the bill that we’re in the process of crafting,” Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) said on Tuesday.

Fear is a motivating factor for many. For the past three years, GOP lawmakers have often fallen in line because they’re afraid of Trump’s wrath. Now they’re afraid of the economy collapsing and worst-case scenarios that show millions of Americans dying. Last night, Reps. Mario Diaz-Balart (R-Fla.) and Ben McAdams (D-Utah) became the first members of Congress to announce that they’ve tested positive for the coronavirus, which adds to the sense of anxiety.

A few other GOP senators, including Josh Hawley (Mo.) and Rick Scott (Fla.), have warned that they don’t think the trillion-dollar package being negotiated, being referred to as Phase Three, should include bailouts for big businesses. “The people that need help the most are small businesses, hourly workers, people who rely on tips, and gig economy workers like Uber and Lyft drivers,” said Scott. “The federal government should be a safety net for those who need it most. But even in times of crisis, we can’t forget about fiscal responsibility. ... The proposals being debated in Congress right now include giveaways to big corporations, mandates that will shut down small businesses, and policies that I fear won't help the people that need it most."

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

The latest on the coronavirus response and fallout

Powered by LiveIntent

Mice used for fetal tissue research are kept in the Humanized Mouse Core Laboratory at the University of California at Los Angeles. (Philip Cheung for The Washington Post)

Trump's ban on fetal tissue research is undermining scientific efforts to combat the virus.

“A senior scientist at a government biomedical research laboratory has been thwarted in his efforts to conduct experiments on possible treatments for the new coronavirus because of the Trump administration’s restrictions on research with human fetal tissue,” Amy Goldstein reports.

“The scientist, Kim Hasenkrug, an immunologist at the National Institutes of Health’s Rocky Mountain Laboratories in Montana, has been appealing for nearly a month to top NIH officials, arguing that the pandemic warrants an exemption to a ban imposed last year prohibiting government researchers from using tissue from abortions in their work. According to several researchers familiar with the situation, ... such experiments could be particularly fruitful.

“Just months ago, before the new coronavirus began to infect people around the world, other U.S. scientists made two highly relevant discoveries. They found that specialized mice could be transplanted with human fetal tissue that develops into lungs — the part of the body the new coronavirus invades. These ‘humanized mice,’ they also found, could then be infected with coronaviruses — to which ordinary mice are not susceptible — closely related to the one that causes the new disease, covid-19. Outside researchers said the scientists who created those mice have offered to give them to the Rocky Mountain Lab, which has access to the new virus that causes covid-19, so the mice could be infected with the source of the pandemic and experiments could be run on potential treatments. Candidates include an existing drug known to boost patients’ immune systems in other circumstances, as well as blood serum from patients recovering from covid-19. ...

“Caitlin Oakley, a spokeswoman for the Department of Health and Human Services, which includes NIH, said, ‘no decision has been made’ about Rocky Mountain's request. ... Hasenkrug has been forbidden by federal officials to talk publicly since the administration began to reconsider fetal tissue funding rules in the fall of 2018 at the prodding of social conservatives ... The fetal tissue is donated by women undergoing elective abortions, and critics say that it is unethical to use the material and that taxpayer money should not be used for research that relies on abortion."

Irving Weissman, a leading stem cell researcher at Stanford University, said "it's stupid not to try" this approach, even if we don't know what it will yield. "When I hear the vice president saying [they're] doing everything they can to find vaccines [and treatments], I know that is not true," another scientist familiar with the situation told Amy. "Anything we do at this point could save hundreds of thousands of lives. If you wait, it's too late."

More lifesaving ventilators are available, but hospitals can't afford them.

"Hospitals are holding back from ordering more medical ventilators because of the high cost for what may be only a short-term spike in demand from the coronavirus epidemic, supply chain experts and health researchers say, intensifying an anticipated shortage of lifesaving equipment for patients who become critically ill," Chris Rowland reports. "Mechanical ventilators, which help patients breathe or breathe for them, are considered critical to the nation's effort to contain the worst effects of the pandemic and avoid a crisis like the one Italy is facing. Depending on how bad the coronavirus pandemic gets in the United States, individual cities could come up thousands of ventilators short as patients flood hospitals. ... Ventilators range from $25,000 for a basic model to $50,000 for a machine used in the most advanced intensive care units. ...

"Other governments have rushed to stock up on ventilators. The United Kingdom has asked Rolls-Royce Holdings, which makes jet engines, and other heavy manufacturers to make ventilators. Germany ordered 10,000 ventilators with Drägerwerk AG, ... the company's largest order ever. In the United States, Trump told state officials on a conference call that states and local governments should procure their own equipment. 'Respirators, ventilators, all of the equipment — try getting it yourselves,' Trump told the governors ... The Trump administration has barely begun to release up to 13,000 older ventilator models cached around the country in the federal Strategic National Stockpile, saying state officials have not requested them."

Shortages of face masks, swabs and other basic supplies pose a challenge to testing.

"At major hospitals in Seattle and Washington, D.C., mask shortages had already become so acute that doctors and patients were being asked to reuse the masks, not dispose of them as previous, traditional CDC protocol requires, even after contact with infected patients," Carolyn Johnson, Brady Dennis, Steven Mufson and Tom Hamburger. "Many laboratories have complained about shortages and back orders of reagents, chemical solutions that are key components of testing kits. The reagents are used to isolate the genetic material from the virus." The president said he will invoke the Defense Production Act to expand production of medical supplies.

What else the federal government is doing

- ICE will stop most immigration enforcement inside the U.S. (Maria Sacchetti and Arelis Hernández)
- The White House instructed federal agencies to pare down to "mission-critical" services. It was unclear how quickly and to what degree agencies would curtail services in response. The Census Bureau announced it is suspending all field operations for two weeks until April 1. (Lisa Rein, Kimberly Kindy and Eric Yoder)
- The Department of Housing and Urban Development ordered a 60-day foreclosure moratorium for homeowners affected by the coronavirus. (Rena Merle and Tracy Jan)

- Trump said a Navy ship would treat coronavirus cases in New York, but it won't be ready for weeks as it undergoes maintenance in Norfolk, Va. (CNBC)

Young adults make up a surprising share of coronavirus hospitalizations.

A CDC report shows that, while older people have the greatest likelihood of dying, of the 508 patients known to have been hospitalized in the United States, 38 percent were between the ages of 20 and 54. Nearly half of the 121 patients who were admitted to intensive care units were adults under 65. The CDC says 20 percent of hospitalized patients and 12 percent of the intensive care patients were between the ages of 20 and 44, according to the Times.

Doctors and nurses fighting the pandemic fear infecting their families.

“As physicians contend with a burgeoning angst that, for some, has begun to manifest in nightmares, many of them have drawn up wills or placed themselves into makeshift quarantines, sleeping in hotel rooms, garages and basements in hopes that they will not infect their families," John Woodrow Cox, Michael Miller and Peter Jamison report.

Domestic disruptions continue to cascade.

- Amazon confirmed its first case in a New York warehouse employee. It's probably a smart idea to disinfect any deliveries before bringing them inside your home. (Teo Armus)
- All of Georgia's state lawmakers have been urged to self-isolate themselves for weeks after a state senator disclosed that he tested positive. (Atlanta Journal-Constitution)
- Restaurant workers face uncertain futures with looming rent payments and plenty of worry. (Emily Heil)
- Automakers temporarily shut down factories to slow the virus's spread. Ford, General Motors and Chrysler will halt production in all North American factories for at least two weeks, per Aaron Gregg. Volkswagen Group, the world's largest carmaker, suspended production in Europe, per Rachel Siegel.
- The San Francisco Bay Area ordered millions to shelter in place. Elon Musk had his Tesla employees report to work anyway. County officials told the company it could maintain "minimum basic operations." (Faiz Siddiqui)
- The New York Stock Exchange will close its floor and move to electronic trading after two floor traders tested positive. (CNBC)
- In Florida, police have closed a number of popular beaches after thousands continue flocking to them despite warnings. (CBS)
- More than 100 people tested positive for the virus in two New York City neighborhoods, with officials expressing growing alarm that coronavirus is spreading quickly in tightly knit Hasidic Jewish communities in Brooklyn. (NYT)
- The effort to develop contingencies for voting in upcoming primaries took on new urgency as the three contests that unfolded on Tuesday showcased what experts described as unprecedented challenges. (Isaac Stanley-Becker and Amy Gardner)
- For Biden and Sanders, campaigning during the virus is going to be awkward. “Crowds don’t roar when a live-streamed speech is finished. Throngs don’t collapse around stage, hoping for a handshake. Instead, candidates are left to wait, solemn and straight-faced, until a staffer signals the all-clear or beckons them out of the camera shot,” writes Chelsea Janes.

- Twitter promised to crack down on coronavirus misinformation. Examples of tweets that will now be deleted include: denials of expert guidance, promotion of actively harmful treatments and remedies that are ineffective, as well as unverified claims that spawn mass panic, such as a false statement that food shipments will end for two months. (Hannah Knowles)
- Experts worry quarantine conditions could be rife for a rise in domestic violence. On top of physical isolation, compounding economic problems and the overall stress of the pandemic are potential triggers for domestic abusers. (Miriam Berger)

Kids are carriers, and grandparents are vulnerable. Parents must make wrenching choices.

"Against the backdrop of a crashing stock market and emptying grocery store shelves, there are other, intangible losses being calculated by parents: Should a long-anticipated visit be postponed? A family vacation canceled? What to do about upended daily routines, the loss of help with child care, the sudden absence of grandparents whom children have come to depend on?" (Caitlin Gibson)

Note: The virus has ravaged seven members of a family, killing three.

“Grace Fusco — mother of 11, grandmother of 27 — would sit in the same pew at church each Sunday, surrounded by nearly a dozen members of her sprawling Italian-American family. Sunday dinners drew an even larger crowd to her home in central New Jersey,” the NYT reports. “Now, her close-knit clan is united anew by unspeakable grief: Mrs. Fusco, 73, died on Wednesday night after contracting the coronavirus — hours after her son died from the virus and five days after her daughter’s death, a relative said. Four other children who contracted coronavirus remain hospitalized, three of them in critical condition, the relative, Roseann Paradiso Fodera, said.”

Maryland confirmed its first covid-19 fatality, a man in his 60s who had no underlying health issues.

The Washington region’s total number of confirmed cases grew to 203 on Wednesday, per our live blog.

- As many as 73 D.C. firefighters, paramedics and emergency medical technicians have self-quarantined after they were potentially exposed to the virus. (Peter Hermann)
  - The Metro, facing a deficit of more than $50 million a month due to the virus, is seeking emergency federal aid. (Justin George)
  - Headline of the day: “Baltimore Mayor Begs Residents To Stop Shooting Each Other So Hospital Beds Can Be Used For Coronavirus Patients.” (WJZ)
  - That's a reminder of a sad reality: The wealthy always do better during a pandemic. It's been this way throughout history. The poor are exposed at greater rates, get sicker because often they aren't as healthy to begin with and then have higher mortality rates. (Roxanne Roberts)
-

Quote of the day

“Getting coronavirus is not a death sentence except for maybe no more than 3.4 percent of our population . . . probably far less,” Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) said in an interview with his home-state newspaper, the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel. “We don’t shut down our economy because tens of thousands of people die on the highways.”

The global disruptions continue.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel warned the coronavirus presents the gravest crisis to that country since World War II. The country has more than 8,200 cases, and infections are growing exponentially, Loveday Morris, Luisa Beck and Rick Noack report. More from our foreign coverage:

- In Italy, the death toll surged by 475 to 2,978 – the highest daily rise yet recorded anywhere in the world. Around 40,000 people have been charged for violating terms of the lockdown in the country. (Siobhán O’Grady)
- British Prime Minister Boris Johnson announced plans to close all schools in England, as the U.K. death toll hits 104. Infections rose by 676 to 2,626 in 24 hours.
- The Dutch health care minister collapsed during a debate in the Hague about the government's efforts to counter covid-19.
- Spain ordered all hotels to close. Cases surged 25 percent there in 24 hours, rising from 13,716 to 17,147 and deaths increased from 598 to 787. (Rick Noack)
- Hundreds of Americans stuck in Morocco are pleading with Washington for help getting out. Morocco, which hosts around 12 million tourists yearly, ordered hotels, restaurants and entertainment centers to close on Monday. The country has 37 cases and one related death. (Miriam Berger and Siobhán O’Grady)
- What counts as “essential” during a lockdown? For Belgians, it's fries. For the French, it's wine. (Quentin Ariés and Michael Birnbaum)
- Australia and New Zealand banned entry to non-citizens and non-residents. (Teo Armus)
- A 41-year-old diabetic man became the first coronavirus death in Mexico. (Bloomberg News)
- El Salvador, which has closed its borders and airport, confirmed its first infection. (Reuters)
- Millions of protesters in Brazil appeared at their windows banging pots and pans calling for President Jair Bolsonaro to step down. It was the biggest protest against Bolsonaro’s government to date, which is dealing with over 500 cases of the virus. (BBC)

Afghanistan is stuck with a divided government, a Taliban insurgency and a spreading virus.

“Over the past several days, with 22 cases of the coronavirus confirmed nationwide, the impact of the pandemic has begun to hit home. Now, the divided government and its desperately poor health system must grapple with a crisis that is bringing life to a halt in the West — and it must do so while contending with a militant group vying for power across half of the country.” Pamela Constable reports.

U.S. sanctions have hindered the Iranian government’s response.

“The death toll in Iran from covid-19 infections surged past 1,000 on Wednesday after the largest single-day rise in the number of deaths since Iran’s outbreak began,” Adam Taylor reports. “Deutsche Welle reported this week that researchers at Sharif University of Technology in Tehran created a computer simulator to analyze scenarios. Under current circumstances, the researchers said, infections would not peak until late May. The death toll could be as high as 3.5 million. That figure might seem enough to stop anyone in their tracks. But this week, the United States announced that it would be expanding its sanctions on Iran, as well as on entities that aided the Iranian government in its trade in petrochemicals and other restricted activities. ... The Guardian reported on Wednesday that Britain was privately pressing the United States to ease sanctions on Iran amid the crisis.”

Light at the end of the tunnel?

“China on Thursday said that there had been no cases of domestic coronavirus infections in the country the previous day, for the first time since the outbreak began,” Anna Fifield and Teo Armus report. “All 34 infections diagnosed on Wednesday were in people arriving into China from abroad, the National Health Commission said. It was a significant milestone for the country, where the virus was first reported in mid-

November. Among the 34 imported infections, 21 were found in Beijing, where authorities are imposing strict new quarantine rules to try to stop a new outbreak in the sensitive capital, the seat of the Communist Party power. ... Still, some experts have warned that based on the patterns of previous pandemics, China could face further waves of infections.”

But, but, but: China’s initial attempt to cover up the virus made the spread worse.

“Chinese laboratories identified a mystery virus as a highly infectious new pathogen by late December last year, but they were ordered to stop tests, destroy samples and suppress the news,” the Times of London reports. “A regional health official in Wuhan ... demanded the destruction of the lab samples that established the cause of unexplained viral pneumonia on January 1. China did not acknowledge there was human-to-human transmission until more than three weeks later. The detailed revelations by Caixin Global, a respected independent publication, provide the clearest evidence yet of the scale of the cover-up in the crucial early weeks when the opportunity was lost to control the outbreak. Censors have been rapidly deleting the report from the Chinese internet.”

There are lessons the U.S. should heed from other Asian countries.

“Political will, dedicated resources, sophisticated tracking and a responsible population have kept coronavirus infections and deaths in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Singapore relatively low,” Shibani Mahtani and Simon Denyer report. “South Korea, with more deaths, has led the way in widespread testing. ... Experts are urging countries including the United States, France and Spain to use time bought by newly enforced social-distancing measures, lockdowns and quarantines to reset and work out their strategies before it is too late.”

---

Climate change is still happening

An Arctic researcher sets out to retrieve oceanographic moorings and a weather station over meltwater topping sea ice in northwest Greenland during the 2019 melt season. (Steffen Olsen)

Greenland lost a near-record 600 billion tons of ice last summer.

The mass loss from Greenland alone was enough to raise global sea levels by 2.2 millimeters, according to a new study based on NASA data.

“Between 2002 and 2019, across the full time series of both satellite missions, the study finds Greenland lost 4,550 billion tons of ice, or an average of about 261 billion tons per year,” Andrew Freedman reports.

Oil and gas companies want to drill within a half-mile of some of Utah’s best-known national parks.

“The petitions for the Bureau of Land Management’s September lease sale, some of which come from anonymous potential bidders, could transform a region renowned for its pristine night skies and stunning topography.

Some of the parcels are also within 10 miles of Bears Ears National Monument’s current boundaries. ... While the BLM can reject nominations as it prepares lease sales for auction in September, Trump administration policy tilts decisions in favor of energy development,”

Juliet Eilperin and Darryl Fears report.

A 5.7-magnitude earthquake struck Salt Lake City.

“The earthquake struck around 7 a.m., its epicenter located about four miles west-southwest of Salt Lake City International Airport. Heavy shaking was felt across north-central Utah west of the Wasatch mountains. There were no reports of any serious injuries, though many people were evacuated from the airport and the Federal Aviation Administration issued a ground stop for all inbound flights for several hours,” Matthew Cappucci reports. “Within three hours of the initial quake, nearly two dozen aftershocks greater than 3.0 in magnitude struck in the immediate vicinity. ... The earthquake was shallow, occurring only about six or seven miles below the surface, which may have maximized shaking at the surface. According to Utah’s Division of Emergency Management, it was the strongest earthquake to strike the state since 1992.”

---

Social media speed read

Trump has started more frequently referring to the coronavirus as Chinese:

Nathan McDermott ✓

@natemcdermott

Trump only started calling the "Chinese Virus" within the last two days.

Between January and March 15th, he referred to it as the "coronavirus", at least on Twitter anyway, 41 times.

Since March 16th he hasn't called it the "coronavirus" once.

The screenshot shows a tweet by Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) from March 18, 2020, at 6:53 PM. The tweet has 2,610 likes and 1,549 replies. The tweet text reads: "China has been working very hard to contain the Coronavirus. The". Below the tweet are several replies from other users, including one from Donald J. Trump himself. The replies discuss the situation with China, the impact of the virus, and the role of the government. One reply includes a photo of a meeting. Another reply mentions a conference with the FBI. The tweet also shows engagement metrics like retweets and replies.

In Israel, a chief rabbi ruled that religiously observant Jews can have access to their phones during Shabbat because of the virus:

(((Yair Rosenberg)))

@Yair_Rosenberg

Religiously observant Jews don't use electronics on Shabbat. One of Israel's chief rabbis just ruled that they should make sure leave them on for use, in case they get notified that they have coronavirus or came in contact with someone who did.

twitter.com/AmySpiro/statu...

Amy Spiro @AmySpiro

Wowowow.

Israeli Chief Rabbi Yosef: People should leave their phones on over Shabbat in case they receive notifications over coronavirus test results or mandatory quarantine.

445 9:21 PM - Mar 18, 2020

169 people are talking about this

And Tuesday's primaries raised more questions about why Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) is still in the race:

Videos of the day

Trevor Noah gave a social distancing show:

Jimmy Kimmel offered what he called "a quarantine minilogue":

Stephen Colbert addressed fans from the firepit at his house:

Police officers in the Kerala state of India showed off a dance routine to remind citizens of proper hygiene during the pandemic:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The 5-Minute Fix for a weekday afternoon cheat sheet on the biggest story in politics — that can be read in 5 minutes or less. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Many younger adults are being hospitalized
Date: Thursday, March 19, 2020 2:42:59 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

By Angela Fritz
with Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

The nightmare scenario that hospitals could run out of supplies is no longer theoretical. At facilities in the hardest-hit cities, health-care workers are making their own face masks and safety goggles out of supplies from hardware stores. An ER doctor provided an sobering account of how her hospital is overwhelmed. Doctors are now urging patients to forgo in-person appointments and use telemedicine apps instead. This is only the beginning.

The lack of basic supplies is preventing tests from being performed, too. The scarcity of chemical solutions, swabs and even masks is preventing health-care workers in some hospitals from taking samples, and some laboratories from running the tests.

Meanwhile, America's party people are ignoring pleas for social distancing — barhopping, traveling and packing onto beaches for extended spring breaks. Bars and restaurants in a dozen states are facing strict orders to shut it down, but in some cases, law enforcement has had to step in. “If I get corona, I get corona,” one shirtless spring-breaker told Reuters. “At the end of the day, I’m not going to let it stop me from partying.”

But CDC data now shows that younger adults are a large percentage of coronavirus hospitalizations in the United States. Half the ICU patients in France were younger than 65, and half of those in the Netherlands were under 50. It's clear that, for reasons health experts still don't know, covid-19 is taking a hard toll on the young, even though fatal outcomes are skewed toward the elderly.

(Related reading: How to talk to your friends about social distancing when they're still going out to the bars.)

The State Department raised its travel advisory for all international travel from 3 to 4, the most serious category, and advised all Americans who are abroad to return, or make plans to be there for a while. American travelers have been stranded in Morocco, Peru, Honduras and Tunisia, and some have complained that the U.S. embassies have not provided enough help to get them home.

Italy passed China for the largest number of coronavirus-related deaths, at more than 3,400, even though China has had twice as many cases.

Two days ago, the United States had around 5,700 confirmed cases. Today, that number is over 11,300. This is a massive acceleration, due in part to more testing, but also because the virus is indeed spreading. The death toll in the United States is over 160.

Immigration officials are halting enforcement within the United States, except to deport foreign nationals who have committed serious crimes. ICE said late Wednesday that it will “delay enforcement actions” and use “alternatives to detention” while the outbreak is ongoing.

Actors, politicians and athletes are jumping to the front of the line for tests while average Americans are turned away. When asked if who are known as VIPs should have easier access to the test than the general public, President Trump replied, “No, I wouldn’t say so, but perhaps that’s been the story of life.”

As lawmakers finalize a massive stimulus package, President Trump said Thursday that he supports the federal government taking equity stakes in private companies that take bailout funds.

Companies and industries have asked the federal government for hundreds of billions of dollars in assistance, and buying equity stakes would protect the taxpayer investment.

Economists estimate that more than a million American workers are expected be out of a job by the end of the month, even more of a shock because unemployment was at a record low before the outbreak. The Labor Department reported that 281,000 people applied for jobless benefits last week, up 33 percent from the week prior.

Trump keeps repeating a false claim that a malaria drug has been approved for use against the coronavirus. He said it in a White House media briefing, and FDA Commissioner Stephen Hahn clarified it would be the first drug to be tested. Then Trump repeated the claim multiple times in a teleconference with governors.

---

Live updates

Track the spread of the outbreak in the United States and abroad with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Follow live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

Find answers to to common questions and terms to know.

Want to know more? Submit your question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

China, where the pandemic likely originated, reported zero new cases today, suggesting the outbreak has stopped spreading there after about 81,000 cases were confirmed — a tiny fraction of the country's 1.4 billion residents.

Barbara Chumley of Harlingen, Tex., notes that other countries are preparing for infection rates of up to 70 percent, and asks: "If this is true, why has the number of cases in China dwindled so drastically?"

We asked Harvard University epidemiologist Marc Lipsitch to answer her. Unfortunately, he says China's very low infection rate came at a very heavy cost, and might not last.

"The Chinese epidemic has been temporarily controlled by extreme social distancing measures," Lipsitch told The Washington Post. You can read about those measures in our stories: entire cities locked down; tens of millions of people confined to their homes; checkpoints, padlocks on doors and enforcers with red arm bands making sure no one walks past their front gate without a pass. The draconian measures appear to have devastated China's economy.

"The total size of the epidemic in China has indeed been a small proportion of the population so far (although more than the reported numbers because not everyone was tested)," Lipsitch said. "The problem is that either China keeps those kinds of control measures in place (economically and socially disruptive) or releases these and the infection begins to spread again.

"So the long-term projections [for worldwide infection] (which I believe are more accurately 20-60 percent based on the latest data) are valid," he concluded, "because these proportions of people must be infected and immune before spread can be controlled without intense social distancing."

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Tips on how to get a travel refund
- The national chain hiring 10,000 workers as others lay people off
- A report on scams that are pitching fake tests to vulnerable Americans
- How privacy has become an issue as the government seeks to track the virus

I'm an ER doctor. The coronavirus is already overwhelming us.

Perspective • By Michelle Romeo • Read more »

---

How to grocery shop safely during this outbreak

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

---

Coronavirus is going to radically alter the U.S. This is what America could look like in the coming months.

By William Wan, Joel Achenbach, Carolyn Y. Johnson and Ben Guarino • Read more »

---

I own a small business. The CDC order is a death sentence.

Opinion • By Cathy Merrill • Read more »

---

'Love Is Quarantine' adapts blind-dating reality TV to age of social distancing

By Teo Armus • Read more »

---

Line management at its best

Brent Toderian
@BrentToderian

Worried how far apart you should be in a supermarket line-up while #SocialDistancing? No surprise, the Danes have a simple design solution for that. #CopyThis #COVID19 #coronavirus via Henrik Schou

1,902 likes 1:04 AM - Mar 19, 2020

918 people are talking about this

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The 5-Minute Fix for a weekday afternoon cheat sheet on the biggest story in politics — that can be read in 5 minutes or less. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 20 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 4:55:49 AM

---

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Fri., March 20, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

---

1. WHITE HOUSE:

Pandemic 'totally predictable.' How Trump dismissed warnings

The Trump administration has a record of labeling warnings about national security risks as "alarmist." Now, as the consequences of White House inaction on the coronavirus become clear, many experts say the administration's habit of ignoring the threat of climate change could be more devastating.

---

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

FEMA, once focused on storms, will lead virus response

3. CLIMATE IMPACTS:

NOAA warns of 'widespread' flooding in months ahead

---

POLITICS

4. PUBLIC OPINION:

N.C. voters want a pandemic-like response to climate — poll

5. FINANCE:

Shareholders push companies on climate this proxy season

---

IN THE STATES

6. CLIMATE IMPACTS:

Calif. mountains blanketed in snow after dry start to year

7. POLITICS:

GOP kills Kan. governor's plan for energy office

---

GLOBAL

8. EMISSIONS:

China's virus response puts climate pledge in doubt — report

9. INVESTMENT:

Options trade stokes carbon's coronavirus plunge in Europe

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 20 -- E&E Daily is ready
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 5:24:36 AM

Read today's E&E Daily on the web

E&E DAILY

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

E&E DAILY — Fri., March 20, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Senate Republicans release coronavirus stimulus package

Senate Republicans yesterday made their opening bid on a $1 trillion economic stimulus that includes fuel assistance for airlines and opens the door to talks on a range of energy and environment issues.

ON THE HILL

2. COURTS:

McConnell bid to purge judges may reshape environmental law

3. ENERGY POLICY:

Coal industry asks Congress, White House for bailout

4. ADVOCACY:

No more handshakes: Lobbyists adapt to pandemic

POLITICS

5. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Climate activists, progressive Dems rally around Ill. primary win

6. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Colo. Senate hopeful's coronavirus Rx: The Green New Deal

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

7. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 16 - March 22, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E Daily, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eedaily.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E DAILY – CONGRESS. LEGISLATION. POLITICS.

E&E Daily is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Designed for policy players who need to know what's happening to their issues on Capitol Hill, from federal agency appropriations to comprehensive energy legislation, E&E Daily is the place insiders go to track their environmental and energy issues in Congress. E&E Daily publishes daily by 7:30 a.m. while Congress is in session.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 20 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 5:40:13 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Fri., March 20, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Is 'energy dominance' dead?

President Trump has said that the U.S. achieved "energy dominance" during his administration. But with the coronavirus pandemic, the prospect that the U.S. will top the world in oil and gas production through the end of Trump's first term is in doubt. What does that mean for industry and the 2020 campaign?

TOP STORIES

2. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Coronavirus could cut a third of U.S. wind jobs — report

3. ELECTRIC VEHICLES:

Tesla joins other automakers in shutting down

4. OIL AND GAS:

'Tough decisions.' Coronavirus spurs project delays, layoffs

ENERGY POLICY

5. PANDEMIC:

Coal industry asks Trump, Congress for coronavirus bailout

FEDERAL AGENCIES

6. REGULATIONS:

FERC offers pandemic-related compliance relief

TECHNOLOGY

7. CARBON CAPTURE:

CCS map outlines path for 26 states

ELECTRICITY

8. COAL:

Court upholds Wash. decision to block export terminals

9. HYDROPOWER:

Maine high court upholds PUC approval of energy corridor

OIL AND GAS

---

10. ENERGY MARKETS:

Negative oil prices? 'Anything is possible'

11. GEOPOLITICS:

With oil at record low, Canada is first price-war casualty

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Simulations before coronavirus foreshadowed infighting between agencies in pandemic response
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 7:40:56 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Simulations before coronavirus foreshadowed infighting between agencies in pandemic response

Before Sept. 11, 2001, government planners had not considered the possibility that hijackers would fly commercial airplanes into the Pentagon and World Trade Center. There was no such failure of imagination ahead of this pandemic. Experts have not just warned for years about the inevitability of an outbreak like the novel coronavirus on American soil. They have also sounded the alarm about the risk of the kind of poor coordination between federal and local agencies that has characterized the initial U.S. response to covid-19.

A simulation called “Crimson Contagion,” organized by a Trump-appointed assistant secretary at the Department of Health and Human Services from January to August in 2019, envisioned a respiratory virus beginning in China and infecting 110 million Americans, hospitalizing 7.7 million and killing 586,000. At least a dozen agencies, and another dozen states, were involved in the war-game-style exercise. A draft of the secret after-action report from October, first published Thursday by the New York Times, emphasized challenges related to coordination and highlighted friction between HHS and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Chunks of the 63-page report could easily be cross-applied to describe the dropped balls and mixed messages related to the coronavirus response over the last three months. Consider these bullets from the executive summary: “Exercise participants lacked clarity on federal interagency partners' roles and responsibilities during an influenza pandemic response. ... Confusion regarding the purpose of and target audience for national conference calls hampered coordination among state and federal response partners. ... At times, HHS' Operating Divisions and Staff Divisions provided inconsistent and inaccurate response guidance and actions to healthcare and public health private sector partners. ...

“HHS and DHS/FEMA’s use of disparate information management systems hampered their ability to establish and maintain a national common operating picture. Both HHS and DHS/FEMA submitted senior leader briefs to the White House National Security Council during the exercise, which caused confusion regarding the official source of senior leader briefs. ... State, local, tribal, and territorial partners were unclear on the kinds of information they needed to provide ... HHS' regional staff lack clear guidance on the distribution of federal information management products to state and local partners. ... Inconsistent use of terminology regarding vaccine types and stockpiles caused confusion among response partners at all levels of government.”

President Trump appears Thursday with members of his coronavirus task force in the White House briefing room. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

The Times also posted a 73-page report from July 2016 on lessons learned from the Ebola outbreak that highlighted the need to improve coordination between agencies. Christopher Kirchhoff, who transferred from the Pentagon to the White House to deal with Ebola, wrote that “the most defining event in the domestic management of Ebola” happened when Liberian citizen Thomas Duncan tested positive in Dallas in September 2014. He said that this “revealed gaps” in the federal government’s approach to domestic containment of viruses, especially involving the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

“During such incidents, clarity of Federal roles and responsibilities and coordination across the Federal interagency are paramount. Little of this was present in Dallas,” Kirchhoff wrote. “Some had an expectation that CDC was going to help with healthcare delivery, yet healthcare delivery is not a function of CDC. CDC’s initial forward deployed team was built against a set of technical health requirements and was not equipped to manage the conflicts that developed between the hospital, state, and local authorities. ... The CDC also was not equipped, and did not have clear authority, to perform incident command without being requested to do so by the state of Texas. The peculiarities of the local political environment meant that Dallas county and the state of Texas each set up parallel incident command structures that issued conflicting guidance, further confusing command and control.”

As it relates to the coronavirus, a stream of fresh revelations underscores early mistakes and failures to appropriately coordinate among and between federal and local public health officials. Early efforts to ramp up testing by the CDC were particularly abysmal. The first cases in the United States and South Korea were detected on the very same day, Reuters notes. By late January, though, Seoul had medical companies starting to work on a diagnostic test, and one was approved a week later. Today, Washington is still nowhere close to meeting demand for the tests.

“While the virus was quietly spreading within the U.S., the CDC had told state and local officials its ‘testing capacity is more than adequate to meet current testing demands,’ according to a Feb. 26 agency email,” the Wall Street Journal reports. “The agency’s data show it tested fewer than 100 patients that day. ... CDC officials botched an initial test kit developed in an agency lab, retracting many tests. They resisted calls from state officials and medical providers to broaden testing, and health officials failed to coordinate with outside companies to ensure needed test-kit supplies, such as nasal swabs and chemical reagents, would be available ... When the Food and Drug Administration, also involved in the response, finally opened testing to more outside labs, a run on limited stocks of some supplies needed for the CDC-developed test quickly depleted stores. ... Hospital and commercial lab operators said the government didn't reach out to enlist their help until it was too late.”

The United States has more than 14,200 confirmed cases of the coronavirus and 159 reported deaths. Both numbers are expected to grow rapidly in the coming days. More than 240,000 coronavirus cases have been confirmed globally. The World Health Organization notes that it took three months to reach 100,000 —but only 12 days to reach the next 100,000.

FDA Commissioner Stephen Hahn whispers to Vice President Pence as President Trump speaks to reporters on Thursday. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

“When the coronavirus passed within a handshake of the president, no public health agency took charge,” Aaron Davis and Erin Cox report. “On March 8, a day after the New Jersey doctor’s positive test result was announced and as the extent of the doctor’s contacts at [the Conservative Political Action Conference] were becoming clear, officials said public health workers had begun to locate and notify conference attendees. The [CDC] ‘confirmed his attendance and is working with CPAC to notify all the attendees,’ New Jersey Health Commissioner Judith Persichilli told reporters. In truth, no such effort was undertaken by the CDC, New Jersey or Maryland, according to officials in both states and with the CDC, who pointed to one another as the responsible party. They did not publicize the name of the doctor. ...

“Alerted by the doctor himself, political operatives who organized the conference undertook the responsibility themselves, attempting to identify attendees who might have been at risk. In a process that took days, CPAC organizers pieced together his movements, learning belatedly that he had attended a crowded kickoff event. They also persuaded the doctor to review photos on his iPhone he had taken from the event, ... including a photo the doctor had taken with

Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla). By the time they alerted Gaetz, he was on Air Force One with the president after having spent two days at Trump's Mar-a-Lago resort with members of the first family. Ultimately, the organizers notified close to 100 attendees, according to Matt Schlapp, chairman of the American Conservative Union, the lobbying group that puts on CPAC. On Tuesday, D.C. officials announced that another man who had attended the conference, a 23-year-old District resident, had also tested positive. ...

“The approach stands in stark contrast to aggressive actions taken by some countries that slowed the spread of the virus in its early days. In Singapore, for instance, public health officials not only interviewed the sick but also obtained patients' travel itineraries and used security camera footage to track their movements to help identify every person possible with whom they had incidental contact.”

The CDC now appears to have been sidelined, with its messages increasingly disrupted or overtaken by the White House. Despite the early mistakes, this is still the country's leading public health agency. “Neither CDC Director Robert Redfield nor Anne Schuchat — the principal deputy director who has played key roles in the agency's emergency responses stretching back two decades, including the 2009 influenza pandemic — have appeared on the podium during White House briefings by the coronavirus task force for more than a week,” Lena Sun reports.

“The CDC has not conducted its own telephone briefings for reporters in more than a week. Recent CDC recommendations on school closures and mass gatherings were overtaken by different guidelines issued by the coronavirus task force, creating confusion. ... The CDC has not conducted a briefing since March 9. ... Katie Miller, a spokeswoman for Pence, who took over the task force from Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar late last month, said Redfield has been joining daily task force meetings.

“Azar has blamed Redfield for the testing fiasco, several senior administration officials said, although some White House officials contend the blame is misplaced. Redfield is also not viewed as a strong public speaker by experts inside and outside the agency; he has had to issue corrections to misstatements in recent testimony before Congress. Ever since Pence’s team took over the response, they have treated the outbreak as a public relations crisis as much as a public health crisis and have tightly managed communications of top health and administration officials, officials have said.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

Better understanding the virus

Scientific models offer two insights on what's next.

“In the worst-case scenario, America is on a trajectory toward 1.1 million deaths. ... If Americans embrace drastic restrictions, ... we could see a death toll closer to the thousands and breathe a national sigh of relief as we prepare for a grueling but surmountable road ahead,” William Wan, Joel Achenbach, Carolyn Johnson and Ben Guarino report. “Doing that will require Americans to ‘flatten the curve’ — slowing the spread of the contagion so it doesn’t overwhelm a health-care system with finite resources. That phrase has become ubiquitous in our national conversation. But what experts have not always made clear is that by applying all that downward pressure on the curve — by canceling public gatherings, closing schools, quarantining the sick and enforcing social distancing — you elongate the curve, stretching it out over a longer period of time. Success means a longer — though less catastrophic — fight against the coronavirus. And it is unclear whether Americans — who built this country on ideals of independence and individual rights — would be willing to endure such harsh restrictions on their lives for months, let alone for a year or more.

“Here is another thing that hasn’t been spelled out in our national conversation about flattening the curve: There will probably be more than one curve. If we’re lucky, the coming months will probably look less like a mountain and more like a string of bumpy hills, say epidemiologists. But if authorities ease some measures in coming months or if we start letting them slip ourselves, that hill could easily turn right back into the exponential curve that has cratered Italy’s health system and that U.S. officials are desperately trying to avoid replicating.”

Suppression scenarios

Models from researchers at Imperial College London suggest that wide adoption of measures to reduce the transmission of the novel coronavirus can reduce the demand for critical health-care services, in part by spreading the demand over a longer period. The major challenge is that those measures will need to be maintained until a vaccine becomes available, or transmission will quickly rebound.

Source: Imperial College London

TIM MEKO/THE WASHINGTON POST

Why is the coronavirus killing vastly more men than women?

“Nowhere is this trend more pronounced than in Italy. Men make up nearly 60 percent of people with confirmed cases of the virus and more than 70 percent of those who have died,” Chris Mooney, Sarah Kaplan and Min Joo Kim report. “A study of 99 patients at a hospital in Wuhan, where the virus originated, found that men made up two-thirds of patients. ... More recent figures from China’s Center for Disease Control, based on tens of thousands of cases, showed a strong gender breakdown of deaths, which were 64 percent male. ... The gendered death gap was also seen in the smaller SARS and MERS outbreaks. ...

“These statistics could be a product of behavior, biology or both, scientists say. For one thing, demographic figures suggest many men have more health risks to begin with. ... Women tend to live longer than men. ... Men also drink and smoke more. ... But there are also underlying biological differences between men and women that may make covid-19 worse in men. ... Years of research have found that women generally have stronger immune systems than men and are better able to fend off infections. The X chromosome contains a large number of immune-related genes, and because women have two of them, they gain an advantage in fighting disease. ... Studies have also found that estrogen was protective in female mice infected with the virus that caused the 2003 SARS outbreak.”

Rural areas may be more vulnerable than urban centers.

“Biostatistician and infectious disease specialist Nicholas Reich from the University of Massachusetts is participating in the White House Coronavirus Task Force modeling efforts. He said the death rates from flu for people over 50 could be a good indicator of vulnerability for covid-19, though they are ‘probably not a perfect measure but a good place to start,’” Dan Keating and Laris Karklis report. “The push for social distancing and isolation make dense crowds and public transportation in big cities seem like the deadliest environment. The pattern of flu deaths over the past five years, however, shows that big metro areas are not hot spots for high flu death rates.

“Most of the deaths are among the large population in big cities, but the risk for any individual person goes up dramatically where homes are sparse. Very rural areas have a 60 percent higher death rate from flu than the big metro areas, according to analysis of CDC death records. Collectively, the 68 most rural counties of Kansas, for instance, have nearly 14 deaths per 100,000 people age 50 or older, well over double the rate for the county around Topeka (6.6), the state capital. And the rate around New York City (3.4) is around half of that.

“The higher rates in remote areas may be due to difficulty getting health care. Rural residents have greater travel distances for more limited resources. ... Flu mortality is very notable for low rates in the warmest states: California and the belt of states from Arizona to Florida. But as Reich said, the flu is not a perfect predictor for covid-19. It’s not known if warm weather will provide protection against the new coronavirus the way it does with the standard flu.”

---

The congressional response

Sen. Richard Burr (R-N.C.) enters a closed-door briefing on the coronavirus at the Capitol on Feb. 25. (Mark Wilson/Getty Images)

Senate Republicans unveiled their draft stimulus bill.

“The legislation would provide checks of $1,200 per adult for many families, as well as $500 for every child in those families,” Jeff Stein, Mike DeBonis, Erica Werner and Paul Kane report. “Families filing jointly would receive up to $2,400 for the adults. The size of the checks would diminish for those earning more than $75,000 and phase out completely for those earning more than $99,000. The poorest families, those with no federal income tax liability, would see smaller benefits, though the minimum would be set at $600. Limiting the payment amount for those without federal tax liability was a change from the original White House proposal, and caught some Republicans off-guard, provoking criticism. ... An early analysis showed the vast majority of middle class people would receive the cash payment, but the percentage doing so falls dramatically toward the bottom of the income distribution. About 22 million people earning under $40,000 a year would see no benefit under the GOP plan, according to an initial analysis by Ernie Tedeschi, a former Obama administration economist. ...

“Democrats were working on their own proposals, which shun corporate loan programs being included by Republicans — such as $50 billion for airlines — suggesting that there will be difficulty in reaching bipartisan agreement. ... The bill also outlines in greater detail the terms for receiving targeted federal help from the federal government, as proposed earlier by the Trump administration. The legislation includes $50 billion in ‘loans and loan guarantees’ for passenger airlines; $8 billion for ‘cargo air carriers’; and $150 billion for other ‘eligible businesses,’ a category administration officials have suggested could include the hotel and cruise industries. The legislation appears to give the Treasury Department wide authority in determining which businesses qualify for this $150 billion fund.”

GOP senators are under fire for dumping stocks before markets tanked.

“Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr (R-N.C.), who had expressed confidence in the country’s preparedness for the coronavirus outbreak, sold a significant share of his stocks last month,” Michelle Ye Hee Lee, John Wagner and Teo Armus report. “The sales included stocks in some of the industries that have been hardest hit by the global pandemic, including hotels and restaurants, shipping, drug manufacturing, and health care. ... Burr reportedly was receiving daily briefings on the threat of the virus. In mid-February, he sold 33 stocks held by him and his spouse, estimated at between $628,033 and $1.72 million. ... It was the largest number of stocks he had sold in one day since at least 2016, records show. ...

“Then, at a Feb. 27 luncheon, Burr compared the potential impact of the novel coronavirus to the deadly 1918 flu pandemic. His remarks at the private event were obtained by NPR and aired Thursday. His remarks prompted scrutiny over whether Burr had offered a more frank warning at a Capitol Hill event sponsored by North Carolina business leaders than he and his colleagues were sharing more broadly. ... Burr’s office declined to answer specific questions about his stock sales. About a week after those sales, the stock market sharply declined. ... Insider trading prohibitions apply to all members of Congress, congressional staff and other federal officials, under the Stop Trading on Congressional Knowledge (STOCK) Act of 2012. Burr was among three senators who voted against the legislation at the time.”

Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-Ga.) also dumped millions in stock after being briefed on the virus. In fact, she reported the first sale of stock jointly owned with her husband on Jan. 24, the very day that the Senate Health Committee she sits on hosted a private, all-senators briefing from administration officials, the Daily Beast reports. She shared a picture of herself in the briefing on social media. “One of Loeffler’s two purchases was stock worth between $100,000 and $250,000 in Citrix, a technology company that offers teleworking software and which has seen a small bump in its stock price since Loeffler bought in as a result of coronavirus-induced market turmoil.” Loeffler is the wealthiest member of Congress. The Atlanta businesswoman, whose husband is the chairman and CEO of the New York Stock Exchange, is worth an estimated $500 million.

Loeffler said she does not make investment decisions for her portfolio. “Investment decisions are made by multiple third-party advisors without my or my husband's knowledge or involvement,” she tweeted.

And Sen. Jim Inhofe (R-Okla.) sold as much as $400,000 in stock on Jan. 27, including holdings in PayPal, Apple and Brookfield Asset Management, a real estate company, per the Times.

Quote of the day

“Maybe there’s an honest explanation for what he did. If there is, he should share it with the rest of us immediately. Otherwise, he must resign from the Senate and face prosecution for insider trading,” Fox News host Tucker Carlson said of Burr's stock sales. “There is no greater moral crime than betraying your country in a time of crisis. That appears to be what happened.”

Meanwhile, with her eyes possibly on 2024, Nikki Haley quit the Boeing board. The former ambassador to the United Nations and ex-South Carolina governor, widely believed to harbor presidential ambitions, said she disagreed with the company’s request for a federal bailout. She wrote an open letter to Boeing’s chief executive arguing it's not the federal government’s role to give financial assistance to some companies and industries and not others. (Douglas MacMillan)

Members of Congress are rethinking the tradition-shattering idea of voting remotely. “Someone needs to devise a very secure way of remote voting, with fingerprints or facial recognition,” said Rep. Susan Wild (D-Pa.). “I hate the idea, because I think our face-to-face contact is so important, but it’s inevitable.” (Rachael Bade and Mike DeBonis)

---

Trump’s response

A close-up of Trump’s notes shows where “Corona” was crossed out in Sharpie and replaced with “Chinese.” (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

Trump took direct aim at China for allowing the spread of the virus.

“The president dug in on his use of the term ‘Chinese virus’ to describe the novel coronavirus that was first detected in Wuhan, China, late last year and did not rule out directing economic retaliation toward Beijing,” Anne Gearan reports. “Asked whether he is considering ‘repercussions for China’ or a realignment of the supply system in which some American manufacturers rely on Chinese labor or raw materials, Trump suggested he was open to the idea. ...[He claimed] China could have stopped all spread beyond the Wuhan area but deliberately chose not to do so.”

The president keeps making promises he can't keep.

“Day after day, many of the president’s boldest pronouncements at the White House have failed to materialize as quickly as he has promised or turned out to be more complicated than he has suggested. The upshot, Trump’s critics said, is that he has contributed to widespread confusion and uncertainty among the public he is attempting to reassure,” David Nakamura reports. “Asked Thursday about the gap between his rhetoric on testing and the pleas from hospitals across the nation that testing is severely lagging, Trump failed to come up with a cogent explanation. ‘Well, I can’t — I cannot explain the gap,’ he replied.”

A drugmaker doubled the price of a potential coronavirus treatment touted by Trump.

“Rising Pharmaceuticals, a New Jersey based company, increased the price of chloroquine — an antimalarial, which is one of the drugs that is being tested against Covid-19 — on January 23. ... The drug price rose 97.86 per cent to $7.66 per 250mg pill and $19.88 per 500mg pill,” the Financial Times reports. “Rising said the price rise was ‘coincidental’ and it restored the old price once it realised that the drug might be in demand because of the outbreak. ... Trump said on Thursday that the [FDA] had approved chloroquine for the treatment of Covid-19 — but the FDA commissioner contradicted him, saying the regulator was simply taking a closer look at the drug. The drug is already approved for treating malaria. There is no solid evidence that chloroquine improves the condition of coronavirus patients. But there are several trials under way and the drug is being used on a ‘compassionate use’ basis in some countries.”

A change in U.S. law makes millions more masks available to doctors.

“New legislation signed Wednesday provides manufacturers of N95 face masks protection against lawsuits when selling certain masks to healthcare workers, [Vice President] Pence said. That will free producers including 3M and Honeywell to sell tens of millions more masks per month to hospitals,” Jeanne Whalen reports. “Those figures are still well short of the [estimated] 3.5 billion N95 respirator masks the U.S. could need in a serious pandemic.”

The shortage of testing kits amplifies inequities in our health-care system.

“Actors, politicians and athletes have had quick and easy access to coronavirus tests while other Americans — including front-line health-care workers and those with obvious signs of infection — have been out of luck,” Juliet Eilperin and Ben Golliver report. “Asked Wednesday if the rich and powerful should have easier access to coronavirus testing than the general public, President Trump replied, ‘No, I wouldn’t say so, but perhaps that’s been the story of life.’ ... On the same day that Utah Jazz player Rudy Gobert fell ill in Oklahoma and was tested for the coronavirus this month, a female paramedic lay in a Tulsa hospital bed a little more than a hundred miles away, unable to obtain a test. ... Her doctors did not receive approval to get her tested until March 12 and had to wait two more days for the result. ... At least two individuals treating the patient are now in quarantine ... out of concern that they may not have been wearing proper protective gear before she was diagnosed.

“Joshua Sharfstein, a public health expert at Johns Hopkins and former FDA official under President Barack Obama, said that widespread testing for the general public is at least ‘a couple weeks away.’ Generally, he said that tests should be administered based on the severity of symptoms. The government’s lack of an ‘organized response to testing’ has made that difficult, if not impossible, to implement nationally, and set up institutions such as the National Basketball Association for criticism.”

---

The cascading domestic fallout

Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) ordered all Californians to stay home.

“The mandatory order allows Californians to continue to visit gas stations, pharmacies, grocery stores, farmers markets, food banks, convenience stores, takeout and delivery restaurants, banks and laundromats. ... It exempts workers in 16 federal critical infrastructure sectors, including food and agriculture, healthcare, transportation, energy, financial services, emergency response and others,” the Los Angeles Times reports.

Other states extended their shutdowns.

Illinois reported three more coronavirus deaths. Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot (D) extended school closures through at least April 20, per the Sun-Times. Non-life-sustaining businesses were ordered to close their physical locations in Pennsylvania, per the CBS Philly affiliate. The Texas Tribune reports that Gov. Greg Abbott (R) closed bars, restaurants and schools. Abbott estimated the number of Texas cases will skyrocket to the tens of thousands over two weeks. Florida authorities are shutting down bars, nightclubs, beaches and parks in an attempt to keep raucous spring breakers away from the state's aging population, Anthony Faiola, Souad Mekhennet, Terry Strickland and Lori Rozsa report. A 34-year-old man died in California days after visiting Disney World in Orlando, Fox 11 reports.

The National Guard anticipates tens of thousands of its troops will be mobilized.

More than 2,000 members of the National Guard have been activated across 27 states, but the Pentagon expects that to double by the weekend and then mushroom from there, said Air Force Gen. Joseph L. Lengyel, chief of the National Guard Bureau. Members of the National Guard have distributed food in the epicenter of New York's outbreak, collected samples for virus testing in Florida and delivered a half-million test kits in Tennessee. Other roles will include supporting state health agencies and various logistical missions. (Alex Horton)

The Department of Veterans Affairs is preparing to deploy 3,000 medical personnel to bolster the effort to combat the virus, VA Secretary Robert Wilkie told Politico.

D.C. saw its highest single-day increase in cases as the region's total rose to 274.

"Maryland added 22 cases Thursday, bringing the state's total to 108. Virginia reported 17 more cases Thursday, for a total of 94. The District reported 32 new patients Thursday evening, its highest single-day increase, for a total of 72," Dan Hedgpeth and Rachel Chason report. "Metro Transit police closed two rail stations at 5 p.m. Thursday to discourage crowds from filling Metro cars and gathering in groups to view the cherry blossoms at the Tidal Basin in the District."

- New York state reported more than 5,200 cases, up from 3,000 on Wednesday, as testing capacity increased. At least 29 people have died in the Empire State. (NYT)

- Four NBA teams, including the Lakers and the Celtics, said members of their organizations tested positive for the virus. (Ben Golliver)
  - Bank of America will let borrowers pause their mortgage payments during the virus on a “case by case” basis. The payments will be added to the end of their loans. (Housingwire)
  - Saints coach Sean Payton tested positive. (Mark Maske)
  - FAA administrator Steve Dickson is self-quarantine after interacting with Rep. Mario Diaz-Balart (R-Fla.), who tested positive earlier this week. (Michael Laris)
  - After shutting some national parks over coronavirus, the Trump administration waived entrance fees at many others. (Darryl Fears)
  - Despite dire warnings, some coronavirus deniers and hoaxers continue claiming the pandemic is just “mass hysteria.” (Annie Gowen)
-

The global impact of the pandemic

South Asia, home to nearly 2 billion people, could be the next hot spot.

Experts fear that India and its neighbors may be at the start of the deadly curve seen elsewhere in the world, Joanna Slater and Niha Masih report.

- The State Department warned all Americans not to travel abroad and advised those abroad to either return immediately or prepare to remain in place indefinitely. (John Hudson)
  - Trump canceled the Group of 7 meeting scheduled to be held in June at Camp David. He will hold a video conference instead with foreign leaders, per Reuters. But NATO is still holding meetings in Brussels, Michael Birnbaum reports.
  - Israel is using cellphone surveillance to warn its citizens they may already be infected. (Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash)
  - The Japanese Olympic Committee broke with the International Olympic Committee and called for the postponement of the Tokyo Games. The IOC is “putting athletes at risk” by sticking to the schedule, said Kaori Yamaguchi. (Des Bieler)
  - Hong Kong reported a record jump in new cases, as the region braces for an uptick in illness involving travelers who rushed back home to beat widening travel restrictions. (Siobhán O’Grady)
  - China recorded no new local cases for the second day in a row. All 39 cases reported this morning were imported from abroad, officials claimed. (Siobhán O’Grady and Lyric Li)
  - The British food supply is starting to show strains. (FT)
  - Jordan will seal off entrances to its capital. (China.org)
  - Secretary of State Mike Pompeo urged Venezuela to release six imprisoned oil executives as the virus spreads there. (Carol Morello)
  - An Italian poet published his phone number on social media for anyone to call if they needed to chat with someone. More than 100 calls have come in from all across the country. (Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli)
-

Other developments that should be on your radar

Spring 2020: U.S. Flood Outlook

NOAA released this forecast for the spring. (AP)

A third of the U.S. is at risk of flooding this spring.

“The Northern Plains and Upper Midwest are forecast to be most at risk, but flooding concerns stretch along the entire Mississippi River, [according to the National Weather Service]. As spring rains increase and snowmelt to the north surges into river basins, a number of rivers and streams may overflow their banks and inundate nearby land,” Matthew Cappucci reports. “Particularly vulnerable this season is the Deep South, where many cities have already had close to 30 inches of rain since the start of the year and soils are saturated.”

The acting director of the National Counterterrorism Center was fired.

Russell Travers was removed “in what insiders fear is a purge by the Trump administration of career professionals at an organization set up after 9/11 to protect the nation from further attacks,” Ellen Nakashima reports. “Travers, a highly regarded intelligence professional with more than 40 years of government service, told colleagues he was fired by acting director of national intelligence Richard Grenell. ... Also removed at the NCTC was Travers’s acting deputy, Peter W. Hall, who is returning to the National Security Agency.”

Tulsi Gabbard dropped out of the presidential race and endorsed Biden.

The retiring Hawaii congresswoman gained little mainstream Democratic support but gained traction with some on the far left and the far right. In a video message, she said she “may not agree” with the former vice president on every issue, but said she believes he can “help heal the divisiveness that has been tearing our country apart.” Gabbard endorsed Bernie Sanders in 2016, Amy Wang and Felicia Sonmez note. Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.), another former presidential candidate who ripped Biden during a debate last year, also backed Biden's candidacy. She expressed openness to being his No. 2 in an interview with Annie Linskey.

---

Social media speed read

The Olympic torch, which used hydrogen for the first time in order to be more environmentally friendly, made its way to Japan:

Olympics ✓

@Olympics

As the Olympic Flame reaches Tokyo: President Thomas Bach: "while we do not know how long the tunnel we are all in at this moment will be, we would like the Olympic Flame to be a light at the end of this tunnel."

@tokyo2020 #Olympics

♥ 51 9:20 AM - Mar 20, 2020

💬 25 people are talking about this

Two doctors shared an important message:

Carly Bliss
@carlymaybliss

A powerful message 🍃 #ActuallyStayHome

♥ 25.2K 12:04 AM - Mar 19, 2020

🗨 11K people are talking about this

The Border Patrol chief shared an image of detained migrants wearing masks:

Chief Rodney Scott ✓

@USBPChief

Masks On!

It's our current reality and a huge concern for all. Smugglers don't care who or what they smuggle into the US. We do, and are doing everything we can to slow the spread of #COVID19 along our borders. #slowthespread #maskson

♥ 1,123 9:26 PM - Mar 19, 2020

💬 745 people are talking about this

And here's a Trump tweet from six years ago today:

Videos of the day

Samantha Bee is trying to make it through the quarantine without attacking her spouse:

Bernie Sanders is spending the quarantine playing with his grandson:

Cody Buege

@codybuege

Tell me Bernie Sanders pretending to be a scary monster to his grandson is not the cutest thing you ever did see (during a quarantine)

5,015 4:20 PM - Mar 18, 2020

894 people are talking about this

And a resourceful man in Cyprus had a drone walk his dog:

Vakis Demetriou

Copy Link

5th day quarantine.
Stay Home Safe but don't forget your dog happiness..

👍 1.9K    💬 2.8K    ➦ 26K

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Simulations before coronavirus foreshadowed infighting between agencies in pandemic response
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 7:41:19 AM

COMMITTED TO
AFFORDABLE CARE
FOR THE HEALTH OF AMERICA<sup>SM</sup>

BlueCross
BlueShield
Association

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Simulations before coronavirus foreshadowed infighting between agencies in pandemic response

Before Sept. 11, 2001, government planners had not considered the possibility that hijackers would fly commercial airplanes into the Pentagon and World Trade Center. There was no such failure of imagination ahead of this pandemic. Experts have not just warned for years about the inevitability of an outbreak like the novel coronavirus on American soil. They have also sounded the alarm about the risk of the kind of poor coordination between federal and local agencies that has characterized the initial U.S. response to covid-19.

A simulation called “Crimson Contagion,” organized by a Trump-appointed assistant secretary at the Department of Health and Human Services from January to August in 2019, envisioned a respiratory virus beginning in China and infecting 110 million Americans, hospitalizing 7.7 million and killing 586,000. At least a dozen agencies, and another dozen states, were involved in the war-game-style exercise. A draft of the secret after-action report from October, first published Thursday by the New York Times, emphasized challenges related to coordination and highlighted friction between HHS and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Chunks of the 63-page report could easily be cross-applied to describe the dropped balls and mixed messages related to the coronavirus response over the last three months. Consider these bullets from the executive summary: “Exercise participants lacked clarity on federal interagency partners' roles and responsibilities during an influenza pandemic response. ... Confusion regarding the purpose of and target audience for national conference calls hampered coordination among state and federal response partners. ... At times, HHS' Operating Divisions and Staff Divisions provided inconsistent and inaccurate response guidance and actions to healthcare and public health private sector partners. ...

“HHS and DHS/FEMA’s use of disparate information management systems hampered their ability to establish and maintain a national common operating picture. Both HHS and DHS/FEMA submitted senior leader briefs to the White House National Security Council during the exercise, which caused confusion regarding the official source of senior leader briefs. ... State, local, tribal, and territorial partners were unclear on the kinds of information they needed to provide ... HHS' regional staff lack clear guidance on the distribution of federal information management products to state and local partners. ... Inconsistent use of terminology regarding vaccine types and stockpiles caused confusion among response partners at all levels of government.”

President Trump appears Thursday with members of his coronavirus task force in the White House briefing room. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

The Times also posted a 73-page report from July 2016 on lessons learned from the Ebola outbreak that highlighted the need to improve coordination between agencies. Christopher Kirchhoff, who transferred from the Pentagon to the White House to deal with Ebola, wrote that “the most defining event in the domestic management of Ebola” happened when Liberian citizen Thomas Duncan tested positive in Dallas in September 2014. He said that this “revealed gaps” in the federal government’s approach to domestic containment of viruses, especially involving the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

“During such incidents, clarity of Federal roles and responsibilities and coordination across the Federal interagency are paramount. Little of this was present in Dallas,” Kirchhoff wrote. “Some had an expectation that CDC was going to help with healthcare delivery, yet healthcare delivery is not a function of CDC. CDC’s initial forward deployed team was built against a set of technical health requirements and was not equipped to manage the conflicts that developed between the hospital, state, and local authorities. ... The CDC also was not equipped, and did not have clear authority, to perform incident command without being requested to do so by the state of Texas. The peculiarities of the local political environment meant that Dallas county and the state of Texas each set up parallel incident command structures that issued conflicting guidance, further confusing command and control.”

As it relates to the coronavirus, a stream of fresh revelations underscores early mistakes and failures to appropriately coordinate among and between federal and local public health officials. Early efforts to ramp up testing by the CDC were particularly abysmal. The first cases in the United States and South Korea were detected on the very same day, Reuters notes. By late January, though, Seoul had medical companies starting to work on a diagnostic test, and one was approved a week later. Today, Washington is still nowhere close to meeting demand for the tests.

“While the virus was quietly spreading within the U.S., the CDC had told state and local officials its ‘testing capacity is more than adequate to meet current testing demands,’ according to a Feb. 26 agency email,” the Wall Street Journal reports. “The agency’s data show it tested fewer than 100 patients that day. ... CDC officials botched an initial test kit developed in an agency lab, retracting many tests. They resisted calls from state officials and medical providers to broaden testing, and health officials failed to coordinate with outside companies to ensure needed test-kit supplies, such as nasal swabs and chemical reagents, would be available ... When the Food and Drug Administration, also involved in the response, finally opened testing to more outside labs, a run on limited stocks of some supplies needed for the CDC-developed test quickly depleted stores. ... Hospital and commercial lab operators said the government didn't reach out to enlist their help until it was too late."

The United States has more than 14,200 confirmed cases of the coronavirus and 159 reported deaths. Both numbers are expected to grow rapidly in the coming days. More than 240,000 coronavirus cases have been confirmed globally. The World Health Organization notes that it took three months to reach 100,000 —but only 12 days to reach the next 100,000.

FDA Commissioner Stephen Hahn whispers to Vice President Pence as President Trump speaks to reporters on Thursday. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Addressing the need for more affordable medicines

Americans pay too much for prescription drugs. Even generics can be too expensive. So we're investing in a non-profit company to produce the drugs people need at a price they can afford. Learn more.

---

“When the coronavirus passed within a handshake of the president, no public health agency took charge,” Aaron Davis and Erin Cox report. “On March 8, a day after the New Jersey doctor’s positive test result was announced and as the extent of the doctor’s contacts at [the Conservative Political Action Conference] were becoming clear, officials said public health workers had begun to locate and notify conference attendees. The [CDC] ‘confirmed his attendance and is working with CPAC to notify all the attendees,’ New Jersey Health Commissioner Judith Persichilli told reporters. In truth, no such effort was undertaken by the CDC, New Jersey or Maryland, according to officials in both states and with the CDC, who pointed to one another as the responsible party. They did not publicize the name of the doctor. ...

“Alerted by the doctor himself, political operatives who organized the conference undertook the responsibility themselves, attempting to identify attendees who might have been at risk. In a process that took days, CPAC organizers pieced together his movements, learning belatedly that he had attended a crowded kickoff event. They also persuaded the doctor to review photos on his iPhone he had taken from the event, ... including a photo the doctor had taken with

Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla). By the time they alerted Gaetz, he was on Air Force One with the president after having spent two days at Trump's Mar-a-Lago resort with members of the first family. Ultimately, the organizers notified close to 100 attendees, according to Matt Schlapp, chairman of the American Conservative Union, the lobbying group that puts on CPAC. On Tuesday, D.C. officials announced that another man who had attended the conference, a 23-year-old District resident, had also tested positive. ...

“The approach stands in stark contrast to aggressive actions taken by some countries that slowed the spread of the virus in its early days. In Singapore, for instance, public health officials not only interviewed the sick but also obtained patients' travel itineraries and used security camera footage to track their movements to help identify every person possible with whom they had incidental contact.”

The CDC now appears to have been sidelined, with its messages increasingly disrupted or overtaken by the White House. Despite the early mistakes, this is still the country's leading public health agency. “Neither CDC Director Robert Redfield nor Anne Schuchat — the principal deputy director who has played key roles in the agency's emergency responses stretching back two decades, including the 2009 influenza pandemic — have appeared on the podium during White House briefings by the coronavirus task force for more than a week,” Lena Sun reports.

“The CDC has not conducted its own telephone briefings for reporters in more than a week. Recent CDC recommendations on school closures and mass gatherings were overtaken by different guidelines issued by the coronavirus task force, creating confusion. ... The CDC has not conducted a briefing since March 9. ... Katie Miller, a spokeswoman for Pence, who took over the task force from Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar late last month, said Redfield has been joining daily task force meetings.

“Azar has blamed Redfield for the testing fiasco, several senior administration officials said, although some White House officials contend the blame is misplaced. Redfield is also not viewed as a strong public speaker by experts inside and outside the agency; he has had to issue corrections to misstatements in recent testimony before Congress. Ever since Pence’s team took over the response, they have treated the outbreak as a public relations crisis as much as a public health crisis and have tightly managed communications of top health and administration officials, officials have said.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

Better understanding the virus

Scientific models offer two insights on what's next.

“In the worst-case scenario, America is on a trajectory toward 1.1 million deaths. ... If Americans embrace drastic restrictions, ... we could see a death toll closer to the thousands and breathe a national sigh of relief as we prepare for a grueling but surmountable road ahead,” William Wan, Joel Achenbach, Carolyn Johnson and Ben Guarino report. “Doing that will require Americans to ‘flatten the curve’ — slowing the spread of the contagion so it doesn’t overwhelm a health-care system with finite resources. That phrase has become ubiquitous in our national conversation. But what experts have not always made clear is that by applying all that downward pressure on the curve — by canceling public gatherings, closing schools, quarantining the sick and enforcing social distancing — you elongate the curve, stretching it out over a longer period of time. Success means a longer — though less catastrophic — fight against the coronavirus. And it is unclear whether Americans — who built this country on ideals of independence and individual rights — would be willing to endure such harsh restrictions on their lives for months, let alone for a year or more.

“Here is another thing that hasn’t been spelled out in our national conversation about flattening the curve: There will probably be more than one curve. If we’re lucky, the coming months will probably look less like a mountain and more like a string of bumpy hills, say epidemiologists. But if authorities ease some measures in coming months or if we start letting them slip ourselves, that hill could easily turn right back into the exponential curve that has cratered Italy’s health system and that U.S. officials are desperately trying to avoid replicating.”

Suppression scenarios

Models from researchers at Imperial College London suggest that wide adoption of measures to reduce the transmission of the novel coronavirus can reduce the demand for critical health-care services, in part by spreading the demand over a longer period. The major challenge is that those measures will need to be maintained until a vaccine becomes available, or transmission will quickly rebound.

Source: Imperial College London

TIM MEKO/THE WASHINGTON POST

Why is the coronavirus killing vastly more men than women?

“Nowhere is this trend more pronounced than in Italy. Men make up nearly 60 percent of people with confirmed cases of the virus and more than 70 percent of those who have died,” Chris Mooney, Sarah Kaplan and Min Joo Kim report. “A study of 99 patients at a hospital in Wuhan, where the virus originated, found that men made up two-thirds of patients. ... More recent figures from China’s Center for Disease Control, based on tens of thousands of cases, showed a strong gender breakdown of deaths, which were 64 percent male. ... The gendered death gap was also seen in the smaller SARS and MERS outbreaks. ...

“These statistics could be a product of behavior, biology or both, scientists say. For one thing, demographic figures suggest many men have more health risks to begin with. ... Women tend to live longer than men. ... Men also drink and smoke more. ... But there are also underlying biological differences between men and women that may make covid-19 worse in men. ... Years of research have found that women generally have stronger immune systems than men and are better able to fend off infections. The X chromosome contains a large number of immune-related genes, and because women have two of them, they gain an advantage in fighting disease. ... Studies have also found that estrogen was protective in female mice infected with the virus that caused the 2003 SARS outbreak.”

Rural areas may be more vulnerable than urban centers.

“Biostatistician and infectious disease specialist Nicholas Reich from the University of Massachusetts is participating in the White House Coronavirus Task Force modeling efforts. He said the death rates from flu for people over 50 could be a good indicator of vulnerability for covid-19, though they are ‘probably not a perfect measure but a good place to start,’” Dan Keating and Laris Karklis report. “The push for social distancing and isolation make dense crowds and public transportation in big cities seem like the deadliest environment. The pattern of flu deaths over the past five years, however, shows that big metro areas are not hot spots for high flu death rates.

“Most of the deaths are among the large population in big cities, but the risk for any individual person goes up dramatically where homes are sparse. Very rural areas have a 60 percent higher death rate from flu than the big metro areas, according to analysis of CDC death records. Collectively, the 68 most rural counties of Kansas, for instance, have nearly 14 deaths per 100,000 people age 50 or older, well over double the rate for the county around Topeka (6.6), the state capital. And the rate around New York City (3.4) is around half of that.

“The higher rates in remote areas may be due to difficulty getting health care. Rural residents have greater travel distances for more limited resources. ... Flu mortality is very notable for low rates in the warmest states: California and the belt of states from Arizona to Florida. But as Reich said, the flu is not a perfect predictor for covid-19. It’s not known if warm weather will provide protection against the new coronavirus the way it does with the standard flu.”

---

The congressional response

Sen. Richard Burr (R-N.C.) enters a closed-door briefing on the coronavirus at the Capitol on Feb. 25. (Mark Wilson/Getty Images)

Senate Republicans unveiled their draft stimulus bill.

“The legislation would provide checks of $1,200 per adult for many families, as well as $500 for every child in those families,” Jeff Stein, Mike DeBonis, Erica Werner and Paul Kane report. “Families filing jointly would receive up to $2,400 for the adults. The size of the checks would diminish for those earning more than $75,000 and phase out completely for those earning more than $99,000. The poorest families, those with no federal income tax liability, would see smaller benefits, though the minimum would be set at $600. Limiting the payment amount for those without federal tax liability was a change from the original White House proposal, and caught some Republicans off-guard, provoking criticism. ... An early analysis showed the vast majority of middle class people would receive the cash payment, but the percentage doing so falls dramatically toward the bottom of the income distribution. About 22 million people earning under $40,000 a year would see no benefit under the GOP plan, according to an initial analysis by Ernie Tedeschi, a former Obama administration economist. ...

“Democrats were working on their own proposals, which shun corporate loan programs being included by Republicans — such as $50 billion for airlines — suggesting that there will be difficulty in reaching bipartisan agreement. ... The bill also outlines in greater detail the terms for receiving targeted federal help from the federal government, as proposed earlier by the Trump administration. The legislation includes $50 billion in ‘loans and loan guarantees’ for passenger airlines; $8 billion for ‘cargo air carriers’; and $150 billion for other ‘eligible businesses,’ a category administration officials have suggested could include the hotel and cruise industries. The legislation appears to give the Treasury Department wide authority in determining which businesses qualify for this $150 billion fund.”

GOP senators are under fire for dumping stocks before markets tanked.

“Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr (R-N.C.), who had expressed confidence in the country’s preparedness for the coronavirus outbreak, sold a significant share of his stocks last month,” Michelle Ye Hee Lee, John Wagner and Teo Armus report. “The sales included stocks in some of the industries that have been hardest hit by the global pandemic, including hotels and restaurants, shipping, drug manufacturing, and health care. ... Burr reportedly was receiving daily briefings on the threat of the virus. In mid-February, he sold 33 stocks held by him and his spouse, estimated at between $628,033 and $1.72 million. ... It was the largest number of stocks he had sold in one day since at least 2016, records show. ...

“Then, at a Feb. 27 luncheon, Burr compared the potential impact of the novel coronavirus to the deadly 1918 flu pandemic. His remarks at the private event were obtained by NPR and aired Thursday. His remarks prompted scrutiny over whether Burr had offered a more frank warning at a Capitol Hill event sponsored by North Carolina business leaders than he and his colleagues were sharing more broadly. ... Burr’s office declined to answer specific questions about his stock sales. About a week after those sales, the stock market sharply declined. ... Insider trading prohibitions apply to all members of Congress, congressional staff and other federal officials, under the Stop Trading on Congressional Knowledge (STOCK) Act of 2012. Burr was among three senators who voted against the legislation at the time.”

Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-Ga.) also dumped millions in stock after being briefed on the virus. In fact, she reported the first sale of stock jointly owned with her husband on Jan. 24, the very day that the Senate Health Committee she sits on hosted a private, all-senators briefing from administration officials, the Daily Beast reports. She shared a picture of herself in the briefing on social media. “One of Loeffler’s two purchases was stock worth between $100,000 and $250,000 in Citrix, a technology company that offers teleworking software and which has seen a small bump in its stock price since Loeffler bought in as a result of coronavirus-induced market turmoil.” Loeffler is the wealthiest member of Congress. The Atlanta businesswoman, whose husband is the chairman and CEO of the New York Stock Exchange, is worth an estimated $500 million.

Loeffler said she does not make investment decisions for her portfolio. “Investment decisions are made by multiple third-party advisors without my or my husband's knowledge or involvement,” she tweeted.

And Sen. Jim Inhofe (R-Okla.) sold as much as $400,000 in stock on Jan. 27, including holdings in PayPal, Apple and Brookfield Asset Management, a real estate company, per the Times.

Quote of the day

“Maybe there’s an honest explanation for what he did. If there is, he should share it with the rest of us immediately. Otherwise, he must resign from the Senate and face prosecution for insider trading,” Fox News host Tucker Carlson said of Burr's stock sales. “There is no greater moral crime than betraying your country in a time of crisis. That appears to be what happened.”

Meanwhile, with her eyes possibly on 2024, Nikki Haley quit the Boeing board. The former ambassador to the United Nations and ex-South Carolina governor, widely believed to harbor presidential ambitions, said she disagreed with the company’s request for a federal bailout. She wrote an open letter to Boeing’s chief executive arguing it's not the federal government’s role to give financial assistance to some companies and industries and not others. (Douglas MacMillan)

Members of Congress are rethinking the tradition-shattering idea of voting remotely. “Someone needs to devise a very secure way of remote voting, with fingerprints or facial recognition,” said Rep. Susan Wild (D-Pa.). “I hate the idea, because I think our face-to-face contact is so important, but it’s inevitable.” (Rachael Bade and Mike DeBonis)

---

Trump’s response

A close-up of Trump’s notes shows where “Corona” was crossed out in Sharpie and replaced with “Chinese.” (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post)

Trump took direct aim at China for allowing the spread of the virus.

“The president dug in on his use of the term ‘Chinese virus’ to describe the novel coronavirus that was first detected in Wuhan, China, late last year and did not rule out directing economic retaliation toward Beijing,” Anne Gearan reports. “Asked whether he is considering ‘repercussions for China’ or a realignment of the supply system in which some American manufacturers rely on Chinese labor or raw materials, Trump suggested he was open to the idea. ...[He claimed] China could have stopped all spread beyond the Wuhan area but deliberately chose not to do so.”

The president keeps making promises he can't keep.

“Day after day, many of the president’s boldest pronouncements at the White House have failed to materialize as quickly as he has promised or turned out to be more complicated than he has suggested. The upshot, Trump’s critics said, is that he has contributed to widespread confusion and uncertainty among the public he is attempting to reassure,” David Nakamura reports. “Asked Thursday about the gap between his rhetoric on testing and the pleas from hospitals across the nation that testing is severely lagging, Trump failed to come up with a cogent explanation. ‘Well, I can’t — I cannot explain the gap,’ he replied.”

A drugmaker doubled the price of a potential coronavirus treatment touted by Trump.

“Rising Pharmaceuticals, a New Jersey based company, increased the price of chloroquine — an antimalarial, which is one of the drugs that is being tested against Covid-19 — on January 23. ... The drug price rose 97.86 per cent to $7.66 per 250mg pill and $19.88 per 500mg pill,” the Financial Times reports. “Rising said the price rise was ‘coincidental’ and it restored the old price once it realised that the drug might be in demand because of the outbreak. ... Trump said on Thursday that the [FDA] had approved chloroquine for the treatment of Covid-19 — but the FDA commissioner contradicted him, saying the regulator was simply taking a closer look at the drug. The drug is already approved for treating malaria. There is no solid evidence that chloroquine improves the condition of coronavirus patients. But there are several trials under way and the drug is being used on a ‘compassionate use’ basis in some countries.”

A change in U.S. law makes millions more masks available to doctors.

“New legislation signed Wednesday provides manufacturers of N95 face masks protection against lawsuits when selling certain masks to healthcare workers, [Vice President] Pence said. That will free producers including 3M and Honeywell to sell tens of millions more masks per month to hospitals,” Jeanne Whalen reports. “Those figures are still well short of the [estimated] 3.5 billion N95 respirator masks the U.S. could need in a serious pandemic.”

The shortage of testing kits amplifies inequities in our health-care system.

“Actors, politicians and athletes have had quick and easy access to coronavirus tests while other Americans — including front-line health-care workers and those with obvious signs of infection — have been out of luck,” Juliet Eilperin and Ben Golliver report. “Asked Wednesday if the rich and powerful should have easier access to coronavirus testing than the general public, President Trump replied, ‘No, I wouldn’t say so, but perhaps that’s been the story of life.’ ... On the same day that Utah Jazz player Rudy Gobert fell ill in Oklahoma and was tested for the coronavirus this month, a female paramedic lay in a Tulsa hospital bed a little more than a hundred miles away, unable to obtain a test. ... Her doctors did not receive approval to get her tested until March 12 and had to wait two more days for the result. ... At least two individuals treating the patient are now in quarantine ... out of concern that they may not have been wearing proper protective gear before she was diagnosed.

“Joshua Sharfstein, a public health expert at Johns Hopkins and former FDA official under President Barack Obama, said that widespread testing for the general public is at least ‘a couple weeks away.’ Generally, he said that tests should be administered based on the severity of symptoms. The government’s lack of an ‘organized response to testing’ has made that difficult, if not impossible, to implement nationally, and set up institutions such as the National Basketball Association for criticism.”

---

The cascading domestic fallout

Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) ordered all Californians to stay home.

“The mandatory order allows Californians to continue to visit gas stations, pharmacies, grocery stores, farmers markets, food banks, convenience stores, takeout and delivery restaurants, banks and laundromats. ... It exempts workers in 16 federal critical infrastructure sectors, including food and agriculture, healthcare, transportation, energy, financial services, emergency response and others,” the Los Angeles Times reports.

Other states extended their shutdowns.

Illinois reported three more coronavirus deaths. Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot (D) extended school closures through at least April 20, per the Sun-Times. Non-life-sustaining businesses were ordered to close their physical locations in Pennsylvania, per the CBS Philly affiliate. The Texas Tribune reports that Gov. Greg Abbott (R) closed bars, restaurants and schools. Abbott estimated the number of Texas cases will skyrocket to the tens of thousands over two weeks. Florida authorities are shutting down bars, nightclubs, beaches and parks in an attempt to keep raucous spring breakers away from the state's aging population, Anthony Faiola, Souad Mekhennet, Terry Strickland and Lori Rozsa report. A 34-year-old man died in California days after visiting Disney World in Orlando, Fox 11 reports.

The National Guard anticipates tens of thousands of its troops will be mobilized.

