 - Having lived with her brother, Charles Thompson Mathews, a well-known architect in his time, Miss Florence enjoyed a lavish lifestyle, sailing to Europe almost every year and socializing with notable celebrities of the time. At the same time, she enjoyed the simpler things in life such as relaxing at her summer home in Norwalk, which she called "The Elms," "Elm Park," or, more simply, the "Norwalk House." From May until early December, Miss Florence entertained numerous members of her family, along with guests that included friends, distant relatives, and others. The Mathews Estate, as it was called by the locals, required a large staff to run for the months that the house was kept open. A Superintendent of the Estate managed the working staff, which included a head gardener, five gardener's assistants, two stablemen, one maintenance man, two full-time laundresses, one scullery maid, two cooks, one butler, a personal nurse for Miss Mathews, a valet, a coachman, a page-boy to run errands, and two full-time maids. The Superintendent made sure that all aspects of day-to-day activities went as smoothly as possible, and that any problems were solved quickly and efficiently.

- from George Wright: A Revival By Michael J. Fay

In the late 1920's a group of citizens in Boston came into the control of the Grew estate in the Hyde Park section of Boston. Their intent was to have the City of Boston build a golf course that would actually be a private club. Donald Ross was commissioned to design the course. When the market crashed in 1929 the project was abandoned.

The Grew estate was not particularly suitable for building a golf course. It was a mix of ledge and swamp. There was a good deal of speculation whether a course could be built there.

In 1932, Walter Irving Johnson, who had worked for years as an Associate of Donald Ross took on the project as an engineer for the MDC. George Wright became one of the great feats of engineering and building in the annals of golf. Before completion, 60,000 pounds of dynamite were used to excavate the ledge, 72,000 cubic yards of dirt were spread to raise the ground above the swamp level and 57,000 linear feet of drainage pipe were laid to drain the property. The WPA provided the funds to build the course, estimated at $ 1,000,000 by completion in 1938. At one time 1,000 men worked on the project. By completion George Wright sported a full sized 18-hole golf course as well as a six-foot rock wall that encircled the entire 156-acre site. In addition, a Norman-style clubhouse of mammoth proportion was constructed at a cost of $ 200,000.

“One of the world’s greatest landscape painters” by Anthony M. Sammarco

As park commissioner for the town of Hyde Park, [John J. Enneking] was a noted conservationist. The woodlands of the old Grew Estate, the vast estate of Henry Sturgis Grew and known as Grew’s Woods, were later to become part of the Stony Brook Reservation, and the serpentine road leading from West Roxbury to Hyde Park was named the Enneking Parkway in his honor. Upon his death in 1916, he was buried at Fairlawn Cemetery in Hyde Park, his memorial a naturalistic boulder of Roxbury pudding stone.

1899 Woodholm, Manchester, MA
 - HIGHWOOD & WOODHOLM – Off Jersey Lane
A large parcel of land located on a hilltop off Jersey Lane was purchased and presented to Mrs. William B. Walker of Chicago as a wedding gift by her father, Silas B. Cobb, a wealthy industrialist, in recognition of his daughter’s “unusual business ability and good judgment.” Her husband, William B. Walker, was a millionaire who made his fortune in Chicago real estate and the stock market. In 1897 when the Walkers decided it was time to build a summer residence on their Manchester property, they hired the firm of Shepley, Rutan and Coolidge to design an impressive English Tudor-style house. The house was called Highwood and the entire estate – Manchester’s largest – was known as Woodholm. The landscaping was created in a park-like manner by the famous Olmstead Brothers. It included seven miles of well-kept roadways, forests, meadows and a large pond called “Lake Louise”.
When Woodholm was completed, Mr. Cobb moved from Chicago to live with his daughter in the new house, residing there five years while helping supervise the upkeep of the property until his health failed. William Walker also made Highwood his year-round residence and took over management of his father-in-law’s affairs.
According to all reports, there was a remarkable group of employees working for the Walker family. The English cook came with them from Chicago and stayed until Mrs. Walker’s death. The head chauffeur and the houseman were also described as dependable and helpful, as were the laundress, butler, and florist. Between the years 1899-1907 a farm barn, cottage, automobile garage and greenhouse were added to the estate. Around 1926, the Walker’s son, Charles Cobb Walker, built a second house for himself known as “The Lodge.” His property included a stable, and another greenhouse was designed by Little and Browne. Walker had grand plans to develop Woodholm further as shown in the exhibit but the stock market crash changed everything. The Woodholm property was subdivided into house lots after Charles death, and Highwood was razed in 1954.

Colorado 0 El Pomar, 1661 Mesa Ave., Colorado Springs, Colorado 80906

- Penrose House History

The original one-story estate was built as a single-family residence in 1910 for Ashton Potter and Grace Goodyear Potter. They called it El Pomar because it was built on land that once belonged to the Dixon apple orchard. El Pomar is spanish for orchard. The Potters did not live there long before both passed away.

The home was purchased by Spencer and Julie Penrose in 1916. In the hands of the entrepreneur and his benevolent wife, it became a gathering spot where important business was conducted and visions were transformed into reality. The Penroses added the second and third stories to the home.

Spencer died in 1939 and Julie lived in the home alone until 1944 when she moved and donated the estate to the Sisters of Charity of Cincinnati in recognition of their importance in the community and the care they provided Spencer during his final years. For nearly five decades, the Sisters operated the home as a spiritual retreat center.

In 1992, El Pomar Foundation, the charitable foundation established by the Penroses, purchased the home and transformed it into an education and conference center for nonprofit organizations.

- El Pomar Estate

El Paso County, CO

Listed: 11/25/1995

The El Pomar home was originally designed in 1909 by Horace Trumbauer as a "Bungalow for Mrs. Grace Depew." It was a sixteen-thousand square foot bungalow sans pareil that combined the relaxed atmosphere of a California-born architectural form with the scale and neoclassic detail of early 20th century Revival styles. The El Pomar Estate is historically significant for its architecture and for its association with Spencer Penrose. Spencer Penrose, who bought the home in 1916, was a socially prominent member of the Colorado Springs community and a moving force in the development of major recreation and entertainment facilities in the community. In addition to the renowned Broadmoor Hotel, Penrose provided the organizational and financial catalyst for the creation of the Pike's Peak Auto Road, the Cheyenne Zoo, the Shrine of the Sun, and the Cheyenne Mountain Highway. Penrose's enthusiasm for the automobile in its formative years figured significantly in his work. At a time when Colorado residents were very dubious about the use of the automobile for any lasting purpose, Penrose envisioned the state ribboned with auto roads and set about to make his vision a reality.

Architecturally, the El Pomar Estate is significant as the work of several renowned architects. Those involved with either the original design or subsequent enlargements include Philadelphia architect Horace Trumbauer, Colorado Springs architects Charles E. Thomas, Thomas MacLaren and T.D. Hetherington, and landscape architects from the Olmsted Brothers firm.

 - “39 Wood Side Circle, Hartford CT, 06105: Listing agent: Joanne Hoye, Call 860-561-8007 for information. One of the West End of Hartford’s most beautiful homes, located in the city’s most exclusive enclave: Woodside Circle, a secluded collection of properties set aside by the Goodwin family in the early 20th Century. This example of fine Tudor architecture and rare interior finishing was built in the 1920’s for philanthropist John Porter by noted architects of their day. With living space over 6,000 square feet and central air conditioning on all floors, it features six bedrooms, four full bathrooms, two half bathrooms and three fireplaces. On the main floor is an exquisite kitchen with cathedral ceiling (the result of a late 1990’s addition), formal dining room, library, elegant living room for large entertaining, along with a family room and a solarium for more casual relaxation. The basement floor features a wine room and two-level home theater currently fitted with a 100” Stewart screen, 7-speaker Definitive sound system and Sony projector, as well as a bar and gaming table. The basement also features a workshop, laundry room, audio/video equipment room and video storage room as well as a space which might be described as a bomb shelter. The 3rd floor attic features one of the six bedrooms and four enormous walk-in closets. Interior woodwork throughout the home would be difficult to match today even by the best craftsmen. Local artisan John Dussault recently completed interior painting in the main foyer, library, dining room and children’s bedroom using Venetian plaster, hand painted wall paper and detailed stenciling. The exterior features a large front yard and large fenced-in back yard with Connecticut Blue Stone patio, sunken English rose garden, oversized swing set a ...”

 - In 1853 a summer hotel called the Pequot House opened at the southern end of New London, attracting wealthy New Yorkers and drawing an elite clientele from as far away as Washington, D.C. To accommodate its growing number of patrons, the hotel built cottages, which families could rent by the month or for the entire summer season. The Pequot House and its surrounding cottages could host 600 people and guests were expected to take their meals at the hotel. Eventually a summer resort grew up around the Pequot House as more and more private cottages were constructed. In a letter dated August 5, 1905, O'Neill told a Hartford girlfriend, "I was up to one of the 'hops' at the Pequot last Saturday night and danced with the fair ones (not even fair). I was bored to death and said 'Never again for little Eugene' and by the nine gods I never will unless you or someone else that I know are there" (Bogard and Bryer, SL, 12). The Pequot House burned in 1908 and was never rebuilt. One remaining vestige of the hotel's glory days is the Pequot Chapel on Montauk Avenue, built to spare guests their long trip into town to attend church. Meadow Court (today the Lighthouse Inn) was built by Charles S. Guthrie, chairman of the Republic Iron and Steel Company, in 1904 as his summer home. The gardens surrounding Guthrie's Spanish Style cottage were designed by the Frederick Law Olmsted firm. Several Pequot Colony cottages (though less grand in style than Meadow Court) remain in the neighborhood and today are year-round homes. [

 - “Tax records show the owner as Five Twenty One Corp. (hence the street address), In Care of Abe Wolfe, 230 Park Ave., Suite 659, New York, Ny 10169. The 2006 property tax statement shows the current market value of the estate as $10,911,600 with the 2006 property taxes as $84,706.74. Dunellen Hall (often referred to as the Topping House) was built in 1918, at what was then the staggering sum of $1,000,000, by steel and banking tycoon Daniel Grey Reid as a wedding gift for his daughter, Rhea, when she married Henry Topping. It is a 28 room Jacobean mansion set on 26 acres. It was sold by the Toppings in 1950 to Loring Washburn who later declared bankruptcy. In 1963 Dunnellen Hall became the property of a finance and factoring concern. It remained empty for 3 years, until it was bought by a partnership that sold it to Gregg Sherwood Dodge Moran, a one-time showgirl and former wife to an heir to the Dodge automobile fortune. She only owned the estate for 2 years, then sold it for $1,000,000 to financier Jack R. Dick, who in 1971 was indicted by a New York grand jury that he had stolen $840,000 by using phony documents to obtain a loan. He died in 1974 before the case went to trial. Dunellen Hall next passed to an Indian-born owner of oil supertankers named Ravi Tikkoo for $3,000,000 including the furnishings. His wife hated the estate and he sold the estate including the furnishings to the Helmsleys in 1983 for $11,000,000. The Helmsleys added 2 pools--1 outdoor and 1 indoor.

“Harry B. Helmsley (March 4, 1909 – January 4, 1997) was a real estate mogul who built a company that became one of the biggest property holders in the United States. Part of his company's portfolio at one time included managing the Empire State Building. He had been indicted along with Leona on income tax evasion charges, but it was determined that he was far too ill physically to stand trial and too weak mentally to be capable of assisting his attorneys in his own defense. Mr. Helmsley died of pneumonia at a hospital in Scottsdale, Arizona, and left his empire (estimated at $5.5 billion) to his wife Leona.

“Leona Mindy Rosenthal Roberts Panziner Lubin Helmsley (July 4, 1920 - August 20, 2007)passed away at Dunellen Hall of heart failure. Before she married Harry Helmsley, she was married twice. By her first husband, attorney Leo Panziner, she had a son, Jay (1940-1982). Jay Panziner had four children. From 1953 until 1960, she was married to garment industry executive Joseph Lubin. She was a billionaire New York City hotel operator and real estate investor. She was a flamboyant personality and had a reputation for tyrannical behavior that earned her the nickname "The Queen of Mean." She was convicted of federal income tax evasion and other crimes in 1989 and served 19 months in prison (and two more months in house arrest), after receiving an initial sentence of 16 years." <http://wikimapia.org/4980454/521-Round-Hill-Road-Dunellen-Hall-Leona-Harry-Helmsley-s-Greenwich-country-estate>

 - "Beacon Falls property under consideration for municipal use" BY QUANNAH LEONARD
REPUBLICAN-AMERICAN , Aug. 16, 2010
BEACON FALLS -- A committee charged to explore municipal uses for property that the town bought in 2008 has recommended tearing down the former home of Tracy Lewis, president of the Beacon Falls Rubber Shoe Co.
"The Wolfe Avenue "Lewis House" Exploratory Committee has recommended to the Board of Selectmen the demolition of the pinkish-beige house at 35 Wolfe Ave.
"According to a letter dated Aug. 9 to First Selectman Susan Ann Cable, the committee recommended that a new building committee be formed to look into a 19,000-square-foot library and community center for the property.
"It also suggested demolishing the carriage house on site when the main house is set for demolition. Other recommendations included removing trees, involving the Beacon Falls Historical Society in recreating the main house's dining and living rooms in a potential new structure, and seeking legal advice about possible mold hazards, the letter states."

 - The Olmsted Garden
"After the death of Mrs. Ada Gerrish Cummer, the Cummer family estate was divided between her two sons, Waldo and Arthur. Their sister, Mabel Cummer Roe, and her husband, John, built a home on nearby Stockton Street.
Waldo and his wife, Clara, engaged William Lyman Phillips from the Lake Wales office of the Olmsted Brothers firm to design and reshape their expanded property, uniting new and existing elements such as plantings and structural elements as well as amenities and ornaments. Phillips, a renowned landscape architect in Florida, designed Jacksonville's Memorial Park (just a few steps south from The Cummer on Riverside Avenue) and the Fairchild Tropical Botanic Garden in Miami.
While Waldo and Clara were busy at work with Phillips, Ninah May Holden Cummer and Arthur Cummer were hard at work with another renowned American landscape architect, Ellen Biddle Shipman, planning their Italian Garden. Taken as a whole, the gardens of Mr. and Mrs. Waldo Cummer and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Cummer represent an exceptional glimpse into the history of American landscape architecture. The Cummer grounds are uniquely important to the people of Florida, residents of the Southeast, and the history of landscape architecture in our country. Restoration of the Olmsted Garden is currently underway.” [From http://www.cummer.org/art_gardens/gardens/olmsted.cfm]

- Plan #7077-z1 shows similar designs as 6165-501
- The Olmsted Garden has an interesting history. In the late 1890s, the Cummer family moved from Michigan to Jacksonville and established a family compound amid the live oaks on the banks of the St. Johns River.

Wellington and Ada Cummer lived in a house that stood about where the Art Connections wing of the Cummer now stands. Son Arthur and his wife, Ninah, built to the southeast, about where the main entrance of the Cummer museum is now located. Arthur’s brother Waldo, and Waldo’s wife, Clara, built to the northeast, near where the Red Cross building is now located.

While the men operated the Cummer Lumber Co. — lumber was a very good business in Jacksonville after the Great Fire of 1901 — the women were creating gardens.

In 1931, after the death of Ada Cummer, the brothers tore down their parents’ old house and split the property. Ninah Cummer, who had hired Thomas Meehan and Sons in 1910 to create the English Garden, hired landscape architect Ellen Biddle Shipman to create the Italian Garden on the land she and Arthur got. Clara Cummer hired Phillips, a partner in the Olmsted Brothers firm, to integrate their garden and the garden they had inherited from Ada Cummer into a single garden, known as the Olmsted Garden.

Olmsted is a revered name in landscape architecture. Frederick Law Olmsted, father of the founders of the Olmsted Brothers firm, is considered the father of American landscape architecture. His projects included New York’s Central Park and the Biltmore Estate in Asheville, N.C.

Ninah Cummer and Clara Cummer, who were both widows, both died in 1958. Ninah Cummer left her estate, including her gardens, to the museum she wanted built on her property. The museum opened its doors in November 1961.” “Cummer’s Restored Olmsted Garden will open April 11” by Charlie Patton, Florida Times-Union, posted Apr. 6, 2013 <http://jacksonville.com/entertainment/arts/2013-04-06/story/cummers-restored-olmsted-garden-will-open-april-11>

- “At the southernmost end of Manalapan is the Boynton Beach Inlet, which was opened in 1925. Heading north on Ocean Blvd. are two estates of historical distinction. On the Intracoastal side, at 1780 South Ocean Blvd., is a three story residence, recently restored, which began its life as a public lodge in 1894. “In 1930, Harold Vanderbilt left Palm Beach, unhappy with a new road that was built between his home and the ocean. He purchased 500 oceanfront feet in Manalapan, and built a magnificent estate directly on the Atlantic Ocean at 1100 South Ocean Blvd. His sister, Consuelo Vanderbilt Balsan and her husband Colonel Balsan, purchased what was then the Demarest Estate, which encompassed the southern tip of Hypoluxo Island. The estate, now a gated community, is know as Point Manalapan. The original structure was moved and became a carriage house, when the Balsan's built their residence. “In 1957 the property was purchased by William Benjamin, who established the Manalapan Club. The Club was later disbanded and between 1977 and 1979, Mr. Benjamin restored the house to it’s original condition.

Currently, the estate consists of the private residence, fifteen acres, and a parcel with dockage on the Intracoastal.

"The original Demarest home is still used as garages along with the first house built on what was then known as Hypoluxo Island. The structure, built by H.D. Pierce in 1874 was recently restored and is used as an outbuilding to the estate."

 - A secluded enclave for divided Lykes clan
The Lykes Lane compound in South Tampa has been in the family since 1886, and attorneys say it will survive the current court dispute.
By SCOTT BARANCIK

The Lykes Lane compound in South Tampa has been in the family since 1886, and attorneys say it will survive the current court dispute.
TAMPA -- This isn't Hyannis Port, and there's not a Kennedy in sight. But Lykes Lane, a 46-acre enclave held by the Lykes family since 1886, could be a humble cousin to that fabled Cape Cod compound.

Both are home to millionaire descendants of an enterprising but long-deceased patriarch. Both sport gracious waterfront homes. Both offer their residents private sanctuary from the tribulations and, sometimes literally, the trials of daily life.

"It's not that it's exclusive," says Susan L. Mueller, a family member who grew up on Lykes Lane and returned there to raise her own family. "It's home."

For Mueller and her relatives, tranquility has been in short supply in recent years. Financial trouble and opportunity have led the family's holding companies to sell off much of the portfolio that long made Lykes one of Florida's leading names in business. Gone are the banks, a line of lunch meats, a steel company, an orange juice factory, the country's largest steamship operation and much of the family's storied political pull.

Now, that most modern of challenges -- the lawsuit -- has cleaved the family in two. The dispute began two years ago when family members owning one-quarter of Lykes Brothers Inc. exercised an option to sell their shares, then balked at the price their relatives offered.

That so large a group of family members dared sell its shares in the company, founded in 1900 by the seven sons of Dr. H.T. Lykes, was itself shocking. "A typical Lykes last will disposes of just two items," Fortune magazine wrote in 1954, quoting a prominent family member. "Life insurance, and Lykes shares."

The trial in the family lawsuit began Oct. 29 in Tampa, but it has been in recess the past two weeks for settlement talks. Attorneys hope to resolve the suit next week.

Against this backdrop, Lykes Lane seems a quaint reminder of an earlier era in Tampa commerce and society. The serenity it offers has rarely seemed more important to those who live there.

Because it is a private road with 24-hour security, many local residents have never glimpsed the Lykes property. Public records and eyewitness accounts sketch a fairly detailed picture.

Houses on Lykes Lane are set far back from the road. Lush oak trees dripping with spanish moss shade the properties. Eight of the 12 homes front Hillsborough Bay, while the rest circle a pond. This is Old Money. Understatement, not opulence, is the style of choice.

About half of the parcels are vacant. A family company called Lykes Lane Inc. holds them. Family members can buy property at a significant discount, but purchases occur infrequently. Many of the roughly 300 descendants of Dr. Lykes live in other states. In prior decades, some relatives may have considered South Tampa too remote.

Two of the 12 homes on Lykes Lane belong to outsiders, but not just anybody: T. Paine Kelly Jr., a former law partner and close friend of the late family leader Chester Ferguson, bought a vacant lot in 1957. His contract called for him to spend no less than $35,000 on a dwelling and any "necessary outhouses, garages and servants quarters." Howard Jenkins, chairman of Publix Super Markets Inc. of Lakeland, bought a waterfront home in 1987 from John Parke Wright IV, the great-grandson of Dr. Lykes' only daughter.

When it comes to the family lawsuit, the balance of power on Lykes Lane is lopsided. Nine homeowners side with the majority. Just one, Tom and Kay Rankin, seek to sell their Lykes Brothers shares. Tom Rankin is a former chairman and chief executive of the company.

