Did You Know?

Cartoon by Benjamin Franklin in his Pennsylvania Gazette, May 9, 1754.

- In this drawing by Benjamin Franklin, each section of the snake is labeled with the name of a British colony, except New England's 4 states are counted as 1 and Delaware and Georgia are left off. So there are only 8 sections instead of the traditional 13 colonies shown. Franklin's point was how the colonies were not connected and must come together. The legend was that a cut snake could be put back together

- Prince Easterbrook was a former slave who fought at the Battle of Lexington and was one of the last wounded during the battle.

- Reverend Jonas Clark's church members were both black and white and served at the Battle of Lexington together.

- Crispus Attucks was a former runaway slave and was killed during the Boston Massacre in 1770.

- There were several women (white and black) who actively served in the Revolution.

- The total number of Patriot killed or wounded during the American Revolution was near 50,000. The British suffered roughly 20,000 killed and wounded. Many Germans deserted and stayed in America to form new lives.