More than 2,000 members of the National Guard have been activated across 27 states, but the Pentagon expects that to double by the weekend and then mushroom from there, said Air Force Gen. Joseph L. Lengyel, chief of the National Guard Bureau. Members of the National Guard have distributed food in the epicenter of New York's outbreak, collected samples for virus testing in Florida and delivered a half-million test kits in Tennessee. Other roles will include supporting state health agencies and various logistical missions. (Alex Horton)

The Department of Veterans Affairs is preparing to deploy 3,000 medical personnel to bolster the effort to combat the virus, VA Secretary Robert Wilkie told Politico.

D.C. saw its highest single-day increase in cases as the region's total rose to 274.

"Maryland added 22 cases Thursday, bringing the state's total to 108. Virginia reported 17 more cases Thursday, for a total of 94. The District reported 32 new patients Thursday evening, its highest single-day increase, for a total of 72," Dan Hedgpeth and Rachel Chason report. "Metro Transit police closed two rail stations at 5 p.m. Thursday to discourage crowds from filling Metro cars and gathering in groups to view the cherry blossoms at the Tidal Basin in the District."

- New York state reported more than 5,200 cases, up from 3,000 on Wednesday, as testing capacity increased. At least 29 people have died in the Empire State. (NYT)

- Four NBA teams, including the Lakers and the Celtics, said members of their organizations tested positive for the virus. (Ben Golliver)
  - Bank of America will let borrowers pause their mortgage payments during the virus on a “case by case” basis. The payments will be added to the end of their loans. (Housingwire)
  - Saints coach Sean Payton tested positive. (Mark Maske)
  - FAA administrator Steve Dickson is self-quarantine after interacting with Rep. Mario Diaz-Balart (R-Fla.), who tested positive earlier this week. (Michael Laris)
  - After shutting some national parks over coronavirus, the Trump administration waived entrance fees at many others. (Darryl Fears)
  - Despite dire warnings, some coronavirus deniers and hoaxers continue claiming the pandemic is just “mass hysteria.” (Annie Gowen)
-

The global impact of the pandemic

South Asia, home to nearly 2 billion people, could be the next hot spot.

Experts fear that India and its neighbors may be at the start of the deadly curve seen elsewhere in the world, Joanna Slater and Niha Masih report.

- The State Department warned all Americans not to travel abroad and advised those abroad to either return immediately or prepare to remain in place indefinitely. (John Hudson)
  - Trump canceled the Group of 7 meeting scheduled to be held in June at Camp David. He will hold a video conference instead with foreign leaders, per Reuters. But NATO is still holding meetings in Brussels, Michael Birnbaum reports.
  - Israel is using cellphone surveillance to warn its citizens they may already be infected. (Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash)
  - The Japanese Olympic Committee broke with the International Olympic Committee and called for the postponement of the Tokyo Games. The IOC is “putting athletes at risk” by sticking to the schedule, said Kaori Yamaguchi. (Des Bieler)
  - Hong Kong reported a record jump in new cases, as the region braces for an uptick in illness involving travelers who rushed back home to beat widening travel restrictions. (Siobhán O’Grady)
  - China recorded no new local cases for the second day in a row. All 39 cases reported this morning were imported from abroad, officials claimed. (Siobhán O’Grady and Lyric Li)
  - The British food supply is starting to show strains. (FT)
  - Jordan will seal off entrances to its capital. (China.org)
  - Secretary of State Mike Pompeo urged Venezuela to release six imprisoned oil executives as the virus spreads there. (Carol Morello)
  - An Italian poet published his phone number on social media for anyone to call if they needed to chat with someone. More than 100 calls have come in from all across the country. (Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli)
-

Other developments that should be on your radar

Spring 2020: U.S. Flood Outlook

NOAA released this forecast for the spring. (AP)

A third of the U.S. is at risk of flooding this spring.

“The Northern Plains and Upper Midwest are forecast to be most at risk, but flooding concerns stretch along the entire Mississippi River, [according to the National Weather Service]. As spring rains increase and snowmelt to the north surges into river basins, a number of rivers and streams may overflow their banks and inundate nearby land,” Matthew Cappucci reports. “Particularly vulnerable this season is the Deep South, where many cities have already had close to 30 inches of rain since the start of the year and soils are saturated.”

The acting director of the National Counterterrorism Center was fired.

Russell Travers was removed “in what insiders fear is a purge by the Trump administration of career professionals at an organization set up after 9/11 to protect the nation from further attacks,” Ellen Nakashima reports. “Travers, a highly regarded intelligence professional with more than 40 years of government service, told colleagues he was fired by acting director of national intelligence Richard Grenell. ... Also removed at the NCTC was Travers’s acting deputy, Peter W. Hall, who is returning to the National Security Agency.”

Tulsi Gabbard dropped out of the presidential race and endorsed Biden.

The retiring Hawaii congresswoman gained little mainstream Democratic support but gained traction with some on the far left and the far right. In a video message, she said she “may not agree” with the former vice president on every issue, but said she believes he can “help heal the divisiveness that has been tearing our country apart.” Gabbard endorsed Bernie Sanders in 2016, Amy Wang and Felicia Sonmez note. Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.), another former presidential candidate who ripped Biden during a debate last year, also backed Biden's candidacy. She expressed openness to being his No. 2 in an interview with Annie Linskey.

---

Social media speed read

The Olympic torch, which used hydrogen for the first time in order to be more environmentally friendly, made its way to Japan:

Olympics ✓

@Olympics

As the Olympic Flame reaches Tokyo: President Thomas Bach: "while we do not know how long the tunnel we are all in at this moment will be, we would like the Olympic Flame to be a light at the end of this tunnel."

@tokyo2020 #Olympics

♥ 51 9:20 AM - Mar 20, 2020

💬 25 people are talking about this

Two doctors shared an important message:

Carly Bliss
@carlymaybliss

A powerful message 🍃 #ActuallyStayHome

♥ 25.2K 12:04 AM - Mar 19, 2020

🗨 11K people are talking about this

The Border Patrol chief shared an image of detained migrants wearing masks:

Chief Rodney Scott ✓

@USBPChief

Masks On!

It's our current reality and a huge concern for all. Smugglers don't care who or what they smuggle into the US. We do, and are doing everything we can to slow the spread of #COVID19 along our borders. #slowthespread #maskson

♥ 1,123 9:26 PM - Mar 19, 2020

💬 745 people are talking about this

And here's a Trump tweet from six years ago today:

Videos of the day

Samantha Bee is trying to make it through the quarantine without attacking her spouse:

Bernie Sanders is spending the quarantine playing with his grandson:

Cody Buege

@codybuege

Tell me Bernie Sanders pretending to be a scary monster to his grandson is not the cutest thing you ever did see (during a quarantine)

5,015 4:20 PM - Mar 18, 2020

894 people are talking about this

And a resourceful man in Cyprus had a drone walk his dog:

Vakis Demetriou

Copy Link

5th day quarantine.
Stay Home Safe but don't forget your dog happiness..

👍 1.9K    💬 2.8K    ➦ 26K

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Book Club: Bookstores fight to survive, and author events go online
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 7:50:10 AM

Hubbard Flights have landed.

Revolutionary comfort

SHOP NOW

SAMUEL
HUBBARD

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Book Club

Reviews and recommendations from critic Ron Charles.

By Ron Charles

Email

In compliance with the shelter-in-place order, Books Inc. in Campbell, Calif. has temporarily closed. Online orders will continue to ship for free. (Ron Charles/The Washington Post)

I know you've already received a coronavirus update from every business you've ever interacted with — including Potbelly Sandwich Shop and Roto-Rooter. But allow me to offer my own sober reflections. The concerns I raised last week about our literary culture are now fully realized: On Tuesday, the American Library Association “strongly recommended” that all libraries close. The ALA executive board issued a statement saying, “Libraries are by design unable to practice social distancing to the degree recommended by the CDC and other health authorities. Keeping libraries open at this time has the potential to harm communities more than help.” And the country’s indie bookstores are shutting their doors. Some, like Powell's in Portland and McNally Jackson in New York, are laying off staff for the duration. Many are trying to morph into phone-order and online booksellers, trying to compete against Amazon on Amazon’s own turf. In a single week, a great sea of red ink threatens to wash away more than a decade of bookseller growth. The irony couldn’t be more bitter: The characteristics that once helped indie bookstores succeed — close interaction with staff members, other readers and authors — are the very characteristics that now make them too dangerous to stay open (full story). I can’t emphasize this enough: Call your local indie and order a book — or 10. If you don’t have a store near you, shop on Bookshop.org, a website designed to support indie bookstores. Our choices over the next few weeks will make or break these small literary businesses. (Amazon CEO Jeff Bezos owns The Washington Post.)

---

Michael Signer (right) appears on the first Politics & Prose Live author webcast, March 17, 2020. (Courtesy of Politics & Prose Bookstore)

Now, for some encouraging news (Yes, that still exists):

- Indie bookstores are flipping the script and fighting back against oblivion by heading to the web with classes and readings. For instance, Politics & Prose here in Washington, is actively moving its vast calendar of author events to an online video platform. Tuesday evening, 125 people watched “live” as Michael Signer talked from his home office about “Cry Havoc: Charlottesville and American Democracy Under Siege.” Is it the same as being there in person? Well, no. There’s a reason BookTV is on C-SPAN2 instead of HBO. But the online format has some unique advantages: People anywhere in the world can now watch these author events whenever they want (video). And — I love this — viewers can actively “up vote” which of the submitted questions they’d like the author to answer. (In this brave new world, we may never again have to hear, “Could you tell us about your process?”)
- The Book Industry Charitable Foundation was started in 1996 to provide temporary financial assistance to bookstore employees in tough times, and needless to say, these are the toughest times Binc has ever faced. This week, the organization has been fielding several requests per hour. Binc executive director Pam French tells me booksellers are worried about being able to buy food, pay for medicine and even keep a roof over their heads. Fortunately, donors are responding aggressively. Beacon Press gave a matching grant of $5,000. HarperCollins gave $50,000. Authors Garth Stein, Tui Sutherland and Amor Towles will match donations up to $41,000. Come on, the rest of you big five publishers: This is your moment to step up and help save the ecosystem that sells your books. Act now, or you may soon have only One Large Retailer to deal with. (Donate here.)

- To facilitate distance learning and story hours, Penguin Random House is allowing teachers, librarians and booksellers to post and stream videos of its books being read aloud. Ordinarily, such unlicensed “performances” on the Web would violate copyright laws. PRH has a few rules, depending on the setting and the usage, but this is a generous offer. (Details here.)
  - Macmillan, one of the big five publishers, has abandoned its embargo on the sale of e-books to libraries. In effect since Nov. 1, that controversial policy, which forced libraries to wait eight weeks before buying duplicate copies — at much higher prices — had been condemned by librarians and politicians. On Tuesday, Macmillan CEO John Sargent issued a memo saying, “There are times in life when differences should be put aside.” What’s more, Sargent announced that his publishing house will also “be lowering some ebook prices on a short term basis to help expand libraries.” (Note that many shuttered libraries will continue to lend e-books via their websites.)
  - Cooped up at home all this time, you’re probably pining to hear some different voices by now. (No, dear, that’s not a criticism.) Yesterday, Audible.com launched Audible Stories, an online platform offering hundreds of free classic audiobooks — everything from “Winnie the Pooh” and “Alice in Wonderland” to “The Call of the Wild” and “Moby-Dick.” (Audible is a subsidiary of Amazon, whose CEO . . . you know the drill.)
-

ADVERTISEMENT

Simple Trick To Eliminate Dust

How this grandma turned her dusty house into a fresh air paradise without lifting a finger.

Here's how to magically eliminate dust...

While I write this, my wife and younger daughter are upstairs watching “Little Fires Everywhere.” The Hulu miniseries, which started streaming Wednesday, is an adaptation of Celeste Ng’s bestseller (review). Penguin Books just released a tie-in paperback edition with stars Reese Witherspoon and Kerry Washington smoldering on the cover. (Since it was published in 2017, “Little Fires Everywhere” has sold 2.1 million copies in all formats.) Washington Post TV critic Hank Stuever says the TV series “is pure metaphorical pyromania . . . as two strikingly different women melt a frosty politeness into poison, interfering in each other’s lives in a way that can’t help but combust” (review).

---

Percentage of U.S. adults who are digital/audio readers, print-only readers, and nonreaders: 2017

Notes: Digital/audio readers may have read books in print. Detail may not add to total due to rounding.
Source: National Endowment for the Arts, 2017 SPPA

The National Endowment for the Arts has issued a new report on how adults read in America. Based on data collected every four years, the report suggests that concerns about the long-term decline of reading may have been too pessimistic. Apparently, earlier studies didn't fully consider how much we like audio and digital books (full report). "When we account for adults who listen to audiobooks," the editors write, "the total number of adults who engage with books is more comparable to figures from previous years." Among the report's conclusions:

- More than half of all U.S. adults engage in some form of book-reading, whether via print or digital media, or listening to audiobooks. (But this slays me: More than 44 percent of us are "nonreaders.")
- Digital/audio readers now represent a larger share of adults than do print-only readers.
- Readers of poetry and graphic novels are more likely to be digital/audio readers than print-only readers.
- Digital/audio readers engage in other cultural activities and support the arts more than print-only readers and nonreaders.

Little Free Library®
@LtlFreeLibrary

"By chance, when COVID-19 was really gearing up in my area, a freak wind storm blew the door off of my library. I had to close. A week later I walked by to find it full of wool and knitting needles with signs saying 'Take me and social distance like a champ'." - Steward Zoe J.

♡ 79 6:06 PM - Mar 19, 2020

🗨 27 people are talking about this

ADVERTISEMENT

THE ULTIMATE WORK FROM HOME SHOE

SAMUEL HUBBARD

SHOP NOW

Powered by LiveIntent

Last week, I noted that the Little Free Library organization was celebrating its 100,000th book box. This week, those Little Free Libraries are adjusting to a different world. Some, like big libraries, are closing down for the duration. People who want to continue maintaining their boxes are being urged to ramp up regular cleaning with advice from a professor of infectious diseases. (One thoughtful box manager in Smyrna, Ga. is disinfecting and wrapping each book.) Birchbark Books, the store owned by novelist Louise Erdrich in Minneapolis, is restricting how many customers can enter, but placing books in Little Free Libraries all over town. A box in Squamish, British Columbia is now filled with yarn and needles. And LitHub reports that people are starting to give away nonperishable food in Little Free Libraries. Meanwhile, the LFL parent organization is currently waiving shipping charges on new book box kits. (Shop here.) That's not a bad project for a family stuck at home.

Almost too good to be true. The celebrated children's author and illustrator Mo Willems wants you to grab your colored pens and join him for lunch. "With millions of learners attempting to grow and educate themselves in new circumstances," Willems writes, "I have decided to invite everyone into my studio." Your kids know him as the creator of "Don't Let the Pigeon Drive the Bus," "Knuffle Bunny" and dozens of other super-clever books, but he's also the Kennedy Center Education Artist-in-

Residence. Every weekday at 1 p.m. ET for the next few weeks, he's posting "Lunch Doodles" on YouTube. These free art and activity lessons, which started Monday, have a delightful Mr. Rogers tone. "You might be isolated," Willems says, "but you're not alone."

I don't know about you, but I'm finding it extremely difficult to concentrate. It's either the stress or the fact that I ate an entire box of Halloween Oreos that I found in the coat closet. In any case, after a long day of terrifying tweets, chyrons and headlines, I don't always feel eager for more information about our epidemiological crisis. But make room for a thoughtful series from the Sewanee Review called "The Corona Correspondences." The editor, Adam Ross, has invited some great writers to reflect on how they're experiencing this singular moment. "The curse of being a catastrophist is closely tied to the blessing of being a catastrophist," Lauren Groff writes in the first entry. "If one has spent all one's life dreaming about the horrible things that can go awry, when a true disaster strikes, one is almost calm." Richard Russo is frustrated by not knowing how to help during this strange national emergency. "There's work to be done," he writes. "I feel like I'm underperforming." When the alarming news and the angry op-eds and the dubious medical advice from your uncle get to be too much, these gently profound letters are a gift.

---

Ibram X. Kendi (Photo courtesy of Little, Brown); Little, Brown; Jason Reynolds (Photo by Jati Lindsay/Courtesy of Little Brown)

In 2016, Ibram X. Kendi published an exhaustive, brilliant book called “Stamped from the Beginning: The Definitive History of Racist Ideas in America.” Reaching back to 15th-century Europe and forward to Barack Obama, this 600-page book is even broader than its ambitious title suggests as it demonstrates the way racist ideas have been promulgated to support discriminatory practices (review). Now, Kendi and Jason Reynolds, the National Ambassador for Young People’s Literature, have teamed up to publish a YA version of this demanding work of history. Called “Stamped: Racism, Antiracism, and You,” it’s a remarkable “remix” — “not a history book,” Reynolds insists, but “a book that contains history.” Call it what you will, the result is terrifically engaging, written in a conversational style that speaks directly to young people. For instance, describing social changes in the U.S. after World War II, Reynolds writes, “I almost don’t want to tell you what happened because I’ve told you what happened a lot already. But if you were to guess that White people started to perpetuate lies about Black people being inferior to keep the world of racism spinning, you’d be right.” Reynolds tells me, “I wrote it like I write my novels,” such as “Ghost,” which was a finalist for the National Book Award for Young People’s Literature. With “Stamped,” he wanted to produce a new kind of nonfiction that says to young people, “You have a place in the history. It isn't this idea that history is the thing that happened; it's history as a thing that is happening, and you happen to be a part of it." Imagine how such a refreshing approach could revolutionize the teaching of history in school.

(Grove Press; Penguin Vitae)

Social isolation is crucial to stopping the coronavirus, but it's a phrase with troubling connotations. We are, after all, social animals. We've long used isolation as a form of punishment and control. In the most brutal cases, separation from our peers can cause permanent damage. Last year, Albert Woodfox released a devastating memoir called "Solitary," about his 40 years in solitary confinement (review). In 1892, Charlotte Perkins Gilman published "The Yellow Wall-paper," one of the foundational texts of modern feminist literature. It's about a new mother driven mad by her doctor-husband who insists that more alone time is all she needs to feel less anxious. I reread that story this week in a sharply designed edition of Gilman's work with an introduction by Kate Bolick (look for the new Penguin Vitae series). I mention this not to raise any objection against social isolation at this crucial moment in our fight against the coronavirus, but only to remind you to stay safely engaged with people over the next few weeks. Reach out frequently by phone, by Skype, by post. Don't let the cure for this epidemic drive you mad.

(Harper Design; Princeton University Press)

Raised on the metaphysical pronouncements of Mary Baker Eddy, Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry David Thoreau, I find most modern-day books about life improvement intolerably trite. Nevertheless, I persist. This week I read two new books by a couple of very different philosophers eager to bring light to a troubled world. Frank Martela, a psychology researcher at Aalto University in Finland, has written “A Wonderful Life: Insights on Finding a Meaningful Existence.” Full of big bold graphics, this is a breezy survey of Western philosophy with frequent references to pop culture. (“Fight Club” shows up twice, which is enough.) The prose is banal, but there’s no doubting Martela’s upbeat sincerity, and his advice is clear: “It’s best to make every moment count,” he reveals. “Meaning in life is about making yourself meaningful to other people.” Gloomy optimist that I am, I much prefer John Kaag’s “Sick Souls, Healthy Minds: How William James Can Save Your Life.” A philosophy professor at the University of Massachusetts, Kaag writes movingly about his own struggles with depression and the suicide of a young man who jumped from the 15th floor of William James Hall on the Harvard campus. This is a tough, honest book that offers no easy answers but contains lots of insight about how James tamed his own black dog. Kaag acknowledges that our passage through life is fraught with risks, but those risks always include the chance of happiness. “For now, I believe that James’s ‘maybe’ — the open question of life’s worth — is right, or at least right for me,” Kaag writes, “because it maps my existential situation as one who is not always entirely sold on life’s value.” He suggests that depression’s self-confirming certainty is its deadliest maneuver. Like Emily Dickinson, we must be willing to “dwell in Possibility.”

---

Emily Dickinson's life wasn't nearly as secluded as we imagine, but she certainly understood the agonies of social isolation. This poem, with its devastating final stanza, always rips me up.

I cannot live with You

I cannot live with You –
It would be Life –
And Life is over there –
Behind the Shelf

The Sexton keeps the Key to – Putting up
Our Life – His Porcelain –
Like a Cup –

Discarded of the Housewife –
Quaint – or Broke –
A newer Sevres pleases –
Old Ones crack –

I could not die – with You –
For One must wait
To shut the Other's Gaze down –
You – could not –

And I – could I stand by
And see You – freeze –

Without my Right of Frost –
Death's privilege?

Nor could I rise – with You –
Because Your Face
Would put out Jesus' –
That New Grace

Glow plain – and foreign
On my homesick Eye –
Except that You than He Shone closer by –

They'd judge Us – How –
For You – served Heaven – You know,
Or sought to –
I could not –

Because You saturated Sight –
And I had no more Eyes
For sordid excellence
As Paradise

And were You lost, I would be –
Though My Name
Rang loudest
On the Heavenly fame –

And were You – saved –
And I – condemned to be Where You were not –
That self – were Hell to Me –

So We must meet apart –

You there – I – here –
With just the Door ajar
That Oceans are – and Prayer –
And that White Sustenance – Despair –

Reprinted by permission of the publishers and the Trustees of Amherst College from The Poems of Emily Dickinson, Thomas H. Johnson, ed., Cambridge, Mass.: The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, Copyright © 1951, 1955, 1979 by the President and Fellows of Harvard College.

---

Stay safe and wash your hands. If you have any questions or comments about our book coverage, contact me at ron.charles@washpost.com. And if you know someone who would enjoy this newsletter, please forward it to them. To subscribe, click here.

---

A writer ponders Emily Dickinson's most pivotal moments

Review • By Scott Bradfield • Read more »

---

Escapist reading in the fantasy novels and weird tales from another time

Review • By Michael Dirda • Read more »

---

Greta Thunberg's family memoir sends an ## urgent message to us all, especially moms

Review • By Zibby Owens • Read more »

---

The Gypsy Rose Blanchard case gets another twist in the novel 'Darling Rose Gold'

Review • By Maureen Corrigan • Read more »

---

Sam Pink's 'Ice Cream Man' explores life on the fringes

Review • By Ellen Akins • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Book Club | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Book Club or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 20 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 11:32:03 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., March 20, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. EPA:

Wheeler urges telework as 2nd staffer tests positive

Administrator Andrew Wheeler is urging all EPA employees to work from home as reports mount of confirmed or suspected cases of COVID-19 in the agency's regional offices.

TOP STORIES

2. NATIONAL PARKS:

NPS faces growing criticism in bid to woo visitors

3. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

Will FOIA be a pandemic victim?

4. PANDEMIC:

Texas mulls enforcement relief for polluting industries

CORONAVIRUS

5. INFRASTRUCTURE:

16 industries deemed 'critical' to pandemic response

6. BIOFUELS:

Ethanol feeds booming production of hand sanitizer

7. PENNSYLVANIA:

Governor orders closure of coal mines

CONGRESS

8. AVIATION:

Groups: Make airline help contingent on enviro protections

9. ENERGY POLICY:

Congressional Coal Caucus pushes for industry bailout

POLITICS

10. EPA:

State AGs say agency should halt 'secret science' rulemaking

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

11. MINING:

Ariz. gold, silver expansion follows swift BLM review

12. MARINE MAMMALS:

National Aquarium sends rescued seal back to the sea

13. PEOPLE:

Former attorney for trophy hunting group joins FWS

LAW

---

14. EPA:

Pandemic could stall fight over Trump power plant rule

15. SUPREME COURT:

Justices extend filing time for petitions amid pandemic

ENERGY

---

16. PIPELINES:

DOJ announces $60M settlement in Calif. spill

17. UTILITIES:

N.M. regulators weigh decision on coal-fired power plant

AIR AND WATER

---

18. CHEMICALS:

Flaming pools, tough deadlines: DOD hunts for safer foams

19. PANDEMIC:

Water utilities warn, 'It's a toilet, not a trash can!'

20. OCEANS:

Arabs urge rebels to let U.N. assess loaded oil tanker

STATES

---

21. NEW MEXICO:

Governor anticipates special legislative session

22. OHIO:

Severe storms roar through; thousands without power

23. MAINE:

Restrictions expand to curb spread of forest pests

24. TENNESSEE:

Nashville's smaller airport reopens after tornado damage

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 20 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 11:34:29 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., March 20, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. EPA:

Wheeler urges telework as 2nd staffer tests positive

Administrator Andrew Wheeler is urging all EPA employees to work from home as reports mount of confirmed or suspected cases of COVID-19 in the agency's regional offices.

TOP STORIES

2. NATIONAL PARKS:

NPS faces growing criticism in bid to woo visitors

3. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

Will FOIA be a pandemic victim?

4. PANDEMIC:

Texas mulls enforcement relief for polluting industries

CORONAVIRUS

5. INFRASTRUCTURE:

16 industries deemed 'critical' to pandemic response

6. BIOFUELS:

Ethanol feeds booming production of hand sanitizer

7. PENNSYLVANIA:

Governor orders closure of coal mines

CONGRESS

8. AVIATION:

Groups: Make airline help contingent on enviro protections

9. ENERGY POLICY:

Congressional Coal Caucus pushes for industry bailout

POLITICS

10. EPA:

State AGs say agency should halt 'secret science' rulemaking

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

11. MINING:

Ariz. gold, silver expansion follows swift BLM review

12. MARINE MAMMALS:

National Aquarium sends rescued seal back to the sea

13. PEOPLE:

Former attorney for trophy hunting group joins FWS

LAW

---

14. EPA:

Pandemic could stall fight over Trump power plant rule

15. SUPREME COURT:

Justices extend filing time for petitions amid pandemic

ENERGY

---

16. PIPELINES:

DOJ announces $60M settlement in Calif. spill

17. UTILITIES:

N.M. regulators weigh decision on coal-fired power plant

AIR AND WATER

---

18. CHEMICALS:

Flaming pools, tough deadlines: DOD hunts for safer foams

19. PANDEMIC:

Water utilities warn, 'It's a toilet, not a trash can!'

20. OCEANS:

Arabs urge rebels to let U.N. assess loaded oil tanker

STATES

---

21. NEW MEXICO:

Governor anticipates special legislative session

22. OHIO:

Severe storms roar through; thousands without power

23. MAINE:

Restrictions expand to curb spread of forest pests

24. TENNESSEE:

Nashville's smaller airport reopens after tornado damage

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 20 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 11:34:42 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., March 20, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. EPA:

Wheeler urges telework as 2nd staffer tests positive

Administrator Andrew Wheeler is urging all EPA employees to work from home as reports mount of confirmed or suspected cases of COVID-19 in the agency's regional offices.

TOP STORIES

2. NATIONAL PARKS:

NPS faces growing criticism in bid to woo visitors

3. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

Will FOIA be a pandemic victim?

4. PANDEMIC:

Texas mulls enforcement relief for polluting industries

CORONAVIRUS

5. INFRASTRUCTURE:

16 industries deemed 'critical' to pandemic response

6. BIOFUELS:

Ethanol feeds booming production of hand sanitizer

7. PENNSYLVANIA:

Governor orders closure of coal mines

CONGRESS

8. AVIATION:

Groups: Make airline help contingent on enviro protections

9. ENERGY POLICY:

Congressional Coal Caucus pushes for industry bailout

POLITICS

10. EPA:

State AGs say agency should halt 'secret science' rulemaking

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

11. MINING:

Ariz. gold, silver expansion follows swift BLM review

12. MARINE MAMMALS:

National Aquarium sends rescued seal back to the sea

13. PEOPLE:

Former attorney for trophy hunting group joins FWS

LAW

---

14. EPA:

Pandemic could stall fight over Trump power plant rule

15. SUPREME COURT:

Justices extend filing time for petitions amid pandemic

ENERGY

---

16. PIPELINES:

DOJ announces $60M settlement in Calif. spill

17. UTILITIES:

N.M. regulators weigh decision on coal-fired power plant

AIR AND WATER

---

18. CHEMICALS:

Flaming pools, tough deadlines: DOD hunts for safer foams

19. PANDEMIC:

Water utilities warn, 'It's a toilet, not a trash can!'

20. OCEANS:

Arabs urge rebels to let U.N. assess loaded oil tanker

STATES

---

21. NEW MEXICO:

Governor anticipates special legislative session

22. OHIO:

Severe storms roar through; thousands without power

23. MAINE:

Restrictions expand to curb spread of forest pests

24. TENNESSEE:

Nashville's smaller airport reopens after tornado damage

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 20 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 1:57:34 PM

---

INTERIOR: Emergency plan relies on telework, leaves. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
PANDEMIC: McConnell pushes stimulus talks into overdrive.
PANDEMIC: Bottled water sales surge despite claims of safe tap water.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Fri., March 20, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/20/full?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/20/stories/1062656809?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
1. INTERIOR:
Emergency plan relies on telework, leaves

An updated Interior Department plan to address the novel coronavirus outbreak relies heavily on using telework and generous government sick leave policies to keep it running in a prolonged pandemic.

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/20/stories/1062656823?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
2. PANDEMIC:
McConnell pushes stimulus talks into overdrive

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/20/stories/1062656759?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
3. PANDEMIC:
Bottled water sales surge despite claims of safe tap water

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/20/stories/1062656589?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
4. ENDANGERED SPECIES:
Mexican gray wolf death prompts investigation

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/20/calendars?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
5. CALENDAR:
Activity for March 16 - March 22, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.
ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News
E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001
Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: The U.S. braces as the world batters down
Date: Friday, March 20, 2020 2:42:04 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

Several senators face public fury over reports that they sold large amounts of stock before the markets crashed last month, after receiving private briefings on the outbreak. Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr (R-N.C.) sold up to $1.72 million in hotel stock and other holdings in mid-February, transactions that were disclosed one day after the Dow peaked and less than a week after he wrote a column assuring people the country was prepared for the coronavirus.

Sens. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), James M. Inhofe (R-Okla.), and Kelly Loeffler (R-Ga.) — who is married to the chairman of the

New York Stock Exchange — also unloaded stocks before the market plunge. All three say they did not personally make the decisions and deny acting improperly, but calls for investigations and resignations mounted Friday. “There is no greater moral crime than betraying your country in a time of crisis, and that appears to be what happened,” Fox News host Tucker Carlson said, talking about Burr.

Confirmed infections in the United States have doubled in 48 hours to more than 13,000, including more than 170 deaths. The total is expected to climb much higher as long-delayed coronavirus testing rolls out in many communities.

Emergency rooms are struggling to keep up. Medical staff in some cities have been setting up isolation tents in driveways and improvising face masks — or reusing disposable masks in one hard-hit Georgia ER. “We’re about to be overwhelmed, which means people won’t get into our hospitals,” Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti warned on the “Today” show.

California’s 40 million residents have been ordered to stay at home by Gov. Gavin Newsom (D), as forecasts warn that more than half the state’s population could contract the virus unless the infection rate is slowed.

In Illinois, Gov. J.B. Pritzker (D) also instated a lockdown beginning Saturday evening. New York’s Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D) did the same. Mexico agreed to partially close its border with the U.S. on Friday following a similar agreement with Canada this week.

U.S. officials expect social distancing measures will likely need to remain in place for at least several weeks. “I cannot see that all of a sudden next week or two weeks from now, it’s going to be over,” Anthony S. Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said on the “Today” show. A handful of churches across the country have refused orders to close, and a Pew Research Center poll this week found that 62 percent of Americans think the media is exaggerating the threat.

President Trump is one of them. At Friday's White House briefing, he raged at reporters for “doing sensationalism,” referred to his own State Department as “the Deep State Department” and complained: “We haven't been given the credit we deserve.” A new ABC News-Ipsos poll found that 55 percent of Americans approve of Trump's management of the crisis — a significant jump from last week.

Struggling to stem an economic crisis, the IRS has delayed tax filing deadlines for three months, to July 15. Meanwhile, Congress continues to work on a $1 trillion stimulus bill including cash payouts to most Americans, but lawmakers in both parties have begun to attack the legislation as unfair. The Dow sank another 900 points by the end of Friday.

Disturbing reports keep pouring in from parts of the world where the virus began spreading earlier. Spain became the second country to impose a nationwide lockdown, ordering people to mostly stay at home as its death toll surged 30 percent in a day to more than 1,000.

Italy, the first country in Europe to lock down, on Friday reported 627 deaths in a day, pushing its death toll above 4,000. Panic hoarding has emptied many British grocery stores of basic supplies, and YouTube and Netflix have downgraded video streaming quality across Europe as tens of millions of people staying at home stress the continent's Internet network. Experts fear that South Asia — home to 2 billion people and many war-torn and impoverished communities — will soon be ravaged by the disease.

More than three months into the outbreak, the total number of confirmed cases now stands at more than 200,000, according to the World Health Organization, which notes half those infections were reported in the last 12 days. Nearly 9,000 patients have died. Because most people aren't tested, the true number of infections is believed to be much higher.

---

‘Flattening the curve’

Remember the four simulations from Sunday's newsletter demonstrating how viruses spread and how to slow the infection rate?

The Post has translated that page into many other languages. All of them are free to access.

- Spanish | Lea este articulo en español
- Italian | Leggi in italiano
- French | Lire en français
- Japanese | 日本語で読む
- Arabic | اقرأ هذا المقال بالعربية
- Persian | به فارسی بخوانید
- Portuguese | Leia em português
- Russian | Читать по русски
- Hindi | हिंदी में पढ़ें
- German | Lesen Sie auf Deutsch
- Dutch | Lees in het Nederlands
- Slovak | Prečítajte si po Slovensky

As we add new languages, you can find them at the top of our coronavirus page.

(Harry Stevens/The Washington Post)

Your questions, answered

If you're like us, you've been working from home for a week or more by now, possibly cooped up with roommates or relatives, and your place is way overdue for a weekend scrub-down. We hosted a live chat this week with Brian Sansoni, senior vice president of the American Cleaning Institute, and it's full of good questions and answers about housekeeping during a pandemic. Some excerpts:

Q: I live in an apartment complex with communal laundry. ... What's the best way to use a communal space while protecting myself from possible exposure?

Sansoni: Take disinfecting wipes with you when entering a communal space and use them to wipe down surfaces that are frequently touched (doorknobs, washer and dryer doors and buttons). ... As an extra precaution, wearing gloves could also be helpful. Just be sure not to touch your face, if you do. As always, once you return from the communal laundry room — take the time to wash your hands with soap and water for 20 seconds.

Q: I can't find disinfecting wipes, what's the best way to clean surfaces when I need to go out?

Sansoni: Disinfecting spray works equally as well. For hard surfaces, pre-clean any surfaces prior to disinfecting to remove any excess dirt or grime ... Depending on the product, you need to let the surface air dry anywhere from 30 seconds to several minutes in order to let the germ or virus kill take effect.

Q: I've seen links about how to make your own hand sanitizer. Do they work as well as store bought?

Sansoni: We strongly recommend against trying to make your own hand sanitizer at home.

We recommend reading the whole transcript for more tips. Stay clean, stay healthy, and leave your chemistry experiments for another time.

---

Live updates

Track the spread of the outbreak in the U.S. and abroad with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Follow live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

Find answers to common questions and terms to know.

Want to know more? Submit your question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- An analysis of Trump's eruption at an NBC reporter
- Widespread bipartisan opposition to the details of the stimulus package
- How the late-night shows are making the best of an unfunny situation
- Tummy tucks and cataract surgeries are still happening, putting all at risk
- A case for canceling the Summer Olympics right now

The coronavirus is killing far more men than women

By Chris Mooney, Sarah Kaplan and Min Joo Kim • Read more »

---

Cruise ships kept sailing as coronavirus spread. Travelers and health experts question why.

By Beth Reinhard, Rosalind Helderan, Faiz Siddiqui and Mark Berman • Read more »

---

Here's why giving every American $1,200 is a really bad idea

Perspective • By Steven Pearlstein • Read more »

---

Coronavirus deniers and hoaxers persist despite dire warnings, claiming 'it's mass hysteria'

By Annie Gowen • Read more »

---

‘March Madness’

Josh Safran, 19, and Jackson Weimer, 21, host “Corona Madness” on Twitch from Weimer’s mom’s basement to fill the time they now have. (Jackson Weimer)

Thousands of people are watching two Gen-Zers simulate the March Madness tournament on an Xbox from a basement

---

You're reading The Post's newsletter guide to the coronavirus outbreak. Not on the list?

Sign up

We think you’ll like this newsletter

Check out Baking Basics by Voraciously for baking fundamentals, techniques and irresistible recipes, in your inbox on Fridays. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Recipes! Sourdough, white bread, gluten-free loaves and English muffins
Date: Saturday, March 21, 2020 8:37:29 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Recipes

What to cook during the week ahead, from Post Food editors.

By Ann Maloney

 Email

White bread, sourdough, English muffins. Regular readers of The Post's food stories will notice we've been baking up a storm. All of this bread-making was planned well before the coronavirus pandemic forced us to spend more time in our homes, away from work colleagues, friends and family.

I'm not a confident bread baker. So, I've vowed to use this time at home to polish my skills, drawing on the expertise of food columnist Cathy Barrow (how to make a sourdough starter and crackers from the cast-off), my colleague Becky Krystal (a better-than-I've-ever-tasted English muffin), cookbook author Aran Goyoaga (gluten-free bread with a terrific crust and crumb) and food writer Eliza McGraw (classic sourdough making and forming).

I'm home. I have time to wait for the dough to rise — and rise again. I have the patience to let it chill for 12 hours in the refrigerator before baking. I'm here to see when my sourdough starter is looking a bit peckish.

My greatest success so far has been Kristen Hartke's foolproof white bread recipe. I made a loaf that was so pretty I couldn't believe my hands had a hand in making it. This is truly one of those if-I-can-do-it-you-can-too recipes. And, other than the yeast, it calls for ingredients I always have on hand, including all-purpose flour, sugar, water, butter and salt. The resulting bread is the stuff of childhood memories.

Still, that's not all we've been up to..

I whipped up one of my favorite comfort foods: Trout Amandine. It's the perfect balance of ease and elegance. And, it can be made with fresh or frozen fish fillets.

Nourish columnist Ellie Krieger shared a batch of Greek-Style Olive Oil Cookies that would go so well with a cup of hot tea.

Food and dining editor Joe Yonan made a Whole Wheat Pasta Salad and offered tips on adapting it to the times, with advice for getting the most out of frozen vegetables.

We recognize that all of us are in different places right now, with different levels of skill and varying access to ingredients. Joe acknowledged this in a note to all of you this week in which he said: "... we want to help you use your kitchen to nourish body and soul, whether that prospect is new for you or part of your DNA."

We do. So, join us for our weekly chat on Wednesdays at noon, or write to us anytime at voraciously@washpost.com. We're home cooking and waiting to hear from you.

(Stacy Zarin Goldberg for The Washington Post; food styling by Lisa Cherkasky for The Washington Post)

Raise a toast to white bread with a recipe even a nonbaker can master

Love a basic white sandwich bread but worry that it lacks nutrition? Try white whole-wheat flour recipe.

By Kristen Hartke • Read more »

---

Sourdough Bread (Due Pane)

Sourdough bread -- as straightforward as it gets.

By Eliza McGraw • Read more »

---

Sourdough Starter Castoff Crackers

These crackers are snappy, wheaty and filled with seeds. Be creative with the flour blends and flavors.

By Cathy Barrow • Read more »

---

No-Knead English Muffins

With a touch of honey and whole wheat, these are more flavorful and tender than what you can buy at the store.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

---

This delicious and easy gluten-free bread boasts a hearty crust and a tender crumb

An easy, adaptable bread you'll want to make again and again.

By Aran Goyoaga • Read more »

---

Trout Amandine

Once you get the hang of this quick pan-frying and sauce-making method, you can try a variety of additions and whichever fish you prefer.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

---

Greek-Style Olive Oil Sesame Cookies

We could all use an extra dose of cozy these days.

By Ellie Krieger • Read more »

---

Adapt this simple pasta salad to whatever vegetable is in your fridge or freezer

Roasting at high heat helps get even frozen broccoli crispy.

By Joe Yonan • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

202
THE CLIMATE
FROM The Washington Post

Inside the politics of climate change
This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives and the climate-conscious alike.

Sign up

Powered by LiveIntent

More from Voraciously

A note from the Food editor: We're in this together. What do you need?

Everybody needs to eat, but we're all in different places — literally and figuratively — when it comes to feeding ourselves.

By Joe Yonan • Read more »

If you suddenly need to learn to cook, these resources will help guide you

If you've been wanting to spend more time in the kitchen, we're here to help.

By Matt Brooks • Read more »

How to cook for and with your kids during the extended coronavirus school closures

Be smart and flexible, and try to still have a little fun.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

Grocery shopping during the coronavirus: Wash your hands, keep your distance and limit trips

The advice is the same as for any time spent outside the home.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

---

These are the 10 best breads in the world

Bread has sustained cultures across the globe, and we all have our favorites.

By Tim Carman • Read more »

---

7 recipes that get to the heart of the artichoke

How do you use artichokes? Let's find out.

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

---

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Zero to Dinner Party by Voraciously for one email every Wednesday for 12 weeks to teach you to become a better cook and show off your skills.

Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Recipes | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Recipes or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: The battle for containment is lost in hardest-hit areas
Date: Saturday, March 21, 2020 1:54:28 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

President Trump and members of Congress failed to heed repeated early warnings from U.S. intelligence agencies about the outbreak's potential severity, according to a blockbuster story in The Washington Post. Despite CIA and national intelligence reports from January and February that the coronavirus had the potential to sweep the globe, Trump continued to trust (and tweet) the Chinese government's false claims that its spread was being controlled. “The system was blinking red,” a U.S. official told The Post. “They just couldn’t get him to do anything about it.”

The crisis is now upon us, with more than 70 million Americans

living under stay-at-home orders in California, New York and Illinois, and signs that other states may be preparing to follow suit.

The U.S. has seen more than 260 deaths and 22,000 confirmed cases of the virus — climbing fast — but the true number of infections is almost certainly much higher due to a shortage of tests. Health officials in New York, California and other hard-hit parts of the country are restricting coronavirus testing to health-care workers and people who are hospitalized, signaling “the battle to contain the virus is lost.” In frustration, some people have started buying fraudulent “home-test kits,” prompting warnings from the FDA.

The virus has infected Americans from every walk of life — most severely the immunocompromised and elderly, but also athletes, entertainers, lawmakers and, as of Friday, an employee in the office of Vice President Pence, who leads the White House coronavirus task force and will be tested for the disease. (See the reader question section below for worrying signs that young Americans are falling seriously ill.)

The combination of mass infections and mass quarantines are threatening an economic crisis unprecedented in modern history. Some financial analysts predict the economy will shrink at an annual rate of 14 percent to 30 percent in the next few months. Bank of America Merrill Lynch expects the government to report about 3 million newly unemployed Americans next week — “more than four times the record high set in the depths of the 1982 recession.”

Civic life is being shuttered across the United States. Hospitals are warning of shortages or closures without emergency aid. At least 73 senior care centers in 22 states have reported infections. Many local court systems have effectively shut down, firefighters are calling in sick, and the mayor of Dayton is worried the city will soon lack funds to pick up the trash.

Trump's hotel and resort business has been hit hard in the chaos. His prized Mar-a-Lago Club has been effectively shuttered by order of Florida's governor. The president has touted a gargantuan $1 trillion-plus stimulus bill being hammered out in Congress, even as he resists pleas for the federal government to send medical supplies and other aid directly to the states. The U.S. government is “not a shipping clerk,” Trump told reporters this week.

Experts worry that the twin medical and economic crises could last far longer than we are prepared for, even into November's national election, forcing officials to contemplate the hugely difficult and expensive possibility of an entire nation voting by mail.

As he was during the outbreak's early spread in January, Trump remains upbeat despite most evidence. At a news conference late this week he promised: “We’re going to be a rocket ship as soon as this thing gets solved.”

Correction: Friday's newsletter incorrectly said Illinois had been placed under lockdown. The governor issued a statewide stay-at-home order, which is different.

---

Your questions, answered

“I have seen reports on the fraction of cases that result in death as a function of age. But what is the fraction of severe reaction (e.g. number of cases that require hospitalization) as a function of age?” — Mark Sears, New Mexico

This question gets at an extremely important new finding about which age groups can become seriously ill from covid-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus. (Spoiler: almost all of them.)

Early data from China suggested only elderly people got very sick from the disease — a misconception that has encouraged some millennials to go partying during quarantines, and led President Trump to tell Americans on March 15: “The young people and people of good health, and groups of people, just are not strongly affected” by the virus.

A newly released study suggests this thinking is dangerously false, as The Post reported this week. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention examined more than 4,000 covid-19 cases in the United States and found that, while 80 percent of deaths were people 65 or older, “the percentage with more moderate or severe disease requiring hospitalization is more evenly distributed between the old and the young.”

The specific numbers Mark is looking for can be found in the CDC report, specifically this paragraph:

Among 508 (12%) patients known to have been hospitalized, 9% were aged  $\geq 85$  years, 36% were aged 65–84 years, 17% were aged 55–64 years, 18% were 45–54 years, and 20% were aged 20–44 years. Less than 1% of hospitalizations were among people aged  $\leq 19$  years (Figure 2). The percentage of people hospitalized increased with age, from 2%–3% among people aged  $\leq 19$  years, to  $\geq 31\%$  among adults aged  $\geq 85$  years.

There’s a lot more in the report if you want to dig in, or read our article about it. Keep in mind that scientists still have much to learn about the virus, and statistics can change from country to country, or week to week.

The important point is that many younger Americans do appear to be getting seriously ill from covid-19. Even those who aren't, such as teenagers, can spread the virus to people who are more at risk.

As the president said more recently than his March 15 comments: “We don’t want them gathering, and I see they do gather, including on beaches and in restaurants, young people. They don’t realize, and they’re feeling invincible.”

---

Live updates

Track the spread of the outbreak in the U.S. and abroad with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Follow live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

Check and add to our list of U.S. closings and postponements.

Find answers to common questions and terms to know.

Want to know more? Submit your question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Today’s top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- A look inside the White House at Trump's 7 days as a 'wartime president'
- The case for giving every college student an automatic 'A'
- Pulitzer Prize winner Stephanie McCrummen's story from the desolate streets of New York

(Illustration by Mark Pernice for The Washington Post)

How the coronavirus will change our lives forever — from music to politics to medicine

So long to selfie lines, political fundraisers and the dominance of mass transit.

Perspective • By Washington Post Staff • Read more »

---

Former intelligence chiefs: Trump's removal of experts is deeply destructive to our nation's safety

Opinion • By Joseph Maguire, John Brennan, Michael Leiter, Matthew G. Olsen, Nicholas Rasmussen, Andrew Liepman, Geoffrey O'Connell, Michael, V. Hayden and James Clapper • Read more »

---

One doctor's straight talk about the coronavirus strikes a chord with anxious Americans

By Kim Bellware • Read more »

---

Anthony Fauci was ready for this. America was not.

By Ellen McCarthy and Ben Terris • Read more »

---

Parents, you are the filter through which your kids see this crisis. How you talk about it matters.

By Sindya N. Bhanoo • Read more »

---

How social distancing could ultimately teach us how to be less lonely

Opinion • By Arthur Brooks • Read more »

---

Ignorance is bliss

---

You're reading The Post's newsletter guide to the coronavirus outbreak. Not on the list?

Sign up

---

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Opinions A.M. and P.M. for the best of The Post's opinions and commentary, in your inbox every morning and afternoon. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Week in Ideas: For those in need of a smile, a coronavirus love story
Date: Sunday, March 22, 2020 5:17:28 AM

Read online

The Washington Post

The Week in Ideas

Opinions you may have missed.

By Fred Hiatt
✉ Email

What happens to love during a pandemic? Sergio Peçanha has a sweetly illustrated answer that might put a smile on your face, at a time we could all use a smile.

Retired Navy Adm. William McRaven's essay won't make you smile but it might inspire you, and bring a tear to your eye. You may remember McRaven as the officer who oversaw the operation that ended in the killing of Osama bin Laden. Here he recalls one of the toughest nights from his SEAL training, how his class survived it — and what lesson that might have for us today.

And here's something else inspiring: All the people who are coming up with ingenious ideas to improve our response to this crisis. Our contributors offer five brief, smart suggestions. I'm sure we'll be publishing more as time goes on. (You can submit yours here.)

Covid-19 is scary, but loneliness can be bad for your health, too, Amanda

Ripley notes. She offers four ways to counter feelings of isolation even as we are social distancing.

If you know Alexandra Petri as our peerless satirist, this may surprise you — one of the most touching things I've read about what we are all going through.

And two business school professors, Susan Athey and Dean Karlan, have advice for those of us fortunate enough to still be receiving a paycheck: Ways to help others, and the economy, even as we stop circulating in the world.

Well, I've been trying to help us look on the bright(er) side. But I don't underestimate the seriousness of what we're facing. Cathy Merrill, who owns and publishes Washingtonian Magazine, brought that home in her piece. "Two months is not a hiatus," she writes. "It is a death sentence for small business."

Finally, last week our 2020 pundits ranked the also-rans from the Democratic presidential nominating contest. Take a look at who they think has the brightest future.

Thanks for reading, and please try to stay safe.

For those in need of a smile, a coronavirus love story

What happens to love during a pandemic?

By Sergio Peçanha • Read more »

---

The coronavirus has thrown us all in the mud

But we can and should be hopeful.

By William H. McRaven • Read more »

Coronavirus is upending society. Here are ideas to mitigate its impact.

Fresh ideas are needed for dealing with this crisis. Here's a start.

Read more »

Have an idea to help mitigate the effects of the coronavirus? Let us know.

Read more »

Four ways to help prevent loneliness while you're social distancing

Loneliness, we know from research, can be as bad for your health as smoking.

By Amanda Ripley • Read more »

Newton formulated his theory of gravity in a time of plague. We need a miracle, too.

The force that propels us together in ordinary moments is propelling us apart.

By Alexandra Petri • Read more »

How to practice social distancing while helping the economy

Those who have the means to weather the storm can help reduce the economic impact on those who do not.

By Susan Athey and Dean Karlan • Read more »

I own a small business. The CDC order is a death sentence.

Government can enact broad policies without needing to specify a time frame for halting activity.

By Cathy Merrill • Read more »

Which 2020 also-rans have the brightest futures now?

Whose stars are still on the rise?

By The Ranking Committee • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Trailer for news and insight on political campaigns around the country, from David Weigel. 435 districts. 50 states. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Week in Ideas | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Week in Ideas or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Optimist: Police officers rescued a girl's birthday. Their kind act was found two months later on body cameras.
Date: Sunday, March 22, 2020 7:28:12 AM

Johnson & Johnson

Building your World of Well

See all we're doing

Powered by  LiveIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

The Optimist

Stories that inspire.

(Gwinnett County Police Department)

Police officers rescued a girl's birthday. Their ## kind act was found two months later on body cameras.

On a frigid night this past January, two police officers spotted a woman standing on a street corner with a small bunch of birthday balloons and asked if she would like a ride home. What happened next is now going viral.

By Cathy Free • Read more »

---

12 productive things you can do to feel better about being stuck at home

Set aside pieces of the day to take care of the projects that have piled up; it's one way to create a sense of control during the coronavirus pandemic.

Perspective • By Nicole Anzia • Read more »

---

A poet in Italy published his phone number for anyone who wants to talk. More than 100 people have called.

“Being distant is no punishment, but a chance to feel intensely closer, as we’re sharing the same threat.”

By Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli • Read more »

---

If you suddenly need to learn to cook, these resources will help guide you

If you've been wanting to spend more time in the kitchen, we're here to help.

By Matt Brooks • Read more »

---

ADVERTISEMENT

Johnson & Johnson
World's Largest Healthcare Company
See all we're doing ▶
Powered by LiveIntent

Famed chef José Andrés says ‘people have to eat,’ so his ## shuttered restaurants are now community kitchens

The chef and humanitarian says small independent restaurants could help feed America if the coronavirus gets worse.

By Tim Carman • Read more »

---

12 historic sites you can virtually tour from the couch during the coronavirus outbreak

The Louvre, the Van Gogh Museum and more: With social distancing in place around the world, these institutions are bringing art and exhibits into your home.

By Drew Jones • Read more »

---

Athletes donate signed items to raise money for coronavirus relief efforts

Dozens of athletes have contributed since the sports agency Octagon launched a new fundraising platform on Saturday.

By Scott Allen • Read more »

---

ADVERTISEMENT

Johnson & Johnson
Building your World of Well
See all we're doing >
Powered by LiveIntent

The one undoubtable positive to come of the coronavirus: A new appreciation of teachers

Parents now, suddenly, understand the patience and skills it takes to teach.

Perspective • By Theresa Vargas • Read more »

---

8 tips for hosting the perfect virtual hangout

If you do it right, 'there is a point in the night when you forget that you're virtual,' says one woman.

By Caroline Kitchener • Read more »

---

Coronavirus news has us anxious and sad. Here are 11 things we've seen that lifted our spirits.

In an uncertain and sometimes scary time, the human capacity for ingenuity and inspiration is comforting.

By Marisa Iati • Read more »

---

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out About US for candid conversations about identity in 21st-century America. Join the discussion, every Friday morning. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Optimist | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Optimist or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Stimulus deal talks stall
Date: Sunday, March 22, 2020 2:38:44 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

Hopes for quick passage of a bipartisan stimulus bill faded after Democratic leaders balked at a $1.8 trillion GOP plan, complaining that it focuses too much on businesses at the expense of unemployed workers. Both parties and the White House have been negotiating a massive aid package as the coronavirus outbreak threatens a global recession. But House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) said Sunday that “we will be introducing our own bill” even as Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) moves forward with his own plan.

Thousands of Americans are stranded abroad as global infections rise by tens of thousands of cases each day, now exceeding 300,000, according to Johns Hopkins University's tracker.

Italy remains the hardest hit country, reporting another 650 deaths in one day, for a total of nearly 5,500, with morgues and hospitals overwhelmed despite a nationwide lockdown implemented more than a week ago. A top World Health Organization official warned Sunday that lockdowns are ineffective without programs to identify and isolate the sick and anyone they have contacted, otherwise when they're lifted, "the danger is the disease will jump back up."

American officials fear that Italy's catastrophe could be a portent of what is to come in New York and other U.S. states facing heavy infection rates and shortages of life-saving equipment and protective gear for medical workers.

U.S. infections and deaths both jumped sharply in the past day, to nearly 31,000 confirmed cases including 390 fatalities. Ohio and Louisiana issued statewide stay-at-home orders, joining California, Illinois and New York in implementing measures that have effectively quarantined more than one in five Americans.

Rand Paul (R-Ky.) became the first senator to test positive and is self-quarantining. Vice President Pence and his wife tested negative for the coronavirus after a worker in his office caught it.

Volunteers with sewing machines are making homemade surgical masks for one New York hospital system that has run short, and President Trump suggested that health-care workers try to sanitize disposable masks. The federal government ordered 500 million new masks earlier this month, but as of Sunday morning, the chief of the Federal Emergency Management Agency could not say when hospitals would receive them.

The disease has begun to show up in vulnerable populations such as inmates and homeless communities, where experts fear it will spread especially quickly.

Hannah Dreier @hannahdreier · 3h

Homeless people in 5 states have now come down with covid-19. One has died.

An outbreak among the homeless would have horrific consequences. But they've been left out of federal aid packages. So frontline workers are taking huge risks to pick up the slack. washingtonpost.com/national/its-t...

'It's too many'

In San Antonio and across the country, trying to contain the spread of covid-19 into one of the most washingtonpost.com

Hannah Dreier @hannahdreier

I spent last week with a woman who is breaking news of the virus to homeless people in Texas. Some people panicked and wept when she told them. She says there's no way to do this work without getting close to people who have likely been exposed.

---

Help others

The news has been dire lately, and we're all looking for ways to keep our hearts and minds sound, as well as our bodies. Helping others is a great way to do that.

The American Red Cross badly needs blood donations from those able to give. Meanwhile, groups including the CDC Foundation, Meals on Wheels and a nonprofit organization supporting infected artists need support.

We've built a guide for ways you can help in your community and nationwide during the outbreak. You can also submit suggestions for other ways to support those who need it.

---

Help yourself

Don't forget to care for yourself! Being quarantined during such stressful times can make us feel helpless, but there are small things you can do at home to improve your state of mind.

Read "The completely correct guide to vacationing at home" for tips to make semi-isolation feel more like a holiday — from aromatherapy and ambient soundtracks to simply letting yourself sleep in a bit. You can even try simulating a five-star hotel experience inside your apartment.

If you're feeling a little useless lately, read "12 productive things you can do to feel better about being stuck at home" for suggestions on overlooked tasks that could probably use your attention.

---

Live updates

Track the spread of the outbreak in the United States and abroad with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Follow live updates about the cases and impact on the D.C. area.

Check and add to our list of U.S. closings and postponements.

---

Your questions, answered ... the ‘rumor mill’ edition

Let's take a look at questions that have been showing up a lot in our inboxes in various forms, not to mention all over social media:

“Does it help to build up your immune systems by taking iodine and colloidal silver?”

and,

"Any truth to the rumor that this was a deadly weapon that the Chinese government was working on to unleash on its enemies, namely the United States?"

The short answer to both is no, there is absolutely no evidence of that.

Unfortunately, various strains of misinformation have been spreading in tandem with the coronavirus. Silver has been peddled as a cure-all for years, and lately by televangelist Jim Bakker as a coronavirus antidote. Other bogus covid-19 treatments include garlic soup, zinc, drinking bleach, dousing yourself in alcohol and blasting a hairdryer into your nostrils.

Here is an easy, if somewhat dispiriting, way to keep track of which cures are fake: all of them.

“Anything you read about curing the virus will be false,” The Post wrote in a recent article. “There is no specific medicine recommended to prevent, treat or cure covid-19.” Avoid contact with others as much as possible, wash your hands properly and consult a doctor before trying any advice you read on the Internet or hear from a friend. We recommend the World Health Organization's coronavirus myth buster page.

We also know of no evidence that the virus was engineered, despite rumors to the contrary. The best research we know of suggests that it originated in bats or another animal and mutated to infect humans, similar to many other viral outbreaks.

These sorts of conspiracy theories have spread by the millions on social media, and a State Department report suggested that some of them are being spread maliciously and intentionally to sow fear and discord. Don't fall for it.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Americans facing rent and mortgage payments on April 1
- The fight to convince pro-Trump West Virginians that the virus is coming
- Can Las Vegas come back from this shutdown?
- North Korea leader Kim Jong Un says Trump wrote him a coronavirus letter

What it's like to be infected with coronavirus

By Joel Achenbach, Ben Guarino and Ariana Eunjung Cha •
Read more »

---

Trump administration scrambles to offer guidance on what to do if hospitals run out of basic supplies for coronavirus

By Lenny Bernstein, Yasmeen Abutaleb, Ariana Eunjung Cha, Lena Sun and Josh Dawsey •
Read more »

---

We came to work for you. Please stay home for us.

Opinion • By Nina Shapiro • Read more »

---

Sirens and serenades

Rachel Clarke ✓

@doctor_oxford

These Spanish policemen know exactly how to cheer up a city on lockdown. Just gorgeous ❤️❤️❤️

♥️ 40.2K 9:14 AM - Mar 22, 2020

💬 13.8K people are talking about this

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The 5-Minute Fix for a weekday afternoon cheat sheet on the biggest story in politics — that can be read in 5 minutes or less. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 23 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Monday, March 23, 2020 5:33:44 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Mon., March 23, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus slowdown ripples across U.S. grid

The coronavirus pandemic is driving a plunge in electricity demand as businesses shut down and workers stay home. What does it mean for coal, renewables and gas?

TOP STORIES

2. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

'Sales have dropped to zero.' Virus hammers residential solar

3. PANDEMIC:

Utilities prepare for workers to live at power plants

4. CORONAVIRUS:

Texas proposal to cut oil production sparks fury

ENERGY TRANSITIONS

5. ELECTRICITY:

Pandemic could boost coal — report

6. CALIFORNIA:

PG&E inks deal with governor, opening path out of bankruptcy

LAW

7. OIL AND GAS:

Judge declines to halt pipeline after NEPA, ESA challenge

TECHNOLOGY

8. ELECTRICITY:

Federal study warns of solar storm threat to U.S. grid

9. ENERGY TRANSITIONS:

Clean energy jobs surged in 2019 — before the coronavirus

OIL AND GAS

10. TRANSPORTATION:

Glut of jet fuel on brink of overwhelming global storage

11. OIL SANDS:

Workers brace for 'hellish' outbreak in remote camps

ELECTRICITY

---

12. SOUTH CAROLINA:

Feds: Nuclear plant employees failed to check for fires

13. WEST VIRGINIA:

Group to study removing dam that fed coal plant

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 23 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Monday, March 23, 2020 11:43:55 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Mon., March 23, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

McConnell slams Democrats over environmental demands

During tense debate this afternoon, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) accused Democrats of trying to advance their green agenda in the coronavirus stimulus package. Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) said a deal was close.

TOP STORIES

2. NATIONAL PARKS:

NPS chases away visitors as pandemic worsens

3. EPA:

Policy to limit telework emerges during pandemic

4. OIL AND GAS:

API presses White House for regulatory relief

CORONAVIRUS

5. INTERIOR:

Bernhardt orders employees to work from home

6. COAL:

No bailout yet, but Pa. mines can stay open

7. PANDEMIC:

Klobuchar's husband in Va. hospital with coronavirus

8. CALIFORNIA:

Desalination workers shelter at plant to ensure water supply

9. PANDEMIC:

Calif. Coastal Commission chairman in intensive care

NATURAL RESOURCES

10. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Reward hits $10K for tips leading to whooping crane killer

11. INVASIVE SPECIES:

USDA to fight destructive beetle in Mass., N.Y., Ohio

LAW

---

12. WILDFIRES:

Utility to admit guilt in Calif.'s deadliest blaze

13. PESTICIDES:

Enviros sue over EPA approval of possible carcinogen

14. WESTERN WATER:

Judge moves legal fight to Trump admin-favored jurisdiction

15. BIOFUELS:

Trump admin signals it won't appeal refinery ruling

16. SUPREME COURT:

Feds to argue for N.M. in Pecos River water battle

17. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Fight over jaguar habitat in Southwest heads back to court

18. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Lawsuit aims to protect bird nicknamed 'feathered mouse'

AIR AND WATER

---

19. WATER POLLUTION:

Overtaken tanker spills 6K gallons of oil near Calif. dam

20. WATER POLLUTION:

Scientists test road salt alternative to slow contamination

STATES

---

21. KENTUCKY:

State parks implement precautions, remain open

22. DELAWARE:

Beaches close to discourage gathering groups

23. NEVADA:

Earthquake causes minor damage near Carson City

INTERNATIONAL

---

24. CROATIA:

Quake injures 27 amid partial coronavirus lockdown

25. PAKISTAN:

Blast in southwest coal mine kills 7, injures 3

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 23 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Monday, March 23, 2020 2:24:48 PM

---

PANDEMIC: House Dems ready their own stimulus as Senate struggles. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
EPA: Court breathes new life into science advisers fight.
ALASKA: Governor proposes tapping oil wealth to offset virus impact.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Mon., March 23, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/23/full?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/23/stories/1062683057?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
1. PANDEMIC:
House Dems ready their own stimulus as Senate struggles

As the Senate struggles to finalize a bipartisan economic stimulus package, the House is drawing up its own plan that could require hard-hit airlines tapping federal aid to move to offset their carbon emissions.

TODAY'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/23/stories/1062683043?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
2. EPA:
Court breathes new life into science advisers fight

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/23/stories/1062682837?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
3. ALASKA:
Governor proposes tapping oil wealth to offset virus impact

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/23/stories/1062682751?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
4. MINING:
Minn. appeals court kicks back another PolyMet permit

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/23/calendars?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
5. CALENDAR:
Activity for March 23 - March 29, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.
ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News
E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001
Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: 100 more U.S. deaths in a single day
Date: Monday, March 23, 2020 3:04:24 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

Presented by Slack

By Angela Fritz
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

Democrats blocked a vote on the $2 trillion stimulus bill, prompting an eruption of bipartisan fury on the Senate floor. Democrats have said the bill does too much to help corporations and not enough to support workers. President Trump seemed to agree, saying on Sunday, “I don’t want to give a bailout to a company and then have somebody go out and use that money to buy back stock in the company and raise the price and then get a bonus. ... So I may be Republican, but I don’t like that. I want them to use the money for the workers.”

Trump seems to be weighing whether to loosen restrictions on social distancing to boost the economy, tweeting on Sunday "WE CANNOT LET THE CURE BE WORSE THAN THE PROBLEM ITSELF." But this goes directly against what his own health experts are telling him, which is that scaling back distancing measures could devastate hospitals. "We really, really need everyone to stay at home," Surgeon General Dr. Jerome Adams said Monday. "There are not enough people out there who are taking this seriously."

The U.S. is reporting over 41,000 cases with more than 500 deaths. Monday was the first day the U.S. reported more than 100 deaths in a single day.

Anthony Fauci's frustration at Trump's inaccuracies is showing. Science magazine's Jon Cohen asked the head of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases about having to be the representative of "truth and facts" at the White House when Trump is saying things that aren't true. "I can't jump in front of the microphone and push him down," Fauci said. "Okay, he said it. Let's try and get it corrected for the next time."

Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.), the first senator to test positive for the virus, is now under intense scrutiny for not isolating during the week he was waiting to get his test results. The Post reports he had lunch with other senators, was around staffers and journalists, and worked out in the Senate gym on Sunday. Hours later, his office announced he had tested positive.

Utah GOP Sens. Mike Lee and Mitt Romney both said they will self-quarantine because they interacted with Paul in the past few days. As it stands, Congress cannot work remotely, so Paul, Lee and Romney will not be able to vote on the stimulus bill, tightening Senate Republicans' margins to get it passed. Minnesota Democratic Sen.

Amy Klobuchar's husband has tested positive for covid-19 and is hospitalized in Virginia.

Defense Secretary Mark T. Esper said two U.S. Army field hospitals will be deployed this week, likely to New York City and Seattle. They're expected to provide 248 beds each.

Spain's death toll climbed more than 25 percent in a day, rising from 1,720 on Sunday to 2,182 on Monday. "The worst is yet to come," Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez said Sunday. After Italy, Spain has been the hardest-hit country in Europe.

U.K. Prime Minister Boris Johnson announced a stay-at-home order for the entire country, except for essential activities which include shopping for necessities, exercise, doctors appointments and getting to and from work. The death toll in the U.K. is over 350.

Olympic officials say they are considering postponing the 2020 Summer Games. Canada said it would not send its athletes to compete, making it the first country to refuse to participate. "This is not solely about athlete health — it is about public health," the Canadian Olympic Committee said in a statement, noting athletes cannot train safely right now.

Health researchers are finding an "evil genius" in the novel coronavirus, one that hijacks cells and spreads its replicas everywhere before its host even has symptoms. In some, the illness is deadly. In others, it is mild enough that infected people will readily spread it to others — unaware that they are even sick. Read more about how this new virus is so sneaky, deadly and hard to defeat.

---

Content from Slack

Helpful how-tos for transitioning to remote work

Find yourself working remotely all of a sudden? Slack is here to help with this comprehensive set of tips to make remote work productive. With all of your tools and communication in one place, Slack brings the team together, no matter where everyone is working from.

---

Live updates

Track the spread of the outbreak in the U.S. and abroad with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Follow live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

Want to know more? Submit your question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

"Is vinegar a good disinfectant for the coronavirus?" —Maryann Vandrielen, Flagstaff, Ariz.

Unfortunately, there's no evidence that vinegar kills coronavirus, despite being a popular non-toxic choice for household cleaning.

Your best options, according to the CDC, are diluted bleach, rubbing alcohol solutions with at least 70 percent alcohol and EPA-registered household disinfectants like Lysol and Clorox products.

These products are in short supply at the stores, though they are still being restocked.

The CDC recommends wearing gloves when you disinfect, and setting those gloves aside to be used only for covid-19 cleaning. The high-trafficked surfaces should be the first things you disinfect: doorknobs, light switches, remotes, handles, desks, toilets and sinks.

If you're using a bleach solution, use 1/3 cup of bleach per gallon of water. If you're making a smaller batch, go with 4 teaspoons of bleach for a quart of water.

The CDC has a full list of approved products that are known to kill coronavirus.

---

A live Q&A on mental health

Need mental health advice on how to cope with the outbreak? Licensed clinical psychologist Dr. Andrea Bonior will be online Tuesday at 1 p.m. Eastern to take your questions about maintaining your mental health during this tumultuous time. Submit a question now, then tune in tomorrow or check back for the transcript.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- 9 charts that show why the economy is in a scary spot
- Video of times the Trump administration has contradicted itself on coronavirus
- The growing, urgent demand on crisis hotlines amid the outbreak
- A fascinating visual breakdown of the virus that scientists hope will help them defeat it

Olympic gold medalist says covid-19 is ‘by far the worst virus’ he has ever had

By Cindy Boren • Read more »

---

Governors and mayors in growing uproar over Trump’s lagging coronavirus response

By Robert Costa and Aaron Gregg • Read more »

---

The coronavirus isn’t alive. That’s why it’s so hard to kill.

By Sarah Kaplan, William Wan and Joel Achenbach • Read more »

---

Far more people in the U.S. have the coronavirus than you think

Perspective • By Marc Lipsitch • Read more »

---

Wash your hands, Sweet Caroline

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Drop Me The Link for to cut through the 2020 noise and get the most interesting election story we're group chatting about sent to your inbox three times a week. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 24 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 24, 2020 11:26:33 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Tue., March 24, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Industry groups push wish lists to White House, governors

Industries from oil processing to paper making are asking policymakers to designate their workers as "essential" in response to more than a dozen governors implementing stay-at-home measures. Trade groups are using the pandemic as a new justification for long-held policy priorities. Here's the rundown of what industries have been telling policymakers they need to weather the COVID-19 storm.

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

Stimulus talks near agreement — Schumer

3. PANDEMIC:

Could the U.S., like China, face a medical waste crisis?

CORONAVIRUS

4. ENERGY POLICY:

Nuclear industry's plea: We're essential

5. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

EPA spokesperson detailed to HHS for pandemic response

6. NATIONAL PARKS:

Yellowstone holds out as pressure mounts for more shutdowns

7. TRANSPORTATION:

Automakers send coronavirus requests to Congress

8. EPA:

Pandemic delays legal battle over carbon rule

9. CALIFORNIA:

Governor looks for ways to cut crowds at beaches, parks

NATURAL RESOURCES

10. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Famous frog back in spotlight as Trump admin launches review

AIR AND WATER

---

11. WATER POLLUTION:

Chicken plant scores court win over residents' objections

12. DROUGHT:

Southern Calif. welcomes drenching from spring storm

STATES

---

13. NEW ENGLAND:

Heavy, wet snow causes thousands of power outages

14. NORTH DAKOTA:

Whooping crane sightings to increase as birds migrate

INTERNATIONAL

---

15. NEPAL:

From top to bottom line: Everest closing means financial hit

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 24 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 24, 2020 2:23:12 PM

---

INTERIOR: Pandemic slows BLM's move out West. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
NATIONAL PARKS: Pandemic shuts down Yellowstone, Grand Teton.
ADVOCACY: Thunberg says it's 'extremely likely' she had coronavirus.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Tue., March 24, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/24/full?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/24/stories/1062691817?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
1. INTERIOR:
Pandemic slows BLM's move out West

The Bureau of Land Management has suspended "all nonessential travel" nationwide due to the rapid spread of the novel coronavirus, likely slowing efforts to complete the move of its Washington headquarters to Grand Junction, Colo.

TODAY'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/24/stories/1062691589?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
2. NATIONAL PARKS:
Pandemic shuts down Yellowstone, Grand Teton

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/24/stories/1062691375?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
3. ADVOCACY:
Thunberg says it's 'extremely likely' she had coronavirus

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/24/stories/1062691337?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
4. ENDANGERED SPECIES:
Enviros sue to protect Yellowstone bison

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/24/stories/1062691717?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
5. AIR POLLUTION:
Report: Concrete industry efforts to curb impacts hit hurdles

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/24/stories/1062691603?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
6. EPA:
IG criticizes some of agency's cyber efforts

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/24/calendars?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
7. CALENDAR:
Activity for March 23 - March 29, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.
ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News
E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 25 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Wednesday, March 25, 2020 5:08:56 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Wed., March 25, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

The virus ignited action worldwide. Why warming hasn't

Experts in psychology explain why so many people are willing to disrupt their lives to contain the coronavirus, but not climate change.

TOP STORIES

2. ANTARCTICA:

Glacier over world's deepest canyon faces irreversible melt

3. NEWSMAKER:

5 things to know about FEMA chief Peter Gaynor

4. COURTS:

Feds urge 9th Circuit to keep kids' climate case dormant

PANDEMIC

5. EMISSIONS:

Coronavirus slows work on ambitious fusion experiment

6. FINANCE:

Mark Carney urges climate action amid coronavirus crisis

PEOPLE

7. Q&A:

Climate must be addressed with coronavirus urgency — expert

POLITICS

8. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump agencies steadily push rollbacks as pandemic rages

9. FINANCE:

Plunge in pollution cost is hindering key green ambition

IN THE STATES

10. CLIMATE IMPACTS:

90-degree temperatures possible across Deep South this week

GLOBAL

---

11. HEALTH:

Virus deaths stir calls in China to clean up air pollution

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 25 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Wednesday, March 25, 2020 5:40:30 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Wed., March 25, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

3 ways coronavirus is upending the oil industry

President Trump said yesterday that he hoped to end many U.S. travel and business shutdowns by Easter. But analysts consider near-term shocks to be just the beginning of the oil and gas industry's woes.

TOP STORIES

2. WIND ENERGY:

'A crisis unlike anything the market has ever seen'

3. PANDEMIC:

DOE launches initiative to find coronavirus breakthrough

4. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump energy adviser Mike McKenna exits

TECHNOLOGY

5. CARBON CAPTURE:

World's largest CCS proposal not viable – report

LAW

6. SUPREME COURT:

Groups: Gas pipeline ruling gives states too much power

CONGRESS

7. CORONAVIRUS:

Oil crash reignites calls for 'NOPEC' legislation

OIL AND GAS

8. PIPELINES:

S.D. governor signs 'riot-boosting' penalties

9. ENERGY MARKETS:

G-7 calls on oil-producing countries to promote stability

10. POLITICS:

Guyana's future as world's fastest-growing economy dims

ELECTRICITY

---

11. BUSINESS:

Canadian utility closes on purchase of Emera Maine

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Optimist: How you can help during the coronavirus outbreak
Date: Wednesday, March 25, 2020 7:42:52 AM

Johnson & Johnson

World's Largest Healthcare Company

See all we're doing >

Powered by  LiveIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

The Optimist

Stories that inspire.

---

Editor's note: During the coronavirus outbreak, we will be sending an extra issue of The Optimist on some Wednesdays. We hope you enjoy the extra dose of inspiration.

(Craig Hudson for The Post)

How you can help during the coronavirus outbreak

As the coronavirus outbreak upends many aspects of daily life, we've compiled a list of ways you can help others.

By Kanyakrit Vongkiatkajorn and Laura Daily • Read more »

---

Mom is stuck inside amid the coronavirus outbreak. Teens we never met gave us hope amid hardship.

Until we can pick up our happy routines again, we know we'll get through, thanks to a bunch of caring middle schoolers who also have been forced to spend time alone, away from some of the people they love.

Perspective • By Cathy Free • Read more »

---

People are adopting dogs, cats and chickens to cope with self-isolation

Working from home and unable to go out, people are bringing home dogs and cats for companionship.

By Kim Kavlin and Heather Kelly • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

Johnson & Johnson
World's Largest Healthcare Company
See all we're doing >
Powered by LiveIntent

Gift cards, merchandise and to-go orders: Here's how restaurants say customers should support them

What they really need is ready income.

By Kristen Hartke • Read more »

Puzzles are having a moment

Puzzle Warehouse, a family-owned shop in St. Louis, suddenly found itself overwhelmed with business. "We've never seen something like this," said owner Brian Way.

By Allison Klein • Read more »

Four ways to help prevent loneliness while you're social distancing

Loneliness, we know from research, can be as bad for your health as smoking.

Opinion • By Amanda Ripley • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

Johnson & Johnson

World's Largest Healthcare Company

See all we're doing

Powered by LiveIntent

---

Smile: Three stories guaranteed to take your mind off you-know-what

What do pine cones, rocks and baby owls have in common? More than you might think.

Perspective • By John Kelly • Read more »

---

At a place where memories are fleeting, some powerful ones are being made through a glass door

Because of the coronavirus, three generations hadn't seen one another in person for weeks before the chance came on a recent afternoon.

Perspective • By Theresa Vargas • Read more »

---

Yes, there is panic. But I'm embracing a slower life.

The pandemic has brought our frantic pace of life to a screeching halt. I have been able to carve out a sliver of peace and gratitude in my home

Perspective • By Erin O'Connor • Read more »

---

From porch picnics to student lunches, here's what you said lifted your spirits amid the pandemic

We asked you to share the moments of kindness and snapshots of beauty that are helping you to stay positive during this global crisis. Here is some of what you told us.

By Marisa Iati • Read more »

---

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Optimist | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Optimist or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Prince Charles testing positive illustrates how the coronavirus does not discriminate
Date: Wednesday, March 25, 2020 8:40:52 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by DXC

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

Prince Charles testing positive illustrates how the coronavirus does not discriminate

The novel coronavirus does not care whether you're rich or poor, white or black, man or woman, straight or gay, Republican or Democrat, young or old, famous like Tom Hanks or infamous like Harvey Weinstein, documented or undocumented, educated or uneducated, royal or commoner – or anything else. No one is immune. While the well-connected certainly have better access to testing and treatment than others, in this world of inequality, viruses are equalizers.

Prince Charles, the heir to the British throne, has tested positive. The 71-year-old is a man of robust health who enjoys horseback riding. His spokesman said this morning that he has mild symptoms “but otherwise remains in good health.” Buckingham Palace says the prince last saw his 93-year-old mother, Queen Elizabeth II, two weeks ago, and she remains in good health.

Charles is one of 436,159 confirmed cases worldwide of the virus that causes the disease covid-19. He’s not even the first royal. Monaco’s Prince Albert II, the son of Grace Kelly, tested positive last week.

The global pandemic has now killed 19,648. The United States has 55,238 confirmed cases and 802 reported deaths. All these numbers will be higher by the time you read this.

Yesterday, complications from the contagion killed playwright Terrence McNally, who rose to the forefront of American theater chronicling gay lives with works such as “Love! Valour! Compassion!” and “Master Class.” He was 81.

Alan Finder, a legendary retired New York Times reporter, died at 72 from the virus. Former colleagues remember him as a calming presence and “one of the menschiest guys around.”

But complications from the coronavirus also killed a school principal from Brooklyn, a woman who was half his age. Dezann Romain, 36, is the first known death of a New York City public school employee from the outbreak, per the New York Post.

A teenager who lived in Lancaster, Calif., and had no apparent preexisting conditions may be the first minor to have died from the coronavirus in the United States, but authorities say confirming this will require additional testing. “This is a devastating reminder that covid-19 affects people of all ages,” L.A. County Public Health Department Director Barbara Ferrer told the Los Angeles Times.