- o Ballast Point History

Louise Lykes Ferguson, who is in her 90's, wrote this article for the Ballast Point Newsletter.

When my family moved to Ballast Point in 1928, the whole area between the two bays - Old Tampa Bay and Hillsborough Bay - was a vastly different place than it is today. There were a few homes, primarily on the bay. Small farms dealing with a few head of cattle, chickens, hogs and vegetable patches were scattered here and there over the land.

This was all outside the city limits, so there were few amenities. Water was drawn or pumped from a well. For use in the home the water had to be treated with salts, etc., to make it suitable and potable. I can remember so well my mother measuring the ingredients for this procedure. Even then the plumbing fixtures were always rusty looking. <http://www.ballastpoint.org/index.cfm?fuseaction=History>

 - "According to Matthews' research, the development of the winter resort Eagle Point was begun on Palmer land in 1916 under the supervision of M.T. L. "Mike" Evans, an Englishman who came to Florida from Virginia but also owned the "Tepee" dude ranch in the Rockies. The Sarasota Times that year described Eagle Point as "a winter camp, where all the pleasures of sport on water and land can be enjoyed by the guests." Its two-story clubhouse (shown above, courtesy of the Venice Archives and Area Historical Collection) featured a dining room and library on the first floor where guests would gather for meals and bridge in the evening. The second floor had guest rooms reserved for bachelors. Families stayed in one story, porch-wrapped guest cottages built of heart-of-pine lumber. "As the camp's manager, Evans arranged fishing expeditions and for local guides to take guests, on horseback, to hunt quail. A tennis court was built, and by the end of 1917, Evans was supervising the construction of additional cottages. After a second successful season, he purchased "Eagle Point -- 30 acres on Roberts Bay" from Palmer's Sarasota-Venice Company. Evans in turn sold the camp in 1923 to Frederick Kingsbury Curtis, a New York lawyer and entrepreneur who wintered at Eagle Point. Evans remained as manager for several years, however, and eventually 17 cottages dotted the landscaped grounds."

 - FORGOTTEN TRAGEDY AT WYNN'S HILL
When I started this site one year ago I had 2 main purposes. The first was to have a virtual scrapbook of all the things I remembered growing up, the Places I had been to and the things I had heard. I knew so much was slipping away and had already slipped away. With all the years to come, I knew it would only get worse. The second purpose was to find out and put down what took place on the very places we pass every day. I know that some things are better left forgotten, but if that was totally true there would be no such thing as history. As painful as history can be, it is even more painful if it is forgotten. The story below is sad, and may stir up some bad memories, but the two boys involved in this story did exist and if the story is not told then they are gone and forgotten. They will never be remembered or thought of again.
I first heard of this story in an article written by Bill Winn almost 16 years ago. It appeared in the Columbus Ledger Enquirer and ran for almost a week. The article was quite lengthy and in depth . It ran for almost a week. I will only touch on the highlights of the story here.
Cedron Land was a 12 year old white boy. T Z Cotton was a 14 year old black boy. Cedron was the son of well known cattleman Will Land, T Z lived with his Step Dad whose last name was McElheny.

There are different variations on T Z's name and age. Cedron lived on Whitesville Road and T Z lived in a cabin on Double Churches Road. It was later to be known as Red Cabin because of the blood stain on the floor.

On the Saturday afternoon of June 29th Cedron left his home to take a mule to the pasture to graze. Later that evening the mule returned home without Cedron. A search was started and Cedron's body was found in a ditch with leaves and brush over it. It was discovered he had been shot in the left eye. Tracks led to the McElheny cabin. At first T Z denied any knowledge of the shooting. He claimed his gun had not been fired. Upon examination it was discovered that the gun had been fired.

T Z was taken into custody and confessed he had been present when Cedron was shot. At some point he tried to say a friend of his was involved. T Z's cabin was searched and bloody clothes and sacks were found. T Z admitted he and Cedron were playing around with the gun when it went off killing Cedron. He said he went down to see if Mr Land was home. He then returned to the cabin and carried the body to a ditch and covered it. He said he did all of this alone. He then returned to his cabin and tried to clean the blood off the floor. He said he did not say anything before because he was scared. The two had had some differences in the past. He claimed the shooting was accidental.

T Z was held in the old Muscogee County jail under heavy protection. A trial was started on August 13, 1912 at the Muscogee County Courthouse. Many well known local citizens were on the jury. During the trial T Z stated he and Cedron were having a friendly scuffle when the gun went off and killed Cedron. He also stated he hid the body because he knew Mr Land would kill him if he found out. The Prosecution stated Cedron was murdered and the defense argued that it was involuntary manslaughter brought on by children playing with the gun. It took the jury 1 hour and 15 minutes to deliberate. T Z was found guilty of Involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. The sentence was three years hard labor in the State Penitentiary. Two unarmed Bailiffs tried to take T Z to the Sheriff's office and were surrounded by a mob made up mostly of friends and relatives of Cedron. The bailiff's refused to give up T Z and were attacked by members of this mob. A fight broke out at the court house but T Z was taken by the mob to the corner of 10th street and 2nd Avenue. One of the streetcars were stopped at gun point and the car was ordered to go to the city limits. At that time the city limits would have been 10th Avenue, near the R C plant. Passengers other than the mob were ordered off. The street car then continued towards Wynn's hill. The hill was too steep for the streetcar. The switch was located at the base of Wynn's hill, where Bradley drive is today. This is the road that runs in front of the Library. This is where the street car stopped and the mob and T Z got off. The street car was then told to go. T Z was shot there at the Wynn's Switch. There were between 25 and 50 holes in his body. He was left there in a small ditch. Word of the lynching spread like crazy and many people came out to see the body.

Condemnation for this act came from papers from all over the state. Four men were tried for the lynching of T Z. They were Will Land, Brewster Land a Cousin of Will Land and R E L or Ed Land, Will's Brother. Lee Lynn was the fourth. All four were tried and found not guilty in the murder of T Z. No one would or could identify them as the ones who did the actual shooting. Not much is known about Lynn. But, all the Land men went on to live into their 80's. They remain a prominent family today.

Two of the pictures below show the site of the pool on the Old Bradley estate. It is located right across the road that runs in front of the Bradley Library. This was the old Wynn's ditch on the street car line and was the area where T Z was shot and left. His body was retrieved by Alex Toles a local undertaker. T Z is buried in a Paupers grave at Porterdale Cemetery off Victory Drive. Cedron is buried next to his mother who died less than a year before he did. They are in the cemetery behind Mt Moriah Church on Double Churches Road.

I cannot Thank enough John Mallory Land for his help on this. He sent me photo copies of the articles and answered so many of my questions. I am so grateful for his help. The Bradley Library will be moving to it's new location soon, and There is no telling what will happen to the old pool or the Wynnton switch site. If the building is torn down and something else placed there, then the only marker for this tragedy will be lost forever. That is one of the reasons I wanted to include this on my site. One day it may be under Going Going Gone instead.

Thornhill Farm, Lisle, PA
 - "Lisle, Illinois, USA, with an area of 570 hectares/1,425 acres, was founded in 1922 by Joy Morton, and now constitutes one of the country's outstanding collection of woody plants. Thornhill Farm was Morton's country estate, which was redesigned by Ossian Simonds (1855 – 1932) as an arboretum around the Morton home. Simonds's naturalistic plan emphasized the subtle and gently undulating terrain and the existing stands of oak, hickory, and maples, which were augmented with extensive new plantings of trees and by the creation of Lake Marmo, close to some splendid specimen oaks. The new collections were set out in the areas best suited to their needs. Waste areas surviving from the earlier history of farming were developed to demonstrate improved forestry techniques. The arboretum site is bisected by a public road. Its larger part lies east of the road and includes the floodplain of the east branch of the DuPage river. The Visitor Center is located at the head of Meadow Lake, and this area is designed to provide expansive pastoral landscape views. Much of the newer planting groups here comprise mixed families. There are a number of special collections such as the hedge and coloured foliage collection. Almost half of the east section lies higher and contains a climax forest of oak, hickory, and maple. Recognizing the widespread phenomenon of the disappearance of mid-western prairies, in 1963 a former area of pasture was developed with mesic prairie plants." - David C. Brae-Burn Farm, Lake Forest, IL

 - “Brae Burn Farm near Lake Forest was the summer residence of Robert W. Leatherbee (1882-1934) and his wife Frances Anita Crane Leatherbee (1886-1954). Frances Anita was the daughter of businessman and philanthropist, Charles R. Crane of the Crane Company in Chicago, a plumbing and elevator company. Leatherbee became an executive of the company, and married Frances Anita in 1907. “About 1909, they purchased several farms on the southwest corner of Greenbay and Buckley Roads and consolidated them into Brae Burn Farm. Robert, Frances Anita and their three sons lived in a sprawling one-story stucco home. Next to the house was a small, formal garden, fountain, and a goldfish pool. “According to the farm manager's daughter, Dorothy Gleiser (1913-2004), the farm had a distinct black and white color palette. The buildings were white, and most of the animals were a combination of black and white, such as black and white Holstein cows, white chickens, Black Angus cattle, and black and white hogs. “ [from <http://dailyherald.com/story/?id=400338>]

 - “The Ralph Poole House, 1010 Green Bay Road
“David Adler’s Ralph Poole House, was designed in 1912, Adler’s first commission after he and his partner Henry Dangler left the office of Howard Van Doren Shaw. A devoted Francophile, Adler designed this elegant French manor house for the brother of his Princeton classmate Abram Poole. With its reference to 17th and 18th Century chateaux, its overall symmetry and its attention to detail, it is an unaltered example of Adler at his finest. The house was featured in a lengthy essay by Stephen Salny in his book The Country Houses of David Adler. The interior was furnished by Adler and Poole in association with William J. Quigley and Company.” [<http://www.lakebluff.org/vertical/Sites/%7B4E2A4CC6-D398-45D5-854D-094CC7DC31E7%7D/uploads/%7BF6F7077F-3563-489E-8B18-0E5E4DD14A49%7D.PDF>]

 - "Walden" was one of the leading, model estates in a period -- between the 1893 World's Fair and World War I -- when Chicago was in the forefront of national cultural leadership. The estate's boundaries were the Stone Gate neighborhood on the north, the lake on the east, Westleigh Road and Harold and Edith Rockefeller McCormicks' "Villa Turicum" on the south, and Ringwood Road and the Ryersons' "Havenwood" on the west. The large but inviting New England shingle-style house was designed by architect Jarvis Hunt, who came to Chicago from the east coast to work on the 1893 World's Columbian Exposition and also designed Great Lakes Naval Training Station. The "Ravello," too, was designed by Hunt. It is the bluff-edge overlook modelled on an Italian original seen abroad by Mrs. McCormick and which was the focal terminus of a vista from the house to the northeast."  - “The Katherine Legge Memorial Park and Lodge (Legge pronounced "leg") are located on 52 beautiful acres of woodland, a perfect setting for any occasion. The land and facilities were donated to the Village of Hinsdale in 1973.
“Alexander Legge was President of International Harvester. He and his wife, Katherine, originally developed the property as a weekend escape. Their ultimate plan included the construction of a home on the site. Upon the death of Katherine in 1924, Alexander established KLM as a retreat devoted to rest, recreation and welfare for women employed at International Harvester.
“The Katherine Legge Memorial Lodge was designed by architect, R. Harold Zook and built in 1927. The first floor of this English-style building provides a spacious living room with fireplace, dining room, kitchen, restrooms and office. The second floor is a large ballroom with fireplace which was used for recreational activities.
“Today, the Lodge and grounds are available for rental to accommodate private and corporate events such as weddings and receptions, meetings, parties, banquets, picnics, etc.
On February 13, 2008, the Illinois Council of American Institute of Architects (AIA) designated 150th anniversary of the AIA in 2007.” <http://www.villageofhinsdale.org/klm/default.php>

 - “Legge married Katherine McMahon Hall in 1908 (They had no children). In 1916 Legge bought 53 acres of land from the Enos M. Barton estate. He started construction on a large house, but had to abandon the project when the U.S. entered into WWI and subsequently banned private building. About 1921, the construction of their dream home on 53 acres essentially abandoned. The Legges bought a large house in Hinsdale, Illinois where they continued to entertain until Katherine's death in 1924. In 1923 Legge became very ill during an antitrust suit. He was hospitalized in California. Katherine spent most of her time with him, and thus catching her meals ‘on the fly’ from area restaurants. She contracted Typhoid. Katherine died in 1924. Upon the death of Katherine in 1924, Legge took the 53 acres of land and established the Katherine Legge Memorial. This property was used as a retreat devoted to rest, recreation and welfare for women employed at International Harvester. A lodge was built on the property in 1927 (designed by Landon began construction of his new residence in the early 1910s, when he was an executive of the Indianapolis Water Company. With the French chateau-style house as its centerpiece, the Oldfields landscape underwent further development in the 1920s according to designs by Percival Gallagher of Olmsted Brothers, a successor to the firm founded by Frederick Law Olmsted. Gallagher combined grand, formal elements such as the allée at the front of the house, with intimate and informal areas to create a variety of visual and emotional experiences.” <http://www.imamuseum.org/art/collections/lilly-house/history>

224 East 6th Avenue, Emporia, KS
 - Carrie Plumb was the widow of Emporia Founder and United States Senator Preston B. Plumb. She built the house in 1895 around an earlier house which had been the Plumb home since 1880. It is an elaborate example of the Neocolonial style, in which Georgian and pseudo-Georgian details are used to ornament an irregular, picturesque Victorian building. The facade is dominated by a two-story portico, supported by four wooden, inflated Ionic columns. At the southeast corner of the house is the library, an octagonal tan brick structure with green metal roof. Today, the house serves as a residence for low-income working women. Address: 224 East 6th Avenue (6th Ave. and Union) from http://www.lasr.net/travel/city.php?Plumb+Place&TravelTo=KS0108011&VA=Y&Attraction_ID=KS0108011a011
 - “Plumb Place was originally built in the 1870’s and was called home to Emporia founding father, Preston Plumb and his family. While in Emporia, Preston had many ties to the business community. He started the first newspaper in Emporia, was a cattleman, attorney, and banker. He donated the land and first $500.00 to start Sacred Heart Catholic Church and helped to form what is now Emporia State University. Preston came to Kansas with the civil war movement. He was determined to “keep Kansas free” and ended his military career with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Due to his popularity with his troops, his career in politics was born. Preston Plumb became a U.S. Senator and died while in office. His body was brought back to the capitol building in Topeka where it laid in state then to Emporia.
“Upon Preston’s death, Mrs. Plumb started the massive job of remodeling Plumb Place. She built around the existing home, adding a third floor with ballroom, and the expansive columns on the 6th street side. Carrie became interested in women’s issues and “fighting the noble cause”. So it seemed appropriate that with her death the Plumb heirs donate their childhood home to the YWCA to be used as a home for women.

The heirs also donated $20,000 to move the carriage house forward to meet the existing house and to make sleeping rooms.

“At over 11,000 square feet, Plumb Place has 3 kitchens, 2 tv lounges, 5 bathrooms, and rooms for 22 residents at a time. Last year, Plumb Place was called home to 63 women. Today the mission of Plumb Place is “assisting women in need by providing safe, affordable housing and opportunities for individual success.” [from <http://www.plumbplace.org/>]

 - Goose Creek, Louisville, Kentucky (stream)
Goose Creek (Jefferson): ghus kreek (Jeffersonville). This 6th class city with extinct post office, 8 miles northeast of downtown Louisville, is on the Ohio River bottom west of River Road, centered at the mouth of the stream for which it was named. This stream, which heads in Anchorage and flows for 13 miles, may have been named for the wild geese said to have inhabited its banks in pioneer times or, possibly for William Goose (Ganz), a wagonmaker who arrived in nearby Jeffersontown before 1800. The Goose Creek Post Office was established on 5 October 1892, with Emma Frederick, postmaster, and discontinued in 1902. On a 1912 topographical map this place was identified as Florida Heights, which surprises local people who have always known it as Goose Creek. Yet by 1881 the Florida Heights name had been applied to a station on the Louisville, Harrods Creek and Westport Railroad, a few hundred yards below Goose Creek. Goose Creek was incorporated in 1969. 100, 643, 989. Written by Robert M. Rennick, Kentucky Place Names, 1987.[<http://www.brennancallan.com/roscoe/roscoe.php>]
 - Bare Acres Farm-Henry Strater Estate, (JF-789), 5609 River Knolls Drive
Estate developed on site of earlier farm for Henry Strater of Strater Brothers Tobacco Company, beginning in 1905. Approximately forty-acre property was laid out and landscaped with assistance of Olisted Brothers. Property was subdivided and developed beginning in 1956 as River Knolls. House sits back from bluff behind sweeping lawn punctuated by sink holes.
1514-8 C-B 103. Main house, 1905-06. Two-story, stone and shingle house with Craftsman styling. Prominent porte-cochere protects front entrance. House lost top story to fire in 1956 and has addition from 1980s, but is historically significant as the main house for one of the string of estates in the district and because of its documented association with the Olmsted Brothers, who were closely involved in decisions regarding its siting, layout, and finish materials [Olmsted Job File #3039. John C. Olmsted to Henry Strater, 14 Nov. 1905).

Architect: Val Collins.

NC-B 104. Garage, 1960s. Three-bay, gable-roofed structure with shingle siding attached to main house by covered walkway.

NC-S 105. Swimming pool, ca. 1960.

W007-1 C-Si 106. Playing field. Open field historically and presently used for sports by Chance School.

Land was owned by Henry Strater and provided foreground vista from his house on bluffs above. [<http://pdfhost.focus.nps.gov/docs/NRHP/Text/99000495.pdf>]

Taylor decided that the cattle interests of the United States were being neglected and immediately took advantage of the opportunity to promote a higher grade of cattle in Kentucky, so he purchased the splendid farm of Alex Wright that fronts Frankfort Pike and from the Reilly heirs the Dr. Theoph. - “William Churchill, the grandfather of Armistead, emigrated from England in 1664 to settle in Middlesex county, Va., and to become one of the most extensive of the Virginia planters of his time. His home, Bushy Park, on the bank of the Rappahannock river near Chesapeake Bay, was noted for princely hospitality in Colonial days. A descendant, the late Charles T. Ballard, built a handsome house at Glenview, "Bushy Park," preserving the name of the Virginia home of his ancestor, now occupied by Mrs. Ballard and her daughter, Mrs. Charles Homer. They will move in the spring, however, for Mrs. Ballard recently sold Bushy Park to Judge Robert W. Bingham. Adjoining this estate is "Fincastle," which preserves the name of Fincastle county, Va., of which the site of Louisville was once a part, the home of another Churchill, Mrs. Alexander Pope Humphrey. On the other side of Bushy Park is Lansdowne, the home of S. Thruston Ballard, with its handsome grounds and residence.” [from http://www.kygenweb.net/history/ff_louisville/c5.htm]

- On March 21, 1888, Mr. [Baylor] Hickman married Stannye Ormsby, a native of Jefferson County, Kentucky and daughter of Benson and Eustasia (Cates) Ormsby, both natives of Kentucky. Mrs. Hickman was the second of five daughters. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hickman...Helen C., the second, is the wife of Clifton Rodes of Glenview, Kentucky and they have a daughter Stannye Baylor Rodes ... Mr. Hickman's home is at Glenview, formerly the Glenview Stock Farm, nine miles from Louisville. It is one of the most attractive homes of Jefferson County. [from History of Kentucky by William Elsey Connelley, Ellis Merton Coulter, published by The American Historical Society, 1912, p.41]

- BERRY HILL was the Virginia home of James Smalley Bate, and for that reason the Kentucky pioneer chose that name for his extensive acreage on the Ohio river, his estate covering the land which is now the suburb of Glenview, and the Bate residence being the Glenview Farms, home of Mr. and Mrs. Baylor Hickman.

Dr. James Bate, a surgeon, who emigrated from Yorkshire, England, and settled in St. Mary's, Maryland, was the father of the Kentucky settler.

Dr. Bate married Susannah Bond, the daughter of James Bond, whose five sons fought in the Delaware Blues. The Bates removed to what is now Martinsburg, W. Va., and it was there that on attaining his majority James Smalley Bate married Lucy Moore Throckmorton, granddaughter of John Robinson, speaker of the House of Burgesses, and great granddaughter of Sir Alexander Spotswood, first Colonial governor of Virginia.

When James Smalley Bate and his family came to Kentucky in 1789, their first location was Harmony Landing on the river above Prospect. They moved shortly to Falls of Ohio, and their first home here was a twelve-room log house on "Berry Hill." The second house was of brick and stood about five hundred yards from the third house on "Berry Hill," which was started shortly after 1800, and is now the Hickman home. The house and grounds were planned and laid out, a composite of the old Bate place in Maryland and Virginia.

James Smalley Bate was interested in the civic life of Louisville, and he was one of the founders of Christ Church Cathedral, and gave the land on which the church was built. He died in 1834, leaving a large fortune to his seven children, each receiving 500 acres of the estate. James Smalley Bate is buried in the old Glenview cemetery and here lies his mother, Susannah Bond Bate, who was born in 1740. Dr. James Bate died in Virginia during the Revolution.