The virus killed two health-care workers in Georgia, which has a death toll of 25. One of the victims, a 42-year-old mammogram technician, was found dead in her home. She had been dead 12 to 16 hours when police, coming to do a welfare check, discovered her body. Her child, apparently 4 or 5 years old, was in the home at the time, according to the Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

Former Texas A&M basketball star David Edwards died from complications of the virus. He was 48.

Thankfully, the vast majority who get this coronavirus will survive. But the deluge of news about who has been infected underscores how blind the virus is to class differences. To wit: Harvard University President Lawrence Bacow, 68, and his wife, Adele, have both tested positive, according to the Harvard Crimson. So have Amazon workers at six U.S. warehouses and counting. The e-commerce giant, led by Washington Post owner Jeff Bezos, has been racing to hire 100,000 new workers to meet surging online orders. A 31-year-old Mexican immigrant, being held in New Jersey, became the first detainee in ICE custody to test positive, according to CNN.

One of the 39 news cases reported on Tuesday in Kentucky was a 20-something who tested positive after attending a “coronavirus party.” Talk about tempting fate. “This is the part where I, the person that tells everybody to be calm, have to remain calm myself because anyone who goes to something like this may think that they are indestructible, but it’s someone else’s loved one that they are going to hurt,” said Kentucky Gov. Andy Beshear (D), according to the Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Bluegrass State’s junior senator, Rand Paul (R), has also faced criticism for his cavalier decision to swim in the pool and work out in the Senate gym while he awaited the results of his coronavirus test, which was positive.

Even Time magazine’s reigning person of the year wasn’t safe. Climate change activist Greta Thunberg disclosed that she probably has a mild case. “I was feeling tired, had shivers, a sore throat and coughed,” the 17-year-old posted on Instagram. “My dad experienced the same symptoms, but much more intense and with a fever.”

Others fighting the coronavirus include opera singer Plácido Domingo and rapper Slim Thug; Canadian first lady Sophie Grégoire Trudeau and Miami Mayor Francis Suarez; Reps. Mario Díaz-Balart (R-Fla.) and Ben McAdams (D-Utah); actors Idris Elba (Stringer Bell on “The Wire”) and Kristofer Hivju (Tormund Giantsbane on “Game of Thrones”); and former “Bachelor” star Colton Underwood and Bravo host Andy Cohen. We’re all susceptible.

---

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

---

Four takes on what it's like to face the coronavirus

An electron microscope shows the coronavirus (in yellow) growing out of cells that were cultured in a lab from an American victim. (National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases/Reuters)

“I probably have a ‘mild to moderate’ case ... I don’t think I could survive worse.”

“Of course, I don’t know for sure that I have covid-19, because there is no testing where I live,” columnist David Von Drehle writes from Kansas City. “People talk about testing on TV all day long. Usually, I’m listening through a scrim of fitful sleep. The closest I came to being tested was on Saturday. After my wife spent an entire day on the phone, a nice doctor met me in an emergency room parking lot and taught me to put on a mask. Then she had me stand by the car while she listened to my lungs. She smiled under her mask and said, ‘Given your symptoms, we’ll assume that you have it. Come back if you get worse.’ I don’t want to come back, even if I might get a test. ... The first symptom was fever. I figured I had the flu. No such luck. The mild to moderate symptoms of this coronavirus make garden-variety flu seem like a tea party.”

“What I learned when my husband got sick with coronavirus.”

“My husband, a tall, robust 56-year-old who regularly goes — who regularly went — on five-hour bike rides from our Brooklyn neighborhood to Jamaica Bay in Queens and back, has been lying on his back, staring at the ceiling, or curled on his side, wearing the same pajama bottoms for days because it is too hard to change out of them, too hard to stay that long on his feet, too cold outside the sheets and blankets he huddles beneath. It has been 12 days since T woke up in the middle of the night on March 12 with chills. The next day, just as reports were growing more urgent about the coronavirus spreading in the United States, he thought he felt better, but then the chills came back, along with aches and a fever of 100.4,” writes New York Times editor Jessica Lustig. “Now we live in a world in which I have planned with his doctor which emergency room we should head to if T suddenly gets worse, a world in which I am suddenly afraid we won’t have enough of the few things tempering the raging fever and soaking sweats and severe aches wracking him — the Advil and Tylenol that the doctors advise us to layer, one after the other, and that I scroll through websites searching for, seeing ‘out of stock’ again and again.”

“You’re not prepared for this pandemic until you’ve had the tough conversations about end-of-life care.”

“Last week, we ran our first code related to covid-19. A code on its own can be a high-stress situation. Someone is literally dying right before you, and you must do everything within your power to revive the person. The epinephrine, the bicarbonate, the crushing of the sternum and ribs for chest compressions, shoving the breathing tube down,” writes Shaoli Chaudhuri, an internal medicine resident at New York Presbyterian/Columbia University Medical Center. “But a covid-19 code is an animal all its own. As our colleagues prepared to rush into the room of the patient who was clearly seconds from arresting, I yelled at them: ‘Get your mask on! Do you have a mask?! Stop and get your gear on!’ The last thing we wanted was for any of our co-workers to be exposed, given the body fluids they were about to encounter. ... Each of us knew, sadly, that this patient would not survive. And every moment we spent doing our job put us at greater risk of getting sick. ... We are already in the doomsday situation, and it is not going to get easier.”

“I’m on the front lines. I have no plan for this.”

“As an I.C.U. doctor, I’m used to giving bad news, but I was not prepared for this,” Daniela Lamas, a critical care doctor, writes in the Times. “I paused outside my patient’s room to watch her for a moment. She lay on the bed, tethered to a ventilator by the tracheostomy tube in her neck. Her husband sat in a small plastic chair beside her with his hand on her leg, smiling at some silly sitcom playing on the TV. I hesitated a beat. And then I entered. I had to tell him. There was no way to soften the blow. The hospital is changing its rules, I said. No more visitors. When you leave today, you both need to say goodbye. ... As we tighten our protocols to protect our patients from the threat of Covid-19, she’s alone. ... It’s a tough decision that leaves our patients to suffer through their illnesses in a medical version of solitary confinement.”

---

The federal response

Congress and the White House reached a deal at 1:30 a.m.

The Senate plans to vote this afternoon on the $2 trillion stimulus package, which would send $1,200 checks to many Americans, create a $367 billion loan program for small businesses and establish a $500 billion lending fund for industries, cities and states.

“The legislation ensures that these taxpayer-backed loans cannot go to firms owned by President Trump, other White House officials, or members of Congress. This would suggest that Trump-owned properties, including hotels that have been impacted, cannot seek taxpayer assistance,” Erica Werner, Mike DeBonis and Paul Kane report. “Other provisions include $150 billion for state and local stimulus funds and $130 billion for hospitals. It would significantly boost unemployment insurance benefits, expanding eligibility and offering workers an additional $600 a week for four months, on top of what state unemployment programs pay. ... The White House and Republicans agreed to allow an oversight board and create a Treasury Department Special Inspector General for Pandemic Recovery to scrutinize the lending decisions and detect abusive or fraudulent behavior. ...

“After Senate passage, the next step is a little less clear. The House is out of session, so action there could take longer, depending on whether lawmakers can agree to pass the bill by ‘unanimous consent,’ which would require agreement from all members of the chamber. But some liberals and conservatives have already hinted they could oppose it.”

Health experts decried Trump for saying he wants “the country opened” by Easter.

“Ending the shutdown now in America would be disastrous, many say, because the country has barely given those restrictions time to work, and because U.S. leaders have not pursued alternative strategies used in other countries to avert the potential deaths of hundreds of thousands,” William Wan, Reed Albergotti and Joel Achenbach report. “Orders to stay at home have largely come from state governors, who may simply ignore Trump. But public health experts say the contradictory messaging would make persuading people to comply — already a difficult job — even harder. ... Even in a hypothetical world where the economy was valued above human life, many economists say it wouldn't necessarily make sense to sacrifice the elderly, abruptly send everyone back to work and allow the virus to run its course. Restarting international flights, for example, wouldn't mean consumers would buy tickets. And the shock from the spreading infections and mounting deaths would make any sense of normalcy hard to maintain.”

- Fox News has swerved again. Hosts are calling for Trump to abandon restrictions. “The commentary dovetails with, and may even have encouraged, Trump’s expressing a desire for businesses to start reopening after the federal government’s 15-day, stay-at-home period ends on Monday,” Paul Farhi and Sarah Ellison report.
- Ethicists say picking between older Americans’ lives and the economy is a false choice. “Texas Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick set off a firestorm of criticism after he suggested Monday [on Fox] that he and other older Americans should be willing to sacrifice their lives for the sake of the economy,” Sarah Pulliam Bailey reports.
- Tension continues mounting between Trump and the scientific community. “Trump has set up something of a gladiatorial process for managing the coronavirus, in which each adviser and expert argues forcefully for their specific perspective — be it public health or economic growth — creating a dynamic that has left [Debbie] Birn, [Tony] Fauci and others often offering Trump recommendations he is not eager to hear,” Ashley Parker, Josh Dawsey and Yasmeen Abutaleb report.
- Putting the burden on states, Trump is still leading from behind. “Although he has taken unilateral action in some cases — such as suspending travel first from China and more recently from Europe, and deploying military ships and other federal assets to coronavirus hot spots — he has played a back-seat role elsewhere that belies his omnipresence in the national media,” Phil Rucker notes. “Trump sought Tuesday to hold [New York's] governor, Andrew M. Cuomo (D), responsible for the lack of ventilators and other medical equipment in short supply.”

- But Trump has the best job approval rating of his presidency. A Gallup poll puts the president’s approval rating at 49 percent, up from 44 percent earlier in the month, with 60 percent approving his handling of the coronavirus situation and 38 percent disapproving. It's probably a rally-around-the-flag effect.

---

Quote of the day

“Protecting people and protecting the economy are not mutually exclusive,” Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine (R) said during his daily briefing in Columbus. “We save our economy by first saving lives. And we have to do it in that order.”

The coronavirus could be FEMA’s biggest disaster ever.

“While U.S. health authorities remain in the lead on the medical front of dealing with the virus, FEMA has been tasked with handling almost everything else,” Nick Miroff reports. “The agency is uniquely qualified for that role, former FEMA leaders say, and its staff is well-prepared to meet the challenge after several busy years of hurricanes and wildfires. But there were signs this week that the agency has stumbled out of the gate. ... If the pandemic’s spread through New York City is followed by significant outbreaks in other large American cities, the agency will be facing a panoramic crisis across the country as the United States heads into spring flood season, with the potential for hurricanes and wildfires to follow. ... Congressional reports that evaluated the agency’s responses to the hurricanes and wildfires in 2017 and 2018 raised concerns about staffing shortages and a potential lack of FEMA reservists. As of this week, several thousand reservists have yet to be fully activated in response to the coronavirus outbreak, but former FEMA officials say it would be a mistake to view that as a lack of urgency or preparation.”

Oracle has partnered with the administration to collect data on unproven drugs.

“A series of conversations Trump has had with tech billionaire Larry Ellison have helped convince him that two old anti-malarial drugs may be game-changing treatments for covid-19,” Yasmeen Abutaleb, Laurie McGinley and Josh Dawsey report. “Ellison — who recently held a high-profile fundraiser for Trump — has helped arrange a partnership between Oracle, the software company he co-founded, and the federal government to crowdsource that idea by collecting data in real time from doctors trying out those and other unproven drugs on covid-19 patients. While the anti-malarial drugs are also being tested in clinical trials, the primary purpose of Oracle’s new website and mobile app is to help gather information on patients prescribed the medications outside of trials and more quickly assess whether the drugs — or any others that may emerge as possible treatments — are effective against covid-19, for which there is no proven treatment. ... The administration is also exploring whether it will offer bonus payments to doctors who use the technology. This raises ethical concerns among some health officials, who fear that will further promote the use of unproven drugs.”

This coronavirus isn't mutating quickly, which suggests a vaccine could offer lasting protection.

“That relative stability suggests the virus is less likely to become more or less dangerous as it spreads, and represents encouraging news for researchers hoping to create a long-lasting vaccine,” Joel Achenbach reports. Peter Thielen, a molecular geneticist at John Hopkins who has been studying the virus, said there are only about four to 10 genetic differences between the strains that have infected people in the U.S. and the original virus that spread in Wuhan. This would mean that a vaccine against it could act like immunizations against the measles or chickenpox vaccines – protecting people for a long time.

The scramble for medical equipment remains chaotic.

“Some hard-hit parts of the country are receiving fresh supplies of N95 masks, but others are still out of stock. Hospitals [and state officials] are requesting donations of masks and gloves from construction companies, nail salons and tattoo parlors, and considering using ventilators designed for large animals because they cannot find the kind made for people,” Jeanne Whalen, Tony Romm, Aaron Gregg and Tom Hamburger report. “Although governors and hospital leaders welcome the many U.S. companies stepping forward to make masks and ventilators, they fear the voluntary efforts will be too scattershot without federal coordination. ... Trump seemed to acknowledge the chaos on Tuesday, however, calling the world market for masks and ventilators ‘crazy’ in a tweet, adding that it was ‘not easy’ to acquire them. But he also tweeted that he hasn’t had to use the Defense Production Act ‘because no one has said NO!’ ... Soaring demand and competitive bidding is driving prices up. Premier, a health-care company that purchases equipment and supplies for 4,000 acute-care hospitals, used to pay about 30 cents for an N95 mask but is now seeing prices between $3 and $15 per mask."

- The federal government's Strategic National Stockpile, a reserve meant to fortify overwhelmed hospitals during a crisis, only has 16,660 ventilators. (Center for Public Integrity)
- Ford, 3M and GE have teamed up to make ventilators and respirators, but the process could take months. Ford said it expects to deliver its first batch of 1,000 ventilators this week to Detroit-area hospitals. Eventually, it expects to produce 100,000 a week. (Jacob Bogage)
- Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.) urged Trump to use his powers under the Defense Production Act. "I don't want to see doctors having to make a choice of who gets to live and who has to die because they don't have the equipment to save their lives," he said. "You can't build a ventilator overnight." (Dallas Morning News)
- More than 750,000 medical-grade masks were auctioned with huge markups in Texas by a private firm. Bottles of Purell went for $40. (Bloomberg News)
- The Securities and Exchange Commission warned of the risk of insider trading during virus-induced market turbulence. (Rena Merle)
- The Justice Department said those who intentionally spread the virus could be charged as terrorists. (Politico)
- The Federal Reserve enlisted BlackRock, the world's largest asset manager, to shepherd some of its debt-buying programs. (Bloomberg News)
- The American politicians and lawmakers leading the coronavirus response are in their 60s, 70s and 80s, meaning they are squarely within the age range of the most at-risk segments of the population. (David Nakamura)

---

Domestic damage

The feds instructed anyone who recently visited New York City to self-quarantine for 14 days.

“New York health experts predict the state will need about 140,000 hospital beds to handle the crisis, exceeding last week’s estimate by 30,000. Cuomo said Tuesday that the state has 53,000 existing beds,” Ben Guarino, Shayna Jacobs and Tim Craig report. Fauci “said that 1 out of every 1,000 people in New York now have the coronavirus. ... New York now has more than 25,000 coronavirus cases, including more than 15,000 in New York City. The state has added about 5,000 new cases per day, and Cuomo said he expects those trends to accelerate at least for the next 14 to 21 days.”

- The New York City Subway is deserted during evening rush hour. “So much so that several regular observers — police officers, a janitor, a mail carrier and a busker — compared it to the deserted zombieland of the subway at 3 a.m. At least half of the few riders were wearing masks and latex gloves,” Jada Yuan and Richard Morgan report.
- Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) urged New Yorkers to stay away. “He spent Tuesday amplifying his order requiring fliers from the New York area to self-isolate for two weeks upon arrival in the Sunshine State,” Cleve Wootson and Lori Rozsa report. His order applies to people who enter Florida by airplane, but it does not apply to those streaming into the state on Interstate 95.

- American islands – from Maine to Hawaii – are experimenting with isolation to stop the spread. (Frances Stead Sellers)

We're seeing more second-order consequences from the outbreak.

- Counties and states have released thousands of inmates around the country, as public health officials issued dire warnings that cramped and unsanitary conditions could turn prisons into havens for the virus. The federal prison system is coming under intense pressure to take similar action. (Kimberly Kindy, Emma Brown and Dalton Bennett)
- The National Rifle Association will cut salaries 20 percent and is bracing for layoffs after the pandemic forced the gun lobby to cancel its annual meeting set for April and a number of fundraisers. (Beth Reinhard)
- The Los Angeles sheriff ordered all gun stores to close. Fear has prompted a spike in firearm sales. (Mercury News)
- The non-famous people in the entertainment industry are getting hammered by production shutdowns. A union representing crew members estimated that 120,000 of its members have already lost work. (Sonia Rao)
- Election officials in both parties are calling for emergency funding to expand mail-in voting before November. (Amy Gardner, Elise Viebeck and Joseph Marks)
- Bernie Sanders's campaign said he would like to debate Joe Biden in April, but the DNC has not scheduled a debate. The comments are the clearest indicator yet that, at least in the near term, Sanders has little intention of bowing out. "There is a growing sense among some in the Sanders campaign that Biden's response to the coronavirus has been shaky and that could justify Sanders's continued presence in the contest," Sean Sullivan reports.

Washington-area leaders slammed Trump's mixed ## messages.

“D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D), who has largely refrained from criticizing Trump, said the city is fighting coronavirus ‘absent any national direction’ and condemned the president’s about-face,” Gregory Schneider, Fenit Nirappil, Ovetta Wiggins and Rachel Chason report. “She ordered the closure of nonessential businesses as of 10 p.m. Wednesday, following similar orders in Maryland and Virginia on Monday. She also lowered the threshold for prohibited mass gatherings from 50 people to 10. ... In Maryland, where a Prince George’s County man became the state’s fourth virus-related fatality, Gov. Larry Hogan (R) said the messaging coming out of the White House was ‘pretty confusing’ and didn’t seem to match up with actions by the federal and state governments. ... In Virginia, which announced three coronavirus-related deaths Tuesday, Gov. Ralph Northam (D) also took issue with Trump’s comments, saying residents need to understand the need for continued sacrifice and not hear ‘mixed messages.’”

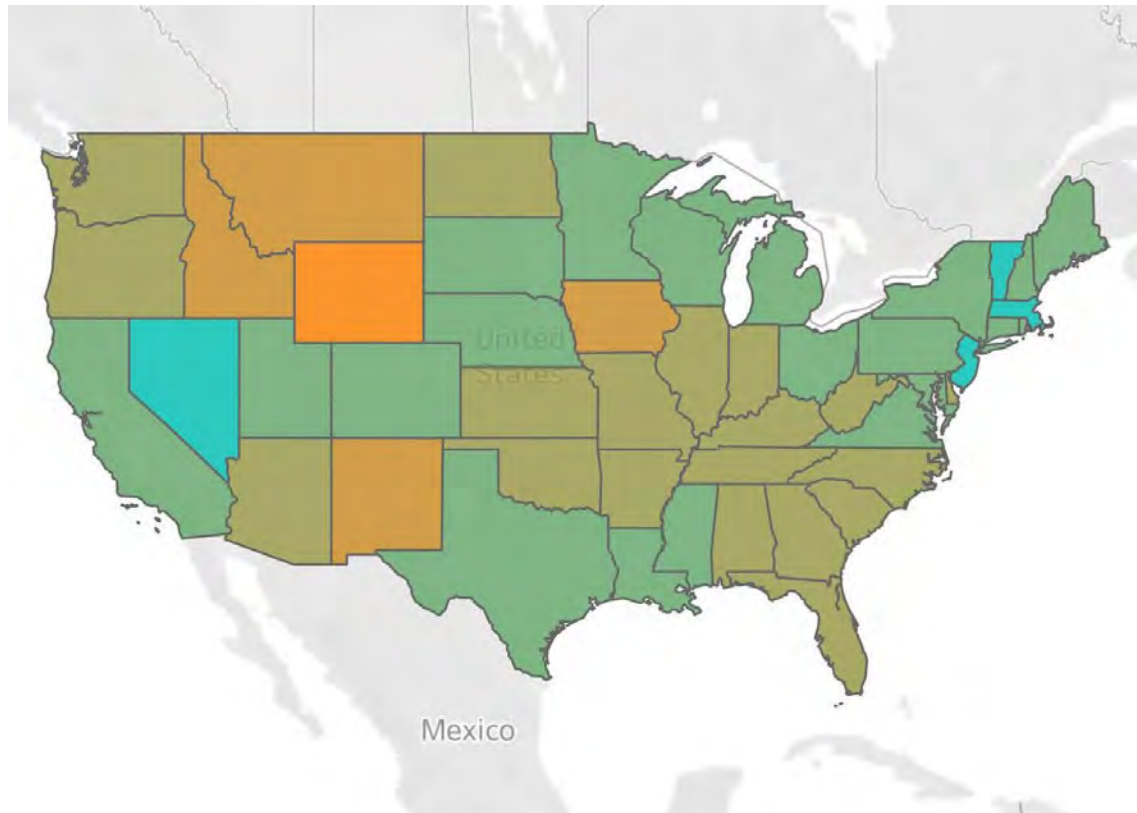

- The tally of known cases in the D.C. region jumped to 828. D.C. announced 46 new cases on Tuesday. D.C. extended tax deadlines and launched a $25 million business relief fund. (John Woodrow Cox and Dana Hedgpeth)
- Metro will close 19 stations indefinitely to limit the exposure of transit employees while keeping the system running. Closures will begin tomorrow. (Justin George)
- Liberty University welcomed students back to campus despite the outbreak. Jerry Falwell Jr., the school’s president, has said people are overreacting to the contagion. (Susan Svrluga and Laura Vozzella)

Smartphone data reveals which states are social distancing.

Unacast, a company that collects and analyzes phone GPS location data, launched a scoreboard that grades, county by county, which residents are changing behavior at the urging of health officials. Geoffrey Fowler explains that bright green represents an “A” score while bright orange is an “F.” Comparing the nation’s mass movements from March 20 to an average Friday, for example, D.C. got an “A” while Wyoming earned an “F”:

Global fallout

India's 1.3 billion people are now under a three-week lockdown.

“For the next 21 days, there will be restrictions on commerce and movement across the length and breadth of India. Even at the height of its battle against the virus, China did not impose a nationwide lockdown,” Joanna Slater and Niha Masih report. “On Tuesday, India had about 500 confirmed coronavirus cases, but the number is growing rapidly. Testing remains limited, and there are signs that the virus could be spreading undetected. ... Prime Minister Narendra Modi made clear that the country was at a crucial juncture. ‘If we don’t manage these 21 days, the country will be set back by 21 years,’ he said. His emotional appeal to citizens not to step out of their homes did not include specifics about how they would meet basic needs. That immediately provoked frantic buying at grocery stores, which remain open as essential services.”

- Spain's death toll surpassed 3,400 today, surpassing China and making it the world's hardest-hit country behind Italy. The nation's 46 million people have been barred from leaving home with few exceptions as the government races to add hospital beds. (Rick Noack)
- Malaysia, the world's main producer of medical gloves, cut its factory staff in half amid new restrictions aimed at stemming the outbreak in that country. (Miriam Berger)

- India banned the export of hydroxychloroquine, one of the drugs Trump claimed could treat the virus. The government said that it would fulfill current orders and provide the drug on case-by-case basis for humanitarian reasons. (Berger)
- South Korea agreed to send spare medical equipment to the United States after Trump called President Moon Jae-in to make the request. (Berger)
- Iranian President Hasan Rouhani announced there would be new restrictions, possibly including the closure of public parks and a ban on all travel. (Paul Schemm)

Virologists are exploring why the death rate is so much lower in Germany than elsewhere.

“In Italy, 9.5 percent of the people who have tested positive for the virus have succumbed to covid-19, according to data compiled at Johns Hopkins University. In France, the rate is 4.3 percent. But in Germany, it’s 0.4 percent,” Loveday Morris reports. “The biggest reason for the difference, infectious disease experts say, is Germany’s work in the early days of its outbreak to track, test and contain infection clusters. That means Germany has a truer picture of the size of its outbreak than places that test only the obviously symptomatic, most seriously ill or highest-risk patients. ... Other factors, such as the age of those infected and the timing of Germany’s outbreak, also play a role in the differing death rates. But testing widely has been key. Germany, with 31,150 cases at midday Tuesday, appeared to have a larger outbreak than France, with 20,149. But the higher death rate in France implies there were more undiagnosed cases there. France’s outbreak could be larger than Germany’s.”

Europe is trying to contain the crisis with unprecedented offers to pay private-sector salaries.

“France, Germany, Denmark, Britain and others have decided to take over the payrolls of struggling companies, so that workers don't get laid off. The hope is that by paying people to stay home, governments can slow the virus's spread while also averting an economic depression," Michael Birnbaum and Karla Adam report. "The pricey gamble could work if the coronavirus crisis lasts just a few months, many economists say, since companies would be able to exit their frozen status almost immediately. But if the restrictions drag on, the financial support could saddle European governments with gigantic bills while also failing to avert the collapse of businesses."

Russia's official count of cases is relatively low. Even Moscow's mayor is questioning it.

"Russia, spanning two continents ravaged by the coronavirus pandemic, remains an anomaly: a population of around 145 million but just 495 confirmed cases of the disease and one possible death, although the cause has been disputed," Isabelle Khurshudyan reports. "But the statistics have prompted skepticism — of both the method of testing and whether a nationwide uptick in pneumonia cases could be, as some doctors and government critics believe, linked to covid-19 ... President Vladimir Putin said last week that 'the situation in our country looks a lot better' than Europe and was 'under control.' But state television showed Putin wearing a full hazmat suit while visiting one of Moscow's coronavirus hospitals Tuesday. Two hours earlier, Moscow's mayor told him that the number of cases is probably much higher than what has been reported because of limitations in testing. ... Moscow saw a 37 percent increase in pneumonia in January compared with a year ago, according to Rosstat, Russia's statistics agency. The data showed 6,921 pneumonia cases in January, up from 5,058 during the same period in 2019."

Only one continent remains untouched by the virus: Antarctica.

Some 4,000 people from around the world have watched the virus progress from the barren continent, where it would be highly unlikely they catch the disease. If they did, it would be very risky. Most Arctic bases would struggle to contain an infection that spreads the way the coronavirus does. (Adam Taylor and Stefano Pitrelli)

---

Social media speed read

Utah's junior senator tested negative but will remain in quarantine:

Trump's reaction seemed sarcastic:

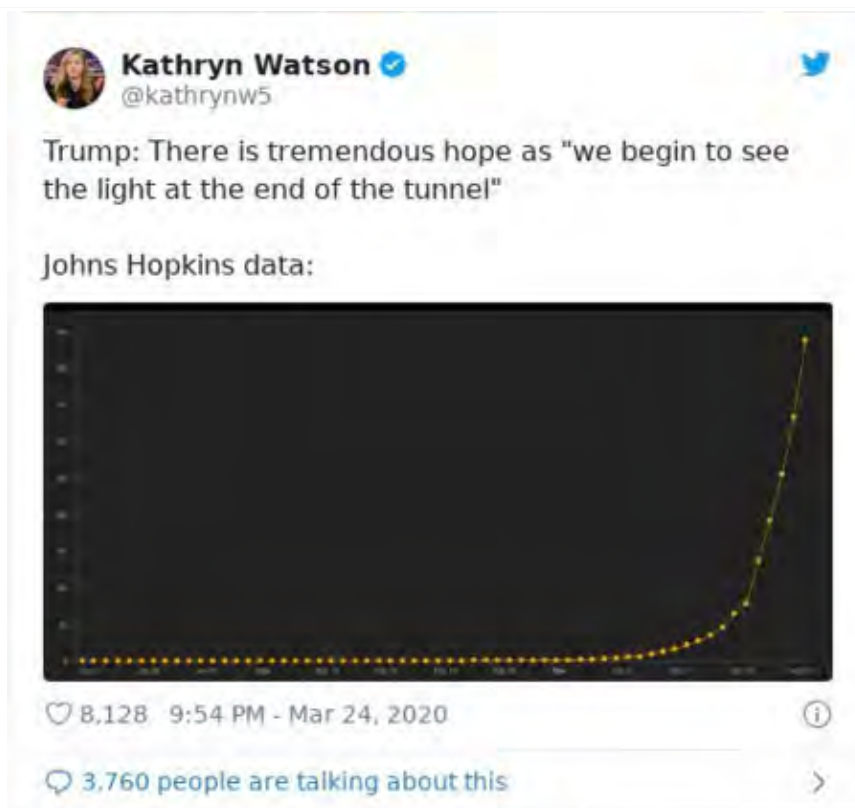

New York's governor had a blunt message for young people who aren't social distancing:

A conservative commentator shared this sad story:

The curve is not flattening yet, even as Trump muses about letting our guard down:

Hillary Clinton suggested Americans stop taking medical advice from the president:

Biden ripped Trump for downplaying the outbreak as it spread across America:

Olympic swimmer Katie Ledecky endorsed the delay of the Summer Games in Tokyo until 2021:

And Italians continue sharing heartbreaking warnings:

Videos of the day

Seth Meyers and his team shared a few jokes Seth can't tell, all from the safety of their homes:

Trevor Noah has fully settled into his new “Daily Social Distancing Show”:

Jimmy Fallon video chatted with John Legend:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 25 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Wednesday, March 25, 2020 2:20:29 PM

---

CONGRESS: Stimulus bill delayed: 'Massive drafting error'. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
PANDEMIC: Environmental Film Festival moves online.
WILDLIFE: How will sea turtle nesting season weather the pandemic?
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Wed., March 25, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/25/full?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/25/stories/1062700417?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
1. CONGRESS:
Stimulus bill delayed: 'Massive drafting error'

A group of Senate Republicans are raising concerns over a "massive drafting error" in the $2 trillion stimulus deal, raising new questions about the timing of congressional action to quickly enact the largest COVID-19 emergency package to date.

TODAY'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/25/stories/1062700507?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
2. PANDEMIC:
Environmental Film Festival moves online

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/25/stories/1062700293?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
3. WILDLIFE:
How will sea turtle nesting season weather the pandemic?

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/25/stories/1062700431?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
4. CHEMICALS:
EPA mulls rule to relax reporting requirements

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/25/stories/1062700505?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
5. AIR POLLUTION:
EPA draft would ease permitting rules for plant upgrades

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/25/calendars?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
6. CALENDAR:
Activity for March 23 - March 29, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.
ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News
E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001
Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Who's getting money in the stimulus bill
Date: Wednesday, March 25, 2020 3:14:04 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

Presented by Slack

By Angela Fritz
with Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest on the stimulus package

The Senate plans to vote on its $2 trillion stimulus bill this evening, though it is still being challenged on several fronts.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said the Senate's stimulus bill wouldn't be nearly enough to meet New York's need, saying it's "a drop in the bucket." Three Republican senators are opposing fast-tracking the vote because the unemployment benefits could mean people will make more money in unemployment than being employed. And it includes $17 billion in loans that is specifically worded for Boeing, The Post reports, which is already under intense scrutiny for its deadly mishandling of commercial jet safety.

If the bill passes the Senate today, the House expects to be able to vote on it Thursday. Here are some key pieces:

- Around $301 billion will go directly to taxpayers in the form of a one-time $1,200 check, or $2,400 for couples filing jointly for those making less than $75,000, plus $500 per child, with some caveats.
- A $367 billion loan program for small businesses, which will be able to take out loans of up to $10 million, and employers could use the money to pay employees making up to $100,000 a year.
- You can explore more details here.

---

Content from Slack

Helpful how-tos for transitioning to remote work

Find yourself working remotely all of a sudden? Slack is here to help with this comprehensive set of tips to make remote work productive. With all of your tools and communication in one place, Slack brings the team together, no matter where everyone is working from.

---

Other news

States are competing for hospital supplies as the number of cases in the U.S. surges. President Trump has repeatedly said he doesn't need to implement the Defense Production Act to force companies to produce supplies, but states and hospitals are describing extraordinary efforts to secure equipment. A former FEMA administrator told The Post the response should be led by governors but directed and funded by the federal government in order to avoid this problem.

The virus doesn't appear to be mutating rapidly, researchers say, which means a vaccine — when it comes — could be long-lasting. Scientists say it has looked the same almost everywhere it has appeared, and there's no indication that certain strains are deadlier than others.

A chorus of conservatives is lining up behind Trump's desire to “re-open the country” by mid-April, despite warnings from health experts that ending social distancing too soon would lead to an overwhelming spike in new cases and deaths. But Trump ultimately won't be the one who decides that. The 10th Amendment gives governors clear power to protect the health and safety of their residents, no matter the consequence to the economy, and some governors are already expressing skepticism that it would be possible to go back to normal by Easter.

Deputy Attorney General Jeffrey A. Rosen told law enforcement across the country that it should consider using terrorism laws to prosecute “the purposeful exposure and infection of others with COVID-19.” On Tuesday, Kentucky Gov. Andy Beshear (D) said some of the latest cases in his state were the result of a “coronavirus party.”

Thousands of police are calling out of work in New York City. Around 3,200 officers were out sick on Wednesday, which is 9 percent of NYPD's workforce and three times the normal rate. But Police Commissioner Dermot Shea told MSNBC serious crime was down 17 percent compared to this time last year.

Cramped and unsanitary conditions in jails and prisons could spread the virus rapidly, not only to inmates but to the people who work in those facilities. Counties and states are releasing thousands of nonviolent inmates to help control the potential spread, and the federal prison system is coming under intense pressure to take similar measures.

---

What is ‘essential?’

Many states have ordered non-essential businesses to close in order to promote social distancing. A Washington Post survey of 10 cities shows distinct differences in what is considered “essential,” not only in the enterprises allowed to remain open but in the efforts to enforce new restrictions. What qualifies where you live?

What counts as an essential business in 10 U.S. cities

By Reuben Fischer-Baum, Daniela Santamariña and Juliet Eilperin • Read more »

---

Live updates

Track the spread of the outbreak in the U.S. and abroad with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Follow live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need during this outbreak.

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

As the crisis deepens, so do our negative emotions, a serious problem for many people suffering in quarantine. Dr. Andrea Bonior, a clinical psychologist with Georgetown University, hosted a live chat on washingtonpost.com Tuesday. She offered advice for coping with paranoia, insomnia, hopelessness, rage and many other common mental challenges for this moment.

The full transcript is here, with some highlights below:

"It's feeling like every time my front door opens is a death sentence," a reader at high risk for covid-19 complained. Others are facing fear and anxiety over the prospect of losing their income, or falling ill and abandoning their children.

"It's okay to be afraid," Bonior counsels. "But try to notice — gently — when your thoughts become distorted. Ask yourself, is this thought realistic, or is it an unreliable narrator that comes from my heightened anxiety?"

"Stress levels tend to lower when we increase our sense of predictability and controllability," she writes, and suggests keeping a daily routine to add "some structure in your day."

"I can't sleep because I am terrified," one reader wrote, speaking for many now facing insomnia.

Bonior warns that pressuring yourself to fall asleep makes doing so even harder, and suggests investigating meditation, breathing exercises and visualization.

She recommends those same techniques if you are prone to panic attacks. "Try to intervene in the moment to decrease that anxiety," she writes. Doing so will also help you avoid mistaking the panic for symptoms of covid-19.

A reader whose sister-in-law died of cancer during quarantine asks, "How do I deal with not saying goodbye before she passed or after since there can be no funeral for the foreseeable future?"

Grieving in isolation is especially hard. Bonior recommends creating your own rituals: write about the deceased, talk to friends about them, or even talk to the air about them. "A lack of memorial service now is not a lack forever, or an indication that your sister-in-law will be forgotten," she says.

As politicians debate whether it's worth the effort to protect vulnerable populations from the virus, one 65-year-old reader is losing hope, writing: "I can't stop feeling lately like I'm disposable — and that we older folks should just grin and bear it."

"Hopelessness and helplessness tend to go together and egg each other on," Bonior replies, and suggests creating a daily plan to protect yourself and feel more in control.

"There will always be people who value certain groups above others," she notes. "Let's not let those voices — which are being heightened in these times — indicate anything about our society right now. They are the dark parts, but we don't need to elevate them."

There is far too much advice in the transcript to include it all here. Read the whole thing for tips on specific situations such as pregnancy, mental illness and eating disorders — and remember that whatever you are feeling, many others are, too.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- An endangered species under threat because of coronavirus
- Immigrant doctors blocked from helping the Army fight the outbreak
- Advice from astronauts on surviving isolation

Here's what major cities look like now that the coronavirus has shut everything down

By Karen Heller • Read more »

---

Hospitals consider universal do-not-resuscitate orders for coronavirus patients

By Ariana Eunjung Cha • Read more »

---

Why Germany's coronavirus death rate is so much lower than other countries' rates

By Loveday Morris • Read more »

---

Should older Americans die to save the economy? Ethicists call it a false choice.

By Sarah Pulliam Bailey • Read more »

---

Levity in prayer

Gavin Shoebridge

@KiwiEV

In Italy today, a priest decided to live-stream a mass due to COVID-19. Unfortunately he activated the video filters by mistake.

♥ 357K 1:51 AM - Mar 24, 2020

💬 98.3K people are talking about this

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 26 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Thursday, March 26, 2020 5:46:50 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Thu., March 26, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. CORONAVIRUS:

Is pipeline construction 'essential' in a pandemic?

A pipeline fight is highlighting a growing debate over what type of energy employment should be considered "essential" during a public health crisis.

TOP STORIES

2. CORONAVIRUS:

N.Y. hit with 'unprecedented' electricity demand shift

3. PIPELINES:

Judge axes NEPA review of Dakota Access. Will it shut down?

4. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus could slash 1 million oil jobs – report

TECHNOLOGY

5. NEWSMAKER:

Bill Gates on coronavirus, climate and 'the shutdown'

FEDERAL AGENCIES

6. OIL AND GAS:

Interior under pressure to ease enforcement on public lands

LAW

7. GRID:

Minn. law facing Trump opposition survives legal challenge

8. PIPELINES:

Federal judge rejects challenge to Bayou Bridge

ELECTRICITY

9. BUSINESS:

Coronavirus starts to hit usually safe utility earnings

10. UTILITIES:

PG&E's falling stock price worries fire victims eyeing deal

11. HYDROPOWER:

Maine ordered to verify signatures for ballot initiative

OIL AND GAS

---

12. METHANE:

Green LNG could help meet marine fuel targets — study

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: denise.germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 26 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Thursday, March 26, 2020 11:23:17 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Thu., March 26, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. EPA:

More employees test positive for COVID-19 — emails

At least four EPA employees have tested positive for the potentially fatal respiratory illness caused by the novel coronavirus, or have been presumptively deemed positive, according to an agency spokeswoman and internal email traffic obtained by E&E News.

TOP STORIES

2. NEWSMAKER:

Ousted regional EPA chief tapped for obscure energy post

3. PROPERTY RIGHTS:

Federal court rejects Calif. water 'takings' case

4. PANDEMIC:

EPA union negotiations in 'holding pattern'

CORONAVIRUS

5. INTERIOR:

Pandemic forces some progress at land appeals board

6. AGRICULTURE:

Coronavirus fallout may spur farmers to plant less corn

7. MINING:

Pompeo: Pandemic shows U.S. needs to lead on uranium

8. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Coronavirus threatens great apes

9. NATIONAL PARKS:

Acadia effectively shuts down because of virus

CONGRESS

10. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Sunrise Movement takes aim at 2 more incumbents

11. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Lawmakers call for probe of DOE cleanup technology

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

12. CHESAPEAKE BAY:

Ecosystem improves despite extreme weather — report

13. NATIONAL WEATHER SERVICE:

Tech issues hampered information on tsunami watch for Hawaii

LAW

---

14. MINING:

Minn. Supreme Court agrees to hear PolyMet permit appeal

AIR AND WATER

---

15. AIR POLLUTION:

Ga. plants reopen to combat medical supply shortage

STATES

---

16. ARIZONA:

Edict keeps golf courses open as national park sites close

17. WASHINGTON:

Inslee signs bill to ban single-use plastic bags

18. TENNESSEE:

Red Cross extends financial help deadline after tornadoes

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 26 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Thursday, March 26, 2020 2:32:27 PM

---

NATIONAL PARKS: 'Beyond reckless': Grand Canyon, Zion remain open. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
PANDEMIC: EPA relaxes rules on disinfectants.
EPA: Agency outlines plans to ease enforcement during pandemic.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Thu., March 26, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/26/full?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/26/stories/1062709219?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
1. NATIONAL PARKS:
'Beyond reckless': Grand Canyon, Zion remain open

While many large national parks have shut down during the coronavirus pandemic, Grand Canyon in Arizona and Zion in Utah have remained open — and that has critics outraged.

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/26/stories/1062709307?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
2. PANDEMIC:
EPA relaxes rules on disinfectants

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/26/stories/1062709381?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
3. EPA:
Agency outlines plans to ease enforcement during pandemic

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/26/stories/1062709169?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
4. COAL:
Union calls for coronavirus protections for miners

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/26/stories/1062709281?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
5. AIR POLLUTION:
EPA IG digs into agency's handling of state cleanup plans

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/26/stories/1062709045?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
6. EPA:
Former DOE official tapped to run toxics office

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/26/calendars?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
7. CALENDAR:
Activity for March 23 - March 29, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.
ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News
E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Use our calculator to see your stimulus payout
Date: Thursday, March 26, 2020 2:43:49 PM

---

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

Presented by Slack

---

By Angela Fritz

with Avi Selk

✉ Email

A substantial portion of our coronavirus coverage is free, including everything linked in this newsletter. We know you value this work because you're a Post subscriber. If you know someone else who would benefit from our vital reporting, consider gifting them a subscription today.

---

The latest

More than 80 percent of adults in the United States will receive a payment from the \$2 trillion stimulus bill that passed the Senate 96-0. Payments will arrive in the form of a check or direct deposit.

You can use our calculator to see you much you'll get, then scroll down for answers to some common questions.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) are seeking to hold a voice vote Friday, which would not require all 429 members to be present. But Rep. Thomas Massie (R-Ky.) said he opposes not only the bill, but the idea of a voice vote, and has yet to decide whether he will press that issue. It could delay a vote until the weekend.

The stimulus bill is massive, but economists say it won't prevent a recession — the question is whether it will be enough to ward off an economic depression. The two most important problems to fix are the health crisis itself, and making sure people get money quickly. More than 9 in 10 Americans say they think an economic recession is likely, according to a Washington Post-ABC poll released this afternoon, and more than 6 in 10 are predicting it will be as bad as or worse than the Great Recession.

Around 3.3 million people applied for unemployment last week, more than any other week in American history. Economists think this is the beginning of a massive spike in jobless claims, and that at least 40 million Americans could be unemployed by April.

Washington, D.C., was intentionally classified as a territory in the stimulus bill, instead of a state. The District is almost always considered a full-fledged state when it comes to grants, highway funding, education and food assistance. The city — which has a population larger than Vermont and Wyoming — will now get less than half the funding it was expecting.

The coronavirus has killed more than 1,000 people in the United States. The Washington Post is tracking every known U.S. death, but overwhelmed state and local authorities are shielding even basic details about age, gender and underlying conditions, citing medical privacy laws. Some deaths aren't being counted at all, misdiagnosed as the flu or another illness in people who were never tested.

A negative test result doesn't always mean you don't have covid-19. Something could have gone wrong with the test or, more often, you "may be early on in the infection and the viral load may be so low you don't get [a positive result]," Anthony S. Fauci told physicians.

New York will use anti-malaria medications — hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine in combination with the antibiotic azithromycin — to treat seriously ill patients. While the effort has raised safety concerns, Trump's direct intervention into the complex medical issue, as well as New York Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo's embrace of the strategy, has generated excitement about the drugs.

The New York City area might be the epicenter of the outbreak in the United States, but the number of confirmed cases is beginning to spike elsewhere, including Louisiana, Michigan and Texas. This has led authorities to question whether it's practical to restrict peoples' movement based on where they've traveled domestically. "The CDC guidelines recommend you stay a social distance away whether that is in New York City or not," N.Y. health commissioner Howard A. Zucker said.

Our Fact Checker team looked at 11 of the claims President Trump made on Tuesday alone, and found that most were either false or misleading:

- We had the best economy in the history of the United States before this (it was better as recently as 1999);
- Coronavirus is no worse than the flu (it spreads easier, and it's more severe);
- The United States has tested more than South Korea (South Korea tested 1 in 146 people, the United States has only tested 1 in 911), and several more

Is “social distancing” the wrong term? Some health experts think so, and the World Health Organization agrees. We should probably refer to it as “physical distancing.” Daniel Aldrich, a professor of political science and public policy at Northeastern University, lauded young people who were running errands for elderly neighbors for practicing “social connectedness with physical distance.”

---

Content from Slack

Helpful how-tos for transitioning to remote work

Find yourself working remotely all of a sudden? Slack is here to help with this comprehensive set of tips to make remote work productive. With all of your tools and communication in one place, Slack brings the team together, no matter where everyone is working from.

---

Live updates

Track the spread of the outbreak in the United States and abroad with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Follow live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need during this outbreak.

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

A lot of readers are wondering how much money they can expect from the stimulus bill. Our handy check calculator will estimate how much you're eligible for based on your income and tax filing status, and here are quick answers to some common questions:

Do we have to apply or will they be sent automatically? — Micah in Valley Forge, Pa.

No application necessary. The check will be automatically deposited in your bank account or mailed to you if filed taxes in 2018 or 2019. If you are on Social Security and don't file taxes, the government will still send the payment using the contact information on your benefits statement.

Micah also asks: What about a couple filing jointly where one person makes $110,000 and the other makes $20,000?

Per our reporting, "married couples are eligible for a $2,400 check as long as their adjusted gross income is under $150,000 a year." Couples making up to $198,000 a year get less money. Remember that couples also receive an additional $500 for each child.

Does the payout include the retired and the elderly, those in that group who are not employed? —Steven in Portland, Ore.

Yes. Retirees and individuals on disability assistance or social security are eligible for payments, if their total income including benefits doesn't exceed the maximum (up to $99,000 a year for individuals).

How much of a direct payment can a head of household expect with an adult dependent? — Anita in Bowie, Md.

A head of household who makes up to $112,500 a year is eligible for a $1,200 check — or a smaller check if they make up to $136,500 a year.

I live alone, on disability, and am technically a dependent of my parents (but over 26). I don't have any income to pay taxes on so I'm not a 'taxpayer.' Do I benefit from the relief bill or am I counted as a 'child' on my parents'? — Anonymous

The way the bill was written in the Senate, no. Dependents who can be claimed on someone else's tax return won't receive checks.

---

ADVERTISEMENT

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- A guide to which socializing app is right for you during quarantine
- Eight acts of kindness: Stories of good deeds from the pandemic
- Full results from the Washington Post-ABC coronavirus poll

He urged saving the economy over protecting those who are ‘not productive’ from the coronavirus. Then he faced America’s wrath.

By Marc Fisher • Read more »

---

The wait is endless. Supplies are gone. My New York hospital is on the brink.

Perspective • By Clifford Marks • Read more »

---

How to talk to others about not traveling during the coronavirus pandemic

By Natalie Compton • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

Disaster could show up at YOUR doorstep.

PLAN NOW

Ready FEMA ad

Powered by Liventent

My hometown showed us how a pandemic begins. Could it also show us how one ends?

Opinion • By Xinyan Yu • Read more »

Thousands are crowding into free national parks. And workers are terrified of coronavirus.

By Darryl Fears and Dino Grandoni • Read more »

You're reading The Post's newsletter guide to the coronavirus outbreak. Not on the list?

Sign up

A different kind of social distancing

Montana officials closed Yellowstone Park earlier this week due to the outbreak. KTVM reporter Deion Broxton went to the park to interview the superintendent, but got much more than he bargained for. Here's the shot he got once he was at a safe distance.

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Opinions A.M. and P.M. for the best of The Post's opinions and commentary, in your inbox every morning and afternoon. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 27 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 4:54:35 AM

---

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Fri., March 27, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

---

1. PANDEMIC:

Trump pins coronavirus hope on a climate skeptic

President Trump turned to a French virologist with a history of criticizing climate science when offering the world hope about an unproven treatment for COVID-19.

TOP STORIES

---

2. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump omits unemployment aid when approving disasters

3. ADAPTATION:

Denser cities: A climate strategy that feeds the virus

4. POLITICS:

Future stimulus bills could address climate. Here's why

GLOBAL

---

5. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Wind power is expanding but not enough for climate goals

6. RECOVERY:

Green focus for E.U. bailout plan seems more likely

IN THE STATES

---

7. CLIMATE IMPACTS:

Mild winter reduces springtime flood risk in New England

8. NATURAL DISASTERS:

Kan. sends National Guard to battle wildfires

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 27 -- E&E Daily is ready
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 5:20:43 AM

Read today's E&E Daily on the web

E&E DAILY

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

E&E DAILY — Fri., March 27, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Lawmakers look to the next coronavirus package

While Capitol Hill has been largely united on the $2 trillion pandemic response measure moving this week, congressional leaders are not yet in sync about what should come next.

PANDEMIC

2. AGENDA:

6 things you may have missed in the stimulus bill

3. INFRASTRUCTURE:

Water utilities, shippers line up for future pandemic aid

POLITICS

4. CAMPAIGN 2020:

House GOP recruits don't reflect party's green efforts

5. CAMPAIGN 2020:

What Biden can do to woo Sanders' climate voters

ON THE HILL

6. PANDEMIC:

How lawmakers use technology to reach constituents

7. WILDLIFE:

House members urge Interior to retain bird protections

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

8. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 23 - March 29, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E Daily, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eedaily.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E DAILY – CONGRESS. LEGISLATION. POLITICS.

---

E&E Daily is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Designed for policy players who need to know what's happening to their issues on Capitol Hill, from federal agency appropriations to comprehensive energy legislation, E&E Daily is the place insiders go to track their environmental and energy issues in Congress. E&E Daily publishes daily by 7:30 a.m. while Congress is in session.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 27 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 5:29:35 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Fri., March 27, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

How coronavirus became a crisis for solar power

The novel coronavirus has presented the solar industry with an unsavory smorgasbord of problems all at the same time.

TOP STORIES

2. CORONAVIRUS:

FERC, state officials: Grid workers should be 'essential'

3. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus spurs coal rush in China — report

4. ENERGY MARKETS:

'Oil demand is in a free fall' – IEA chief

TECHNOLOGY

5. CORONAVIRUS:

'Reeling.' 30% of clean energy firms cut workers — report

POLITICS

6. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Texas grapples with how to fight oil crash

ELECTRICITY

7. PANDEMIC:

U.S. utilities line up $14B as they weather virus fallout

8. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

N.M. regulators give green light to solar project

9. UTILITIES:

Del. PSC acts to protect Delmarva Power business customers

LAW

10. VENEZUELA:

U.S. indicts Maduro on narcoterrorism charges

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

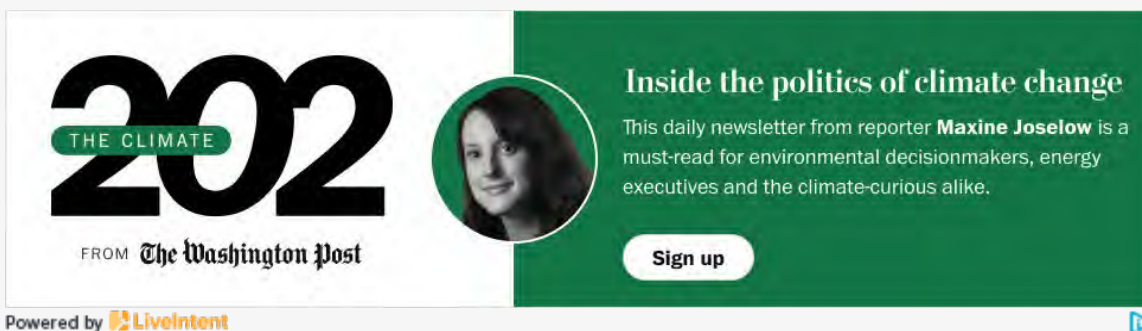

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Book Club: Business is booming for some indie bookstores, and Tom Perrotta's "The Leftovers" might become U.S. policy
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 7:41:17 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Book Club

Reviews and recommendations from critic Ron Charles.

By Ron Charles

✉ Email

President Donald Trump (AP Photo/Carolyn Kaster); St. Martin's Griffin; Tom Perrotta (Ben E. King/Courtesy of HBO)

Tom Wolfe once pointed out that the bizarre events of real life

far exceed anything we would believe in a work of fiction.

Imagine, for instance, a novel in which a multiply bankrupt president who's skeptical of science presides over the biggest financial-medical crisis in U.S. history. Preposterous! And yet here we are. If only this were a novel, instead of a novel coronavirus. This week, as the number of infections in the United States soars, President Trump proposed we all start thinking about going back to work. With an election on the horizon, Trump wants the economy “opened up and raring to go” by Easter. We need to be more accepting of death, the pro-life president implied. “We lose thousands and thousands of people a year to the flu, but we don’t turn the country off. We lose much more than that to automobile accidents.” Surely, we could tolerate losing just one or two percent of us, right?

Tom Perrotta has thought hard about losing just one or two percent of us. His 2011 novel, “The Leftovers,” imagines an apocalypse that’s strangely close to what the president is suggesting. His story begins a few years after 2 percent of the world population has simply vanished (review). The remaining 98 percent are untouched and physically healthy but, alas, not “raring to go by Easter.” Or by New Year’s. Or even by the year after that. Speaking from his home outside of Boston, Perrotta tells me he was startled by some people’s scornful response to the premise of “The Leftovers.” “Two percent?” they said. “That’s nothing.” But that would be 6.5 million Americans, and it could soon be this administration’s economic plan for the United States. The horror of even contemplating a loss of that magnitude is staggering. “I look out my window, and it’s a beautiful day, and the water comes out of the faucet when I turn it on, and my car works,” Perrotta says. “The infrastructure of the world is intact, but there is this feeling of dread and grief that makes it feel entirely different than what it did a month ago. I wake up and as soon as I go downstairs and come in contact with any information, this heaviness just comes over me that I carry through the whole day. And I think, you know, two percent is a lot.” (Full story)

Just a month ago, I attended a standing-room-only event featuring writers Tara Laskowski, Amber Sparks and Art Taylor at One More Page Books in Arlington, Va. Now the bookstore is closed, but it's still doing a brisk business by phone and online. (Ron Charles/The Washington Post)

The coronavirus continues to roil the book market, but we readers are a hardy group. While indie bookstores have been forced to shut their doors, anecdotal reports indicate that stores accepting phone orders and online sales are experiencing a surge of business. Eileen McGervey, owner of One More Page Books in Arlington, Va., has been overwhelmed by the community support. “We are working long hours to keep up with the volume of orders,” she told me. “A surprising number of the deliveries are to new customers. Several of them have already ordered several times in the short time we have been offering home delivery. Whenever we post about a book and puzzles (especially), we immediately receive orders.” When I called Prairie Lights in Iowa City to ask if they were busy, they told me I should call back because they were so busy. Co-owner Jan Weissmiller followed up later. “Our phones are ringing constantly, and our online orders are backed up,” she said. With the Iowa public schools closed, kids books are selling very fast, along with classics like “The Decameron,” “Brave New World” and “Slaughterhouse-Five.” Weissmiller added, “Like everyone else, we don’t know how or when this will end, so it’s nice to be too busy to think about it during the day.”

Bookshop.org, an online retailer specially designed to support indies, seemed quixotic when it launched three months ago, but now its arrival looks divinely inspired. Founder Andy Hunter tells me, “Sales have risen 1,000 percent from four weeks ago. We have seen almost 100 new stores join the platform, and have raised over $115,000 for bookstores — a figure that goes up about $10,000 per day. We have a four person team, so it’s quite overwhelming, but it is good to be helping people right now.” (Give me a minute; I seem to have something in my eye.)

---

ADVERTISEMENT

U.S. Bank
Earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choice
With the U.S. Bank Cash+™ Visa Signature® Card, you earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choosing and 2% in an everyday category.

LEARN MORE

At the moment, Emily St. John Mandel is best known for her previous novel, “Station Eleven,” about a flu pandemic that wipes out most of the world’s population. But don’t let that overshadow her fine new novel, “The Glass Hotel” (review). It revolves around a devastating financial collapse, which makes me desperate to know what she’s going to write about next so I can prepare. “The Glass Hotel” is also the subject of the latest Totally Hip Video Book Review — two minutes of nutty critical chaos for a tough day (watch).

With bookstores shuttered and book tours cancelled, the coronavirus threatens to create a silent spring for thousands of authors. The situation is particularly grim for debut novelists. Imagine working on a book for years and then finally releasing it now: No one's searching for your book because no one's heard of you. In marketing terms, that's a discoverability nightmare. But behold: A Mighty Blaze! Novelists Caroline Leavitt and Jenna Blum are launching a website where authors can announce new releases, promote their colleagues' work and celebrate great bookstores. The response, Leavitt tells me, has been overwhelming. (Yes, I've been hearing that word a lot lately — in the best way.) What started just two weeks ago on Facebook has already attracted more than 50 partners, including the Authors Guild, Poets & Writers and LitHub. Hundreds of authors have signed on, including Michael Chabon, Elizabeth Strout, Celeste Ng, Chris Bohjalian and Anne Lamott. The group has an unpaid staff of 16 people. "We're all working like 10 hours a day because there's so much to do," Leavitt says. "It's a runaway train." A Mighty Blaze, which also appears on Twitter and Instagram, has already started posting author interviews and plans to offer social media classes for writers and host virtual cocktail parties every Friday.

Look around and you'll see such efforts to keep our literary culture alive everywhere. For instance, on Twitter, under the handle @AtriaMysteryBus, David Brown, the deputy director of publicity at Atria, has started posting zany two-minute interviews with indie bookstore workers. His videos — #SocialDistancingTheater — offer three or four quick recommendations, and sometimes Brown even talks with bookish folks like me (watch).

(Courtesy of Scholastic Inc.)

ADVERTISEMENT

Alice Cooper needs to update “School’s Out.” Keeping 80 million kids cooped up at home is creating the largest (and fastest) educational experiment in American history. And so far, while school districts struggle to figure out the mechanics of distance learning, parents are largely on their own. Sales data show parents are reaching for books like William Potter’s “Totally Awesome Mazes and Puzzles,” Crystal Radke’s “My First Learn to Write Workbook” and School Zone’s “Big Kindergarten.” NPD BookScan, which tracks the publishing industry, notes that sales of educational and activity books for kids jumped almost 40 percent during the week ending March 14.

Lots of authors are stepping up to help. Oliver Jeffers, Susan Verde and Mac Barnett (and his adorable dog!) are regularly reading books to kids on Instagram. DC Comics has launched DC Kids Camp on Twitter and Instagram where kids can watch videos from graphic novelists and illustrators such as Agnes Garbowska, Gene Luen Yang and Minh Lê. DC also supplies related activity sheets and coloring pages. (Sign up here.)

Penguin Random House and Parents magazine had planned to team up this summer to produce a literacy program, but with the coronavirus keeping kids at home, they decided to launch this week. The Read Together, Be Together website offers daily storytimes with award-winning authors, illustrators and celebrities. (This week featured Misty Copeland, Danica McKellar, B.J. Novak and more.) The site also offers reading tips for parents and activities sheets and lists of recommended books for kids.

This afternoon from 3 to 5 p.m., Scholastic's Home Base Virtual Book Fest will feature kids authors Lauren Tarshis, Tracey West, Christina Soontornvat and Aida Salazar. (To participate, your child must register for a free account here.)

Clearly, there are lots of virtual resources available, though I imagine what parents are really craving is a little downtime IRL. I can remember those early days when Dawn and I were essentially trapped in the house with two little kids, thinking it was both the sweetest and most miserable experience of my life. Take heart, young Mom and Dad: The good times are what you'll remember.

---

A man stands in front of the closed Tenley/Friendship D.C. Public Library on March 16. (Photo by Mandel Ngan/AFP via Getty Images)

Public libraries have closed their doors, but they certainly haven't closed down. Demand for online access to e-books and audiobooks has soared. For Richard Reyes-Gavilan, executive director of the D.C. public library system, the current challenge is an opportunity to think more radically about the essential function of a library. “What we’re being asked to do is really sort of contrary to what libraries have excelled at over the past 25 years,” he tells me. “The programming, the civic engagement, the book clubs, the job search help — all of these things that encourage critical masses of people” must suddenly be done differently. His first priority has been making sure people know what’s available on the library’s website. “We’ve got access to hundreds of thousands of e-books and streaming films and streaming music and language learning,” he says. And his staff is also considering new programs to offer in a virtual environment. DCPL librarians have already started posting storytime and arts & craft lessons on the library’s Facebook page. Even the library’s DC Reads program is still on track. This year the book we’re all invited to read is “With the Fire on High,” by National Book Award-winner Elizabeth Acevedo (interview). Overdrive, which supplies digital books to libraries, has graciously allowed DCPL to have access to an unlimited number of e-book copies, and the library has provided discussion guides and a chance to chat about the novel online. “This is what we have to continue to think through,” Reyes-Gavilan says. “How can we connect people to books? How can we help people understand that social distancing doesn't mean social isolation? How can we stay relevant when we're not able to do what we do every single day with great pride, which is open our doors?” As usual, there's nothing like talking to a librarian to make you grateful for the dedicated people who go into public service.

(Courtesy of the Whiting Foundation)

Winners of the 2020 Whiting Awards were announced on Wednesday. The prizes are intended to recognize exceptionally talented authors at the early stages of promising careers. That can be a crap shoot, but the Whiting Foundation has a good record of spotting freshmen stars. Previous winners have included such once-not-so-famous authors as Tracy K. Smith, Colson Whitehead, Mary Karr, Tony Kushner, Jeffrey Eugenides, August Wilson, Alice McDermott and Jonathan Franzen. Each of the 2020 winners will receive $50,000:

- Aria Aber (poetry)
- Ling Ma (fiction)
- Diannely Antigua (poetry)
- Jake Skeets (poetry)
- Will Arbery (drama)
- Genevieve Sly Crane (fiction)
- Jaquira Díaz (nonfiction)

- Jia Tolentino (nonfiction)
- Andrea Lawlor (fiction)
- Genya Turovskaya (poetry)

When he was diagnosed with cancer at the age of 43, Bruce Feiler asked six friends to help raise his 3-year-old twins if he died. Fortunately, Feiler survived – and then wrote a bestseller about the experience, his 2010 memoir, “The Council of Dads: My Daughters, My Illness, and the Men Who Could Be Me.” On Tuesday, a series adapted from that book started airing on NBC, starring Tom Everett Scott and Sarah Wayne Callies. I couldn’t even watch the previews without tearing up, but I’m an emotional sieve, so don’t take my word for it. Critics are calling the show a “This Is Us” wannabe.

---

Berkley/Penguin Random House; Kim Kardashian West's retweet on March 11, 2020; the late psychic Sylvia Browne (File photo/Courtesy of Sylvia Browne Group)

Times of stress often revive interest in the occult. This month, “End of Days,” by the late psychic Sylvia Browne, is back on the nonfiction bestseller list because Kim Kardashian West discovered that Browne predicted the coronavirus. (If I never write another sentence, that one will be enough.) West retweeted a photo of a page from the 2008 bestseller on which Browne writes, “In around 2020 a severe pneumonia-like illness will spread throughout the globe, attacking the lungs and the bronchial tubes and resisting all known treatments. Almost more baffling than the illness itself will be the fact that it will suddenly vanish as quickly as it arrived.” The book is a mixture of amateur history, tabloid eschatology and gonzo wackiness that’s strangely entertaining. Before this year, “End of Days” had sold about 100,000 copies. In response to this month’s surge in demand, the publisher is racing to print 50,000 more. Don’t worry, in the first chapter Browne reassures us, “I promise you have time to read it more than once before the end of life on Earth.” (Phew!) President and publisher of Viking and Penguin Books Brian Tart remembers working with Browne when he was the editor in chief at Dutton. “Sylvia Browne was larger than life,” he tells me, “which makes sense since she had a direct line to the Other Side. She would be thrilled that her books are still being read, although, being psychic, not surprised. Sylvia gave a lot of people great comfort in trying times. She wasn't always right, but her heart was always in the right place. She had a gift and shared it liberally. She was generous with me — predicting health issues, job changes, and assuring me the house I had just bought was not haunted.” Browne went entirely over to the Other Side in 2013, but her flame is kept alive by the Sylvia Browne Group in Silicon Valley.

Ice crystals on a picture window. (File photo/Washington Post)

I discovered the quiet, stoic poetry of Joan Aleshire by accident while looking for something else. “I’m kind of under the radar,” she told me from her home in Vermont. She went on to convince me that the poem of hers that I wanted to share here was too grim for the times. Instead, she offered this poem, hardly cheery, but more relevant to our quarantined moment -- and a reminder of the deprivations endured by earlier generations.

Notes for a Dark Winter

Try not to listen to the wind.
Turn up the radio and when the power goes, learn to play the flute, learn to sing in several languages, concentrate on the cyrillic alphabet, fading in and out as the lantern you read by sways in the draft.

In the siege of Leningrad, remember, there was no heat and by the end one was lucky to get one potato a day.

Apartments were full of cold bodies getting colder, freezing where they fell.

Those who lived kept studying with gloves on, kept practicing their violins,
however clumsily, kept doing their translations, sharing talk and hot water round the samovar after the tea leaves were exhausted.

From “Cloud Train,” by Joan Aleshire (Texas Tech University Press, 1982). Published by permission of the author. Aleshire’s most recent book is “Days of Our Lives” (Four Way Books, 2019).

Harper; Grove; Back Bay; HMH Books for Young Readers

Day 11 of self-quarantine. I hope you’re staying safe during the Great Cessation. We’re healthy and content here at la maison des Charleses. Oui, I’ve been learning French on Duolingo. If I ever get to Paris, I’ll be ready to point out, “Le chien est calme et riche,” which according to this app must be an essential phrase. My wife, a public high school teacher, is gearing up to start teaching AP English over the internet. And my younger daughter is applying to graduate school and taking online dance classes in the living room. So far, cordiality reigns, though I suppose when we run out of toilet paper, it'll be like "Game of Thrones." Till then, we're adjusting to the tepid pace of housebound life. This week's big excitement is the imminent arrival of our HelloFresh box. Meanwhile, here's what we're reading:

- Ron: "Valentine," by Elizabeth Wetmore. An emotionally compelling debut that revolves around the rape of a 14-year-old girl in a small Texas town. (Forthcoming March 31.)
- Dawn: "Writers & Lovers," by Lily King. A delightful novel about a young woman trying to write a novel and find a good life partner (review).
- Madeline: "Less," by Andrew Sean Geer. This hilarious Pulitzer Prize-winning novel is about a heartbroken writer traveling around the world (review).
- Elissa via Skype: "George and Martha: The Complete Stories of Two Best Friends," by James Marshall. This collector's edition contains all 35 beloved stories about those two devoted hippos, and it makes us all smile every time.

If you have any questions or comments about our book coverage, contact me at ron.charles@washpost.com. And if you know someone who would enjoy this newsletter, please forward it to them. To subscribe, click here.

---

'The Princess Bride' and other fantastical novels to help you escape reality

Review • By Silvia Moreno-Garcia and Lavie Tidhar • Read more »

---

Audiobooks can help get you through forced family time. Here are picks for listening together.

Perspective • By Katherine A. Powers • Read more »

---

To get us through, finding the wisdom of books written in isolation

Review • By Michael Dirda • Read more »

---

N.K. Jemisin's fantasy tale 'The City We Became' shows the resilience of New York

Review • By Elizabeth Hand • Read more »

---

Six graphic novels to read while you self-quarantine

Perspective • By Michael Cavanaugh • Read more »

---

Inspector Montalbano is back in 'The Safety Net' and as entertaining as ever

Review • By Michael F. Covino • Read more »

---

Running thousands of miles to connect with an indigenous heritage

Review • By Christie Aschwanden • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Book Club | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Book Club or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: New York City is Ground Zero – again – with the coronavirus pandemic
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 9:43:12 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by DXC

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

New York City is Ground Zero – again – with the coronavirus pandemic

Emergency Medical Service workers in New York were told on Tuesday night that 6,406 people had called 911 seeking medical help in the preceding 24 hours. It was the highest volume of such calls recorded in the city, surpassing the total from Sept. 11, 2001, when the terrorist attack upended the city's communication networks.

A new record was set again on Wednesday, with 6,544 medical calls to 911.

On Thursday evening, EMS was on track to potentially receive as many as 7,000 calls by midnight.

Officials believe the numbers will only increase in the days ahead. Anecdotally, friends sheltering-in-place at their apartments in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Queens report hearing the haunting sound of ambulance sirens all night long.

Eighteen-and-a-half-years after the trauma of 9/11, the novel coronavirus outbreak has again made New York into America's Ground Zero. America's financial and cultural capital faces another sneak attack from an enemy that's once again indiscriminately targeting innocent civilians. There are obviously enormously significant differences between 2020 and 2001, but instead of hijacking our planes, this unseen pathogen hijacks our lungs.

Oren Barzilay, president of Local 2507, which represents emergency medical technicians and paramedics in the New York City Fire Department, confirmed the 911 call numbers. And a member of the fire department told my colleague Jesse Dougherty that the city's EMS workers are "shockingly low" on personal protective equipment because that gear has to be switched out or discarded entirely after responding to coronavirus-related 911 calls.

The United States has 85,996 confirmed cases of covid-19, the disease caused by the virus, and 1,300 reported deaths. New York state has 39,140 confirmed cases and 461 deaths, with most concentrated around the nation's largest city. That's about 46 percent of the country's cases. New Jersey and Connecticut, which make up the tri-state area, are also seeing spikes. At least 65 New York nurses have tested positive, taking them off the front lines.

More than 5,300 people with the coronavirus are currently hospitalized in New York, and about 1,300 are being treated inside intensive care units. Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said the state has 53,000 available hospital beds but will soon require up to 140,000. That's why plans are in motion to build 1,000-bed facilities in each of the five boroughs and in four counties. One of the medical surge centers will be inside the Jacob K. Javits Convention Center on the west side of Manhattan, where Hillary Clinton held her election night event in 2016 and which normally hosts auto shows and Comic-Con. New York leaders are also considering converting dormitories and hotel rooms for emergency use. A makeshift morgue is under construction outside one Manhattan hospital.

“Part of the reason for the need for auxiliary, emergency measures is that many hospitals have closed in recent years because of financial trouble,” Ariana Eunjung Cha, Brittney Martin and Steven Mufson explain. “The United States has fewer beds per capita — just 2.7 per 1,000 people — than many other countries. That compares with 6.5 per 1,000 for South Korea and France, for example, and 4.3 for China.”

Pregnant women at two major hospital networks in New York are now being forced to give birth without their partners at their side. At Mount Sinai Hospital, spouses and family members have been barred from entering the labor and delivery floor as part of a plan that treats every expectant mother as if she has the coronavirus, per Brittany Shammass, Frances Stead Sellers and Ariana.

Despite the hellish deluge of bad news from his hometown, President Trump called into Sean Hannity's Fox News show on Thursday night to accuse the state's governor of inflating how many ventilators New York really needs to cope with the expected influx of patients. Ventilators help a person with compromised lungs keep breathing. Cuomo said earlier in the day that the state needs about 30,000 ventilators in the coming weeks but has so far acquired about 7,000, with the Federal Emergency Management Agency offering to provide 400 more. Vice President Pence said the federal government will send an additional 4,000 as part of an effort to “surge resources” into New York.

Trump told Hannity that the onus should mainly be on the states to find their own ventilators and that the federal government is “a second line” of defense. “A lot of equipment’s being asked for that I don’t think they’ll need,” Trump said. “I have a feeling that a lot of the numbers that are being said in some areas are just bigger than they’re going to be. I don’t believe you need 40,000 or 30,000 ventilators. ... When you talk about ventilators, that’s sort of like buying a car. It’s very expensive.”

But Trump and Cuomo are both supporting the use of an experimental treatment that is not proven to be effective against the coronavirus. “New York is moving at unprecedented speed and scale in a human experiment to distribute tens of thousands of doses of anti-malarial drugs to seriously ill patients,” Chris Rowland, Jon Swaine and Josh Dawsey report. “Health experts say the Food and Drug Administration has moved with uncommon speed to authorize New York’s sweeping plan to distribute the drugs through hospital networks. Planning for such a complex initiative would ordinarily take up to nine months ... In New York, that timeline has been compressed into three days. The effort has raised concerns among health experts about safety risks — including the danger of fatal heart arrhythmia and vision loss associated with the drugs — and of raising false hopes in the American public. But Trump’s direct intervention into complex medical issues, as well as [Cuomo’s] embrace of the strategy, has generated popular excitement about the drugs.”

A silver lining: New York’s crime rate has plummeted amid the slowdown caused by the virus. Last week, the city recorded a single murder, compared with eight the week before. Burglaries and assaults were also way down, per Shayna Jacobs and Devlin Barrett. This is notable because crime usually increases in the springtime when it gets nicer outside. New York also saw a drop in crime in the immediate aftermath of 9/11.

Other hot spots to watch

“Louisiana Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) said Thursday that he was concerned about sharp rise in coronavirus cases in his state, including one of the highest mortality rates in the country,” Brady Dennis reports. “The state reported 510 newly confirmed cases of covid-19, bringing its total to 2,305. Officials also reported 18 additional deaths — many of them in the hard-hit New Orleans area — bringing the state’s overall count to 83. One of them was a 17-year-old from Orleans Parish. ... Federal officials also are keeping a close eye on the counties that include Detroit and Chicago as the next potential hotspots, said Deborah Birx, the White House’s coronavirus response coordinator.”

Trump's former FDA commissioner, who has been informally advising the coronavirus task force, warned that the epidemic could become national in scope:

Anne Schuchat, principal deputy director at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, said New York's outbreak is probably just the first in a wave of local outbreaks likely to strike other big U.S. cities. She told the Hill the CDC has deployed about 1,500 of its epidemiologists, scientists and experts to hot spots around the country, including New York, Seattle and New Orleans, as well as states like Wisconsin and Colorado.

Washington state, where the curve might be flattening, offers a reason for cautious optimism.

“At EvergreenHealth Medical Center, two miles from the shuttered Lifecare nursing home where 35 patient deaths were linked to the virus, officials say their rate of new covid-19 cases has remained steady for two weeks, leveling off at a trickle,” Robert Klemko reports from Kirkland, Wash. “On some days, doctors here see just one new case and haven’t seen more than four in a single day since mid-March. Few need admission to the intensive care unit, which is now half full, two weeks after overflow necessitated transfers to nearby hospitals. ... In the state that saw the nation's first confirmed covid-19 case on Jan. 31, and the first recorded coronavirus-related death on Feb. 29, initial dire predictions of massive spikes have waned even as testing has increased rapidly. While the number of cases in Washington state grew by as much as 28 percent in one day on March 15 — it has since slowed significantly statewide.”

“We don't know if this last two weeks has been a calm before the storm or if the social distancing and all those things that are being practiced are working,” said EvergreenHealth CEO Jeff Tomlin, whose hospital has handled 40 of the state's more than 130 virus-related deaths. He said the hospital is no longer overwhelmed, though it still lacks needed supplies. “You will never hear me declaring victory at any point of this. ... We're gearing up just in case a surge does happen like in New York or in Italy.”

---

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

---

More on the federal response

The president clashed with governors during a private call.

“Trump insisted Thursday that Americans are eager to ‘go back to work’ and advised the governors in a letter that his administration is developing new guidelines that will categorize the risk level for each county in the nation — potentially laying the groundwork for less-affected areas to relax some of the strictest measures,” Robert Costa, Laura Vozzella, Josh Dawsey and David Nakamura report. “On Thursday, Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) pleaded with Trump during a conference call with the governors to take more dramatic federal action to secure medical supplies for his state ... After Trump told the group that his administration was ready to be the ‘backup’ for states in crisis, Inslee interjected: ‘We don’t need a backup. We need a Tom Brady.’ ... Though the president has faced mounting bipartisan calls to use his powers to compel private companies to help, he has said he is employing the [Defense Production Act] as leverage to win voluntary cooperation. His campaign on Thursday tweeted a list of major corporations, including 3M, that have said they will increase production of such supplies. Behind the scenes, business leaders have lobbied Trump not to invoke the law and conservative advisers have warned the president that doing so would draw a backlash and could cut into his argument of running against socialism in the fall, said two administration officials."

Concern about cost prompted the White House to nix a plan for ventilator production.

"The White House had been preparing to reveal on Wednesday a joint venture between General Motors and Ventec Life Systems that would allow for the production of as many as 80,000 desperately needed ventilators," the New York Times reports. "The decision to cancel the announcement, government officials say, came after [FEMA] said it needed more time to assess whether the estimated cost was prohibitive. That price tag was more than $1 billion, with several hundred million dollars to be paid upfront to General Motors to retool a car parts plant in Kokomo, Ind., where the ventilators would be made with Ventec's technology."

- The country's largest veterinary schools, animal hospitals and even zoos are offering up their ventilators to hospitals. (ABC News)
- A Detroit-area health system has developed a contingency plan to deny ventilators and intensive care treatment to coronavirus patients with a poor chance of surviving, including those with some preexisting conditions. Henry Ford Health Systems said it has not yet needed to implement the policy. (Teo Armus)
- The U.S. government has 1.5 million expired N95 masks sitting in an Indiana warehouse. Authorities have not shipped them because of their expiration date, despite CDC guidelines saying they're safe to use during the outbreak. (Nick Miroff)
- Trump appointees at the EPA are using the epidemic as an excuse to announce the sweeping relaxation of environmental rules, allowing power plants, factories and other facilities to determine for themselves if they're able to meet legal requirements on reporting pollution. (NYT)
- Internal emails obtained by ProPublica show how chaos at the CDC slowed the early response to the virus. The documents reveal an antiquated public health system struggling to adapt on the fly.

- John Demers, the chief of the Justice Department's National Security Division, warned that this pandemic may prompt some terrorists to speed up planned attacks against the United States. (Politico)
- White House officials are reportedly discussing the possible deployment of U.S. troops to the Canadian border, prompting backlash from Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, who said it is "very much in both of our interests" for the U.S.-Canada border to remain unmilitarized. (Independent)
- At least 23 sailors tested positive aboard the USS Theodore Roosevelt. The aircraft carrier was directed to a port, and the Navy has administered tests to all of the more than 5,000 sailors aboard. (WSJ)
- The Pentagon will begin withholding some data about infection within its ranks, citing concern that adversaries could capitalize on the information as the contagion undermines force readiness. (Reuters)
- The acting director of ICE, Matthew Albence, is losing favor in Trump's White House after announcing that immigration authorities would halt most nonessential enforcement actions during the outbreak. The nativists in the West Wing complain that Albence's emergency posture is something the Obama administration would do. (Politico)

House leaders are trying to expedite passage of the stimulus package.

"House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) agreed to approve the measure with a voice vote Friday that would not require all 430 current members of the House to travel to the Capitol, given that two lawmakers have contracted the disease and others are self-quarantining due to exposure to confirmed carriers," John Wagner, Paul Kane and Mike DeBonis report. "But at least one lawmaker is considering upending the plans for swift passage. Rep. Thomas Massie (R-Ky.) said Thursday that he opposed the bill, approved unanimously by the Senate on Wednesday, as it would add to the national debt. The libertarian lawmaker also is concerned that voting without a quorum present — the majority of the House chamber — would violate the Constitution. He said he has yet to decide whether to press the issue, which could delay a House vote until late Saturday or Sunday. ... Pelosi said she was ready to defeat such an effort."

- Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) said her husband “took a good turn” in his battle with covid-19 and has been released from the hospital.
- Rep. Lizzie Fletcher (D-Tex.) has self-quarantined after experiencing flu-like symptoms, including a temperature above 101 degrees.

Cruise lines got cut out of the bailout package.

Language in the 883-page bill says that, to be eligible for aid from the $500 billion fund for large employers, companies must be certified as “created or organized in the United States or under the laws of the United States” as well as having “significant operations in” and a majority of employees based in the United States. “Major cruise companies have located their primary headquarters overseas, which for years has allowed them to pay almost no federal taxes and avoid some U.S. regulations,” Jonathan O’Connell reports. “Carnival Corp., owner of the Princess cruise lines, is incorporated in Panama. Royal Caribbean is incorporated in Liberia, and Norwegian Cruise Lines in Bermuda.”

- A tweak to tax policy tucked into the bill could hand $170 billion in tax savings to real estate tycoons, the Times reports.
- Lawmakers said D.C. was intentionally classified as a territory in the stimulus bill so that the nation's capital would get less money. (Jenna Portnoy and Fenit Nirappil)

Trump’s online base is going after Tony Fauci.

“A cadre of right-wing news sites pulled from the fringes in recent years through repeated mention by Trump is now taking aim at ... the nation’s top infectious diseases expert, who has given interviews in which he has tempered praise for the president with doubts about his pronouncements,” Isaac Stanley-Becker reports. “The smear campaign taking root online, and laying the groundwork for Trump to cast aside the experts on his own coronavirus task force, relies centrally on the idea that there is no expertise that rises above partisanship, and that everyone has an agenda.”

---

More on the cascading domestic fallout

Andrea Austin, an emergency medicine physician, sits with her dogs, Mocha and Chips, at her home in California. (Sandy Huffaker for The Washington Post)

Health care workers are updating their wills and making funeral plans.

“The first time Andrea Austin, 35, considered her own mortality, she was flying into Iraq aboard a C-130 military plane,” Rachel Siegel reports.

“Though the emergency medicine physician had set up a living will and power of attorney before her seven-month deployment with a shock and trauma team, entering a war zone crystallized the dangers of her job. Now, more than three years later, Austin is again weighing worst-case scenarios as she continues treating patients at Los Angeles County+USC Medical Center while coronavirus crisis expands at an alarming rate. She wrote down which of her fellow doctors she would entrust with end-of-life care. She made clear her preference for cremation. And she compiled her funeral playlist, starting with Israel Kamakawiwo'ole's 'Somewhere Over the Rainbow.' ... If there is a slide show played at her funeral, she wants it set to Meghan Trainor's 'Badass Woman.' For the end of the ceremony, she chose Stevie Wonder's 'Ave Maria.' ... Then she stored the details on Google Drive and shared the files with her husband and brother. 'My fear of dying is worse now than it was when I was in Iraq,' she said."

This was the worst week for our economy in decades.

"The economy has entered a deep recession that has echoes of the Great Depression in the way it has devastated so many businesses and consumers, triggering mass layoffs and threatening to set off a chain reaction of bankruptcies and financial losses for companies large and small," Heather Long reports. "It remains a wide open question whether this will become a long-lasting slump or a short-lived flash recession. Economists say the jobless claims reported Thursday, which reflected workers seeking unemployment insurance last week, is the start of a massive spike in unemployment that could result in over 40 million Americans losing their jobs by mid-April. Although no official figures exist yet, the unemployment rate has likely jumped to at least 5.5 percent, says economist Martha Gimbel of Schmidt Futures, a level not seen since 2015 and up from 3.5 percent in February." Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell said: "We may well be in a recession."

U.S. markets plunged Friday morning, interrupting a stellar three-day run and offering a stinging reminder that the relief bill won't blunt investor anxiety just yet. The Dow sank 900 points, or 4 percent, midmorning. The Standard & Poor's and Nasdaq also posted losses of 3.6 and 3.5 percent, respectively. (Rachel Siegel and Thomas Heath)

A Washington Post-ABC News poll shows the pandemic has disrupted most American lives.

“Almost overnight, the threat from the virus has changed habits and lifestyles. Roughly 9 in 10 say they are staying home ‘as much as possible’ and are practicing social distancing to lessen the risk of getting the virus. Nearly 9 in 10 say they have stopped going to bars and restaurants. About 6 in 10 say they have stockpiled food and household supplies at home,” Dan Balz and Emily Guskin report. “Trump narrowly wins approval for handling the outbreak and his overall approval rating has grown five percentage points since February to 48 percent, even as most Americans say he was too slow to take action in the early days of the virus’s spread. The rise in Trump’s approval rating, however, is far smaller than some other presidents have experienced in times of national crisis. ...

“More than 3 in 4 say their life has been disrupted by the coronavirus outbreak, with half the population now saying there has been ‘a lot’ of disruption. Stress levels appear to be higher today than they were during the Great Recession that followed the financial collapse of 2008, with 7 in 10 Americans citing the virus outbreak as a source of that stress and 1 in 3 saying it caused ‘serious’ stress. ... Nearly 7 in 10 Americans say they are worried that they or someone in their immediate family might catch the disease. Asked to rate their personal risk of getting sick from the virus, 56 percent say they feel at risk, with 20 percent saying they believe they are at high risk. At this point, about 1 in 10 say they know someone who has been diagnosed with the virus but about four times as many say people in their local community have been diagnosed.”

Incomplete reporting from local authorities makes fighting the contagion harder.

“The Post is tracking every known U.S. death, analyzing data from health agencies and gathering details from family and friends of the victims. In the first 1,000 fatalities, some patterns have begun to emerge,” Abigail

Hauslohner, Reis Thebault and Jacqueline Dupree report. “About 65 percent of the dead whose ages are known were older than 70, and nearly 40 percent were over 80, demonstrating that risk rises along with age. About 5 percent whose ages are known were in their 40s or younger, but many more in that age group have been sick enough to be hospitalized. Of those victims whose gender is known, nearly 60 percent were men. What remains murky is exactly who is dying in America during the pandemic, even as scientists and public health experts race to uncover information that can help save lives. Overwhelmed state and local authorities have been issuing widely varying reports on those who died, citing medical privacy laws to shield even basic details about age, gender and underlying conditions, the three signal categories that epidemiologists say are key indicators of risk. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which offers a well-regarded and oft-cited public weekly tracker for the annual influenza season, offers no similar real-time surveillance for the novel coronavirus.”

Visitors are flocking to national parks, as rangers express anger about their increased exposure.

“Two days before he cursed a supervisor and quit the National Park Service job he loved, Dustin Stone arrived to work in a foul mood. A decision by Interior Secretary David Bernhardt to keep national park sites open despite the coronavirus outbreak left him angry and in disbelief,” Darryl Fears and Dino Grandoni report. “The virus hasn’t reached Skagway, a tiny town on the Alaskan panhandle where Stone lives and worked at the Klondike Gold Rush National Historical Park. But if it does, he said, it could be a disaster. ‘I’ve lived here year-round through eight flu seasons, and I’ve seen how quickly an infection can spread,’ he said. ‘When one of us gets sick, most of us get sick.’ There’s no full-time doctor and no hospital in Skagway. A single community health clinic has a registered nurse and assistants. When it became clear that Klondike Gold Rush would not be among the few sites allowed to close, and would continue hiring seasonal workers from the Lower 48 to come to Skagway for the spring and summer rush of visitors, Stone snapped. He barked a few choice words and stormed out.”

- While nonessential businesses are now shuttered in most states, just 21 governors have issued enforceable orders for people stay in their homes except to buy food or medicine or exercise. (Paige Winfield Cunningham)
- People from the big cities are fleeing to Airbnbs in rural areas to escape the contagion. (Hannah Sampson)
- Locals in the Texas desert want tourists to stay away. They’re coming anyway, forcing officials in three Texas counties to close all hotels and lodgings. (Holly Bailey)
- The Waffle House Index – which measures how the popular breakfast chain is faring during an emergency situation – almost never hits red. Now it has. More than 400 of the company’s 1,992 locations are closed. (Jacob Bogage)
- Stress-baking and hoarding have led to an egg shortage. If Americans continue to markedly change their cooking behaviors, egg producers will have to grow their flocks, but that takes time: It takes 22 weeks for a chick to become a laying hen. (Laura Reiley)

Trump approved Maryland’s disaster declaration.

“The tally of known coronavirus cases in the District, Maryland and Virginia stands at 1,277 Thursday after Maryland reported an additional 157 cases Thursday, bringing the state’s total to 581. Virginia reported 69 more cases Thursday for a total of 461. The District reported 36 new cases Thursday, bringing its total to 271,” Joe Heim and Dana Hedgpeth report. “Trump has approved Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan’s request for a major disaster declaration in the state’s fight against the coronavirus. ... D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) ... condemned federal relief legislation that reduces the amount the District will receive by more than $700 million because it treats the city as a territory. But Bowser acknowledged that any funding increase is unlikely ahead of any future relief measures.”

- A dozen D.C. firefighters tested positive.
  - Metro has now closed 19 stations and entrances at others to save on cleaning supplies. Ridership is down as much as 90 percent.
  - Maryland will close all child-care facilities by this evening.
  - The D.C. jail confirmed its first inmate with the virus and quarantined 36 others who may have come in contact with the 20-year-old man. (Keith Alexander)
  - Access to testing in the D.C. area is still not simple. Showing up without a note from a physician or the local or state health department will not only result in disappointment. Medical authorities warn it may also delay or prevent testing for first responders, health-care workers and people at a high risk for death from the virus. (Patricia Sullivan)
-

The global fallout

A field hospital is set up in Crema, Italy, where 52 doctors and nurses from Cuba will work. (Matteo Corner/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

The U.S. traditionally leads in times of crisis. Now it's self-

isolating.

“Instead, the United States’ rivals, notably China and to a lesser extent Russia, have been stepping up to offer aid to other stricken nations, a role long fulfilled by the United States in crises stretching back to World War II. Planeloads of Chinese medical equipment, masks and protective gear have been landing in Italy, Spain, the Netherlands, Ukraine, Iran and Iraq, among other nations. Jack Ma, China's wealthiest man, donated test kits, masks and protective suits to each of Africa’s 54 countries,” Liz Sly, Michael Birnbaum and Karen DeYoung report. “America’s disengagement on the coronavirus fight is part of a broader retreat from the world. ... But such is the severity of this crisis that America’s absence could permanently affect its standing, ceding ground to an ascendant China in the great game of global influence.”

- Trump tweeted that he had a “very good” conversation with Chinese leader Xi Jinping. Trump said they “discussed in great deal the coronavirus” and claimed the two countries are “working closely together.” Trump said earlier that he had rescheduled his call with Xi in order to call into Sean Hannity’s Fox News show. (Miriam Berger)
- Diplomats are racing to get Americans back home while they still can. The diplomats themselves, though, are stuck in place. (Carol Morello)
- The U.S. government indicted Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro on narcoterrorism charges, offering a $15 million reward for his capture. Attorney General Bill Barr suggested the pandemic had delayed the announcement, but he said the time is right because Venezuela’s “people are suffering.” (Anthony Faiola, Matt Zapposky and DeYoung)

Italy’s new cases are slowing, but how soon will life return to normal?

“Italy's nationwide lockdown is showing the first small signs of payoff. The number of coronavirus cases is still rising, but at the lowest day-on-day pace since the outbreak began. The World Health Organization calls the slowdown encouraging. The health chief in the hardest-hit region says

there's 'light at the end of the tunnel,'" Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. "But while Trump has talked about revving up the U.S. economy by Easter, Italy has set no such timetable — and experts say the nation is still at risk of the virus resuming its extraordinary, deadly trajectory. ... Italy was the first Western country to contend with a mass outbreak and order a lockdown. But it is now at the forefront in making a more delicate calculation: figuring out how long the restrictions should last. ... Officially, Italy's lockdown — which restricts people's movement outside their homes and includes the closure of restaurants and retail stores — is supposed to end on April 3. But the government has signaled that the measures will surely be extended, something of little surprise to most people in the country."

- Hong Kong banned public gatherings of more than four, closed gyms and amusement centers but backtracked on a proposal to ban the sale of alcohol in bars and restaurants. (Shibani Mahtani)
  - Singapore criminalized standing or sitting too close to someone. (Berger)
  - The virus is igniting prison riots, as well as prompting early releases and crackdowns, around the world. (Sudarsan Raghavan and Louisa Loveluck)
  - South Africa has gone into a three-week lockdown. Two coronavirus-related deaths have been reported in the nation, and it has more than 1,000 confirmed cases. (Max Bearak)
-

What it's like to face covid-19

A ‘negative’ coronavirus test result doesn’t always mean you aren’t infected.

“When a new test is rapidly created and deployed, its accuracy is often not fully known. The test is developed under controlled lab conditions, but it is used on samples taken, transported and performed by people in the real world — all of which increase the likelihood of errors,” Carolyn Johnson reports.

Men continue to be hit hardest from the virus. Spain offers fresh data points.

“The Spain data, based on an analysis of 20,648 cases so far and 722 deaths by the country’s Institute of Health Carlos III, a national public health agency, delivers a new level of detail. It shows that men are faring worse on multiple metrics for the disease,” Chris Mooney and Pamela Rolfe report. “The gender divide shows up early, according to Spanish health officials. Men exhibit more of the initial symptoms: fever, cough and trouble breathing. And that carries through the course of sickness: Men progress more often to pneumonia, and have more cases of acute respiratory distress syndrome and more kidney failures. One prominent hypothesis to explain higher male deaths from the disease in other countries is that men tend to smoke more. And yet in Spain, the gender-based smoking gap is small. ... Two Spanish experts agreed that whatever is going on, it does not seem to involve men contracting more cases. Rather, it's that their cases are worse once they do get the disease.”

Our opinion page staff team is collecting human stories about the virus's toll.

“I held my wife as she heaved panicked sobs. She had been laid off. Her boss explained that there was just no way to keep paying employees if she wanted to reopen the business once this was all over. I’m a bartender, and a week earlier, I was also rendered unemployed after our governor ordered all bars and restaurants in the state to close,” wrote Stephen Hood, 34, from Chicago. “Our yearly collective income had been about $80,000. Suddenly, we found ourselves applying for unemployment. My estimated weekly benefit was $143. For my wife, $486. Our $1,650 rent is due April 1. I emailed our landlord letting her know we were just laid off and might ‘be a few days late on rent.’ Her reply crushed us. ‘I understand Amazon and delivery services are hiring thousands of employees.’”

“I’m 28 years old. I’ve been really sick once in my life,” Susan Deng writes from New York. “Today, I’m a statistic for confirmed cases of the coronavirus in New York. I was extremely sick for five days but denied testing after three attempts. My age and the strict regulations made it impossible, even though I had tested negative for the flu and 23 other viruses. After fainting three times, I was admitted to the ER and finally given the test, which came back positive. ... I never thought as a healthy 28-year-old I could be so negatively impacted by covid-19, both physically and mentally. I am grateful my body has been able to fight it off, but the reality is there are many people who have not and could not, and we need to do our part to protect them.”

People are fighting the pandemic with music, gifts and whatever else they have to offer.

“After her performance ended, and the strains of Bach, Randy Newman and an old klezmer song faded from 34th Street, Jodi Beder sat on her front porch with her cello and blew a kiss to her fans on the sidewalk. People clapped and yelled ‘Thank you Jodi!’ from across the street. They said they needed it. She said she needed it too,” Michael Ruane reports. “Beder’s daily 30-minute cello concert in Mount Rainier, Md., is one of hundreds of kind gestures being made by people across the nation to combat the dislocation and isolation ... Restaurants have given away food to employees and passersby, and volunteers are making free deliveries. Sewing and quilting experts have been cranking out dozens of cotton medical masks for hospitals. ... Shilagh A. Mirgain, a psychologist at the University of Wisconsin, described this as ‘the ‘tend and befriend’ response, which we are seeing happening around the world.’ ... The normal stress response of flight or fight doesn’t quite work in this case, she said, but people can tap into their natural ‘tend and befriend’ impulse.”

---

Quote of the day

“The truth is, it’s hard to say don’t be anxious,” said Demetre Daskalakis, deputy commissioner for the Division of Disease Control at the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene. “You can channel that anxiety into vigilance, that’s my advice. Everyone I know, including myself, we’re all either anxious or vigilant.” (Ben Guarino)

---

Social media speed read

British Prime Minister Boris Johnson announced he tested positive. He said has a temperature and mild cough and promises to continue leading his government's response to the virus from home:

Boris Johnson #StayHomeSaveLives ✓

@BorisJohnson

Over the last 24 hours I have developed mild symptoms and tested positive for coronavirus.

I am now self-isolating, but I will continue to lead the government's response via video-conference as we fight this virus.

Together we will beat this. #StayHomeSaveLives

♥ 47.2K 11:15 AM - Mar 27, 2020

💬 36.8K people are talking about this

The Gray Lady starkly illustrates the spike on her front page:

Suzanne Pope
@Suzannepope

The power of data visualization: The @nytimes breaks all the rules of layout to present a chart showing America's sudden spike in jobless claims.

The Democratic governor of Michigan replied to Trump's criticism of her on Fox News:

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) also urged people to take this seriously:

Thousands watched NBA star Steph Curry interview Tony Fauci, including Barack Obama:

Tasneem N ✓
@TasneemN

Barack Obama and Justin Bieber were watching and commenting on Steph Curry's IG live interview with Dr. Anthony Fauci about coronavirus. 2020, oh man.

♡ 139 5:43 PM - Mar 26, 2020

🗨️ 33 people are talking about this

A Kentucky congressman's live town hall featured an unlikely star:

And Joe Biden explained to Jimmy Kimmel why he wears a Phillies hat:

Videos of the day

People around the world are clapping for health-care workers:

A world-famous work-from-home family was back on the telly:

Seth Meyers broke down Trump's fights with governors:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Coronavirus Updates for the most important developments in the outbreak in your inbox every day. Access to all stories in the newsletter is free. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: New York City is Ground Zero – again – with the coronavirus pandemic
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 9:44:00 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by DXC

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

New York City is Ground Zero – again – with the coronavirus pandemic

Emergency Medical Service workers in New York were told on Tuesday night that 6,406 people had called 911 seeking medical help in the preceding 24 hours. It was the highest volume of such calls recorded in the city, surpassing the total from Sept. 11, 2001, when the terrorist attack upended the city's communication networks.

A new record was set again on Wednesday, with 6,544 medical calls to 911.

On Thursday evening, EMS was on track to potentially receive as many as 7,000 calls by midnight.

Officials believe the numbers will only increase in the days ahead. Anecdotally, friends sheltering-in-place at their apartments in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Queens report hearing the haunting sound of ambulance sirens all night long.

Eighteen-and-a-half-years after the trauma of 9/11, the novel coronavirus outbreak has again made New York into America's Ground Zero. America's financial and cultural capital faces another sneak attack from an enemy that's once again indiscriminately targeting innocent civilians. There are obviously enormously significant differences between 2020 and 2001, but instead of hijacking our planes, this unseen pathogen hijacks our lungs.

Oren Barzilay, president of Local 2507, which represents emergency medical technicians and paramedics in the New York City Fire Department, confirmed the 911 call numbers. And a member of the fire department told my colleague Jesse Dougherty that the city's EMS workers are "shockingly low" on personal protective equipment because that gear has to be switched out or discarded entirely after responding to coronavirus-related 911 calls.

The United States has 85,996 confirmed cases of covid-19, the disease caused by the virus, and 1,300 reported deaths. New York state has 39,140 confirmed cases and 461 deaths, with most concentrated around the nation's largest city. That's about 46 percent of the country's cases. New Jersey and Connecticut, which make up the tri-state area, are also seeing spikes. At least 65 New York nurses have tested positive, taking them off the front lines.

More than 5,300 people with the coronavirus are currently hospitalized in New York, and about 1,300 are being treated inside intensive care units. Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said the state has 53,000 available hospital beds but will soon require up to 140,000. That's why plans are in motion to build 1,000-bed facilities in each of the five boroughs and in four counties. One of the medical surge centers will be inside the Jacob K. Javits Convention Center on the west side of Manhattan, where Hillary Clinton held her election night event in 2016 and which normally hosts auto shows and Comic-Con. New York leaders are also considering converting dormitories and hotel rooms for emergency use. A makeshift morgue is under construction outside one Manhattan hospital.

“Part of the reason for the need for auxiliary, emergency measures is that many hospitals have closed in recent years because of financial trouble,” Ariana Eunjung Cha, Brittney Martin and Steven Mufson explain. “The United States has fewer beds per capita — just 2.7 per 1,000 people — than many other countries. That compares with 6.5 per 1,000 for South Korea and France, for example, and 4.3 for China.”

Pregnant women at two major hospital networks in New York are now being forced to give birth without their partners at their side. At Mount Sinai Hospital, spouses and family members have been barred from entering the labor and delivery floor as part of a plan that treats every expectant mother as if she has the coronavirus, per Brittany Shammass, Frances Stead Sellers and Ariana.

Despite the hellish deluge of bad news from his hometown, President Trump called into Sean Hannity's Fox News show on Thursday night to accuse the state's governor of inflating how many ventilators New York really needs to cope with the expected influx of patients. Ventilators help a person with compromised lungs keep breathing. Cuomo said earlier in the day that the state needs about 30,000 ventilators in the coming weeks but has so far acquired about 7,000, with the Federal Emergency Management Agency offering to provide 400 more. Vice President Pence said the federal government will send an additional 4,000 as part of an effort to “surge resources” into New York.

Trump told Hannity that the onus should mainly be on the states to find their own ventilators and that the federal government is “a second line” of defense. “A lot of equipment’s being asked for that I don’t think they’ll need,” Trump said. “I have a feeling that a lot of the numbers that are being said in some areas are just bigger than they’re going to be. I don’t believe you need 40,000 or 30,000 ventilators. ... When you talk about ventilators, that’s sort of like buying a car. It’s very expensive.”

But Trump and Cuomo are both supporting the use of an experimental treatment that is not proven to be effective against the coronavirus. “New York is moving at unprecedented speed and scale in a human experiment to distribute tens of thousands of doses of anti-malarial drugs to seriously ill patients,” Chris Rowland, Jon Swaine and Josh Dawsey report. “Health experts say the Food and Drug Administration has moved with uncommon speed to authorize New York’s sweeping plan to distribute the drugs through hospital networks. Planning for such a complex initiative would ordinarily take up to nine months ... In New York, that timeline has been compressed into three days. The effort has raised concerns among health experts about safety risks — including the danger of fatal heart arrhythmia and vision loss associated with the drugs — and of raising false hopes in the American public. But Trump’s direct intervention into complex medical issues, as well as [Cuomo’s] embrace of the strategy, has generated popular excitement about the drugs.”

A silver lining: New York’s crime rate has plummeted amid the slowdown caused by the virus. Last week, the city recorded a single murder, compared with eight the week before. Burglaries and assaults were also way down, per Shayna Jacobs and Devlin Barrett. This is notable because crime usually increases in the springtime when it gets nicer outside. New York also saw a drop in crime in the immediate aftermath of 9/11.

Other hot spots to watch

“Louisiana Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) said Thursday that he was concerned about sharp rise in coronavirus cases in his state, including one of the highest mortality rates in the country,” Brady Dennis reports. “The state reported 510 newly confirmed cases of covid-19, bringing its total to 2,305. Officials also reported 18 additional deaths — many of them in the hard-hit New Orleans area — bringing the state’s overall count to 83. One of them was a 17-year-old from Orleans Parish. ... Federal officials also are keeping a close eye on the counties that include Detroit and Chicago as the next potential hotspots, said Deborah Birx, the White House’s coronavirus response coordinator.”

Trump's former FDA commissioner, who has been informally advising the coronavirus task force, warned that the epidemic could become national in scope:

Anne Schuchat, principal deputy director at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, said New York's outbreak is probably just the first in a wave of local outbreaks likely to strike other big U.S. cities. She told the Hill the CDC has deployed about 1,500 of its epidemiologists, scientists and experts to hot spots around the country, including New York, Seattle and New Orleans, as well as states like Wisconsin and Colorado.

Washington state, where the curve might be flattening, offers a reason for cautious optimism.

“At EvergreenHealth Medical Center, two miles from the shuttered Lifecare nursing home where 35 patient deaths were linked to the virus, officials say their rate of new covid-19 cases has remained steady for two weeks, leveling off at a trickle,” Robert Klemko reports from Kirkland, Wash. “On some days, doctors here see just one new case and haven’t seen more than four in a single day since mid-March. Few need admission to the intensive care unit, which is now half full, two weeks after overflow necessitated transfers to nearby hospitals. ... In the state that saw the nation's first confirmed covid-19 case on Jan. 31, and the first recorded coronavirus-related death on Feb. 29, initial dire predictions of massive spikes have waned even as testing has increased rapidly. While the number of cases in Washington state grew by as much as 28 percent in one day on March 15 — it has since slowed significantly statewide.”

“We don't know if this last two weeks has been a calm before the storm or if the social distancing and all those things that are being practiced are working,” said EvergreenHealth CEO Jeff Tomlin, whose hospital has handled 40 of the state's more than 130 virus-related deaths. He said the hospital is no longer overwhelmed, though it still lacks needed supplies. “You will never hear me declaring victory at any point of this. ... We're gearing up just in case a surge does happen like in New York or in Italy.”

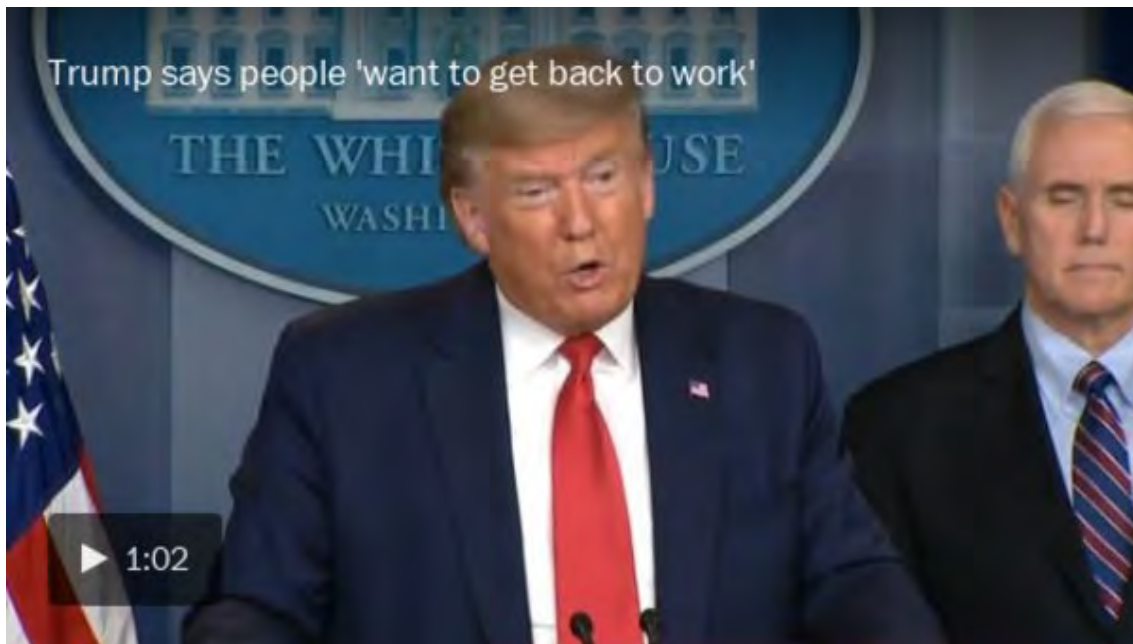

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

More on the federal response

The president clashed with governors during a private call.

“Trump insisted Thursday that Americans are eager to ‘go back to work’ and advised the governors in a letter that his administration is developing new guidelines that will categorize the risk level for each county in the nation — potentially laying the groundwork for less-affected areas to relax some of the strictest measures,” Robert Costa, Laura Vozzella, Josh Dawsey and David Nakamura report. “On Thursday, Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) pleaded with Trump during a conference call with the governors to take more dramatic federal action to secure medical supplies for his state ... After Trump told the group that his administration was ready to be the ‘backup’ for states in crisis, Inslee interjected: ‘We don’t need a backup. We need a Tom Brady.’ ... Though the president has faced mounting bipartisan calls to use his powers to compel private companies to help, he has said he is employing the [Defense Production Act] as leverage to win voluntary cooperation. His campaign on Thursday tweeted a list of major corporations, including 3M, that have said they will increase production of such supplies. Behind the scenes, business leaders have lobbied Trump not to invoke the law and conservative advisers have warned the president that doing so would draw a backlash and could cut into his argument of running against socialism in the fall, said two

administration officials."

Concern about cost prompted the White House to nix a plan for ventilator production.

"The White House had been preparing to reveal on Wednesday a joint venture between General Motors and Ventec Life Systems that would allow for the production of as many as 80,000 desperately needed ventilators," the New York Times reports. "The decision to cancel the announcement, government officials say, came after [FEMA] said it needed more time to assess whether the estimated cost was prohibitive. That price tag was more than $1 billion, with several hundred million dollars to be paid upfront to General Motors to retool a car parts plant in Kokomo, Ind., where the ventilators would be made with Ventec's technology."

- The country's largest veterinary schools, animal hospitals and even zoos are offering up their ventilators to hospitals. (ABC News)
- A Detroit-area health system has developed a contingency plan to deny ventilators and intensive care treatment to coronavirus patients with a poor chance of surviving, including those with some preexisting conditions. Henry Ford Health Systems said it has not yet needed to implement the policy. (Teo Armus)
- The U.S. government has 1.5 million expired N95 masks sitting in an Indiana warehouse. Authorities have not shipped them because of their expiration date, despite CDC guidelines saying they're safe to use during the outbreak. (Nick Miroff)
- Trump appointees at the EPA are using the epidemic as an excuse to announce the sweeping relaxation of environmental rules, allowing power plants, factories and other facilities to determine for themselves if they're able to meet legal requirements on reporting pollution. (NYT)
- Internal emails obtained by ProPublica show how chaos at the CDC slowed the early response to the virus. The documents reveal an antiquated public health system struggling to adapt on the fly.

- John Demers, the chief of the Justice Department's National Security Division, warned that this pandemic may prompt some terrorists to speed up planned attacks against the United States. (Politico)
- White House officials are reportedly discussing the possible deployment of U.S. troops to the Canadian border, prompting backlash from Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, who said it is "very much in both of our interests" for the U.S.-Canada border to remain unmilitarized. (Independent)
- At least 23 sailors tested positive aboard the USS Theodore Roosevelt. The aircraft carrier was directed to a port, and the Navy has administered tests to all of the more than 5,000 sailors aboard. (WSJ)
- The Pentagon will begin withholding some data about infection within its ranks, citing concern that adversaries could capitalize on the information as the contagion undermines force readiness. (Reuters)
- The acting director of ICE, Matthew Albence, is losing favor in Trump's White House after announcing that immigration authorities would halt most nonessential enforcement actions during the outbreak. The nativists in the West Wing complain that Albence's emergency posture is something the Obama administration would do. (Politico)

House leaders are trying to expedite passage of the stimulus package.

"House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) agreed to approve the measure with a voice vote Friday that would not require all 430 current members of the House to travel to the Capitol, given that two lawmakers have contracted the disease and others are self-quarantining due to exposure to confirmed carriers," John Wagner, Paul Kane and Mike DeBonis report. "But at least one lawmaker is considering upending the plans for swift passage. Rep. Thomas Massie (R-Ky.) said Thursday that he opposed the bill, approved unanimously by the Senate on Wednesday, as it would add to the national debt. The libertarian lawmaker also is concerned that voting without a quorum present — the majority of the House chamber — would violate the Constitution. He said he has yet to decide whether to press the issue, which could delay a House vote until late Saturday or Sunday. ... Pelosi said she was ready to defeat such an effort."

- Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) said her husband “took a good turn” in his battle with covid-19 and has been released from the hospital.
- Rep. Lizzie Fletcher (D-Tex.) has self-quarantined after experiencing flu-like symptoms, including a temperature above 101 degrees.

Cruise lines got cut out of the bailout package.

Language in the 883-page bill says that, to be eligible for aid from the $500 billion fund for large employers, companies must be certified as “created or organized in the United States or under the laws of the United States” as well as having “significant operations in” and a majority of employees based in the United States. “Major cruise companies have located their primary headquarters overseas, which for years has allowed them to pay almost no federal taxes and avoid some U.S. regulations,” Jonathan O’Connell reports. “Carnival Corp., owner of the Princess cruise lines, is incorporated in Panama. Royal Caribbean is incorporated in Liberia, and Norwegian Cruise Lines in Bermuda.”

- A tweak to tax policy tucked into the bill could hand $170 billion in tax savings to real estate tycoons, the Times reports.
- Lawmakers said D.C. was intentionally classified as a territory in the stimulus bill so that the nation's capital would get less money. (Jenna Portnoy and Fenit Nirappil)

Trump’s online base is going after Tony Fauci.

“A cadre of right-wing news sites pulled from the fringes in recent years through repeated mention by Trump is now taking aim at ... the nation’s top infectious diseases expert, who has given interviews in which he has tempered praise for the president with doubts about his pronouncements,” Isaac Stanley-Becker reports. “The smear campaign taking root online, and laying the groundwork for Trump to cast aside the experts on his own coronavirus task force, relies centrally on the idea that there is no expertise that rises above partisanship, and that everyone has an agenda.”

---

More on the cascading domestic fallout

Andrea Austin, an emergency medicine physician, sits with her dogs, Mocha and Chips, at her home in California. (Sandy Huffaker for The Washington Post)

Health care workers are updating their wills and making funeral plans.

“The first time Andrea Austin, 35, considered her own mortality, she was flying into Iraq aboard a C-130 military plane,” Rachel Siegel reports.

“Though the emergency medicine physician had set up a living will and power of attorney before her seven-month deployment with a shock and trauma team, entering a war zone crystallized the dangers of her job. Now, more than three years later, Austin is again weighing worst-case scenarios

as she continues treating patients at Los Angeles County+USC Medical Center while coronavirus crisis expands at an alarming rate. She wrote down which of her fellow doctors she would entrust with end-of-life care. She made clear her preference for cremation. And she compiled her funeral playlist, starting with Israel Kamakawiwo'ole's 'Somewhere Over the Rainbow.' ... If there is a slide show played at her funeral, she wants it set to Meghan Trainor's 'Badass Woman.' For the end of the ceremony, she chose Stevie Wonder's 'Ave Maria.' ... Then she stored the details on Google Drive and shared the files with her husband and brother. 'My fear of dying is worse now than it was when I was in Iraq,' she said."

This was the worst week for our economy in decades.

"The economy has entered a deep recession that has echoes of the Great Depression in the way it has devastated so many businesses and consumers, triggering mass layoffs and threatening to set off a chain reaction of bankruptcies and financial losses for companies large and small," Heather Long reports. "It remains a wide open question whether this will become a long-lasting slump or a short-lived flash recession. Economists say the jobless claims reported Thursday, which reflected workers seeking unemployment insurance last week, is the start of a massive spike in unemployment that could result in over 40 million Americans losing their jobs by mid-April. Although no official figures exist yet, the unemployment rate has likely jumped to at least 5.5 percent, says economist Martha Gimbel of Schmidt Futures, a level not seen since 2015 and up from 3.5 percent in February." Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell said: "We may well be in a recession."

U.S. markets plunged Friday morning, interrupting a stellar three-day run and offering a stinging reminder that the relief bill won't blunt investor anxiety just yet. The Dow sank 900 points, or 4 percent, midmorning. The Standard & Poor's and Nasdaq also posted losses of 3.6 and 3.5 percent, respectively. (Rachel Siegel and Thomas Heath)

A Washington Post-ABC News poll shows the pandemic has disrupted most American lives.

“Almost overnight, the threat from the virus has changed habits and lifestyles. Roughly 9 in 10 say they are staying home ‘as much as possible’ and are practicing social distancing to lessen the risk of getting the virus. Nearly 9 in 10 say they have stopped going to bars and restaurants. About 6 in 10 say they have stockpiled food and household supplies at home,” Dan Balz and Emily Guskin report. “Trump narrowly wins approval for handling the outbreak and his overall approval rating has grown five percentage points since February to 48 percent, even as most Americans say he was too slow to take action in the early days of the virus’s spread. The rise in Trump’s approval rating, however, is far smaller than some other presidents have experienced in times of national crisis. ...

“More than 3 in 4 say their life has been disrupted by the coronavirus outbreak, with half the population now saying there has been ‘a lot’ of disruption. Stress levels appear to be higher today than they were during the Great Recession that followed the financial collapse of 2008, with 7 in 10 Americans citing the virus outbreak as a source of that stress and 1 in 3 saying it caused ‘serious’ stress. ... Nearly 7 in 10 Americans say they are worried that they or someone in their immediate family might catch the disease. Asked to rate their personal risk of getting sick from the virus, 56 percent say they feel at risk, with 20 percent saying they believe they are at high risk. At this point, about 1 in 10 say they know someone who has been diagnosed with the virus but about four times as many say people in their local community have been diagnosed.”

Incomplete reporting from local authorities makes fighting the contagion harder.

“The Post is tracking every known U.S. death, analyzing data from health agencies and gathering details from family and friends of the victims. In the first 1,000 fatalities, some patterns have begun to emerge,” Abigail

Hauslohner, Reis Thebault and Jacqueline Dupree report. “About 65 percent of the dead whose ages are known were older than 70, and nearly 40 percent were over 80, demonstrating that risk rises along with age. About 5 percent whose ages are known were in their 40s or younger, but many more in that age group have been sick enough to be hospitalized. Of those victims whose gender is known, nearly 60 percent were men. What remains murky is exactly who is dying in America during the pandemic, even as scientists and public health experts race to uncover information that can help save lives. Overwhelmed state and local authorities have been issuing widely varying reports on those who died, citing medical privacy laws to shield even basic details about age, gender and underlying conditions, the three signal categories that epidemiologists say are key indicators of risk. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which offers a well-regarded and oft-cited public weekly tracker for the annual influenza season, offers no similar real-time surveillance for the novel coronavirus.”

Visitors are flocking to national parks, as rangers express anger about their increased exposure.

“Two days before he cursed a supervisor and quit the National Park Service job he loved, Dustin Stone arrived to work in a foul mood. A decision by Interior Secretary David Bernhardt to keep national park sites open despite the coronavirus outbreak left him angry and in disbelief,” Darryl Fears and Dino Grandoni report. “The virus hasn’t reached Skagway, a tiny town on the Alaskan panhandle where Stone lives and worked at the Klondike Gold Rush National Historical Park. But if it does, he said, it could be a disaster. ‘I’ve lived here year-round through eight flu seasons, and I’ve seen how quickly an infection can spread,’ he said. ‘When one of us gets sick, most of us get sick.’ There’s no full-time doctor and no hospital in Skagway. A single community health clinic has a registered nurse and assistants. When it became clear that Klondike Gold Rush would not be among the few sites allowed to close, and would continue hiring seasonal workers from the Lower 48 to come to Skagway for the spring and summer rush of visitors, Stone snapped. He barked a few choice words and stormed out.”

- While nonessential businesses are now shuttered in most states, just 21 governors have issued enforceable orders for people stay in their homes except to buy food or medicine or exercise. (Paige Winfield Cunningham)
- People from the big cities are fleeing to Airbnbs in rural areas to escape the contagion. (Hannah Sampson)
- Locals in the Texas desert want tourists to stay away. They’re coming anyway, forcing officials in three Texas counties to close all hotels and lodgings. (Holly Bailey)
- The Waffle House Index – which measures how the popular breakfast chain is faring during an emergency situation – almost never hits red. Now it has. More than 400 of the company’s 1,992 locations are closed. (Jacob Bogage)
- Stress-baking and hoarding have led to an egg shortage. If Americans continue to markedly change their cooking behaviors, egg producers will have to grow their flocks, but that takes time: It takes 22 weeks for a chick to become a laying hen. (Laura Reiley)

Trump approved Maryland’s disaster declaration.

“The tally of known coronavirus cases in the District, Maryland and Virginia stands at 1,277 Thursday after Maryland reported an additional 157 cases Thursday, bringing the state’s total to 581. Virginia reported 69 more cases Thursday for a total of 461. The District reported 36 new cases Thursday, bringing its total to 271,” Joe Heim and Dana Hedgpeth report. “Trump has approved Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan’s request for a major disaster declaration in the state’s fight against the coronavirus. ... D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) ... condemned federal relief legislation that reduces the amount the District will receive by more than $700 million because it treats the city as a territory. But Bowser acknowledged that any funding increase is unlikely ahead of any future relief measures.”

- A dozen D.C. firefighters tested positive.
  - Metro has now closed 19 stations and entrances at others to save on cleaning supplies. Ridership is down as much as 90 percent.
  - Maryland will close all child-care facilities by this evening.
  - The D.C. jail confirmed its first inmate with the virus and quarantined 36 others who may have come in contact with the 20-year-old man. (Keith Alexander)
  - Access to testing in the D.C. area is still not simple. Showing up without a note from a physician or the local or state health department will not only result in disappointment. Medical authorities warn it may also delay or prevent testing for first responders, health-care workers and people at a high risk for death from the virus. (Patricia Sullivan)
-

The global fallout

A field hospital is set up in Crema, Italy, where 52 doctors and nurses from Cuba will work. (Matteo Corner/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

The U.S. traditionally leads in times of crisis. Now it's self-

isolating.

“Instead, the United States’ rivals, notably China and to a lesser extent Russia, have been stepping up to offer aid to other stricken nations, a role long fulfilled by the United States in crises stretching back to World War II. Planeloads of Chinese medical equipment, masks and protective gear have been landing in Italy, Spain, the Netherlands, Ukraine, Iran and Iraq, among other nations. Jack Ma, China's wealthiest man, donated test kits, masks and protective suits to each of Africa’s 54 countries,” Liz Sly, Michael Birnbaum and Karen DeYoung report. “America’s disengagement on the coronavirus fight is part of a broader retreat from the world. ... But such is the severity of this crisis that America’s absence could permanently affect its standing, ceding ground to an ascendant China in the great game of global influence.”

- Trump tweeted that he had a “very good” conversation with Chinese leader Xi Jinping. Trump said they “discussed in great deal the coronavirus” and claimed the two countries are “working closely together.” Trump said earlier that he had rescheduled his call with Xi in order to call into Sean Hannity’s Fox News show. (Miriam Berger)
- Diplomats are racing to get Americans back home while they still can. The diplomats themselves, though, are stuck in place. (Carol Morello)
- The U.S. government indicted Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro on narcoterrorism charges, offering a $15 million reward for his capture. Attorney General Bill Barr suggested the pandemic had delayed the announcement, but he said the time is right because Venezuela’s “people are suffering.” (Anthony Faiola, Matt Zapposky and DeYoung)

Italy’s new cases are slowing, but how soon will life return to normal?

“Italy's nationwide lockdown is showing the first small signs of payoff. The number of coronavirus cases is still rising, but at the lowest day-on-day pace since the outbreak began. The World Health Organization calls the slowdown encouraging. The health chief in the hardest-hit region says

there's 'light at the end of the tunnel,'" Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli report. "But while Trump has talked about revving up the U.S. economy by Easter, Italy has set no such timetable — and experts say the nation is still at risk of the virus resuming its extraordinary, deadly trajectory. ... Italy was the first Western country to contend with a mass outbreak and order a lockdown. But it is now at the forefront in making a more delicate calculation: figuring out how long the restrictions should last. ... Officially, Italy's lockdown — which restricts people's movement outside their homes and includes the closure of restaurants and retail stores — is supposed to end on April 3. But the government has signaled that the measures will surely be extended, something of little surprise to most people in the country."

- Hong Kong banned public gatherings of more than four, closed gyms and amusement centers but backtracked on a proposal to ban the sale of alcohol in bars and restaurants. (Shibani Mahtani)
  - Singapore criminalized standing or sitting too close to someone. (Berger)
  - The virus is igniting prison riots, as well as prompting early releases and crackdowns, around the world. (Sudarsan Raghavan and Louisa Loveluck)
  - South Africa has gone into a three-week lockdown. Two coronavirus-related deaths have been reported in the nation, and it has more than 1,000 confirmed cases. (Max Bearak)
-

What it's like to face covid-19

A ‘negative’ coronavirus test result doesn’t always mean you aren’t infected.

“When a new test is rapidly created and deployed, its accuracy is often not fully known. The test is developed under controlled lab conditions, but it is used on samples taken, transported and performed by people in the real world — all of which increase the likelihood of errors,” Carolyn Johnson reports.

Men continue to be hit hardest from the virus. Spain offers fresh data points.

“The Spain data, based on an analysis of 20,648 cases so far and 722 deaths by the country’s Institute of Health Carlos III, a national public health agency, delivers a new level of detail. It shows that men are faring worse on multiple metrics for the disease,” Chris Mooney and Pamela Rolfe report. “The gender divide shows up early, according to Spanish health officials. Men exhibit more of the initial symptoms: fever, cough and trouble breathing. And that carries through the course of sickness: Men progress more often to pneumonia, and have more cases of acute respiratory distress syndrome and more kidney failures. One prominent hypothesis to explain higher male deaths from the disease in other countries is that men tend to smoke more. And yet in Spain, the gender-based smoking gap is small. ... Two Spanish experts agreed that whatever is going on, it does not seem to involve men contracting more cases. Rather, it's that their cases are worse once they do get the disease.”

Our opinion page staff team is collecting human stories about the virus's toll.

“I held my wife as she heaved panicked sobs. She had been laid off. Her boss explained that there was just no way to keep paying employees if she wanted to reopen the business once this was all over. I’m a bartender, and a week earlier, I was also rendered unemployed after our governor ordered all bars and restaurants in the state to close,” wrote Stephen Hood, 34, from Chicago. “Our yearly collective income had been about $80,000. Suddenly, we found ourselves applying for unemployment. My estimated weekly benefit was $143. For my wife, $486. Our $1,650 rent is due April 1. I emailed our landlord letting her know we were just laid off and might ‘be a few days late on rent.’ Her reply crushed us. ‘I understand Amazon and delivery services are hiring thousands of employees.’”

“I’m 28 years old. I’ve been really sick once in my life,” Susan Deng writes from New York. “Today, I’m a statistic for confirmed cases of the coronavirus in New York. I was extremely sick for five days but denied testing after three attempts. My age and the strict regulations made it impossible, even though I had tested negative for the flu and 23 other viruses. After fainting three times, I was admitted to the ER and finally given the test, which came back positive. ... I never thought as a healthy 28-year-old I could be so negatively impacted by covid-19, both physically and mentally. I am grateful my body has been able to fight it off, but the reality is there are many people who have not and could not, and we need to do our part to protect them.”

People are fighting the pandemic with music, gifts and whatever else they have to offer.

“After her performance ended, and the strains of Bach, Randy Newman and an old klezmer song faded from 34th Street, Jodi Beder sat on her front porch with her cello and blew a kiss to her fans on the sidewalk. People clapped and yelled ‘Thank you Jodi!’ from across the street. They said they needed it. She said she needed it too,” Michael Ruane reports. “Beder’s daily 30-minute cello concert in Mount Rainier, Md., is one of hundreds of kind gestures being made by people across the nation to combat the dislocation and isolation ... Restaurants have given away food to employees and passersby, and volunteers are making free deliveries. Sewing and quilting experts have been cranking out dozens of cotton medical masks for hospitals. ... Shilagh A. Mirgain, a psychologist at the University of Wisconsin, described this as ‘the ‘tend and befriend’ response, which we are seeing happening around the world.’ ... The normal stress response of flight or fight doesn’t quite work in this case, she said, but people can tap into their natural ‘tend and befriend’ impulse.”

---

Quote of the day

“The truth is, it’s hard to say don’t be anxious,” said Demetre Daskalakis, deputy commissioner for the Division of Disease Control at the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene. “You can channel that anxiety into vigilance, that’s my advice. Everyone I know, including myself, we’re all either anxious or vigilant.” (Ben Guarino)

---

Social media speed read

British Prime Minister Boris Johnson announced he tested positive. He said has a temperature and mild cough and promises to continue leading his government's response to the virus from home:

Boris Johnson #StayHomeSaveLives ✓

@BorisJohnson

Over the last 24 hours I have developed mild symptoms and tested positive for coronavirus.

I am now self-isolating, but I will continue to lead the government's response via video-conference as we fight this virus.

Together we will beat this. #StayHomeSaveLives

♥ 47.2K 11:15 AM - Mar 27, 2020

💬 36.8K people are talking about this

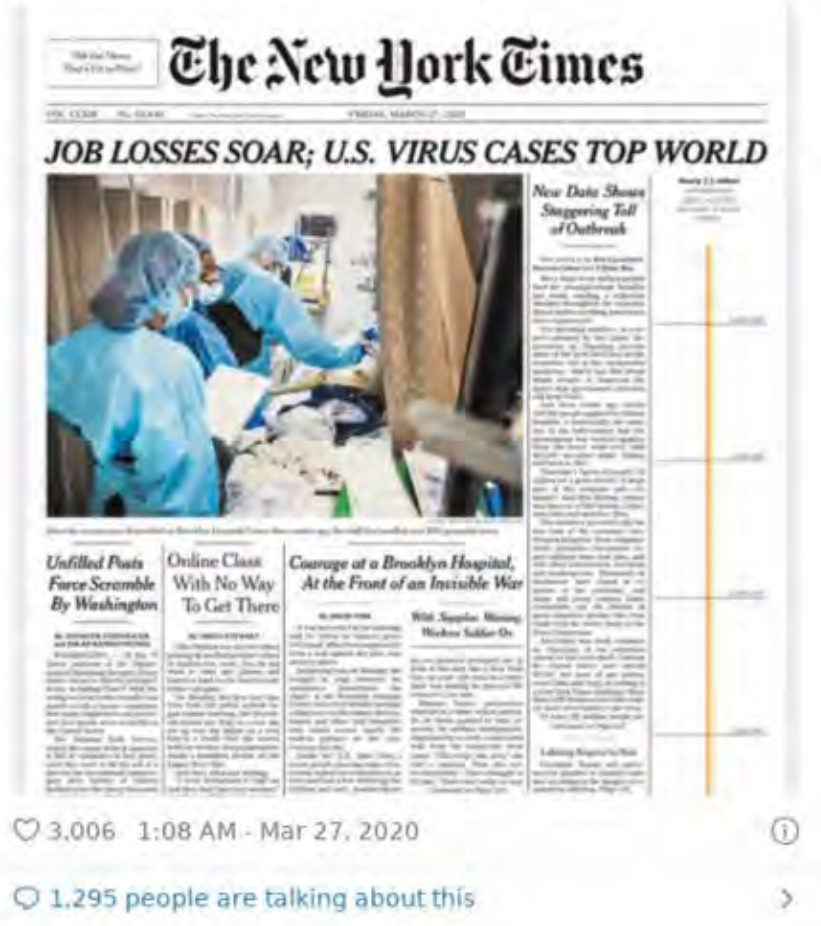

The Gray Lady starkly illustrates the spike on her front page:

Suzanne Pope
@Suzannepope

The power of data visualization: The @nytimes breaks all the rules of layout to present a chart showing America's sudden spike in jobless claims.

The Democratic governor of Michigan replied to Trump's criticism of her on Fox News:

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) also urged people to take this seriously:

Thousands watched NBA star Steph Curry interview Tony Fauci, including Barack Obama:

Tasneem N ✓
@TasneemN

Barack Obama and Justin Bieber were watching and commenting on Steph Curry's IG live interview with Dr. Anthony Fauci about coronavirus. 2020, oh man.

♡ 139 5:43 PM - Mar 26, 2020

🗨️ 33 people are talking about this

A Kentucky congressman's live town hall featured an unlikely star:

And Joe Biden explained to Jimmy Kimmel why he wears a Phillies hat:

Videos of the day

People around the world are clapping for health-care workers:

A world-famous work-from-home family was back on the telly:

Seth Meyers broke down Trump's fights with governors:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Coronavirus Updates for the most important developments in the outbreak in your inbox every day. Access to all stories in the newsletter is free. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 27 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 11:41:58 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., March 27, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

House approves $2.2T stimulus

The House this afternoon passed by voice vote a $2.2 trillion package to fight the novel coronavirus after lawmakers raced to the Capitol to beat back a threat from a lone member to slow the pandemic aid.

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

How COVID-19 could transform courts

3. CAR RULES:

Final rollback expected next week

4. OFF TOPIC:

Obama's stimulus guru sees post-pandemic Rx for clean energy

CORONAVIRUS

5. BRISTOL BAY:

Pebble foes plead for coronavirus delay

6. WILD HORSES:

Coronavirus forces BLM to cancel adoption, sales events

7. SUPERFUND:

Colo. cleanup suspended due to pandemic

8. RENEWABLE FUELS:

Ethanol plants seek rule changes to resupply hand sanitizer

POLITICS

9. ADVOCACY:

Oil giant leaves trade group over climate policies

NATURAL RESOURCES

10. MINING:

BLM advances Alaska 'Road to Resources'

ENERGY

---

11. UTILITIES:

N.M. regulators getting squeezed out of state building

AIR AND WATER

---

12. AGRICULTURE:

Mexican farmers burn trucks to protest U.S. water transfer

STATES

---

13. GEORGIA:

Judge won't halt salvage of capsized ship off coast

14. TEXAS:

2 earthquakes rattle oil drilling region

15. NEW MEXICO:

Fire danger level elevated in southwest

16. TENNESSEE:

FEMA grant to support tornado victims' mental health

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. FRANCE:

Sound maps show noise pollution plummets in Paris

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 27 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 11:45:37 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., March 27, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

House approves $2.2T stimulus

The House this afternoon passed by voice vote a $2.2 trillion package to fight the novel coronavirus after lawmakers raced to the Capitol to beat back a threat from a lone member to slow the pandemic aid.

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

How COVID-19 could transform courts

3. CAR RULES:

Final rollback expected next week

4. OFF TOPIC:

Obama's stimulus guru sees post-pandemic Rx for clean energy

CORONAVIRUS

5. BRISTOL BAY:

Pebble foes plead for coronavirus delay

6. WILD HORSES:

Coronavirus forces BLM to cancel adoption, sales events

7. SUPERFUND:

Colo. cleanup suspended due to pandemic

8. RENEWABLE FUELS:

Ethanol plants seek rule changes to resupply hand sanitizer

POLITICS

9. ADVOCACY:

Oil giant leaves trade group over climate policies

NATURAL RESOURCES

10. MINING:

BLM advances Alaska 'Road to Resources'

ENERGY

---

11. UTILITIES:

N.M. regulators getting squeezed out of state building

AIR AND WATER

---

12. AGRICULTURE:

Mexican farmers burn trucks to protest U.S. water transfer

STATES

---

13. GEORGIA:

Judge won't halt salvage of capsized ship off coast

14. TEXAS:

2 earthquakes rattle oil drilling region

15. NEW MEXICO:

Fire danger level elevated in southwest

16. TENNESSEE:

FEMA grant to support tornado victims' mental health

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. FRANCE:

Sound maps show noise pollution plummets in Paris

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 27 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 11:46:00 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., March 27, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

House approves $2.2T stimulus

The House this afternoon passed by voice vote a $2.2 trillion package to fight the novel coronavirus after lawmakers raced to the Capitol to beat back a threat from a lone member to slow the pandemic aid.

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

How COVID-19 could transform courts

3. CAR RULES:

Final rollback expected next week

4. OFF TOPIC:

Obama's stimulus guru sees post-pandemic Rx for clean energy

CORONAVIRUS

5. BRISTOL BAY:

Pebble foes plead for coronavirus delay

6. WILD HORSES:

Coronavirus forces BLM to cancel adoption, sales events

7. SUPERFUND:

Colo. cleanup suspended due to pandemic

8. RENEWABLE FUELS:

Ethanol plants seek rule changes to resupply hand sanitizer

POLITICS

9. ADVOCACY:

Oil giant leaves trade group over climate policies

NATURAL RESOURCES

10. MINING:

BLM advances Alaska 'Road to Resources'

ENERGY

---

11. UTILITIES:

N.M. regulators getting squeezed out of state building

AIR AND WATER

---

12. AGRICULTURE:

Mexican farmers burn trucks to protest U.S. water transfer

STATES

---

13. GEORGIA:

Judge won't halt salvage of capsized ship off coast

14. TEXAS:

2 earthquakes rattle oil drilling region

15. NEW MEXICO:

Fire danger level elevated in southwest

16. TENNESSEE:

FEMA grant to support tornado victims' mental health

INTERNATIONAL

---

17. FRANCE:

Sound maps show noise pollution plummets in Paris

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 27 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 2:29:50 PM

---

WHITE HOUSE: Trump to General Motors: Make ventilators now. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
FEDERAL WORKFORCE: Union offers disaster aid for COVID-19.
PANDEMIC: Pa. postpones primary.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<[https://www.eenews.net/pm?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Fri., March 27, 2020
<[https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/full?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/full?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)> READ FULL
EDITION

<[https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062718089?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062718089?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)>
1. WHITE HOUSE:
Trump to General Motors: Make ventilators now

President Trump today signed a memorandum directing General Motors Co. to make ventilators to help fight the worst cases of COVID-19.

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

<[https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717889?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717889?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)>
2. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:
Union offers disaster aid for COVID-19

<[https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717605?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717605?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)>
3. PANDEMIC:
Pa. postpones primary

<[https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717977?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717977?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)>
4. PANDEMIC:
EPA eases gasoline blending requirements

<[https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717939?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717939?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)>
5. WILD HORSES:
Advocates drop Forest Service lawsuit

<[https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717741?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/stories/1062717741?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)>
6. OIL AND GAS:
Bill would pull troops from Saudi Arabia over price war

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<[https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/calendars?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/27/calendars?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)>
7. CALENDAR:
Activity for March 23 - March 29, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News

E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<[https://www.eenews.net/?
utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D](https://www.eenews.net/?utm_medium=email&utm_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D)> Unsubscribe | Our
Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001
Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Trump orders GM to make ventilators, signs $2.2 trillion aid package
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 3:14:39 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

What to know about the novel coronavirus outbreak, from To Your Health.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
with Angela Fritz
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

President Trump signed into law the largest stimulus bill in U.S. history hours after the House passed the \$2.2-trillion relief package. The measure includes checks of up to $1,200 for most Americans, hundreds of billions of dollars in business loans and unemployment protections — all of it intended to blunt a sudden recession that has already eliminated more than 3 million jobs and in some ways echoes the Great Depression.

Some House members wore surgical gloves or sat in the visitors' gallery to avoid possible infection as they passed the bill on a voice vote. The bipartisan effort marked a rare spot of unity in a government otherwise fractured and flailing against the pandemic. Governors and local health officials are demanding the federal government do more to help with huge shortages of medical equipment as the United States leads the world in confirmed coronavirus cases, with more than 90,000 infections and 1,400 deaths,

“We don’t need a backup. We need a Tom Brady,” Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) told Trump on a conference call with other governors on Thursday, comparing the president's strategy of leaving states in charge of getting their own supplies to a football team playing without a quarterback.

Three months into the crisis, nearly nine in 10 mayors report shortages of test kits, face masks, ventilators and other equipment, according to a national survey. Hospitals are competing against each other to buy scarce supplies, inflating prices and forcing some to cut deals with unverified cold-callers.

The president invoked the Defense Production Act to force General Motors to make ventilators, after weeks of resistance.

“I just haven’t had to use it,” Trump had said Thursday, insisting companies were volunteering the necessary efforts. But Friday morning, Trump raged on Twitter at GM chief executive Mary T. Barra, claiming she had backed away from an agreement to make tens of thousands of ventilators, and he invoked the act a few hours later.

Equipment shortages are “one of the most urgent threats to our collective ability to save lives,” World Health Organization Director General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus warned Friday, as the global number of infections surpassed 575,000.

Prime Minister Boris Johnson has tested positive for coronavirus in Britain, where firefighters have been tapped to deliver food and collect bodies. Italy reported 919 new deaths — the largest one-day toll anywhere. Nearly 300 people in Iran died after drinking methanol, falsely believing it would help them ward off the disease. And the virus has been found in a cat in the Belgian city of Liège, adding to evidence that sick people may be able to infect their pets.

In contrast to other countries with accelerating infection rates, the White House is pushing to relax guidelines on quarantines and business closures in some parts of the U.S., and the government is developing a program to assess risk levels for each county in the United States. Trump has said he would like Americans back at work and packed into churches by mid-April for Easter. Republican governors in Florida, Alabama and Mississippi are already resisting the kinds of strict social distancing measure other states have enforced.

Many health officials believe more quarantines are needed, and fear reducing them any time soon could lead to catastrophic levels of disease. But The Post reports that “a growing contingent of Trump supporters have pushed the narrative that health experts are part of a deep-state plot to hurt Trump’s reelection efforts by damaging the economy and keeping America shut down as long as possible.”

---

Content from Slack

Helpful how-tos for transitioning to remote work

Find yourself working remotely all of a sudden? Slack is here to help with this comprehensive set of tips to make remote work productive. With all of your tools and communication in one place, Slack brings the team together, no matter where everyone is working from.

---

Live updates

NEW: Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak around the world with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need during the outbreak.

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

Does recovery from covid-19 confer future immunity, and could antibodies from the donated blood of those who have recovered be used on people who are still sick? — Tori Hall in Bethesda, Md.

It does appear that after someone has recovered from covid-19, they have enough antibodies to the virus that they are immune from reinfection, at least for a period of time.

Antibodies in a recovered person's blood could potentially also help others. Infusions of antibody-rich plasma — the clear liquid that remains when blood cells are removed — may help a sick person's immune system fight off the illness. The same concept was successful against polio, measles, mumps and flu.

Doctors and researchers are hopeful that this “convalescent plasma” treatment will help provide short-term relief to the health-care system and its patients while scientists develop a long-lasting vaccine — something that could take more than a year — or full antibody therapies, which drug companies are also working on.

“None of us sees this as a long-term solution. This is a stopgap, pending availability of more definitive interventions,” such as a vaccine or antiviral drug, said Evan Bloch, associate professor of pathology at Johns Hopkins.

Health and Science reporters Carolyn Y. Johnson and Ben Guarino helped answer today's question. You can read their full story about plasma and antibody therapy here.

ADVERTISEMENT

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Small town battled coronavirus on its own, as outbreak spread in a red state
- The coronavirus recession is just getting started
- As Trump signals readiness to break with experts, his online base assails Fauci
- The history and mystery of Purell, the most sacred goo of our new era

Here's the good some are doing to combat the fear and isolation of the coronavirus

By Michael Ruane • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

Disaster could show up at YOUR doorstep.

PLAN NOW

Ready FEMA ad LIVE

Powered by LiveIntent

Zoos are closed because of coronavirus, but the animals still need care

By Jason Bittel • Read more »

From party to pandemic: New Orleans fears

Mardi Gras fueled outbreak as cases spike

By David Montgomery, Ariana Eunjung Cha and Richard A. Webster • Read more »

From unfazed to unprecedented: Inside the decision to postpone the Olympics

By Adam Kilgore, Simon Denyer and Rick Maese • Read more »

Pandemic dreams ....

maya kosoff @mekosoff · 10h have you guys also been having more vivid dreams since this whole thing started or is this simply a "me" thing

Amber Discko @amberdiscko
Very! I had a beautiful dream the other night where I woke up on top of a tall building in nyc surrounded by glass and there were plants and flowers everywhere. It was really cool.

7 12:04 PM - Mar 27, 2020

See Amber Discko's other Tweets

Martha Crawford @shänkthinks · 2h
Lots of dreams of pregnancies, babies, and dreams of teeth @newworlddreams

MistieMae1 @MistieMae1
Not sure if it counts, but I had a dream 2 nights ago that I was given a clutch of fish eggs to care for. Couldn't hold them as I traveled through the dream. They kept slipping out of my hands and popping like bubbles on the ground.

1 4:58 PM - Mar 27, 2020

See MistieMae1's other Tweets

Jono
@nqc_jono

Had the most vivid dream last night about the last game of rugby league ever played before Coronavirus shut everything down.

A thread.

8:11 PM - Mar 22, 2020

See Jono's other Tweets

sarah heikkinen @sar_heikkinen · 0h

Replying to @mekosoff

i has a dream last night that emily osment was dating this terrible large biker and she flew off the bike while he was doing a trick and landed in my hometown library's parking lot (where i was hanging out for some reason), i took her inside and cleaned up her scrapes with purell

sarah heikkinen
@sar_heikkinen

and then her large biker boyfriend came and found us in the bathroom and i stabbed him in the stomach??? and then the bathroom caught on fire and we trapped him in the stall and ran outside, where my boyfriend was waiting quietly with my mom's dog

12:26 PM - Mar 27, 2020

See sarah heikkinen's other Tweets

$arah is social distancing
@flayOTDscherbet

Been taking melatonin to sleep bc stress and it gives me weird and vivid dreams. Last night had a dream @KimKardashian sent us $882,000 to get us thru the coronavirus shelter in place 🤔 very specific number

1:06 PM - Mar 27, 2020

See \$arah is social distancing's other Tweets

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Opinions A.M. and P.M. for the best of The Post's opinions and commentary, in your inbox every morning and afternoon. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Stay connected while social distancing
Date: Friday, March 27, 2020 5:38:48 PM

---

The Washington Post

Democracy Dies in Darkness

Stay connected. Stay informed.

Thank you for being part of The Washington Post community. We know how important it is to stay connected with our communities, especially during this period of social distancing. It reminds us that we have support and we're all in this together. We are grateful that you are part of our community, and invite you to explore all the ways you can engage directly with our journalists, our content — and one another.

Join our live chats

Participate in live Q&As with our journalists on a variety of topics related to the impact of the outbreak on policy, personal finance, and relationships. Miss a chat? No problem, we provide transcripts of previous chats as well. Here are a few recent chats you may find interesting.

- Carolyn Hax: How to stay positive during an outbreak
- Home Front: Cleaning in the age of covid-19
- Opinions Live with Eugene Robinson: At least our chats are socially distant
- Color of Money: How worried should we be about the stock market?
- Free Range on Food: Cooking and eating in the age of covid-19

Help and hope in these times

We've pulled together a selection of uplifting stories that show how people are finding ways to connect with one another and to support their families and neighbors in this time of crisis. We've found inspiration in these stories, and we hope you will, too. For a weekly selection of inspiring stories, get The Optimist newsletter. Sign up

- Here's the good some are doing to combat the fear and isolation of the coronavirus
- How you can help during the coronavirus outbreak
- Mom is stuck at home amid the coronavirus outbreak. Teens we never met gave us hope against hardship.

- Alone no more: People are turning to dogs, cats and chickens to cope with self-isolation
- At a place where memories are fleeting, some powerful ones are being made through a glass door
- Eating alone, together: Virtual dinner parties are helping people fight isolation
- The therapeutic value of the garden in trying times

Find inspiration in the kitchen

Perhaps you are cooking more while you're spending time at home. Looking for more cooking and recipe ideas? These resources and the following may help.

- Recipe Finder - Plan meals, try new foods and explore cuisines with our database of tested recipes. You can rate recipes and share your feedback with fellow subscribers.
- Baking Basics - An eight-week newsletter series containing fundamentals, irresistible recipes and more. Sign up →
- Plant Powered - Learn how to cook more plant-forward meals with this 12-week newsletter series. Sign up →

As we navigate this unprecedented time together, we hope you'll find support in the communities here. Thank you for subscribing to The Washington Post.

© 2020 The Washington Post
1301 K Street NW, Washington, DC, 20071

We respect your privacy. You received this email because you are a subscriber of The Washington Post.
Unsubscribe from emails about benefits of your subscription. Contact us for help.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Recipes! One-skillet pork chops, comforting mushroom quesadillas and baked chicken you'll swear was fried
Date: Saturday, March 28, 2020 8:29:16 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Recipes

What to cook during the week ahead, from Post Food editors.

By Ann Maloney

 Email

Last week, we wrote about how to make bread — sourdough boule and starter, sandwich loaves, English muffins and gluten-free options were among the recipes we shared. Next thing we know, there was a flour and yeast shortage at grocery stores. This week, just in time for Easter and Passover, we're writing about eggs (how to hard-cook them and how to poach them) and folks are struggling to find eggs as well.

Are people hoarding or is it just that many of you are spending more time in the kitchen during these weeks since the coronavirus pandemic required us to limit our movements and led to the shut-down of dine-in service at restaurants?

It's probably both, right?

With so many more people cooking, we've adjusted our work a bit at The Post. We've continued to write about easy weeknight dishes, including, most recently, my Skillet Pork Chops with Spicy Pecan Rice, Nourish columnist Ellie Krieger's Crispy Baked Parmesan Chicken With Chicory Salad and food and dining editor Joe Yonan's Mushroom Quesadillas, but we've also dug a little deeper to offer tips and guidance for those who need it.

Food writer Daniela Galarza wrote about the phenomenon of people being forced to cook for themselves for the first time. She noted that while past generations may have learned as youngsters with "... so many options for ready-made meals in urban areas, from grocer steam tables to fast food to delivery apps, some people fell through the cracks."

So, we've asked food writers like Angela Davis to join us in sharing advice. Davis wrote about how to freeze fresh produce — in case there is a run on the freezer aisle. Voraciously writer Becky Krystal tackled using dry spices when fresh aren't available and easy baking recipes for beginners.

Even though I've cooked since I was too little to reach the counter without standing on a chair, I learned things from reading these pieces. I bet you will, too.

So, whether you've recently made your first pot of home-cooked oatmeal or you are perfecting the finish of the perfect sourdough loaf, tell us how we can help. We're here with you through abundances and shortage, through good times and bad.

If you have questions or just want to talk about cooking, join us on Wednesday at noon for our weekly live chat.

And, we'll see you in the kitchen.

Skillet Pork Chops with Spicy Pecan Rice

The chops and flavorful, spicy rice are made in a single skillet, but to speed things up, give the rice a quick parboil in the microwave.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

---

Mushroom Quesadillas

If you don't have fresh mushrooms, try dried. If you have neither, feel free to use whatever you have that tastes good.

By Joe Yonan • Read more »

Crispy Baked Parmesan Chicken With Chicory Salad

All the flavors of a Milanese minus the mess!

By Ellie Krieger • Read more »

U.S. Bank
Earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choice
With the U.S. Bank Cash+™ Visa Signature® Card, you earn 5% cash back in two categories of your choosing and 2% in an everyday category.

Powered by

More from Voraciously

Before the coronavirus epidemic, they didn't know how to cook. Now they are scrambling to learn.

They're watching online tutorials, FaceTiming parents, and asking experts on Instagram and Twitter.

By Daniela Galarza • Read more »

Want to learn how to bake? These sweet recipes and guides will help you do it.

We've got advice and recipes to help you.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

Dry herbs get a bad rap, but they can be flavor powerhouses. Here's how to use them.

They can be just as versatile as fresh when treated the right way.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

How to freeze fresh vegetables while preserving their best qualities

If you're faced with slim pickings in the freezer aisle, don't fret.

By Angela Davis • Read more »

Powered by  LiveIntent

---

Stove-top steaming is hands down our favorite way to hard-cook eggs

We experimented to find the best way to make hard-cooked eggs.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

---

The best way to poach an egg also happens to be the easiest

Forget salt, vinegar or swirling. It's time to stop stressing and start eating.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

---

Braises, breads and slow-cooker recipes to make the most of long days at home

It's time to do a lot of hands-off work, from letting bread dough rise to marinating meat.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

---

Fresh or frozen, spinach is a power player. These 5 recipes prove it.

So good, we don't even care when it's stuck in our teeth.

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

---

Lunch at home is new for some of us. Here's how to make it count.

Or, how not to just eat snacks all day.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

Low-effort sandwiches that make you look forward to lunch

No you don't need to cook a five-star lunch, but you could gussy up that sandwich.

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

The shows we're bingeing and the recipes we're pairing with them

Good television needs a good meal to go with it.

By Matt Brooks • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Lean & Fit for expert advice on how to eat right, get lean and stay fit, including curated healthy recipes every Wednesday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Recipes | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Recipes or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: N.Y. struggles to keep up with deaths
Date: Saturday, March 28, 2020 2:33:17 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

More than 100,000 people in the United States have tested positive for the coronavirus, a world-topping caseload that has increased tenfold in the past week and a half, and that many experts predict will continue to rise for weeks or months.

The actual number of infections is almost certainly much larger because only a fraction of 1 percent of Americans have been tested, far behind countries such as South Korea and Italy.

“Two weeks ago, President Trump promised a network of drive- through covid-19 testing sites across the country where people could be tested ‘very safely, quickly and conveniently,’” The Washington Post reported. But big-box store CEOs who said they would turn their parking lots into test sites have opened only five such locations, and some state-run sites sit idle waiting for testing supplies.

Though much of the country has been ordered to stay at home to slow the virus's spread, many federal workers are still required to come to the office under potentially dangerous conditions, a Post investigation found. “Hundreds of front-line workers sit side by side in small cubicles processing passport applications for the State Department,” the report said. “The employees have 15 minutes a day to wipe their desks clean with supplies they must bring from home.”

Hundreds of Americans are dying each day from the disease — approaching 2,000 in total — and death-care workers are struggling to cope with the influx in New York, the epicenter of the outbreak in the United States. Amid fears that bodies could spread the disease, refrigerated trucks, tents and “a pop-up morgue” are being deployed to store the overload. Hospital chaplains are delivering last rites through video chat or by standing outside patients' doors.

Trump has abruptly moved toward federalizing the country's fight against the virus in the past two days, after weeks of leaving states to implement their own policies and find their own medical supplies. On Saturday, the president told reporters, “There’s a possibility that sometime today we’ll do a quarantine, short-term, two weeks, on New York. Probably New Jersey. Parts of Connecticut.” The statement appeared to surprise and confuse New York Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D), who told reporters: “I don’t even know what that means.”

Trump has also taken more control of the medical supply chain. He invoked a wartime power on Friday that will allow him to order private manufacturers to build ventilators, and promised that General Motors and other companies would produce a combined 100,000 ventilators in the next 100 days. (A 2005 study estimated the United States would need more than 740,000 of the machines in a severe pandemic.)

Distrust and hostility between the White House and governors in some of the worst-hit states continues to complicate the fight against the virus. Trump said Friday that he told Vice President Pence, who leads the White House's coronavirus task force, not to call two governors who have criticized the federal government: Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) and Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D). "I want them to be appreciative," Trump said. "We've done a great job." The White House announced Saturday that Trump granted Whitmer's request for a disaster declaration, despite the tension.

The president also picked a fight with Congress immediately after it passed a historic $2.2 trillion economic aid package on Friday. As Trump signed the bill into law, he released a statement undermining the power of a Senate-approved inspector general, who is supposed to supervise how the Treasury Department would disburse $400 billion in loans to companies and local governments. The oversight measure was key to winning Democratic support for the bill, but Trump's statement indicates he intends to oversee himself.

---

Content from Slack

How to work from home while being your best self

Working from home can feel isolating, but it doesn't have to. We've compiled our top tips for connecting with coworkers.

Get more done with Slack, the channel-based messaging platform that helps you work better together.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the United States at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak around the world with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need during the outbreak.

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“I'm in the really high-risk group. I've heard that even China has not reached herd immunity. So will I have to continue social distancing until a vaccine is found?” — Faith Markle in Madison, Wis.

No one knows for sure — and more is being learned about the virus each day — but right now distancing is the only tool health officials have to protect people from the disease.

“Without a vaccine or a drug to stop infections, the best hope is to break the chain of transmission one infection at a time,” Post science reporter Joel Achenbach wrote in a rundown of everything we know about the disease. Left to its own devices, the coronavirus is very contagious, but strict quarantine measures, such as those China imposed, can effectively reduce or stop it from spreading within a population. But until a vaccine is developed — “likely to take a year or more” — there is no guarantee the virus won't take off again when quarantines are relaxed.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Inside Trump's risky push to reopen the country amid the pandemic
- A major New York City hospital system battles coronavirus
- Perspective: How homeowners should handle plumbing and other services

Postcards from a nervous world: Moments in time from life during the pandemic

By Brian Murphy • Read more »

These are boom times for boredom and the researchers who study it

By Michael Rosenwald • Read more »

‘Pajama entertainment’ is the newest cultural shift of the coronavirus era

By Steven Zeitchik • Read more »

People welcome online workouts to fill gap left by shuttered gyms and studios

By Ava Wallace • Read more »

So you want to be a gamer. Here’s how you can start.

By Gene Park • Read more »

Lack of sports hits broadcasters hard

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Week in Ideas: How to handle groceries and delivery bags amid the covid-19 outbreak
Date: Sunday, March 29, 2020 5:11:34 AM

Read online

The Washington Post

The Week in Ideas

Opinions you may have missed.

By Fred Hiatt
✉ Email

We've been asking you to share your stories of our world turned upside down, and we published a few more of them here: heartbreaking, inspiring, infuriating. Thanks to those who wrote in — and after reading these, if you have a story for us, we'd love to read it.

We also continue to publish smart, brief, constructive suggestions in what we're calling our "solutions" file. Here you can find some new ones, from allowing foreign doctors living among us to practice to telling doctors to stop endangering themselves with traditional physical exams.

Speaking of constructive — many readers found helpful, and reassuring, this explanation from a Harvard professor of public health on how to handle groceries and delivery bags.

And I found this column by David Von Drehle spiritually constructive. As he recovers (thank goodness) from a bout with covid-19, he penned a luminous essay on illness, healing, community and more. I can't do it justice; I can only say, you will be glad if you click on this one.

Last week we asked our Post Pundits to rank who is likeliest to become our first female president. First of the 10 was not one of the Democratic also-rans from this year's campaign.

I've saved a real treat for last: Karen Tumulty's engaging, revealing portrait of the most powerful elected woman in America's history, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi.

Wait, one more treat. Our satirist Alexandra Petri imagines a sports talk radio session without sports. Hint: It doesn't go well.

And one more note. I'm currently writing a (much shorter!) note in our a.m. Opinions newsletter, recommending a piece or two. If you might find this useful, and don't yet subscribe to our six-day-a-week listings, you can sign up here.

Thanks for reading.

As the coronavirus spreads, readers share stories of its worsening effects

Post readers share their stories of covid-19.

Read more »

---

We are interested in hearing more stories about how the coronavirus is changing people's lives. Please tell us yours.

Read more »

We need smart solutions to mitigate the coronavirus's impact. Here are 12.

Fresh ideas are needed for dealing with this crisis. Here's a start.

Read more »

Don't panic about shopping, getting delivery or accepting packages

We can never eliminate all risk; the goal is to minimize it.