The black walnut forest to the side of the homestead furnished the beautiful wood which is found in the mantels, and the woodwork and floors throughout the dwelling. The forest itself was uprooted in the Louisville cyclone and the side of the house was badly damaged also. According to a tradition in the family, expert carvers were paid $150 apiece for the work on the mantels, which are exquisite in design. The doors for the house were brought on packmules from Virginia, and as the house was finished before the doors arrived, it was necessary to hang mattresses in the apertures when the family took possession of the house.

The little attic room in the cupola, high up over the front door, is said to have been the household bank, and here James Smalley Bate kept the treasure chest with its stock of gold from which the expenses of the estate were drawn, and into whose coffers poured the wealth of this substantial and prosperous landholder, who did so much to advance agricultural pursuits in Jefferson county.

Gerard Bond Bate inherited the Bate home, "Berry Hill," and he sold it in 1869 to James C. McFerran, who, with his son, John B. McFerran established a famous trotting horse farm on the Glenview Farms. Later it was the home of John E. Green, and for some years has been owned by the Hickmans.

John Throckmorton Bate, who was born in 1809 at Berry Hill, and lived to be eighty-eight years old, spent his life in that vicinity. In 1834, the year of his marriage, to Eleanor Anne Locke, he built "Woodside" within a mile of his father's home. The house still standing is a splendid example of the Virginia farmhouse colonial of white brick. In this house lived three generations of Bates, the last owner in the family being John Throckmorton Bate, son of Clarence Bate and Octavia Zantziger, and grandson of John Throckmorton Bate.  - “Developer Steve Canfield is seeking to quell concerns about his purchase of the 143-acre Fincastle Farm in Prospect by agreeing to preserve much of the natural setting...Canfield, owner and president of Prospect-based Canfield Development Co., has reached an agreement to buy the site from former Brown-Forman Corp. executive W.L. Lyons Brown Jr., who is serving as U.S. ambassador to Austria...Canfield plans to make Fincastle Farm his residence and to set aside a portion of the estate for a $75 million development with upscale homes...Neighbors expressed concerns when the estate went up for sale, fearing that developers would build subdivisions throughout the property...But Canfield is working to place 97 acres of the property under a conservation and preservation easement, ensuring that it will remain undeveloped farmland for years to come...The Brown family accepted his fourth offer, which Canfield said was for more than $8 million...Located at 7501 Wolf Pen Branch Road, Fincastle Farm is bordered by Harrods Creek, Wolf Pen Branch Road, Wolf Ridge Road and Wolf Pen Trace....A separate entrance will be created for the estate, which will keep the Fincastle Farm name...Initial plans call for up to 58 lots, each of which will range between 0.6 acre to just over one acre. Home prices are projected to start at about $1 million....Hugh Shwab, a Wolf Ridge Road resident whose five-acre property adjoins Fincastle Farm, will host one such meeting on Sunday...Canfield said his wife, Penny Love, who is a home builder, will oversee the renovation of the home, which was built in 1937. It is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Although some of its elegance has faded, the 9,000-square-foot brick home is still an impressive site, outfitted with black shutters and ornate white trim. Part of the appeal of the house, he said, is in its unique features, such as mantle and trim work that would be difficult to replicate. "My wife and I love old houses," Canfield said. "This is kind of a special place, and it needs to be restored." [from http://www.canfielddevelopment.com/news_051305.asp]

 - "In March 1906 Williams competed for the rebuilding of the famous Phoenix Hotel in Lexington, Ky.; the local paper states that he had "planned and supervised the construction of a number of residences in Lexington, including the home of Mr. George K. Graves, Mrs. Lyman Beecher Todd, and of Professor Patterson on Loudon [Avenue]." The homes of these prominent Lexingtonians were identified by W.E. Langsam as a group of extremely mannered, if not downright perverse, Queen Anne/Shingle Style houses with an exaggerated variety of materials and cladding, with elongated and attenuated, interrupted, and stylistically improbable features, dating from the late 1890s; other similar buildings in the Lexington area have been attributed to Williams by Langsam, although they may rather reflect imitation as the sincerest form of flattery." <http://www.architecturecincy.org/dictionary/W.html>

- Maysville Road See also: Maysville Road veto
 Southwest from Maysville, the road followed the former buffalo trace and Native American trail to Lexington. It was called both the Maysville Road and the Limestone Road. It was maintained by the various counties through which it passed with local labor from the county levies.[20] The road was rough and during certain seasons practically impassable.
 In 1829 the Kentucky legislature authorized the Maysville, Washington, Paris and Lexington Turnpike Road Company to construct a modern roadway along the route of the old Limestone Road. Users would be charged fees for maintenance and paying off the debt to shareholders. The act set aside blocks of shares for purchase by the federal government. Henry Clay, an influential Kentucky politician and proponent of the American System, argued for the Maysville Road and other infrastructure, noting it would be part of a longer road terminating in New Orleans, Louisiana and proper for federal funding.
 In 1830, Congress passed a bill authorizing the federal government to purchase shares in the turnpike company. President Andrew Jackson, a bitter rival of Clay, vetoed the bill, arguing that the project was of purely local benefit. The Maysville Road veto was one of Jackson's first acts in aligning the federal government with his principles of Jacksonian democracy.
 An attempt to override Jackson's veto failed, but the controversy over the Maysville Road veto continued for some time. In the event, the turnpike was completed in 1835 with funding from local entities and private investment. It was the first macadamized road in the state. Today it is U.S. Route 68.

“19.History
John T. Bate, a son of James Smalley Bate of Berry Hill (JF-552), built the original portion of this house in the 1850s on land inherited from his father. In 1901 Peter Lee Atherton acquired the house and about 125 acres of the land. Atherton was a prominent businessman who built two notable early 20th century office buildings in downtown Louisville. Atherton carried out the remodeling and additions to the original house which resulted in the present Colonial Revival appearance. Atherton also built a large carriage house in the Shingle Style, which still stands. It has been adapted for use as a residence. (See JF-535 attached) In the 1920s the Athertons created formal gardens which are said to have been designed by Mrs. Atherton. The gardens do not exist today but a series of photographs taken remain as records of these gardens. (See Photocopy 1)” <http://pdfhost.focus.nps.gov/docs/NRHP/Text/83002753.pdf>

At Thornewood Castle, history and fairy tales are made from such as this. The "house that love built" continues to this day to enchant visitors from far and wide. It stands as a tribute to a man, Chester Thorne, who gave a whole new meaning to the term "built to last". The building materials brought around "the Horn" from England carry whisperings of the Renaissance past. Materials from the Northwest crafted 100 years ago by workman, who produced only the best quality, mark a labor of love.

 - "William Pitt Trimble, a Seattle millionaire, purchased Blake island, and renamed it Trimble Island for a time. By 1917 he and his family lived there in a magnificent estate.
"The Trimble family invited Camp Fire Girls from Seattle, and throughout Washington State to hold their first summer resident camp on Trimble Island, in 1920. The girls named their camp, Camp Sealth, in honor of the birthplace of Chief Sealth. They paid for a delivery of logs, but soon found them floating away at high tide. They scrambled to haul them back, and soon found themselves dealing with a fire on the island. Due to other plans by the Trimble Family, Camp Fire Girls of Seattle searched for a new, and permanent location for Camp Sealth. By the next summer the camp was moved to Vashon Island, where it remains today.

“In 1929, the Trimble family's occupation of the island came to an end when William Trimble's wife Cassandra died in an accident in Seattle. After that, the island was abandoned and the house was left to decay. Trimble sold Blake Island to an investment company in 1936, and retired in Seattle.” [wikipedia]

A proud piece of the island's history, the Moran Mansion at Rosario Resort overlooks Cascade Bay on 30 acres of exquisitely manicured grounds. In recognition of its historic significance, this elegant structure, made of teak and mahogany, has earned its place on the National Register of Historic Places. Created by ship builder Robert Moran in 1909 as a family retreat, the mansion was built as strong as the ocean liners of the period. Today, it's the focal point of the Rosario Resort & Spa, housing the resort's dining room, lounge, boutique and spa.
Marvel at the 6,000 feet of beautiful teak parquet floors. Visit the Moran Museum on its second floor, displaying memorabilia and period photos. Take the grand staircase leading into the Music Room that features Tiffany chandeliers, Moran's 1900 Steinway Grand Piano and his 1913 Aeolian 1,972 Pipe Organ, still played in live performances. [Sections 4, 9, 10 show Wm. G. Reed Property "Grays Marsh" in 1973]

- "Now I became determined to get more information about Anderson, so I returned to the library. A librarian helped me find some references to the property, and even told me that she'd been to the "hunting lodge" as a child. Alfred H. Anderson had been many things, but the property in Sequim was developed to entertain his duck hunting friends. Today, much of the property is a preserve for water fowl - a bit ironic, I suppose. In the 1950's and '60's, school children were brought there on field trips. The librarian said she would try to find out more information about Alfred Anderson and call me.

A couple of weeks later, the librarian called and also sent me a copy of an email from another branch's reference librarian. It stated that the reason Mr. Anderson's beautiful estate is not noted in any of the historical information is because there was "some scandal, possibly an affair" associated with him. So it wasn't a South American bride - it was a scandal. I later found out that it had to do with Anderson's untimely death in 1914. Apparently, he collapsed in a New York hotel room, in the company of a lady who was not his wife. How typical of Betty to take the gist of a story and change it just enough to make it fascinating, but not a cold, hard fact!

The main house, a Victorian grande dame, was prickly with cupolas, little balconies, and chimneys. The sagging porches and paneless windows gave it a wrinkled toothless look. Crouching at the back was a huddled mass of servants' quarters with caretakers' cottages, barns and farm buildings across the driveway on the other side. Buildings, orchards and gardens were strung along the edge of the bluff, but so obliterated by second growth, firs, blackberry vines, and salal that only by stumbling on broken bits of fence were we able to guess what had been where. (The Egg and I, p. 156)

Another trip to the property cleared up the rest of the story. The buildings I'd seen at the end of that tree-lined lane had been Anderson's hunting lodge, stables, barns, and a out-buildings. They had been preserved, though the property had been vacant for periods of time over the decades. The stately home Betty and Bob explored was on another part of the property, and it, too, was still standing. One quiet Sunday afternoon, my fellow Betty MacDonald researcher, Ellen, and I drove to the mansion. It is set back from the road, and a large lavender field lies between the fence line and the home. We walked up, planning to ask whoever we saw if we could take a few photos. No one came out. The house was empty. Maybe it always was empty, it was hard to tell. We looked through the glass windows that flanked the front door and could see a large foyer and what may have been a ballroom. The home certainly was lovely, though had a lonely feeling that may have inspired Betty to exaggerate its run-down condition.

- Julius John (J. J.) Bonnell 1875-1939, Seattle, Washington
 Prominent early-Seattle nurseryman and landscape gardener who was instrumental in developing the Washington Park Arboretum and other public landscapes.
 Born and raised in France, Bonnell studied horticulture there and began his career at the Jardin des Plantes in Paris. He quickly distinguished himself, so much so that in 1894 the French government sent him to San Francisco to report on California horticulture. As it did for so many others, California and the West offered unlimited possibilities. By 1897, Bonnell had finished his work for the French government, and he and his wife, Camille, set their sites on Seattle. They arrived on a wing and a prayer, spending their last $15 on food.
 Working first as a gardener on the stylish First Hill estates, Bonnell soon became a florist, as commercial flower-growers were then known. From there, he moved on to the nursery business. Eventually, he would operate nurseries in the Montlake neighborhood, at Bryn Mawr near Renton, and in Kirkland next to the ferry terminal. Bonnell stocked his nurseries with the finest plants known at the time. He traveled throughout Europe, searching for choice plants for his nurseries. He also visited Japan, from which he imported the first tree peonies seen in Seattle. He also returned with Japanese iris, then unknown in the region.
 In addition to the nurseries, Bonnell also made important contributions to public landscapes. The Olmsted Bros. selected him as the official florist of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, a position which carried the responsibility for providing literally tens of thousands of flowering plants. He also worked on the Washington State Capitol Campus, the Seattle Art Museum, and Peace Arch Park at the Canadian border. He was also active in developing the Washington Park Arboretum, contributing both his expertise and plant materials. By 1939, Bonnell had made so many important contributions to horticulture that his obituary called him "...one of Washington's most prominent citizens.." and noted that he was affectionately known as the "Burbank of the Northwest."

- "The plaintiff brought this action for the purpose of recovering damages his farm lands by the flood waters from Cedar river. This river rises in the Mountains and flows in a westerly direction. During the year 1903 the city of Seattle constructed a dam across the river some miles above where the plaintiff's farm is located. The water impounded by the construction of this dam was the source of the city's water supply. During the year 1909 a superstructure of approximately five feet in height was erected upon the top of the dam as constructed during the year 1903. The purpose of this superstructure was to increase the storage capacity of the impounding basin. On November 19, 1911 the superstructure by reason of the flood conditions was swept away thus releasing a large volume of water which flowed down Cedar river over and upon the lands of the plaintiff thereby doing the damage for which this action was instituted.  - As if the uproar about cost overruns at Safeco Field weren't enough to distract Mariners co-owner Chris Larson, he's found himself defending another major building project - the renovation of his 32-room mansion in The Highlands.
One of his neighbors has sued, claiming the ongoing three-year construction project in the guarded and gated 380-acre community has disrupted the couple's lifestyle, devalued their own multimillion-dollar house and rattled their windows and nerves.
Though in need of work, Larson's three-story, 31,000-square-foot mansion, the old McCone-Pigott estate, is perhaps the signature estate in The Highlands, Seattle's old-money enclave where families with names like Boeing, Wright and McCaw have laid their roots. Wolfendale, Larson's attorney, says the project will be a "beautiful renovation of the former Pigott estate and will remain commensurate with the character of this quite beautiful and secure neighborhood."
The cost of the project is not publicly known, but Becky Allen says its extravagance is an outrage, coming at a time when Larson and the other M's owners are asking King County taxpayers to pick up $60 million in cost overruns at the $517 million Safeco Field.
The home, called Norcliffe, was built by lumber magnate C.D. Stimson. It is the former home of Theiline and Paul Pigott, founder of Pacific Car and Foundry, now called Paccar.
After Paul Pigott's death, Theiline Pigott married former CIA director John McCone. She died in 1990 and he died the following year.
Asking price for the home and its surrounding 9.5 acres was $6.5 million, according to news accounts at the time. Larson also owns an adjoining lot of roughly 6 acres.

In 1994, Larson used the home to host a wedding reception for Microsoft founder Bill Gates. Shortly thereafter, Larson and Calhoun began preliminary work on the Norcliffe renovation project, which is so extensive that Shoreline planning officials simply refer to it as the "North Seattle Residence," or "NSR," without need of further explanation. The farm was founded by Fred Stimson, a prominent Seattle lumberman who turned his weekend estate in the valley into a thriving Holstein dairy farm.

His wife, Nellie, headed up Hollywood Gardens, consisting of eight large greenhouses that supplied carnations and chrysanthemums to the Seattle markets, as well as shipping them as far away as Alaska and Hong Kong.

In addition, the Stimsons operated two stores in downtown Seattle, one providing flowers from Nellie Stimson's greenhouses and another selling products such as cream, butter, cheese and ice cream from the farm.

Stimson also partnered with Morton Atkinson to establish Hollywood Poultry Farm on acreage atop Hollywood Hill."

 - Whitcomb negotiated for a price of $90,000 and established Woodway Park, setting restrictions to future owners including two-acre lots and prohibiting sub-divisions.
Whitcomb initially resided in the only structure on the property, known as Brown Owl Lodge. In 1927 he moved into an estate he called Westwold, which included farms, orchards, horses, cattle, goats, a private airport and polo grounds.
Instead of granting his son, David Jr., a weekly cash allowance, Whitcomb allowed him to run and pocket the profits from a cow barn and milk delivery route.
Tycoons like Pacific NW Bell President Walter Straley and Boeing honcho P.G. Johnson built estates in Woodway Park.
When Johnson died, his family donated the home and lands to the Dominican Sisters. The facility was once selected as the site of a Hollywood movie and the film's producers added the swimming pool.
The sisters still own the facility, but have placed it up for sale. A bond issue on the August ballot would allow the community to acquire the estate for Woodway City offices, public reception areas and parklands.

 - As you pass through the gates of Westwold, you know this isn't your typical home.
Maybe it's the bubbling fountains, the smell of flowers in bloom or the pristinely manicured landscape, but it's easy to see that this 12,232-square-foot home on nine acres overlooking Puget Sound is one of the most expensive homes in the county.
It could be yours for only $8.95 million, although the county has assessed the home at $2 million less.

 In 1905, Binkley's daughter, Ethelyn Binkley, married Spokane businessman Aubrey White, and in 1928, Ethelyn & Aubrey White were gifted the deed to Montvale Farm. Nicknamed the "Father of Spokane Parks," Aubrey White was nationally credited with "giving Spokane more parkland per person than any city in America." He helped found and was elected president of Spokane's first park board, founded Spokane's "City Beautiful Club," was employed for 26 years as garden editor and director of the Spokesman-Review's Civic Development Department, and was noted for his efforts at consensus building, getting everyone to work together for the betterment of Spokane. "His passionate pleas for parkland and city beautification are legendary" and he was eulogized as one of "Spokane's finest citizens" who did "more for the establishment of Spokane's park system than any other person." With specifications rendered by the famed Olmsted Brothers Landscape Architectural firm of Brookline, Massachusetts, Aubrey White transformed Montvale Farm, the Montvale Farmhouse, and surrounding gardens and riverbanks into one of Spokane's finest properties, a noted "showplace" and "attractive summer home on the Little Spokane."

 "Louis Davenport/R.B. Porter Estate
 In 1912 Cutter constructed a home for Louis Davenport on a nice sized lot situated on the south hill at 34 West 8th Avenue. Davenport was an important citizen in forming the history of Spokane. After the ruinous fire of 1889 Davenport opened a waffle stand, which expanded into a restaurant, and eventually he contracted Cutter to construct The Davenport Hotel, completed in 1914 and regarded for decades as the most luxurious hotel in the Pacific Northwest.
 The structures of Louis Davenports four acre estate followed both German and English designs, however with some playfulness. The towers in the gate lodge can be seen as “more evocative of Grimm’s Fairy Tales than of the lodge gates of English country estates.”[i] The landscaping by the Olmstead Brothers included upper and lower terrace gardens and the property also incorporated an elaborate garden with winding paths, a number of ponds, thirteen waterfalls, and four bridges. There was even a basalt rock gate entrance to the property from seventh avenue. The estate also included a swimming pool, perhaps the first residential pool in Spokane.

Davenport lived in the home for merely four months before he sold it to Richard B. Porter, who resided in the home until 1940 when he sold the property to his son, also named Richard B. Porter. It was then donated for use as a nursing facility until 1968 when the structure was demolished for additions to Sacred Heart Hospital. The property now includes a portion of the Children's Hospital and a parking lot.

 - Saint George's School was established in 1955 as St. George's Episcopal School on the former summer estate of Louis Davenport called Flowerfield. At that time there were 45 students in grades seven through nine. Initially, students were required to share space with the livestock in the stable while construction of the original school building was underway. By 1957, association with the episcopal church was severed and the school name was officially changed to Saint George's School. In June 1959 Saint George's held its first commencement exercises as nine seniors crossed graduation bridge to the music of the Angus Scott pipe band, a tradition that is honored to this day.

 - "Miss Rozetta Larreau Died of Bullet Wound
Brief mention was made in these columns last issue of the accidental wounding of Miss Rozetta Larreau, a young lady well known here. Saturday's Spokesman-Review announced that the wound resulted in her death. Miss Larreau formerly lived with the Wm. Baines family of this city and she and Miss Ethel Baines were classmates together in the nursing course at Sacred Heart Hospital in Spokane, where her death occurred. The Spokane paper gives the following account of the young lady's death: Accidentally shot with a gift revolver which was discharged when in her own hands, Miss Rosetta Larreau, a graduate nurse, is dying at the Sacred Heart hospital notwithstanding transfusions of blood given by classmates.

The accident happened Thursday afternoon at the residence of Z. A. Pfile, E 17 Eighth avenue, where Miss Larreau resided. From what could be learned last night she was hurrying to meet another nurse to go down town. She picked up the revolver and ran a cloth over it to clean it when it exploded. Miss Larreau then ran screaming into the hallway and told Miss Dodd, another nurse, that she was shot.

Dr. E. E. Jennings, who was called, hurried her to the hospital, where he and Dr. H. P. Marshall attempted to stop the flow of blood. An operation disclosed that the bullet entered the abdomen, passed through the liver and after glancing from a dorsal vertebra passed out at the side and went through an arm.

It was found Miss Larreau was bleeding to death from the injury to her liver and nurses volunteered to give blood to prolong her life. Miss Margaret Clark, a graduate nurse, gave half a pint of blood. When Miss Larreau become feebler yesterday, a half pint of blood from Miss Tuschoff, another nurse, was transsfused. It was believed late lasts night that Miss Larreau could live but a few hours.

Nurses recalled last night that Miss Larreau had recently exhibited the pearl handled revolver to them. She was warned that a revolver was dangerous, but she explained that she had had experience with firearms and was not afraid of it.

Mrs. N. Hamilton, mother of Miss Larreau, who resides at Steilacoom, reached Spokane Yesterday. A brother at Tacoma is on his way here.

Miss Larreau is 22 years old and was graduated from the Sacred Heart a year ago.

- “In the spring of 1898 while employed as a carrier in the post office at Spokane Wash as a result of exposure I was suddenly stricken with severe lung trouble which later assumed a most alarming form many times causing the fear that this attack would be my last I seemed to recover somewhat after the first few months but in the fall of the same year the attacks became more frequent While in the hills of western Canada I consulted a doctor who had me provide myself with a goodly supply of medicine but did not give me much encouragement I returned home in October 1898 and consulted another doctor who told me that one lung was in a bad condition I continued to grow worse the attacks becoming more frequent My wife urged me to try Christian Science treatment which I felt might be good for some people but I did not think it would reach my case Finally about the end of December 1898 after constant urging I decided to consult a Christian Science practitioner The first visit was very encouraging I at once took a deep interest in the study of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mrs Eddy as well as the Bible in fact I read scarcely anything else for several months and felt that I certainly had found the truth which heals For about ten days after beginning the treatment I was perfectly free from pain or the least indication of the alarming phase of the disease but about the second week in the stillness of the night I was awakened with a very distressing attack My wife asked me to take some medicine which we had always kept on hand but I told her I would not take it and requested her to read to me from Science and Health She did so for a short time and I finally went to sleep only to awake in the morning with the apparently dangerous condition still in evidence During the day and the following evening I had four more severe attacks making five in twenty four hours which was more than I had ever had before I also seemed to suffer more than usual These conditions continued until the next day but I kept on clinging to Truth declaring with all the power I had that God was my Life Finally the pain ceased the alarming symptoms were entirely subdued during the following day and I soon went to work perfectly well I was considerably reduced in flesh but inside of one year thereafter I was heavier than I had ever been before In the past six years my average weight has been one hundred and ninety three pounds I have not had one day's illness since my healing in January 1899 at which time my chest was very noticeably sunken but inside of a few months my wife called my attention to the fact that it had regained its natural condition During all my life I was subject to periodical spells of liver trouble but those too have left me and I am today free a well man .” Zenas A Pfile Spokane Wash The Christian Science Journal, Volume 24 By Mary Baker Eddy, First Church of Christ, Scientist (Boston, Mass.), First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, p.688

The estate affords a sweeping view of Boston Harbor, where Forbes ships once docked with their exotic cargoes from the Far East. The mansion was occupied by the Forbes family into the 1960's, and later housed the China Trade Museum until 1984. It is now restored to approximate its Victorian appearance in the 1870's, when Alice Bowditch Forbes and James Murray Forbes raised their family here. <http://www.maritimemuseums.net/MA.html>

- “The land upon which the Spokane House site and Peavine Jimmy’s Threshing Barn are located is currently owned by the Washington State Parks and Recreation Commission (WSPRC), as part of Riverside State Park. The land was given as a grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad in 1883 and later passed through various hands to eventually become the state park, beginning in 1934. In particular, the land upon which the Threshing Barn is situated was preempted and proved upon by Mrs. Burnett in 1892. She sold the property to R. J. Hurd in 1906, who in turn sold it, in 1910, to three investors -- J. W. Binkley, a probate court judge, Robert Strickland, of the Dutch investment firm of Binkley and Taylor, and Ben Norman, who once owned the Spokane Hotel.
“In 1918, these men sold the property to B. L. Gordon. Following Mr. Gordon’s death, his wife proclaimed that it had been his dream to donate part of the land for use as a state park. In a deal coordinated between Mrs. Gordon, D. Van Worden, W. C. Mading, and Mr. and Mrs. Murl C. Shoemaker, the land was gifted to the state parks system. Aubrey White (1864-1948), who was promoting the creation of the Spokane city parks system, was instrumental in bringing these parties together.” From “Peavine Jimmy aka James Walton (1830-1902)”, HistoryLink.org Essay 9273

Description: This birds eye view of the old Weyerhaeuser mansion, "Haddaway Hall", at 4301 North Stevens St. and the surrounding area was taken in 1948. By then the estate, which had changed hands several times, was in the possession of the Dominican Sisters of Marymount, who operated it as a school, Tacoma Catholic College, and as a convent. Completed in 1922, the Elizabethan English Tudor home was built for lumber baron John Philip Weyerhaeuser and his wife Anna. The name comes from Weyerhaeuser's comment that Anna always "had her way," so the home became "Haddaway Hall." The estate consisted of the main house, carriage house, greenhouses and the servant quarters house (now 4224 No. Stevens.) It was surrounded by 8 acres of grounds. The formal gardens were designed by the Olmstead brothers, Frederick Law and Charles, and were brought to life by T.B. Morrow. It was built on the site of the former Allen C. Mason mansion and Whitworth College. It is now the home of the Northwest Baptist Seminary, and is on both the City and National Registry of historic buildings.

 - “William Churchill, the grandfather of Armistead, emigrated from England in 1664 to settle in Middlesex county, Va., and to become one of the most extensive of the Virginia planters of his time. His home, Bushy Park, on the bank of the Rappahannock river near Chesapeake Bay, was noted for princely hospitality in Colonial days. A descendant, the late Charles T. Ballard, built a handsome house at Glenview, "Bushy Park," preserving the name of the Virginia home of his ancestor, now occupied by Mrs. Ballard and her daughter, Mrs. Charles Homer. They will move in the spring, however, for Mrs. Ballard recently sold Bushy Park to Judge Robert W. Bingham. Adjoining this estate is "Fincastle," which preserves the name of Fincastle county, Va., of which the site of Louisville was once a part, the home of another Churchill, Mrs. Alexander Pope Humphrey. On the other side of Bushy Park is Lansdowne, the home of S. Thruston Ballard, with its handsome grounds and residence.” [from

COLLIS v. CITIZENS FIDELITY BANK & TRUST CO.
Squire R. Ogden, Charles A. Robertson, and Ogden, Galphin & Abell, all of Louisville, for appellant.
James W. Stites, and Doolan, Helm, Stites & Wood, all of Louisville, for appellee.
Sims
SIMS, Chief Justice. This declaratory action was instituted by Harriet Collis against the Citizens Fidelity Bank and Trust Company, trustee under the will of her grandfather, George Gaulbert, to determine what estate she took under the will in certain trust property. The chancellor adjudged Mrs. Collis took a life estate in the property with remainder in her three children, and she appeals.
Hon. W. Scott Miller, Judge of the Chancery Branch, Second Division of the Jefferson Circuit Court rendered a clear and logical opinion which we now adopt. However, Judge Miller copied the entire will in his opinion and as we think the estate Mrs. Collis takes is determined by the construction of one paragraph from Item 8 of the will, it will be the only part of the will incorporated in this opinion. With this slight change Judge Miller's opinion reads:
'This action involves the interpretation of the will of George Gaulbert who died in 1908. His widow also died a number of years ago.
'Mr. and Mrs. Gaulbert had one child, Carrie Gaulbert, who married Attila Cox in 1898 and who died Feb. 22, 1949.

'Mr. and Mrs. Cox had one child, the plaintiff, Harriet Cox, who was born before the death of Mr. Gaulbert and who married John V. Collis. Mr. and Mrs. Collis have three children all of whom were born during the lifetime of Mrs. Cox. [emphasis added]

The will of Mr. Gaulbert was written for him in 1896 by Temple Bodley, a competent member of the Bar. At the time the will was written Mrs. Cox had not yet married and Mrs. Collis had not been born. However, at the time of Mr. Gaulbert's death in 1908, Mrs. Cox had been married some ten years and Mrs. Collis was seven years old."

 - "Alexander Gilmore Ouerbacker was born on 22 Jan 1894 in Louisville, KY. He died on 15 Mar 1966 in Louisville, KY. He was buried in Cave Hill Cemetery, Louisville, KY. The following death notice appeared in the Louisville Courier-Journal, Thursday morning, 3/17/1966:
"The funeral of A. Gilmore Ouerbacker, 72, a retired real estate dealer, will be held at 11 a.m. Friday at Parson's, 1310 S. Third. Burial will be in Cave Hill Cemetery. He lived in The 800 Apartments at Fourth and York.
"Ouerbacker, widely known in horse-show circles, was one of the founders and part owner of Daneshall Stables which produced two grand champion five-gaited stake winners in Easter Parade (1947) and My My (1963).
"He was a veteran of WW I and a member of the Louisville Country Club, the Pendennis Club, and the Louisville Real Estate Board.
"He was associated with the Ouerbacker Coffee Co., founded by his father, until the company went out of business during WW II.
"Survivors include two daughters, Miss Helen Ouerbacker, New York City; Mrs. Wm. C. Perry, San Marino, Calif.; two stepsons, Robert Gardner Rye, N. Y. and Wm. A. Gardner; a step-daughter, Mrs. Murdock Head, Warrenton, Va., and two grandchildren."
On 3/23/1966, his will was probated in Jefferson Co. Court covering an estate of $3 million. He made several direct bequests including one of $5,000 to the Louisville Children's Hospital. Most of his estate was left to his two daughters.
It is believed that Gilmore was married twice but the names of his wives or any other information is unknown.
The Beanblossoms note in their book that Florence had talked to Gilmore on the phone from Niagara Falls, NY, in February of 1966 and had made a date to see him when he came to Indiana in March. He died just a week before they arrived.
Parents: Frank Samuel Ouerbacker and Helen T. Gilmore.

Shirley Street [sic; Shirley Rd.?
Groton, Mass.
Year Built: 1885
Designed by Sturgis & Brigham sometime before 1889 and built by Whitcomb, who Brigham uses on a regular basis as a builder. The picture may or may not be the Sturgis and Brigham designed house, although it is of a house owned by Joy in Groton. Looking at the 1889 Walker Atlas, it looks like there are several houses on the property.

- “Architecture

The house at 194 Shirley Road was owned in 1875 by Solomon Achorn who, according to tax records, owned 3 horses, 2 cows, 3 swine and 48 sheep, a larger than average flock and an orchard in 1880 of 150 trees which was typical for Groton. Charles H. Joy, a brother in law of James Lawrence of 44 Farmers Row (MHC #89), was the owner depicted on the 1889 Walker atlas. He was taxed in that year for ownership of $30,000 in stocks and cash, 8 horses, $1,500 in carriages and $3,000 in furniture, a great deal more than most other people in Groton. Tax records also show that he owned this property as a secondary residence, probably to house his farmer or employees and he lived at the future site of 102 Joy Lane in a building valued in 1889 at the very high rate of $10,000, which has since been demolished (this is likely the site of the c. 1964 DanielsonCampbell House at 102 Joy Lane). It contained 30 rooms and was landscaped by members of the Frederick Law Olmsted landscape architecture firm. It is possible that the existing stone and brick retaining walls and landscaped terraces are the result of this construction effort. The Boston directory for 1885 lists a Charles H. Joy of Marlborough Street who was a dry goods merchant in business with men named Lincoln and Motley at 15 Chauncy Street.” From “Surrenden Farms Form A” for Massachusetts Historical Commission <http://books.gpl.org/GPLDL3/SurrendenFarmsFormA.pdf>

- “To a one-time resident, the changes in the neighborhood are quite noticeable. The advent of the Groton School in 1884, and its extension has caused the removal of many of the old houses and fire has put its effacing hand on others.

The John HARTWELL farm buildings were moved in 1898, and separated, the house now standing just north of the old GRAVES house and the barn removed into the pasture. This bar was built for Stephen M. KENDALL, with timbers cut in the Knops pond woods and sawed out at the old Lothrop mill at the outlet of the pond. The RICHARDS, LEIGHTON and Benjamin HARTWELL houses have been removed to make room for the more pretentious buildings of Mr. GARDNER, while the erection of the Joy mansion led to the removal of the PARKER house in 1885, and the FITZ house, which was taken down after 1900. The old barn on the POLLARD place was burned on May 16, 1877, and that on the GRAVES place, then owned by the school, was struck by lightning on May 30, 1887, and burned. The GOODWIN house, then owned by Mrs. POWELL, was destroyed by fire on July 19, 1904. The bar at the Aaron MASON or CULVER farm being in a delapidated [SIC] condition, was taken down.” From “The Community – Groton, Mass.”, by Edward Adams Richardson, 1911 <http://www.formycousins.com/community.html>

- Biographical information on Joseph Pulitzer

<http://www.pulitzer.org/biography>

- "In 1896, the same year that the Bowens purchased Baymeath, the Pulitzers acquired Chatwold, the cottage of Louise Bowler Livingston.

"Grand by most standards, the 27-room house was not large enough for the Pulitzer's needs, and McKim, Mead and White were brought in to add a five-story stone tower, 40 x 40, including a steam heated, ocean fed indoor pool -- one of the first in the country -- and locker rooms on the lower level overlooking the ocean.

"On the main floor was a huge library, and on the middle floors rooms for the secretaries and assistants Pulitzer with whom Pulitzer surrounded himself at all times. And at the top, a sound proof bedroom for the blind publisher, whose nervous afflictions required absolute quiet. The family immediately dubbed the new addition 'the Tower of Silence'." Description: Joseph Pulitzer, publisher of "World", first leased Chatwold, located on Schooner Head Road in Bar Harbor, in June 1893 from Louise Bowler Livingston. He then bought it a year later and began costly additions and renovations. There was also a stable that could hold twenty-six horses. Pulitzer died in 1911 and Chatwold was demolished in 1945.

- “The most famous, as well as notorious, resident along Schooner Head Road probably has been Joseph Pulitzer (1847-1911), owner of the New York World and the namesake for the famous journalism prizes. Pulitzer’s mansion Chatwold, which he bought in 1894, featured Bar Harbor’s first heated swimming pool, as well as a unique, $100,000 ‘Tower of Silence.’ Pulitzer, who suffered from asthma, insomnia, nervous exhaustion, and depression, alternating with bursts of energy and euphoria, intensely disliked noise. He even tried (but failed) to get the federal government to turn off the foghorn at Egg Rock light, just across the water in Frenchman Bay.
 “Chatwold was torn down in 1944. The house perched dramatically on top of Schooner Head today, on a six-acre property that includes 460 feet of shore frontage, was built in the mid-1980s for an attorney whose firm, with offices in London and Washington, D.C., specializes in international tax law.”

- High Pastures is an informal country house set high on a bluff overlooking the Atlantic Ocean. In 1926, the family acquired additional acreage, which led to revisions of a 1910 plan by James Dawson of the Olmsted Brothers firm. An elliptical garden, called the Round Garden, has a bird bath as its focal point. Stone steps and a stone terrace were also added. Carl Rust Parker of the Olmsted Brothers firm specified the use of native plants to attract birds. The Earle sisters maintained vegetable and cutting gardens near the original carriage house which was located at a distance from the house; this portion of the property is no longer part of High Pastures. Miss Elinor Earle designed the Long Garden, which runs along the ocean side of the house. She used Gertrude Jekyll's design from Gardens for the Small Country Home for the stone steps. Subsequent family members maintained the designs of the Olmsted Brothers. The property changed hands in 2002. The gardens were later destroyed to make way for development in 2004.
 Persons associated with the property and garden include: Mr. and Mrs. Alice and James Earle (former owners, 1906-1915); The Misses Elinor, Mary and Doris Earle (former owners, 1915-1956); Horace Wells Sellors (architect, 1907); James Dawson (landscape architect, 1910); and Carl Rust Parker (stonework consultant, 1926).
 Garden featured in Country Home Magazine, April 1990.
 Garden featured in Theresa Mattor, "High Pasture: An Olmsted Treasure," in The Maine Olmsted Alliance for Parks and Landscapes, Summer/Fall 1993.

- High Pasture, York, ME
 In 1905 Philadelphians James and Alice Pardee Earle hired architect Horace Wells Sellors to design their summer home on a treeless, rocky pasture overlooking the ocean. After her husband's death, Alice and her daughters Elinor, Doris, and Mary summered there for decades. Much of the landscape was left intentionally rustic, with native junipers and blueberries growing between the house and shorefront rather than a manicured lawn. The family developed footpaths leading to nearby rocky beaches, picnic sites, high points, and a stone bench overlooking the shore.

In 1910 the Earles hired James Dawson of Olmsted Brothers to design the carriage-drive turnaround, woodshed with laundry yard, and a location for a flower garden. In 1913 Elinor Earle worked with Dawson on the design for a walled garden that would protect plants from the harsh oceanfront conditions. The garden's stone steps were inspired by Gertrude Jekyll's Gardens for Small Country Houses. Elinor also designed the adjacent Long Garden for perennials and roses. After buying additional land in 1926, the Earles worked with Carl Rust Parker, also of Olmsted Brothers, on a new drive to accommodate automobiles. The original turnaround became the formal Round Garden with stone paths and stairs leading to the house.

In 2004 the property was subdivided, leaving intact only the Round Garden, Long Garden with historic roses, walled garden, and the lattice-enclosed laundry yard.

[showing Ricker and Mansfield properties in 1871 at South end of island]
 - "On the Hook or Indian Point, near the sand spit joining Great Chebeague with its smaller sister, is a solitary tree with a colorful history. The story is that it dates to the time of Wentworth Ricker who came to this point of land and one day discovered a tiny oak tree growing there. He cared for the tree and, as years went by, it became a landmark. Early in the twentieth century this portion of the island was purchased by Ellis Ames Ballard of Philadelphia, who built a beautiful summer home overlooking Indian Point and the waters beyond. He too cared for the tree and spent hundreds of dollars in keeping it in good condition. Its best test came in the 1938 hurricane when younger trees everywhere succumbed while the venerable old oak stood firm and upright and today is still a landmark to Chebeague islanders."

<http://www.archive.org/stream/islandsofnewengl007526mbp#page/n11/mode/2up>

- “Meanwhile, Wentworth Ricker built a house overlooking the sandbar to Little Chebeague. There is evidence that more than one house existed on the property. It is possible that Ricker built a smaller house on the lot, which no longer exists, and then built what is known as the Stavropoulos House, which is also from the Federal period. In later years Ricker deeded his saltwater farm to his grandson, Joel Ricker Jr. In return for paying $1000 to Ricker over three years, "... and to support and maintain said Wentworth during his life ...". Wentworth Ricker died in 1842 and his grandson was unable to pay his estate the amount that remained on the note, so the property was foreclosed. Henry Mansfield Jr. bought the property in 1845. Mansfield and his wife Rachel Hill are said to have had twenty children. Mansfield operated a store near his house and sailed up and down the coast selling goods. Two of their sons served in the Civil War. Mansfield and Ricker graves are evident in a small cemetery near the driveway to the Ballard house known as Khatmandhu.”

- Q. Where was the famous "Umbrella Tree" located?
A. This lone oak tree was one of Chebeague Island's well known landmarks. Some called it the Umbrella Tree because of its umbrella-like appearance. Wentworth Ricker, a Revolutionary War Veteran, settled on Chebeague around 1780, bringing his wife, Elizabeth, and several children with him. His home stood overlooking Indian Island, a spot of land on which stood this tree. It is said that Ricker discovered and nurtured the young sapling (oaks were rare on the island then), and it survived, outliving all other vegetation on the point as well as many generations of Chebeaguers. A summer resident, Ellis Ames Ballard, had tree surgeons come to the island to examine and treat the Umbrella Tree. Unfortunately, after living almost 200 years, along came Hurricane Gloria in 1985. The end.

Two fine old Colonial Estates formerly in one, known as "Litter Louna" and "Dunmore".

George M. Thompson of the US Navy marries Miss. Laura Virginia Savier of Norfolk. Her father was Joseph Savier of Norfolk.

Edward B. Thompson 1832-1890

Ann Elizabeth Thompson 1834-1905. Married Martin V. B. Clough.

Joseph Savier Thompson 1839-1911 Married a Forsyth (my line)

1838 George M. Thompson has ownership of Ely O'Carroll and Litterlouna in Baltimore. A brief history follows.

Charles Carroll the Colonel's son was also named Charles Carroll. He married Caroline Thompson of Virginia. "As they preferred to live abroad, the estate was sold to a brother, John Lee Carroll, governor of Maryland, in 1875. The governor's first wife was Anita Phelps of New York; his second was Mary Carter Thompson, sister of his brother's wife," Swann writes. "His son by his first wife was also Charles Carroll, who left the property to the last Charles Carroll to own Doughoregan Manor. He sold to Philip Acosta Carroll, the present owner, of another branch of the family," Swann writes. "Thus it is that this property has been in the same family since it was granted." Although Doughoregan Manor is a national historic landmark, it remains a private residence. Neither the grounds nor manor house is open to the public.