By Joseph G. Allen • Read more »

What the gift of this unpleasant infection has helped me understand

My experience of covid-19 has involved an unwelcome multitude of haints and goblins.

By David Von Drehle • Read more »

The 10 women most likely to be the first female president

One has to wonder why yet again women have been relegated to the role of also-ran.

By The Ranking Committee • Read more »

How Nancy Pelosi's unlikely rise turned her ## into the most powerful woman in U.S. history

The speaker of the house is making sure that it will be easier for those who come after her to find their way. And to go even further.

By Karen Tumulty • Read more »

Sports talk radio turns instead to toxic masculinity

But we have to talk about something, Mike.

By Alexandra Petri • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Politics A.M. and P.M. for the most important politics stories, delivered every morning and evening. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Week in Ideas | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Week in Ideas or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Optimist: Americans are digging out Christmas lights and inflatables to bring levity to neighborhoods
Date: Sunday, March 29, 2020 7:28:53 AM

Johnson & Johnson
World's Largest Healthcare Company

See all we're doing >

Powered by  LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

The Optimist

Stories that inspire.

(Ginny Dunn)

Some families stuck at home by decorating their homes with Christmas lights, giant inflatables and balloons

It's late March, but it's beginning to look a lot like Christmas — and Halloween and Valentine's Day.

By Kellie B. Gormly • Read more »

---

Advice from astronauts on isolation on Earth

Having lived in aluminum bubbles in outerspace, in a laboratory at the bottom of the ocean and in a research station at the South Pole, they might just be the most qualified people on Earth to offer their advice on isolation.

By Meagan Flynn • Read more »

---

The completely correct guide to vacationing at home

As we all practice social distancing, experts weigh in with tips for re-creating our canceled trips, like purging needless items and reenacting hotel service.

By Natalie Compton • Read more »

---

In fight against coronavirus, the world gives medical heroes a standing ovation

People are emerging onto balconies, flinging open the windows, to applaud health-care workers.

By William Booth, Karla Adam and Pamela Rolfe • Read more »

---

ADVERTISEMENT

A red banner advertisement for Johnson &amp; Johnson. The text "Johnson &amp; Johnson" is in the top left corner in white. The main text "Building your World of Well" is centered in white. In the bottom right corner, there is a white button with the text "See all we're doing" and a red play button icon. Below the banner, the text "Powered by LiveIntent" is visible, along with a small blue play button icon.

---

Here's the good some are doing to combat the fear and isolation of the coronavirus

People are reaching out with gifts, music and whatever they have to offer in the midst of the pandemic.

By Michael Ruane • Read more »

---

This orchestra in Little Rock is performing bedtime lullabies for your self-quarantine

It's a bit of classical music for people who find themselves isolated at home.

By Teddy Amenabar • Read more »

---

You can still make new friends during the pandemic. Here's how.

Social distancing disrupts the normal patterns of establishing social networks.

By Elizabeth Segran • Read more »

---

ADVERTISEMENT

Johnson & Johnson
World's Largest Healthcare Company
See all we're doing >
Powered by LiveIntent

Dallas teachers throw neighborhood car parade for cooped-up students

As the cars rolled down the streets, children called out their teachers' names and held up homemade signs.

By Lisa Kanarek • Read more »

---

Eating alone, together: Virtual dinner parties are helping people fight isolation

Sure, there are glitches — remember the mute button! — but the gatherings can help maintain connection during an anxious time.

By Emily Heil • Read more »

---

The therapeutic value of the garden in trying times

What better place to practice social distancing than in your backyard? Apart from the practical purposes of gardening, you are also cultivating your mental health.

Perspective • By Adrian Higgins • Read more »

---

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Baking Basics by Voraciously for baking fundamentals, techniques and irresistible recipes, in your inbox on Fridays. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Optimist | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Optimist or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: 'No state, no metro area, will be spared'
Date: Sunday, March 29, 2020 1:31:18 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

The White House will decide this week whether to relax national social distancing guidelines against the advice of medical experts, even as the coronavirus death toll accelerates in the United States, with more than 2,200 fatalities among 130,000 confirmed infections. State officials reported nearly 450 deaths on Saturday alone.

A 15-day plan advising most Americans to slow the virus's spread by staying at home and avoiding groups of more than 10 people expires Monday. With the economy in tatters, Republican lawmakers and conservative economists have urged President Trump to roll the measures back. Doctors and public health officials warn any rollback could trigger new waves of disease and death. Even now, the virus is overwhelming hospitals, draining medical supply stockpiles and spreading undetected due to a shortage of tests.

The United States could record 100,000 to 200,000 deaths and millions of infections, according to current but rapidly evolving projections, White House task force member Anthony S. Fauci said Sunday on CNN. His comments came as another prominent member of the task force, Deborah Birx, offered a similarly grim assessment: “No state, no metro area, will be spared.”

Trump will review infection data before making a decision, Vice President Pence, who leads the coronavirus task force, said on Fox News this weekend. “While the president has said he’d like to open the country up in weeks not months,” Pence said, “ultimately, the president will make a decision that he believes is in the best interest of all of the American people.”

Trump has whipsawed between contradictory plans in his comments, sowing confusion among state officials and the public. He said last week he would like to “open things up to very large sections of our country” as soon as Easter. On Saturday, the president said he might quarantine New York, New Jersey and parts of Connecticut from the rest of the country by the end of the day, blindsiding governors in those states and causing some people to flee New York City. Ultimately, he scrapped the idea hours later, via tweet.

The president might lack the power to send the country back to work, even if he decides to try. Governors “will have the final say on when restaurants, stores and other gathering places in their states can reopen,” The Washington Post reported. Some governors have been coordinating with each other across party lines, creating an alternate power center to the White House.

Meanwhile, the virus is spreading from coastal hotspots into the country's interior.

We report that “officials in Boston, Detroit, Chicago, Atlanta, Milwaukee and Los Angeles are watching caseloads climb and taking extraordinary measures to prepare,” including turning the continent's largest convention center into a makeshift hospital.

Millions of Americans are on the move to less infected towns and cities, or even to the edge of wilderness — a mass migration that “might contain the seeds of a wholesale shift in where and how Americans live.”

A Post analysis of more than a dozen large cities found a notable decline in crime since mass quarantines went into effect.

Police officers, however, have been catching the virus in some of those same cities. Three officers in Houston, for example, tested positive after fighting a suspect with feverlike symptoms.

Other countries face their own forms of chaos. Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi apologized “to my underprivileged brothers and sisters” after a lockdown of the country's 1.3 billion residents and its train system forced tens of thousands of migrants to walk back to their villages — some for hundreds of miles. Thousands of American travelers have been stranded in the country.

In Europe, Spain and Italy still face daily death tolls in the hundreds despite lockdowns. Australia has told people not to go outside in groups of more than two as the infection proliferates in every corner of the world.

Still, there is some good news. South Korea, with a viral tracking system far better than most countries, announced this weekend that its recoveries now outpace and outnumber infections.

China's infection rate appears to have stabilized after an ultra-strict quarantine program, though visitors from abroad are still spreading the disease, and some doubt the accuracy of the government's reports. And a 101-year old man in Italy recovered from the virus, according to local authorities. Identified only as “Mr. P,” he was born during the 20th century's greatest pandemic, in 1919.

---

Content from Slack

How to work from home while being your best self

Working from home can feel isolating, but it doesn't have to. We've compiled our top tips for connecting with coworkers.

Get more done with Slack, the channel-based messaging platform that helps you work better together.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the United States at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak around the world with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need during the outbreak.

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“I read that you can self-test yourself by holding your breath for 10 seconds. If you can hold your breath for 10 seconds, then you don’t have respiratory problem and don’t have covid-19. Is this true?” — Larry, California

No, this is bad information that has been spreading over social media.

“Most young patients with coronavirus will be able to hold their breaths for much longer than 10 seconds. And many elderly without the virus won’t be able to do it,” the University of Maryland’s chief of infectious diseases, Faheem Younus, tweeted last week. (Read that thread for other bogus coronavirus tips.)

The early covid-19 symptoms to watch for are a fever, cough and shortness of breath, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

However, research suggests that even people with no apparent symptoms could have the disease and spread it to others. That's why medical experts recommend behaving as if you have the virus: avoid contact with others as much as possible, wash your hands thoroughly and consult a medical professional if you show symptoms.

---

Today’s top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- What to do if you don't have money for rent or your mortgage
- A history of the Trump War on Media — the obsession not even coronavirus could stop
- The toilet paper crisis Hawaii has never forgotten
- As cases explode in Iran, U.S. sanctions hinder its access to drugs and medical equipment

The Great American Migration of 2020: On the move to escape the coronavirus

By Marc Fisher, Paul Schwartzman and Ben Weissenbach • Read more »

---

Geriatricians' advice on what older adults need to do during this pandemic

By Judith Graham • Read more »

---

Simple DIY masks could help flatten the curve. We should all wear them in public.

Perspective • By Jeremy Howard • Read more »

---

Cheers for the front line

carolynryan
@carolynryan

On Upper West Side in Manhattan, people are cheering like crazy for medical workers.

♥ 16.3K 11:08 PM - Mar 28, 2020

💬 3,403 people are talking about this

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 30 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Monday, March 30, 2020 5:11:46 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Mon., March 30, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Does climate change still matter in the election?

Climate's star treatment on the campaign trail is over. Now it's the coronavirus election.

TOP STORIES

2. CAR RULES:

Leaked draft: Trump emissions plan fails agency price test

3. FINANCE:

U.S. must prepare for 'climate shock,' experts warn

4. EPA:

Lax pollution enforcement can stress hospitals during virus

PANDEMIC

5. CAR RULES:

3 ways the rollback could worsen the outbreak

6. EUROPE:

Carbon market's virus blow softened by Brussels technocrats

CLIMATE IMPACTS

7. WILDLIFE:

Whales face more fatal ship collisions as waters warm

IN THE STATES

8. SALMON:

Largest U.S. dam removal stirs debate over Western water

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 30 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Monday, March 30, 2020 11:27:13 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Mon., March 30, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Seasoned EPA whistleblower raises alarms, again

Prominent EPA whistleblower Cate Jenkins has reemerged, challenging how federal agencies are responding to the coronavirus pandemic.

TOP STORIES

---

2. SAGE GROUSE:

Trump admin rejects protections for Calif.-Nev. birds

3. PANDEMIC:

Ammon Bundy plans to fight states on virus efforts

4. INTERIOR:

Meet the officers leading FWS assault against coronavirus

CORONAVIRUS

---

5. EPA:

11 staffers test positive for coronavirus

6. NATIONAL PARKS:

Patchwork of closures draws congressional ire

7. PANDEMIC:

More lawmakers test positive for coronavirus

8. LAW:

Claims court warns: Scams on the rise during pandemic

9. PANDEMIC:

Wheeler to states: Name water sector workers as 'essential'

10. COAL:

Coronavirus shuts Pa.'s biggest mine

POLITICS

---

11. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump balks at congressional oversight of stimulus loans

12. PEOPLE:

Interior replaces top offshore regulator

13. INTERIOR:

Bernhardt orders 'disestablishment' of reservation — tribe

14. ADVOCACY:

Veteran of WWF, Microsoft to head sustainability group

---

CONGRESS

15. OBITUARY:

Coburn, once the Senate's 'Dr. No', dies at 72

16. CHEMICALS:

Congress gives security program short-term extension

---

NATURAL RESOURCES

17. WESTERN WATER:

Environmental groups complain about dam hearings format

18. SEVERE WEATHER:

Tornadoes in several states cause injuries, damage homes

19. WILDLIFE:

Idaho governor approves $400,000 to kill problem wolves

---

LAW

20. SUPREME COURT:

Justices: Citgo must pay for oil spill

21. COAL:

W.Va. regulator sues mine operator after abrupt closures

22. WILDLIFE:

Wash. man sentenced to 3 years in major poaching case

---

ENERGY

23. NATURAL GAS:

Shell pulls out of La. export project

---

STATES

24. HAWAII:

Mauna Kea telescopes close in response to virus order

25. INDIANA:

Law mandates that schools test for lead contamination

26. MICHIGAN:

Whitmer halts water shut-offs during pandemic

27. OHIO:

Storms cause '100-year flood,' power outages

28. NEW HAMPSHIRE:

Earth Day video challenge encourages doing 1 good thing

INTERNATIONAL

---

29. INDONESIA:

Quake sends people fleeing despite efforts to keep distance

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 30 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Monday, March 30, 2020 2:18:30 PM

---

PANDEMIC: Pelosi, Pallone eye infrastructure for next stimulus. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
WATER POLLUTION: Court won't revisit ruling on river temperature limits.
INTERIOR: BLM drops appeal of order blocking sage grouse plan.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Mon., March 30, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/30/full?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/30/stories/1062744067?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

1. PANDEMIC:

Pelosi, Pallone eye infrastructure for next stimulus

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) suggested today that water and infrastructure concerns could be part of the next coronavirus stimulus bill.

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/30/stories/1062743787?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

2. WATER POLLUTION:

Court won't revisit ruling on river temperature limits

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/30/stories/1062743841?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

3. INTERIOR:

BLM drops appeal of order blocking sage grouse plan

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/30/stories/1062743579?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

4. NUCLEAR:

Lawmakers want fees on industry delayed during outbreak

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/30/stories/1062743813?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

5. UTILITIES:

Dems introduce resolution to halt electric, gas shut-offs

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/03/30/calendars?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>

6. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 30 - April 5, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News

E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQslCZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001
Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: How long could we be social distancing?
Date: Monday, March 30, 2020 3:18:50 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Angela Fritz
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

President Trump on Sunday extended the social distancing guidance until the end of April. He agreed “right away” to the extension after his task force presented him with data that showed the coronavirus could cause between 100,000 and 200,000 U.S. deaths even with the current guidelines in place, according to Anthony S. Fauci, the nation’s top infectious diseases expert.

More than 1,000 people have died in New York alone, the state said Sunday, with the number of confirmed cases climbing above 6,000. Howard A. Zucker, the New York health commissioner, said the state's known death rate is hovering around 1 percent. The actual rate could be lower because health officials don't know how many people have the virus — testing priority is given to those who are health-comprised or exhibiting obvious symptoms.

Trump seemed to embrace the projections he once downplayed, saying between 100,000 and 200,000 deaths would represent a victory. On March 13, Trump criticized the Obama administration's response to the 2009 swine flu, which killed 14,000 people in the United States. The model the White House is now using to predict the virus's spread assumes guidelines for social distancing will stay in effect until the end of May.

The FDA authorized widespread use of malaria drugs to treat the coronavirus, though they remain unproven. Millions of doses of hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine will be distributed to hospitals across the country. Cardiac death is a possible risk in taking the drug, doctors say. The FDA's approval does not include long-term use to prevent an infection.

Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R), Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) and D.C. mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) all issued stay-at-home orders Monday that prohibit people from leaving except for essential trips such as venturing out for groceries or medicine. The number of known coronavirus cases in the District, Maryland and Virginia exploded to just under 3,000 on Monday, up from around 1,300 on Thursday.

Officials in Virginia and Maryland have criticized the federal response to the outbreak, which Virginia Finance Secretary Aubrey Layne called “abysmal.” Senate Republicans shortchanged the District in the stimulus bill by treating it like a territory instead of a state, which Congress normally does with such appropriations. Because of that, the District will get $491 million instead of a minimum of $1.25 billion granted to states.

In an op-ed, Hogan and Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) outlined what they believe states need to battle the virus.

A new piece from The Washington Post's Fact Checker team explains what went wrong in U.S. testing. Missteps were ignored by leaders at the highest level of government, they write, which allowed cases to go undetected and contributed to the virus's spread.

A Vincent van Gogh painting was stolen from a Dutch museum.

In the pre-dawn hours on Monday, van Gogh's birthday, thieves broke into the Singer Laren, which has been closed due to the outbreak. The alarm went off when they smashed the glass, but they got away before police arrived. The stolen painting, "The Spring Garden," had been loaned to the Singer Laren for a temporary exhibit.

Macy's furloughed most of its 125,000 employees because of virus-related store closures. It shuttered its 775 Macy's, Bloomingdales and Blue Mercury locations on March 18. Meanwhile, retail workers in their 60s, 70s and 80s say they're worried about contracting covid-19, but they continue to work because they need the money.

The Justice Department is investigating stock trades made by at least one member of Congress – Sen. Richard Burr (R-N.C.) – during the early days of the global outbreak. As the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, Burr received frequent briefings and reports on the threat. In mid-February, Burr sold 33 stocks that were estimated to be worth between $628,033 and $1.7 million.

How to work from home while being your best self

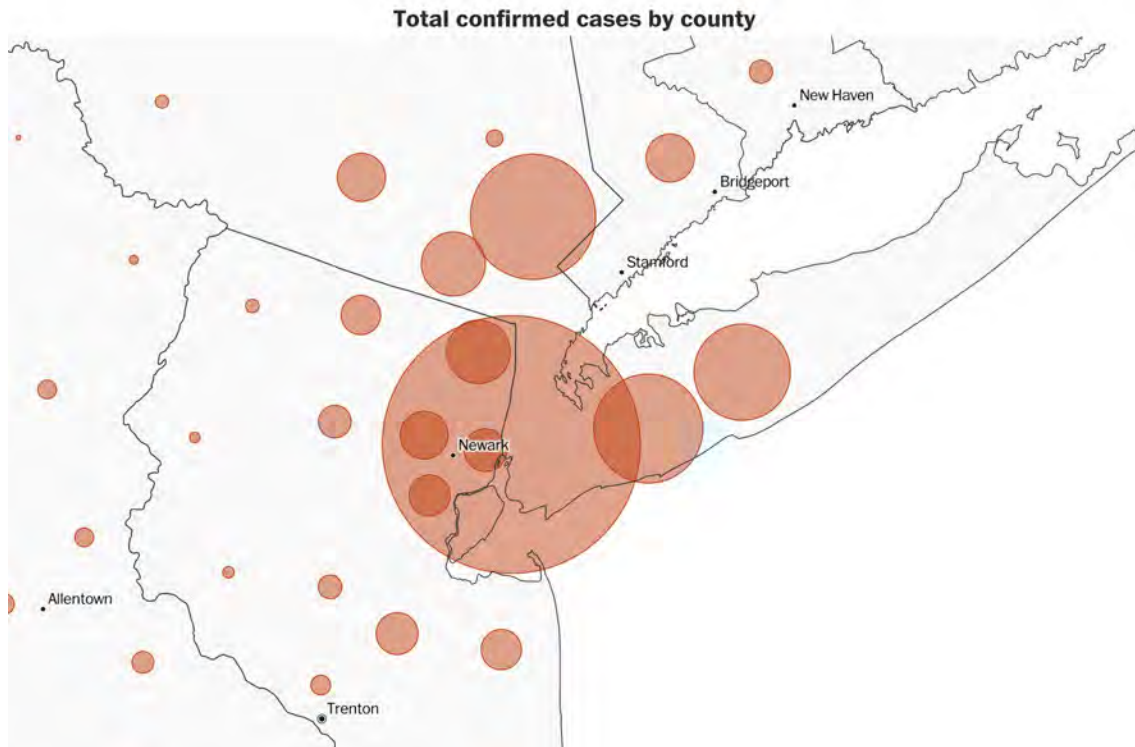

Working from home can feel isolating, but it doesn't have to. We've compiled our top tips for connecting with coworkers.

Get more done with Slack, the channel-based messaging platform that helps you work better together.

---

Tracking U.S. deaths and cases

The Post is now tracking covid-19 deaths and confirmed cases at the county level. Below is the New York region, the epicenter in the United States. Click through to see cases in your state and how the virus is spreading. We're updating this page several times a day.

(Joe Fox, Brittany Renee Mayes, Kevin Schaul and Leslie Shapiro)

---

Live updates

Follow the spread of the outbreak around the world with our updating map.

Post reporters around the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need during the outbreak.

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

We've received an uptick in questions about microwaving things to kill the virus, including these two today:

"If you have a face mask with no metal in it. Can you sterilize it in the microwave or with UV light for re-use?" — Van Lewis, Virginia

"Our mail is about the only thing we have coming into our home. Can we disinfect it, like by putting it in the microwave for one minute?" — Jack Elwell, California

We asked Benjamin Neuman, the chair of the Biological Sciences department at Texas A&M University at Texarkana. Neuman said there is actually some research that shows some viruses can be killed by being microwaved.

“One study from 2004 demonstrated that microwaving on high in a 900-watt microwave for as little as 5 seconds was able to inactivate a chicken coronavirus on cotton swabs,” Neuman told us via email.

But those experiments were done in a controlled lab setting, and the scientists knew exactly what they were microwaving and how much virus was on the swabs. There are a lot of unknowns in our own kitchens — how much wattage our microwaves are actually pumping out, how much virus is on the material and what that material is really made of.

“But any inactivation protocol would probably have to take into account the size and material to be sterilized,” Neuman said. “And microwaving could be hard on some kinds of mail — there are some kinds of paper that print via heat rather than ink, and those would probably become unreadable if microwaved.”

Even if microwaving the virus kills it, which scientists haven't verified, there's still risk in microwaving anything other than food.

First, many masks — especially the super-effective N95 ones — have a little metal bar across the top that the wearer is supposed to use to form a seal around the top of the nose. Neuman said there's also a plastic box that holds the filter that will melt. So N95 masks absolutely cannot go in a microwave.

Second, the materials in other masks, even non-N95 masks, could be damaged by the heat of the microwave, rendering them ineffective.

Finally, mail and other paper could be damaged or even catch on fire if put in the microwave.

Some reassuring news: even though the virus lives on paper or cardboard surfaces for some amount of time, the risk of catching the virus from those surfaces is very low, according to Joseph G. Allen, an assistant professor of exposure and assessment science at Harvard University's T.H. Chan School of Public Health. You can read his excellent op-ed on that subject here.

If you can't get past the idea of opening mail during the outbreak, the safest thing to do would probably be to quarantine it in a closet for two or three days and open it after the virus dies naturally.

Thanks to reporter Joel Achenbach for helping get to the bottom of these very good reader questions.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- What a stay-at-home order actually means

- Tips on home-school plans that are realistic
- D.C.'s patient zero: A priest's journey from the intensive care unit to a reunion
- The now-arrested megapastor who kept his church open, said closings are for 'pansies'

He's 18 and wants to hang with 'his boys.' His mom hasn't been able to stop him.

By Sydney Trent • Read more »

---

Hospitals are being built on soccer fields, in state park cabins and converted convention centers

By Ariana Eunjung Cha, Brittney Martin and Steven Mufson • Read more »

---

Everything you need to know to set up a home office fast

By Laura Daily • Read more »

---

Please don't try this at home

An astrophysicist wound up in the hospital with magnets stuck up his nose, after attempting to invent a coronavirus device that would warn the wearer if they were about to touch their face, the Guardian reports.

Daniel Reardon, a research fellow at a Melbourne university, said he put magnets on the inside and outside of his nose, but the two inside stuck together. He then used the remaining magnets to try to remove them, but they locked on to the ones that were already up there.

According to hospital records, "two doctors applied an anaesthetic spray and manually removed the magnets," the Guardian reports.

Reardon told the Guardian he is done with magnets, and will find other ways to pass the time at home.

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Drop Me The Link for to cut through the 2020 noise and get the most interesting election story we're group chatting about sent to your inbox three times a week. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

---

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] March 31 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Tuesday, March 31, 2020 4:54:14 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Tue., March 31, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. CLIMATE IMPACTS:

How the Defense Production Act became a disaster law

The law invoked by President Trump to spark production of ventilators for COVID-19 is increasingly used by federal disaster agencies to access materials during climate-related catastrophes. Its explosive rise came after Hurricane Katrina.

TOP STORIES

---

2. SCIENCE:

Massive ocean blob could help predict climate disasters

3. EMISSIONS:

Outbreak reveals radical climate idea: Economic 'degrowth'

PANDEMIC

---

4. SCIENCE:

What the COVID-19 response can teach us about climate action

5. BUSINESS:

Will renewables ride out the virus better than oil and gas?

6. RECREATION:

Great outdoors offers an escape in tough times

IN THE STATES

---

7. CONSERVATION:

N.M. unveils 'pollinator protection' license plate

8. LAND MANAGEMENT:

National forest proposes using fire as tool for restoration

GLOBAL

---

9. RESEARCH:

Virus turns U.K. residents into climate 'citizen scientists'

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 1 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Wednesday, April 1, 2020 5:48:16 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Wed., April 1, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Fears rise at energy trade groups as virus spreads

As the coronavirus spreads, there are growing concerns that some energy associations could close their doors because of the economic downturn.

TOP STORIES

2. ELECTRIC VEHICLES:

Clean cars rollback adds to EVs' pain

3. ELECTRICITY:

Grid crisis plan gets pandemic test

4. OIL AND GAS:

Trump: 'You're going to lose an industry'

FEDERAL AGENCIES

5. INTERIOR:

BLM under fire for advancing oil project during pandemic

6. FEREC:

Danly sworn in as commissioner

OIL AND GAS

7. ENERGY TRANSITIONS:

Methane emissions may rise despite oil crash — report

8. PIPELINES:

KXL decision reignites climate fight

ELECTRICITY

9. CORONAVIRUS:

'A different type of storm.' Utilities try to protect workers

LAW

10. OIL:

Railway asks court for 2nd shot at Bakken crude dispute

BUSINESS

---

11. ENERGY MARKETS:

Refiners benefit from crude price plunge even as plants slow

12. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Wind industry still heads for record year

13. NATURAL GAS:

Poland to seek $1.5B from Russia's Gazprom

GEOPOLITICS

---

14. PIPELINES:

Explosion in Turkey damages natural gas line from Iran

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: With millions of American lives on the line, Trump finally agrees with the experts
Date: Wednesday, April 1, 2020 8:56:00 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

With millions of American lives on the line, Trump finally agrees with the experts

Tony Fauci put his hand on his face when President Trump referred to the State Department the Friday before last as “the Deep State Department,” concealing a bemused expression.

As director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases since 1984, Fauci has counseled six presidents and become an esteemed pillar of the federal civil service that Trump has loved to hate during his three years in power. Until now.

For the first time since the outbreak of the novel coronavirus, the president and the government's top medical experts seemed to be on the same page as they warned the American people on Tuesday evening of the nightmarish weeks ahead.

Right-wing media figures have slimed Fauci for weeks, including Lou Dobbs on Fox Business. On Tuesday, though, Trump praised him and White House coronavirus task force coordinator Debbie Birx, another physician who has devoted her career to government service. After years of debasing expertise and marginalizing experts, Trump signaled to his loyalists that now is the time to listen and take seriously what they say.

"It's a matter of life and death, frankly," the president said.

Trump and the doctors went over slides that showed a best-case scenario of 100,000 to 240,000 fatalities in the United States, even with social distancing and school closures to slow the spread. Without mitigation, the models presented at the White House showed that 1.5 million to 2.2 million Americans could die of covid-19, the disease the virus causes.

“I want every American to be prepared for the hard days that lie ahead,” Trump said during a news conference that lasted two hours and 12 minutes. “We’re going to go through a very tough two weeks. And then hopefully, as the experts are predicting — as I think a lot of us are predicting, after having studied it so hard — you’re going to start seeing some real light at the end of the tunnel. But this is going to be a very painful — very, very painful — two weeks.”

Since taking office, Trump has attacked career prosecutors for bringing charges against his longtime associates, intelligence officers for warning that Russia favored his election and scientists for sounding the alarm about his inaction on climate change

The president’s newfound respect for — and deference to — experts, careerists and technocrats is part of an even more dramatic shift in his tone over the past few days as the gravity of the crisis enveloping the country appeared to fully sink in. He’s no longer downplaying the danger, saying that the virus will kill fewer people than the seasonal flu or car crashes. A week ago, Trump predicted the country would be “raring to go” by Easter, which is April 12.

Despite the bad blood exposed by L’affaire Ukraine, Trump also went out of his way Tuesday to praise foreign service officers for their efforts to bring home 25,000 Americans who were stranded across more than 50 countries as countries closed their borders. “I salute the incredible public servants at the Department of State, as well as their counterparts at DHS and HHS, who have played such an important role in doing this,” said Trump, referring to Homeland Security and Health and Human Services, two departments that are populated almost entirely with non-patronage employees.

The contagion has killed at least 3,900 people in the United States as of this morning, including 1,550 in New York. Listening to him speak, the gut-wrenching visuals from the president's hometown of New York – where Fifth Avenue is deserted, and Central Park is now home to a field hospital – appear to have chilled him as much as any charts or models.

For context on Trump's projection that 100,000 to 240,000 people will die of the virus, about 58,000 troops died during the entire Vietnam War. The 1918 influenza pandemic killed an estimated 675,000 Americans, and the 1957 influenza epidemic killed 70,000 to 116,000 people.

Tuesday's news conference was Trump's most somber performance as president, but he didn't fully muzzle his fiery personality. He still called impeachment a "total hoax," criticized the number of homeless people in Speaker Nancy Pelosi's congressional district in San Francisco and congratulated himself for doing a great job. Trump also has a history of erratically changing his tone and approach.

The president explained his strategy this way. "You know, I'm a cheerleader for the country," he said. "We're going through the worst thing that the country's probably ever seen ... but I want to give people in this country hope."

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Caring when it counts the most

Blue Cross and Blue Shield companies are ensuring swift access to care by waiving prior-authorization and copays for diagnostic testing, expanding telehealth and making prescription refills easier.

---

More on the uneven federal response

State officials wonder whether politics is playing a role in resource allocation.

“As states across the country have pleaded for critical medical equipment from a key national stockpile, Florida has promptly received 100 percent of its first two requests — with Trump and Republican Gov. Ron DeSantis both touting their close relationship,” Toluse Olorunnipa, Josh Dawsey,

Chelsea Janes and Isaac Stanley-Becker report. “States including Oklahoma and Kentucky have received more of some equipment than they requested, while others such as Illinois, Massachusetts and Maine have secured only a fraction of their requests. It’s a disparity that has caused frustration and confusion in governors’ offices across the country ... State and congressional leaders are flooding FEMA with letters and calls seeking clarity about how it is allocating suddenly in-demand resources such as masks, ventilators and medical gowns. ...

“Governors and state officials have become increasingly frustrated by what they describe as a byzantine and unsteady process for distributing medical supplies from the Strategic National Stockpile. ... [S]ome GOP-led states such as Georgia have had trouble filling their requests. But Trump has contributed to the sense that politics could be a factor by publicly attacking Democratic governors who criticize his handling of the public health crisis. ... Still, some Democrats have given the Trump administration plaudits for being accessible and for responding to their requests. Even after verbally attacking Democrats such as Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer and Washington Gov. Jay Inslee, Trump has approved federal support for their states. ...

"Privately, state and congressional officials have expressed alarm about a system beset by shortages, inefficiencies and disorder. ... An administration official with knowledge of the rationing process said political affiliation is not a consideration in processing requests, though Trump has occasionally made promises over the phone that FEMA has had to accommodate."

Testing continues to be a failure.

After Trump claimed testing is no longer a problem, Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) said that’s “just not true.” None of the testing advancements the president touted in a conference call with governors Monday have been deployed, Hogan told NPR.

- A few weeks ago, Trump said the federal government would partner with major retailers to set up drive-thru coronavirus testing sites. HHS confirms there are only five locations from these major retailers – which include Walmart, CVS and Walgreens – offering testing, but none are open to the general public. (CNN)
- Testing backlogs at private health labs have ballooned, making it difficult to deliver a comprehensive view to the medical community and policymakers of the contagion's spread. (Atlantic)
- The FDA issued emergency approval for a two-minute antibody testing kit that can detect the virus. But the Bodysphere test can only detect covid-19 in people who have had the disease for several days. (Axios)
- Serology tests for antibodies in the blood of coronavirus survivors could help establish how lasting immunity to the disease will be once someone recovers. (Carolyn Johnson)

Leaked CDC memos lay out the rationale for widespread use of face coverings.

Federal officials debating whether to recommend face coverings be routinely worn by the public are responding to increasing evidence infected people without symptoms can spread the virus, according to internal memos provided to the White House and obtained by Lena Sun and Laurie McGinley. “Simple cloth masks that cover the mouth and nose can prevent virus transmission from such individuals when they are out buying groceries or seeking medical care, according to the memos ... But the documents note that widespread public use of masks is not culturally accepted in the United States the way it is in many Asian countries, where face coverings helped reduce the spread of the virus.”

Trump was asked about this at last night’s briefing. “My feeling is there is no harm in using a scarf or something,” he said, adding that medical masks should be reserved for hospitals. “I would say do it.”

The captain of a nuclear aircraft carrier pleaded with his commanders for help.

A four-page letter from Capt. Brett Crozier aboard the USS Theodore Roosevelt was leaked to the San Francisco Chronicle. More than 100 sailors of a 4,000-person crew have tested positive. The carrier has been docked in Guam, and the captain wants to isolate sick crew members. “We are not at war. Sailors do not need to die. If we do not act now, we are failing to properly take care of our most trusted asset — our Sailors,” Crozier wrote. He said only a small contingent of infected sailors have been off-boarded and most of the remaining crew is unable to socially distance. “Due to a warship’s inherent limitations of space, we are not doing this,” he wrote. “The spread of the disease is ongoing and accelerating.”

He asked for “compliant quarantine rooms” on shore in Guam for his entire crew as soon as possible. “Keeping over 4,000 young men and women on board the TR is an unnecessary risk and breaks faith with those Sailors entrusted to our care,” he wrote. Asked what should be done about the Roosevelt last night, Trump said he would “let the military make that decision.”

The Pentagon hasn’t shipped 2,000 ventilators because it doesn't know where to send them. In order to ship the equipment to FEMA and the HHS, the Defense Department “has to be given a location to send them by civilian authorities who have to decide where the items are most needed,” CNN reports. “Civilian Pentagon officials had repeatedly said they are making ventilators and five million N-95 respirator masks available. So far only 1.5 million masks have been shipped by the Pentagon. Another 500,000 are to be shipped within days.”

The Defense Production Act has been invoked routinely, but the president continues to treat it like a “break the glass” last resort. “As recently as last summer, the Department of Defense used it to obtain rare earth metals needed to build lasers, jet engines and armored vehicles. [DOD] estimates that it has used the law’s powers 300,000 times a year. The Department of Homeland Security — including its subsidiary, FEMA — placed more than 1,000 so-called rated orders in 2018, often for hurricane and other disaster response and recovery efforts,” the New York Times reports.

Trump said infrastructure should be the focus of the next stimulus package.

He expressed support for another $2 trillion of spending in the fourth phase of the congressional response. “Citing extraordinarily low interest rates that have reduced the cost of federal borrowing, Trump said on Twitter that now ‘is the time’ to push forward with an infrastructure package,” Jeff Stein and Seung Min Kim report. “Numerous House Democrats have also discussed in recent weeks advancing infrastructure legislation as part of their response to the coronavirus pandemic.”

- The Dow sank more than 800 points, or 3.8 percent, at the open this morning on the expectation of rough weeks ahead. The S&P 500 also dropped 3.8 percent, and the Nasdaq was down 2.9 percent. (Jacob Bogage and Thomas Heath)
- Federal officials are scrambling to make sure that tech glitches and mismanagement don’t delay the public’s $1,200 relief checks. (Tony Romm)
- The government is delegating the authority to make $349 billion in new loans to the nation’s banks. Financial institutions are bracing for millions of small-business loan requests that could overwhelm the system. (David Lynch)
- The Department of Agriculture has stalled on approving requests from states to speed up distribution in food banks by reducing paperwork burdens, which would help limit contact between the needy and workers amid a sudden and dramatic increase in demand. (Jenna Johnson)

- The Trump administration has also decided not to reopen enrollment to the federal health exchanges for the uninsured, per Politico.

Taxpayers paid a company millions to design a low-cost ventilator. Now it's selling overseas.

“Five years ago, [HHS] tried to plug a crucial hole in its preparations for a global pandemic, signing a $13.8 million contract with a Pennsylvania manufacturer to create a low-cost, portable, easy-to-use ventilator that could be stockpiled for emergencies,” ProPublica reports. “This past September, with the design of the new Trilogy Evo Universal finally cleared by the [FDA], HHS ordered 10,000 of the ventilators for the Strategic National Stockpile at a cost of $3,280 each. But as the pandemic continues to spread across the globe, there is still not a single Trilogy Evo Universal in the stockpile. Instead last summer, soon after the FDA’s approval, the Pennsylvania company that designed the device — a subsidiary of the Dutch appliance and technology giant Royal Philips N.V. — began selling two higher-priced commercial versions of the same ventilator around the world.”

Vice President Pence has frozen coronavirus aid to foreign countries after discovering the efforts weren’t being coordinated with domestic requests. The task force is now scrutinizing all of USAID’s deliveries to countries requesting equipment and, in some cases, asking that equipment be sent back, per Politico.

Other governments around the world are taking drastic steps.

The United Nations called the pandemic the single biggest challenge facing the globe since World War II. (Paul Schemm)

- Israel is deploying security forces to make ultra-Orthodox Jews stay home as their neighborhoods become hot spots. (Steve Hendrix and Ruth Eglash)

- Kenyan police fatally shot a teenager as he stood on his balcony during a coronavirus curfew crackdown. (Max Bearak and Rael Ombuor)
  - China reported a sharp increase in new cases as it began officially counting the number of people who've been infected but aren't showing symptoms. (Anna Fifield)
  - Farms across Western Europe depend on Eastern European migrants who come during the growing season, meaning that border closings because of the coronavirus outbreak threaten the continent's food supply. European countries say they have enough food for now, but there are growing concerns about what could happen if the crisis drags on. (Michael Birnbaum and Quentin Ariés)
  - Turkmenistan banned the word "coronavirus" from its vocabulary in a radical attempt to suppress all information about the pandemic. State-controlled media outlets are no longer allowed to use the word, and it has been removed from health information brochures distributed in schools, hospitals and workplaces. (Reporters Without Borders)
-

Tracking the spread

A body wrapped in plastic is unloaded from a refrigerated truck in Brooklyn on Tuesday. (John Minchillo/AP)

Some New York hospitals have stopped resuscitating coronavirus victims.

“Last week, DNRs or do-not-resuscitate policies for coronavirus patients who stop breathing, or are in cardiac arrest, were being discussed as part of worst-case scenario planning. ... Over the past few days, however, as the city’s death count topped 1,000 with 10,900 people hospitalized amid predictions the peak of the crisis is still two weeks off, some hospitals and medical centers activated those protocols,” Ariana Eunjung Cha, Lenny Bernstein, Frances Stead Sellers and Shane Harris report. “Spokespeople for Montefiore, NYU Langone Health, and New York-Presbyterian’s Brooklyn Methodist said no new systemwide resuscitation protocols have been adopted. But doctors and nurses at those facilities say some doctors have been informally allowed in recent days to override a covid-19 patient’s ‘code status’ — the part of their medical record that expresses their desire for lifesaving medical intervention.”

- New data shows the disease is thrusting people with chronic conditions of all ages into intensive care units, reinforcing an important lesson: Although covid-19 is typically more severe among older people, people of any age with underlying medical conditions are at increased risk if they contract the virus. (Joel Achenbach and William Wan)
- Blood banks are panicking they will face a supply crisis about four weeks from now. (Alex Horton)
- More than 1,000 New York Police Department officers have tested positive. More than 5,600 officers, or 15.6 percent of the workforce, called in sick yesterday. (Fox News)
- A husband in New York hid his symptoms from a hospital so he could see his wife after she gave birth. Then, she started showing symptoms. The family of three has been asked to self-quarantine. (Timothy Bella)
- Hospitals are threatening to fire health-care workers who publicize their poor working conditions. Some have followed through, including a Washington state hospital that ousted an emergency room physician after he gave an interview detailing alleged inadequate equipment and testing. In Chicago, a nurse was fired after emailing colleagues she wanted to wear a more protective mask while on duty. (Bloomberg News)

Buffalo is bracing to become New York's next hot spot.

An additional 332 New York state residents died Tuesday as cases topped 75,000. "In Buffalo and its suburbs, the number of coronavirus cases has been doubling every three days," Justin Sondel and Tim Craig report.

"With local hospitals bracing for an influx of sick patients, the situation serves as a reminder that the worst of the crisis could soon shift away from coastal cities and deeper into the Midwest and here in the Great Lakes."

Deaths and infections in Louisiana rose 30 percent in a 24-hour period.

"The 'very sobering numbers' brought the state's total number of cases to 5,237, and 239 covid-19 patients have died, Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) said at a news conference. That is an increase of 1,212 cases and 54 deaths over what the state reported Monday. The city of New Orleans had 1,834 total cases and 101 deaths," David Montgomery and Richard Webster report. "The new data pushed up the estimated date when the New Orleans region could run out of ventilators to April 4, and advanced the date when hospital beds in the region may be filled to April 7, the governor said. Edwards offered one caveat to the numbers: State health officials said 90 percent of the new cases were based on tests processed by private labs, and officials have been unable to pin down whether the spike in cases is partly because of a sudden rush of reporting of tests that could have been collected many days ago."

Yet New Orleans police continue jailing people for minor offenses. "One man was accused of stealing whiskey from a drugstore. A homeless man had allegedly refused to leave a hotel lobby. A woman had walked out of a grocery store without paying for a cart full of food worth $375, according to the police," Richard Webster, Emma Brown and Kimberly Kindy report.

Meanwhile, California will release 3,500 inmates early as the virus spreads inside the state's prisons, per the Los Angeles Times. The Golden State also told its schools to plan on staying closed for the rest of the academic year. Alabama, Arizona, Kansas, New Mexico, Virginia and Vermont have already ordered their schools closed for the rest of the semester, per Valerie Strauss.

The virus continues to take both the old and the young.

- Jorge Ortiz-Garay, of Brooklyn, became the first Catholic priest known to have died of the virus in the United States. He passed just days after celebrating Mass via live stream. He was 49. (NYT)
- Gita Ramjee, a world-renowned virologist and a leading HIV researcher, died at 64. (HuffPost)
- Jeannie Danker, director of radiology at Ohio State University's medical center, was 60. She had just lost her husband to ALS. (WBNS)
- Lorena Borjas, a transgender Latina activist who fought for immigrants and sex workers, died at 59. (CNN)
- A 13-year-old boy in London, thought to be the youngest person to die from the virus in the U.K., had no apparent underlying health conditions. He just tested positive on Friday. (BBC)

Not everyone who gets covid-19 is incapacitated.

- CNN host Chris Cuomo, 49, said he tested positive but will continue broadcasting from his home basement because he feels okay.
- ESPN broadcaster Patrick McEnroe, 53, the 16-time men's tennis doubles champion, said he's recovering from mild symptoms. (CNN)
- Twenty-eight University of Texas students tested positive after returning to Austin from a spring break trip to Cabo San Lucas in Mexico. Health officials say dozens more are being monitored. (Austin American-Statesman)

Some people continue to ignore the warnings of experts.

- Churchgoers flocked to a Louisiana church parking lot on Tuesday to hear pastor Tony Spell, who faces misdemeanor charges for holding services despite a ban on gatherings. Spell said he's going to keep his doors open, saying his church is at least as essential as Walmart. (AP)

- Epidemiologists have advised Florida to issue a stay-at-home order, but Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) continues to insist it's unnecessary. (Miami Herald)
- Hobby Lobby quietly reopened nearly all of its stores in Wisconsin and Ohio, defying state-mandated lockdowns. At least one store was forcibly shuttered by police in Wisconsin. A similar incident was reported in Indiana. (Business Insider)
- A rural county in Minnesota, home to 20,000, is becoming a hot spot. A local public health official suggested conservative media downplaying the danger was a factor. “It's hard to prove that. I don't want to get political. But there were outlets saying it's a hoax, it's no worse than a cold, and those are things people listen to,” said Tim Langer, a public health sanitarian with Martin County Human Services. (Grand Forks Herald)
- Bill Gates calls for a more “consistent nationwide approach to shutting down” in an op-ed for today's paper.

The D.C. region reported 477 new cases.

A day after District, Maryland and Virginia officials ordered residents to stay home, the region's number of confirmed cases rose to 3,411. Virginia reported 230 new infections and Maryland 247 — each number a one-day record. D.C. didn't report new overall coronavirus cases Tuesday because it is shifting the release of data from evenings to mornings. But it announced a dozen new cases among D.C. first responders.

The number of virus-related fatalities in the region grew to 63. Maryland and Virginia officials said they are consulting various computer models to figure out when the outbreak might peak. D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser (D) said the city will release a projection this week. (Gregory Schneider, Rebecca Tan, Rachel Chason and Erin Cox)

- George Washington University Hospital is preparing to offer drive-through coronavirus testing. (Kyle Swenson)
- The sale of Trump's D.C. hotel was put on ice as the commercial real-estate industry reels. (Jonathan O'Connell and David Fahrenthold)

- A Maryland man who allegedly refused to comply with the state's stay-at-home order was pepper-sprayed and arrested by police. (Justin Wm. Moyer)
- The Kennedy Center furloughed 250 workers for five weeks, less than a week after being awarded a $25 million grant from the federal stimulus package. (Peggy McGlone)
- Rats in D.C. are likely to go into "panic mode" as businesses shut down, and the vermin are expected to begin scouring for food in the streets. Bowser said pest control workers are therefore considered essential and staying on the job. (WUSA9)

Joe Biden said "it's hard to envision" Democrats will hold their convention in July.

"The likely presidential nominee [suggested] that the party's major gathering, slated for Milwaukee, may need to be altered or postponed," Matt Viser reports.

But Wisconsin is going forward with its primary next week. "In Tuesday's Wisconsin elections, more than 100 municipalities will not have enough poll workers to open a single voting location," Amy Gardner reports. "Across Wisconsin, voters, election officials and civil rights leaders are angry that the state legislature is going forward with the April 7 presidential primary and local elections ... The public-health risk is too high, and asking voters to venture out of their homes directly contradicts state and local emergency orders to shelter in place, they say."

Biden and Bernie Sanders have become amateur online video hosts as they campaign amid the pandemic, but few are watching. "The new style of campaigning comes as the contest is in a state of suspended animation. Without primaries, debates or crowds, it is difficult to gauge momentum or trajectory," Annie Linskey and Matt report.

Barack Obama is trying to inform and reassure the public about the crisis while avoiding a confrontation with Trump. (David Nakamura)

The contagion is bringing out the worst in some people.

Online trolls have been breaking into multiple Alcoholic Anonymous meetings being held via Zoom video conferences to harass recovering addicts with slurs and encouragement to drink. (Business Insider)

Some profiteers are price-gouging and selling low-quality masks at high mark-ups. The frenzy has broken down standard quality controls, opening the market to an influx of masks of uncertain origin and effectiveness, Reuters reports.

But it's also bringing out inspiring acts of kindness and selflessness.

“Studies have revealed that human connection — something as simple as getting an offer of help from a stranger or looking at a picture of someone you love — can ease pain and reduce physical symptoms of stress. People who feel supported by their social networks are more likely to live longer. ... For everyone quarantined in solitude, aching and afraid for far-flung family and friends, this science can provide some solace. A supportive phone call, an empathetic ear, an expression of love — these things can bolster the immune system on a molecular level. Whether you are the recipient or the giver, kindness is good for your health,” Sarah Kaplan reports.

- A newspaper deliveryman in New Jersey is bringing groceries to his older customers on his morning route at no extra charge. (Cathy Free)
- A Minnesota state trooper pulled over a doctor for speeding on Interstate 35. But instead of giving her a ticket, he gave her a fistful of N95 masks that has been issued for his own protection, the Star

Tribune reports. “I burst into tears,” Sarosh Ashraf Janjua, a cardiologist, wrote on Facebook. “The veil of civilization may be thin, but not all that lies behind it is savage. We are going to be OK.”

- A 30-year-old man from England with terminal leukemia passed away after testing positive but telling doctors to use their limited resources to “save someone else.” (Daily News)
-

Quote of the day

Suzanne Hoylaerts, 90, died from the virus in Belgium after refusing a ventilator. “I had a good life, keep this for the younger,” she reportedly told doctors.

---

Other news that shouldn't be overlooked

Problems with the FBI's surveillance powers extended far beyond the probe of Trump's 2016 campaign.

“The Justice Department inspector general [Michael Horowitz] revealed Tuesday that his investigators found errors in every FBI application to a secret surveillance court examined as part of an ongoing review,” Devlin Barrett and Ellen Nakashima report. “Trump has long decried the FBI investigation of him and his campaign's contacts with Russians as a politically motivated ‘witch hunt’ aimed at wrecking his candidacy and his presidency ... Tuesday's findings suggest, however, that the bureau may be suffering instead from broad, institutional weaknesses more than political bias, as problems were found in an array of cases managed by FBI field offices around the country.”

The U.S. proposed a transitional government for Venezuela.

“The Trump administration said it would lift tough sanctions against Venezuela if both President Nicolás Maduro and his political nemesis, opposition leader Juan Guaidó, step aside and agree to a transitional government guided by both the ruling socialists and opposition lawmakers,” Anthony Faiola and Carol Morello report. “The deal, announced as Venezuelans confront grave danger from the global coronavirus pandemic, is the first road map to relief from some of the harshest sanctions ever imposed by Washington. Described by Secretary of State Mike Pompeo at a news conference in Washington, it amounts to a power-sharing arrangement that would guarantee Maduro’s socialists — if not Maduro himself — a seat at the table of a transitional government. U.S. officials insisted Tuesday they did not support any particular political party in Venezuela. But the move nevertheless appeared to be an attempt to set up new elections in which U.S.-backed Guaidó could run.”

Social media speed read

A doctor treating covid-19 patients paused his rounds to help a 100-year-old receive a final blessing:

Avital Chizhik-Goldschmidt

@avitalrachel

"I stopped what I was doing out of respect for this 100 year old woman and put the cell on speakerphone and told him to talk. He started the prayer of the dead and he began to cry and could barely get the words out. And I saw she had numbers tattooed on her arm."

Mert Eroglu

19 likes ·

So today in the middle of all the madness there was a one hundred year old Hasidic lady with Covid pneumonia and I was desperate to send her home so she wouldn't die in the hospital, but she dropped her blood pressure and we had to keep her. And then for an hour her son kept calling me to find out how she was and I finally told him look, she's a hundred years old with pneumonia in both lungs. She's not good. She's not going to do well. And then he wanted to talk to her and I said you cant I'm too busy, and he called back ten minutes later and I said, listen sir, your mother is not conscious anymore. And he said that's okay, it's very important that I do a prayer for her, could you hold the speaker to her ear. I had ten other pressing things to do. But I stopped what I was doing out of respect for this 100 year old woman and put the cell on speakerphone and told him to talk. He started the prayer of the dead and he began to cry and could barely get the words out. And I saw she had numbers tattooed on her arm. He was crying for his mother and praying the shema, the verses of unity and it woke up some emotion in me that I had forgotten about. Time slowed down and I felt restored to myself. When he was done he thanked me and blessed me and I said thank you to him.

33.5K 5:13 PM - Mar 30, 2020

10.2K people are talking about this

May her memory be a blessing.

Florida is already seeing the effects of allowing visitors during spring break:

Josh Kraushaar @HotlineJosh

Underscores how costly the decision not to shut down spring break was... twitter.com/scottgottliebmd

Scott Gottlieb, MD @ScottGottliebMD

Florida continues to show an acceleration in new #COVID19 cases, with Miami as one of a number of epicenters of spread. The state was probably heavily seeded at some point in early/mid February given pace of the case growth, which suggests there are multiple expanding clusters.

577 8:40 PM - Mar 31, 2020

300 people are talking about this

In a light-hearted PSA, Larry David urged everyone to stay home:

Office of the Governor of California ✓

@CAGovernor

"You're hurting old people like me. Well, not me... I'll never see you."

Larry David wants everyone to stay home to protect older Californians from #COVID19!

He does not do these things.

Listen to Larry. #StayHomeSaveLivescovid19.ca.gov

♥ 17.5K 10:08 PM - Mar 31, 2020

💬 8,479 people are talking about this

Videos of the day

New York's mayor regularly sought to downplay the danger, even as his city became the world's biggest hot spot. This is a very bad look for Bill de Blasio:

Seth Meyers said that, upon seeing the founder of My Pillow speak during a Trump news conference, he reached for his pillow to scream into:

Stephen Colbert asked folks not to celebrate April Fools' Day:

Trevor Noah went through some of the ways world leaders have screwed up during the pandemic:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: The list of who won't get a stimulus check is growing
Date: Wednesday, April 1, 2020 2:30:38 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Angela Fritz
with Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

Important stimulus news: The list of people who won't get $1,200 stimulus checks is growing. The Trump administration is now requiring additional steps for one group and others don't qualify at all. Read about the new requirements and restrictions.

Exclusive: Two DHS officials told The Washington Post that the national stockpile of respirator masks, gloves and other medical supplies is nearly gone, despite assurances from the White House that there is availability. Here's what we know.

The White House coronavirus task force on Monday night presented a grim picture of where the U.S. could be heading over the next couple of months, even with interventions like physical distancing.

A new CDC report shows people of any age with underlying medical conditions are at increased risk if they contract the virus, including those with heart and lung disease, diabetes and current or former smokers. Health reporters Joel Achenbach and William Wan explain who among us is at the highest risk.

Scientists report in the journal Nature that the virus spreads “efficiently” early in the infection, before a person develops significant symptoms. Memos from the CDC to the White House show federal officials are debating whether to recommend that everyone wear face coverings in public because of increasing evidence like this that people who are asymptomatic can spread the virus.

A 41-year-old ophthalmologist with three children is intubated in his fight against covid-19. The malaria drugs didn't work. Neither did a second round of experimental remedies. Now his family is desperate for a third, but can't get access. Read more about the struggle some families are facing to get the unproven treatments.

Cases are surging in Florida, but Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) had refused to issue a stay-at-home order — until this afternoon. The new 30-day order tells residents to stay indoors unless they are pursuing “essential services.” Explore which other states are resisting tougher measures.

After reports of “prison-like” lockdown conditions at the Air Force Academy outside Colorado Springs, two apparent cadet suicides alarmed officials. Read the report.

It's April 1, which means rent and mortgage payments are due.

Advocates are concerned the country will soon face a housing crisis that would rival what took place a decade ago. Some states are offering protection from evictions, and a few lenders have offered mortgage relief. Here's what you need to know about paying up today.

Deaths in New York City are mounting so quickly that freezer trucks are being used as makeshift morgues. Several hospitals are allowing doctors not to resuscitate people with covid-19 to keep the front-line health-care workers safe. Read more about the crisis in New York City and an analysis of Mayor Bill de Blasio's \(D\) repeated comments that downplayed the virus.

Wood River Valley, a beautiful ski town in Idaho — and a magnet for wealthy vacationers — offers a preview of what happens when coronavirus leaves cities and attacks rural America.

The situation at food banks across the country has gotten worse. Hours-long lines end with close contact between workers and families in need, which is a recipe for virus spread. The USDA has been slow to suspend the rules that govern the process.

Consumer complaints about covid-19 scams are increasing. Herbs? Silver? Salt? Toothpaste? None of these are cures. Here's what you need to know so you \(or a loved one\) don't get scammed.

Share Coronavirus Updates

---

Content from Slack

Bring your team together, wherever they are

Navigating remote work is about more than setting up the right workstation. It's about staying productive and in the loop. With Slack, teams can access information and communicate quickly to get work done.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

"As I understand it, not everyone dies from covid-19. But the media doesn't report on the numbers of people who recover. Why is that? Wouldn't the reports of those who recover give people hope?" —Norton Karp in Belleville, N.J.

One of the most common questions we get is why our national coronavirus tracker includes the number of confirmed infections and deaths in each U.S. state, but not the number of recoveries.

Short answer: we'd like to, but we simply don't have accurate data on how many people have recovered from the virus (let alone how many people even have it to begin with).

"Our tracker hasn't been including the recovery statistics because states haven't been reporting it consistently," said Armand Emamdjomeh, an editor on our graphics team. "We're monitoring this and plan to include recovery statistics if they become available and are being reliably reported."

State officials release daily updates on new infections and deaths in their region, which filter up to the federal government and then out to news outlets. Many states, such as New York, simply don't include information about recoveries. Neither does the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which combines the state figures into a national total.

We asked a few states why they don't include recovery statistics, but didn't get a great answer. A spokeswoman for the New York State Department of Health wrote that it is "working to accommodate requests for information regarding all aspects of our wide-ranging response." We've reported previously that many states are struggling just to put out consistent and reliable death statistics, let alone count the (presumably) much larger number of recovered cases.

The Johns Hopkins University tracker, which ours is based on, does include recovery figures for each country, but notes in a disclaimer that these are generally "estimates based on local media reports, and may be substantially lower than the true number." For example, the university counts about 8,400 recovered out of nearly 200,000 U.S. cases as of Wednesday afternoon.

Johns Hopkins spokesman Douglas Donovan sent us a bit more information on the difficulty of finding reliable statistics.

"When the outbreak was centered in China, the researchers built the map based on what data China and some other nations were releasing, which included recoveries," he wrote. "As it spread worldwide, the reporting of recoveries became less and less consistent. And in the U.S. states ... the recovery estimates did not come from any type of uniform process by county, state or federal government."

Like us, Donovan said Johns Hopkins plans to revisit its recovery reporting once more reliable data become available.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- The latest on cruise ships with sick passengers, struggling to find places to dock
- Sent home from the hospital with a pneumonia diagnosis, he died days later of covid-19
- 'No one should pay rent until the coronavirus ends:' A new rallying cry among America's working class
- How to retrain your dog for social distancing

Go grocery shopping every two weeks? You can — and without hoarding. Here's a guide.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

---

Bill Gates: How to make up for lost time on covid-19

Opinion • By Bill Gates • Read more »

---

Social distancing works. The earlier the better, California and Washington data show.

By Geoffrey Fowler, Heather Kelly and Reed Albergotti • Read more »

Here are rules doctors can follow when they decide who gets care and who dies

Perspective • By Daniel Wikler • Read more »

---

The list of those who won't get a $1,200 stimulus check is growing — and includes some surprising groups

By Heather Long • Read more »

---

Masterpiece!

Last week, the Getty museum in Los Angeles sent out a challenge to people stuck at home: recreate your favorite art using household objects. They received thousands of submissions that range from beautiful to hilarious.

“You’ve re-created Jeff Koons using a pile of socks, restaged Jacques-Louis David with a fleece blanket and duct tape, and MacGyvered costumes out of towels, pillows, scarves, shower caps, coffee filters, bubble wrap, and—of course—toilet paper and toilet rolls,” the Getty wrote.

See some of the art on the museum's blog, the iris.

Getty ✓ @GettyMuseum

Can you re-create an artwork with items around your house? Get inspired by the creative genius of the internet: #BetweenArtandQuarantine
#tussenkunstenquarantaineblogs.getty.edu/iris/getty-art...

Getty Artworks Recreated with Household Items by...

Thousands of people get creative with items on hand, from bubble wrap to their (very good) dogs
blogs.getty.edu

♥ 421 12:09 AM - Mar 31, 2020

💬 236 people are talking about this

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The Optimist for a selection of inspiring stories to help you disconnect, hit refresh and start the week off right, delivered every Sunday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News <ealerts@eenews.net>
Sent: Wednesday, April 1, 2020 2:35 PM
To: jeff_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 1 -- E&E News PM is ready

Read today's E&E News PM on the web

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

E&E NEWS PM — Wed., April 1, 2020

READ FULL EDITION

---

1. PANDEMIC:

EPA employee dies of COVID-19

An employee in EPA's Region 3 office has died from the novel coronavirus, an agency source confirmed this afternoon.

---

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

2. INFRASTRUCTURE:

Pelosi eyes quick action on green-tinged stimulus

3. PEOPLE:

Trump's science adviser becomes NSF acting chief

4. INTERIOR:

FWS extends free-entrance policy at wildlife refuges

5. WILDFIRES:

Bernhardt approves 11K miles of fire breaks out West

6. PANDEMIC:

Democrats want info on EPA's COVID-19 operation plan

7. COAL:

Murray Energy on verge of liquidation

8. PANDEMIC:

Western governors ask BLM, Forest Service for COVID-19 help

9. PANDEMIC:

Outdoor industry advocates want tariff reprieve

---

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

10. CALENDAR:

Activity for March 30 - April 5, 2020

---

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – LATE-BREAKING NEWS

---

E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 2 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Thursday, April 2, 2020 4:49:29 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Thu., April 2, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. EMISSIONS:

Trump's car rule would cause more pollution deaths

On Page 1,525, the rule rolling back emissions standards for cars offers a striking assessment: It could cause 444 to 1,000 premature deaths from air pollution.

TOP STORIES

---

2. POLITICS:

Skepticism soared during the last recession. Will it again?

3. GEOPOLITICS:

Pandemic delays global climate summit

CLIMATE IMPACTS

---

4. UNITED NATIONS:

Virus strikes adaptation program; 3 staffers infected

5. PANDEMIC:

Experts: Addressing climate change can blunt outbreaks

LAW

---

6. SUPREME COURT:

Big Oil brings Baltimore climate battle to justices

EMISSIONS

---

7. SCIENCE:

It's official: Antarctica used to have a rainforest

8. AGRICULTURE:

America's sugar cane growers have a burning problem

GLOBAL

---

9. CRIME:

Another member of forest guardian tribe slain in Brazil

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 2 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Thursday, April 2, 2020 5:41:41 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Thu., April 2, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump to host oil meeting: Who's going and why it matters

The country's top oil executives are expected to gather at the White House tomorrow and push President Trump to address the industry's slowdown. What's on the agenda and will it work?

TOP STORIES

2. ENERGY TRANSITIONS:

N.M. OKs abandonment of coal plant after meeting 'sabotage'

3. PANDEMIC:

Is the world headed to negative oil prices?

4. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Coronavirus threatens large-scale solar — report

UTILITIES

5. CORONAVIRUS:

Southern Co: Plant Vogtle, supply chains at risk

ENERGY TRANSITIONS

6. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

100% clean energy group launches, with eyes on coronavirus

7. ELECTRICITY:

Renewables beat coal for 1st time ever on quarterly basis

ENERGY POLICY

8. OIL AND GAS:

API issues standards for larger-sized gathering lines

ELECTRICITY

9. MONTANA:

State to ban utility shut-offs amid virus order

10. NUCLEAR:

Cheap energy shuts down Swedish reactor

11. UTILITIES:

Regulators mull reversing $462M increase in PG&E fire fines

OIL AND GAS

---

12. ENERGY MARKETS:

'Dead cow' oil play set to be next Permian is now, well, dead

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 2 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Thursday, April 2, 2020 11:36:02 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Thu., April 2, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PUBLIC HEALTH:

Years of toxic leaks raise cancer risk in refinery town

Industrial pollution is a risk factor in the era of COVID-19. But an oil refinery in Artesia, N.M., poses a heightened threat to residents: It has some of the nation's highest annual emissions of cancer-causing benzene after a decade of slack government oversight.

TOP STORIES

2. NATIONAL PARKS:

Pandemic forces closure of Grand Canyon

3. EPA:

Total cases rise to 15 as first employee dies

4. NATIONAL PARKS:

Trump's Mount Rushmore fireworks plan ignites opposition

CORONAVIRUS

5. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Democrats move convention to August

6. OIL AND GAS:

DOE looks to store 30M barrels of crude to help producers

7. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

Agency staffers sue for extra pay after virus exposure

8. PANDEMIC:

Rural towns fear outbreak amid border wall, Keystone XL work

POLITICS

9. OIL AND GAS:

Trump sees Saudi-Russian production cuts coming

10. REGULATIONS:

House Dems urge White House to extend public comment periods

11. FORESTS:

'Money-loser': Conservative group blasts Trump Tongass rule

12. INTERIOR:

Auditors cite flaws in grants management

---

NATURAL RESOURCES

13. RECREATION:

Interior advances proposed e-bike rules

14. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Settlement forces more water down Klamath River

15. PUBLIC LANDS:

Ranchers can apply for grazing allotments Hammonds lost

16. SEVERE WEATHER:

Double strike: Tornado, virus push Tennesseans to the limit

17. MARINE MAMMALS:

Social distancing means leave those seals alone, NOAA says

---

LAW

18. OBITUARY:

Judge who ordered overhaul of Columbia River system dies

19. COAL:

W.Va. governor's firms to pay $5M in mine safety fines

---

STATES

20. IDAHO:

Authorities say no major damage after 6.5 earthquake

21. ALASKA:

Wildlife officials to residents: Don't feed the moose

22. CALIFORNIA:

Possible hazmat crash snarls interstate north of LA

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

---

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

---

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Stimulus check requirements changed (again)
Date: Thursday, April 2, 2020 2:36:13 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Angela Fritz
with Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

Stimulus reversal: On Wednesday, we told you that people who get Social Security would have to file a simple tax return in order to get their stimulus checks. The new hurdle drew enormous criticism, and a few hours after we sent the newsletter, the Treasury Department reversed its decision. You can catch up on stimulus check details here.

A record 6.65 million people filed new jobless claims last week, bringing the total in March to more than 10 million. Read how economists are reacting to the news and what they think this means for the economy. Gig workers were promised unemployment benefits but it could be weeks until they get them. (Plus: here are the companies that have pledged to keep people employed.)

The extremely grim American death-toll projections that the White House shared on Tuesday have already been revised upward. Here's what we know about the model the task force is using, and how it has changed.

The covid-19 death toll passed 50,000 worldwide today, with some 1 million confirmed cases. The United States has more than 230,000 confirmed infections so far, and more than 5,500 people have died. The U.S. is now the outbreak's epicenter, with more confirmed infections than any other country.

Early last month, 3M was ramping up to produce masks, but there was a problem, and it was just one of a number of roadblocks. Read our story that dives inside how America got into this mask crunch.

The White House is debating where to send the new rapid covid-19 tests. Members of the president's task force talked about sending them to areas where there are relatively few cases, but officials in the hardest-hit areas want them going to hot spots. Read about the struggle to determine who will be best served by the new tests.

Ambassadors from Italy and Spain cautiously reported signs of improvement on Thursday. Read how their measures have started to pay off and what the U.S. is learning.

The White House has rejected the idea of re-opening healthcare.gov — the Affordable Healthcare Act website — to help people find insurance. In Wednesday's White House briefing, Pence answered a question about opening the marketplace by saying, “We have Medicaid for underprivileged Americans,” though Medicaid does not address the people in the middle, who either didn't have health care coming into the coronavirus crisis or were recently laid off and lost their coverage.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) announced the creation of a committee to scrutinize the Trump administration's response to the crisis and its management of the $2 trillion stimulus package.

Anthony S. Fauci, the nation's top infectious-diseases expert and widely beloved face of the White House task force, has received threats to his personal safety, prompting the government to step up his security.

The Empire State Building blinked red this week as New York became the new focal point in the battle against the virus. New York is running out of time, quickly approaching an expected apex of cases, and the state's scramble is a siren to the rest of the U.S.

After the SARS epidemic, many insurers added exclusions to their business policies for losses caused by viruses or bacteria, and now insurance companies are avoiding paying claims because of coronavirus. Here's what we know about the exclusions and the effect they are having on American businesses.

Because of a strange coronavirus conspiracy theory, an engineer derailed a train on purpose near the USNS Mercy hospital ship in Los Angeles, federal officials say.

Share Coronavirus Updates

Bring your team together, wherever they are

Navigating remote work is about more than setting up the right workstation. It's about staying productive and in the loop. With Slack, teams can access information and communicate quickly to get work done.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, masked and answered

"Are there instructions for making useful masks at home? Not just generalized, such as two layers of T-shirt and rubber bands, but detailed?" – Teddy Knight in Berkeley, Calif.

Are there ever! We'll suggest some tutorials below, but first we need to address whether homemade masks are a good idea at all.

There is no simple answer to this. Current government guidelines say healthy people don't need to cover their faces in public; some officials even warn against it. There hasn't been a lot of research on whether homemade masks work against viruses. Masks also have the potential do more harm than good if used improperly: they can get dirty and collect bacteria, encourage face touching and give people a false sense of security.

But the federal government is considering changing course and recommending more widespread mask usage. There is at least some limited evidence that masks can slow disease spread, and several medical experts have recently endorsed masks for everyone, including in our op-ed page.

If you decide to make a mask, here's what you should know from our recent guide to the subject:

Don't rely on a mask to protect you from the virus. Homemade masks were widely used during the 1918 pandemic, and people still died by the millions. There are some clever DIY designs on the Internet, but so far none has been proven effective. So mask or no mask, keep doing all the usual hand-washing and social-distancing.

Choose a mask design that fits snugly. It won't protect anyone if contaminated particles and air are leaking out the edges. The mask should reach above the bridge of your nose and under your chin, and strap tightly around your ears.

Choose good material. Too porous, and it won't filter anything. Not porous enough, you'll have trouble breathing. Several medical centers recommend using tightly woven, high-quality cotton or cotton blends. Peter Tsai, a scientist who invented the electrostatic charging technology used in medical-grade N95 masks, suggests using blue shop towels. In general, you'll want to layer the material for more protection.

If you can sew, several hospitals have released tutorials online. Providence St. Joseph Health has an 11-minute video showing how to make a cotton mask with half a yard of fabric and some thread. Other health systems have released their own instructions, which you can find in our story.

Amateur videos show how to make masks with basic household supplies. This one, for example, uses shop towels, rubber bands, paper clips, tape and a stapler. YouTube abounds with more, and there's a Facebook group for people experimenting with other designs. Be especially cautious when following amateur advice.

Never wear a dirty mask. One of the worries about homemade masks is their potential to trap moisture, bacteria or virus particles. You should wash yours with soap daily and hang it to dry, ideally in the sun. Never share it with others, and consider making multiple masks so you can rotate them.

Be careful taking it on and off, or adjusting it. Another issue with homemade masks is they can encourage people to touch their faces, which is one way the virus spreads. An assistant professor of exposure and assessment science at Harvard University offers advice on how to handle yours safely here.

---

Show us your creativity

How are you adapting to spending so much time at home? Have you used the time to start or finish a special project? Are you creating something in your home, like a wall mural, or learning a new technique like micro-gardening? Have stay-at-home orders inspired you to learn or attempt something you've never tried before? Tell us your story here.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Exclusive: Wash. nursing home faces $611,000 fine over lapses during fatal outbreak, inspectors say
- How to actually do this remote-learning thing while also working from home
- When the store is out of eggs, here's what to substitute
- Everybody seems to be using Zoom. But its security flaws could leave users at risk.

The do's and don'ts of apartment living, self-quarantine edition

By Anying Guo • Read more »

---

The pandemic canceled their wedding. So they held it in Animal Crossing.

By Aron Garst • Read more »

The grim death-toll projections the White House offered Monday have already been revised upward

Analysis • By Philip Bump • Read more »

---

I didn't have a quarantine plan when I got covid-19. Trust me: You'll want one.

Perspective • By Baynard Woods • Read more »

How coronavirus grounded the airline industry

By Andrew Freedman, John Muyskens, Chris Alcantara and Monica Ulmanu • Read more »

This guy ran a marathon in his backyard (!)

Hemmed in by the coronavirus lockdown, a British man ran a marathon in his 20-foot backyard and thousands watched online. By early Thursday morning, he had raised the equivalent of just over $32,000 for the United Kingdom's National Health Service.

Read the full story \(and watch some video\) from The Post's Antonia Noori Farzan.

View More on Instagram

893 likes

leemryan

Breaking the tape on my own little "Backyard Marathon" 🏃‍♂️

42.2km 🏃‍♂️ 30 (Meters) = 1,406.666 times I ran up and down my garden to complete the "backyard marathon"- 5hrs 23mins 50secs.

The world is messed up right now, people are lost and don't know what to do. I am the same, quarantine in the UAE has us staying in doors for the safety of everyone which I get and totally understand and back it #stayhome . But I missed my running and decided to make use of what I have and do the best I could. Coming out of it very positive and happy. Almost as much happiness as any @wmmajors I have ran before. Because in my head I made it that way. If my mindset was wrong this could of been so boring and miserable.

But it wasn't, I had fun, I feel and felt good and hopefully it may of helped and inspired others to get up and get active in this difficult time, not to run a marathon in the back garden. But just to move, do a circuit session from your social feed, take 10mins to run along your balcony, down the garden path, up the stairs at home. Anything is better than nothing. Mentally and physically your body and mind needs it. Do it. Do anything. Smile, be positive and be safe when you do it! PLEASE!! You will help yourself and you will inspire others to do the same.

Amazing to have my little support crew there to run with me in some parts and then to be there at the end to help me finish strong and pass me a very unique and special handmade medal 🏆 😊. One medal no one else will ever get 😊

@adidas @adidasrunners @adidasrunning

#fortheloveofrunning #stayhome #adidasrunners #hometeam #uae #backyardmarathon #alwaysfinishstrong #finishlinechallenge

view all 129 comments

Add a comment...

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Baking Basics by Voraciously for baking fundamentals, techniques and irresistible recipes, in your inbox on Fridays. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 3 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 5:30:09 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Fri., April 3, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. CORONAVIRUS:

'Ground to a halt.' State shutdowns put clean energy on ice

The coronavirus pandemic has delayed sessions in at least half of state legislatures, threatening solar booms, grid overhauls and 100% clean energy plans.

TOP STORIES

2. WHITE HOUSE:

Exxon, Mnuchin, lawmakers weigh in ahead of Trump oil meeting

3. CARBON CAPTURE:

Companies ink deal to build world's first gas CCS plant

4. PANDEMIC:

Brouillette intervenes in Pa. nuclear fight

ELECTRICITY

5. ENERGY TRANSITIONS:

N.Y. passage of renewable plan stirs NIMBY, climate debate

FEDERAL AGENCIES

6. CORONAVIRUS:

FERC eases enforcement rules

7. INTERIOR:

Oil crisis puts public lands at risk, advocates warn

LAW

8. TEXAS:

Trump admin, NextEra align in transmission case

TECHNOLOGY

9. ELECTRIC VEHICLES:

Toyota, China's BYD announce EV venture

10. PANDEMIC:

'We can do this.' Fuel cell engineer fixes ventilators

OIL AND GAS

---

11. ENERGY MARKETS:

Oil at $4 a barrel? Belarus offers Russia that price

GRID

---

12. MAINE:

Transmission referendum to advance despite tossed signatures

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

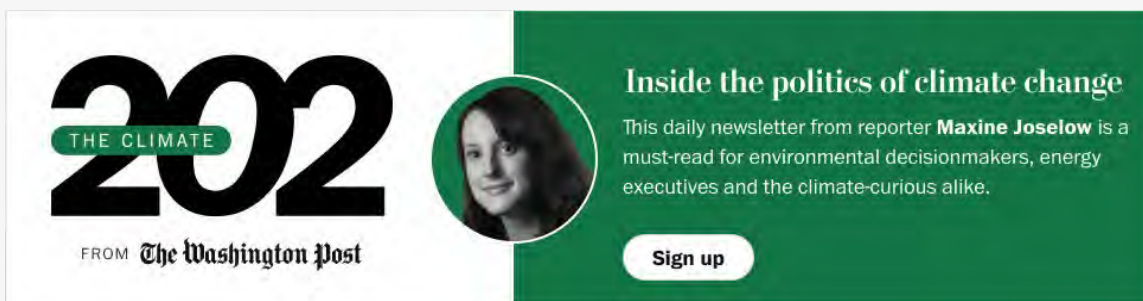

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Book Club: James Patterson fights to keep bookstores afloat, and Dolly Parton wants to read you to sleep
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 7:32:37 AM

2022
THE CLIMATE
FROM The Washington Post

Inside the politics of climate change
This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives and the climate-curious alike.

Sign up

Powered by  LiveIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Book Club

Reviews and recommendations from critic Ron Charles.

By Ron Charles

 Email

President Trump at the White House, April 2, 2020 (AP Photo/Alex Brandon); Henry Holt; two-time Booker-winner Hilary Mantel (Photo by Els Zweerink)

“The Mirror & the Light,” the third volume of Hilary Mantel’s

Wolf Hall trilogy, is reportedly another triumph (review). From the machinations of Henry VIII's powerful adviser Thomas Cromwell, Mantel has spun one of the most monumental works of historical fiction ever written. That's giving me a little hope as we endure the deadly chaos of the Trump administration. For two months, President Trump dismissed the coronavirus, mocked anyone who took it seriously and blamed the media for inflaming a situation he had entirely under control. This week he suggested with royal confidence that if only 100,000 Americans die, "we all together have done a very good job." That's not so much moving the goal post as melting the goal post down and making commemorative coins out of it. Brilliant novelists like Salman Rushdie, Howard Jacobson and Dave Eggers have tried, but none has fully captured the absurd mendacity of Donald Trump and the sycophants who cheer him on. Perhaps our contemporary fiction writers are just too close. Maybe disorder of this magnitude requires time, even centuries to decompose, to fade away, to grow wholly unfamiliar. But be encouraged, book lovers! Hundreds of years from now, some brilliant Martian artist scanning ancient Earth tweets will uncover the unbelievable history of what happened to America and tell the most astonishing tale.

James Patterson (Courtesy of Hachette Book Group); American Booksellers Association

James Patterson has donated $500,000 to help keep indie bookstores solvent through this challenging time. The best-selling author is working with the Book Industry Charitable Foundation (Binc) to promote an April campaign called #SaveIndieBookstores, in conjunction with the American Booksellers Association. (Reese Witherspoon and her book club are on board, too.) In a statement released Thursday, Patterson said, “The White House is concerned about saving the airline industry and big businesses – I get that. But I’m concerned about the survival of independent bookstores, which are at the heart of main streets across the country. I believe that books are essential. They make us kinder, more empathetic human beings. And they have the power to take us away – even momentarily – from feeling overwhelmed, anxious, and scared.” Patterson has a long record of charitable giving: A spokesperson for Hachette says that he has donated more than $75 million (!) and more than 1 million books to support literacy causes. Publishers Weekly reports that Patterson is personally asking fellow super-rich people like Michael Bloomberg and MacKenzie Bezos to support the cause. You can make your own tax-deductible donation to #SaveIndieBookstores here.

ADVERTISEMENT

Harper; Mashpee Wampanoag Tribal lands in Massachusetts (AP Photo/Steven Senne); Louise Erdrich (Hilary Abe/Courtesy of Harper)

Louise Erdrich has just published a historical novel that suddenly feels ripped from today’s headlines. “The Night Watchman” is a story inspired by her grandfather who fought the federal government’s efforts to disband Indian tribes in the 1950s (review). This week, in the middle of the coronavirus crisis, the Trump administration made time to revive those efforts. The Secretary of the Interior has ordered that the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe reservation be disestablished and its land in Massachusetts be taken out of trust. The tribe leaders have denounced the decision and vowed to fight back (statement). For Erdrich, this fresh U.S. attack on people who have been here since before the Pilgrims is contemptible. “This is personal for me,” she told me. “Just out of college, I worked at the Boston Indian Council with many admirable Mashpee Wampanoag tribal members who were dedicated to revitalizing their language, culture, traditional spirituality. They have rebuilt their community time after time, devastation after devastation. Now they are facing the deadly coronavirus and instead of extending assistance the Trump administration has issued a termination decree. It is a shameful, spiteful, and transparently greedy act.”