If these two properties were owned by the same family for all that time, how did George M. Thompson and his wife Laura V. Savier Thompson come into possession of the land in 1838? (My 4th. great-grandparents')

In this same year he was granted the princely domain of 10,000 acres known as Doughoregan, and ten thousand more acres were added to this in the later grant of land of Carrollton Manor. Though her commercial career effectively ended after the war, Payson continued her design and garden work in Maine, often providing plans and plantings for friends and family members. The landscaping she created for her cousin Margaret Payson's Heron House and the Robinson family property at Waites Landing on Falmouth Foreside exists to this day. Rather than charging for her services, Payson asked her Maine clients to make contributions to some of the local organizations she supported, among them the Colonial Dames, Victoria Mansion, Longfellow Garden Club, Maine Audubon Society, and the Sweetser School.

- James Hopkins Smith commissioned Portland architect John Calvin Stevens (1855-1940) to design this summer home in Falmouth Foreside. Smith named the house "Stonecroft."

Stevens started his own architectural firm in 1884 after training in the offices of Francis H. Fassett.

Stevens was known for the shingle style in which Stonecroft was built.

- "Luxury Condominium For Sale Within this Stately Home at 6 Eastern Promenade
By Carol McCracken
The stately home located at 6 Eastern Promenade was built in 1900 according to city records. And for the years from 1903 to 1915, there is interesting information about the family who occupied the home. Back in 1996, it was extensively restored by Crandall Toothaker. And now one of those 4 units is for sale again. In 1903, Ernest A. Randall, nicknamed "Di," moved into the home at 6 Eastern Promenade. He was 27 years old at the time. From the building's widow walk, now long gone, he was able to observe his family's fleet of square riggers loaded down with coal as they maneuvered into the Randall & McCallister coal wharves located on Commercial Street.
"King of Coal of New England" was the title given to Di's father, John Freeman Randall. He's credited with building the insignificant coal business into a major industry in New England. John owned a fleet of square riggers built for him to transport coal up the coast to Portland from which he sold large quantities to the Maine Central Railroad, the Grand Trunk Railroad and the Portland Company, of which he was a director. Large quantities of coal were also sold in interior Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont via the railroad.
John, his wife, and eight children lived in another mansion on the Eastern Promenade, on the current site of the Portland House. In fact, whenever any of his eight children married, John built a home for the couple close to the site of the Portland House. Consequently, at one time there was a cluster of Randall homes on the Prom. John died in 1894 leaving a vast fortune to his heirs.
Di and an older brother, Clifford, neighbors on the Hill, also built summer cottages on adjoining waterfront property on Route 88 at Falmouth Foreside. Di died at the estate there in 1955 and his wife died there two years later. The estate was subsequently sold and some of the land subdivided.
An older sister of Di's, Mabel, married Henry Merrill, a principal of Randall & McAllister, making Ernest and Henry brothers-in-law. Mabel and Henry Merrill lived at 5 Eastern Promenade. That's the dark shingled home that John Calvin Stevens built in 1898 for Henry Merrill.

At some point, Randall & McAllister was converted from a coal company to an oil company. Having seen more prosperous days when it sold coal, the business was sold to Webber Oil Company in 1975. Now there is a chance for some lucky person to buy a part of this grand home. According to Tish Whipple, broker for the home, the unit comprises part of the second and third floor. There are high ceilings, columns, rooftop deck and a fireplace in the kitchen. There is also a “seasonal” view of the waterfront. Please call Tish, Town & Shore, at 773-0262 to found out about the rest of the amenities in this luxurious condominium unit.”

 - "The estate, known at the time as Clearview Farm, was located some five miles outside of Monmouth, on a hillside overlooking Cobbosseecontee Lake. It was a sizeable property, a thousand acres of woods and pastures - even a small orchard and cemetery - straddling a sparsely trafficked two-lane road that followed the lake's Western shore. A self-proclaimed "gentleman's horse farm", it was originally conceived as a retreat for the Woolworth brothers, Norman and Frederick, whose shared passion was horse racing. Norman had passed away a few years earlier and his widow, an avid art collector herself, now owned the estate but Frederick still kept a home there. His house was to be our target." from The Art of the Heist: Confessions of a Master Art Thief, Rock-and-Roller and Prodigal Son, Myles Connor, Jenny Siler, HarperCollins, 2009
 - "This historic lakeside residence is a 15 room Tudor Revival cottage at Clearview Farm the former Norman Woolworth Estate on Maine's beautiful Cobbossee Lake. Built around 1920 for the Woolworth children and staff it originally featured the characteristic thatched roof of an English country home. The decorative half-timbering, stucco exterior, and earthenware chimney pots remain as testaments to the Tudor architectural style.
"Every room has either a magnificent lake or peaceful garden view. Also on the grounds is a delightful play house.
"The parlor fireplace is surrounded by Georgian wood paneling and built-in shell cupboards originating from the historic Sparhawk Mansion in Kittery Point, Maine. The warm patina of this cozy room contrasts with the bright, airiness of the living room which also has a wood burning fireplace. Both rooms, like the formal dining room, have commanding views of the lake.

“The property is located midway along the western shore offering breathtaking views both to the north and south. A stone retaining wall defines the shoreline including a breakwater that protects a calm anchorage for boats.”

 - The palatial estate was built in 1931 for J. Robert Neal of the Maxwell House Coffee family. Noted architect John Staub designed the home in an 18th century French chateau style. The mansion has just over 20,000 square feet of living space. Harris County Central Appraisal District shows it to have a current market value of $9,650,800 and a current appraised value of $7,855,350. This was the former home of Houston oilman John W. and Mary Elizabeth Mecom, Sr. Mr. Mecom passed away on October 12, 1981. His wife, Mrs. Mecom, continued living in the mansion until her death at the age of 86 on May 4, 1996. Due to an impending divorce, the residence was put on the market in 2000 for $11.5-million when rival real estate firms Martha Turner Properties and John Daugherty Realtors signed an agreement to co-market the mansion then owned by Texas Land Commissioner David Dewhurst and his wife, Tammy Jo Dewhurst. The estate is currently owned by John & Theresa Havens.

“...Then the J. Robert Neal home on Lazy Lane ... It’s a John Staub–designed house and has always been one of my favorites. John Mecom Sr. bought it around 1960, and we sold it after Mrs. Mecom passed away. The Neal family brought all the materials and everything from France, and it’s just a magnificent home. We sold it to David Dewhurst. And then we sold it for David, to John and Terri Havens who live in it now.”

 - Fire ruins historic house; The oceanfront mansion dates to 1929 and is valued at $1.2 million
Sun-Journal, Mar 05, 2004 12:00 am
YORK (AP) - The Maine Fire Marshal will investigate the fire that destroyed a historic oceanfront mansion, York Village's deputy fire chief said.
Fire officials have not yet determined what caused the fire in the oceanfront house, York Village Deputy Fire Chief David Apgar said.
The Fire Marshal's Office will be contacted to help investigate, partly because of the house's value.
The 1929 mansion, assessed for $1.2 million, was designed by American architect John Russell Pope, who is best known for designing the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C.
Apgar said that, while he is not a building expert, he doesn't think the house can be rebuilt.
Sixty firefighters from 10 departments fought to contain the blaze, which began around 12:30 p.m. Wednesday and took firefighters more than four hours to extinguish. Flames were still visible around the roof at about 4 p.m.
Apgar said the fire was difficult to fight because it had "a good head start" before firefighters arrived on the scene.

Wind from the ocean fanned flames through the house and the hydrant across the street could pump water for only one hose at a time.

Firefighters ran 1,500 feet of hose to York Street for more water.

"It was brutal," said Ogunquit Fire Chief Doug Patey, whose department helped with the clean up. He said the fire took lots of manpower, with firefighters swinging sledgehammers and other heavy tools.

Firefighters had to evacuate the home several times when parts of the roof and one of the chimneys collapsed.

Officials identified the owners of the house, at 15 Milbury Lane, as the Peterson family of Virginia. The house was vacant for the winter, and was overseen by a caretaker living in a cottage next to the main house. York Harbor resident Helen Rollins said the house, which stood at the end of the Cliff Walk, was a landmark for sailors.

"Once you saw the big white house, you knew you were there," she said. "It's a glorious house."

- Officials take survey of Cliff Walk
 - By Susan Morse
 - smorse@seacoastonline.com
 - “September 03, 2010 - 2:00 AM YORK, Maine — The Cliff Walk offers some of the most spectacular ocean vistas open for public viewing in York Harbor. Just how much of the walking path the public has a right to see and traverse — an issue that's been on the town's radar for years — is again a hot topic. Prompted by a pending deal between the town and private property owner Milton Peterson, the Board of Selectmen met Tuesday to walk to Peterson's property at 15 Milbury Lane. Peterson wants to make a York Sewer District easement on the property an official public easement. In return, he wants York to give up all legal interest in its right-of-way across the ocean side of the property. Doing so would alter the course of the Cliff Walk.

Selectmen will decide whether to present Peterson's proposal to voters and will hold a public hearing on the issue at 7 p.m. Monday, Sept. 13, at York Public Library.

Peterson made his proposal after the town hired engineer Bill Anderson to conduct a survey of the property. The town did so because it learned funding was available through a state Right-of-Way Discovery Grant. The Cliff Walk starts at York Harbor Beach and heads up a steep path past an estimated 10 private homes. It follows a right-of-way between private property and the ocean, and is said to have once continued to campgrounds at Long Sands Beach. For many years now — no one is sure just how long — the Cliff Walk has stopped at 15 Milbury Lane.

At that point, walkers come up against the property's green lawn and the path disappears. It picks up again two houses down, but is obstructed by overgrown brush and what appears to be poison ivy. Most people exit the Cliff Walk at the side of 15 Milbury Lane, using a 15-foot-wide, mowed path up to the street. It's a York Sewer District easement, granted by the owner of the property. The owner of record is the York Trust, but most call it the Peterson property, after owner Milton Peterson. Peterson has allowed the public to use the sewer district easement to exit the Cliff Walk, even though it's legally his property and is not open to the public, according to Steve Burns, director of the town's Community Development Department. Selectwoman Mary Andrews spoke against the swap Aug. 23. Selectmen Mike Estes and Cathy Goodwin voiced support for the proposal at the meeting, saying Peterson offered a good solution to a costly legal battle for a path that has not been used for years.

On Tuesday, Selectman Ted Little raised the question of whether the right-of-way follows the shoreline. Town Manager Rob Yandow said it's a legal issue. Lawyer David Ballou, who represents Peterson, said he researched the title and found no reference to a meandering right-of-way.

Selectmen Chairwoman Tracy Jackson McCarty said Tuesday that officials from Ogunquit tried to say the Marginal Way was a meandering path, an opinion met with much resistance by landowners there.

Resident Ron Nowell, who is protesting the proposal to give up the town's right-of-way, said town documents never described it as being "from a certain point to a certain point." It changes across the bluff, he said. Nowell tested the issue about a decade ago, when he was arrested after breaking a gate across the Cliff Walk erected by another property owner. That section of the path, closer to the harbor, is open to the public." http://m.seacoastonline.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20100903/NEWS/9030388/-1/WAP06&template=wapart&m_section=

- “Most of the entertaining takes place at home—having friends over for drinks or dinner. A festive night might include a spirited game of charades or an evening of special entertainment. It’s the same today as it was 50 years ago, when Admiral Samuel Eliot Morison, famed naval historian and descendant of Charles W. Eliot, held this kind of event on the porch of his family cottage, Good Hope. His wife played piano and sang. Morison read an essay he later expanded into what is still the definitive book on the island’s history, The Story of Mount Desert Island. "Mount Desert is not merely an island," he wrote. "It is a way of life to which one becomes addicted."

Through a friend I arrange a meeting with Wendy Beck, Admiral Morison's daughter, who still summers at Good Hope. Perhaps meeting is too formal a term. "Do you want to come over for a swim?" asks Wendy, now in her eighties, when I reach her on the phone. "Give me half an hour. I'm going skinny-dipping, and I don't want to subject you to that."

I give her 40 minutes, and then we sit by the pool and open a bottle of wine. "I don't mind getting blotto," she says, as we proceed to drain the bottle. The cocktail hour is a blue-blooded tradition, and as we ascend its graces Wendy becomes ever more animated, gossiping and narrating at a mile a minute. As a member of the Eliot family, Wendy has access to all the goings-on of Northeast Harbor society. She turns radiant when talking about Brooke Astor, the Queen Mother of Mount Desert, who often attended Wendy's Fourth of July parties.” <http://www.travelandleisure.com/articles/north-by-northeast/5>

Built in 1886-1887, the Kimball House featured a wraparound piazza and an octoganal corner tower. The first floor was devoted to a parlor, a music hall, a dining room; the upper floors contained 70 guest rooms.  - EDNA ELIZABETH McCLYMONDS
J. Walter and Flora McClymonds had three children: Russell, who died at birth; Edna Elizabeth, born August 5, 1879; and Ruth Esther, born May 3, 1884.
Edna attended Miss Porter’s School in Farmington, Connecticut, from 1895 until 1898, when she became engaged in November to Arvine Wales of Spring Hill Farm, Massillon. Their wedding took place October 25, 1900 at Five Oaks. Events of the wedding day are generally determined by the bride; Here things were different, for the bride had to hold off on the ceremony for none other than the President of the United States. William McKinley, and J. Walter McClymonds had been friends since their parents’ acquaintance in New Lisbon. The wedding was delayed for nearly an hour so that the President and Mrs. McKinley could witness the ceremony. The President and his Secretary of State Elihu Root had been in Mansfield, attending the funeral of John Sherman, a former U.S. Cabinet member. The Presidential train to Massillon was late in arriving.
The immediate wedding party, including the McKinleys, was served in the Billiard room. There is a photograph of the party with the bride groom that is always on display in this room.
The Wales family built a home on Spring Hill Farm 1903-1904, where they lived until 1923 when the house burned to the ground. In those years Edna with her husband made many important contributions to civic projects in Massillon. Their financial backing made way for two major building campaigns that provided construction of a YMCA facility and a new wing at the Massillon City Hospital. With more personal concern, Edna provided sewing machines to those women who lost machines in the 1913 flood and to others who could not afford one. She was instrumental in bringing to Massillon the first welfare service, known as “The Social Service League.” She served for a time on the league’s Board of Directors. After the loss of their home to fire in 1923, the family bought a house in Ossining, New York. They already had a home at Saturday Cove, Northport Maine, where they spent their summers. In 1928 they built a home at Yeaman’s Hall, Charleston, South Carolina, as a place to spend the winters. They lived for a time in Washington, D.C. where Mr. Wales was in the Food Administration under Herbert Hoover. Later they lived in New York City; and it was there that Arvine died of a heart attack in 1935. Subsequently Edna sold her Ossining and Charleston homes and lived in an apartment in New York City. She died February 3, 1955, at the home of her oldest daughter Mrs. Robert P. McLain in Massillon. Both She and her husband are buried in the Massillon Cemetery.
Besides Mrs. McLain, Edna’s children were Martha, Ruth McClymonds, Helen, Arvine Chafee, and Walter McClymonds. The latter son was killed in action in the invasion of Sicily in World War II.
Ruth McClymonds married Leslie Maitland in 1909 in Massillon. The Maitlands lived at different times in Chicago, Montana, and Colorado. Ruth had two children, Walter and Flora. She died September 15, 1958, in California.

 - Bok's summer home, called "Nimaha," is in Camden, Maine. From the beginning of the century until Bok's death in 1930 the Bok family spent part of their summer vacation, usually the month of August, in this house. It is next door to "Lyndenwood," the summer residence of Cyrus Curtis, Bok's father-in-law and employer. The family sold "Nimaha" several years ago to another family. Since the house was only seasonally occupied it is not representative of Bok's life and achievements (Krabbendam 1992)." Mountain Lake Sanctuary and Singing Tower NHL Nomination form

 - "Known as 'Eastholm', this Shingle-style cottage was built in 1901-1902 for banker Richard March Hoe and his wife, Annie Dows Hoe. The cottage was based on designs by John M. Carrere and Thomas Hastings, the distinguished New York architectural firm that had planned the Hoes' New York City residence in 1893. The Hoes were an unassuming couple, devoted to community organizations that benefited all Seal harbor residents such as the library, the Neighborhood Hall, and the Red Cross. Concerned for the preservation of the village and the surrounding forests, they helped organize the Village Improvement Society, for which Hoe served as president. They also made one of the first gifts of land to the Trustees of Public Reservation, a gift that later formed the nucleus of Acadia National Park." p.39, Revisiting Seal Harbor and Acadia National Park, Lydia Bodman Vandenberg, Earle G.  Here are two photos (scroll slightly up and down) of the Dunham's summer house near here at Seal Harbor. It was a particularly beautiful shingle style house that sat well on its spectacular ledge site. About 25 years ago, David Rockefeller purchased it and tore it down to extend his own property. A little ranch style guest cottage sits on the site now.

 - "During her first visit to Seal Harbor in 1890, Mary Dows became captivated by its beauty. Four years after her marriage in 1893 to New York physician Edward K. Dunham, the couple built "Keewaydin," an imposing Shingle-style cottage located on a commanding site above a steamboat landing. Designed in 1896 by Isaac H. Green Jr., "Keewaydin" was constructed in 1897 at a cost of $15,000...When the Dunhams acquired the site for "Keewaydin" in 1896 from their brother-in-law George Cooksey, the Bar Harbor Record described the location as "the highest elevation near the water and gives a superb view of both the mountains and the sea." In order to better enjoy this vista, the Dunhams commissioned architect Duncan Candler to add this brick terrace to the harbor side of Keewaydin in 1910...Landscape gardener and Bar Harbor resident Beatrix Farrand designed this small garden for "Keewaydin" in 1898, seven short years after she had begun designing at the age of 18. The Dunham garden was among her earliest commissions. It consisted of a weathered fieldstone path with irregular grass panels, flanked by herbaceous borders, The rock wall served as a backdrop for the border, while ascending layers of greenery enclosed the space." p.36-37, Revisiting Seal Harbor and Acadia National Park, Lydia Bodman Vandenberg, Earle G. - TBD 02998 Dunham, Edward K. Cromwell Connecticut 1 1904
 - Edward Kellogg Dunham (1860-1922) was well known for his work in the fields of pathology and bacteriology. He earned his medical degree from Harvard Medical School in 1886 then studied for a period at Koch's laboratory in Berlin where he discovered the "cholera-red" reaction. After returning to the United States, he worked for the Board of Health Commission in Boston and later became professor of pathology at the Bellevue Medical College of New York University. During World War I, he worked in U.S. Army hospitals, researching and treating meningitis cases. Soon he became involved in treating soldiers infected with empyema (a lung disease related to pneumonia) and in 1918 was appointed chairman of the "Empyema Commission." After Edward's death his empyema research was published by his wife, Mary (Dows) Dunham, and several of his colleagues. In 1923 Mary gave an endowment to Harvard Medical School for the establishment of the "Edward Kellogg Dunham Lectures for the Promotion of the Medical Sciences."

In 1893 Edward married Mary Dows (1865-1936), daughter of David Dows (1814-1890) and Margaret (Worcester) Dows (1831-1909), also of Irvington, N.Y. David Dows headed the New York firm, David

Dows and Company, one of the largest grain dealers in the country. He also served on the Board of Directors of Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Co. Mary was stricken with polio as a child and was left partially disabled. She suffered from almost constant pain throughout her life, nevertheless, traveled extensively and pursued various artistic and philanthropic activities. Mary became interested in photography at a young age and was encouraged in her endeavors by artist Samuel Colman (Anne Lawrence Dunham's husband). She traveled to the western United States and Europe numerous times before her marriage to Edward in 1893. Mary and Edward traveled together in Europe, Egypt, and the Western U.S. from the 1890s to the 1910s. In Egypt, they journeyed down the Nile River on a houseboat for three weeks in 1906.

Edward and Mary had two children: Theodora Dunham (1895-1983) and Edward Kellogg Dunham, Jr. (1901-1951). Soon after the birth of their daughter Theodora, Edward and Mary moved from Litchfield, Connecticut, to New York City. In 1898 they built a house in Seal Harbor, Maine, which they named "Keewaydin." The Dows family had spent many summers in Seal Harbor and several of Mary's siblings also made it their summer home.

During World War I, Mary and Theodora were involved with the American Fund for French Wounded (AFFW), an organization which provided medical and material aid to wounded soldiers and refugees. Theodora went to France to work as a volunteer at the front from 1916 to 1917. Mary organized volunteers in both New York City and in Seal Harbor to send relief packages overseas for the AFFW workers there to distribute to refugees and soldiers.

During the early twentieth century, Mary and Edward were involved in various philanthropic activities in New York and Seal Harbor. They worked with the New York Cooking School and several New York City hospitals to establish a cooking school for nurses with the aim of improving hospital food service. In Seal Harbor, Edward tested the milk of the local dairy farms, and Edward and Mary helped to organize the Mount Desert Chapter of the American Red Cross for which both Mary and Edward Dunham, Jr., were board members. The family was also active in the Seal Harbor Village Improvement Society.

Edward Kellogg Dunham, Jr. (1901-1951), was graduated from Harvard University in 1922, and worked as assistant manager for the Corn Exchange Bank (his great-grandfather's institution) in New York through the 1920s. After that, much of his time was occupied with other financial activities as treasurer of Dows Estates (established with the estate of his grandparents) and as trustee of his mother's estate. Edward lived for a few years in the western United States where, in 1933, he met and married Anne ("Nancy") Yellott. Edward and Nancy had two children: Edward Kellogg Dunham III and Elizabeth Dunham. They eventually moved to New York City and spent their summers in Seal Harbor where Edward continued in his parents' philanthropic footsteps.

- o Early in his career, Edward Kellogg Dunham made his mark in the medical community. Having earned his medical degree from Harvard Medical School in 1886, he traveled to Berlin where he studied at Koch's Laboratory and, while there, discovered the "cholera-red" reaction.

Having already established himself as a leading figure in the medical community, the 33-year old Dunham married Mary Dows in 1893. One of four daughters of the fabulously wealthy David Dows – the head of David Dows & Company, among the largest grain dealers in the United States—she had suffered from polio in her childhood and was still partially disabled.

The intrepid Mary, however, had traveled extensively and was an avid and competent amateur photographer.

The couple was residing in Litchfield, Connecticut with their baby daughter Theodora when Kellogg obtained the position of professor of pathology at New York University's Bellevue Medical College. In 1898 they moved to New York and started plans for a new home.

By this time the streets stretching from Central Park eastward were lined with grand residences of the well-to-do. At 35 East 68th Street stood the brownstone mansion of Mr. and Mrs. John Wesley Love; a four-story structure above a traditional English basement.

Edward Kellogg Dunham, the son of Carroll Dunham and Harriet Kellogg Dunham, was born on September 8, 1860, in Newburgh, N.Y. Edward earned his medical degree from Harvard Medical School in 1886, then studied for a period at Koch's laboratory in Berlin where he discovered the "cholera-red" reaction. After returning to the United States, he worked for the Board of Health Commission in Boston and later became professor of pathology at the Bellevue Medical College of New York University. After Edward's death his empyema research was published by his wife, Mary Dows Dunham, and several of his colleagues. In 1923, Mary gave an endowment to Harvard Medical School for the establishment of the "Edward Kellogg Dunham Lectures for the Promotion of the Medical Sciences."

In 1893, Edward married Mary Dows, daughter of David Dows and Margaret Worcester Dows of Irvington, N.Y. David Dows headed the New York firm of David Dows and Company, one of the largest grain dealers in the country. Mary was stricken with polio as a child and was left partially disabled. She suffered from almost constant pain throughout her life, but nevertheless traveled extensively to the western U.S. and Europe before her marriage to Edward. Soon after the birth of their daughter, Theodora, Edward and Mary moved from Litchfield, Connecticut, to New York City. In 1898, the Dunhams built an imposing cottage named "Keewaydin" that overlooked the steamboat landing in Seal Harbor, Maine.

The Dunham town house in New York City, designed in the Beaux Arts style by Carrère & Hastings, was built from 1899-1901. Following Mrs. Dunham's death, the house was rented by banker William A. Read; later, it became the Phebe Warren House, a women's residence, and at some point the house was divided into 13 apartments. In the early 2000s, the house was renovated and restored as a single-family residence. The Dunham town house is within the Upper East Side Historic District, designated in 1981 by the New York City Landmarks Preservation Commission.

Edward K. Dunham died suddenly of heart disease at his New York City residence on April 15, 1922. His funeral was held at St. James' Church on Madison Avenue. Mary Dows Dunham died in 1936.

 - Duncan Candler designed his second Seal Harbor cottage "Eastpoint" for Charlotte Rhodes Hanna, the widow of Ohio Sen. Marcus A. Hanna. The hanna cottage, constructed in 1909, was poised on the cliffs east of Cooksey point. The house was skillfully linked to the rocky site by a rough stone terrace and first story. The second story was sheathed in shingles and capped by a low hipped roof. "Eastpoint" represented the later Shingle style at its best, with an Arts and Crafts influence reflected in the wooden pergola on the terrace." p.45, Revisiting Seal Harbor and Acadia National Park, by Lydia Bodman Vandenberg, Earle G. - [in regard to an Olmsted office address for Miss Giddings at Carvel Hall:] “The William Paca House (at one time known as Carvel Hall) is an 18th century Georgian mansion in Annapolis, Maryland, United States. William Paca was a signatory of the Declaration of Independence and a three-term Governor of Maryland. The house was built between 1763 and 1765 and its architecture was largely designed by Paca himself. The 2-acre (8,100 m2) walled garden, which includes a two-story summer house,[3] has been restored to its original state.

“The William Paca House and Garden was declared a National Historic Landmark in 1971.

“The original one-story office and kitchen pavilions, and their connecting hyphens, were altered in the 19th century with the house's conversion to a hotel, by a second story added to the hyphens and the west wing. These changes have since been reversed, and the building approximates its original outward appearance, both inside and out.”

- From UP FROM THE ASPHALT: An Anthology—Stories Off Baltimore Streets by B. Cates, et al. “THE SAGA OF GUY” 3rd Installment

[As part of his German studies, Guy spends a year away from Baltimore, in Vienna. Once he wins his doctorate, he is off to do professor things in Worcester, Massachusetts, then Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Back in Baltimore for another teaching post, he and his wife raise a family. One of Guy's many lecture hall assignments was "a delightful evening-school course at Roland Park Country School on Thomas Mann's Buddenbrooks."]

FROM MELROSE AVE. TO NORTH CHARLES AT 33RD: Crossing Bridges, Playing Bridge by Guy Hollyday

When I returned to Baltimore, we chose to live opposite the Bryn Mawr School—our address: 110 Melrose Avenue. Melrose extends far east of Charles St, but to the west it went just a few houses before coming to the wooden bridge over the old Ma and Pa Railroad right of way. (The railroad had been disbanded in the 1950s.)

Next door was a vacant lot until a young architect built a handsome, modern house there. I still marvel that despite the rigid building code in the area, known as the Orchards, once the land of the Douglas Gordon estate, the local improvement association allowed him to build that modern house.

- Bisbee and Davis consider Blythewood Road in Roland Park as one of the city's truly lush addresses. Though its only two blocks long and intersects Wyndhurst Avenue, its pretty much estate row; there are no insignificant houses here, Bisbee said.

In Guilford, a stone's throw from both Greenway and Sherwood Gardens is the 100 block of Highfield Road, which Bisbee said is another hot address.

Not to mention Charlotte Place, at North Charles Street and Greenway. There's the old Douglas Gordon estate, which just sold for over $2 million, said Bisbee. Not unexpectedly, the houses surrounding this grand old place are pretty swank themselves. From "Where the Rich Live" by Mary E.  [showing "Rose Garland", property of Clement Griscom]
 - "Herman Wendell next purchased the Willows site. He bought 113 acres from Robert Paiste in 1896 for $28,000. Next, four years later, E. Craig Biddle, grandson to the Drexel and Biddle families, bought the 113-acre site. He built a mansion on the northeast portion of the site, across the road from where the Willows estate would be built, and named it "Laurento". It was a wedding present to his wife. Based on recent site visits, and observations from a team of architects who have surveyed the property, it is possible that some of the Paiste Farmstead of 1850- 1875, were used as later Biddle estate outbuildings, and these might have been left on the part of the property that would later become Rose Garland (a.k.a. the Willows).

In 1910, John Sinnott purchased the 47-acre tract on the southwest side of the tract, now subdivided from the Biddle's larger tract. His father, Joseph Sinnott was an immigrant from Ireland. John soon became a successful partner in what was to become the largest distillery company in the country, called John Gibson and Company. He lived in West Philadelphia, and built an estate home in Rosemont in 1891, called "Rathalla", now part of Rosemont College. His seventh of nine children, John, worked in his father's firm. In 1910 John Sinnott (Jr.) and his wife built their new home, "Rose Garland", now called the Willows. The March 9, 1910 Real Estate Record and Builder's Guide published an advertisement about the home, and mentioned "Charles Barton Keen has completed plans... for a 3-story stone and plaster-finished residence, and a two-story garage and stable to be built on Darby-Paoli Rd., Radnor, PA for John Sinnott. They will cost $50,000 and be built in the Spanish style of architecture." 2 At the same time it is reported that the lake was dug again, much landscaping was done, and the circular drive was paved with Belgian block and stones.3 The sunken garden courtyard was a major feature of the front façade of the mansion. It doubled as the place where guests were dropped off to enter the home, and where deliveries could be brought a little further along the front façade to the kitchen entrance.

The Rose Garland estate was built in 1910, and included the mansion, the gatehouse, the duck house, swimming pool and pool house, dog kennels, tennis courts and an observatory. They all date at least circa 1913, as they appear on the 1913 Pennsylvania Railroad atlas. It appears the chicken house, behind the gatehouse was built after 1913.

Despite the popularity of Sinnott's home "Rose Garland", the 1924 Prohibition greatly affected John Sinnott's distillery company. He had to sell the home. It changed owners many times in the next few years. H.C. Parkin bought it in 1924. In 1925 it was sold to Olga Lihme Griscom and Clement A. Griscom III. It was then rented for a while until Simon and Helen Neuman bought it, and sold it again in 1936 to Clarence H. Geist. He became a powerful and wealthy man by developing gas properties and utility companies throughout the Mid-Atlantic region. He purchased Rose Garland for his daughter, Mary Golden Geist Zantzinger. She married Alfred Zantzinger in 1933. They moved into the home in 1937, and re-named it 'Maral Brook'. In 1947, after the war, the Zantzinger's made some renovations. They added a single garage adjacent to the home, as a result of post-Depression era lifestyle changes. The use of the Gatehouse as the garage, which housed chauffeur-driven vehicles, was no longer to be used in that manner. A closer garage for the owners, who now drove their own vehicle, was desired. This physical change to the property is reflective of the social changes even the wealthy were experiencing during the 1940's. They also removed a few gables on the roofline to simplify its line, and replaced the red tiles with cedar shingles." This was referring to the 300 acres tract known as the William Capps land which was sold by Joseph de Choiseul in 1858 to David Urquhardt and his brother of New Orleans. Perhaps a daughter or neice, Cora Urquhardt, widely known as Cora Potter Brown was who sold it to Col. Walker.

- "Of interest to Henderson County residents is this: While on the job at Biltmore, Olmsted's services were sought in Flat Rock. Lucie and Mattie Norton hired Olmsted in 1898-1900 to landscape their home "Chanteloup." Leonard and Linda Oliphant, current owners, have taken great pains to restore the gardens to Olmsted's plans as much as possible.
Mary Morton, cousin of the Norton sisters, also hired the Olmsted firm in 1904 for "Laurelhurst" in Flat Rock. - "Coastal South Carolinians continued to come to Flat Rock, calling it their "little Charleston of the mountains." They hired local men to build their houses, make furniture, and tend their gardens and livestock. Women and children came the end of May and remained all summer, while men, some of whose names are recorded in the annals of South Carolina's history, went to and from Charleston as responsibilities allowed. Among them was Count Marie Joseph deChoiseul, the French consul to Charleston. He built Saluda Cottages (panel 21), a small two-story house with two houses for employees just south of it. The deChoiseuls remained at Saluda Cottages until 1841, when "The Castle," where the Countess and her son and daughters would remain year-round, was ready for occupancy. The original house was the center portion of today's Chanteloup (panel 15). The additions, and the gardens designed by Frederick Law Olmstead, were added by the Norton sisters of Kentucky near the turn of the century." from "Old Flat Rock" by Louise Bailey, <http://www.villageofflatrock.org/quiltinfo.htm>

- o “About the time that Edward Jennings was downsizing his dairy, another Glen Road resident was developing one of the town’s largest and most sophisticated dairy operations. Charles H. Jones was the most serious of Weston’s gentlemen farmers. Jones was one of a generation of self-made men who made fortunes in manufacturing in the post-Civil War years. He had begun work in the shoe industry in his mid-teens and started his own manufacturing business at age 26. His company, Commonwealth Shoe and Leather, developed the Bostonian shoe, a brand name still associated with quality and comfort. In 1901, he began purchasing poor, largely abandoned farms along upper Glen Road near Wellesley Street. His Filmore Farm eventually included 270 acres, the fourth largest in Weston.
 “In 1903, Jones built his first dairy barn, a monumental five-story structure. Cows were milked here and the milk kept cool in a soapstone sink using ice from an icehouse. About ten years later, Jones built a second large barn known as the “testing barn,” located on the south side of Woodchester Drive near the corner of Ledgewood Road. His purebred Guernsey cows were stabled here so that their daily milk output could be weighed and recorded. Local residents recall that the testing barn had shiny stainless-steel pipes and pasteurizing and bottling equipment, all kept scrupulously scrubbed and scoured. Jones was a member and one-time president of a Guernsey cattle breeders association. His bulls were world-champion animals that sold for as much as $2,000. Jones held occasional cattle auctions under a tent across from the testing barn. "After Jones died in 1933, a resident manager operated the dairy farm. Later, the two dairy barns were rented to outside operators including Wellesley Farms Dairy, which pasteurized and bottled milk produced on the estate or brought in by truck. In 1945, the mansion was sold to a couple who removed a reported 13 rooms on the second floor to make the house easier to manage. The Jones estate land was developed beginning in the early 1950s by the Nutting brothers from Newton. The first of the Nutting houses, a one-story ranch typical of the early 1950s, was built at the intersection of Ledgewood and Shady Hill Roads. More than a dozen buildings still remain from the Charles Jones estate, including the main house and carriage house at 458 Glen Road, as well as staff cottages, and one of the last remaining ice houses in Weston."  - "Benvenuto, on the west side of Avenue Road hill ((1888-91; demolished 1931), A. Page Brown, architect. This was the residence of S.H. Janes, the successful real-estate promoter who laid out the area we know as the Annex, bounded by Avenue Road, Bathurst Street, Dupont and Bloor. The house was built out of grey rock-faced Kingston stone(still to be seen in a wall on Avenue Road south of Edmund Drive), with very handsome red-glazed roof tiles, which are now on a house built for R.A. Laidlaw at Roche's Point, lake Simcoe. The lodge and the gates lasted long after the house had been demolished. For a time, the lodge was a tea-room. The gates with their piers were moved to a property at 40 Burton Road, Toronto.They were made while Mr Janes and his family were in Italy, and there were no finer examples of wrought iron in Canada."  - "The residence of Mr. S. H. Janes, which is now being completed, is situated on the late Senator McMaster's property, west of the home of the late Senator Macdonald, and on the brow of the ridge that until recently stemmed the northern extension of the city. The site is commanding, and the mansion is a worthy and likely to be lasting adornment of its fine situation. The style of architecture is pure Norman, the massiveness of the huge grey stone of which it is built being relieved by the maroon tiling of the roof and the rather quaint continental design of its corner towers. The building is in the form of an L and is approached by a winding drive from the massive lodge, with its beautiful gates and curved stone wall that flank the grounds on Avenue Road... The grounds which are five and a half acres in extent, are to be the scene of the landscape gardener's art." - The Wilson Place Museum has a history as rich and colorful as that of Menomonie and Dunn County. Built in 1859 by Captain William Wilson, it was originally a large colonial-style house with a pillared porch. Captain Wilson, was a principal in the Knapp, Stout & Co., Company, founder and first mayor of the city of Menomonie, and the area's first state senator. In 1875, he enclosed the 22-acre estate with a sandstone wall, part of which fronts the museum today.

When Wilson died in 1892, it became the home of his daughter Angelina and son-in-law James Huff Stout, another principal in the lumber company, and civic leader. The couple extensively remodeled and expanded the home into a Queen Anne style mansion. Additions included 17 marble fireplaces, a ballroom, a carved mahogany staircase and wrap-around porches on all three floors.

In the early 1920s, Wilson's grandson, George Wilson LaPointe, Jr. and his wife Irene took possession of the home. LaPointe too, was a lumberman and owned yards across Wisconsin and Michigan. The LaPointes reduced the size of the house by two-thirds to create a Mediterranean style villa --- the building we see today. A guided tour of the home provides visitors with a more detailed history of the home and its three generations of Wilsons.

Today the home is The Wilson Place Museum, and provides a glimpse into the lives of Wilson and his descendants in each of the house's three major periods. The furnishings have been retained at this site since 1846. A guided tour of the museum provides visitors with a more detailed history of the home and its three generations of Wilsons. [showing "Penhurst" estate of Percival Roberts]

- “This mansion is truly a Main Line legend, both for the scale of the house and gardens and because of the manner of its demise.

Beginning in 1890, Percival Roberts began amassing farmland in which is now Penn Valley and Gladwyne. By 1898, he had accumulated 539 acres. He had also significantly increased his fortune, leading the Pencoyd Iron Works through its evolution as the American Bridge Company to make it the leading supplier of steel for bridge construction in the country.

By 1901, it made the next profitable leap, merging with the giant U.S. Steel Company, with Roberts becoming one of its directors. Soon after the merger, Percival and his wife Bessye began to plan their house. They drew on the architectural firm of Peabody and Stearns of Boston, perhaps because Bessye was a Bostonian, or perhaps because families like the Da Costas and Biddles in Philadelphia had already employed this talented partnership.

The newspapers argued over just what inspired the 75 room house...Fontainebleau? Hampton Court? Sandringham? Probably it had elements of each, including a strong dash of Hardwick Hall and Longleat. The reception hall was marble; the floors were teak. A great balcony surrounded the hall. Much of the interior paneling was antique, brought from England. Newspapers speculated on cost...millions many thought, but it would appear from Roberts' secretary's notes that $525,000 for the basic structure was more the reality.

But that was just the beginning. The house had to be decorated and furnished. An electric generating plant was built along Mill Creek. Landscape architects, the Olmstead Brothers, had to lay out miles of drives and create the great screen and gates along Conshohocken State Road which looked up the hill past fountains and terraces to the house and beyond, capped by an impressive brick water tower at the highest point of the land.

Millions were undoubtedly spent. The house, when completed, was the centerpiece to a vast working farm where dairy barns for the Ayrshire herd were immaculately maintained, with veterinarians on staff, and dozens of farm workers.

But while Penhurst may have fulfilled a role signifying both business and social prominence, it never was used to its fullest. The Roberts did very little entertaining. Sadly, their sons died at an early age probably of scarlet fever or diphtheria. Thereafter, Percival and Bessye led quiet, relatively unpretentious lives considering the luxury of their setting, and seem to have found their greatest pleasure in the gardens and farm.

The legend continues. By the late 1930s, Mrs. Roberts was quite ill. Roberts commented on how nobody could afford to live in a house like this anymore. He grew increasingly angered as he heard of plans for an incinerator whose tall smoke stack would be in his view. Although he tried to block it, he was not successful. When the incinerator was built in 1939, they moved to a large suite at the Bellvue Stafford Hotel in the city, where live-in nurses and servants attended to their needs.

That year Roberts filed for a permit to demolish the house. He made good on his threat, first selling interior paneling and the artwork, but leaving elements of the garden... summer houses, fountains and gates.

At his death in 1944, the land and his estate were bequeathed to the Roxborough Hospital and the Children's Seashore Home. The hospital in turn sold it to Home Life Insurance Company, whose owner for many years maintained the Japanese rock gardens, a favorite place for a Sunday stroll by Lower Merion residents.

In the 1950s and 60s, much of the land was developed; Welsh Valley School was built. Today all that remains are the gates along Conshohocken State, a large mid 19th century house and several farm buildings and outbuildings.

 "In 1892, H. J. Heinz purchased a home on Penn Avenue, "Millionaires' Row," in the Point Breeze neighborhood, then know as part of Homewood. Called "Greenlawn," the mansion resembled a French chateau. Three stories tall, it contained 30 rooms and 7 bathrooms for Mr. and Mrs. Heinz, their 4 children (ranging in age from 9 to 21), and many servants. The Heinz estate also housed a stable, a tennis court, and a museum for the family's extensive collection of art and artifacts, and 10 greenhouses. The house was torn down in 1924. Only a front fence and carriage house remain."