(Chicago Review; Atria; Penguin; Knopf; Amulet; Pantheon)

Many bookstores are adapting to the coronavirus quarantine by shifting their business online. But many publishers are taking a different approach: Hundreds of spring books are being delayed so that they can be released this summer or fall when, presumably, stores have reopened. Titles by George Harrison, Maggie Smith, Ottessa Moshfegh, Jeff Kinney, Peter Geye, Graham Swift, Robert D. Putnam, Laila Lalami and many more have all been rescheduled for later this year. These delays suggest just how crucial brick-and-mortar bookstores remain despite the prominence of Amazon. Clearly, lots of titles still depend on the persuasive power of books stacked in Barnes & Noble and hand-sold in indie bookstores. Take all that away — as the coronavirus has done temporarily — and you'd have a publishing market that could support far fewer authors than we enjoy today. (NPD Bookscan reports that last week's sales of print books fell more than 9 percent, with adult fiction dropping more than 20 percent.)

Releasing a book during this retail apocalypse is risky, but doubling up releases in the second half of 2020 will be risky, too. This fall is shaping up to be the most crowded season I can remember. Will Fresh Air, the Today Show, Oprah and your favorite newspaper book section respond to this avalanche by covering twice as many books? (Unlikely.) Will readers buy twice as many new titles in September? (Probably not.) Will all these big releases simply smother each other? (That's what I'm worried about.)

Meg Wolitzer (Photo: © Nina Subin/Courtesy of Riverhead)

ADVERTISEMENT

THE CLIMATE 2022
FROM The Washington Post

Inside the politics of climate change
This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives and the climate-curious alike.

Sign up

Powered by LiveIntent

Meg Wolitzer isn't just a brilliantly witty novelist. She's a wickedly smart puzzle maven. Riverhead, her publisher, has just released a cryptic crossword designed by Wolitzer using titles from its upcoming summer catalogue. The clues are a mixture of wordplay and esoteric associations like this: “Rotten guavas incur victory after Trump, perhaps, in Masha Gessen’s latest.” The answer is obvious to me, of course, but I don’t want to spoil it for the rest of you. . . . Download the Wolitzer's cryptic crossword.

Chronicle Books; OpenClipart-Vectors on Pixabay.

Not the Onion: The Worst-Case Scenario museum in Philadelphia had to close because we're now facing the worst-case scenario. The irony isn't lost on Josh Piven, co-author of the best-selling "Worst-Case Scenario Survival Handbook." He points out that the latest edition presciently includes a chapter on "How to Survive a Viral Outbreak or Super-flu." But he and co-author David Borgenicht didn't anticipate what else we really need to know, which is "How to Make Your Own Hand Sanitizer" and "How to Survive When Quarantined with Teenagers." Those crucial instructions are now available on the newly designed website, which launched this week. There you'll also find a place to describe your own worst-case scenario. Piven and Borgenicht will respond to the best-worst ones every Wednesday.

F. Scott Fitzgerald in the 1920s (AP Photo/File); Zelda Sayre, 1917; Scribner, 1920; St. Martin's, 2013

Today is the 100th wedding anniversary of Zelda and F. Scott Fitzgerald, the most famous couple in American literary history. Almost from the start, their glamorous, stormy and finally tragic relationship was woven into the mythos of the Roaring Twenties. In 1918, Zelda was a 17-year-old belle of Montgomery, the daughter of a wealthy Alabama Supreme Court judge who thought Fitzgerald wasn't good enough to join the family. Newly discharged from the Army, Fitzgerald eventually moved back in with his parents (See? Nothing wrong with that) and decided to write a bestseller to prove his worthiness. It was an outlandish scheme, of course, but it worked, which is all that mattered. "This Side of Paradise" was published to rapturous attention; Zelda and Scott married a few days later. The conflation of their lives with Fitzgerald's fiction would buoy and dog them forever. Therese Anne Fowler published a biographical novel about Zelda called "Z" in 2013. "This is such a terrific true love story, if one believes in true love, and I think that they actually did," Fowler tells me. "That might be one of the reasons that they stayed together." Neither of them was faithful to the other, and Zelda was eventually institutionalized, but they never divorced. "It certainly wasn't just duty," Fowler says, "because they knew people who were divorcing and going on to other relationships — Ernest Hemingway first among them. So I have to think that as bad as they sometimes were for each other, that there was something essential to each of them about the relationship. We'd probably call them codependent now because we're cynical about such things, but they both really believed in what they had together." To Scott and Zelda — here's to another century.

Fowler, by the way, just published a new novel called "A Good Neighborhood," which Barnes & Noble has chosen for its book club (review). Fowler's tour has been canceled because of the coronavirus, but you can participate in the virtual book club discussion on Tuesday, April 7, at 7 p.m. ET on Facebook @barnesandnoble. (Join here.)

---

(Simon & Schuster Books for Young Readers; Scholastic; Dolly Parton (Courtesy of Imagination Library); Kobe Bryant (File photo by Andrew D. Bernstein)

This week was the best of times and the worst of times for children's literature.

- Author and illustrator Tomie dePaola, who died this week at the age of 85, was beloved around the world and particularly in the little town of New London, N.H. where he lived. The Morgan Hill Bookstore in New London, which I visit every summer, enjoyed a close relationship with dePaola for years. The coronavirus has closed the store, but the owners have been overwhelmed by phone and email orders for books that dePaola autographed. Unfortunately, unlike Strega Nona's pasta, the supply is limited. To satisfy as many customers as possible, sales are restricted to just one copy per title.
- Dav Pilkey, the creator of Dog Man and Captain Underpants, has started posting readings and lessons online for homebound kids. You'll find his new video content every Friday morning on the Scholastic and Library of Congress websites. Also this week, Scholastic announced that Pilkey will launch a new graphic novel series called "Cat Kid Comic Club" on Dec. 1, 2020. (Don't tell your kids about this unless you want them to ask you every day: "Is it December 1 yet?")
- Dolly Parton has written a brief introduction for the 90th anniversary edition of "The Little Engine that Could," newly illustrated by Dan Santat (Penguin Young Readers, April 7). "On many occasions, when my dreams seemed far away, my Mama would tell me the story of the Little Engine to comfort and encourage me," she writes. How important is this book to Parton? She's given away more than 5 million copies. (Since 1995, Parton's Imagination Library has donated more than 135 million children's books.) And last night, sitting up in bed in her pajamas surrounded by white pillows, Parton started a 10-week reading series called “Goodnight with Dolly.” (More than 26,000 people — including me — watched the series launch on YouTube.) Parton will post new readings every Thursday at 7 p.m. ET. (watch).

- This week brings the bittersweet publication of a second book in the middle-grade Wizenard Series by Wesley King and the late Kobe Bryant, who died along with his 13-year-old daughter Gianna and seven others in a helicopter crash earlier this year. The new book, “Season One,” is a sequel to the authors’ 2019 bestselling “Wizenard Series: Training Camp.” King tells me, “Working with Kobe Bryant was like working with a mad combination of friends: the encouraging one who believes in you unconditionally, the dreamer who wants to change the world, and the wildly successful one who somehow retains an almost inexplicably good heart. And all this while we run around the backyard in the downpour of his creative output, trying to capture just the right amount in a bottle.”
- A good problem to have: With schools closed and kids cut off from libraries, First Book, the children’s literacy organization, made a special appeal to publishers like Penguin Random House, Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, Disney, Lee & Low and Candlewick Press. They responded by donating 7 million books. But now First Book desperately needs money to ship these books to kids around the country. (Make a tax-deductible donation.)

HarperOne; Bruce Daisley (Photo by Sam Hodges)

Remember last month when you thought working from home would be heaven? What a difference a world-wide pandemic makes. In late February, Bruce Daisley published a book about improving office life called “Eat Sleep Work Repeat.” But now that we’re all stuck at home, it feels more like eatsleepworkrepeat. The common irritations of the office have been replaced by the demands of child care, the challenges of isolation and the constant fear of losing loved ones. Daisley, the vice president of Twitter Europe, has some good advice for remote workers. “The people who are going to survive best,” he tells me from his apartment in London, “are going to have to take on doing an action that initially feels a bit uncomfortable: picking up the phone and calling a few colleagues once or twice a week. We’ve got to make sure that we retain human connections.” I didn’t know, for instance, that remote workers typically have higher stress levels than office workers. Daisley reminds us all to be gentle with ourselves. “When people feel a low level of anxiety through the day,” he says, “it does manifest in us feeling exhausted by the emotional drain of it. So let’s not drive ourselves into the ground right now. Let’s at least use this opportunity to reflect on what’s important, rather than trying to retain unsustainable levels of performance in such a singular and wretched time.” (Full interview)

(Hogarth; Graywolf; Doubleday; W. W. Norton)

For more than 80 years, the Anisfield-Wolf awards have honored books that confront racism and explore diversity.

Henry Louis Gates Jr. serves as chair of the jury, which includes Rita Dove, Joyce Carol Oates, Steven Pinker and Simon Schama. This year's winners are:

- Fiction: “The Old Drift,” by Namwali Serpell (review).
- Poetry: “Deaf Republic,” by Ilya Kaminsky (review).
- Nonfiction: “Gods of the Upper Air,” by Charles King (review).
- Lifetime Achievement: Historian Eric Foner for his writings on the Civil War and reconstruction (review).

Christian Wiman (Courtesy of Yale University); FSG

Christian Wiman, who teaches religion and literature at Yale, is the author of seven poetry collections. In 2013, several years after being told he had a rare, incurable cancer, he published a memoir called “My Bright Abyss.” Toward the end of that powerful book, he revealed, “There is every reason to think that I am at the beginning of a long remission, maybe five years, maybe ten, maybe even more.” His new collection of poetry is called “Survival Is a Style.”

All My Friends Are Finding New Beliefs

All my friends are finding new beliefs.

This one converts to Catholicism and this one to trees.

In a highly literary and hitherto religiously indifferent Jew
God whomps on like a genetic generator.
Paleo, Keto, Zone, South Beach, Bourbon.
Exercise regimens so extreme she merges with machine.
One man marries a woman twenty years younger and twice in one brunch uses the word verdant; another's brick-fisted belligerence gentles into dementia, and one, after a decade of finical feints and teases like a sandpiper at the edge of the sea, decides to die.
Priesthoods and beasthoods, sombers and glees, high-styled renunciations and avocations of dirt, sobrieties, satieties, pilgrimages to the very bowels of being . . .
All my friends are finding new beliefs and I am finding it harder and harder to keep track of the new gods and the new loves, and the old gods and the old loves,
and the days have daggers, and the mirrors motives,
and the planet's turning faster and faster in the blackness,
and my nights, and my doubts, and my friends,
my beautiful, credible friends.

Excerpted from "Survival Is a Style," by Christian Wiman. Published by Farrar, Straus and Giroux, February 4, 2020. Copyright © 2020 by Christian Wiman. All rights reserved.

---

The Charleses have reached Day 18 in quarantine without irritating each other to death. Stay tuned. Wherever you are, I hope you're healthy and finding good books to read. If you have any questions or comments about our book coverage, contact me at ron.charles@washpost.com. And if you know someone who would enjoy this newsletter, please forward it to them. To subscribe, click here.

---

The 2020 books worth reading now

By Stephanie Merry • Read more »

---

I just published a novel with a pandemic plot. It's both eerie and a chance to reflect.

Perspective • By Chris Bohjalian • Read more »

---

Never mind the Brits, here are five American novels perfect for 'Masterpiece' treatment

Perspective • By Dennis Drabelle • Read more »

---

Elizabeth Wetmore's 'Valentine' is a thrilling debut that deserves your attention

Review • By Ron Charles • Read more »

---

'Lives of Houses' is a lovely book to savor while you're stuck at home

Review • By Michael Dirda • Read more »

---

Ten books to read in April

By Bethanne Patrick • Read more »

---

In ‘House of Glass,’ Hadley Freeman unearths the World War II-era secrets of her family’s past

Review • By Karen Heller • Read more »

---

‘Greenwood’ is an absorbing saga of families and trees — and how they survive

Review • By Mark Athitakis • Read more »

We think you’ll like this newsletter

Check out By The Way for tips and guides that will help you travel better and make you feel like a local wherever you go. Delivered every Thursday. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Book Club | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Book Club or because it is included in your subscription.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Losing a job can also mean losing health coverage, adding to anxiety amid coronavirus pandemic
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 9:32:50 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Losing a job can also mean losing health coverage, adding to anxiety amid coronavirus pandemic

Ramona Valdez is one of the more than 10 million Americans who filed for unemployment benefits last month. The 64-year-old was laid off on March 10 after 22 years as a housekeeper at the Sheraton in Stamford, Conn., when occupancy rates plummeted at hotels because of the coronavirus contagion. Her employer-sponsored health insurance coverage ended effective April 1. This is especially problematic because she broke her right wrist after falling at home, and she has a doctor's appointment scheduled for April 15 to get the cast removed.

"I have to get it removed, but I don't have the money," she said in Spanish. "On top of that, they might tell me to do physical therapy. I don't know how I'd pay for that. I don't know what I'm going to do."

Losing a job doesn't just mean losing a paycheck. For millions, it will also mean losing employer-covered health care. Valdez immigrated to the United States in 1984 from Santo Domingo, the capital of the Dominican Republic, and does not speak English. Her daughter and union steward have been trying to help figure out a way for her to get insured again, but they've found the process byzantine and the options costly.

Making it harder is the uncertainty of not knowing when she might get rehired. When will people begin traveling again? When will life return to normal? "I can only rely on God," Valdez said. "I just pray every single day that people will stay home so this will be over quickly."

She is a member of Unite Here, a union of hotel, casino, restaurant and cafeteria workers. "We represent 300,000 people. My bet is about 280,000 have lost their jobs," said union President Donald "D." Taylor. "That might be a low number. It might be 290,000."

The Labor Department, which reported this morning that the jobless rate rose to 4.4 percent in March, said almost two-thirds of job losses occurred in the leisure and hospitality sector.

Bartender Jessie Klenke, who is out of work because of closures caused by the coronavirus, holds her cat Tito outside her home in Las Vegas on Thursday. (Ronda Churchill/AFP via Getty Images)

Taylor, calling from his home in Las Vegas, expressed disgust that last week's $2 trillion stimulus bill did not include insurance subsidies for the unemployed or mandates that companies receiving government assistance provide health coverage for workers who get laid off. He said many of his members are covered by labor agreements that allow for extending coverage through June 30, but others who depend on company plans – and millions who are not unionized – have already lost coverage.

“What I cannot understand is how, in the midst of a health-care crisis, we have millions of people losing health care and no one's talking about it,” said Taylor. “It's the epitome of an ironic situation that a $2 trillion bailout, the largest bill ever passed by Congress, contains nothing about continuing or expanding people's health care.”

The Trump administration has decided not to reopen the enrollment period under the Affordable Care Act, but losing a job qualifies as a significant life event. That starts a 60-day window during which people can register for a new insurance plan at healthcare.gov. Quality coverage in these marketplaces can still be costly, as well.

Most people who lose employer-based coverage are eligible to extend it for up to 18 months under the COBRA program, but this can be prohibitively expensive – especially if you have little savings and need to buy food and other necessities. People on COBRA are required to pick up their employer’s full share of the monthly premium. Congress subsidized these payments during the Great Recession but did not do so in last week’s legislation, known as the CARES Act.

To be eligible for Medicaid, many states require people's income to be at or below 130 percent of the federal poverty line. States typically want to see their tax returns from the previous year, and many laid-off workers will be above the threshold. President Trump said during his Wednesday evening news conference that he is looking into expanding Medicare and Medicaid eligibility to cover some of the newly uninsured, but he was quite vague about the details. And Vice President Pence signaled that this idea is not under serious consideration. Trump even joked with a Fox News reporter about how Pence had ducked the topic. “Mike was able to speak for five minutes and not even touch your question,” the president said. “That’s what you call a great professional!”

Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin emphasized on Thursday that millions of Americans will receive their $1,200 (or less) stimulus check via direct deposit in about two weeks while others will see them a few “weeks” after that.

“The $1,200 check won’t cover rent in any major metropolitan area in America. If you walk into an emergency room, that's gone,” said Taylor, who added that many of his members earned too much last year to qualify for Medicaid this year. “Listen, extending unemployment is good. But if you get sick, that's not going to cover any medical bills. ... Co-pays are not the issue if you don’t have coverage.”

Jose Guerra lost his job as a bartender in a Houston airport restaurant called Ember last Tuesday. Initially, the 61-year-old said he felt relieved because he's been terrified that he'd contract covid-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus, from one of the travelers who cycle through from all over the world. But then he panicked when he realized he would lose his health insurance.

The recovering alcoholic celebrated his birthday alone this week, sheltering in place at his apartment, and he's been joining Alcoholics Anonymous meetings via Zoom to get support. In the past year alone, he's had three surgeries: hand surgery because his fingers kept locking into place at work, nasal surgery because he was struggling to breathe and knee surgery because he tore his meniscus. He said the Cigna insurance he had until Wednesday was good and covered everything above his $1,000 deductible. Some friends have told him to apply for Medicaid, but he thinks his income is too high to qualify. He said he does not know what his options are under the ACA.

"I'm in uncharted territory," he said. "I don't know what I am going to do."

People wait in line to get help applying for unemployment benefits at a career center in Las Vegas on March 17. (John Locher/AP)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Caring when it counts the most

Blue Cross and Blue Shield companies are ensuring swift access to care by waiving prior-authorization and copays for diagnostic testing, expanding telehealth and making prescription refills easier.

---

Galiv Shishir, 31, was laid off along with 20 of his colleagues on March 12 as a bartender at Charmaine's in San Francisco. After two years of working at the trendy rooftop spot, he got a severance check for $1,500, not enough to even meet rent in the Tenderloin neighborhood where he lives. He said he had a stroke two years ago, at 29, and the doctors were not able to fully understand why. But his insurance covered tens of thousands of dollars in medical bills.

“So I am constantly worrying in the back of my mind,” he said. “I really don’t know where things will go past May for me. I know that it would not be the right decision, probably, with the way the virus is spreading and how people are interacting, but because I’m so anxious, and I’ll be out of money soon, I just want everything to open again.”

Shishir’s asthmatic wife, who works in retail and doesn’t get insurance through her job, also depended on his lapsed insurance to get the inhalers she needs. He’s collecting unemployment benefits, and he’s looking into signing up for COBRA, but he said no one has explained to him how it works. As he sat at home, he’s found himself missing his home country of Bangladesh, which he emigrated from in 2008.

“In Bangladesh, we have a lot of floods and everything and we are kind of prone to disasters all the time,” he said. “But I never felt very insecure back there, ever. To be frank, being in America right now, I really don’t feel secure. ... I sort of think that I should have been home for all this, and that it might have been better, because people are much more communal. Capitalism has left so many holes here in this country that are being exposed. It makes people like me feel really helpless.”

I also spoke with an engineer, a member of a different union, who was laid off in Las Vegas by the casino where he has worked for more than two decades. He said he has not been able to file for unemployment benefits yet because he has been stuck on hold for hours each of the three days he called. “I’ve only got enough money to pay my mortgage for a couple of months, and I don’t know what I’ll do about health care,” he said.

He spoke on the condition of anonymity because he does not want his longtime girlfriend to know that a desire to get on her employer's health insurance might be what prompts him to finally pop the question and take the plunge toward matrimony. "That's a [messed] up reason to do it," he explained. "But even if I took a menial job, there's really nothing I can do. Everyone in Vegas got laid off at the same time."

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

More on the cascading economic calamity

Mercedes Addington lost her job in Kansas City, Kan., on March 23. She was approved for unemployment, but her benefits were subsequently suspended without an explanation. (Christopher Smith for The Washington Post)

“The Economic Policy Institute predicts nearly 20 million Americans will be out of work by July, which would be the worst unemployment situation the United States has faced since the Great Depression,” Heather Long and Abha Bhattacharai report.
“Even the normally cautious Congressional Budget Office predicts the unemployment rate will exceed 10 percent. ... The massive aid packages Congress passed in March will help, many say, but Goldman Sachs still predicts a 9 percent contraction in the first quarter and a 34 percent contraction in the second quarter. ... Economists think the true number of laid off workers is probably higher than the nearly 10 million who filed jobless claims in March, since so many people have not been able to complete their application as state unemployment office websites crash and phone lines are swamped. ...

“Hotels, restaurants, malls, hair salons and theaters have been among the hardest hit. ... Also, industries often considered recession-proof, including white-collar education, health care and transportation, also are experiencing furloughs and layoffs. Aerospace giant Boeing on Thursday began offering buyouts to its nearly 100,000 U.S. workers.”

“Uber drivers and other gig economy workers were promised unemployment benefits. It may be a long wait,” Tony Romm reports. “In California, Illinois, Washington and a slew of other states, local unemployment officials are signaling they aren’t yet ready to start processing aid for laborers in what is known as the gig economy. Already inundated with record numbers of jobless claims and lacking federal guidance, many states say they need more time to set up a new system that can process additional benefits — and some say they may not be able to accept applications until later in April. Until now, many gig workers were ineligible for traditional unemployment benefits, even if driving passengers or delivering goods was their primary source of income. That’s because they are often categorized as independent contractors, not full-time employees, for companies such as Airbnb, Uber, Lyft and Postmates.”

“The day before the scheduled launch of the federal government’s massive new small-business lending program, banks being tapped to dole out the money questioned whether it

was ready to launch,” Aaron Gregg and Renae Merle report. “The $349 billion Paycheck Protection Program is a key element of the $2 trillion economic rescue package. ... Administration officials have said money from the emergency loan fund will start flowing to small businesses affected by the coronavirus outbreak Friday, delivering a sharply streamlined, same-day approval process unheard of in the history of federally backed small-business lending. But JPMorgan Chase, the country’s largest lender, said Thursday it did not expect to begin accepting applications for the program Friday, as scheduled. ...

“Some banking officials have warned that the abbreviated review process – which allows borrowers to attest to their own eligibility without the government’s approval – will make the program a magnet for fraud. Although the SBA will be able to audit lenders and borrowers later, it will fall primarily to private bankers to make decisions about who should receive taxpayer-backed loans.”

“The forced closure of businesses nationwide ... would seem to be the perfect scenario for filing a ‘business interruption’ insurance claim. But most companies will probably find it difficult to get an insurance payout because of policy changes made after the 2002-2003 SARS outbreak,” Todd Frankel reports. “SARS, which infected 8,000 people mostly in Asia and is now seen as foreshadowing the current pandemic, led to millions of dollars in business-interruption insurance claims. ... As a result, many insurers added exclusions to standard commercial policies for losses caused by viruses or bacteria. Now, the added policy language will potentially allow insurance companies to avoid hundreds of billions of dollars in business-interruption claims.”

“As renters and homeowners grapple with mass layoffs and business closures, housing advocates are growing increasingly concerned the country will soon face a housing crisis to rival the one that nearly took down the economy a decade ago,” Merle reports. “Federal officials have imposed a nationwide halt to foreclosures and evictions for more than 30 million Americans with home mortgages backed by the Federal Housing Administration or two government-controlled companies, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. But the federal moratoriums do not cover more than 40 million renters or 5 million homeowners with mortgage loans not backed by the government. And while the halt to foreclosures and evictions will keep many people in their homes temporarily, a bigger financial shock is brewing as people fall behind on their payments, industry analysts say. Mortgage servicers, which collect homeowners’ monthly loan payments, say they have already begun to see an uptick in borrowers seeking help and could quickly become swamped.”

It's no wonder alcohol consumption has surged.

More on the federal response

U.S. coronavirus deaths topped 1,000 in a single day.

“The United States cemented its position as the new front line of the outbreak Thursday as it tallied a total of more than 240,000 infections and 5,800 virus-related deaths. The number of people infected worldwide passed 1 million, and the number who have died of the disease rose above 52,000,” Matt Zapotosky, Isaac Stanley-Becker and John Wagner report.

“The hard-hit areas inside of the United States continued to see virus-related casualties rise precipitously Thursday. New York added more than 430 to its death toll, bringing the total there to more than 2,300.

Neighboring New Jersey added more than 180, bringing its total to 530.

Michigan, which is drawing increasing concern, added 80 deaths on Thursday, bringing its total to more than 410.” Louisiana saw a 42 percent increase in known cases on Thursday, a spike Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) attributed to backlogs in testing. The state has 9,150 confirmed cases and 310 deaths.

The administration shoots the messenger.

“Navy Capt. Brett Crozier, the commanding officer of the USS Theodore Roosevelt, was relieved of command at the direction of acting Navy secretary Thomas Modly. The Navy had become increasingly convinced that Crozier was involved in leaking the letter to the news media to force the service to address his concerns over the outbreak on his ship,” Dan Lamothe, Missy Ryan and Paul Sonne report. “Modly said the letter, first reported by the San Francisco Chronicle on Tuesday, undermined more senior Navy leaders and could have emboldened adversaries of the United States in the Pacific region. ... Crozier asked that 90 percent of the crew, comprising more than 4,800 sailors, be removed to allow for testing, quarantining and disinfecting of the ship. ... Some 113 members of the crew had tested positive as of Thursday, Modly said, predicting that ‘hundreds’ ultimately could.”

The Navy's hospital ship in New York has only 20 patients.

On Thursday, the U.S.N.S. Comfort “sat mostly empty, infuriating executives at local hospitals. The ship’s 1,000 beds are largely unused, its 1,200-member crew mostly idle. Only 20 patients had been transferred to the ship, officials said, even as New York hospitals struggled to find space for the thousands infected with the coronavirus,” the Times reports.

“Another Navy hospital ship, the U.S.N.S. Mercy, docked in Los Angeles, has had a total of 15 patients. ‘If I’m blunt about it, it’s a joke,’ said Michael Dowling, the head of Northwell Health, New York’s largest hospital system. ... On top of its strict rules preventing people infected with the virus from coming on board, the Navy is also refusing to treat a host of other conditions. Guidelines disseminated to hospitals included a list of 49 medical conditions that would exclude a patient from admittance to the ship. Ambulances cannot take patients directly to the Comfort; they must first deliver patients to a city hospital for a lengthy evaluation — including a test for the virus — and then pick them up again for transport to the ship.”

- New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said if his state continues to use ventilators at the current rate, its stockpiles would be depleted in just six days.
- New data shows New York, in desperation, is paying enormous

markups for supplies, including almost $250,000 for a single X-ray machine. Laws against price gouging generally don't apply to government purchases. (ProPublica)

- New York's aging gay population survived the HIV crisis. Now they're confronting a new plague that has brought flashbacks of what they once endured: Fury at the government over its haphazard initial response, suspicion about abatement or promises of a vaccine, and anxiety about how much worse this could get for the marginalized. (Richard Morgan and Jada Yuan)
- New Yorkers have become the face of the fearsome infection in America. The city's residents have become virtual pariahs whose potential arrival has spurred anxious demands for roadblocks up and down the East Coast. (Paul Schwartzman)

The White House will soon urge Americans to wear face coverings in public.

Trump said "that 'a recommendation is coming out,' but 'I don't think it will be mandatory. If people want to wear them, they can,'" Lena Sun and Dawsey report. "Later, however, a White House official ... said that the guidance being considered is 'narrowly targeted to areas with high community transmission' and that the matter remains under discussion."

Trump invoked the Defense Production Act for 3M.

The president announced he's using the Korean War-era law to compel 3M to provide more N95 masks for medical workers, a sharp turnabout in the administration's posture toward the company. "The confluence of a slow initial response by the Trump administration, its wariness of compelling the industry to produce gear and a long-running debate about granting manufacturers legal protection in a health emergency contributed to a critical shortage of masks to front-line workers," Jeanne Whalen, Rosalind Helderman and Tom Hamburger report. "The need to dramatically ramp up U.S. production and distribution of masks should have been apparent early on in the crisis, former disaster preparedness officials said. For years, public health advocates had warned that the U.S. national stockpile of medical supplies was woefully inadequate. The dearth of masks for medical workers ... has become symbolic of the nation's wider failure to properly prepare for the pandemic."

Virginia, Maryland and the District received a fraction of what was requested from FEMA.

The District got zero hospital ventilators and Maryland got none of the nasal swabs used for testing. D.C. also got none of the safety goggles and hand sanitizer it asked for and received less than 1 percent of a requested 663,760 gloves and 1,132,478 respirator masks. "Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) said the equipment delivered 'isn't close to enough," Antonio Olivo, Jenna Portnoy and Fenit Nirappil report. "The White House referred questions to FEMA, which said the stockpile was never intended to fulfill all state and local needs." The information became public as the region reported hundreds of new cases, totaling 4,698, with Maryland seeing its biggest per-day increase and Virginia and D.C. seeing big jumps. "The number of regional fatalities attributed to covid-19 reached 90, underscoring officials' concerns that the national capital region will become a new epicenter of infection in coming weeks."

Experts and Trump's own advisers doubt the White House's official death estimates.

"Leading disease forecasters, whose research the White House used to conclude 100,000 to 240,000 people will die nationwide from the coronavirus, were mystified when they saw the administration's projection this week. The experts said they don't challenge the numbers' validity but that they don't know how the White House arrived at them," William Wan, Josh Dawsey, Ashley Parker and Joel Achenbach report. "White House officials have refused to explain how they generated the figure — a death toll bigger than the United States suffered in the Vietnam War or the 9/11 terrorist attacks. They have not provided the underlying data so others can assess its reliability or provided long-term strategies to lower that death count. ...

“Anthony S. Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, told others there are too many variables at play in the pandemic to make the models reliable ...

Robert Redfield, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and the vice president’s office have similarly voiced doubts about the projections’ accuracy ... Another key question is what time period the White House’s 100,000-to-240,000 projection covers. Imperial College’s worst-case scenario calculated the toll exacted by the virus over a couple of years. But if the White House’s projection covers only the next few months, ... the true death toll will almost certainly be larger because the United States will probably see additional waves of covid-19 until a vaccine is deployed.”

Debbie Birx, the coordinator of the White House task force, said the government is still not receiving the results of 50 percent of coronavirus tests being administered. “I have 660,000 tests reported in. We’ve done 1.3 million,” she said. When asked about the possibility 1 in 3 tests produced false negatives, Birx said, "I haven't seen that kind of anomaly." (CNN)

---

Quote of the day

Trump tested negative a second time for the coronavirus, using the new test that takes less than 15 minutes to reveal results. “I think I took it out of curiosity to see how quickly it worked and fast it worked,” the president said. “I’ve done them both. And the second one is much more pleasant, I can tell you that.” (Politico)

Jared Kushner is squarely in the middle of the administration's chaotic response.

The president's son-in-law and senior adviser "has made himself the point of contact for many agency officials who know that he can force action and issue decisions without going to the president. But while Mr. Kushner and his allies say that he has brought more order to the process, the government's response remains fragmented and behind the curve," the New York Times reports. "Some officials said Mr. Kushner had mainly added another layer of confusion to that response, while taking credit for changes already in progress and failing to deliver on promised improvements. He promoted a nationwide screening website and a widespread network of drive-through testing sites. Neither materialized. ...

"Normally out of public view, Mr. Kushner made a rare appearance on camera on Thursday, joining his father-in-law's daily briefing on the virus to describe his own efforts ... [and] adding a complaint that states had been imprecise in their estimates of needed supplies. ... Mr. Kushner has embedded dozens of political appointees and recruits from the private sector in critical spots like FEMA. His 'impact team,' as he calls it, has been nicknamed the Slim Suit Crowd for its sartorial preferences by khaki-wearing FEMA veterans. ... (A) senior official described the Kushner team as a 'frat party' that descended from a U.F.O. and invaded the federal government.”

The National Security Council is preparing for contingencies.

Deputy national security adviser Matt Pottinger, who covered SARS in China in the early 2000s as a reporter for the Wall Street Journal, moved out of his old office in the West Wing two-and-a-half weeks ago into an isolated part of the Eisenhower Executive Office Building, Politico reports. “Pottinger also took half of the NSC’s front-office support staff with him. Although Pottinger is on frequent phone calls with [his boss Robert] O’Brien, he doesn’t interact with him much in person anymore in case one of them is infected. And Pottinger, as the deputy, is ready to step in temporarily should O’Brien get the virus.”

A nursing home faces a $611,000 fine over lapses.

Life Care Center of Kirkland, Wash., the nursing home tied to at least 37 covid-19 deaths, could also lose Medicare and Medicaid funding if it does not correct a slew of deficiencies by September that led to the country’s first major outbreak. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services wrote that the nursing home failed to report an outbreak of respiratory illness to local authorities for two weeks as required by law, gave inadequate care to its residents during the outbreak and failed to provide 24-hour emergency doctor services, Maria Sacchetti and Jon Swaine report.

Nancy Pelosi created a committee to conduct oversight of Trump’s virus response.

“Where there’s money, there’s also frequently mischief,” the House speaker said as she announced the creation of the special bipartisan panel she said would be focused on rooting out waste, fraud and abuse. “Without specifically mentioning Pelosi or her new committee, Trump bristled Thursday at the prospect of additional congressional investigations,” Erica

Werner and Paul Kane report. "Here we go again. ... It's a witch hunt after a witch hunt,' Trump said ... The House Select Committee on the Coronavirus, as Pelosi called it, will be chaired by Rep. James E. Clyburn (D-S.C.), who is the No. 3 Democratic leader as majority whip."

---

American carnage

The virus is devastating Americans of every age.

Jason Hargrove, a bus driver in Detroit, posted a video on March 21 complaining of picking up a passenger who was coughing openly, exposing him to the virus. Now he's dead at 50. While there's no way of knowing for sure whether Hargrove got the illness from the rider he mentioned, his foreboding words have rocked the city. (Timothy Bella)

- Caroline Saunby, the mother of 6-year-old twins, died at 48 even though she had no underlying health problems. She was described by family members as a "germophobe and obsessive hand-washer." (New York Post)
- Urszula Osborne, 41 and nearly eight months pregnant with her second child, is isolating in her Boston home with her 3-year-old son

after testing positive. Her husband Ray, 40, is intubated on a ventilator and in a coma after contracting the virus. She's a Polish immigrant with no family here. (Boston Globe)

- Jessica Beatriz Cortez, 32, died a day after being diagnosed in Los Angeles. She emigrated from El Salvador three years ago. (L.A. Times)
- Conrad Buchanan, a healthy 39-year-old DJ, died in Florida after being denied a test because he was young and lacked preexisting health issues, his wife said. (CNN)
- Andrew Jack, an actor known for his role as Caluan Ematt in "Star Wars," died at 76. (Hollywood Reporter)
- Bert Argo, a mortgage banker who attended a birthday party at Trump's seaside golf club in Los Angeles on March 8, died at 75. His wife fell ill as well, their daughter said, but has since recovered. (David Fahrenthold)
- Ken Shimura, a beloved comedian in Japan, died at 70. (NYT)
- Noel Sinkiat, a nurse who worked at Howard University Hospital in D.C. for 41 years, died of the virus at 61. His wife, Lourdes Gerardo, tested positive after his death, which meant she couldn't pick up his body or mourn his death with anyone else. (Rachel Weiner and Justin Wm. Moyer)
- Kenneth Moore, who worked for D.C. Youth Rehabilitation Services for 16 years, died at 52. (Tom Jackman)

Good news: A 104-year-old in Oregon beat the virus.

"When William 'Bill' Lapschies celebrated his 104th birthday with his family over chocolate cake and his favorite pizza on Wednesday, he wasn't just marking another annual milestone in his long, full life. He was also celebrating a full recovery from the [virus] as one of the oldest-known survivors," Katie Shepherd reports. "Lapschies's illness played out like a roller-coaster ride. ... By Wednesday, his 104th birthday, Lapschies was feeling healthy again, able to remove his mask and step outside for the first time in weeks. 'He is fully recovered. He is very perky,' daughter Carolee Brown told the Oregonian. 'And he is very excited.'"

Widespread resistance to stay-at-home orders has exposed cultural rifts.

“Kay Ivey, the Republican governor of Alabama, put down a marker last week in affirming that it was ‘not the time to order people to shelter in place.’ ... In Missouri, Republican Gov. Mike Parson said he was not inclined to ‘make a blanket policy,’ adding, ‘It’s going to come down to individual responsibilities,’” Isaac Stanley-Becker and Chelsea Janes report. “And in Florida, where Gov. Ron DeSantis issued a statewide stay-at-home order this week under growing pressure as his state’s death toll mounted, a Tampa-area megachurch pastor who was arrested for holding services in violation of a local order announced Thursday he was considering reopening the church in time for Easter.” Brian Kemp, Georgia’s Republican governor who resisted a statewide order until Wednesday, said he did not learn until Tuesday that the virus was “transmitting before people see signs.” This has been common public knowledge for weeks. The CDC, which is based in Atlanta, and other experts have been loudly warning about the disease’s spread in asymptomatic people.

Fauci said last night on CNN that he “doesn’t understand” why every state hasn’t issued a stay-at-home order and urged governors to “reconsider.”

Many in Florida wonder if the latest restrictions came in time.

“Calle Ocho, the vibrant Miami street once bustling with Cuban restaurants and Latin music, is silent amid a nightly curfew. And in The Villages, a sprawling senior-living community near Ocala, town square concerts have ceased and the pools have closed. Slowly and reluctantly over the past month, as coronavirus infections grew from almost none to nearly 8,000 and more than 125 residents have died, Florida has sobered up,” Cleve Wootson, Lori Rozsa and Brady Dennis report. “Florida’s bout with the virus is likely to peak in early May, when an estimated 175 people will die of covid-19 every day, according to the University of Washington Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation. ... In total, it predicts 6,897 Sunshine State residents could eventually die of the coronavirus.”

The Coral Princess cruise ship bound for Fort Lauderdale confirmed 12 cases aboard. But only 13 people have been tested on a vessel that has 1,020 guests and 878 crew. It's coming into port on the heels of the Zaandam and Rotterdam ships, which arrived in Port Everglades yesterday and started disembarking passengers after a clash between federal and local authorities. Between those two ships, 250 guests and crew have reported flu-like symptoms since March 22. Four people died on the Zaandam, including two who tested positive. Most passengers are expected to leave South Florida by tonight. (Hannah Sampson)

Democrats delayed their national convention until August 17.

The decision puts the gathering in Milwaukee one week before the Republican convention, which both Trump and the RNC said will go forward in Charlotte, per Michael Scherer and Annie Linskey. But a federal judge declined to postpone next Tuesday's Wisconsin's primary, Amy Gardner reports. In other political news: The president's reelection campaign called former Attorney General Jeff Sessions “delusional” for linking himself to Trump and asked in cease-and-desist letter that he stop attaching himself in an attempt to win back his old Senate seat in Alabama's runoff, per the Times.

Zoom users are at risk.

Security researchers who've analyzed the programming code said the videoconferencing software many of us are using to communicate with coworkers relies on techniques that could expose some people to breaches. The company apologized for falling short on privacy expectations. (Drew Harwell)

The foreign fallout

Coronavirus patients are in a temporary hospital inside a conference center in Madrid. (Sergio Perez/Reuters)

Italy and Spain are seeing their first positive indicators.

“The Italian and Spanish ambassadors to the United States reported signs of improvement in the coronavirus situation in their countries Thursday, where numbers of confirmed infections, hospitalizations and deaths remain high but are beginning to stabilize,” Karen DeYoung reports.

“These are just the first positive signs, and they have to be taken cautiously,’ Italian Ambassador Armando Varricchio said. ‘But they show that measures taken both nationally and at the local level have started to pay off.’ ... Both Varricchio and Spanish Ambassador Santiago Cabanas ... stressed the need for international solidarity and cooperation. But they cited the risk of growing authoritarianism ... The virus, Cabanas said, is ‘putting pressure not just on the health of our citizens but also on the health of our democracies.’”

European leaders fear the epidemic could lead to the break up of their union.

Countries have begun to coordinate their efforts to procure supplies, and they have sent more aid to hard-hit Italy than China has. But the past week has seen a reemergence of a north-south rift over how to handle the economic response. The union is also being pulled east and west, as Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban has used emergency powers to effectively suspend democracy, riding roughshod over Europe's basic principles of the rule of law. Collectively, these tensions could overwhelm the alliance, Loveday Morris and Michael Birnbaum report from the continent.

- Portions of Paris's sprawling Rungis food market – the largest wholesale meat and vegetable market in the world – were turned into a temporary morgue to accommodate the surplus of corpses. France has reported 5,400 fatalities from the virus. (James McAuley)
- The U.K. government announced an effort to produce 30,000 ventilators. Just 30 will be delivered to British hospitals next week, officials warned, with the other 29,970 coming in the following weeks, William Booth and Christine Spolar report.
- Britain is expected to reach peak infection this month. The Financial Times estimates 1 in 15 Londoners may be infected. One of the dead is Areema Nasreen, a mother of three and a 36-year-old nurse who worked for the National Health System. (Jennifer Hassan)
- A refugee camp in Greece was quarantined after 20 displaced people there tested positive. The European Union called this a stark “warning signal” of the calamity that could ensue on the Greek islands, where facilities for over 40,000 asylum seekers are poorly equipped. (Miriam Berger)

Chinese leaders are preparing for their second wave.

Saturday is Tomb-Sweeping Day in China, in which families remove weeds and brush away dirt from the graves of their ancestors. But few will be tending to graves this year. In fact, thousands of families, especially those in Wuhan, have still been unable to bury their dead. (Anna Fifield)

- A top Chinese Communist Party official in Wuhan, Wang Zhonglin, warned the outbreak could soon return and ravage the city again. He is urging higher-level officials to provide more guidance, including telling residents to only leave home when it's necessary. (Adam Taylor)
- The CIA is hunting for China's authentic virus totals. Obtaining a more accurate count is critical to better understand how the virus will impact us. So far, however, intelligence agencies have concluded that the Chinese government itself doesn't know the extent of the spread. (NYT)
- Beijing told foreign diplomats not to return to China. The foreign ministry said officials are aware of cases of the virus among the diplomatic corps and announced it would stop issuing new identification cards to foreign emissaries. (Taylor)

India is confronting its first "super-spreader."

More than 400 members of a Muslim missionary group are infected. This represents about one-fifth of India's total confirmed cases, sparking a frantic effort to track down anyone who attended their meetings. (Joanna Slater, Niha Masih and Shams Irfan)

- Schools in Singapore and other nonessential businesses will close as cases jump tenfold in a month. (Shibani Mahtani)
- Canada became the latest country to pull its military trainers out of Iraq because of the outbreak. (CBC)
- The virus's latest casualty in Mexico is Corona beer. Modelo, the Mexican brewing company behind the top-selling pale lager, said it will no longer be produced because it is considered a "nonessential" product. (Teo Armus)

---

Social media speed read

The director of Global Health in Emergency Medicine at Columbia University's medical school reflected on how drastically things have changed in the past week:

Michelle Obama reminded us to avoid buying products with the label WIC on their price tag so people who depend on food assistance can buy them:

Michelle Obama
@MichelleObama

.@KerryWashington is right. The first few days of each month are crucial for families that depend on WIC products. Let's look out for each other by taking the extra few seconds to look at those labels. Every act of kindness counts.  twitter.com/kerrywashington...

kerry washington  @kerrywashington

When stocking up for #SocialDistancing...if you see something labeled "WIC" please chose another brand. People who rely on WIC products to feed their kids cannot. We're all in this together 🙏

31.5K 12:48 AM - Apr 3, 2020

8,194 people are talking about this.

Videos of the day

Seth Meyers looked at some of the ways Jared Kushner has already failed:

Stephen Colbert thinks he's a bad roommate to the rest of his quarantined family:

And Trevor Noah talked to Bill Gates about the epidemic:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The 5-Minute Fix for a weekday afternoon cheat sheet on the biggest story in politics — that can be read in 5 minutes or less. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: Losing a job can also mean losing health coverage, adding to anxiety amid coronavirus pandemic
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 9:33:51 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
✉ Email

Losing a job can also mean losing health coverage, adding to anxiety amid coronavirus pandemic

Ramona Valdez is one of the more than 10 million Americans who filed for unemployment benefits last month. The 64-year-old was laid off on March 10 after 22 years as a housekeeper at the Sheraton in Stamford, Conn., when occupancy rates plummeted at hotels because of the coronavirus contagion. Her employer-sponsored health insurance coverage ended effective April 1. This is especially problematic because she broke her right wrist after falling at home, and she has a doctor's appointment scheduled for April 15 to get the cast removed.

"I have to get it removed, but I don't have the money," she said in Spanish. "On top of that, they might tell me to do physical therapy. I don't know how I'd pay for that. I don't know what I'm going to do."

Losing a job doesn't just mean losing a paycheck. For millions, it will also mean losing employer-covered health care. Valdez immigrated to the United States in 1984 from Santo Domingo, the capital of the Dominican Republic, and does not speak English. Her daughter and union steward have been trying to help figure out a way for her to get insured again, but they've found the process byzantine and the options costly.

Making it harder is the uncertainty of not knowing when she might get rehired. When will people begin traveling again? When will life return to normal? "I can only rely on God," Valdez said. "I just pray every single day that people will stay home so this will be over quickly."

She is a member of Unite Here, a union of hotel, casino, restaurant and cafeteria workers. "We represent 300,000 people. My bet is about 280,000 have lost their jobs," said union President Donald "D." Taylor. "That might be a low number. It might be 290,000."

The Labor Department, which reported this morning that the jobless rate rose to 4.4 percent in March, said almost two-thirds of job losses occurred in the leisure and hospitality sector.

Bartender Jessie Klenke, who is out of work because of closures caused by the coronavirus, holds her cat Tito outside her home in Las Vegas on Thursday. (Ronda Churchill/AFP via Getty Images)

Taylor, calling from his home in Las Vegas, expressed disgust that last week's $2 trillion stimulus bill did not include insurance subsidies for the unemployed or mandates that companies receiving government assistance provide health coverage for workers who get laid off. He said many of his members are covered by labor agreements that allow for extending coverage through June 30, but others who depend on company plans – and millions who are not unionized – have already lost coverage.

“What I cannot understand is how, in the midst of a health-care crisis, we have millions of people losing health care and no one's talking about it,” said Taylor. “It's the epitome of an ironic situation that a $2 trillion bailout, the largest bill ever passed by Congress, contains nothing about continuing or expanding people's health care.”

The Trump administration has decided not to reopen the enrollment period under the Affordable Care Act, but losing a job qualifies as a significant life event. That starts a 60-day window during which people can register for a new insurance plan at healthcare.gov. Quality coverage in these marketplaces can still be costly, as well.

Most people who lose employer-based coverage are eligible to extend it for up to 18 months under the COBRA program, but this can be prohibitively expensive – especially if you have little savings and need to buy food and other necessities. People on COBRA are required to pick up their employer’s full share of the monthly premium. Congress subsidized these payments during the Great Recession but did not do so in last week’s legislation, known as the CARES Act.

To be eligible for Medicaid, many states require people's income to be at or below 130 percent of the federal poverty line. States typically want to see their tax returns from the previous year, and many laid-off workers will be above the threshold. President Trump said during his Wednesday evening news conference that he is looking into expanding Medicare and Medicaid eligibility to cover some of the newly uninsured, but he was quite vague about the details. And Vice President Pence signaled that this idea is not under serious consideration. Trump even joked with a Fox News reporter about how Pence had ducked the topic. “Mike was able to speak for five minutes and not even touch your question,” the president said. “That’s what you call a great professional!”

Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin emphasized on Thursday that millions of Americans will receive their $1,200 (or less) stimulus check via direct deposit in about two weeks while others will see them a few “weeks” after that.

“The $1,200 check won’t cover rent in any major metropolitan area in America. If you walk into an emergency room, that's gone,” said Taylor, who added that many of his members earned too much last year to qualify for Medicaid this year. “Listen, extending unemployment is good. But if you get sick, that's not going to cover any medical bills. ... Co-pays are not the issue if you don’t have coverage.”

Jose Guerra lost his job as a bartender in a Houston airport restaurant called Ember last Tuesday. Initially, the 61-year-old said he felt relieved because he's been terrified that he'd contract covid-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus, from one of the travelers who cycle through from all over the world. But then he panicked when he realized he would lose his health insurance.

The recovering alcoholic celebrated his birthday alone this week, sheltering in place at his apartment, and he's been joining Alcoholics Anonymous meetings via Zoom to get support. In the past year alone, he's had three surgeries: hand surgery because his fingers kept locking into place at work, nasal surgery because he was struggling to breathe and knee surgery because he tore his meniscus. He said the Cigna insurance he had until Wednesday was good and covered everything above his $1,000 deductible. Some friends have told him to apply for Medicaid, but he thinks his income is too high to qualify. He said he does not know what his options are under the ACA.

"I'm in uncharted territory," he said. "I don't know what I am going to do."

People wait in line to get help applying for unemployment benefits at a career center in Las Vegas on March 17. (John Locher/AP)

---

Content from Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Caring when it counts the most

Blue Cross and Blue Shield companies are ensuring swift access to care by waiving prior-authorization and copays for diagnostic testing, expanding telehealth and making prescription refills easier.

---

Galiv Shishir, 31, was laid off along with 20 of his colleagues on March 12 as a bartender at Charmaine's in San Francisco. After two years of working at the trendy rooftop spot, he got a severance check for $1,500, not enough to even meet rent in the Tenderloin neighborhood where he lives. He said he had a stroke two years ago, at 29, and the doctors were not able to fully understand why. But his insurance covered tens of thousands of dollars in medical bills.

“So I am constantly worrying in the back of my mind,” he said. “I really don’t know where things will go past May for me. I know that it would not be the right decision, probably, with the way the virus is spreading and how people are interacting, but because I’m so anxious, and I’ll be out of money soon, I just want everything to open again.”

Shishir’s asthmatic wife, who works in retail and doesn’t get insurance through her job, also depended on his lapsed insurance to get the inhalers she needs. He’s collecting unemployment benefits, and he’s looking into signing up for COBRA, but he said no one has explained to him how it works. As he sat at home, he’s found himself missing his home country of Bangladesh, which he emigrated from in 2008.

“In Bangladesh, we have a lot of floods and everything and we are kind of prone to disasters all the time,” he said. “But I never felt very insecure back there, ever. To be frank, being in America right now, I really don’t feel secure. ... I sort of think that I should have been home for all this, and that it might have been better, because people are much more communal. Capitalism has left so many holes here in this country that are being exposed. It makes people like me feel really helpless.”

I also spoke with an engineer, a member of a different union, who was laid off in Las Vegas by the casino where he has worked for more than two decades. He said he has not been able to file for unemployment benefits yet because he has been stuck on hold for hours each of the three days he called. “I’ve only got enough money to pay my mortgage for a couple of months, and I don’t know what I’ll do about health care,” he said.

He spoke on the condition of anonymity because he does not want his longtime girlfriend to know that a desire to get on her employer's health insurance might be what prompts him to finally pop the question and take the plunge toward matrimony. "That's a [messed] up reason to do it," he explained. "But even if I took a menial job, there's really nothing I can do. Everyone in Vegas got laid off at the same time."

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

More on the cascading economic calamity

Mercedes Addington lost her job in Kansas City, Kan., on March 23. She was approved for unemployment, but her benefits were subsequently suspended without an explanation. (Christopher Smith for The Washington Post)

“The Economic Policy Institute predicts nearly 20 million Americans will be out of work by July, which would be the worst unemployment situation the United States has faced since the Great Depression,” Heather Long and Abha Bhattacharai report.
“Even the normally cautious Congressional Budget Office predicts the unemployment rate will exceed 10 percent. ... The massive aid packages Congress passed in March will help, many say, but Goldman Sachs still predicts a 9 percent contraction in the first quarter and a 34 percent contraction in the second quarter. ... Economists think the true number of laid off workers is probably higher than the nearly 10 million who filed jobless claims in March, since so many people have not been able to complete their application as state unemployment office websites crash and phone lines are swamped. ...

“Hotels, restaurants, malls, hair salons and theaters have been among the hardest hit. ... Also, industries often considered recession-proof, including white-collar education, health care and transportation, also are experiencing furloughs and layoffs. Aerospace giant Boeing on Thursday began offering buyouts to its nearly 100,000 U.S. workers.”

“Uber drivers and other gig economy workers were promised unemployment benefits. It may be a long wait,” Tony Romm reports. “In California, Illinois, Washington and a slew of other states, local unemployment officials are signaling they aren’t yet ready to start processing aid for laborers in what is known as the gig economy. Already inundated with record numbers of jobless claims and lacking federal guidance, many states say they need more time to set up a new system that can process additional benefits — and some say they may not be able to accept applications until later in April. Until now, many gig workers were ineligible for traditional unemployment benefits, even if driving passengers or delivering goods was their primary source of income. That’s because they are often categorized as independent contractors, not full-time employees, for companies such as Airbnb, Uber, Lyft and Postmates.”

“The day before the scheduled launch of the federal government’s massive new small-business lending program, banks being tapped to dole out the money questioned whether it

was ready to launch,” Aaron Gregg and Renae Merle report. “The $349 billion Paycheck Protection Program is a key element of the $2 trillion economic rescue package. ... Administration officials have said money from the emergency loan fund will start flowing to small businesses affected by the coronavirus outbreak Friday, delivering a sharply streamlined, same-day approval process unheard of in the history of federally backed small-business lending. But JPMorgan Chase, the country’s largest lender, said Thursday it did not expect to begin accepting applications for the program Friday, as scheduled. ...

“Some banking officials have warned that the abbreviated review process – which allows borrowers to attest to their own eligibility without the government’s approval – will make the program a magnet for fraud. Although the SBA will be able to audit lenders and borrowers later, it will fall primarily to private bankers to make decisions about who should receive taxpayer-backed loans.”

“The forced closure of businesses nationwide ... would seem to be the perfect scenario for filing a ‘business interruption’ insurance claim. But most companies will probably find it difficult to get an insurance payout because of policy changes made after the 2002-2003 SARS outbreak,” Todd Frankel reports. “SARS, which infected 8,000 people mostly in Asia and is now seen as foreshadowing the current pandemic, led to millions of dollars in business-interruption insurance claims. ... As a result, many insurers added exclusions to standard commercial policies for losses caused by viruses or bacteria. Now, the added policy language will potentially allow insurance companies to avoid hundreds of billions of dollars in business-interruption claims.”

“As renters and homeowners grapple with mass layoffs and business closures, housing advocates are growing increasingly concerned the country will soon face a housing crisis to rival the one that nearly took down the economy a decade ago,” Merle reports. “Federal officials have imposed a nationwide halt to foreclosures and evictions for more than 30 million Americans with home mortgages backed by the Federal Housing Administration or two government-controlled companies, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. But the federal moratoriums do not cover more than 40 million renters or 5 million homeowners with mortgage loans not backed by the government. And while the halt to foreclosures and evictions will keep many people in their homes temporarily, a bigger financial shock is brewing as people fall behind on their payments, industry analysts say. Mortgage servicers, which collect homeowners’ monthly loan payments, say they have already begun to see an uptick in borrowers seeking help and could quickly become swamped.”

It's no wonder alcohol consumption has surged.

More on the federal response

U.S. coronavirus deaths topped 1,000 in a single day.

“The United States cemented its position as the new front line of the outbreak Thursday as it tallied a total of more than 240,000 infections and 5,800 virus-related deaths. The number of people infected worldwide passed 1 million, and the number who have died of the disease rose above 52,000,” Matt Zapotosky, Isaac Stanley-Becker and John Wagner report.

“The hard-hit areas inside of the United States continued to see virus-related casualties rise precipitously Thursday. New York added more than 430 to its death toll, bringing the total there to more than 2,300.

Neighboring New Jersey added more than 180, bringing its total to 530.

Michigan, which is drawing increasing concern, added 80 deaths on Thursday, bringing its total to more than 410.” Louisiana saw a 42 percent increase in known cases on Thursday, a spike Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) attributed to backlogs in testing. The state has 9,150 confirmed cases and 310 deaths.

The administration shoots the messenger.

“Navy Capt. Brett Crozier, the commanding officer of the USS Theodore Roosevelt, was relieved of command at the direction of acting Navy secretary Thomas Modly. The Navy had become increasingly convinced that Crozier was involved in leaking the letter to the news media to force the service to address his concerns over the outbreak on his ship,” Dan Lamothe, Missy Ryan and Paul Sonne report. “Modly said the letter, first reported by the San Francisco Chronicle on Tuesday, undermined more senior Navy leaders and could have emboldened adversaries of the United States in the Pacific region. ... Crozier asked that 90 percent of the crew, comprising more than 4,800 sailors, be removed to allow for testing, quarantining and disinfecting of the ship. ... Some 113 members of the crew had tested positive as of Thursday, Modly said, predicting that ‘hundreds’ ultimately could.”

The Navy's hospital ship in New York has only 20 patients.

On Thursday, the U.S.N.S. Comfort “sat mostly empty, infuriating executives at local hospitals. The ship’s 1,000 beds are largely unused, its 1,200-member crew mostly idle. Only 20 patients had been transferred to the ship, officials said, even as New York hospitals struggled to find space for the thousands infected with the coronavirus,” the Times reports.

“Another Navy hospital ship, the U.S.N.S. Mercy, docked in Los Angeles, has had a total of 15 patients. ‘If I’m blunt about it, it’s a joke,’ said Michael Dowling, the head of Northwell Health, New York’s largest hospital system. ... On top of its strict rules preventing people infected with the virus from coming on board, the Navy is also refusing to treat a host of other conditions. Guidelines disseminated to hospitals included a list of 49 medical conditions that would exclude a patient from admittance to the ship. Ambulances cannot take patients directly to the Comfort; they must first deliver patients to a city hospital for a lengthy evaluation — including a test for the virus — and then pick them up again for transport to the ship.”

- New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said if his state continues to use ventilators at the current rate, its stockpiles would be depleted in just six days.
- New data shows New York, in desperation, is paying enormous

markups for supplies, including almost $250,000 for a single X-ray machine. Laws against price gouging generally don't apply to government purchases. (ProPublica)

- New York's aging gay population survived the HIV crisis. Now they're confronting a new plague that has brought flashbacks of what they once endured: Fury at the government over its haphazard initial response, suspicion about abatement or promises of a vaccine, and anxiety about how much worse this could get for the marginalized. (Richard Morgan and Jada Yuan)
- New Yorkers have become the face of the fearsome infection in America. The city's residents have become virtual pariahs whose potential arrival has spurred anxious demands for roadblocks up and down the East Coast. (Paul Schwartzman)

The White House will soon urge Americans to wear face coverings in public.

Trump said "that 'a recommendation is coming out,' but 'I don't think it will be mandatory. If people want to wear them, they can,'" Lena Sun and Dawsey report. "Later, however, a White House official ... said that the guidance being considered is 'narrowly targeted to areas with high community transmission' and that the matter remains under discussion."

Trump invoked the Defense Production Act for 3M.

The president announced he's using the Korean War-era law to compel 3M to provide more N95 masks for medical workers, a sharp turnabout in the administration's posture toward the company. "The confluence of a slow initial response by the Trump administration, its wariness of compelling the industry to produce gear and a long-running debate about granting manufacturers legal protection in a health emergency contributed to a critical shortage of masks to front-line workers," Jeanne Whalen, Rosalind Helderman and Tom Hamburger report. "The need to dramatically ramp up U.S. production and distribution of masks should have been apparent early on in the crisis, former disaster preparedness officials said. For years, public health advocates had warned that the U.S. national stockpile of medical supplies was woefully inadequate. The dearth of masks for medical workers ... has become symbolic of the nation's wider failure to properly prepare for the pandemic."

Virginia, Maryland and the District received a fraction of what was requested from FEMA.

The District got zero hospital ventilators and Maryland got none of the nasal swabs used for testing. D.C. also got none of the safety goggles and hand sanitizer it asked for and received less than 1 percent of a requested 663,760 gloves and 1,132,478 respirator masks. "Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) said the equipment delivered 'isn't close to enough," Antonio Olivo, Jenna Portnoy and Fenit Nirappil report. "The White House referred questions to FEMA, which said the stockpile was never intended to fulfill all state and local needs." The information became public as the region reported hundreds of new cases, totaling 4,698, with Maryland seeing its biggest per-day increase and Virginia and D.C. seeing big jumps. "The number of regional fatalities attributed to covid-19 reached 90, underscoring officials' concerns that the national capital region will become a new epicenter of infection in coming weeks."

Experts and Trump's own advisers doubt the White House's official death estimates.

"Leading disease forecasters, whose research the White House used to conclude 100,000 to 240,000 people will die nationwide from the coronavirus, were mystified when they saw the administration's projection this week. The experts said they don't challenge the numbers' validity but that they don't know how the White House arrived at them," William Wan, Josh Dawsey, Ashley Parker and Joel Achenbach report. "White House officials have refused to explain how they generated the figure — a death toll bigger than the United States suffered in the Vietnam War or the 9/11 terrorist attacks. They have not provided the underlying data so others can assess its reliability or provided long-term strategies to lower that death count. ...

“Anthony S. Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, told others there are too many variables at play in the pandemic to make the models reliable ...

Robert Redfield, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and the vice president’s office have similarly voiced doubts about the projections’ accuracy ... Another key question is what time period the White House’s 100,000-to-240,000 projection covers. Imperial College’s worst-case scenario calculated the toll exacted by the virus over a couple of years. But if the White House’s projection covers only the next few months, ... the true death toll will almost certainly be larger because the United States will probably see additional waves of covid-19 until a vaccine is deployed.”

Debbie Birx, the coordinator of the White House task force, said the government is still not receiving the results of 50 percent of coronavirus tests being administered. “I have 660,000 tests reported in. We’ve done 1.3 million,” she said. When asked about the possibility 1 in 3 tests produced false negatives, Birx said, "I haven't seen that kind of anomaly." (CNN)

---

Quote of the day

Trump tested negative a second time for the coronavirus, using the new test that takes less than 15 minutes to reveal results. “I think I took it out of curiosity to see how quickly it worked and fast it worked,” the president said. “I’ve done them both. And the second one is much more pleasant, I can tell you that.” (Politico)

Jared Kushner is squarely in the middle of the administration's chaotic response.

The president's son-in-law and senior adviser "has made himself the point of contact for many agency officials who know that he can force action and issue decisions without going to the president. But while Mr. Kushner and his allies say that he has brought more order to the process, the government's response remains fragmented and behind the curve," the New York Times reports. "Some officials said Mr. Kushner had mainly added another layer of confusion to that response, while taking credit for changes already in progress and failing to deliver on promised improvements. He promoted a nationwide screening website and a widespread network of drive-through testing sites. Neither materialized. ...

"Normally out of public view, Mr. Kushner made a rare appearance on camera on Thursday, joining his father-in-law's daily briefing on the virus to describe his own efforts ... [and] adding a complaint that states had been imprecise in their estimates of needed supplies. ... Mr. Kushner has embedded dozens of political appointees and recruits from the private sector in critical spots like FEMA. His 'impact team,' as he calls it, has been nicknamed the Slim Suit Crowd for its sartorial preferences by khaki-wearing FEMA veterans. ... (A) senior official described the Kushner team as a 'frat party' that descended from a U.F.O. and invaded the federal government.”

The National Security Council is preparing for contingencies.

Deputy national security adviser Matt Pottinger, who covered SARS in China in the early 2000s as a reporter for the Wall Street Journal, moved out of his old office in the West Wing two-and-a-half weeks ago into an isolated part of the Eisenhower Executive Office Building, Politico reports. “Pottinger also took half of the NSC’s front-office support staff with him. Although Pottinger is on frequent phone calls with [his boss Robert] O’Brien, he doesn’t interact with him much in person anymore in case one of them is infected. And Pottinger, as the deputy, is ready to step in temporarily should O’Brien get the virus.”

A nursing home faces a $611,000 fine over lapses.

Life Care Center of Kirkland, Wash., the nursing home tied to at least 37 covid-19 deaths, could also lose Medicare and Medicaid funding if it does not correct a slew of deficiencies by September that led to the country’s first major outbreak. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services wrote that the nursing home failed to report an outbreak of respiratory illness to local authorities for two weeks as required by law, gave inadequate care to its residents during the outbreak and failed to provide 24-hour emergency doctor services, Maria Sacchetti and Jon Swaine report.

Nancy Pelosi created a committee to conduct oversight of Trump’s virus response.

“Where there’s money, there’s also frequently mischief,” the House speaker said as she announced the creation of the special bipartisan panel she said would be focused on rooting out waste, fraud and abuse. “Without specifically mentioning Pelosi or her new committee, Trump bristled Thursday at the prospect of additional congressional investigations,” Erica

Werner and Paul Kane report. "Here we go again. ... It's a witch hunt after a witch hunt,' Trump said ... The House Select Committee on the Coronavirus, as Pelosi called it, will be chaired by Rep. James E. Clyburn (D-S.C.), who is the No. 3 Democratic leader as majority whip."

---

American carnage

The virus is devastating Americans of every age.

Jason Hargrove, a bus driver in Detroit, posted a video on March 21 complaining of picking up a passenger who was coughing openly, exposing him to the virus. Now he's dead at 50. While there's no way of knowing for sure whether Hargrove got the illness from the rider he mentioned, his foreboding words have rocked the city. (Timothy Bella)

- Caroline Saunby, the mother of 6-year-old twins, died at 48 even though she had no underlying health problems. She was described by family members as a "germophobe and obsessive hand-washer." (New York Post)
- Urszula Osborne, 41 and nearly eight months pregnant with her second child, is isolating in her Boston home with her 3-year-old son

after testing positive. Her husband Ray, 40, is intubated on a ventilator and in a coma after contracting the virus. She's a Polish immigrant with no family here. (Boston Globe)

- Jessica Beatriz Cortez, 32, died a day after being diagnosed in Los Angeles. She emigrated from El Salvador three years ago. (L.A. Times)
- Conrad Buchanan, a healthy 39-year-old DJ, died in Florida after being denied a test because he was young and lacked preexisting health issues, his wife said. (CNN)
- Andrew Jack, an actor known for his role as Caluan Ematt in "Star Wars," died at 76. (Hollywood Reporter)
- Bert Argo, a mortgage banker who attended a birthday party at Trump's seaside golf club in Los Angeles on March 8, died at 75. His wife fell ill as well, their daughter said, but has since recovered. (David Fahrenthold)
- Ken Shimura, a beloved comedian in Japan, died at 70. (NYT)
- Noel Sinkiat, a nurse who worked at Howard University Hospital in D.C. for 41 years, died of the virus at 61. His wife, Lourdes Gerardo, tested positive after his death, which meant she couldn't pick up his body or mourn his death with anyone else. (Rachel Weiner and Justin Wm. Moyer)
- Kenneth Moore, who worked for D.C. Youth Rehabilitation Services for 16 years, died at 52. (Tom Jackman)

Good news: A 104-year-old in Oregon beat the virus.

"When William 'Bill' Lapschies celebrated his 104th birthday with his family over chocolate cake and his favorite pizza on Wednesday, he wasn't just marking another annual milestone in his long, full life. He was also celebrating a full recovery from the [virus] as one of the oldest-known survivors," Katie Shepherd reports. "Lapschies's illness played out like a roller-coaster ride. ... By Wednesday, his 104th birthday, Lapschies was feeling healthy again, able to remove his mask and step outside for the first time in weeks. 'He is fully recovered. He is very perky,' daughter Carolee Brown told the Oregonian. 'And he is very excited.'"

Widespread resistance to stay-at-home orders has exposed cultural rifts.

“Kay Ivey, the Republican governor of Alabama, put down a marker last week in affirming that it was ‘not the time to order people to shelter in place.’ ... In Missouri, Republican Gov. Mike Parson said he was not inclined to ‘make a blanket policy,’ adding, ‘It’s going to come down to individual responsibilities,’” Isaac Stanley-Becker and Chelsea Janes report. “And in Florida, where Gov. Ron DeSantis issued a statewide stay-at-home order this week under growing pressure as his state’s death toll mounted, a Tampa-area megachurch pastor who was arrested for holding services in violation of a local order announced Thursday he was considering reopening the church in time for Easter.” Brian Kemp, Georgia’s Republican governor who resisted a statewide order until Wednesday, said he did not learn until Tuesday that the virus was “transmitting before people see signs.” This has been common public knowledge for weeks. The CDC, which is based in Atlanta, and other experts have been loudly warning about the disease’s spread in asymptomatic people.

Fauci said last night on CNN that he “doesn’t understand” why every state hasn’t issued a stay-at-home order and urged governors to “reconsider.”

Many in Florida wonder if the latest restrictions came in time.

“Calle Ocho, the vibrant Miami street once bustling with Cuban restaurants and Latin music, is silent amid a nightly curfew. And in The Villages, a sprawling senior-living community near Ocala, town square concerts have ceased and the pools have closed. Slowly and reluctantly over the past month, as coronavirus infections grew from almost none to nearly 8,000 and more than 125 residents have died, Florida has sobered up,” Cleve Wootson, Lori Rozsa and Brady Dennis report. “Florida’s bout with the virus is likely to peak in early May, when an estimated 175 people will die of covid-19 every day, according to the University of Washington Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation. ... In total, it predicts 6,897 Sunshine State residents could eventually die of the coronavirus.”

The Coral Princess cruise ship bound for Fort Lauderdale confirmed 12 cases aboard. But only 13 people have been tested on a vessel that has 1,020 guests and 878 crew. It's coming into port on the heels of the Zaandam and Rotterdam ships, which arrived in Port Everglades yesterday and started disembarking passengers after a clash between federal and local authorities. Between those two ships, 250 guests and crew have reported flu-like symptoms since March 22. Four people died on the Zaandam, including two who tested positive. Most passengers are expected to leave South Florida by tonight. (Hannah Sampson)

Democrats delayed their national convention until August 17.

The decision puts the gathering in Milwaukee one week before the Republican convention, which both Trump and the RNC said will go forward in Charlotte, per Michael Scherer and Annie Linskey. But a federal judge declined to postpone next Tuesday's Wisconsin's primary, Amy Gardner reports. In other political news: The president's reelection campaign called former Attorney General Jeff Sessions “delusional” for linking himself to Trump and asked in cease-and-desist letter that he stop attaching himself in an attempt to win back his old Senate seat in Alabama's runoff, per the Times.

Zoom users are at risk.

Security researchers who've analyzed the programming code said the videoconferencing software many of us are using to communicate with coworkers relies on techniques that could expose some people to breaches. The company apologized for falling short on privacy expectations. (Drew Harwell)

The foreign fallout

Coronavirus patients are in a temporary hospital inside a conference center in Madrid. (Sergio Perez/Reuters)

Italy and Spain are seeing their first positive indicators.

“The Italian and Spanish ambassadors to the United States reported signs of improvement in the coronavirus situation in their countries Thursday, where numbers of confirmed infections, hospitalizations and deaths remain high but are beginning to stabilize,” Karen DeYoung reports.

“These are just the first positive signs, and they have to be taken cautiously,’ Italian Ambassador Armando Varricchio said. ‘But they show that measures taken both nationally and at the local level have started to pay off.’ ... Both Varricchio and Spanish Ambassador Santiago Cabanas ... stressed the need for international solidarity and cooperation. But they cited the risk of growing authoritarianism ... The virus, Cabanas said, is ‘putting pressure not just on the health of our citizens but also on the health of our democracies.’”

European leaders fear the epidemic could lead to the break up of their union.

Countries have begun to coordinate their efforts to procure supplies, and they have sent more aid to hard-hit Italy than China has. But the past week has seen a reemergence of a north-south rift over how to handle the economic response. The union is also being pulled east and west, as Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban has used emergency powers to effectively suspend democracy, riding roughshod over Europe's basic principles of the rule of law. Collectively, these tensions could overwhelm the alliance, Loveday Morris and Michael Birnbaum report from the continent.

- Portions of Paris's sprawling Rungis food market – the largest wholesale meat and vegetable market in the world – were turned into a temporary morgue to accommodate the surplus of corpses. France has reported 5,400 fatalities from the virus. (James McAuley)
- The U.K. government announced an effort to produce 30,000 ventilators. Just 30 will be delivered to British hospitals next week, officials warned, with the other 29,970 coming in the following weeks, William Booth and Christine Spolar report.
- Britain is expected to reach peak infection this month. The Financial Times estimates 1 in 15 Londoners may be infected. One of the dead is Areema Nasreen, a mother of three and a 36-year-old nurse who worked for the National Health System. (Jennifer Hassan)
- A refugee camp in Greece was quarantined after 20 displaced people there tested positive. The European Union called this a stark “warning signal” of the calamity that could ensue on the Greek islands, where facilities for over 40,000 asylum seekers are poorly equipped. (Miriam Berger)

Chinese leaders are preparing for their second wave.

Saturday is Tomb-Sweeping Day in China, in which families remove weeds and brush away dirt from the graves of their ancestors. But few will be tending to graves this year. In fact, thousands of families, especially those in Wuhan, have still been unable to bury their dead. (Anna Fifield)

- A top Chinese Communist Party official in Wuhan, Wang Zhonglin, warned the outbreak could soon return and ravage the city again. He is urging higher-level officials to provide more guidance, including telling residents to only leave home when it's necessary. (Adam Taylor)
- The CIA is hunting for China's authentic virus totals. Obtaining a more accurate count is critical to better understand how the virus will impact us. So far, however, intelligence agencies have concluded that the Chinese government itself doesn't know the extent of the spread. (NYT)
- Beijing told foreign diplomats not to return to China. The foreign ministry said officials are aware of cases of the virus among the diplomatic corps and announced it would stop issuing new identification cards to foreign emissaries. (Taylor)

India is confronting its first "super-spreader."

More than 400 members of a Muslim missionary group are infected. This represents about one-fifth of India's total confirmed cases, sparking a frantic effort to track down anyone who attended their meetings. (Joanna Slater, Niha Masih and Shams Irfan)

- Schools in Singapore and other nonessential businesses will close as cases jump tenfold in a month. (Shibani Mahtani)
- Canada became the latest country to pull its military trainers out of Iraq because of the outbreak. (CBC)
- The virus's latest casualty in Mexico is Corona beer. Modelo, the Mexican brewing company behind the top-selling pale lager, said it will no longer be produced because it is considered a "nonessential" product. (Teo Armus)

---

Social media speed read

The director of Global Health in Emergency Medicine at Columbia University's medical school reflected on how drastically things have changed in the past week:

Michelle Obama reminded us to avoid buying products with the label WIC on their price tag so people who depend on food assistance can buy them:

Michelle Obama
@MichelleObama

.@KerryWashington is right. The first few days of each month are crucial for families that depend on WIC products. Let's look out for each other by taking the extra few seconds to look at those labels. Every act of kindness counts.  twitter.com/kerrywashington...

kerry washington  @kerrywashington

When stocking up for #SocialDistancing...if you see something labeled "WIC" please chose another brand. People who rely on WIC products to feed their kids cannot. We're all in this together 🙏

31.5K 12:48 AM - Apr 3, 2020

8,194 people are talking about this.

Videos of the day

Seth Meyers looked at some of the ways Jared Kushner has already failed:

Stephen Colbert thinks he's a bad roommate to the rest of his quarantined family:

And Trevor Noah talked to Bill Gates about the epidemic:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The 5-Minute Fix for a weekday afternoon cheat sheet on the biggest story in politics — that can be read in 5 minutes or less. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 3 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 11:20:57 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., April 3, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. LOBBYING:

Coal powered mining's past. Can hardrock secure its future?

After two decades as the National Mining Association's dominant donor, coal has collapsed. Industry lobbied for rescue in the coronavirus stimulus package but was ignored. The question facing NMA now: Can hardrock mining — the lobbying group's new breadwinner — and coal coexist?

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

Ammon Bundy wants national effort to buck coronavirus rules

3. NATIONAL PARKS:

Interior lawyer tapped as new Grand Canyon superintendent

4. PUBLIC HEALTH:

Firefighters: Is our chemically treated gear making us sick?

CORONAVIRUS

5. CHEMICALS:

EPA threatens to sue over false anti-virus product labels

6. RECREATION:

Outdoor Retailer cancels summer trade show

7. CALIFORNIA:

Newsom forbids water shut-offs despite nonpayment

8. FORESTS:

Officials cut back on controlled burns due to COVID-19

9. NATIONAL FORESTS:

Popular Ariz. hiking spots closed for lack of distancing

POLITICS

10. ENFORCEMENT:

EPA won't reveal waivers

11. EPA:

Wheeler budes on secret science comment period

CONGRESS

---

12. BRISTOL BAY:

Alaska senators question Pebble mine permitting timeline

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

13. NATIONAL PARKS:

NPS ordered to stop using prison labor

14. SAGE GROUSE:

Group: BLM is pushing through Idaho grazing plans

15. CHESAPEAKE BAY:

Fish-oil firm keeps 'sustainable' label despite controversy

LAW

---

16. REGULATIONS:

Foes of rule-busting order lose another legal battle

17. PUBLIC LANDS:

Border wall suit partly survives Trump's bid to dismiss

ENERGY

---

18. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Cleanup takes back seat as virus spreads

AIR AND WATER

---

19. MISSISSIPPI RIVER:

Spillway must open again to safeguard New Orleans levees

STATES

---

20. NORTH DAKOTA:

Tank leaks 10,500 gallons of brine

21. ARIZONA:

51-year-old Asian elephant named Reba dies at Phoenix Zoo

22. SOUTH DAKOTA:

Record snow falls in Rapid City

INTERNATIONAL

---

23. NETHERLANDS:

Amsterdam bans recreational boats from canals

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 3 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 11:22:07 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., April 3, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. LOBBYING:

Coal powered mining's past. Can hardrock secure its future?

After two decades as the National Mining Association's dominant donor, coal has collapsed. Industry lobbied for rescue in the coronavirus stimulus package but was ignored. The question facing NMA now: Can hardrock mining — the lobbying group's new breadwinner — and coal coexist?

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

Ammon Bundy wants national effort to buck coronavirus rules

3. NATIONAL PARKS:

Interior lawyer tapped as new Grand Canyon superintendent

4. PUBLIC HEALTH:

Firefighters: Is our chemically treated gear making us sick?

CORONAVIRUS

5. CHEMICALS:

EPA threatens to sue over false anti-virus product labels

6. RECREATION:

Outdoor Retailer cancels summer trade show

7. CALIFORNIA:

Newsom forbids water shut-offs despite nonpayment

8. FORESTS:

Officials cut back on controlled burns due to COVID-19

9. NATIONAL FORESTS:

Popular Ariz. hiking spots closed for lack of distancing

POLITICS

10. ENFORCEMENT:

EPA won't reveal waivers

11. EPA:

Wheeler budes on secret science comment period

CONGRESS

---

12. BRISTOL BAY:

Alaska senators question Pebble mine permitting timeline

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

13. NATIONAL PARKS:

NPS ordered to stop using prison labor

14. SAGE GROUSE:

Group: BLM is pushing through Idaho grazing plans

15. CHESAPEAKE BAY:

Fish-oil firm keeps 'sustainable' label despite controversy

LAW

---

16. REGULATIONS:

Foes of rule-busting order lose another legal battle

17. PUBLIC LANDS:

Border wall suit partly survives Trump's bid to dismiss

ENERGY

---

18. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Cleanup takes back seat as virus spreads

AIR AND WATER

---

19. MISSISSIPPI RIVER:

Spillway must open again to safeguard New Orleans levees

STATES

---

20. NORTH DAKOTA:

Tank leaks 10,500 gallons of brine

21. ARIZONA:

51-year-old Asian elephant named Reba dies at Phoenix Zoo

22. SOUTH DAKOTA:

Record snow falls in Rapid City

INTERNATIONAL

---

23. NETHERLANDS:

Amsterdam bans recreational boats from canals

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 3 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 11:23:08 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., April 3, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. LOBBYING:

Coal powered mining's past. Can hardrock secure its future?

After two decades as the National Mining Association's dominant donor, coal has collapsed. Industry lobbied for rescue in the coronavirus stimulus package but was ignored. The question facing NMA now: Can hardrock mining — the lobbying group's new breadwinner — and coal coexist?

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

Ammon Bundy wants national effort to buck coronavirus rules

3. NATIONAL PARKS:

Interior lawyer tapped as new Grand Canyon superintendent

4. PUBLIC HEALTH:

Firefighters: Is our chemically treated gear making us sick?

CORONAVIRUS

5. CHEMICALS:

EPA threatens to sue over false anti-virus product labels

6. RECREATION:

Outdoor Retailer cancels summer trade show

7. CALIFORNIA:

Newsom forbids water shut-offs despite nonpayment

8. FORESTS:

Officials cut back on controlled burns due to COVID-19

9. NATIONAL FORESTS:

Popular Ariz. hiking spots closed for lack of distancing

POLITICS

10. ENFORCEMENT:

EPA won't reveal waivers

11. EPA:

Wheeler budes on secret science comment period

CONGRESS

---

12. BRISTOL BAY:

Alaska senators question Pebble mine permitting timeline

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

13. NATIONAL PARKS:

NPS ordered to stop using prison labor

14. SAGE GROUSE:

Group: BLM is pushing through Idaho grazing plans

15. CHESAPEAKE BAY:

Fish-oil firm keeps 'sustainable' label despite controversy

LAW

---

16. REGULATIONS:

Foes of rule-busting order lose another legal battle

17. PUBLIC LANDS:

Border wall suit partly survives Trump's bid to dismiss

ENERGY

---

18. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Cleanup takes back seat as virus spreads

AIR AND WATER

---

19. MISSISSIPPI RIVER:

Spillway must open again to safeguard New Orleans levees

STATES

---

20. NORTH DAKOTA:

Tank leaks 10,500 gallons of brine

21. ARIZONA:

51-year-old Asian elephant named Reba dies at Phoenix Zoo

22. SOUTH DAKOTA:

Record snow falls in Rapid City

INTERNATIONAL

---

23. NETHERLANDS:

Amsterdam bans recreational boats from canals

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 3 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 2:15:14 PM

---

SUPREME COURT: Pandemic stalls water, tribal lands cases indefinitely. Read this story and more in today's E&E News PM.
INTERIOR: Pendley to remain acting BLM chief with Bernhardt order.
PANDEMIC: USDA reports new coronavirus cases.
Read today's E&E News PM on the web

<https://www.eenews.net/pm?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION
E&E NEWS PM — Fri., April 3, 2020
<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/04/03/full?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> READ FULL EDITION

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/04/03/stories/1062778925?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
1. SUPREME COURT:
Pandemic stalls water, tribal lands cases indefinitely

The Supreme Court today postponed oral arguments slated for this month, indefinitely delaying a dispute between Texas and New Mexico over water allocations from the Pecos River and a tribal lands battle with the potential to affect oil and gas operations in eastern Oklahoma.

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/04/03/stories/1062779059?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
2. INTERIOR:
Pendley to remain acting BLM chief with Bernhardt order

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/04/03/stories/1062778703?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
3. PANDEMIC:
USDA reports new coronavirus cases

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/04/03/stories/1062778725?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
4. INTERIOR:
Senate Dems urge freeze on non-virus actions

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2020/04/03/calendars?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D>
5. CALENDAR:
Activity for March 30 - April 5, 2020

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.
Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.
ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – Late-Breaking News
E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

<https://www.eenews.net/?utm\_medium=email&utm\_source=eenews%3Aeenewspm&utm\_campaign=edition%2BdLBJZiMFQsICZ1OwM3ajJw%3D%3D> Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy
E&E News
122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001
Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Masks for all?
Date: Friday, April 3, 2020 2:28:23 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

The federal government might soon recommend that people wear face masks in public, at least in regions where covid-19 is prevalent, as more than 1,000 Americans were reported dead on Thursday alone. A social media campaign and some medical experts have been popularizing the idea of wearing homemade masks, and Vice President Pence said guidance would be issued within days, though White House officials are still debating the merits of the idea. Read about the debate here.

A border town in Texas has moved to the fore of the mask

movement, threatening $1,000 fines for those who don't cover their noses and mouths. It hasn't gone over very well with the residents of Laredo, though. “I'd rather bury them in debt than bury them in a coffin,” city councilman George Altgelt said this week.

Meanwhile, efforts to slow the virus's spread through mass quarantines are running up against resistance from government officials, religious leaders and businesses in some states. “Experts are now warning that a group of governors in the South and the Great Plains — largely Republican-led states — risk acting too late,” we write in a report about quarantine resistance. President Trump has so far let states decide their own policies, but one of his top coronavirus advisers, Anthony S. Fauci, told CNN on Thursday that it's time for a national stay-at-home order.

Leading disease forecasters are questioning the government's widely publicized prediction of 100,000 to 240,000 coronavirus deaths in the country. “White House officials have refused to explain how they generated the figure — a death toll bigger than the United States suffered in the Vietnam War or the 9/11 terrorist attacks,” we write. Even the director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has doubts about the model's accuracy, which you can read about here.

The $2.2 trillion stimulus package signed into law last week is running into early snags as the government tries to get the money to Americans. Some banks are balking at a program that offers $349 billion in government-backed loans to small businesses, which started Friday. And while the IRS says most Americans will be wired payments of up to $1,200 as soon as late next week, others could end up waiting months to be mailed checks. Find details about the lag here. Speedy distribution of the money is believed to be crucial, after mass layoffs, quarantines and business closures triggered what some economists fear will be a long depression.

With more than 1 million confirmed infections across the world, the pandemic is causing civic breakdowns and threatening to upset international order. A rash of haphazard border restrictions, export bans and nationalistic finger pointing is undermining the already weakened European Union. In the Ecuadoran city of Guayaquil, we report that bodies have been “abandoned in busy hospitals. Left decomposing inside homes. In some cases, even wrapped in plastic and cardboard and put out on the streets.”

U.S. Navy Capt. Brett Crozier has turned into something of a martyr for sailors on a virus-stricken aircraft carrier in Guam.

A leaked letter Crozier wrote accused his commanders of “failing to properly take care of our most trusted asset — our sailors” by refusing to evacuate the ship. The Navy subsequently relieved the captain of his command, prompting hundreds of sailors to fill the deck and chant: “Captain Crozier!”

---

Content from Slack

Bring your team together, wherever they are

Navigating remote work is about more than setting up the right workstation. It's about staying productive and in the loop.

With Slack, teams can access information and communicate quickly to get work done.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“I’m working at a dispensary. My boss has us doing curbside orders. He doesn’t want to shut down; he still has bills to pay. He says if we want to leave, then we can, but he can’t guarantee we will still have our jobs. What should I do? I have a child.” — Anonymous

The Post received this question from a reader as we investigate how employers are treating employees during the pandemic. Unfortunately, it’s far from the only example of someone being forced to choose between a paycheck and their family’s safety.

Our columnist Karla L. Miller outlined some new laws and benefits that might make the choice easier, including a federal act that adds $600 a week to unemployment checks. She quotes one expert who recommends that you file a jobless claim sooner than later — even if your boss refuses to lay you off or furlough you.

---

Has the outbreak affected your relationships?

Has quarantine caused you to break up or get back together with an ex? Did you decide to get serious and move in with someone you just started dating? How has the outbreak affected your relationship with a co-worker, friend or relative? If you live alone, how is it going?

We want to know what you're going through. If you have a story you'd like to tell, send it to The Post using this submission form. We respect your privacy and will not publish your name or response without contacting you first.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- The dark side of ventilators: Those hooked up for long periods may face difficult recoveries
- I left Singapore because I bristled at the country's restrictions. Now I'm convinced its ethos could save us.
- Thousands of Zoom video calls left exposed on open Web

School's closed, the year's lost. But yearbook editors are not missing this deadline.

"This book is the only thing [seniors] have left to look forward to," said one editor in chief.

By Hannah Natanson • Read more »

---

Even when you can't travel, you can still bring the sounds of a far-off city to you.

Read more »

---

A family photo of Bill Lapschies, who recovered from covid-19 in time to celebrate his 104th birthday in Lebanon, Ore.

‘He just got better and better’: 104-year-old veteran beats coronavirus in time to celebrate his birthday

“We all thought, ‘He’s 103, what are the odds he’s going to come out of this?’ ” his granddaughter Jamie Yutzie told The Washington Post.

By Katie Shepherd • Read more »

---

Dictators are using the coronavirus to strengthen their grip on power

Perspective • By Joshua Kurlantzick • Read more »

---

Four weeks of Italy’s coronavirus lockdown, behind four apartment doors

By Chico Harlan and Stefano Pitrelli • Read more »

---

The age of nail-clipper haircuts is upon us

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out The 5-Minute Fix for a weekday afternoon cheat sheet on the biggest story in politics — that can be read in 5 minutes or less. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Recipes! Satisfying veggie-filled pastas, picture-perfect quiche and tender Passover brisket
Date: Saturday, April 4, 2020 8:23:50 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Recipes

What to cook during the week ahead, from Post Food editors.

By Ann Maloney

 Email

Something simple and lovely. Maybe it's weeding your garden on a pretty day, or having your dog slip his snout on your lap for a little head scratch. We're welcoming respite from lives upended by this pandemic.

For me, that brief break from the latest heavy headline comes when I step into the kitchen. With so much on my mind, I'm less inclined toward complicated, multi-step recipes. Some folks like to lose themselves in those. I used to, and probably will again, but now I want minimal effort and big reward.

I found that in this Quiche With Broccoli, Gorgonzola and Walnuts. A sheet of puff pastry is laid in a pan, filled with yummy ingredients and slipped into the oven. Minutes later, a crisp, golden square with a veggie-specked filling is a picture-perfect centerpiece on my table. Simple and lovely.

I took out a few of my pent up feelings on a butternut squash and a few ripe tomatoes in the kitchen while testing recipes for Julia Clancy's box grater dishes. The produce is shredded on a typical cheese grater to create quick-cooking, vibrantly flavored sauces that cling beautifully to the satisfying pasta.

I find myself craving pasta right now, and I see, from my social media accounts, that others are as well. Maybe Joe Yonan is, too. He made a Pasta with Pecorino and Pistachios that I loved because it was delicious and because he offered so many ideas for substitutions.

That's something we need these days as we go to the grocery — list in hand — only to not find what we're looking for.

If finding eggs has been an issue for you, check out Becky Krystal's fantastic primer on egg substitutions and her roundup of sweets that require NO flour, butter or eggs. And, stay tuned: She's working on an even more fulsome guide to recipe substitutions.

One thing there is no substitute for is being with family and friends at the holidays. With Passover, Easter and Ramadan arriving this month, we're faced with figuring out how to commemorate while apart. Susan Barocas tackled that topic in her story on Passover, which also offered ideas for a vegetarian matzoh ball soup, a veggie-filled kuku and a nut-free haroset.

And Ellie Krieger shared a touching family story about passing the holiday meal torch from one generation to another, along with a melt-in-your-mouth tender brisket that freezes beautifully, too.

The holidays remind us that there is so much we don't have control over right now, but we can make wise choices when it comes to what we eat — or at least find balance between indulging and eating well.

If you've been snacking or sipping a bit too much in recent weeks, we offer two better-for-you options: Becky's mango dal and Ellie's grain bowl with fresh herbs and vegetables.

Both prove that taking care of ourselves can be delicious.

See you next week.

Quiche With Broccoli, Gorgonzola and Walnuts

If you've got puff pastry in your freezer and fresh or frozen broccoli on hand, you can turn out this quiche in no time.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

---

Passover brisket

This is the traditional brisket recipe that graces the holiday tables of much of the Eastern European Jewish diaspora.

By Ellie Krieger • Read more »

---

Vegan Matzoh Ball Soup

The only thing missing from this beloved soup is the chicken, but with all the rich flavor and golden color (thanks to turmeric and onion skins) few will miss it.

By Susan Barocas • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

An advertisement for a newsletter titled 'THE CLIMATE 2022' from 'The Washington Post'. It features a green background with a circular portrait of a woman, Maxine Joselow. Text includes 'Inside the politics of climate change' and 'This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives, and the climate-conscious alike.' There is a 'Sign up' button and a 'Powered by LiveIntent' logo at the bottom.

Bust out the box grater for these quick, no-knife-needed pasta sauces

Tender, collapsing strands of garlicky, grated butternut squash cling to short and long noodles alike.

By Julia Clancy • Read more »

This flexible pesto pasta is a keeper for whatever vegetable you have handy

The feel-free-to-substitute vibe of this recipe makes it a pantry-, refrigerator-friendly hit.

By Joe Yonan • Read more »

Grain Salad With Carrot, Herbs and Sesame Seeds

Pairs nicely with roasted chicken, kebabs or mezze platter.

By Ellie Krieger • Read more »

Mango Dal

So many of us are relying on legumes these days, so here's an excellent Indian dish to try.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

Chef Floyd Cardoz's stellar dessert is a tangible reminder of his legacy

The groundbreaking chef died at age 59 from coronavirus complications.

By Jim Webster • Read more »

ADVERTISEMENT

An advertisement for the U.S. Bank Altitude Go Visa Signature Card. It features a photo of a man and a woman smiling at a table. Text on the right says: "U.S. Bank Earn 4X points on dining, takeout, and food delivery Get more with U.S. Bank Altitude® Go Visa Signature® Card. Earn 4X points for dining, takeout, and food delivery, and much more." Below the photo is the text "Powered by LiveIntent" and a "LEARN MORE" button with a play icon.

More from Voraciously

Egg substitutions for cooking and baking when the store shelves are empty

Take a page from the vegans who are well-versed in substitutions.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

No flour, butter or eggs? We have 6 sweet recipes for that.

You won't feel deprived with these fantastic treats.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

7 layer cake recipes to help you bake your ## way through whatever life piles on

These cakes can help boost your mood and give you something fun to do.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

Go grocery shopping every two weeks? You can — and without hoarding.

Do an inventory of the pantry, refrigerator and freezer, create a healthy meal plan and then make a grocery list.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

What to know about the risks of restaurant takeout and delivery — and how to minimize them

Customers, restaurant workers and drivers must all follow some rules to make these meal options safe.

By Tim Carman • Read more »

Being stuck at home may have an upside when it comes to eating: You can take control

Once you get past the stress-baking, you can make your food environment more conducive to health. Here's how.

Perspective • By Tamar Haspel • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Bold School for smart advice on how to get better with age, plus tried-and-true tips from our readers, every Monday and Friday for 12 weeks.

Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Recipes | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Recipes or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Wasted days
Date: Saturday, April 4, 2020 1:59:48 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

This newsletter usually opens with the U.S. death toll, but today let's spend a moment on the day toll: The early days of the spread of the coronavirus in which crucial opportunities to respond were squandered by systemic federal government failures, as chronicled in several new stories.

Seventy days elapsed from the first time the White House was formally notified of the outbreak in China on Jan. 3 until President Trump began to treat the virus “as a lethal force that had outflanked America’s defenses and was poised to kill tens of thousands of citizens,” according to Washington Post reporting based on 47 interviews with administration officials, public health experts, intelligence officers and others.

Twenty-one days in February were lost as the administration relied on a coronavirus test known to be flawed and prevented private labs from deploying better ones, blinding doctors and scientists as the virus spread across the country. Read our deep dive into scientists' alarm and exasperation during that period.

Eighteen months ago — long before the outbreak — “the Trump administration received detailed plans for a new machine designed to churn out millions of protective respirator masks at high speed during a pandemic,” we report in another story. It was never built, and the U.S. government is now so desperate for masks it has asked 3M to stop sending them to Canada and other countries, prompting Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to warn the United States would be “hurting itself as much as Canada” because essential goods and services flow both ways.

Eleven days from now, the country will need 32,000 ventilators, far more than are in the government stockpile, according to an estimate by the University of Washington’s Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation. Because U.S. officials played down the virus for so long, Ford and General Motors only recently overhauled their factories to make the machines, and the bulk of their production won't come on line until May. Read more here.

These cumulative problems mean “the United States will likely go down as the country that was supposedly best prepared to fight a pandemic but ended up catastrophically overmatched by the novel coronavirus, sustaining heavier casualties than any other nation,” we write in our story on the 70 lost days.

Other numbers: The U.S. has suffered more than 7,800 deaths and more than 290,000 confirmed infections from the virus. The jobless rate jumped to 4.4 percent in March, its sharpest one-month rise since 1975. Millions of Americans have been laid off or furloughed, more than 60,000 stores have shuttered, and analysts say many of them will never open again. A week after Trump signed a $2.2 trillion stimulus bill, key Democrats are already talking about another one.

And new signs of dysfunction: After a behind-the-scenes debate between officials at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and White House officials, Trump unenthusiastically announced the agency's recommendation that Americans start wearing face coverings in public. Even as he shared the guidance, Trump said he would not follow it himself. Read more about that here.

---

Content from Slack

Bring your team together, wherever they are

Navigating remote work is about more than setting up the right workstation. It's about staying productive and in the loop.

With Slack, teams can access information and communicate quickly to get work done.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“Why isn't the role that animal agriculture and the sale of wildlife have played in the creation and spread of these infectious organisms gotten more attention in the press? It is time to move away from raising domesticated animals for, not just their meat, but any other products derived from them. Won't you take the lead in bringing this front and center?” — Jerry Cagle in Tucson

Our reporting doesn't go that far, but scientists are indeed warning that “a global wildlife trade worth billions of dollars, agricultural intensification, deforestation and urbanization are bringing people closer to animals, giving their viruses more of what they need to infect us: opportunity,” as we write in one report.

The story explains how the virus almost certainly originated inside bats and mutated to infect humans, as also happened with the SARS, MERS and Ebola outbreaks. Other human diseases have been linked to wild birds, rodents, pigs and chickens.

“Pandemics as a whole are increasing in frequency,” disease ecologist Peter Daszak told The Post. “It’s not a random act of God. It’s caused by what we do to the environment. We need to start connecting that chain and say we need to do these things in a less risky way.”

You can read the whole story on the ways experts say we need to change our interactions with animals to avoid facing many more outbreaks in the future.

---

Today’s top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- How Trump’s attempts to win the daily news cycle feed a chaotic coronavirus response
- Coping with the effects of social isolation: Advice from experts
- How long until sports can return? You might not like the answer.

Which DIY mask pattern should you use? Even experts can't pick one to recommend.

There is little research about homemade masks, and some researchers think they give wearers a false sense of security.

By Sindya Bhanoo • Read more »

---

'The holiday of a lifetime': An oral history of the infected, rejected Zaandam cruise ship

By Monica Hesse and Dan Zak • Read more »

---

What to know about the risks of restaurant takeout and delivery — and how to minimize them

By Tim Carman • Read more »

---

Pandemic anxiety is making us sleepless, forgetful and angry. Here are tips for coping.

By Jelena Kecmanovic • Read more »

Well that was depressing. Let's all look at a potato lady!

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Opinions A.M. and P.M. for the best of The Post's opinions and commentary, in your inbox every morning and afternoon. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Week in Ideas: In Singapore, surprising lessons from a two-week quarantine
Date: Sunday, April 5, 2020 5:17:37 AM

Read online

The Washington Post

The Week in Ideas

Opinions you may have missed.

By Fred Hiatt
✉ Email

Knowing this is a tough time for everyone, we try to pierce the gloom even as we offer unflinching commentary. One way is to publish some of the smart ideas that people are coming up with to cope and overcome.

Last week we added four more proposals to our “solutions” file. For example: create a Covid-19 Recovery Corps “to perform tasks that non-immune individuals cannot safely do and to get the economy moving.”

Of course, few people are smarter when it comes to dealing with infectious disease than Bill Gates, co-founder of Microsoft and co-chair of the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation. He acknowledges that we’ve made mistakes and lost time — but he says it’s not too late to save lives and get the economy going again. Here’s his road map.

As deaths mount over the next few weeks, it will be essential from time to time to stop, catch our breath, and celebrate some of the people we are losing. To that end, here are appreciations of two extraordinary people: Ellis Marsalis, who Gene Robinson writes was a great musician but an even greater teacher; and Lorena Borjas, guardian angel of a particular community in New York City.

And I think you will enjoy this account of social distancing, Singapore style. “Twice a day, I get a text message requiring me to verify my whereabouts,” writes the surprisingly cheerful, if somewhat bemused, Cheryl Lu-Lien Tan. “On occasion, I have had to take a photograph of myself, as well as my surroundings, to prove I am where I am supposed to be. My phone’s GPS has to be on so I can be tracked.”

Not enjoyable, exactly, but not to be missed is this scorching, heartfelt essay by Sophie A. Greenberg, a physician volunteering in a New York hospital to help fight the pandemic. She heard President Trump appear to dismiss pleas for protective equipment when he said, “We’re not a shipping clerk,” and she — well, don’t let me speak for her. Read her reaction here.

Finally, for the first time, the Post Pundit 2020 Power Ranking “is going chart-less,” as Ranking editor Drew Goins notes, “and taking on — gulp — the big question ... who has the edge: Biden or Trump?”

We need smart solutions to mitigate the coronavirus’s impact. Here are 16.

Fresh ideas are needed for dealing with this crisis. Here's a start.

Read more »

---

Here’s how to make up for lost time on covid-19

With science-based decisions, we can save lives and get the country back to work.

By Bill Gates • Read more »

Ellis Marsalis was a great musician and an even greater teacher

The passing of a musical legend is a reminder of the awful toll of this relentless pandemic.

By Eugene Robinson • Read more »

Lorena Borjas was a guardian and healer of the trans community in New York

Borjas, 59, was a relentless advocate who seemed to work 24 hours a day.

By Chase Strangio • Read more »

Inside a two-week quarantine in Singapore

I left because I bristled at the country's restrictions. Now I'm convinced its ethos could save us all.

By Cheryl Lu-Lien Tan • Read more »

As a doctor, I am willing to do whatever it ## takes to defeat this virus. Why isn't Trump?

Now, when our lives depend on it, the president is not pulling out all the stops.

By Sophie A. Greenberg • Read more »

Who has the edge? Trump or Biden?

And how will the handling of this pandemic decide it?

By The Ranking Committee • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Politics A.M. and P.M. for the most important politics stories, delivered every morning and evening. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Week in Ideas | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Week in Ideas or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: 'Our Pearl Harbor moment'
Date: Sunday, April 5, 2020 2:07:22 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

“This is going to be the hardest and saddest week of most Americans’ lives,” Surgeon General Jerome M. Adams said on Fox News today, as hospitals in the New York region and other high-infection areas brace for an expected surge in patients and deaths. “This is going to be our Pearl Harbor moment, our 9/11 moment, only it’s not going to be localized. It’s going to be happening all over the country.”

Louisiana Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) said his state could run out of ventilators as soon as Thursday, and ICU beds two days later. Some other states are projecting the crisis to peak in late April or May.

We sent reporters to the front lines: two rarely-seen treatment centers in New York, which already accounts for almost half the nation's 9,000-plus coronavirus deaths. Read what it's like inside Maimonides Medical Center in Brooklyn, where 80 percent of patients have the virus, visitors are banned and an ICU nurse sings to the dying, though most can no longer hear her.

Then read about the surreal scene in Manhattan, where a 2.1 million-square-foot convention center has been turned into a militarized hospital: “Here, if someone ‘pops hot,’ as one soldier said, they’ll be descended upon by medics and rushed to an isolation tent.”

President Trump said 1,000 military doctors and nurses will deploy to New York City, and urged states to share any spare ventilators with others amid a national shortage. Oregon has pledged to donate most of its reserve supply of ventilators to New York — though those 140 machines will still leave the nation's coronavirus epicenter far short of what state officials say are needed.

A Post analysis of more than 3,600 deaths in 13 states found evidence of a strange pattern that doctors have been reporting anecdotally: The virus appears to be killing significantly more men than women, for reasons no one can explain. The U.S. death toll is almost certainly being undercounted due to a shortage of tests, federal health officials acknowledge. Read about what that means here.

We have another insider piece, in the form of a column by David Ignatius, on the unusual ouster of Navy Capt. Brett Crozier, who was removed from command of a virus-stricken aircraft carrier in Guam after he wrote a plea for help to his superiors that leaked to the media. “Breaking news: Trump wants him fired,” Acting Navy secretary Thomas Modly reportedly told a colleague the day before he personally removed Crozier from the ship.

Mental health check: It's not easy for any of us to contend with all the grim news while we watch everything that was familiar about our daily lives fade away. It can actually be dangerous, if we fail to recognize signs of serious maladies amid the chaos. We talked with mental health professionals about how you can take an honest look at yourself and determine what type of help you might need. Please read it, and be safe.

---

Content from Slack

The manager's manual for remote teams

Leading a newly remote team? Here are some actionable tips to inspire trust, clarity, and confidence.

Slack keeps everyone on your team in the loop, no matter the location or distance.

---

How to make a fabric mask

(The Post)

After the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommended Americans wear face coverings in public, many of you have asked how to obtain one, given stores are sold out of masks and even hospitals are having trouble getting them.

We have a new, six-step guide up for how to make a simple cloth mask. Some sewing is required, but you don't need any fancy equipment.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping

Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“With so many countries banning walks and bike rides in order to ‘flatten the curve,’ why does the U.S. encourage getting outside? Is there a danger in just being outside walking?” — Jessica Knoop in Atlanta

It's true that other countries have adopted widely different physical distancing policies, including outdoor exercise restrictions in many. For example, France has banned cycling and long-distance jogs in an effort to keep infected people from spreading the virus far and wide, according to Business Insider.

States in the United States have generally been more lenient about outdoor exercise — and for good reason, according to Jeanne Marrazzo, director of the division of infectious diseases at the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

“If we don’t encourage people to get outside, we will have a widespread social insurrection,” she told The Post in a recent article.

Experts say you're actually safer outside than indoors, provided you maintain a six-foot distance from others. But that doesn't mean there aren't risks in taking a stroll; almost everything comes with risk, these days.

They recommend keeping your distance from friends if you happen to meet one while out for a stroll and making sure you have a six-foot leash for your dog, so you don't come into contact with other owners. Elderly and ill people also need to take special care. Read our Q&A for more advice.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Unafraid to call out Trump, Gov. Hogan emerges as lead GOP voice for urgent action
- Queen reassures Britons as health secretary begs them to stop sunbathing
- Fauci and Birx worked together on AIDS. Now, 37 years later, they're partners again.
- Coronavirus is testing the limits of Russia's surveillance state

A funeral is thought to have sparked a covid-19 outbreak in Albany, Ga. — and led to many more funerals

By Haisten Willis and Vanessa Williams • Read more »

---

How long will we doctors last?

Opinion • By Craig Spencer • Read more »

---

Death without ritual: Inside a funeral home in the nation's hardest-hit city

By Stephanie McCrummen • Read more »

Is social isolation getting to you? Here's how to know — and what experts say to do.

By Lateshia Beachum and Alex Horton • Read more »

---

Undocumented workers among those hit first — and worst — by the coronavirus shutdown

By Tracy Jan • Read more »

Who needs video games?

TikTok
@linadirector

alivpo
@linadirector

Creating your quarantine character 🤔😂 #fyp #viral #fun
🎵 оригинальный звук - alextattoo

63.7K likes · 713 comments

Get the app to see comments and join the conversation!

f p t code warn

<https://www.tiktok.com/@linadirector/vic> COPY

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 6 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Monday, April 6, 2020 5:03:36 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Mon., April 6, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. EMISSIONS:

5 ways economic jump-start could raise CO2

Recessions are often accompanied by a drop in carbon dioxide emissions. Then comes the rebound.

TOP STORIES

2. CHINA:

What the pandemic means for the world's largest emitter

3. ADAPTATION:

Can 'kinetic umbrellas' save homes from storm surge?

4. ACTIVISM:

Greens say internet trolls are disrupting online organizing

IN THE STATES

5. PANDEMIC:

Virus threatens to weaken Calif. climate programs

GLOBAL

6. ADAPTATION:

A prime minister tries to storm-proof her island's finances

7. EMERGENCY RESPONSE:

Pandemic hurts nations' readiness for natural disasters

8. LOCUSTS:

As Africa locks down, some deliveries of aid are threatened

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 6 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Monday, April 6, 2020 5:32:27 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Mon., April 6, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump's oil meeting: The aftermath, details and drama

Over the weekend, Trump first nixed the idea of tariffs to protect the oil industry, then reversed. Meanwhile, oil executives and lawmakers who attended a White House oil summit Friday said they pressed the president on other ideas. What's the administration's plan?

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

A warning sign? N.Y. lockdown jolts electricity demand

3. CARBON CAPTURE:

EPA issues rule for CO2 injection

4. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Kan. Supreme Court strikes down fee for rooftop solar

ELECTRICITY

5. NUCLEAR:

Plant Vogtle worker tests positive for coronavirus

6. EMISSIONS:

Energy audits 'insufficient' to meet climate goals — study

FEDERAL AGENCIES

7. PEOPLE:

DOE taps chief to oversee energy cuts at federal agencies

TECHNOLOGY

8. ELECTRIC VEHICLES:

Tesla's car sales surged before pandemic shut things down

OIL AND GAS

9. HYDRAULIC FRACTURING:

Calif. issues first new fracking permits since July

10. MICHIGAN:

Court revives anti-fracking effort that could get on ballot

UTILITIES

---

11. CALIFORNIA:

Another member of fire panel resigns, slams PG&E plan

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 6 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Monday, April 6, 2020 11:29:38 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Mon., April 6, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. INTERIOR:

Pandemic isn't only challenge facing new FWS chief

After just four months on the job, Fish and Wildlife Service Director Aurelia Skipwith is managing an agency in the midst of a pandemic. But the federal agency's first African American leader isn't abandoning her long-term goal to boost the number of minority employees.

TOP STORIES

2. EPA:

Wheeler spurns calls to scrap memo that would limit IG

3. ADVOCACY:

Should Chesapeake Bay be a national park? Group starts push

4. PANDEMIC:

Ranchers see universal lessons in combating lonesomeness

CORONAVIRUS

5. EPA:

No waivers granted, so far

6. CHEMICALS:

Hurdles loom over efforts to pump out hand sanitizer

7. WILDLIFE:

Tiger at NYC's Bronx Zoo tests positive for coronavirus

8. NATIONAL PARKS:

Virus outbreak leads Niobrara River visitor center to close

CONGRESS

9. REGULATIONS:

Critics accuse White House of favoring industry in NEPA redo

POLITICS

10. INTERIOR:

Former press secretary returns in new role

11. EPA:

Ex-ethanol lobbyist, former Hill aides join agency

---

NATURAL RESOURCES

12. WILDFIRES:

Progress made on blazes in 2 N.C. national forests

---

LAW

13. SUPREME COURT:

Feds ask justices to reject RFS appeal

---

ENERGY

14. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Spent fuel transfer at closed plant to go on despite virus

---

STATES

15. PUERTO RICO:

Upside of bungled Maria supplies: More health equipment now

16. GEORGIA:

Island mayor battles governor over beach closure amid virus

17. MICHIGAN:

Public comment extended on Lake Erie water quality plan

18. CALIFORNIA:

Magnitude 4.9 earthquake rattles inland south

---

INTERNATIONAL

19. UKRAINE:

Forest fire near Chernobyl raises radiation concerns

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

---

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001
Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299
www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Grocery workers are beginning to die
Date: Monday, April 6, 2020 2:44:31 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Angela Fritz
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

British Prime Minister Boris Johnson, who tested positive for covid-19 more than a week ago, was moved into an intensive care unit this evening after being hospitalized Sunday. The prime minister “remains conscious at this time,” a 10 Downing Street spokeswoman said.

More than 10,000 people have died in the U.S., and there are at least 352,000 confirmed covid-19 cases. Louisiana, Pennsylvania and Florida are seeing a surge in positive tests.

Grocery workers, who have been among the most-exposed employees in the outbreak, are starting to die of covid-19. At least four people — who had worked at Walmart, Trader Joe’s and Giant — have passed in recent days. Here's what we know about how the outbreak is affecting supermarkets and their staffs.

A survey of hospitals across the country showed health-care workers are facing shortages of tests, masks, face shields, ventilators and staff as they work tirelessly to save lives. The report confirmed what workers have been telling journalists for weeks. Read about how hospital staffers are scrounging for supplies and the emotional strain they face.

Anthony S. Fauci, a leader on the White House coronavirus task force, was asked Sunday about the effectiveness of hydroxychloroquine in treating covid-19. It's an experimental treatment the president has touted and even floated taking himself despite testing negative. Trump blocked the doctor from answering. (Why does Trump call an 86-year-old unproven drug a game changer against coronavirus? Read our FAQ.)

The Dow surged 1,600 points today even as the country braces for the “hardest and saddest” week of the pandemic. Missteps are undermining the Trump administration's stimulus efforts, with small businesses being the latest group to report roadblocks. Here's our story about the confusion and fear among people who need the stimulus money to stay afloat.

Millions of newly unemployed people are encountering state websites that are buckling, phone lines that are busy or disconnected and giant backlogs in benefit distributions. Read how unemployment offices are struggling with the overwhelming number of jobless claims and what could happen next. (And you can visit our FAQ on what to do if you get laid off or furloughed.)

To slow the spread of the coronavirus and reinforce the physical distancing guidance that health experts say is one of our best lines of defense, almost all states are under a stay-at-home order. Here's what that means in your state.

Officials in Georgia are criticizing Gov. Brian Kemp's order to reopen the state's beaches. The mayor of Tybee Island was particularly incensed. Read about the governor's decision and the backlash.

Gov. Tony Evers (D) suspended in-person voting in Wisconsin's primary elections Tuesday, after the Republican-controlled state legislature chose not to postpone the vote. A court challenge to the governor's order is likely.

Austria is the first European country to announce a concrete plan to reopen its society after lockdown, as the infection rate appeared to slow in Spain and Italy.

Share Coronavirus Updates

---

Content from Slack

The manager's manual for remote teams

Leading a newly remote team? Here are some actionable tips to inspire trust, clarity, and confidence.

Slack keeps everyone on your team in the loop, no matter the location or distance.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

Unemployment guide: What to do if you get laid off or furloughed

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“If needed, and in lieu of a ventilator, would a CPAP machine be useful? Or would it be harmful?” — Katherine in Ohio

Ventilators are the gold standard in this outbreak because they're a closed system that forces air in and out of the lungs with a breathing tube. The breathing tube prevents the virus from escaping into the surrounding air and infecting people nearby.

CPAP machines create “continuous positive airway pressure” which is delivered to the user's lungs with a mask. Many people use the machines at night to prevent sleep apnea. But the two main components of the CPAP — the continuous pressure in one direction and the mask itself — are why medical experts say the machine is not good to treat people with covid-19, since it forces the virus outside the mask into the air and could spread it even further.

James Finigan told Kaiser Health News that some machines can be converted into ventilator-like devices — particularly the “BiPAP” machines that use high pressure to force air into the lungs, but then lower the pressure to allow exhale. Still, the key is how the machine connects to the patient. A modified CPAP or BiPAP needs to first be fitted with a breathing tube.

The FDA recently loosened the guidelines on refitting CPAP and BiPAP machines so health-care workers could create ventilator-like devices in a pinch. But the breathing tube appears to be the key component; any device with a mask could turn into a virus-spreading machine.

Related reading: Although ventilators can mean the difference between life or death, they often cause other complications and difficult recoveries.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Small businesses worry $349 billion emergency lending program isn't big enough

- Acting Navy secretary says ousted captain leaked concerns to media, or was ‘too naive or too stupid to command a ship’
- How to make substitutions for spices, herbs, dairy and meat in your everyday cooking
- Your Internet is working. Thank these Cold War-era pioneers who designed it to handle almost anything

You’re under a stay-at-home order? Here’s what that means in your state.

By Thomas Johnson and Angela Fritz • Read more »

---

Don’t feel like ‘getting things done?’ It’s okay not to be productive during a pandemic.

By Sunny Fitzgerald • Read more »

---

The covid-19 crisis is going to get much worse when it hits rural areas

Opinion • By Michelle A. Williams, Bizu Gelaye and Emily M. Broad Leib • Read more »

---

The dark side of ventilators: Those hooked up for long periods face difficult recoveries

By Carolyn Y. Johnson and Ariana Eunjung Cha • Read more »

---

How to grow your own food in a modern-day victory garden

By Adrian Higgins • Read more »

---

Hamilton reunion, Zoom-style

Actor John Krasinski recently launched a YouTube series called Some Good News, and in one of his first videos, he surprised a girl with a “Hamilton” reunion.

Aubrey was planning to see “Hamilton” for her 9th birthday, until the outbreak hit. Instead, the cast performed the song “Alexander Hamilton” over Zoom and she was thrilled. Click through below to watch.

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 7 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Tuesday, April 7, 2020 4:43:20 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Tue., April 7, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. POLITICS:

Pandemic response test-drives climate policy. Will it work?

The federal government's plan to dole out money for the coronavirus outbreak bears some similarity to a carbon fee and dividend, the proposed system for cutting emissions favored by free-market economists, consensus-minded environmentalists and Big Oil.

TOP STORIES

---

2. CITIES:

Ann Arbor plows ahead with climate plan amid pandemic

3. STATE POLICY:

Minn. hits pause on effort to adopt Calif. car regulations

4. EMISSIONS:

As pandemic forces steep CO2 cuts, some see methane on rise

BUSINESS

---

5. FINANCE:

3 issues climate hawks are tracking this proxy season

GLOBAL

---

6. SECURITY:

Study finds link between climate disasters, armed conflict

7. CRIME:

Brazil state seeks federal troops over indigenous killings

8. INTERNATIONAL:

What it means to have a year without climate diplomacy

IN THE STATES

---

9. WILDLIFE:

Scientists to study effects of warming on baby lobsters

ENERGY TRANSITIONS

---

10. RENEWABLES:

Demand sinks after solar industry was poised for strong year

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: How one country totally squashed the curve
Date: Tuesday, April 7, 2020 5:31:19 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Angela Fritz
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

It only took 10 days for people in New Zealand to realize their approach to fighting the coronavirus was working. The number of new cases has fallen for two consecutive days, despite a huge increase in testing. The country only has around 1,200 confirmed cases — total. This is how New Zealand squashed its curve.

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said he thinks the state is starting to flatten its own curve, but cautioned that it's still vital to stay at home and maintain physical distancing. This is the data that is giving Cuomo hope, though New York remains the hardest-hit state.

A key forecasting model used by the White House to chart the coronavirus pandemic has revised its estimates downward, though it conflicts with many others showing higher equipment shortages and deaths. Today, the U.S. reported more than 1,800 coronavirus-related fatalities, a new one-day high, with some states still to release their totals.

Acting Navy secretary Thomas Modly has resigned, one day after he assailed the character of the USS Theodore Roosevelt's former captain, who expressed alarm at the service's handling of a virus outbreak on the ship. Read about the political firestorm, from the captain's initial letter criticizing the Navy to Modly's outburst, the apology and finally the resignation.

British Prime Minister Boris Johnson is receiving “oxygen support” and spending a second night in an intensive-care unit as he battles covid-19. Read more about the prime minister's condition and the foreign secretary who has taken over in his absence.

This afternoon, President Trump removed the inspector general who was to oversee the $2 trillion stimulus spending package, a move criticized by some as another instance of the president chafing at independent oversight.

Everyone seems to agree that another economic assistance bill is necessary. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) told lawmakers the next bill could “easily” cost more than $1 trillion. Trump is voicing support for the same things Democrats are backing, like more help for small businesses and direct checks. Republicans have called for more corporate aid and money to boost the overwhelmed health-care system.

Banks and the Small Business Administration have faced a deluge of requests for funding from the relief bill. Here's how the Treasury Department plans to replenish the program, which has outstripped initial expectations.

Coronavirus is hitting black communities especially hard. In Chicago, black people are six times more likely to die than white Chicagoans. That is also the case in Milwaukee, where 73 percent of Monday's deaths were black residents, though they make up just 28 percent of the county's population. For some black Americans, anxiety about wearing face coverings in public may keep them from doing so. Now, the federal government is being called on to release race and ethnicity data on infections and deaths from covid-19.

Kids in the U.S. are much less likely to show severe symptoms, or any symptoms at all, if they get covid-19. Read about the latest report from the CDC and its caveats.

Rapid developments on Monday left Wisconsin voters confused about the status of today's elections. Hours after the governor suspended in-person voting, a court ruling reinstated it. Then a U.S. Supreme Court decision reversed an extension of the mail-in ballot deadline. Right now voters are standing in lines that stretch for blocks, and many are angry that they have to risk their health to cast their ballots.

In the world of sports: Major League Baseball is reportedly trying to start up again in May or June, but there are many health and logistical problems to be solved before that can happen. Trump's hope to have sports return soon (with fans in the bleachers) has been met with resistance from governors.

Share Coronavirus Updates

---

Content from Slack

The manager's manual for remote teams

Leading a newly remote team? Here are some actionable tips to inspire trust, clarity, and confidence.

Slack keeps everyone on your team in the loop, no matter the location or distance.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

Unemployment guide: What to do if you get laid off or furloughed

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

"What is the length of time the coronavirus can remain suspended in the air? Can transmission of covid-19 through aerosolization occur after an infected individual has left the vicinity?" —Kay in Massachusetts

This answer is good news. Bottom line: the virus doesn't appear to linger in the air.

The CDC tells us covid-19 spreads very easily between people, “mainly through close contact from person to person in respiratory droplets from someone who is infected.” This basically means someone who is infected needs to cough or sneeze directly on you.

Another way it's transmitted is if you touch something that has the virus on it, and then you touch your face. This is why shaking hands is so taboo right now; if someone with covid-19 coughs or sneezes into their hand, and then you shake their hand, there's a high chance you're going to touch your face before you remember to wash up. The virus enters the body through our mouths and nose, and probably also our eyes, according to the CDC.

Those two routes — being coughed or sneezed on, or touching your face after you've touched something with the virus on it — present the highest risk of infection. The chance of catching it by breathing the same air that an infected person has breathed is extremely small.

Scientists found that the virus can live in the air for a couple of hours, but it is not viable for much longer than that. And they had to use a machine to force the virus into the air in the first place — as far as scientists can tell, it is not easily “aerosolized” by humans.

When someone coughs or sneezes, the vast majority of the virus falls to the ground (or other surfaces) in heavy droplets. Stat News reported that in Singapore, researchers tested the air in the rooms of three covid-19 patients and found no virus. A similar test in Wuhan, China showed the same thing: no virus in the rooms, halls or outside the hospital.

*Related reading: Coronavirus can stay infectious for days on surfaces.
But it's still okay to check your mail.*

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Going outside used to be our escape. But now that's scary, too.
- The latest flexible policies at major airlines in the wake of coronavirus
- As shortage worsens, federal officials ask agencies to donate spare medical supplies
- Perspective: What to do — and not do — when teaching kids at home

Flushing out the true cause of the global toilet paper shortage amid coronavirus pandemic

By Marc Fisher • Read more »

America's most influential coronavirus model just revised its estimates downward. But not every model agrees.

By William Wan and Carolyn Y. Johnson • Read more »

---

What an infectious disease specialist learned about the virus — from getting it

Opinion • By Michael S. Saag • Read more »

---

‘This is not the time for a broken arm’: How the pandemic is affecting parents’ perception of risk

Perspective • By Sindya N. Bhanoo • Read more »

---

Meet the ‘Weird AI’ Yankovics of our social distancing era

By Travis M. Andrews • Read more »

---

Recovery dance

Nida Qadir, MD

@NidaQadirMD

Yes, patients do recover from #COVID19 #ARDS. And yes, my #ICU team does do an #extubation dance every time we liberate someone from a #Ventilator. #ARDSAvengers #coronavirus #bestteamever @uclaimchiefs @UCLAHealth @atscommunity @GiladJaffe @HungryDes @NoCoughEng

11.3K 12:12 AM - Apr 6, 2020 · Ronald Reagan UCLA Medical Center

2.132 people are talking about this

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Opinions A.M. and P.M. for the best of The Post's opinions and commentary, in your inbox every morning and afternoon. Sign up »

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 8 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Wednesday, April 8, 2020 4:59:25 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Wed., April 8, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. EMISSIONS:

Can coal survive the coronavirus?

U.S. coal use declined sharply in March compared to natural gas and wind, suggesting the pandemic could hit the reeling industry disproportionately.

TOP STORIES

2. EPA:

Pandemic threatens to delay greenhouse gas reporting

3. PANDEMIC:

'We're the virus.' How eco-fascism hurts climate action

4. POLITICS:

Red states slower to respond to virus and climate — experts

GLOBAL

5. INTERNATIONAL:

Climate not a priority as world leaders plan virus recovery

6. COAL:

Germany's green ambitions slip further behind schedule

BUSINESS

7. OIL & GAS:

Shell's 2019 GHG emissions fell due to asset sales

POLITICS

8. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump approves disaster declaration after Ore. floods

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 8 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Wednesday, April 8, 2020 5:15:50 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Wed., April 8, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

---

1. PANDEMIC:

Inside clean energy's coronavirus job crash

Hundreds of thousands of people in clean energy jobs have been idled and furloughed.

---

TOP STORIES

2. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus to slash coal use, CO2, electricity demand — EIA

3. UTILITIES:

Coronavirus and wildfires: Is Calif. ready?

4. OIL AND GAS:

Exxon to cut spending $10B as industry layoffs grow

---

ENERGY TRANSITIONS

5. ELECTRICITY:

Dominion axes plan for 'significant' natural gas build-out

6. CHINA:

Post-pandemic coal stimulus may be coming — report

---

OIL AND GAS

7. METHANE:

Emissions hit record, and scientists aren't sure why

8. NEW MEXICO:

Lawmakers face hard choices as oil crash hits budget

---

ELECTRICITY

9. BIOFUELS:

How burning wood fell out of favor in U.S.

---

FEDERAL AGENCIES

10. NUCLEAR WASTE:

Most Hanford employees work from home due to virus

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Young Americans are dying of covid-19
Date: Wednesday, April 8, 2020 3:10:15 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Angela Fritz
with Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

Hundreds of young Americans have now been killed by the coronavirus, a Washington Post analysis found, and the true number of deaths among younger people is probably higher, because not all states provided data that includes age. “Just because they are young doesn’t mean they aren’t vulnerable,” one ER doctor said. Read the analysis that underscores the harsh reality that young, seemingly fit people aren't immune.

A panel of scientists convened by the National Academies of Sciences got together to figure out whether coronavirus would wane with the arrival of summer. Its findings were that it is unlikely to significantly diminish.

On Tuesday, President Trump threatened to withhold funds from the World Health Organization, saying it “seemed to be very China-centric.” Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, the group's director-general, pushed back on that and said politicizing the pandemic could make it worse, and lead to "many more body bags."

As we mentioned yesterday with data from Chicago and Milwaukee, covid-19 appears to be infecting and killing black Americans at a disproportionately high rate. A new Post analysis dives into the numbers from several additional jurisdictions that are reporting cases and deaths by race. In last night's task force briefing, Trump said his administration would release some “very, very nasty” numbers over the next few days. You can explore the data and our analysis here.

State officials and doctors warn that rationing of medical equipment like ventilators is inevitable in some places. If that happens, many hospitals are planning to activate grim triage plans that would rank patients to determine priority. Read about the hard, controversial decisions being discussed to determine who should get ventilator priority.

In a video obtained by The Post, a high-level Small Business Administration official blasted several big banks for their reluctance to get involved in the federally-subsidized small business lending program, despite taking bailout money in 2008. Watch the video.

Across party lines, leaders in the capital are coalescing around the idea that another stimulus bill will be necessary. In the meantime, Democratic leaders have called for hundreds of billions of dollars for hospitals, state and local governments and food stamp recipients in response to the Trump administration's urgent request for $250 billion more for small businesses. Here's what we know about the possible interim funding.

Nadia, a 4-year-old Malayan tiger at the Bronx Zoo, has covid-19. No one is sure how she could have contracted it. Here's what scientists know about how disease passes between animals and humans.

Communities across the country are clamoring to get access to the Abbot Laboratories rapid-result covid-19 test. It's already being used at the White House to test visitors who come into contact with Trump and Vice President Pence. Read about the testing procedure the White House has implemented.

The British government asked for volunteers to help the National Health Service and 750,000 people signed up. Now they're being deployed.

On the outside, flight attendants are smiling and helpful. Inside, many are frightened and uncertain about the chance they will contract covid-19 at work. The people who keep us comfortable in the skies are now fearful of flying.

Wuhan's lockdown is over. Now people in China are leaving grateful messages for the doctor who sounded the alarm on coronavirus, then died from it on Feb. 7. Some message his social media accounts just to say they have been thinking about him. Others leave personal updates about how they feel as if things are getting back to normal, or the flowers outside are starting to bloom.

Share Coronavirus Updates

---

Content from Slack

The manager's manual for remote teams

Leading a newly remote team? Here are some actionable tips to inspire trust, clarity, and confidence.

Slack keeps everyone on your team in the loop, no matter the location or distance.

---

More guidance on homemade masks

Since U.S. officials recommended last week that all people should wear a cloth face covering in public, we know you have a lot of questions about how to construct one. So we published a Q&A today that answers some of the big ones:

- What material should I use? (Including a very helpful graph mapping where fabrics you may have around the house fall on a scale of breathability and filtration, from old T-shirts to tea towels)
- What pattern should I follow, and what if I can't sew?
- When can I take it off, and how can I do that safely?

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

Unemployment guide: What to do if you get laid off or furloughed

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

Your questions, answered

"Did the Supreme Court give any reasoning for their decision to have the voting in Wisconsin go forward? (I know this isn't specifically about covid-19, but it's definitely related.)" — Elizabeth in New York

It certainly is related. The deeper the pandemic stretches into the 2020 election cycle, the more havoc it wreaks on our voting system, as Wisconsin just proved with its primary election. On Tuesday, the state became the first to hold in-person voting during the coronavirus crisis, despite efforts by Democratic officials to extend deadlines.

First, let's clarify Elizabeth's question slightly: It was the Wisconsin Supreme Court, not the U.S. Supreme Court, that ordered in-person voting to happen as scheduled on Tuesday. The state court ruled Monday along partisan lines that Democratic Gov. Tony Evers could not postpone the date, even though only five out of 180 polling places had enough staff to open in Milwaukee, the state's liberal stronghold.

The U.S. Supreme Court looked at a related question at the same time: whether to extend the deadline to cast mail-in ballots until next Monday, given that thousands of would-be voters had not yet received theirs by this week. "The court's five conservatives said [a lower court] judge did not have that authority, because it in effect extended the election by six days," said Robert Barnes, The Post's Supreme Court correspondent.

So the election was held as planned on Tuesday, and people who hadn't received their mail-in ballots had to choose whether to skip voting entirely, or risk infection by standing in long lines at the few available polling locations. (Many chose the latter, we reported.)

In what Barnes describes as a "scant, 10-page opinion issued Monday night," the U.S. Supreme Court's conservative majority wrote that their decision was specific to this case, and “should not be viewed as expressing an opinion ... whether other reforms or modifications in election procedures in light of COVID–19 are appropriate.”

But the court's liberal justices said the majority ignored the current danger. Their "suggestion that the current situation is not ‘substantially different’ from ‘an ordinary election’ boggles the mind," Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg wrote in the dissent.

---

Today’s top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- A funeral and a birthday party: CDC traces Chicago coronavirus outbreak to two family gatherings
- Why exactly is President Trump lashing out at the World Health Organization?
- My husband’s home with 3 boys, and cabin fever is setting in. How can I help?

I just got a shot of a coronavirus vaccine. I hope it works!

Perspective • By Ian Haydon • Read more »

---

Gen Z was fed up with the status quo. The coronavirus could reinforce their liberal politics.

By Hannah Knowles • Read more »

Four ways U.S. intelligence efforts should change in the wake of the coronavirus pandemic

Opinion • By Glenn S. Gerstell and Michael Morell • Read more »

---

Can't pay your mortgage? Here's what you need to know.

Perspective • By Michelle Singletary • Read more »

---

Travel photographers are taking epic nature photos using indoor optical illusions

By Natalie Compton • Read more »

---

Grocery hero

Director Tyler Perry on Wednesday bought all the groceries for people who were shopping during the senior hours at many grocery stores in Atlanta and New Orleans.

Stores across the country have reserved early morning hours for the shoppers who are most at risk, like the elderly and immuno-compromised, so they come into contact with as few people as possible.

When shoppers at 44 Krogers and 30 Winn-Dixies got into the checkout lines this morning, they found out their bill was already paid, Atlanta's 11Alive reports.

Brendan Keefe
@BrendanKeefe

CONFIRMED: @tylerperry paid for all groceries during Seniors Hour at 44 Atlanta-area @Kroger stores. Look at these faces -- you can see the smiles and tears through the masks!

♡ 20.1K 4:20 PM - Apr 8, 2020

💬 5,338 people are talking about this

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Today's WorldView for analysis on the most important global story of the day, top reads, interesting ideas and opinions to know, in your inbox weekdays.

Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 9 -- Climatewire is ready
Date: Thursday, April 9, 2020 5:00:58 AM

Read today's Climatewire on the web

CLIMATEWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

CLIMATEWIRE — Thu., April 9, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Disaster agency foresaw killer virus months before COVID-19

FEMA warned the government in July that a pandemic would cripple the country's response capabilities by driving millions of people into overwhelmed hospitals. The coronavirus surfaced five months later.

TOP STORIES

2. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Climate could be Sanders' biggest legacy

3. ADAPTATION:

City resilience offices shutter in wake of virus

4. RELIGION:

Pope Francis: Pandemic, like climate, highlights hypocrisy

PANDEMIC

5. LAW:

Coronavirus could alter climate litigation. Here's how

SCIENCE

6. CLIMATE IMPACTS:

Animals threatened by 'abrupt exposure' to hotter temps

BUSINESS

7. AVIATION:

Airline bid to cut pollution cost may wipe out carbon demand

8. ENERGY TRANSITIONS:

Hydrogen power plants get backing from 2 big German firms

IN THE STATES

9. AGRICULTURE:

Coronavirus claims an unexpected victim: Fla. vegetables

10. HEALTH:

Southwest air quality benefits from stay-at-home orders

---

Get all of the stories in today's Climatewire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.climatewire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT CLIMATEWIRE – POLICY. SCIENCE. BUSINESS.

---

Climatewire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. It is designed to provide comprehensive, daily coverage of all aspects of climate change issues. From international agreements on carbon emissions to alternative energy technologies to state and federal GHG programs, Climatewire plugs readers into the information they need to stay abreast of this sprawling, complex issue.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 9 -- Energywire is ready
Date: Thursday, April 9, 2020 5:37:52 AM

Read today's Energywire on the web

ENERGYWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

ENERGYWIRE — Thu., April 9, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus and electricity: 3 issues to watch

The novel coronavirus' shutdown of American life is disrupting the electricity sector and threatening energy projects as state regulators, power companies and customers scramble to cope with layoffs and an inability to gather in large groups.

TOP STORIES

2. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump on oil crash: 'A lot of good options, beauties'

3. ELECTRIC VEHICLES:

EV sales to plunge 43% this year — report

4. TECHNOLOGY:

States race for battery breakthrough. Who's winning?

POLITICS

5. WHITE HOUSE:

Trump: TVA boss's pay has 'been bothering me for a long time'

ELECTRICITY

6. PANDEMIC:

Calif. joins N.Y. in having workers live at grid centers

7. ENERGY TRANSITIONS:

Fla. utility to exit nation's largest coal plant

OIL AND GAS

8. PANDEMIC:

Oil companies warn of 'massive' bankruptcies

9. CORONAVIRUS:

Colo. urged to halt coal, oil activity during pandemic

LAW

10. OIL AND GAS:

Court halts FERC, N.Y. fight over Constitution pipeline

BUSINESS

---

11. PANDEMIC:

Alberta premier sees negative oil prices

12. PIPELINES:

Enbridge seeks permits to build Great Lakes oil tunnel

UTILITIES

---

13. CALIFORNIA:

Judge won't approve fire victims' letter attacking PG&E

14. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

Giant wind park's launch is another blow to nuclear industry

---

Get all of the stories in today's Energywire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.energywire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT ENERGYWIRE – THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE ENERGY SECTOR

---

Energywire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. Energywire is designed to bring readers deep, broad and insightful coverage of the transformation of the energy sector. Energywire focuses on the business, environmental and political issues surrounding the rapidly expanding unconventional energy industry and the numerous factors -- from expanding natural gas use to renewables and more -- that are altering the traditional electric utility industry. Energywire publishes daily at 9:00 a.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Book Club: The Bookstore of the Year is closed, and four U.S. Poets Laureate want to take you home
Date: Friday, April 10, 2020 7:55:20 AM

Inside the politics of climate change
This daily newsletter from reporter Maxine Joselow is a must-read for environmental decisionmakers, energy executives and the climate-curious alike.

Sign up

Powered by  LiveIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Book Club

Reviews and recommendations from critic Ron Charles.

By Ron Charles

 Email

Author Pico Iyer (Photo by Derek Shapton); Simon & Schuster/TED

At the age of 29, a Time magazine writer named Pico Iyer decided to leave his exciting life in New York City and spend a year in a single room in Kyoto, Japan. It seemed like an eccentric, career-ending move, but Iyer felt convinced that he wanted to explore something quiet and interior. He mentions that youthful experiment in a thoughtful little book he published in 2014 called “The Art of Stillness: Adventures in Going Nowhere.” Quarantined for the past month, I’ve been feeling like I’m “going nowhere” — but without the transcendental insights. This week, I sent Iyer a whiny note about the trials of being stuck at home, and he graciously responded with the humble wisdom that readers have come to appreciate from him. “All of us are most concerned about those without homes or resources and the ill,” he said. “But for those of us lucky enough to be safe, so far, and maybe to have jobs to return to, or roofs over our head, I think it offers us a perfect chance to think about what really sustains us.” A crisis like this, he suggests, can provide a moment of clarity on what really ails us. “My sense is that many of us have been living out of balance in recent years, with much more data than we have time to make sense of, with much more distraction than can ever make us happy, and with so much clutter in our heads or in our calendars that we can't lay our hands on what is most essential.” If you’re caring for others and struggling to make ends meet, you may think that stillness is a luxury you can’t afford, but Iyer claims it’s a necessity as crucial as food or exercise. As you might expect from a personal friend of the Dalai Lama, Iyer insists that we always have the power to determine how we respond to challenges. “Treat this moment as a chance to take a break,” he says, “so as to return to your life with clearer direction and a more definite sense of priorities.”

‘Elderly storytellers will write tales that outlast our extinction.’

– Edward Iwata, born 1957, from “A Force Outside Myself,” McSweeney's.

As a future old person who cherishes several currently old people, I’ve been alarmed by some of the “reassuring” rhetoric around the Covid-19 crisis. The worst example came last month from Texas Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick, who sounded like he might push grandparents into a pit if it meant the rest of us could start shopping sooner. Dave Eggers, the founder of McSweeney's, heard Patrick's comments after visiting with his in-laws, and the "Logan's Run" theme didn't sit well with him. In response, McSweeney's has started publishing a series of short statements called "A Force Outside Myself: Citizens Over 60 Speak" (full list). Their pieces are haunting, sobering, sometimes witty, always achingly sincere. Parents write about being quarantined with their college age children; a woman describes her sudden interest in dystopias; a man remembers surviving the AIDS crisis; a new grandma hears the baby cry over the phone. New stories are added every day. None of these writers is going gently into that good night to save our malls.

---

ADVERTISEMENT

U.S. Bank
Want to earn up to 5X points on more stays, more trips and more fun? Connect to more here.
Earn 5X points on prepaid hotels & car rentals booked directly in the Altitude Rewards Center. And get 4X points on travel & at gas stations.

LEARN MORE

Courtesy of Porter Square Books in Cambridge, Mass.

Good News/Bad News: Publishers Weekly has named Porter Square Books in Cambridge, Mass., the Bookstore of the Year. Porter Square Books is closed. "It's surreal," co-owner David Sandberg tells me. “We couldn’t even celebrate.” Because the store has been shuttered by a state-wide closure order, he and his wife, Dina Mardell, had to let the other owners and staff members know about the PW honor via email. That’s the least of their challenges, though. By leveraging the store’s healthy social media presence, online sales have risen dramatically since the coronavirus crisis began. But those sales still represent only “a quarter to a third” of the store’s pre-crisis business. And transitioning instantly to a web-based operation is no easy feat, even for a store with almost 30 employees. “We’ve had to create a new plan pretty much every week,” Mardell says. “The fulfillment experience from our side is just radically, radically different,” Sandberg adds. “Every indie bookstore I’ve talked to is having the same issue. We’re not set up for the infrastructure to do this. We’re set up for the infrastructure to be a physical location for people to come in and browse books and buy them at cash registers.” Sandberg estimates that Porter Square Books can maintain its current structure with online-only sales through June. “If it goes on beyond that,” he says, “then we just have to rethink how we do our business.”

Although the coronavirus poses an existential challenge for brick-and-mortar booksellers, it's been a boon for audiobook sales. Those of you who like to listen to your books and support beleaguered indie bookstores need to know about Libro.fm. It's the audiobook service used by indies as an alternative to Audible, which is owned by Amazon. (Amazon CEO Jeff Bezos owns The Washington Post.) Libro.fm co-founder Mark Pearson tells me that his company, with a small staff of 10, has been experiencing explosive growth: Memberships were up 300 percent in March, and more people are now listening to audiobooks through Libro.fm than ever before. What's more, Libro.fm splits profits with indie bookstores and has been raising tens of thousands of dollars in additional financial support for indies since the Covid-19 crisis began. This week, the company announced an extraordinary new initiative: To help deal with the flood of new business, Libro.fm has hired 10 recently laid-off booksellers for a month. You might call them Libro.fmmellowships. They'll work on all aspects of the company, including curation and creating enhanced audiobook pages and videos. Congratulations to these 10 new hires, chosen from hundreds of experienced applicants from around the country:

- Rebecca Baruc (Chicago)
  - Kathy Burnette (South Bend, Ind.)
  - Charlene Browne (Boston)
  - Devon Dunn (New York)
  - BrocheAroe Fabian (Portland)
  - Katie Fee (New York)
  - Claire Handscombe (Washington)
  - Michael Kelleher (Oakland, Calif.)
  - Barbara Lane (Marin, Calif.)
  - Kelsey Norris (Washington)
  - Cristina Rodriguez (Dallas)
-

Doubleday; author Adam Levin (Photo by Renaud Monfourny)

ADVERTISEMENT

Adam Levin’s new novel stinks. That’s not a critical judgment; it’s a fact. The bright pink jacket cover of “Bubblegum” smells like bubblegum. It’s the first scratch-n-sniff adult book I’ve seen. . . or, uh, smelled. (Like Proust’s madeleine, it draws me back to John Waters’s 1981 movie “Polyester” with its Odorama cards.) “Bubblegum,” Levin’s second giant novel — after “The Instructions” (2010) — is a dystopian comedy that imagines our world filled with Curios, cute little robots that smell like bubblegum. As soon as Levin’s editor, Rob Bloom, read the manuscript, he asked Doubleday’s art director, Michael Windsor, “to go crazy” on the jacket design. He started from scratch, literally, by sniffing through samples of bubblegum scented children’s books. When Windsor presented the design to the publicity team, everybody gasped. And loved it. Of course, it’s a bitter shame that, with bookstores closed, prospective readers won’t be drawn to “Bubblegum” by its odoriferous jacket. But Windsor is philosophical about that: “The people who order it off Amazon or whatever, they'll get a nice little surprise when they get it home.”

Given the physical advantage that bound books have over e-books, I'm disappointed that we don't see (or smell) more creative experiments like “Bubblegum.” There was a time when publishers knew that books should be enticing objects, with elegant initials and beautiful illustrations. Now they all look the same: blank boards around page after page of utilitarian text. But there are folks keeping the flame alive. “We Love Endpapers” — a Facebook group devoted to the appreciation of decorative endpapers — just passed 5,000 members, which is the happiest nerdy news of the week.

Courtesy of White Mountain Puzzles

The Missing Peace: If you're a book person, there's a good chance you're also a puzzle fanatic, so you know puzzles have become as hard to find as toilet paper. White Mountain Puzzles, a family-owned operation in Jackson, N.H., has been completely overwhelmed by orders during the Great Quarantine. To deal with the backlog, the company stopped accepting new business for 10 days. When they reopened on Tuesday, they received more orders in 12 hours than they had in the entire month of April last year. “It's insanely busy,” co-owner Sean Minton tells me. Both their factories — in Indiana and Massachusetts — were shut down as “non-essential businesses,” which my puzzle-fiend parents strongly object to. White Mountain typically sells a substantial segment of its merchandise through bookstores, which are all closed now, of course, but online sales in addition to sales through big-box retailers like Target continue to pour in. “They’re begging for puzzles,” Minton says. “It’s a lot of moving parts, logistical challenges that we’ve never had to deal with before” — like a giant puzzle, one might say, but Minton makes no puzzle puns. Perhaps he’s too busy. White Mountain has been growing strongly for a while. “The whole political climate that we’ve seen in the last three or four years has caused a lot of anxiety in this country,” he says, “and puzzles have been a great way to relieve stress.”

Make America Puzzle Again!

Catapult; PEN/Faulkner; author Chloe Aridjis (Photo by Nick Tucker/Courtesy of PEN/Faulkner)

As the country's largest literary prize juried by other fiction writers, the $15,000 PEN/Faulkner Award tends to be less dazzled by big names and more attentive to small publishers. It’s the annual prize most likely to draw my attention to a great work of fiction that I missed. This year’s winner is “Sea Monsters,” by Mexican American writer Chloe Aridjis (Catapult). After considering more than 400 submissions, the PEN/Faulkner judges released a statement on Monday praising “Sea Monsters” as a “dreamlike near-fable of equal parts philosophical and intellectual vigor . . . a gift for these times in which we are all craving escape.” Aridjis, who lives in London, has a Ph.D. from Oxford in 19th-century French poetry and magic shows, so I’m already hooked. Unfortunately, this year’s super-fancy 40th annual award ceremony has been canceled due to the quarantine, but PEN/Faulkner will release a video on May 4 that includes appearances by Aridjis and the four finalists (list).

---

From "Long Story Short," by Lisa Brown (Algonquin).

You probably began this quarantine with dreams of rereading “Moby-Dick” or “Persuasion.” But if you’re like me, you’re finding it hard to concentrate on anything more than a tweet. Fortunately, Lisa Brown has just published “Long Story Short,” a witty collection of cartoon book reviews. In three panels, she dispenses with “As I Lay Dying,” “Heart of Darkness” and a hundred other classics. “You should have to pay a fine if your book is more than 400 pages,” she tells me from her home in San Francisco. The key to compressing any story is to “think about what you can’t stop thinking about,” she says. “So if you have, say, ‘Anna Karenina,’ even if you read it years and years ago, you’re like, ‘Oh, she threw herself in front of a train. The core of ‘Anna Karenina’ is train.” As an old English teacher, I wonder if students could study her cartoons instead of wrestling with the actual classics. “Hopefully, they’ll just use my book in order to read ‘Tess of the D’Urbervilles,’” Brown says, “and they’ll read something like Maxine Hong Kingston in their high school classes, which is much more exciting and relevant today.” (But seriously: Asking students to draw a three-panel book review could be a fun assignment.)

---

The Freedom to Write

Author Jennifer Egan (Photo courtesy of PEN/America)

With so many book events canceled during the coronavirus outbreak, PEN America, the literary nonprofit that defends free expression, has launched a podcast called The PEN Pod (subscribe). On Tuesday’s episode, Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist Jennifer Egan described her three-week battle with a suspected case of COVID-19. (Her doctor diagnosed her over the phone, which is this disaster in a nutshell.) “My hope for this moment is that we come out of this with some pretty radical changes to our lives,” Egan says. “Underpaid healthcare workers are basically what are keeping us alive here in New York. We don’t value our physical environment. We desperately need to recalibrate that relationship. I really hope that this cataclysm becomes an opportunity for healing a deeper sickness in our culture.” (Listen)

Mad Libs Workbooks Grade 1 and Grade 2 will be released on April 14. Grade 3 and Grade 4 will be released on Sept. 1 (Penguin Workshop).

And now, for something completely _____ (adj.)

Almost 70 years ago, a pair of comedy writers devised a parlor game they called “Mad Libs.” In the late 1950s, TV talk show host Steve Allen used the Mad Lib format to introduce guests, which made the game a national craze. Since then, books full of silly fill-in-the-blank tales have sold more than 125 million copies, which is a _____ (noun) of copies. Language teachers have used Mad Libs to teach grammar for years, and now Penguin Workshop is getting serious about the games. In response to the coronavirus quarantine and the surge of new interest in home-teaching, two new Mad Lib educational workbooks are being released early for first and second graders. The content is a bit schoolmarmy — phonics, spelling, grammar and vocabulary. And any educational consultant who thinks a 7-year-old should confront terms like “Inflectional Endings” and “Digraphs” should be given a time-out. But an element of fun persists in these workbooks. If you’ve suddenly been cast as a home-school teacher for beginning readers, check these out.

The second season of “Poetry in America” begins this week on public television. Each episode, hosted by Harvard professor Elisa New, explores a single American poem. The season kicks off with “Urban Love Poem,” by Chinese American writer Marilyn Chin. (I had the pleasure of interviewing her for Life of a Poet in 2018 – she's brilliant.) In addition to Chin, episode 1 includes a range of special guests, from Silicon Valley executive Randy Komisar to celebrated writer Maxine Hong Kingston. You can also find related educational material on the “Poetry in America” website (here).

Today, The Washington Post launches a beautiful project with the Library of Congress called “The Poetry of Home.” During the coronavirus crisis, I’ve been Zooming with poets and asking them to share a poem they’ve written. In today’s episode, U.S. Poet Laureate Joy Harjo talks about “Perhaps the World Ends Here.” That poem appeared in “The Woman Who Fell From the Sky,” a collection Harjo published back in 1994, but it sounds like it was written for this quarantined era we find ourselves in now. Over the next three weeks, we’ll hear from former laureates Robert Pinsky, Natasha Trethewey and Juan Felipe Herrera. I hope you enjoy this series – and share it with people who need it.

Perhaps the World Ends Here

The world begins at a kitchen table. No matter what, we must eat to live.

The gifts of earth are brought and prepared, set on the table. So it has been since creation, and it will go on.

We chase chickens or dogs away from it. Babies teethe at the corners. They scrape their knees under it.

It is here that children are given instructions on what it means to be human. We make men at it, we make women.

At this table we gossip, recall enemies and the ghosts of lovers.

Our dreams drink coffee with us as they put their arms around our children. They laugh with us at our poor falling-down selves and as we put ourselves back together once again at the table.

This table has been a house in the rain, an umbrella in the sun.

Wars have begun and ended at this table. It is a place to hide in the shadow of terror. A place to celebrate the terrible victory.

We have given birth on this table, and have prepared our parents for burial here.

At this table we sing with joy, with sorrow. We pray of suffering and remorse. We give thanks.

Perhaps the world will end at the kitchen table, while we are laughing and crying, eating of the last sweet bite.

From The Woman Who Fell From the Sky by Joy Harjo. Copyright © 1994 by Joy Harjo. Used by permission of W.W. Norton & Company, Inc.

---

(Knopf; Grand Central; William Morrow)

The Charleses have reached Day 25 in quarantine. My wife, Dawn, is reading Jenny Offill's witty novel “Weather” (review). My younger daughter, Madeline, is reading Candace Bushnell's “Sex and the City,” which reminds me that I went to a dinner party with Bushnell in the late 1990s, but I was such a rube that I didn't know who she was. This horrifies but does not surprise Madeline. Meanwhile, I'm reading a charming western that I'll tell you about next week. Till then, wherever you are, I hope you're staying healthy and finding good books. If you have any questions or comments about our book coverage, contact me at ron.charles@washpost.com. And if you know someone who would enjoy this newsletter, please forward it to them. To subscribe, click here.

---

‘Walden’ may be the most famous act of social distancing. It’s also a lesson on the importance of community.

Perspective • By Ron Charles • Read more »

---

The new Oprah Book Club pick: 'Inside the Mind of an American Family,' by Robert Kolker

Review • By Karen Tucker • Read more »

---

In Julia Alvarez's 'Afterlife,' a widow faces a moral quandary

Review • By Kristen Millares Young • Read more »

---

Anne Tyler's 'Redhead by the Side of the Road' is light on drama. Not that we could handle more drama now anyway.

Review • By Ron Charles • Read more »

---

'Temporary' puts a whole new spin on millennial woe

Review • By Rebekah Frumkin • Read more »

---

Marie Kondo has a new book on tidying up at the office. Her tips work at the home office, too.

Review • By Angela Haupt • Read more »

---

For fans of Indiana Jones and Dan Brown, an adventure story for the ages

Review • By Michael Dirda • Read more »

---

'Calder: The Conquest of Space' paints a stunning portrait of an ever-evolving artist

Review • By Alexander C. Kafka • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Carolyn Hax for Post columnist Carolyn Hax's latest advice column every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Book Club | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Book Club or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: GOP senator's coronavirus plan: Get federal government to cover 80 percent of wages.
Date: Friday, April 10, 2020 8:39:04 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Facebook

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

GOP senator's coronavirus plan: Get federal government to cover 80 percent of wages.

Sen. Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) wants the United States to follow Europe's lead. That's not something conservatives like him normally say, but he believes desperate times call for desperate measures.

The rising star on the right proposes that the federal government replicate what's been working in the United Kingdom to keep layoffs limited and immediately begin covering 80 percent of worker wages at all private businesses, up to the national median wage, until the emergency caused by the novel coronavirus is over. He also advocates paying financial bonuses for businesses to rehire workers laid off over the past month.

As party leaders squabble over how best to expand the pool of money available for small businesses through the Paycheck Protection Program, what the freshman senator envisions in the fourth phase of congressional action is vastly more ambitious and costly than anything his Republican colleagues have outlined. Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) has cast doubt on the need for another gargantuan spending measure after the third phase cost $2 trillion. But Hawley is adamant that half measures won't avert another Great Depression.

City employees in Hialeah, Fla., hand out unemployment applications to people in their vehicles on Wednesday. They've moved to printed forms because the state's unemployment website keeps crashing under the strain of new claims. (Joe Raedle/Getty Images)

The Labor Department said Thursday that more than 17 million Americans have filed for unemployment benefits in the past four weeks, including 6.6 million last week. Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell unveiled over $2 trillion in new loans in his latest bid to keep the economy afloat. JPMorgan Chase now predicts the unemployment rate will hit 20 percent, and the economy will shrink by 40 percent, in the second quarter.

“Events are overtaking us, and so now we’ve got to adapt. That’s what I’m trying to do here,” Hawley said toward the end of a 35-minute phone interview from his house in Springfield, Mo. “I personally do not want to ride the roller coaster, not knowing where the bottom is, and that’s what I’m afraid that we’re on right now. It’s like, ‘Wow, we’re going down, down, down, down, down, down, down.’ Nobody can see the bottom. I personally don’t care to find out where the bottom might be!”

The Stanford-trained historian and Yale-educated lawyer has spoken at length with several economists, obsessively studied what other Western countries are doing to stanch their economic wounds and intensively read about what worked and what didn’t during the New Deal. “One of the things that I take away from that study – thinking back through our history, thinking back to the ‘20s and the ‘30s – is that one of the things you have to be willing to do is be adaptable,” Hawley said. “You can’t get locked into the mentality that ‘this is the only way we have to deal with this situation.’ You’ve got to be willing to say, ‘if that’s not working, let’s try something else.’”

Hawley insists that his preferred approach, while unorthodox, is not inherently unconservative because government policies have effectively blocked people from working – for good public health reasons, he hastens to add. This makes it only fair to compensate workers for the duration of the crisis, he argues, adding that relief should focus more on helping people than corporations.

“The only reason that you deliver the money through the employer is the employer pays the wages,” he said. “My view is that the American worker shouldn’t be asked to shoulder the burden of unemployment when they haven't done anything wrong. In these extraordinary times, I think the government ought to step forward and say we are going to protect as many jobs as we can. We ought to make it our goal to protect every job.”

I asked Hawley whether he worries that the federal government will accumulate too much power during this crisis and never give it back. “I guess, at the moment, I'm more concerned about chaos that leads to 20 and 30 percent unemployment,” he said.

Sen. Josh Hawley speaks to reporters at the Capitol last month. (Al Drago/Bloomberg News)

---

Content from Facebook

$100M grant program for small businesses impacted by COVID-19

Know a small business in need of extra support right now?
We are offering $100 million to provide businesses with resources they need during COVID-19.

Get started: Learn more.

---

Hawley, who defeated Democratic incumbent Claire McCaskill in the 2018 midterms, has been a vocal supporter of President Trump and consistently voted for his agenda. He has also emerged as an outspoken critic of corporate power, especially large technology companies, and emphasizes that the right needs to evolve to offer more help for those being left behind in the gig economy. Hawley is part of the small conservative clique in Congress that's challenging what's increasingly being called free-market fundamentalism. His view is that Republicans have been too focused on promoting individualism and corporatism over the last generation at the expense of communities and churches. (I wrote last year on his brand of right-wing populism and emergence as a new variety of culture warrior.)

His broader proposal for the fourth phase of the congressional response is on brand in that regard. He wants to shore up the medical supply chain by requiring that certain products be produced in the United States. He calls for federally backed, low-interest financing for capital expenditures by firms that bring jobs “onshore” from overseas to manufacture products there have been shortages of during the pandemic. He wants to require that companies maintain “rainy day funds” so that they have liquidity cushions during future crises.

“Frankly, it's a little bit of a constraint on size because the larger the entity, the more cushion you have to have,” Hawley said. “It puts a curb on concentration. What we don't want to see coming out of this crisis is a further acceleration of our trend towards consolidation of the American economy. My nightmare scenario is that small businesses across the country fail in this crisis, and we come out of this further consolidated.”

A man crosses the street in deserted downtown Kansas City, Mo., on what would normally be a busy workday. (Charlie Riedel/AP)

The 40-year-old clerked for Chief Justice John Roberts, which is how he met his wife, Erin, a fellow clerk. She's still practicing law and teaching, and worked to keep their kids, Elijah, 7, and Blaise, 5, occupied as we chatted. They moved to his home state a few years back so he could teach constitutional law at the University of Missouri. He was elected the state's attorney general in 2016 and became the youngest member of the Senate in 2019.

Hawley fears that small towns like the one he grew up in will not recover without dramatic government action. He's worried that vultures will take advantage of the crisis to line their own pockets. That's why the senator wants to strengthen disclosure requirements that would make it harder for activist investors and hedge funds to buy up companies and force layoffs and liquidations.

“The number one thing is that this crisis should not be opportunity for profiteering by Wall Street,” Hawley said. “It should not be that a select few folks on Wall Street are able to make out like bandits from this while the rest of our nation suffers.”