In 1895, Olmsted and his stepbrother, John Charles Olmsted, changed the name of their father's Brookline firm to Olmsted brothers, becoming the leading landscape architectural firm in America. A main focus was civic improvement, working on the National park planning Commission's protection and beautification of Acadia, Yosemite, and Everglades National Parks. Frederick finished his father's design of Whitman Town park in Whitman named for the town's main benefactor Augustus Whitman. In 1940, Frederick Law Olmsted purchased land on both sides of Court Street in North Plymouth, and on July 5, 1941 Olmsted Terrace was established as a town way. - Compliments of Register of Deeds John R. - "But in the North, too, are old-time gardens of considerable extent. At Beverly, near President Taft's summer home, on the famous "North Shore" of Massachusetts, are several gardens where the trees have grown to magnificent dignity and the formal features have assumed the moss and tone of age. On the Loring Estate at Pride's Crossing the drive goes through the greatz timber along a wild, fern-studded brook, as if the primitive wilderness were coming down to the sea - as indeed it is - and emerges beside a formal garden, which has something of the primness and flavor of those near-by Salem back yards. Time has not changed it. It appears permanent as the rocky shore beyond." p.156, Everybody's magazine, Volume 25, North American Company, 1911

 - Moraine Farm : a Frederick Law Olmsted landscape : N. Beverly, Massachusetts, Charles E Beveridge, Washington, D.C. : s.n., 1984
 - “New projects and partnerships flourish at Moraine Farm. By Jane Roy Brown
When Frederick Law Olmsted designed Moraine Farm, he didn’t plot out an adventure-based ropes course. Or make room for schoolchildren to roam. Or think about the best routes for community members stopping by to pick up boxes of fresh produce.
But these are exactly the activities that have begun breathing new life into the historic Beverly farm, thanks to a groundbreaking partnership between The Trustees, Project Adventure, and the Cape Ann Waldorf School – and thanks to the generosity and foresight of the family that has owned the land since the late 1920s.

Originally designed in 1880, the property has been hailed as “the finest existing example of Olmsted’s approach to planning a country estate” by pre-eminent Olmsted scholar Charles E. Beveridge, and was a testing ground for ideas the noted landscape architect would later execute on a grander scale at the Biltmore Estate in North Carolina and Brooklyn’s Prospect Park. In Beverly, Olmsted – an important mentor to Trustees founder Charles Eliot – combined scientific farming and forestry with a landscape of leisure on 275 acres owned by John C. Phillips, on the shore of Wenham Lake. He created lawns, hedges, rustic stone walls, and a magnificent meadow, and collaborated with Boston architects Peabody and Stearns to design a massive stone terrace facing the lake, extending the shingle-and-stone house into the landscape.

Phillips’ farm took its name from a low ridge of glacial debris, which Olmsted used to provide an elevated vantage point for the paths and carriage drives that looped through 75 acres of coniferous forest, passed lake and meadow views, and climbed to an overlook on the edge of the 40-acre farm. A former scientific farmer himself, Olmsted may have been especially proud of the working section of the farm, for which he designed an underground drainage system that turned spring floodland into productive fields.

Now 29 acres of that farmland, which has been in continuous production since the Phillips era, will become the site of The Trustees’ fourth community-supported agriculture (CSA) program, and part of their newest reservation. Including an additional eight acres on Wenham Lake, The Trustees received 37 acres of Moraine Farm from the Batchelder Family Trust in August 2010. The land was donated from the trust by Mimi Batchelder-Brown, whose late husband, George Batchelder III, had lived on the property as a child and had, in 1991, first given a conservation and historic preservation restriction on the land to The Trustees and the Essex County Greenbelt Association.

“My husband claimed he could be dropped into these woods blindfolded and know exactly where he was,” Batchelder-Brown says. “He was a biologist, and he understood the ramifications of development in terms of the loss of habitat as well as vistas.” She also credits her husband’s parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Batchelder, Jr., for preserving the land so faithfully.

When the time came to part with some of the land, the family chose carefully. In 1999, the Batchelders sold 70 acres, including the main house, to Project Adventure, a nonprofit educational organization that provides teambuilding and adventure-challenge courses. “We were both educators, and we thought this would be a good match,” says Batchelder-Brown, whose field is art conservation.”

 - Edwin's daughter is called Mabelle (the historical Swift family spelling back to the 1600 or 1700s) Florence Swift. Edwin builds a house called Swiftmoor (probably a summer house--needs more research) at Pride's Crossing, MA. Mabelle becomes quite the little socialite--marries, is widowed, marries again, is divorced, dies at the home of the Earl of Portarlington in England. See the reference for her first husband, Clarence Bloomfield Moore, then follow the links at the end of the Moore article for more info.

- “Significance of the Townsend Mansion
 The Townsend Mansion is one of five surviving, exceptionally grand, residences that were built around 1900 within two blocks of Dupont Circle. Although the side streets of the Dupont Circle area are lined with townhouses of varying sizes and degrees of individuality, houses built on Dupont Circle and along the near blocks of Massachusetts Avenue were generally freestanding and much larger. They were designed for entertaining on a lavish scale and their hostesses were important figures on Washington's social scene. The Townsend Mansion was built by Mary Scott Townsend, the daughter of William L. Scott, a Pennsylvania railroad and coal magnate who became a member of Congress. As an heiress to his fortune, she was a woman of great wealth. She became one of Washington's social leaders, known for her elegant entertaining. Mrs. Townsend's husband, Richard H. Townsend, died shortly after the house was completed, but she continue to live there until her death in 1931.
 Mrs. Townsend's only child, Mathilde Townsend Welles, and her husband, B. Sumner Welles, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Under Secretary of State (from 1934 to 1943), lived in the mansion until World War II when it was leased to the Canadian Women's Army Corps. The Cosmos Club purchased the building from Mrs. Welles's estate in 1950.” From The Cosmos Club: Townsend Mansion

- Time Magazine, Business & Finance: Sufficiently Saline, Monday, Sept. 17, 1928
 "There is a gentleman," observed the Wall Street Journal, cautiously, last week, "who heads a large salt company who also has salty tastes. On his estate in the outskirts of a Pennsylvania city he has built a large swimming pool, containing salt water. Every two weeks the water is renewed and two tons of salt are used to make the solution sufficiently saline. In the salt manufacturer's house there is a salt water system, so that the benefits of synthetic ocean bathing may be enjoyed without leaving the privacy of one's bathroom." Discreet, even reticent, the Wall Street Journal deceived no one who knows the coal mining district of Scranton, Pa., and neighboring, suburban Dalton. For as every Scrantonian knows, a major glory of Dalton is the large, old house (recently remodeled) of Salt Tycoon Mortimer B. Fuller. And as every saltman knows, the Fullers (Grandfather Edward L., Father Mortimer B., Son Edward L.) have presided over the "biggest" International Salt Co. for a quarter of a century.
 The two tons required each and every two weeks for Mortimer B. Fuller's private ocean, 100 miles from the seashore, are the least of the drains on International Salt's mines and evaporating plants. Next in order of unimportance is the production of table salt. Major uses of salt are found in the curing of hides, manufacture of soap, paper, ice cream.
 Tense is the competition in the salt mining industry. Saltman Fuller saw net earnings fall from $507,339 in 1926 to $327,000 in 1927, to only $3,108 for the first six months of 1928. On the stock exchange, International Salt dropped from a high of 92 in 1923 to a low of 54½ in 1928. Lessened demand, competitive price cutting, are among apparent causes of depression.”

- The Trophy House, located in North Abington Township, was built to house Mortimer B. Fuller, Jr.'s African specimens collected in 1930 while he was on safari in Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika. At the time, game was plentiful and trophy-taking was an accepted way to expose people at home to the wonders of African wildlife. The collection offered a view of African animals not often seen outside of zoos or museums.

 - "Hutchinson and his wife had seen to the construction of "Wychwood" in 1901-1902; it was, justly, famed for its horticulture [LeMoyne, Jenkins, Griswold, to name a few authors of high praise]. Upon Mrs. Hutchinson's death in the 1930's, The University of Chicago took over the remainder interest after Mrs. Hutchinson's life estate in "Wychwood", with an endowment provided by her. However, the University, in severe financial straits in and after the 1930's, ceased to maintain "Wychwood" in the style to which the Hutchinsons had been accustomed and her endowment had been designed to continue. As soon as a 25-year trust restriction on transfer provided for by the Hutchinsons, permitted, the University sold "Wychwood" to an individual who lopped off the upper two stories of the original residence and roofed the remaining story. My own contemporary, Bill Wrigley, demolished the balance; Bill, once, told me that the condition of the foundation did not warrant even its use for the footprint of the new house that he built on the site." - A portrait of Gilded Age grandeur, the Wyck Estate was modeled after a French chateau and built in 1912 for George Robert White, the wealthy marketer of Cuticura products and noted Boston philanthropist, by the architect firm Bigelow and Wadsworth. <http://www.boston.com/realestate/gallery/1221mansions/>
- Undoubtedly one of the most remarkable houses on Boston's North Shore, the Wyck Estate is a stunning replica of a magnificent French chateau. This spectacular waterfront estate affords a world of privacy, beauty, and European elegance. Sited to take advantage of the sea views, this 7.85± acre oceanfront compound overlooks the Atlantic Ocean and Marblehead. Main estate includes a potential 2± acre ocean-view lot with beach and dock rights. The property's grounds are exquisitely landscaped with vast rolling lawns, magnificent swimming pool, tennis court, private sandy beach and dock rights.

 - History of Jeffersonville, QUARTERMASTER DEPOT:
"Designed by Quartermaster General Montgomery C. Meigs and first occupied in 1874, this magnificent collection of 19th century industrial and warehouse buildings covers foursquare blocks. The original brick structures had a total capacity of 2.7 million cubic feet. One architectural historian has described the complex as "functional architecture of the highest quality." The famous landscape architect Frederick Law Olmstead [sic] designed the original interior grounds. The Jeffersonville Quartermaster Depot, which by the end of World War II extended for more than 10 city blocks, supplied equipment for the armed forces until 1957. The original section is now a commercial complex known as the Quadrangle. Unfortunately, the structure suffered a devastating fire in January 1993. The blaze destroyed a large portion of the southeast corner, the remains of which have been razed." <http://www.cityofjeff.net/history/historymain.htm>

 - "For Walter Tuckerman, now married and accepting of his father's determination that he should take over the business, a summer house seemed a retreat from the grind of work. Like Prescott Butler, he felt the weight of carrying on the family tradition when he might have preferred an artistic career. Tuckerman and Butler both searched for a country house and ended up on the North Shore of the thinly populated farming region, Long Island. The commute for Tuckerman and Butler to their family summer homes in Stockbridge was long and confining, although Butler did love the peacefulness of the town. The trip to the Berkshires, which involved first a journey by steamer up the Hudson, then travel over land into Massachusetts, was far too arduous for a regular weekend visit. Butler began building his Long Island first, and then Tuckerman followed, selecting a waterfront community about halfway across the island from Butler's area in St. James. In 1882, Walter Tuckerman asked McKim, Mead and White to build him a good-sized wooden summer home on the peninsula facing Oyster harbor at Cove Neck. A few New Yorkers were already beginning to build homes in this unspoiled area ... McKim, Mead & White would build Tuckerman a commodious house in so-called shingle style, popular in this period for seaside/resort architecture. The house was big, airy, and surrounded by open porches. An open loggia on the second floor of the harbor side of the house provided breezes for sleeping, a feature much used in later houses in the area. Tuckerman would also arrange for the building of a stable and coachman's house, which still exists. The big shingle-covered houses of this seaside mode would prove too large and difficult to make into year-round houses, and many would be demolished early in the twentieth century for more up-to-date styles of homes. The Tuckerman house did not long survive its designers."

The remaining two-thirds are divided equally between two sisters, Marie Bellinger and Renee M. Coudert of Washington. Renee M. Coudert also receives the furniture, jewels, clothing and silver with a memorandum directing the disposition of the articles among friends and relatives. Mrs. Benedict died at her country home in Oyster Bay, L.I. on Oct. 14 last. The value of the estate is estimated at more than $100,000." NYT Nov 2, 1913

- o Plan #645-z17 reflects above lithograph:

- o North Spring: A Retrospective submitted by Michelle Coyle
 Around the 1880s, Nahant was the glory of the North Shore. Affluent Bostonians were erecting elegant summer homes. Picnickers, seeking refuge from the heat of the city of Boston, could sail or take a steamer to the peninsula and enjoy a popular pleasure park, known as Maolis Gardens. Just to the east of these gardens, North Spring provided a cool spot to gather, quench the thirst and listen to the gentle waves lapping rock ledges. Contiguous to this haven, lay land which in 1884 was undeveloped and controlled by the Nahant Land Company. Around 1892, Samuel Eliot and Jessie Motley Guild, of Boston, commissioned the building of a magnificent Colonial Revival home, aptly named the Samuel E. Guild House, by J.T. Wilson, an active Nahant builder [Peabody & Stearns seem to have been architects, however?]. Upon the death of Mrs. Guild in 1941, the home was sold to a group of Roman Catholic sisters, with whom it remained until 1967, when it was acquired by the Paterson family. Stanley Paterson, an industrialist, writer and historian, restored the home and handcrafted the ornate plaster ceilings in the Adams style. This style of domestic architecture, named after Robert Adams, a famous 18th century British architect, challenged traditional Georgian architecture, introducing graceful, curved elements, such as swags, vines and garlands, with predominantly pastel colors, such as blues, lilacs, coral, or green. Mrs. Paterson, a gold medal ice dancer from England, shared her husband's love of architecture and was responsible for choosing the colors throughout the home. These elements are being preserved through a preservation restriction/easement, running in favor of the Nahant Preservation Trust, a local non-profit preservation organization. This historic easement will preserve the magnificent ceilings, as well as the core of the principal structure, which is defined as the area from the dining room to the ballroom. Any reconstruction/renovation would also need to be compatible with the significant architectural elements of the main house, as approved by the Nahant

Preservation Trust. North Spring, located at 66 Ocean Street, named for the original picnic spot, represents a piece of the rich history which surrounds Nahant and the Boston area. The special family, or individual, who will own North Spring in the future, will ensure a continuation of the love of architecture, respect for open space and preservation of historic properties, which have been shared by those who have lived there. The home is currently offered for sale by Steven D. White, of Carlson GMAC, Marblehead. For more information regarding this property, please call (781) 690-6433. From Nahant Harbor Review, v.13, no.6, June 2006 <http://www.nahant.com/harbor/JUNEweb2006.pdf>

- “Soon another figure appears in the person of Dr. Edward H. Robbins, who was actively interested in this new hotel. Dr. Robbins lived on what is now Swallows Cave Road, on the westerly side, owning the land lately owned by the Guild and Grant estates. The house set a little southerly from the Guild house. Dr. Robbins was born in 1792, the son of Edward Hutchinson Robbins and grandson of Nathaniel Robbins, the latter a prominent lawyer in Boston, member of the Committee on the Constitution of Massachusetts in 1780, and a member of the committee on building the "new" State House from 1795 to 1798. He was Lieutenant Governor from 1803 to 1807. He was a descendant of Ann Hutchinson who came to fame in Massachusetts with the early Antinomian controversy. Dr. Robbins was in the business of woolen manufacture, which was badly hurt financially by the general business depression in 1829. He died in 1850. The property was soon after sold to Charlotte Boardman Rice, widow of Henry G. Rice, who occupied it in the summer time until her death. In 1882 the house was torn down and two houses were built for her sons-in-law, Patrick Grant [plan #645-z16 is labeled "Patrick Grant, Esq." and portrays a different footprint that the other Guild home layouts; 645-z14, however, shows plot of land with both house footprints] and Samuel E. Guild. Judge Robert Grant, well-known author and until recently Judge of the Probate Court for Suffolk County, is a son of Patrick Grant, and spent many summers of boyhood and manhood in these surroundings. He was born in 1852. The Grant house, close to the cliff's edge, was later sold to Dr. Francis P. Sprague, and is now occupied by Ralph Lowell, elsewhere mentioned. The Guild house remained in possession of the family until its sale in 1927.” From “Some Annals of Nahant” vol. 5 <http://www.lynnhistory.com/History/AnnalsOfNahant/Ch5.html>
- “ "North Spring" Set on 1.65 acres of spectacular North Shore coastline, "North Spring" is one of the finest examples of the late 19th century Colonial Revival style. A majestic oceanfront mansion built circa 1892 by J.T. Wilson, the home is an architectural masterpiece. The home comprises over 8,900 square feet of living space, and is adorned by plaster ceilings designed in the Robert Adams manner. Features include raised paneling, a grand staircase and a two and half story ballroom. Massive Corinthian pillars accent the central pavilion. With a total of 20 rooms, the home offers 9 bedrooms, 5 full baths, 2 half baths, 7 fireplaces and an accessory apartment. Parking for 10 is available. The home is currently offered at $2,150,000 for the home and 1.65 acres of oceanfront property. An opportunity exists to purchase the home or the adjacent buildable oceanfront lot.” http://www.zillow.com/homedetails/66-Ocean-St-Nahant-MA-01908/56947211_zpid/#4

[Showing George N. Black estate, "Craigsyde"]
 - “The Carriage House at Kragtsyde
Location: 29 Smith's Point Road, Manchester-by-the-Sea
Commissioned by: George Nixon Black Jr.
Structural Architect: Peabody & Stearns
Landscape Designer: Frederick Law Olmsted
Builder: Roberts & Hoare
Style: American Queen Anne
Sub Style: Shingle
Year Built: 1884
29 Smith's Point Road is the original carriage house designed as part of George Nixon Black's renowned Kragtsyde estate. Kragtsyde, the original "cottage" next door at 27 Smith's Point Road, was arguable the most famous shingle style home designed by Peabody and Stearns, with its plans and pictures distributed around the world, and still on reserve at the Boston Public Library. Architectural scholar Vincent Scully Jr., whose book The Shingle Style and the Stick Style features an image of Kragtsyde on its cover, described Peabody and Stearns' design for Mr. Black as "a masterpiece" and that the firm "never again... created a house of such quality."
Despite its fame, the main house was demolished in 1929 to make way for Laura and Pierpont Stackpole's "La-Tourelle," a French chateau style home which stood for less than twenty years before also being demolished. However, the carriage house was spared this fate and later converted to a unique single family dwelling when new owners purchased it from the Estate years later. Architect and Historian Stephen R. Holt, whose family's firm Roberts and Hoare built many of the North Shore's most exquisite estates in the 19th and 20th century, including Kragtsyde and the carriage house, describes this conversion in his publication, A Cottage Manifesto..."

Ellis-Loew Estate
Architect: William A. Potter
Located on Bellevue Avenue between Victoria Avenue and Ruggles Avenue
Demolished: 1962
This vast Shingle Style cottage, with a broad front piazza overlooking grounds designed by Frederick Law Olmsted, was built for John W. Ellis, founder of the First National Bank in Cincinnati and a director of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Sold to E. R. Thomas, the estate was subsequently acquired by William Goadby and Florence Baker Loew of New York. The Loew family sold Stoneacre in 1965 for $24,500 and it became, with a half dozen estates along central Bellevue Avenue, a dormitory first for the Hatch School and then for Vernon Court Junior College. Demolished in 1962 for a planned academic building and recreational campus, these construction plans were cancelled by the 1973 bankruptcy of the school. While the other former estate dormitories were developed into condominiums, the site of Stoneacre remained empty and is now being restored as the Frederick Law Olmsted Park. The surviving stable building was saved by conversion into condominiums in 1986, and is now a student residence for Salve Regina University.” <http://www.newportmansions.org/learn/history-highlights/lost-newport/the-lost-houses/1876-1885>

Overbrook Orchard, Stockbridge, MA

- Couple honored for Botanical Garden service

By Bill Sample

12:00AM / Wednesday, July 21, 2004

STOCKBRIDGE – Tom and Francine McCance of Lenox were awarded lifetime memberships to the Berkshire Botanical Garden in appreciation of their innovative and successful fund-raising efforts over the years for the venerable Berkshires icon.

The McCances have been associated with the garden since Tom McCance's retirement 10 years ago as a professional fundraiser for Yale University, Folger Shakespeare Library in New York and the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C.

Francine McCance, born in Paris, has a long association with the Berkshires. Her grandfather, Henry P. Jacques, built Home Farm on Undermountain Road in Lenox in 1880. She came to Lenox from Paris just after the start of World War II, when Americans were being urged to evacuate Europe's embattled cities. She met her husband while he was enrolled at Columbia Law School in New York. They have been married for 46 years.

The award came as the couple attended the "Fete des Fleurs Quatre," a gala summer garden employees, board members and sponsors. The party, attended by about 160, was hosted by Chris and Ellen Greendale at their Stockbridge mansion, Broad Meadows.

The mansion was built in 1902 as a wedding gift for Irene Botsford Hoffman. Originally dubbed Overbrook Orchard, it was renamed Broad Meadows in the 1940s. The grounds and gardens are tended by Chad McCormick and his brothers Randy and Scott, all of Stockbridge, as well as their uncle, Francis McCormick, who has worked on the estate grounds for over 40 years.

According to Chris Greendale, "The McCormicks have done an absolutely splendid job of restoring and improving every inch of this property."

Guests of honor at the gala were Roy and Sherry Boutard of New Lebanon, N.Y. Roy Boutard was the garden director from 1954 to 1984. Garden Director John Parker said Boutard really built up the gardens and plantings during his tenure.

"He promoted the botanical garden as a resource for the local community and we are grateful for that," Parker said. "He was years."

The garden was established in 1934 and has continued to grow in size and increase its variety of plantings.

The grounds comprise over 15 acres of display gardens, a children's garden, open vistas and country landscapes, which are tended to by 16 employees and hundreds of volunteers from throughout the county.