Share The Daily 202

Listen to the podcast

---

Dispatches from the front lines

---

Content from Facebook

Resources for small businesses during the COVID-19 outbreak

We know it's a challenging time for small businesses. To help, Facebook set up a resource hub with information, from how to set up a customer service plan to experimenting with online events.

Visit our new Business Resource Hub for more.

---

Cash-starved hospitals are cutting staff.

“Hospitals across the country have deferred or canceled non-urgent surgeries to free up bed space and equipment for covid-19 patients. But that triage maneuver cut off a main source of income, causing huge losses that have forced some hospitals to let go of health-care workers as they struggle to treat infected patients,” Shane Harris, Justin Sondel and Gregory Schneider report. “Hospital executives and analysts emphasize that not all the furloughed or fired workers are directly involved in treating covid-19 patients. Others say the furloughs help reduce the number of people in hospitals, slowing the spread of the virus. But the absences have put a strain on doctors, nurses and other health-care workers treating a surge of patients that has already stretched some health-care systems to the breaking point. Remaining front-line workers face longer hours, and some have seen their pay cut and benefits reduced. For hospitals already in bad financial shape before the outbreak, the loss of income has raised doubts about their ability to keep treating patients.”

- As patients die in their hallways, Michigan hospitals are running out of body bags and staffers. (MLive)
- The virus is the first big test for Chicago’s Rush University Medical Center, which was built after Sept. 11, 2001, to handle mass casualty events. As the number of cases flew past 16,000 in Illinois, Rush has about 20 percent of the ventilated cases in the state. (Mark Guarino)

- The Post assembled data to analyze the availability of the critical-care resources needed to treat severely ill patients who require extended hospitalization across the nation. We conducted a stress test of sorts on available resources, which revealed a patchwork of shortcomings in cities and towns where the full force of the virus has yet to hit and where people may not be following social distancing orders. (Amy Brittain, Ted Mellnik, Dan Keating and Joe Fox)
- A rural hospital in Sweet Springs, Mo., shut down, forcing area residents to drive long distances if they're stricken. (News & Observer)
- A 25-bed rural hospital in Louisiana has become the lifeline to a hot spot where 22,000 live. Previously battered by hurricanes and a flood, the facility is struggling to keep up with a crush of patients. It has just two ventilators. (Guardian)

The National Guard is retrieving dead bodies in New York.

New York City has 87,725 confirmed cases of covid-19, including 21,571 hospitalizations and 4,778 deaths. “At a base down the road from Niagara Falls, a specialized unit from the New York Air National Guard had spent years preparing for one of the military’s grimmest missions: find and recover the bodies of those killed in a chemical attack, natural disaster or other mass tragedy,” Paul Sonne reports. “But when their deployment orders arrived March 21, they were sent to do a job their practice sessions didn’t foresee. ... [New York City’s] medical examiners, who pick up the bodies of those who die unattended by a physician or in unexplained circumstances, were on the verge of being overwhelmed. ... [So they] have been carrying body after body out of New York City homes and apartment buildings, in some cases winding 200 pounds down the narrow staircases of walk-ups without an elevator. ... They are aiding the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner, ... which typically collects about 25 bodies for investigation in New York City on a normal day and now is retrieving as many as 150.”

- Frank Gabrin, a New York physician, became the first American ER doctor to die from the coronavirus. “I have to admit,” he wrote on Facebook as the virus spread, “I am having some anxiety.” He was 60. (Guardian)
- Tasha Smith, a nurse for New York’s Mount Sinai Health System, was fired after complaining to her boss that she was uncomfortable treating coronavirus patients without proper equipment. The hospital says she was terminated because she walked off the job. Smith, who had worked there for three years, said her situation has frightened other nurses, who share her fears. “They’re afraid to speak up,” she said. “I was made an example of.” (NYT)
- “This is worse than the Sept. 11 attacks,” Luis Lopez, a paramedic in the city, told the New York Post. “Sept. 11 was a tragedy that happened quick. This is different. This is unsettling. It’s an odd feeling. You think it’s the flu. People are just dropping.”
- The city’s plan for the continuing surge in bodies is still unclear. While the medical examiner’s office told the New York Daily News that the city’s morgues don’t “currently anticipate reaching capacity,” the mayor’s office said unclaimed coronavirus victims could soon be buried on Hart Island, a public cemetery.

Parties went on as the coronavirus spread. Now comes the pain.

“In the early days of the United States’ struggle with the coronavirus pandemic — and even well beyond — birthdays, weddings, dances, club meetings, concerts, and other large get-togethers continued more or less as normal. The virus was here, but the party went on,” Griff Witte and Chelsea Janes report.

- The virus is ripping through the Navajo Nation, killing 20 people so far on the reservation, compared with 16 in the entire state of New Mexico, which has a population 13 times larger. (NYT)
- A man in Florida was arrested on kidnapping and murder charges

after he allegedly plotted to obscure his wife's disappearance by pretending she was in the hospital with a severe coronavirus case. (Katie Shepherd)

- A dying coronavirus patient asked Alexa for help. After Lou Ann Dagen, 66, became one of six residents at a nursing home in Cedar Springs, Mich., to die of covid-19, her sister discovered voice recordings on an Echo device as she pleaded for help while her condition deteriorated. "How do I get help?" she asked in the recording. "How do I get to the police?" (NYT)
- New Hampshire Gov. Chris Sununu (R) will allow mail-in voting in November because of the outbreak. Sununu said the state is considering other voting alternatives, too, including "drive-up voting." (Colby Itkowitz and Amy Gardner)

Some cities and counties are making masks mandatory.

Governments in Los Angeles, Miami and Montgomery County in the D.C. suburbs enacted measures that order residents to wear face coverings when visiting grocery stores, pharmacies and other essential businesses. The CDC only recommends doing so. (Rebecca Tan)

Alabama will no longer enforce its anti-masking law. In the 1940s, as the state tried to distance itself from the Ku Klux Klan, lawmakers banned anyone from wearing a mask in public. The only previous exception was for revelers wearing decorative eyewear during Mardi Gras celebrations. (Teo Armus)

"I spent six days on a ventilator with covid-19. It saved me, but my life is not the same."

"Many patients who come off ventilators suffer lasting physical, mental and emotional issues, including cognitive deficits, lost jobs and psychological issues, such as depression and post-traumatic stress disorder," writes David Lat, founding editor of Above the Law. "I used to run marathons; now I can't walk across a room or up a flight of stairs without getting winded. I can't go around the block for fresh air unless my husband pushes me in a wheelchair. ... Being on the ventilator for almost a week damaged my vocal cords, and now my voice is extremely hoarse. My speech pathologist expressed optimism that the damage is not permanent. Only time will tell. I'm not complaining. I am incredibly grateful to be alive. And for that, I have the ventilator to thank."

Coronavirus deaths hit a new high in the D.C. region.

"The District, Maryland and Virginia on Thursday reported 53 additional coronavirus fatalities combined, another single-day record, as the region's leaders braced for the death toll to continue rising and confronted the disproportionate impact the pandemic was having on the area's black residents," Fenit Nirappil, Ovetta Wiggins and John Harden report. "The three jurisdictions now have a combined 11,766 confirmed coronavirus cases and 280 deaths. ... Virginia reported 34 fatalities Thursday morning — more than the previous six days combined. Officials said the single-day jump is partially because of delays in adding deaths at a Richmond-area long-term care facility to the state tally. ... The District reported five new deaths and Maryland reported 14 new fatalities. Neither marked a significant increase."

- Maryland for the first time also released racial demographics of its cases and fatalities, confirming that black residents are disproportionately affected in all three jurisdictions. Maryland is about 30 percent black, but African Americans made up half of the deaths and cases where race is known. In the District, all five of the new victims disclosed on Thursday were black. In a city that is less than 50 percent black, more than 60 percent of the 33 fatalities are African American.
- D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) said the District would launch a hotline to deliver essential items, including groceries, at no-cost to those under self-quarantine or unable to leave their homes.
- A surge of spring cleaning, inspired by people stuck at home because of the the virus, is leaving residential garbage cans overflowing, putting stress on suburban trash collection systems. Jurisdictions are collecting up to 40 percent more residential trash, even as they encourage residents to forgo yard waste disposal or tidying up. (Justin Moyer and Jahi Chikwendiu)

---

More on the federal response

Trump is pushing to reopen much of the country next month.

“Behind closed doors, Trump — concerned with the sagging economy — has sought a strategy for resuming business activity by May 1,” Matt Zapotosky, Josh Dawsey, Jose Del Real and William Wan report. “In phone calls with outside advisers, Trump has even floated trying to reopen much of the country before the end of this month, when the current federal recommendations to avoid social gatherings and work from home expire ... Trump regularly looks at unemployment and stock market numbers, complaining that they are hurting his presidency and reelection prospects ... The president ... asks regularly: ‘When can we reopen?’ ...

“There have already been vigorous debates, with public-health experts and some presidential advisers warning against reopening too soon, while key members of the president's economic team — and some conservatives in the vice president's orbit — push for a quicker return to normality. Among those pushing to reopen the economy ... is Marc Short, the vice president's chief of staff and a top adviser to Trump. Short has argued there will be fewer deaths than the models show and that the country has already overreacted ... Anthony S. Fauci, the nation's top expert on infectious diseases, said Thursday that some places might reopen sooner than others, and that hard-hit New York, for example, shouldn't loosen its restrictions until there was a 'very steep decline' in infections. 'It's not going to be one size fits all,' he said.

"New York Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D) said Thursday that hospitalizations and intensive-care admissions in the state have fallen, suggesting progress. But he stressed that he did not know when New Yorkers would be able to begin a return to normal life. 'We're not going to go from red to green; we're going to go from red to yellow,' Cuomo said. ... [Jerome] Powell, the Federal Reserve chair, notably did not advocate a May reopening, saying such steps were more likely after July. And even some close to Trump seemed wary of supporting an early date."

History is at risk of repeating itself: A 2007 study funded by the CDC examined the fate of several U.S. cities after they eased restrictions too soon during the 1918 flu pandemic. Those cities believed they were on the other side of the peak, and, like today, had residents and business leaders worried about the economy. Once these cities lifted the restrictions, however, their trajectory soon turned into a double-humped curve with two peaks instead of one. In many cases, the second outbreak was worse than the first.

Ohio's early intervention is paying off. With about 5,100 cases, it has fewer than a third the number of people with the coronavirus as three comparably sized states — Michigan, Pennsylvania and Illinois. And Ohio, under the leadership of Gov. Mike DeWine (R), has just a small fraction of the deaths reported in those states, Lenny Bernstein reports.

Washington state is flattening the curve: The Seattle region's use of early intervention policies, and its expansion of widespread testing, has helped the region begin to bring the virus to heel. Although King County was the site of the nation's first deadly outbreak, the latest data shows the rate of infection slowing and hospitalizations dropping. The numbers of deaths and new cases are expected to peak this week, Robert Klemko reports.

But eight Republican governors still refuse to issue stay-at-home orders.

The leaders of Arkansas, Iowa, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Utah and Wyoming have yet to impose stay-at-home orders for everyone in their states, despite some being urged to do so this week by Surgeon General Jerome Adams and White House chief of staff Mark Meadows, per Bloomberg News.

- Nebraska Gov. Pete Ricketts issued a proclamation urging residents to stay home for the next three weeks, but he explicitly said it is not a shelter-in-place order. (KCAU9)
- Oklahoma Gov. Kevin Stitt argued that his safer-at-home order is essentially the same as shelter-in-place orders issued elsewhere, but the directive only says that people over 65 or who have serious underlying medical conditions should stay home. (Oklahoman)
- Iowa Gov. Kim Reynolds, who ordered nonessential businesses to close, said the virus is not poised to affect Iowa's June primary election. The state's public health director said Iowa is "starting to see our curve kind of flatten out." There are 1,270 cases in the state, with 29 deaths. (Des Moines Register)
- North Dakota Gov. Doug Burgum cited low case numbers – 251 total – as the reason why he's not ordering people to stay home. The state does have a self-quarantine order that asks people to stay at home for

14 days after returning from about three dozen states, including neighboring Minnesota. (CBS Minnesota)

- Meanwhile, Kansas Gov. Laura Kelly (D) sued the state's Republican-controlled legislative council after it revoked her executive order that limits church gatherings before Easter. Kelly said the "purely political move" put Kansans at risk. (Meagan Flynn and Isaac Stanley-Becker)

Quote of the day

"Everybody is assuming, well, once we get through this, we're done. I wouldn't be so quick to assume that," said New York Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D). "This virus has been ahead of us from Day One. We've underestimated the enemy, and that is always dangerous, my friends. We should not do that again." (Heather Long, Matt Zapposky and David Fahrenthold)

Senators clashed over how best to help small businesses.

"Competing proposals for coronavirus relief failed in the Senate on Thursday morning, as Democrats objected to a proposed $250 billion increase in a small business program and Republicans shot down the counter-offer," Erica Werner and Mike DeBonis report. "Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) accused Democrats of treating ‘working Americans as political hostages’ by refusing to add more money to the ‘Paycheck Protection Program,’ a new $350 billion small business loan program that is being overwhelmed by demand. ... Democrats disputed that the program was in immediate need of more funds, saying they wanted changes to ensure fairness and transparency. They are also seeking major funding increases for hospitals and health systems and cities and states, along with a 15 percent increase in food stamp benefits. ... Democrats’ proposal would allocate the additional $250 billion for small businesses, but specify that only half of that would go to the Paycheck Protection Program. The other half would include $60 billion for community-based lenders, and $65 billion for disaster loans and disaster grants, among other items."

- About 70 percent of small businesses have applied for an emergency loan. It’s unclear how many have received them. (Renaë Merle)

Trump has used emergency public health powers to expel 10,000 migrants at the border.

The administration is using the contagion to give Customs and Border Protection broad authority to bypass immigration laws, Nick Miroff reports. “The measures have allowed the agency to quickly turn away most unauthorized migrants — sending them back across the U.S.-Mexico border. The moves have dramatically slashed the number of detainees held in border stations, where they fear the coronavirus could spread ... CBP has fewer than 100 detainees in custody, down from nearly 20,000 at this time last year during the border crisis ... Since the implementation of the rapid expulsions, migration levels have fallen to near their lowest point in decades, with unlawful border crossings down 56 percent, said acting CBP commissioner Mark Morgan. He also acknowledged that the United States has all but closed its borders to asylum seekers who are fleeing persecution, including those who attempt to enter legally at U.S. ports of entry.”

- A federal judge ordered ICE to disclose how many detained migrants are being released in five southern states under expanded coronavirus medical reviews. (Spencer Hsu)
-

The foreign fallout

A patient suffering from covid-19 is treated in the intensive care unit at Circolo Hospital in Varese, Italy. (Flavio Lo Scalzo/Reuters)

An advertisement featuring a photograph of a woman smiling and holding a young child. Overlaid on the right side of the image is the text "BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM" in large, white, bold, sans-serif capital letters. At the bottom left, there are two logos: a blue cross and a blue shield, followed by the text "BlueCross BlueShield Association". At the bottom right, there is a blue button with the text "PASS THE MOMNIBUS" and a white right-pointing arrow.

Powered by  LivIntent

The E.U. reached a deal to help its hardest-hit countries.

“In Italy, nationalist politicians for years have bashed the European Union, but this time it’s been the pro-E.U. establishment in Rome that wondered whether the bloc was failing one of its most critical tests,” Chico Harlan, Michael Birnbaum and Stefano Pitrelli report. “The frustration in Italy started building after E.U. countries last month were slow to come to Italy’s aid with medical supplies. The E.U. belatedly stepped up its efforts, but resentment crested as leaders bickered over how to support the bloc’s stricken economies. A Thursday meeting of E.U. finance ministers ended with a $590 billion compromise after days of bitterness, but it was clear that tough discussions would continue over future rounds of rescue efforts. ... The deal — which still needs to be signed off by national leaders — would use the euro zone’s bailout fund to offer up to $262 billion in credit lines to struggling countries. In a nod to Italy’s concerns, the demands placed on countries that sought the money would be minimal. An additional $109 billion would go toward support for employment programs that aim to avoid layoffs. Other programs would support struggling businesses and help fund medical relief efforts. And the agreement left open the possibility that euro zone countries eventually share borrowing costs.”

- British Prime Minister Boris Johnson left the intensive care unit but remains hospitalized in London. (Reuters)

The virus may “reactivate” in cured patients, the South Korean CDC warned.

“About 51 patients [classified] as having been cured in South Korea have tested positive again ... Rather than being infected again, the virus may have been reactivated in these people, given they tested positive again shortly after being released from quarantine,” Bloomberg News reports. “A patient is deemed fully recovered when two tests conducted with a 24-hour interval show negative results. The Korean CDC will conduct an epidemiological probe into the cases ... Fear of re-infection in recovered patients is also growing in [China] after reports that some tested positive again -- and even died from the disease -- after supposedly recovering and leaving the hospital. There's little understanding of why this happens, although some believe that the problem may lie in inconsistencies in test results."

- Tens of millions who carry HIV and tuberculosis in the developing world are among the most vulnerable to the coronavirus. The countries most at risk include South Africa, home to the world's largest number of HIV-positive people, and India, which has the highest number of tuberculosis cases in the world. (Max Bearak and Joanna Slater)
- Fifteen passengers from the Ruby Princess cruise ship have died, and about 660 have been infected, making it the deadliest known outbreak on any ship and the biggest individual contributor to cases in Australia. The Australian police have assembled a team under the leadership of a homicide detective to investigate the ship and its owner, Carnival, the world's largest vacation travel company. (A. Odysseus Patrick)
- Russia and the Saudis agreed on some cuts in oil production to end the current price war. Analysts cautioned that the cuts are probably too little to make much difference as the global economy fizzles. (Will Englund, Isabelle Khurshudyan and Dino Grandoni)
- "World of Warcraft" experienced a pandemic in 2005 when a damaging effect called "Corrupted Blood" spread through the video-game world, forcing players to search frantically for news about what was going on. The incident has shaped one epidemiologist's understanding of human behavior during a crisis like the one we're living through now. (Jhaan Elker)

---

Social media speed read

Trump once again tweeted about the ratings for his briefings, even as hundreds of Americans died. This drew criticism from some voices on the right:

Many on the left are saying the crisis shows why a new era of big government is needed:

A Times reporter who was in Wuhan left the city now that the travel ban has been lifted:

Chris Buckley @ChuBailiang · 4h

Goodbye for now Wuhan. I'm leaving after 78 days. It's been an unforgettable privilege. I haven't been able to report or say much since my visa expired mid. Feb, but I leave with profound memories and friendships. I'll be in quarantine in Beijing while my next steps are decided.

Chris Buckley @ChuBailiang

It's a relief to be a step closer to rejoining family and friends. Right now, though, I feel sad to leave Wuhan, and gratitude for the many people who helped there — colleagues, the staff at my hotel, strangers who stopped to tell their stories, new friends now friends for life.

1,074 1:38 AM - Apr 10, 2020

133 people are talking about this

A new Trump campaign attack ad against Joe Biden, trying to link him to China, appeared to suggest that an Asian American politician is not American:

 Edward-Isaac Dove
@IsaacDovere

Latest Trump ad features a montage of Biden meeting with Chinese officials. Amid that montage at the :39 mark: a clip of him with Gary Locke, the former governor of Washington/Commerce secretary/ambassador to China, who is Asian-American, but... American
youtu.be/Nv7yVCwv6NU

3,044 11:53 PM - Apr 9, 2020

1,326 people are talking about this

The top of One World Trade Center shines blue in honor of all the health-care workers on the front lines:

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert, who has performed without an audience for weeks, shared tips for priests who plan on performing Easter services in empty churches:

Seth Meyers doesn't think Trump's coronavirus failures will be quickly forgotten:

And the "Daily Show" rounded up the do's and don'ts of video chatting:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Post Most for the most popular and interesting stories of the day, from politics to opinions to world news, to keep you in the know. In your inbox, every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Daily 202: GOP senator's coronavirus plan: Get federal government to cover 80 percent of wages.
Date: Friday, April 10, 2020 8:39:36 AM

Powered by LivIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

PowerPost from The Washington Post

The Daily 202

Intelligence for leaders.

Presented by Facebook

By James Hohmann
with Mariana Alfaro
 Email

GOP senator's coronavirus plan: Get federal government to cover 80 percent of wages.

Sen. Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) wants the United States to follow Europe's lead. That's not something conservatives like him normally say, but he believes desperate times call for desperate measures.

The rising star on the right proposes that the federal government replicate what's been working in the United Kingdom to keep layoffs limited and immediately begin covering 80 percent of worker wages at all private businesses, up to the national median wage, until the emergency caused by the novel coronavirus is over. He also advocates paying financial bonuses for businesses to rehire workers laid off over the past month.

As party leaders squabble over how best to expand the pool of money available for small businesses through the Paycheck Protection Program, what the freshman senator envisions in the fourth phase of congressional action is vastly more ambitious and costly than anything his Republican colleagues have outlined. Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) has cast doubt on the need for another gargantuan spending measure after the third phase cost $2 trillion. But Hawley is adamant that half measures won't avert another Great Depression.

City employees in Hialeah, Fla., hand out unemployment applications to people in their vehicles on Wednesday. They've moved to printed forms because the state's unemployment website keeps crashing under the strain of new claims. (Joe Raedle/Getty Images)

The Labor Department said Thursday that more than 17 million Americans have filed for unemployment benefits in the past four weeks, including 6.6 million last week. Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell unveiled over $2 trillion in new loans in his latest bid to keep the economy afloat. JPMorgan Chase now predicts the unemployment rate will hit 20 percent, and the economy will shrink by 40 percent, in the second quarter.

“Events are overtaking us, and so now we’ve got to adapt. That’s what I’m trying to do here,” Hawley said toward the end of a 35-minute phone interview from his house in Springfield, Mo. “I personally do not want to ride the roller coaster, not knowing where the bottom is, and that’s what I’m afraid that we’re on right now. It’s like, ‘Wow, we’re going down, down, down, down, down, down, down.’ Nobody can see the bottom. I personally don’t care to find out where the bottom might be!”

The Stanford-trained historian and Yale-educated lawyer has spoken at length with several economists, obsessively studied what other Western countries are doing to stanch their economic wounds and intensively read about what worked and what didn’t during the New Deal. “One of the things that I take away from that study – thinking back through our history, thinking back to the ‘20s and the ‘30s – is that one of the things you have to be willing to do is be adaptable,” Hawley said. “You can’t get locked into the mentality that ‘this is the only way we have to deal with this situation.’ You’ve got to be willing to say, ‘if that’s not working, let’s try something else.’”

Hawley insists that his preferred approach, while unorthodox, is not inherently unconservative because government policies have effectively blocked people from working – for good public health reasons, he hastens to add. This makes it only fair to compensate workers for the duration of the crisis, he argues, adding that relief should focus more on helping people than corporations.

“The only reason that you deliver the money through the employer is the employer pays the wages,” he said. “My view is that the American worker shouldn’t be asked to shoulder the burden of unemployment when they haven't done anything wrong. In these extraordinary times, I think the government ought to step forward and say we are going to protect as many jobs as we can. We ought to make it our goal to protect every job.”

I asked Hawley whether he worries that the federal government will accumulate too much power during this crisis and never give it back. “I guess, at the moment, I'm more concerned about chaos that leads to 20 and 30 percent unemployment,” he said.

Sen. Josh Hawley speaks to reporters at the Capitol last month. (Al Drago/Bloomberg News)

---

Content from Facebook

$100M grant program for small businesses impacted by COVID-19

Know a small business in need of extra support right now?
We are offering $100 million to provide businesses with resources they need during COVID-19.

Get started: Learn more.

---

Hawley, who defeated Democratic incumbent Claire McCaskill in the 2018 midterms, has been a vocal supporter of President Trump and consistently voted for his agenda. He has also emerged as an outspoken critic of corporate power, especially large technology companies, and emphasizes that the right needs to evolve to offer more help for those being left behind in the gig economy. Hawley is part of the small conservative clique in Congress that's challenging what's increasingly being called free-market fundamentalism. His view is that Republicans have been too focused on promoting individualism and corporatism over the last generation at the expense of communities and churches. (I wrote last year on his brand of right-wing populism and emergence as a new variety of culture warrior.)

His broader proposal for the fourth phase of the congressional response is on brand in that regard. He wants to shore up the medical supply chain by requiring that certain products be produced in the United States. He calls for federally backed, low-interest financing for capital expenditures by firms that bring jobs “onshore” from overseas to manufacture products there have been shortages of during the pandemic. He wants to require that companies maintain “rainy day funds” so that they have liquidity cushions during future crises.

“Frankly, it's a little bit of a constraint on size because the larger the entity, the more cushion you have to have,” Hawley said. “It puts a curb on concentration. What we don't want to see coming out of this crisis is a further acceleration of our trend towards consolidation of the American economy. My nightmare scenario is that small businesses across the country fail in this crisis, and we come out of this further consolidated.”

A man crosses the street in deserted downtown Kansas City, Mo., on what would normally be a busy workday. (Charlie Riedel/AP)

The 40-year-old clerked for Chief Justice John Roberts, which is how he met his wife, Erin, a fellow clerk. She's still practicing law and teaching, and worked to keep their kids, Elijah, 7, and Blaise, 5, occupied as we chatted. They moved to his home state a few years back so he could teach constitutional law at the University of Missouri. He was elected the state's attorney general in 2016 and became the youngest member of the Senate in 2019.

Hawley fears that small towns like the one he grew up in will not recover without dramatic government action. He's worried that vultures will take advantage of the crisis to line their own pockets. That's why the senator wants to strengthen disclosure requirements that would make it harder for activist investors and hedge funds to buy up companies and force layoffs and liquidations.

“The number one thing is that this crisis should not be opportunity for profiteering by Wall Street,” Hawley said. “It should not be that a select few folks on Wall Street are able to make out like bandits from this while the rest of our nation suffers.”

Share The Daily 202 f t ✉

Listen to the podcast ▶

---

Dispatches from the front lines

---

Content from Facebook

Resources for small businesses during the COVID-19 outbreak

We know it's a challenging time for small businesses. To help, Facebook set up a resource hub with information, from how to set up a customer service plan to experimenting with online events.

Visit our new Business Resource Hub for more.

---

Cash-starved hospitals are cutting staff.

“Hospitals across the country have deferred or canceled non-urgent surgeries to free up bed space and equipment for covid-19 patients. But that triage maneuver cut off a main source of income, causing huge losses that have forced some hospitals to let go of health-care workers as they struggle to treat infected patients,” Shane Harris, Justin Sondel and Gregory Schneider report. “Hospital executives and analysts emphasize that not all the furloughed or fired workers are directly involved in treating covid-19 patients. Others say the furloughs help reduce the number of people in hospitals, slowing the spread of the virus. But the absences have put a strain on doctors, nurses and other health-care workers treating a surge of patients that has already stretched some health-care systems to the breaking point. Remaining front-line workers face longer hours, and some have seen their pay cut and benefits reduced. For hospitals already in bad financial shape before the outbreak, the loss of income has raised doubts about their ability to keep treating patients.”

- As patients die in their hallways, Michigan hospitals are running out of body bags and staffers. (MLive)
- The virus is the first big test for Chicago’s Rush University Medical Center, which was built after Sept. 11, 2001, to handle mass casualty events. As the number of cases flew past 16,000 in Illinois, Rush has about 20 percent of the ventilated cases in the state. (Mark Guarino)

- The Post assembled data to analyze the availability of the critical-care resources needed to treat severely ill patients who require extended hospitalization across the nation. We conducted a stress test of sorts on available resources, which revealed a patchwork of shortcomings in cities and towns where the full force of the virus has yet to hit and where people may not be following social distancing orders. (Amy Brittain, Ted Mellnik, Dan Keating and Joe Fox)
- A rural hospital in Sweet Springs, Mo., shut down, forcing area residents to drive long distances if they're stricken. (News & Observer)
- A 25-bed rural hospital in Louisiana has become the lifeline to a hot spot where 22,000 live. Previously battered by hurricanes and a flood, the facility is struggling to keep up with a crush of patients. It has just two ventilators. (Guardian)

The National Guard is retrieving dead bodies in New York.

New York City has 87,725 confirmed cases of covid-19, including 21,571 hospitalizations and 4,778 deaths. “At a base down the road from Niagara Falls, a specialized unit from the New York Air National Guard had spent years preparing for one of the military’s grimmest missions: find and recover the bodies of those killed in a chemical attack, natural disaster or other mass tragedy,” Paul Sonne reports. “But when their deployment orders arrived March 21, they were sent to do a job their practice sessions didn’t foresee. ... [New York City’s] medical examiners, who pick up the bodies of those who die unattended by a physician or in unexplained circumstances, were on the verge of being overwhelmed. ... [So they] have been carrying body after body out of New York City homes and apartment buildings, in some cases winding 200 pounds down the narrow staircases of walk-ups without an elevator. ... They are aiding the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner, ... which typically collects about 25 bodies for investigation in New York City on a normal day and now is retrieving as many as 150.”

- Frank Gabrin, a New York physician, became the first American ER doctor to die from the coronavirus. “I have to admit,” he wrote on Facebook as the virus spread, “I am having some anxiety.” He was 60. (Guardian)
- Tasha Smith, a nurse for New York’s Mount Sinai Health System, was fired after complaining to her boss that she was uncomfortable treating coronavirus patients without proper equipment. The hospital says she was terminated because she walked off the job. Smith, who had worked there for three years, said her situation has frightened other nurses, who share her fears. “They’re afraid to speak up,” she said. “I was made an example of.” (NYT)
- “This is worse than the Sept. 11 attacks,” Luis Lopez, a paramedic in the city, told the New York Post. “Sept. 11 was a tragedy that happened quick. This is different. This is unsettling. It’s an odd feeling. You think it’s the flu. People are just dropping.”
- The city’s plan for the continuing surge in bodies is still unclear. While the medical examiner’s office told the New York Daily News that the city’s morgues don’t “currently anticipate reaching capacity,” the mayor’s office said unclaimed coronavirus victims could soon be buried on Hart Island, a public cemetery.

Parties went on as the coronavirus spread. Now comes the pain.

“In the early days of the United States’ struggle with the coronavirus pandemic — and even well beyond — birthdays, weddings, dances, club meetings, concerts, and other large get-togethers continued more or less as normal. The virus was here, but the party went on,” Griff Witte and Chelsea Janes report.

- The virus is ripping through the Navajo Nation, killing 20 people so far on the reservation, compared with 16 in the entire state of New Mexico, which has a population 13 times larger. (NYT)
- A man in Florida was arrested on kidnapping and murder charges

after he allegedly plotted to obscure his wife's disappearance by pretending she was in the hospital with a severe coronavirus case. (Katie Shepherd)

- A dying coronavirus patient asked Alexa for help. After Lou Ann Dagen, 66, became one of six residents at a nursing home in Cedar Springs, Mich., to die of covid-19, her sister discovered voice recordings on an Echo device as she pleaded for help while her condition deteriorated. "How do I get help?" she asked in the recording. "How do I get to the police?" (NYT)
- New Hampshire Gov. Chris Sununu (R) will allow mail-in voting in November because of the outbreak. Sununu said the state is considering other voting alternatives, too, including "drive-up voting." (Colby Itkowitz and Amy Gardner)

Some cities and counties are making masks mandatory.

Governments in Los Angeles, Miami and Montgomery County in the D.C. suburbs enacted measures that order residents to wear face coverings when visiting grocery stores, pharmacies and other essential businesses. The CDC only recommends doing so. (Rebecca Tan)

Alabama will no longer enforce its anti-masking law. In the 1940s, as the state tried to distance itself from the Ku Klux Klan, lawmakers banned anyone from wearing a mask in public. The only previous exception was for revelers wearing decorative eyewear during Mardi Gras celebrations. (Teo Armus)

"I spent six days on a ventilator with covid-19. It saved me, but my life is not the same."

"Many patients who come off ventilators suffer lasting physical, mental and emotional issues, including cognitive deficits, lost jobs and psychological issues, such as depression and post-traumatic stress disorder," writes David Lat, founding editor of Above the Law. "I used to run marathons; now I can't walk across a room or up a flight of stairs without getting winded. I can't go around the block for fresh air unless my husband pushes me in a wheelchair. ... Being on the ventilator for almost a week damaged my vocal cords, and now my voice is extremely hoarse. My speech pathologist expressed optimism that the damage is not permanent. Only time will tell. I'm not complaining. I am incredibly grateful to be alive. And for that, I have the ventilator to thank."

Coronavirus deaths hit a new high in the D.C. region.

"The District, Maryland and Virginia on Thursday reported 53 additional coronavirus fatalities combined, another single-day record, as the region's leaders braced for the death toll to continue rising and confronted the disproportionate impact the pandemic was having on the area's black residents," Fenit Nirappil, Ovetta Wiggins and John Harden report. "The three jurisdictions now have a combined 11,766 confirmed coronavirus cases and 280 deaths. ... Virginia reported 34 fatalities Thursday morning — more than the previous six days combined. Officials said the single-day jump is partially because of delays in adding deaths at a Richmond-area long-term care facility to the state tally. ... The District reported five new deaths and Maryland reported 14 new fatalities. Neither marked a significant increase."

- Maryland for the first time also released racial demographics of its cases and fatalities, confirming that black residents are disproportionately affected in all three jurisdictions. Maryland is about 30 percent black, but African Americans made up half of the deaths and cases where race is known. In the District, all five of the new victims disclosed on Thursday were black. In a city that is less than 50 percent black, more than 60 percent of the 33 fatalities are African American.
- D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) said the District would launch a hotline to deliver essential items, including groceries, at no-cost to those under self-quarantine or unable to leave their homes.
- A surge of spring cleaning, inspired by people stuck at home because of the the virus, is leaving residential garbage cans overflowing, putting stress on suburban trash collection systems. Jurisdictions are collecting up to 40 percent more residential trash, even as they encourage residents to forgo yard waste disposal or tidying up. (Justin Moyer and Jahi Chikwendiu)

---

More on the federal response

Trump is pushing to reopen much of the country next month.

“Behind closed doors, Trump — concerned with the sagging economy — has sought a strategy for resuming business activity by May 1,” Matt Zapotosky, Josh Dawsey, Jose Del Real and William Wan report. “In phone calls with outside advisers, Trump has even floated trying to reopen much of the country before the end of this month, when the current federal recommendations to avoid social gatherings and work from home expire ... Trump regularly looks at unemployment and stock market numbers, complaining that they are hurting his presidency and reelection prospects ... The president ... asks regularly: ‘When can we reopen?’ ...

“There have already been vigorous debates, with public-health experts and some presidential advisers warning against reopening too soon, while key members of the president's economic team — and some conservatives in the vice president's orbit — push for a quicker return to normality. Among those pushing to reopen the economy ... is Marc Short, the vice president's chief of staff and a top adviser to Trump. Short has argued there will be fewer deaths than the models show and that the country has already overreacted ... Anthony S. Fauci, the nation's top expert on infectious diseases, said Thursday that some places might reopen sooner than others, and that hard-hit New York, for example, shouldn't loosen its restrictions until there was a 'very steep decline' in infections. 'It's not going to be one size fits all,' he said.

"New York Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D) said Thursday that hospitalizations and intensive-care admissions in the state have fallen, suggesting progress. But he stressed that he did not know when New Yorkers would be able to begin a return to normal life. 'We're not going to go from red to green; we're going to go from red to yellow,' Cuomo said. ... [Jerome] Powell, the Federal Reserve chair, notably did not advocate a May reopening, saying such steps were more likely after July. And even some close to Trump seemed wary of supporting an early date."

History is at risk of repeating itself: A 2007 study funded by the CDC examined the fate of several U.S. cities after they eased restrictions too soon during the 1918 flu pandemic. Those cities believed they were on the other side of the peak, and, like today, had residents and business leaders worried about the economy. Once these cities lifted the restrictions, however, their trajectory soon turned into a double-humped curve with two peaks instead of one. In many cases, the second outbreak was worse than the first.

Ohio's early intervention is paying off. With about 5,100 cases, it has fewer than a third the number of people with the coronavirus as three comparably sized states — Michigan, Pennsylvania and Illinois. And Ohio, under the leadership of Gov. Mike DeWine (R), has just a small fraction of the deaths reported in those states, Lenny Bernstein reports.

Washington state is flattening the curve: The Seattle region's use of early intervention policies, and its expansion of widespread testing, has helped the region begin to bring the virus to heel. Although King County was the site of the nation's first deadly outbreak, the latest data shows the rate of infection slowing and hospitalizations dropping. The numbers of deaths and new cases are expected to peak this week, Robert Klemko reports.

But eight Republican governors still refuse to issue stay-at-home orders.

The leaders of Arkansas, Iowa, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Utah and Wyoming have yet to impose stay-at-home orders for everyone in their states, despite some being urged to do so this week by Surgeon General Jerome Adams and White House chief of staff Mark Meadows, per Bloomberg News.

- Nebraska Gov. Pete Ricketts issued a proclamation urging residents to stay home for the next three weeks, but he explicitly said it is not a shelter-in-place order. (KCAU9)
- Oklahoma Gov. Kevin Stitt argued that his safer-at-home order is essentially the same as shelter-in-place orders issued elsewhere, but the directive only says that people over 65 or who have serious underlying medical conditions should stay home. (Oklahoman)
- Iowa Gov. Kim Reynolds, who ordered nonessential businesses to close, said the virus is not poised to affect Iowa's June primary election. The state's public health director said Iowa is "starting to see our curve kind of flatten out." There are 1,270 cases in the state, with 29 deaths. (Des Moines Register)
- North Dakota Gov. Doug Burgum cited low case numbers – 251 total – as the reason why he's not ordering people to stay home. The state does have a self-quarantine order that asks people to stay at home for

14 days after returning from about three dozen states, including neighboring Minnesota. (CBS Minnesota)

- Meanwhile, Kansas Gov. Laura Kelly (D) sued the state’s Republican-controlled legislative council after it revoked her executive order that limits church gatherings before Easter. Kelly said the “purely political move” put Kansans at risk. (Meagan Flynn and Isaac Stanley-Becker)

Quote of the day

“Everybody is assuming, well, once we get through this, we’re done. I wouldn’t be so quick to assume that,” said New York Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D). “This virus has been ahead of us from Day One. We’ve underestimated the enemy, and that is always dangerous, my friends. We should not do that again.” (Heather Long, Matt Zapposky and David Fahrenthold)

Senators clashed over how best to help small businesses.

“Competing proposals for coronavirus relief failed in the Senate on Thursday morning, as Democrats objected to a proposed $250 billion increase in a small business program and Republicans shot down the counter-offer,” Erica Werner and Mike DeBonis report. “Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) accused Democrats of treating ‘working Americans as political hostages’ by refusing to add more money to the ‘Paycheck Protection Program,’ a new $350 billion small business loan program that is being overwhelmed by demand. ... Democrats disputed that the program was in immediate need of more funds, saying they wanted changes to ensure fairness and transparency. They are also seeking major funding increases for hospitals and health systems and cities and states, along with a 15 percent increase in food stamp benefits. ... Democrats’ proposal would allocate the additional $250 billion for small businesses, but specify that only half of that would go to the Paycheck Protection Program. The other half would include $60 billion for community-based lenders, and $65 billion for disaster loans and disaster grants, among other items."

- About 70 percent of small businesses have applied for an emergency loan. It’s unclear how many have received them. (Renaë Merle)

Trump has used emergency public health powers to expel 10,000 migrants at the border.

The administration is using the contagion to give Customs and Border Protection broad authority to bypass immigration laws, Nick Miroff reports. “The measures have allowed the agency to quickly turn away most unauthorized migrants — sending them back across the U.S.-Mexico border. The moves have dramatically slashed the number of detainees held in border stations, where they fear the coronavirus could spread ... CBP has fewer than 100 detainees in custody, down from nearly 20,000 at this time last year during the border crisis ... Since the implementation of the rapid expulsions, migration levels have fallen to near their lowest point in decades, with unlawful border crossings down 56 percent, said acting CBP commissioner Mark Morgan. He also acknowledged that the United States has all but closed its borders to asylum seekers who are fleeing persecution, including those who attempt to enter legally at U.S. ports of entry.”

- A federal judge ordered ICE to disclose how many detained migrants are being released in five southern states under expanded coronavirus medical reviews. (Spencer Hsu)
-

The foreign fallout

A patient suffering from covid-19 is treated in the intensive care unit at Circolo Hospital in Varese, Italy. (Flavio Lo Scalzo/Reuters)

An advertisement for the BlueCross BlueShield Association. The top half features a photograph of a woman with dark hair and a young child, both smiling and looking at each other. Overlaid on the right side of the image is the text "BUILDING A MORE EQUITABLE HEALTH CARE SYSTEM" in large, white, bold, sans-serif capital letters. At the bottom left, there are two logos: a blue shield with a white cross and a blue shield with a white cross, followed by the text "BlueCross BlueShield Association". At the bottom right, there is a blue button with the text "PASS THE MOMNIBUS &gt;" in white. The background of the advertisement is dark.

Powered by  LivIntent

The E.U. reached a deal to help its hardest-hit countries.

“In Italy, nationalist politicians for years have bashed the European Union, but this time it’s been the pro-E.U. establishment in Rome that wondered whether the bloc was failing one of its most critical tests,” Chico Harlan, Michael Birnbaum and Stefano Pitrelli report. “The frustration in Italy started building after E.U. countries last month were slow to come to Italy’s aid with medical supplies. The E.U. belatedly stepped up its efforts, but resentment crested as leaders bickered over how to support the bloc’s stricken economies. A Thursday meeting of E.U. finance ministers ended with a $590 billion compromise after days of bitterness, but it was clear that tough discussions would continue over future rounds of rescue efforts. ... The deal — which still needs to be signed off by national leaders — would use the euro zone’s bailout fund to offer up to $262 billion in credit lines to struggling countries. In a nod to Italy’s concerns, the demands placed on countries that sought the money would be minimal. An additional $109 billion would go toward support for employment programs that aim to avoid layoffs. Other programs would support struggling businesses and help fund medical relief efforts. And the agreement left open the possibility that euro zone countries eventually share borrowing costs.”

- British Prime Minister Boris Johnson left the intensive care unit but remains hospitalized in London. (Reuters)

The virus may “reactivate” in cured patients, the South Korean CDC warned.

“About 51 patients [classified] as having been cured in South Korea have tested positive again ... Rather than being infected again, the virus may have been reactivated in these people, given they tested positive again shortly after being released from quarantine,” Bloomberg News reports. “A patient is deemed fully recovered when two tests conducted with a 24-hour interval show negative results. The Korean CDC will conduct an epidemiological probe into the cases ... Fear of re-infection in recovered patients is also growing in [China] after reports that some tested positive again -- and even died from the disease -- after supposedly recovering and leaving the hospital. There's little understanding of why this happens, although some believe that the problem may lie in inconsistencies in test results."

- Tens of millions who carry HIV and tuberculosis in the developing world are among the most vulnerable to the coronavirus. The countries most at risk include South Africa, home to the world's largest number of HIV-positive people, and India, which has the highest number of tuberculosis cases in the world. (Max Bearak and Joanna Slater)
- Fifteen passengers from the Ruby Princess cruise ship have died, and about 660 have been infected, making it the deadliest known outbreak on any ship and the biggest individual contributor to cases in Australia. The Australian police have assembled a team under the leadership of a homicide detective to investigate the ship and its owner, Carnival, the world's largest vacation travel company. (A. Odysseus Patrick)
- Russia and the Saudis agreed on some cuts in oil production to end the current price war. Analysts cautioned that the cuts are probably too little to make much difference as the global economy fizzles. (Will Englund, Isabelle Khurshudyan and Dino Grandoni)
- "World of Warcraft" experienced a pandemic in 2005 when a damaging effect called "Corrupted Blood" spread through the video-game world, forcing players to search frantically for news about what was going on. The incident has shaped one epidemiologist's understanding of human behavior during a crisis like the one we're living through now. (Jhaan Elker)

---

Social media speed read

Trump once again tweeted about the ratings for his briefings, even as hundreds of Americans died. This drew criticism from some voices on the right:

Many on the left are saying the crisis shows why a new era of big government is needed:

A Times reporter who was in Wuhan left the city now that the travel ban has been lifted:

Chris Buckley @ChuBailiang · 4h

Goodbye for now Wuhan. I'm leaving after 78 days. It's been an unforgettable privilege. I haven't been able to report or say much since my visa expired mid. Feb, but I leave with profound memories and friendships. I'll be in quarantine in Beijing while my next steps are decided.

Chris Buckley @ChuBailiang

It's a relief to be a step closer to rejoining family and friends. Right now, though, I feel sad to leave Wuhan, and gratitude for the many people who helped there — colleagues, the staff at my hotel, strangers who stopped to tell their stories, new friends now friends for life.

1,074 1:38 AM - Apr 10, 2020

133 people are talking about this

A new Trump campaign attack ad against Joe Biden, trying to link him to China, appeared to suggest that an Asian American politician is not American:

 Edward-Isaac Dove
@IsaacDovere

Latest Trump ad features a montage of Biden meeting with Chinese officials. Amid that montage at the :39 mark: a clip of him with Gary Locke, the former governor of Washington/Commerce secretary/ambassador to China, who is Asian-American, but... American
youtu.be/Nv7yVCwv6NU

3,044 11:53 PM - Apr 9, 2020

1,326 people are talking about this

The top of One World Trade Center shines blue in honor of all the health-care workers on the front lines:

Videos of the day

Stephen Colbert, who has performed without an audience for weeks, shared tips for priests who plan on performing Easter services in empty churches:

Seth Meyers doesn't think Trump's coronavirus failures will be quickly forgotten:

And the "Daily Show" rounded up the do's and don'ts of video chatting:

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Post Most for the most popular and interesting stories of the day, from politics to opinions to world news, to keep you in the know. In your inbox, every day. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Daily 202 | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Daily 202 or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: E&E News
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, April 10, 2020 11:07:56 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., April 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. ENERGY MARKETS:

Oil still volatile as Trump touts potential OPEC deal

President Trump welcomed a potential deal among the world's oil-producing nations to prop up oil prices, saying it could avert widespread layoffs, but the price of oil fell as analysts said the deal didn't go far enough to fix the price crash caused by the coronavirus pandemic.

TOP STORIES

2. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

Democrats draft legislation to protect IGs from Trump

3. PANDEMIC:

Ammon Bundy vows to create 'den of rattlesnakes'

4. OFF TOPIC:

Ken Ward Jr. on covering coal with 'sustained outrage'

CORONAVIRUS

5. EPA:

Calif. AG urges agency not to ease enforcement due to virus

6. ENFORCEMENT:

Woman charged for selling fraudulent anti-virus products

7. EPA:

Agency issues guidance on cleanups during pandemic

8. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus exacerbates food shortages in Africa

9. NATIONAL PARKS:

Utah's 5 sites are all closed as Capitol Reef shuts gates

POLITICS

10. MINING:

Despite EPA reprieve, coal waste industry faces dim future

11. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Green group pledges $14M against Trump in swing states

12. PEOPLE:

Former FERC staffer tapped to lead electricity group

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

13. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

BLM advances large-scale N.M. wind project

14. CLIMATE:

Marsh dwellers star in films about La. bayous

15. MINING:

Mont. issues permits for copper project over enviro protests

LAW

---

16. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Judge: NOAA must rethink lobster fishery's impact on whales

17. PIPELINES:

Feds tell court to defer to PHMSA on Line 5 spill plans

ENERGY

---

18. FINANCE:

Greens assail banks' plan to seize shaky fossil fuel assets

19. OIL AND GAS:

ConocoPhillips idles North Slope drill rigs amid outbreak

STATES

---

20. WASHINGTON:

Seattle closing 15 parks, beaches this weekend due to virus

21. ALASKA:

State suspends burn permits to stop wildfires during virus

22. NEW JERSEY:

Forest fire consumes hundreds of acres

23. MAINE:

Snowstorm leaves 250K homes, businesses in dark

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire

covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: denise\_germann@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, April 10, 2020 11:10:59 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., April 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. ENERGY MARKETS:

Oil still volatile as Trump touts potential OPEC deal

President Trump welcomed a potential deal among the world's oil-producing nations to prop up oil prices, saying it could avert widespread layoffs, but the price of oil fell as analysts said the deal didn't go far enough to fix the price crash caused by the coronavirus pandemic.

TOP STORIES

2. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

Democrats draft legislation to protect IGs from Trump

3. PANDEMIC:

Ammon Bundy vows to create 'den of rattlesnakes'

4. OFF TOPIC:

Ken Ward Jr. on covering coal with 'sustained outrage'

CORONAVIRUS

5. EPA:

Calif. AG urges agency not to ease enforcement due to virus

6. ENFORCEMENT:

Woman charged for selling fraudulent anti-virus products

7. EPA:

Agency issues guidance on cleanups during pandemic

8. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus exacerbates food shortages in Africa

9. NATIONAL PARKS:

Utah's 5 sites are all closed as Capitol Reef shuts gates

POLITICS

10. MINING:

Despite EPA reprieve, coal waste industry faces dim future

11. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Green group pledges $14M against Trump in swing states

12. PEOPLE:

Former FERC staffer tapped to lead electricity group

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

13. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

BLM advances large-scale N.M. wind project

14. CLIMATE:

Marsh dwellers star in films about La. bayous

15. MINING:

Mont. issues permits for copper project over enviro protests

LAW

---

16. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Judge: NOAA must rethink lobster fishery's impact on whales

17. PIPELINES:

Feds tell court to defer to PHMSA on Line 5 spill plans

ENERGY

---

18. FINANCE:

Greens assail banks' plan to seize shaky fossil fuel assets

19. OIL AND GAS:

ConocoPhillips idles North Slope drill rigs amid outbreak

STATES

---

20. WASHINGTON:

Seattle closing 15 parks, beaches this weekend due to virus

21. ALASKA:

State suspends burn permits to stop wildfires during virus

22. NEW JERSEY:

Forest fire consumes hundreds of acres

23. MAINE:

Snowstorm leaves 250K homes, businesses in dark

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire

covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: E&E News
To: pat\_kenney@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] April 10 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, April 10, 2020 11:14:07 AM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

GREENWIRE

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

GREENWIRE — Fri., April 10, 2020

 READ FULL EDITION

1. ENERGY MARKETS:

Oil still volatile as Trump touts potential OPEC deal

President Trump welcomed a potential deal among the world's oil-producing nations to prop up oil prices, saying it could avert widespread layoffs, but the price of oil fell as analysts said the deal didn't go far enough to fix the price crash caused by the coronavirus pandemic.

TOP STORIES

2. FEDERAL AGENCIES:

Democrats draft legislation to protect IGs from Trump

3. PANDEMIC:

Ammon Bundy vows to create 'den of rattlesnakes'

4. OFF TOPIC:

Ken Ward Jr. on covering coal with 'sustained outrage'

CORONAVIRUS

5. EPA:

Calif. AG urges agency not to ease enforcement due to virus

6. ENFORCEMENT:

Woman charged for selling fraudulent anti-virus products

7. EPA:

Agency issues guidance on cleanups during pandemic

8. PANDEMIC:

Coronavirus exacerbates food shortages in Africa

9. NATIONAL PARKS:

Utah's 5 sites are all closed as Capitol Reef shuts gates

POLITICS

10. MINING:

Despite EPA reprieve, coal waste industry faces dim future

11. CAMPAIGN 2020:

Green group pledges $14M against Trump in swing states

12. PEOPLE:

Former FERC staffer tapped to lead electricity group

NATURAL RESOURCES

---

13. RENEWABLE ENERGY:

BLM advances large-scale N.M. wind project

14. CLIMATE:

Marsh dwellers star in films about La. bayous

15. MINING:

Mont. issues permits for copper project over enviro protests

LAW

---

16. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Judge: NOAA must rethink lobster fishery's impact on whales

17. PIPELINES:

Feds tell court to defer to PHMSA on Line 5 spill plans

ENERGY

---

18. FINANCE:

Greens assail banks' plan to seize shaky fossil fuel assets

19. OIL AND GAS:

ConocoPhillips idles North Slope drill rigs amid outbreak

STATES

---

20. WASHINGTON:

Seattle closing 15 parks, beaches this weekend due to virus

21. ALASKA:

State suspends burn permits to stop wildfires during virus

22. NEW JERSEY:

Forest fire consumes hundreds of acres

23. MAINE:

Snowstorm leaves 250K homes, businesses in dark

---

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

---

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire

covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC. Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: Where will we be on May 1?
Date: Friday, April 10, 2020 2:23:07 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

The economy is deteriorating “with alarming speed,” Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome H. Powell said Thursday, as nationwide quarantines have caused more than 17 million people to file jobless claims and some economists believe we are in a depression. We report that “the nation has not experienced this magnitude of layoffs and economic contraction since the Great Depression, many experts say, and recovery is unlikely to be swift.”

The collapse is manifesting itself in eye-popping financial reports from states and cities: Illinois owes $8.3 billion in unpaid bills. New York could lose billions in tax revenue. Pennsylvania has stopped paying 9,000 quarantined state employees. Find further details on shortages in other parts of the country, as well as on the split in Congress over what to do about it.

Worried about the economy's effect on his reelection prospects, President Trump is pushing to send Americans back to work before many health experts believe is safe. He has publicly suggested the worst of the outbreak will soon be over, and has privately asked aides for a strategy to resume business activity by May 1. Read about the White House push to reopen the country.

Lifting quarantines just as they are showing signs of reducing infections would lead to disaster, experts warn, because the United States still lacks the testing capabilities needed to identify and contain new outbreaks. It's also unclear how Trump would force governors to relax stay-at-home orders in their states.

Ohio is emerging as a model example of how to manage the virus: identify it early, plan for the worst and hope for the best. Gov. Mike DeWine (R) shut down a major convention in early March, before the state had a single confirmed infection, and the Cleveland Clinic began planning to add hundreds of new hospital beds even earlier. That head start appears to be paying off, with Ohio reporting dramatically lower infection and death rates than similarly sized states such as Michigan, Pennsylvania and Illinois. More on its aggressive strategy here. Then check out a video from the state's Department of Health that has gone viral as a crystal-clear visualization of how social distancing is meant to fight the virus's spread.

More important reads

- One chart puts this week's awful unemployment numbers in perspective

- Apple, Google debut major effort to help people track if they've been in contact with virus
- Analysis: How advocates of a return to normal misrepresent death tolls
- Rare voices from Iran's outbreak tell of stumbling government, deluged hospitals
- The European Union struck a deal to help its worst-hit countries, but still risks fracturing
- [“Speak the truth,” Obama tells mayors in coronavirus address. “The biggest mistake any \[of\] us can make in these situations is to misinform.”](#)

If you or someone you know would like to read Post coverage on the pandemic in Spanish, sign up for the Post Opinión, Edición Coronavirus newsletter to get updates and commentary straight to your inbox on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

Share Coronavirus Updates

---

Content from Slack

Staying productive while working from home

Working remotely in Slack? Try these simple Slack habits and tricks that make remote teamwork work.

Stay connected and productive with Slack, the channel-based messaging platform.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the U.S. at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read live updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“The coronavirus started in bats, traveled around the world in people and has also infected felines. Could the corona end up infecting and spreading in our own bat population?” — Susan Wetmore in Nebraska

Yes it could, and thank you for asking about the bats, which have been unfairly demonized for their role in the virus's origin story.

The novel coronavirus is a species-hopper. Scientists believe it first incubated inside horseshoe bats in China — which have amazing immune systems that makes them unwitting hosts for many pathogens — and mutated to spread to humans last year.

Since then, the virus has infected at least 1.5 million people, but also some dogs, cats — even a tiger at the Bronx Zoo.

Now the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is worried the coronavirus could spread to North American bats such as the vesper bat, which last shared a common ancestor with the horseshoe bats of China approximately 50 million years ago. “They are about as different as bats get from one another,” Bruce Patterson, a curator of mammals at the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago, told The Post.

The chance is fairly low of the virus going full circle — from bats to people then back into bats on the other side of the planet. But, as The Post reports, it would be bad for bats and non-bats alike if it happened.

The North American bat population is already being decimated by an unrelated fungal disease, and their long-distance flight patterns could spread the coronavirus over a huge area if they became incubators.

There could even be a “spill-back of [the novel coronavirus] from bats back into humans ... which would make eradication of [the virus] unlikely,” U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service veterinarian Samantha Gibbs wrote in a notice to researchers, asking them to suspend all bat fieldwork, lest an infected scientist sicken a bat. Read the whole story for more.

---

Today’s top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- How to keep Easter meals special, even if they have to be different this year

- On Parenting: This is a time to strengthen sibling bonds
- Perspective: Streets are empty, but Home Depot is packed

He's delivering your groceries to you. He's also risking his life.

By Ellen McCarthy • Read more »

---

'People just didn't care': How the Ruby Princess cruise ship became a deathtrap

By A. Odysseus Patrick • Read more »

---

Grandmother famous for accidentally inviting teen to Thanksgiving loses husband to covid-19

By Hannah Knowles • Read more »

---

Suspicious texts claimed a missing woman had coronavirus. Then, police arrested her husband on murder charges.

By Katie Shepherd • Read more »

---

Joy Harjo: 'What joins us together is poetry'

Read more »

---

It's come to this

ICE T ✓
@FINALLEVEL

Wait.... Before you Hate. Lol #QuarantineLife

♥ 95.1K 11:30 PM - Apr 8, 2020

🗨 25.2K people are talking about this

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Recipes! A perfect pot of beans, super-easy taquitos and beyond-ham recipes for Easter
Date: Saturday, April 11, 2020 8:11:49 AM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Recipes

What to cook during the week ahead, from Post Food editors.

By Ann Maloney

 Email

My sourdough starter died. And, frankly, on my list of things to be stressed about, that's dead last. Some people are using this time at home during the pandemic to learn a new language or, well, master the art of sourdough bread making. Some of us — including me — are not.

And, folks, that's okay.

We may all be in the same boat, metaphorically, but in reality each of our boats is unique and loaded with vastly different things. (My colleague Becky Krystal articulated this beautifully with a column she wrote: Why sourdough baking is a non-starter for me right now. Spoiler alert: The column is not really about bread-making, y'all.)

My heart aches to be with family at Easter on Sunday. Others are facing Passovers or Ramadans without loved ones. Many are facing deeper issues related to health and finances.

A well-made meal might seem like a tiny thing, but it is still a bright tiny thing, a mood lifter, a comfort.

Right now what I want from food is sustenance, great taste and ease. If you feel the same way, we've got some sure things on the menu this week.

I made baked black bean and corn taquitos. It's a fun little dish to make. The kids can help. It is a dish that calls to mind care-free college years, when dinner was often a snacky food eaten with pals.

Food and dining editor Joe Yonan put together guidance for making a "simply perfect pot of beans." Cook a pot and then make a few of the five dishes that that one pot will support.

Nourish columnist Ellie Krieger contributed a one-skillet, pantry-friendly dish of grains and salmon.

Ali Slagle suggested a dish so simple, I did a face-palm for why I never thought of it. She builds herby salads that include the whole herb, stems and all. It tasted like a spring garden.

And, Kari Sonde made ramen eggs, a delicious snack that gives the humble egg a flavor boost.

Olga Massov came up with a kitchen project that meets my criteria: Make yogurt at home. I had never done it before, and it is so very easy and results in a tangy yogurt that can be used in many ways.

Well before the pandemic and the egg shortage, I experimented with several ways to hard-cook eggs. If your Easter tradition includes boiling and dyeing eggs, check out the primer. Then, make delicious dishes with those eggs with classic egg salad or simple deviled egg recipes.

At a time when you can't do this and you can't do that, you can take solace in the things you can control and enjoy. If food is one of those things, take it easy or make it a challenge. No judgment folks.

Do watcha wanna ... in the kitchen.

Baked Black Bean and Corn Taquitos with Mango Salsa

Make a platter to serve with your favorite salsa and garnishes such as cilantro, Mexican crema and diced onion and tomato.

By Ann Maloney • Read more »

Simply Perfect Pot of Beans

Use whatever bean you like, and these instructions will help you cook it right — and use it to make delicious meals.

By Joe Yonan • Read more »

Orzo Skillet With Salmon, Peas, Dill and Feta

Demands for seconds are guaranteed.

By Ellie Krieger • Read more »

---

Herbs and Their Stems Salad

Finely chop the herb's thicker stems and add them to your salad. You'll get more textures and flavors from a single herb.

By Ali Slagle • Read more »

---

Marinated ramen eggs are simple to make and sheer joy to eat

You may never want to make plain boiled eggs again.

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

---

Making yogurt at home is easier than you think

This homemade version will taste more nuanced, creamier and tangier than any store-bought brand.

By Olga Massov • Read more »

---

More from Voraciously

Smaller, virtual or ham-less, our Easter meals will look different this year. Here's how to keep it special.

We asked experts for advice.

By Emily Heil • Read more »

U.S. Bank
Want to earn up to 5X points on more stays, more trips and more fun? Connect to more here.
Earn 5X points on prepaid hotels & car rentals booked directly in the Altitude Rewards Center. And get 4X points on travel & at gas stations.
LEARN MORE

Powered by  LiveIntent

6 Easter recipes for a scaled-down, but still festive holiday feast

Whether with many or few, with eggs or without, Easter is a moment of culinary joy.

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

Healthy snacks can be tempting treats: These 5 recipes prove it

Bored with your usual snacks? Here is a batch of healthful options you'll love.

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

Dig into these 4 delicious, guilt-free dishes that are easy to make, too

Not every day can be a cake day! That's where these Nourish recipes come in handy.

By Kari Sonde • Read more »

8 chickpea recipes that prove this legume is a do-it-all pantry star

From curries and salads to hummus and falafel, we've got plenty of inspiration.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

How to make substitutions for spices, herbs, dairy and meat in your everyday cooking

Pep talk: Your food will turn out just fine.

By Becky Krystal • Read more »

---

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Plant Powered by Voraciously for our 12-week guide to cooking more plant-forward meals. Recipes, techniques and tips on Tuesdays. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Recipes | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Recipes or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: IRS prepares to send your stimulus checks
Date: Saturday, April 11, 2020 2:12:45 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

The United States has more confirmed covid-19 deaths than any other nation, with nearly 19,000 fatal cases, including more than 2,000 reported on Friday alone. The country also accounts for nearly 30 percent of the world's known infections: about 500,000 out of more than 1.7 million, although all these figures are probably too low due to a general scarcity of coronavirus testing and suspect reports from such countries as China.

U.S. governors have asked Congress for $500 billion in rescue funds, as many states face massive budget shortfalls after paying for the public health responses at the outbreak's front lines. The economic crisis has also pushed the Postal Service to the brink of collapse, we report in a story about President Trump's refusal to bail out the mail service.

The IRS has created an online tool to help people who don't file taxes, such as many Social Security recipients, get their stimulus payments sooner. Payments of up to $1,200 a person will be sent to most people's bank accounts starting next week, according to the tax agency. Find out more about how you can track your payment.

Another stimulus program to loan $349 billion to small businesses is faltering, The Post reports: “Banks, tasked with disbursing the money, have been confused about the rules, which has delayed lending. Entrepreneurs are reporting troubles applying. And even some who make it through the application process say they’re facing dilemmas about how to use the money.” Read more here.

Concerned that last month’s stimulus package was too generous with unemployment benefits, Labor Secretary Eugene Scalia has tweaked rules to make it more difficult for gig workers to get money and easier for businesses to avoid paying workers sick and family leave. The full report can be found here.

The pandemic has turbocharged a movement to eliminate SAT and ACT testing requirements for college applicants. Advocates have argued for years that the tests penalize freshmen who lack access to good teachers and prep courses. We report that a record number of schools have made the tests optional in the past few weeks — “actions that could presage a broad shift away from admissions testing in higher education.”

A psychologist explains why the pandemic is making you dream about organizing a duck boat tour at an eerily deserted shopping mall where all the stores are shrouded in wrapping paper, or, you know, whatever's on your subconscious.

More important reads

- Four reasons the coronavirus is killing so many black Americans.
- Islamists and far-right extremists are using the same apps to recruit people during the pandemic.
- A conservative senator's plan for the federal government to cover 80 percent of people's wages.
- Both parties want another huge stimulus but are at a stalemate over where the money should go.
- An early study shows promising signs for an experimental covid-19 treatment.

---

Content from Slack

Staying productive while working from home

Working remotely in Slack? Try these simple Slack habits and tricks that make remote teamwork work.

Stay connected and productive with Slack, the channel-based messaging platform.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the United States at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read the latest updates about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“What other physical and/or mental impairments post-covid-19 will a survivor have?” – Kathi Higgison in Michigan

Sadly, there are quite a few.

Even though covid-19 is a new disease, the lung failure that is its most deadly symptom is not. About 200,000 Americans suffer from acute respiratory distress every year for various reasons. Roughly 60 percent of patients survive the condition, giving doctors “a deep reservoir of knowledge about what happens to such people after they leave the hospital,” The Post reported.

A prolonged stay in intensive care can be traumatic, with many patients experiencing nightmarish hallucinations that, because of isolation measures taken during the pandemic, are compounded by not being allowed to see visitors, or even their doctor's face. “Even a year after leaving the intensive care unit, many people experience post-traumatic stress disorder, Alzheimer’s-like cognitive deficits, depression, lost jobs and problems with daily activities such as bathing and eating,” we write.

About 1 in 12 people with covid-19 will need to be hooked up to a mechanical ventilator to keep breathing, which can create a whole new set of complications.

We published a first-person essay by a coronavirus survivor in New York who writes: “I used to run marathons; now I can’t walk across a room or up a flight of stairs without getting winded. I can’t go around the block for fresh air unless my husband pushes me in a wheelchair. When I shower, I can’t stand the entire time; I take breaks from standing to sit down on a plastic stool I have placed inside my bathtub.”

Many recovered patients will likely leave the hospital with these sorts of physical and psychological issues, only to face a quarantined world that discourages hugging and touching, where others may stigmatize them for fear of contagion. Please read our story so that you might better empathize — or \(we hope not\) prepare for the ordeal.

---

Today’s top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- Learn the FDA's updated list of best safety practices for supermarket and food retail workers.
- A Q&A on manners in the age of the coronavirus.
- Overeating during the shutdown? Research says don't beat yourself up — try being kind.

Anguished nurses say Pennsylvania hospital risked infecting cancer patients, babies and staff with covid-19

Like many hospitals across the country, Moses Taylor Hospital in Scranton, Pa., wasn't prepared for the influx of covid-19 patients.

By Desmond Butler • Read more »

---

Watching kids play in the neighborhood buoys spirits the way sports once did

Perspective • By Sally Jenkins • Read more »

---

In India, life under coronavirus brings blue skies and clean air

By Joanna Slater • Read more »

---

A plan to defeat coronavirus finally emerges, but it's not from

the White House

By Lena H. Sun, William Wan and Yasmeen Abutaleb • Read more »

Artists are tweaking famous paintings for the coronavirus era

Want to see what a socially distanced “Last Supper” looks like? Or an empty “Pont Neuf, Paris?” Sure you do, and we have a whole story on this weird and melancholy art fad.

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Week in Ideas: What's it like to give birth in the middle of a pandemic
Date: Sunday, April 12, 2020 5:05:46 AM

Read online

The Washington Post

The Week in Ideas

Opinions you may have missed.

By Fred Hiatt
✉ Email

You know how Albert Einstein spent much of his childhood? Building houses of cards. Not to say your little ones are future Nobelists (though who's to say?); but, says Lenore Skenazy, it does suggest you should not feel obliged to be constantly teaching and stimulating them while they are out of school. "What is a parent to do?" she asks. "Here's a thought: Give up!!!!"

Even if you're one of the many Americans consoling and occupying yourself by baking bread, you might wonder how much there is to say, or learn, about yeast. Here is a lovely answer from Sudeep Agarwala.

Speaking of consoling: We asked a diverse group of pastors to share abbreviated versions of the sermons they're unable to deliver in person today. One of them, Michael Curry, presiding bishop and primate of the Episcopal Church, writes, "Maybe our empty churches, synagogues, temples, mosques and other places of worship — and even stadiums and stores and coffee shops — are actually signs of hope." You can read his full

message, and eight others, here.

What's it like to give birth in the middle of a pandemic? Dr. Leana S. Wen, an emergency physician and public health expert who writes for us from time to time, had her second child just over a week ago. Here is her moving, bittersweet report.

As I mentioned last week, we've tried to pause when we can to remember and appreciate some of the lives we are losing to covid-19. Columnist David Von Drehle celebrated one you probably know, John Prine, and one, Lisa Ewald, who wasn't famous but whose story will touch your heart.

Sen. Bernie Sanders suspended his campaign and, as our Post Pundit Power Ranking editor Drew Goins notes, "unless 82 turns out to be the new 78, he'll be too old to run in 2024." So who will be the next "movement" candidate — progressive, populist or otherwise? Our pundits come up with some surprising possibilities.

Thank you as always for reading, and please continue to socially distance!

What's a parent to do during a pandemic? Give up.

The idea that parents have to enrich every second of their kids' lives was a crazy lie even before the coronavirus.

By Lenore Skenazy • Read more »

Think you're out of baker's yeast? Think again.

Supermarkets may be sold out of bakers' yeast. But luckily, yeast isn't gone — it's still all around us.

By Sudeep Agarwala • Read more »

---

The one thing about giving birth during the covid-19 pandemic that I didn't anticipate

Patients and providers inhabit a new normal in which we worry about — and for —each other.

By Leana S. Wen • Read more »

---

Their churches will be closed on Easter. Here's what they would have said.

How the story of the first Easter provides solace to those suffering this Easter.

Read more »

---

John Prine was a rare poet of American song

He made us laugh until we cried. Or cry until we laughed. Or laugh and cry simultaneously.

By David Von Drehle • Read more »

---

Lisa Ewald was a soldier who didn't really have a chance to fight

We must not forget the first wave of warriors who fell in this war.

By David Von Drehle • Read more »

---

Bernie is out. Here's who'll lead the next big movement.

Progressive, populist or otherwise.

By The Ranking Committee • Read more »

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Must Reads for a curated selection of our best journalism in your inbox every Saturday, plus a peek behind the scenes into how one story came together. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Week in Ideas | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Week in Ideas or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] The Optimist: This pageant queen is joining the front lines against covid-19 as a respiratory specialist
Date: Sunday, April 12, 2020 7:30:20 AM

Building your World of Well

See all we're doing >

Powered by  LiveIntent

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

The Optimist

Stories that inspire.

(Joel C. Ryan/Invision/AP)

Miss England 2019 is reporting for hospital duty. She's a doctor who specializes in respiratory medicine.

Bhasha Mukherjee, 24, packed up her crown and gowns and flew home to Britain, where she is now in quarantine until early next week, when she reports to the hospital for work.

By Cathy Free • Read more »

---

The nightly ovation for hospital workers may be New York's greatest performance

The new ritual is a collective expression of a stricken city's anxiety and appreciation.

Perspective • By Peter Marks • Read more »

---

Lawyers, hobbyists and even a bridal shop are making masks — and giving them away

"This is a war," said the owner of a bridal shop. "We need to come together."

By Teddy Amenabar • Read more »

---

Christian Siriano has become the face of a fashion industry that once dismissed him

The designer's company has made 7,000 masks for New York — one of the many causes that his pop-culture status has helped him take on.

By Robin Givhan • Read more »

---

ADVERTISEMENT

Johnson & Johnson
Building your World of Well
See all we're doing

Powered by  LiveIntent

Chicago mayor deploys humor and memes in coronavirus fight

The usually serious Lori Lightfoot is popping up everywhere — in videos and memes — with unusually comedic stay-home messaging.

By Mark Guarino • Read more »

---

Thanks, Barbie, for making me a better parent

When my girls are playing with Barbie, they recreate their days in exacting detail.

Perspective • By Theresa Blackinton • Read more »

---

This jazz musician toured the world with Prince and Stevie Wonder. Now he's performing for his neighbors.

Harmonica virtuoso Frédéric Yonnet is hosting jam sessions from his house on Sunday afternoons.

By Fritz Hahn • Read more »

---

ADVERTISEMENT

A red banner advertisement for Johnson &amp; Johnson. The text reads "Johnson &amp; Johnson Building your World of Well" with a "See all we're doing" button and "Powered by LiveIntent" logo at the bottom.

As a warming climate delivers more rain, overwhelming sewers and polluting waterways, one city is trying a green solution

More frequent flooding is overwhelming city drainage systems, sending raw sewage into rivers and streams. But Philadelphia is trying an innovative fix — capturing rainwater before flows into city drains.

By Frances Stead Sellers • Read more »

---

With baseball paused, the Nationals and José Andrés's World

Central Kitchen hustle to feed the needy

The nonprofit group has partnered with the team to turn Nationals Park into a food production facility.

By Tim Carman and Scott Allen • Read more »

---

Meals on Wheels volunteers are staying home because of covid-19, so college kids are stepping up

Millions of elderly Americans depend on Meals on Wheels to eat, but three-quarters of the volunteers who deliver the food are over 55 years old themselves — and they're staying home. So college students are stepping in.

By Karen Weese • Read more »

---

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out About US for candid conversations about identity in 21st-century America. Join the discussion, every Friday morning. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from The Optimist | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for The Optimist or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

From: The Washington Post
To: jeff\_mow@nps.gov
Subject: [EXTERNAL] Coronavirus Updates: U.S. government hamstrung
Date: Sunday, April 12, 2020 2:15:17 PM

Sign up for this newsletter

Read online

The Washington Post

Coronavirus Updates

Important developments in the coronavirus pandemic.

Presented by Slack

By Avi Selk
✉ Email

The Post's coronavirus coverage linked in this newsletter is free to access from this email.

The latest

The brain trust behind the federal government's war on the coronavirus is “a bureaucratic nesting doll” of oft-competing task forces that have produced no clear plan to end the crisis, The Washington Post reports. There is the official task force led by Vice President Pence; the “shadow task force” led by presidential son-in-law Jared Kushner; the new “Opening Our Country Council”; and a splinter group of medical professionals. And then there is President Trump, who often overrides and undermines whatever decisions these groups manage to make. Read our story on the problems with this system, based on interviews with 22 White House insiders.

Meanwhile, states have been fending for themselves making extraordinary, unorthodox and expensive efforts to secure medical supplies in a cutthroat global market. “You’ve got 50 states and the federal government all chasing the same companies. It’s crazy,” Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine (R) said in an interview. Read about what states are doing here.

Congress has been largely comatose during this chaos. Most lawmakers left Washington last month, leaving the House and Senate chambers nearly empty, upending the crucial budget process and causing dozens of scheduled hearings to be canceled. More on that in this story.

The need for better coordination becomes more apparent by the day. We report that many U.S. hospitals “are struggling to maintain supplies of antibiotics, antivirals and sedatives required for patients on ventilators and other drugs produced in countries where the coronavirus has shuttered or curbed manufacturing.”

New data shows that about 1 in 10 middle-aged coronavirus patients who are hospitalized in the U.S. die. The report also provides insight into hospitalization and mortality rates for all age groups, supporting the notion that while most covid-19 cases are mild, no age group is entirely safe. You can find the details here.

“For many, this is an Easter of solitude lived amid the sorrow and hardship that the pandemic is causing,” Pope Francis told a nearly empty St. Peter’s Basilica in Rome today, as Christians across the world celebrate the holiday from home confinement (explore photos here). A few American pastors promised to hold Easter services despite quarantines. Last night, the Kansas Supreme Court struck down a Republican-led effort to allow in-person services across the state to go on.

More important reads

- British Prime Minister Boris Johnson has left the hospital. ‘It’s hard to find words to express my debt,’ he said.
- WHO envoy says virus is still ‘advancing’ and may ‘stalk the human race for quite a long time’
- Joe Biden outlines his plan to reopen the country
- Why European unemployment isn’t spiking as it is in the U.S.

Share Coronavirus Updates

---

Content from Slack

Staying productive while working from home

Working remotely in Slack? Try these simple Slack habits and tricks that make remote teamwork work.

Stay connected and productive with Slack, the channel-based messaging platform.

---

Our extremely cosmopolitan list of stuff to binge

The Post has foreign correspondents in 22 bureaus across the globe covering the coronavirus outbreak. They put together a guide of movies, TV shows, and fiction and nonfiction books they recommend during this pandemic, based on the regions where they're located (with many guilty pleasures thrown in). It's one of the most interesting and unique lists we've seen.

---

Live updates

Track deaths and confirmed cases in the United States at the county level.

Follow the spread of the outbreak worldwide with our updating map.

Post reporters across the world are publishing live dispatches 24 hours a day.

Read the latest about the cases and impact in the D.C. area.

How you can help people in need | The Washington Post Helping Hand covid-19 relief campaign

Submit a question and The Post may answer it in a future story, live chat or newsletter.

---

Your questions, answered

“I have heard that pollution has greatly decreased recently as a result of reduced air and vehicular traffic. Is this so? Is the impact large enough to convince those who do not ‘believe’ in global warming to see the wisdom in reducing emissions?” — Christine in California

We can't predict how people will respond to the evidence, but yes, the global economic shutdown appears to be significantly reducing all the muck in the atmosphere.

The notoriously smoggy Los Angeles region has seen marked drops in nitrogen dioxide and fine particulate pollution since residents were ordered to stay at home — “the longest stretch of ‘good’ air quality in March seen since at least 1995,” The Post writes.

Similar improvements have been mapped in the Mid-Atlantic, Northeast, Ohio Valley and Southwest — and across the world as far away as China. And carbon dioxide emissions that drive global warming have temporarily relented, somewhat, after many flights were grounded.

It's still unclear what this data means for the long-term health of the planet, but if there is any silver lining to the global crisis, it's been the chance for scientists to study a drastic reduction in pollution in real time.

Read our story for more details and check out maps comparing March 2019 to March 2020.

---

Today's top reads

Find more stories, analysis and op-eds about the outbreak on our coronavirus page, including:

- The latest in Pulitzer Prize-winner Eli Saslow's series “Voices from the Pandemic”
- The president has vanished; his wife, the vice president, says the coronavirus isn't a problem: Nicaragua declines to confront a pandemic
- The storm inside: How the coronavirus killed Keith Redding

Coronavirus confinement: Carding your kid, sneaking a drive, arguing about the dishes

By Arelis Hernández, Lori Rozsa, Robert Klemko and Marc Fisher • Read more »

I'm a nurse in a psychiatric ward. Here's how covid-19 slowly invaded our unit.

Perspective • By Charlotte Coates • Read more »

Their churches are closed on Easter. Here's 9 pastors on what they would have said.

Opinion • By Washington Post Staff • Read more »

LIVE from ... quarantine ... it's Saturday Night!

The government may be stumbling to adjust to the pandemic, but “Saturday Night Live” managed to put on a show (kinda) hosted by Tom Hanks last night in a “straight-from-their-homes-to-ours format that paradoxically felt both alien and as comfortable as worn-in jeans,” our Style reporter writes.

We think you'll like this newsletter

Check out Baking Basics by Voraciously for baking fundamentals, techniques and irresistible recipes, in your inbox on Fridays. Sign up »

The Washington Post

Manage my email newsletters and alerts | Unsubscribe from Coronavirus Updates | Privacy Policy | Help

You received this email because you signed up for Coronavirus Updates or because it is included in your subscription.

©2020 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071