 - "Before one leaves Oakland Road, mention should be made of Albert A. Cobb, a prominent Boston merchant engaged in the East India trade, who made his home on this street. The Cobb family, which had large land holdings in the immediate area, held on to this land for years, thus slowing the development of this portion of the Point. The house at 22 Oakland Road, built in the midnineteenth century, was the Cobb homestead. (Older maps indicate that there was a house built in 1820 on or near this site. However, because of the Italianate detailing and the inability to substantiate the 1820 building date, it is presumed this is a later building -- perhaps built on the former building's foundation.) This building which initially stood closer to Walnut Street was moved back to its present site in 1903. Italianate influences are apparent in the elongated 2/2 windows, the entrance, the narrow cornerboards, and the steep gable with return cornice. Set behind the Cobb house is the former carriage house, a plain clapboard structure with a gable roof." from Brookline Village Walking Tours, The Point, Oakland Road

 - The most notable feature of the Preserve is the system of carriage roads built by John D. Rockefeller Jr. Designed to complement the landscape, the carriage roads, many of which are accessible, allow visitors to experience and enjoy the natural wonders of the area. These scenic paths wind through wetlands, woodlands, meadows, and fields and past streams, rivers, and lakes while traversing wood and stone bridges. One road passes by the foundation of Rockwood Hall, once the 220 room home of William Rockefeller. Its Olmstead [sic] designed landscape with its panoramic view of the Hudson River remains a spot of beauty for all who visit. Trail maps (with distance and grade descriptions) of all the carriage roads

- Fairholt Building, Burlington, VT Built by publisher Henry Holt just before the turn of the century, the Fairholt building is now the private residence of an influential Vermont family. We restored the existing interior and added two period-influenced wings to this stunning three-story mansion, where our craftsmanship and attention to detail truly brought the luxury of this 17,000-square-foot home to life. <http://www.neagleychase.com/portfolio/preservation/fairholt.html>
- Fairholt Burlington, Vermont, Henry Holt, the publisher built this Georgian Revival style mansion as a summer home in the late 1890's. Holt was the founder of the publishing empire known today as Holt, Rhinehart and Winston. Frederick Law Olmsted the renowned landscape architect came to Burlington to make a topographic survey of the land and to design the site master plan. After years of neglect our client purchased the estate in 1997 to renovate for their private full-time residence. The challenge was to integrate the proposed program requirements into the underlying integrity of the original plan. New site elements to be incorporated included a new formal entry drive, auto court, service entrance, breakfast terrace, large formal terrace for entertaining, cutting garden, as well as a new swimming pool and terrace. Architect: Truex Cullins & Partners Architects <http://www.hkw-p.com/residential/?c=22>
- "At the end of his travel notes, 'A Foreign Tour a Home', concluded in this month's magazine, Mr. Henry Holt, the New York publisher, refers to his return to his home at Burlington as the best experience of all. I knew that he had a beautiful place in Vermont but I had never seen it; so I asked him to send me some photographs, which in due course were received. From five that came, I have selected three for reproduction, and certainly they justify the writer's reference to 'Fairholt' as 'the most beautiful as well as the best beloved'. No matter what natural wonders one may see on his travels in the west - and Mr. Holt has seen and described a great many - there can have been nothing lovelier than the eastward view from the terrace of his country house. Toward the west (Trilby's other foot), the view comprises Lake Champlain and the Adirondack range." P. 124-125, Putnam's Monthly & the Reader, Volume 5, Oct.1908-Mar.1909, G.P. - “The Andrews had two daughters, Cornelia and Elizabeth, born in 1884 and 1886, and split their summers between his mother’s home in Hingham and her family’s estate in Lancaster, until resolving to build a “cottage” of their own on waterfront land obtained from his mother’s family. In 1890 John Forrester Andrew and Harriet Thayer Andrew hired architect Alexander Wadsworth Longfellow and landscape designer Frederick Law Olmsted to undertake the project. Through that year and the next, work proceeded furiously on what was to become Hingham’s only “gilded age” mansion, plans for which are prominently featured in Architecture after Richardson: Regionalism before Modernism--Longfellow, Alden, and Harlow in Boston and Pittsburgh, by Margaret Henderson Floyd (1994.) Tragically, Harriet Thayer Andrew died at age 38 in 1891, before the work was finished, leaving her two young daughters motherless. (A poignant, contemporary painting of the little girls still hangs in the library at 32 Hereford Street.)

John Forrester Andrew spent the next three summers in the Hingham mansion with his daughters, his mother and his unmarried sister Edith. Then, like his father the Governor before him, he died suddenly of a heart attack at age 45 in 1895. Cornelia and Elizabeth were now orphans at ages 9 and 11 - albeit very wealthy orphans. Aunt Edith Andrew watched over them, while Uncle Nathaniel Thayer Jr. looked after their money. Edith made sure that the girls’ lives were elegant and stylish, that they travelled grandly throughout the world, and made “debuts”.

In 1903, presumably planning for their joint occupancy of the estates in Boston and in Hingham, Uncle Nathaniel Thayer purchased in their name the adjacent parcel to the east where a “guest house” (now 11 Steamboat Lane) was built to handle the “overflow”. (The mansion, gardens and other outbuildings reportedly were served by a staff of 40.)

It is unclear whether the “guest house” was designed by Alexander Wadsworth Longfellow or perhaps by H. Langford Warren, a contemporary architect who similarly had worked with Richardson, and was, at that time, Dean of the Harvard School of Architecture (now the School of Design) and President of the Arts and Crafts Society.

Maureen Meister, an architectural historian and author of H. Langford Warren: Architecture and the Arts and Crafts Movement in Boston, (2003) thinks the shingle-style 11 Steamboat Lane house could have been designed by either Warren or Longfellow, but sees a “wild” similarity between this project and the house at 90 White Head Road, Cohasset, reportedly designed by Warren on land belonging to the Thayers. (The Cohasset historic inventory form for the 90 White Head Road house sheds no light on this point.)

The lives of the well-to-do Andrew daughters changed radically, however, when each married at age 19, to 21-year old Harvard graduates who were Back Bay neighbors. Cornelia married John Dudley Clark in 1904 in a glittering ceremony at Trinity Church – not unlike that of her mother and father 20 years earlier – with 16 bridesmaids and 16 ushers. Elizabeth, the shyer younger sister, married Charles Ellis Mason in 1905 in a more modest wedding at St. John’s Church in Hingham.

The next year, perhaps at the urging of their new husbands, the girls agreed to divide the properties, with Cornelia taking the Boston mansion and Elizabeth taking the Hingham “cottage” and outbuildings. Between 1907 and the mid 1920’s Elizabeth Andrew Mason and her husband Charles made Hingham their legal residence, engaging in philanthropic endeavors locally and throughout the state and nation. In particular, the Masons were loyal supporters of Booker T. Washington and his Tuskegee Institute. Elizabeth Andrew Mason had Washington as her guest on more than one occasion, and in 1913 donated the John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital at Tuskegee, in honor of her grandfather, the Governor.

In 1916 Elizabeth also acquired what was later called the “Governor Andrew House” at 178 North Street at Fountain Square in Hingham, making it available to social service groups and later deeding it to the ‘Visiting Nurses’ Association. She was also a generous supporter of the Historical Society and the Arts and Crafts Society in Hingham.

Although her sister Cornelia had died young, like her mother Harriet Andrew, at age 34 during the massive influenza epidemic in 1918, leaving five young children behind her, Elizabeth lived on through the 1950’s, staying in Hingham a major fraction of the year and at 25 Exeter Street in Boston during the winter, raising three children – Harriet, John Andrew Mason (who is buried near his grandfather’s statue in the Hingham Cemetery), and Charles E. Mason, Jr. In 1944, after 39 years of marriage, Elizabeth Andrew Mason and Charles E. Mason were divorced. She very quickly “downsized” – selling the Exeter Street property and demolishing the Hingham mansion before the year was out. (“It was hard to get servants for it” was her reported excuse.) Thereafter, for the next 8 years, she spent her summers in the “guest house” at 11 Steamboat Lane (with a much reduced staff.)

All eight of her grandchildren spent summer vacations with her at 11 Steamboat Lane in the mid-1940’s. Her granddaughter and namesake Elizabeth had her portrait painted here, at age 4, by the celebrated Hingham artist (and distant relative) Polly (Thayer) Starr. In 1951, in ill health, Elizabeth Andrew Mason sold 11 Steamboat Lane to Ware and Alice Williams, who faithfully preserved it, largely as they found it, for many decades, finally selling in 2008, shortly before Ware’s death at age 91.”

- “Another of the hugely magnificent homes of outsiders is the house put up by L. Z. Leiter, the father of Lady Curzon, a huge mansion, cream colored, with beautiful stone gate posts, and a high pillared white portico It is numbered 1500 New Hampshire Avenue and like the house just described is on land that points wedgelike toward Dupont Circle. Washington has always loved to tell, in what may be referred to as " in lighter vein," of a Mrs. Malaprop who said such things as, "he bought the garbage of a monk for the fancy-dress ball," and " this authoress, who writes under a robe de nuit," or "Jack o' bean-stalk furniture." “

- "king-glover
- Planned originally for a similar rocky site on Beacon Hill Road in the King-Glover-Bradley Subdivision, this house began as a project in 1887 for William Edward Dorsheimer (1832-1888), who lived in an H.H. Richardson-designed house, which he had commissioned in the late 1860s, at 434 Delaware Avenue in Buffalo, NY (NR). Dorsheimer had worked closely with both Richardson and Frederick Law Olmsted, whom he brought to Buffalo to design the park system and whom he engaged for the Beacon Hill Road project. Richardson's death in 1886 brought this commission to Hunt, to whom Dorsheimer specified a Romanesque design, an otherwise anomaly in Hunt's work. Hunt was still in the project's design phase when Dorsheimer himself died. By December of 1890, however, English-born yachtsman Joseph R. Busk had assumed the commission for the house with Hunt, but moved the project to this location. Busk also engaged the Olmsted firm to site the house and to landscape the grounds. The project was completed in the late summer of 1892

In 2007 it was bought by the 90 year old Betty "Boop" Blake, who is a prominent collector of modern art and the one that made Picasso famous. She continues to live here, summering in Newport and wintering in Dallas." <http://wikimapia.org/5074382/Indian-Spring>

Neighborhoods/Developments in Northfield, MA
There are currently no neighborhoods/developments defined for this area.
Northfield is located in Franklin County, Massachusetts. The town was incorporated in 1723.
The town became home to the Northfield Seminary for Girls in 1879. The Moody's religious conference, which was held at the school began attracted thousands of summer visitors. As the town became a summer resort, the Northfield Hotel opened in 1887 to accommodate the many visitors. The Northfield Chateau, a 99-room home, was designed by architect Bruce Price as the summer home of Francis Schell who took an interest in Moody's work. <http://www.masiello.com/real-estate/ma/northfield.cfm>
  - The Night We Broke Into the Northfield Chateau By Susan Chapman Melanson - Lulu.com, 2008 - History - 36 pages "The Northfield Chateau was a landmark in western Massachusetts from the time it was built in 1903 until it was demolished in 1963. A year before the magnificent structure met the wrecking ball the author and several friends spent an unsanctioned evening exploring the 125-room summer home of the Schell family of New York. The memories and images of that evening were captured on a primitive Brownie camera. The photographs and negatives became dog-eared and faded over the years until Sue Melanson resurrected them through her watercolor paintings. Along with her detailed artwork, she has included vivid descriptions of the Chateau as well as background information about its owners and their lifestyle, and even floor plans for the reader to enjoy."

  - Plan #1776-21 shows the confluence of the French Broad River and Hominy Creek; lot of land accurately reflects current physical plot
  - NYT, Sept. 28, 1895

From The Chicago Tribune.
 Charles L. Hutchinson and Martin A. Ryerson have purchased ninety acres of land near Asheville, N. C., directly across the river from the Vanderbilt estate. It is on what is known as Strawberry Hill, one of the prettiest spots in the vicinity. The price paid is $125 an acre, which Mr. Hutchinson considers cheap. He said:
 "It is not our intention to rival Vanderbilt. In the course of a year or two we shall erect modest houses for use principally during the Spring months, when the climate of Chicago is usually too rigorous. The land lies partly on the hill, which is wooded, and from the crest of which there is a magnificent view of the surrounding country. The remainder of it lies in the Broad River bottoms, and is not so picturesque, but is one of the most fertile tracts of land I have ever seen. It adjoins the Vanderbilt place, as most everything else near Asheville does."

Discovering Dempwolf Tour
Sunday, October 11, 2009
Greater York Area
12 p.m. to 5 p.m.
Historic York's annual tour, this year dedicated to properties designed by the Dempwolf practice. Eleven unique buildings that feature a diverse array of architectural styles will be part of the tour. How cool is this year's tour? How about J.A Dempwolf's own house? Or the ever-popular Hahn Home? Or the mansion where John Philip Sousa co-wrote "The White Rose March" and "The Fairy of the Codorus"? Or the home of the man who created Martin Carriage Works, Guardian Trust, and left money to start the Martin Library? Or Dempwolf's last major church - with a nave that was designed as an upside-down ship? Or even the grand Boxhill and formal European-inspired gardens?
This year's properties include:
C.C. Frick House (aka, "White House")

- LINN TOWNSHIP — The Flowerside Farm is one of the many lovely homes located on the north shore of Geneva Lake. The private entrance is on Snake Road in the town of Linn.

For many years, this was part of the Simeon Brooks Chapin estate that originated in 1898. Chapin bought the property from L.Z. Leiter. Sources indicated that at one time, Chapin owned six farms in the county, extending from Geneva Lake's north shore to Lake Como's south shore. The estate has 538 feet of lake frontage.

Chapin was born in 1865, the son of Emery Chapin and Marietta Armour Chapin.

He married Elizabeth Mattocks in 1892. They had four children, Marietta, Elizabeth, Simeon, Jr. and Virginia.

Marietta married Harold Hartshorne. Elizabeth married Kenneth Patterson. Simeon Jr. married Elsa Bartholomy. Virginia married the Rev. Francis Drake and later Burton Frye.

The lakeshore home, not visible from the road, was built in 1898. The architect was Benjamin Marshall who also did the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago. It is a rambling, hipped-roof house, covered with wood shingles.

It features a living room — 68-by-26 feet — with an Aeolian pipe organ at one end and an Italian hand-carved fireplace. The dining room has 34-by-26 feet, and has a marble floor and wood-beamed ceiling. Chapin founded the S.B. Chapin & Company in 1891. The securities broker had offices in New York and Chicago.

In 1941, the New York office merged with Hutton & Co. while the Chicago office merged with Clement Curtis & Co.

In 1908, the Chapin family moved to New York, but continued to return to Lake Geneva during the summer. Chapin helped found the Lake Geneva Water Safety Patrol.

Chapin died in 1945, and his wife died in March 1946.

Their daughter, Virginia, lived in the home until she sold it in 1954.

- Chapin loved this countryside. While his business interest for many years kept him in large cities for a good portion of the time, he was always eager to get back to the small communities. Lake Geneva and Flowerside Farm with its 1,200 surrounding acres were especially close to his heart, but wherever he lived he became a part of the community as a friendly and generous participant.

    - Loramoor a timeline
1852 – James Hobart Moore is born on June 14 in Berkshire, NY.
1899 – Moore, a lawyer and venture capitalist whose holdings include what is now Nabisco, falls in love with Lake Geneva on a trip here from his Chicago home. He purchases 32 acres of lakefront property on what is now South Shore Drive for $2,700.
1900 – Famed architect Jarvis Hunt is commissioned and construction begins. The V-shaped mansion is three stories with 27 rooms. The estate is named Loramoor, for Moore's wife, Lora.
1910 — The Moore's only child, Nathaniel, dies at 26. His death makes headlines across the country and is tied to a prostitute and morphine scandal that, in part, leads to the crackdown on Chicago brothels.
1916 – After a long illness, Moore dies at Loramoor. Lora Moore sells the estate to Frederick Countiss, a Chicago stock broker. It is renamed Downer Hall.
1925 – L. C. Ayers and Associates purchase Loramoor and open it as the Kishwaukeeetoe Country Club. The club struggles financially and ultimately folds.

[showing Beckwith property]
- “The Main House: Once known as the "Bonny Brier Farm", it was a wedding present given to Mrs. Molly Covington Hanna, by her husband Daniel Hanna in 1916. The house was originally built by Mr. Leonard Forbes Beckwith in 1892. This property also served as the first home of what would later become the Tanglewood concerts. It was purchased by Hans Maeder & his wife Ruth in 1948 & became the Stockbridge School”. <http://www.pbase.com/rsmith546/image/112236091>
- “When I met Patrick Sheehan, the new owner of the property formerly known to us as The Stockbridge School, he asked if I knew anything about the history of the Main House. I honestly felt stupid that I didn’t. Stockbridge was for me, as I’m sure that it is for most of you, a very important part of my life. Ben Barber’s letter to the Berkshire Eagle pointed me in the direction of Mark Hanna. However, it was not Mark Hanna, but his son Daniel Rhodes Hanna who purchased the property along with two other properties in July of 1916, some 12 years after the death of Mark Hanna. Daniel Hanna purchased the property which was called the “Bonny Brier Farm” to be a stock farm where they intended to breed fancy dairy stock. It is said that at one time he had more than 100 Percheron and Clydesdale horses in his stables. Over the years the farm was the site of many dog and horse shows. These properties in northwest Stockbridge totaled nearly 1000 acres and sold for $150,000. The properties included the 304 acre estate of Mrs. Samuel Hill, daughter of James J. Hill who purchased it for his daughter, the 500 acre Beckwith estate, and the 174 acre Levi W. Converse farm. All of the property acquired by Mr. Hanna was part of property originally purchased by Mr. Leonard Forbes Beckwith in 1892 “where a big house was built and furnished in an elaborate manner”. Beckwith, a Boston architect and consulting engineer, was the engineer of the New York Subways. He had purchased the Fairfield Farm and thousands of acres extending to the “Taghconic” hills. In 1901, James J. Hill, a railroad builder purchased 304 acres for his daughter which contained a handsome villa (named by her) called “Shaughlin”, which was built by Mr. Beckwith. The Hills spent several seasons there and then sold off their stock and equipment and stripped and dismantled the villa. “Shaughlin” was rebuilt, enlarged and was furnished on a magnificent scale by Mr. Dan Hanna in 1916 as a wedding present to his fourth wife, Mrs. Molly Covington Hanna, whom he married in October of that year. The property was deeded to her. In March of 1921, Molly sued him for divorce. It was implied in the court proceedings that Daniel was a heavy drinker and that he abused her. The court proceedings took place in Pittsfield, Mass. Molly then divided her time between the Stockbridge residence and one in Ocean Grove, N.J., while Mr. Hanna bought a place in Ossining, N.Y. The estate was estimated to be worth $500,000 dollars at that time. Daniel died later that year of kidney problems. By 1923, a temporary guardian was appointed for Molly because of alleged mental incapacity. She traveled between her two homes in the care of attendants. Molly died in August of 1933 and bequeathed the then “Bonny Brier Cottage” to her mother Margaret Ellen Covington of Ocean Grove N.J. In 1934, the initial Berkshire Symphony Festival Concert, conducted by the late Henry Hadley of New York was held on the paddock “under the moon” at Bonny Brier.” <http://stockbridgeschool.wordpress.com/>
- “History: Beginnings:
The DeSisto at Stockbridge School was a private therapeutic boarding school for high school students in Stockbridge, Mass. Founded on August 18, 1978 by Michael DeSisto, it closed in 2004, amid allegations by state authorities that the school endangered the health and safety of its students. Michael DeSisto, after being dismissed as director of the Lake Grove School on Long Island, N.Y., raised $180,000 in advance tuition fees and donations from the parents of students who supported his vision, and encouraged him to open a new school "where he could put his philosophy into practice".[1][2] In 1978, Mike DeSisto was able to get approximately one-third of all the Lake Grove student body, and faculty to leave with him after he was fired by Lake Grove's management. These original staff and students served as the nucleus of the new DeSisto st Stockbridge School. The school was then established on the 300-acre (1.2 km<sup>2</sup>) former campus of the old defunct Stockbridge School (A.k.a. The Hanna Estate and Bonnie Brier Farm), in the Berkshires region of Massachusetts, near Tanglewood Music Center, and the Stockbridge Bowl. The DeSisto school's program placed heavy emphasis on discipline, structure, and psychological therapy.” http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/DeSisto\_School

  - Plan #3077-124-sh1 reflects grounds layout and footprint of residence
  - Fox Hollow is now the home of the Daytop Drug Treatment Center, a change in use that Deborah Dows vigorously supported, over the objections of some local citizens, after ownership had long passed from her family. Deb believed in helping “waifs and strays,” as she called the less fortunate. But in its glory days when the staff included “fifteen in the house and thirty outdoors” Fox Hollow was described this way by the novelist Thomas Wolfe in his novel Of Time And The River: “It was a great white house, set delicate and gleaming in frail morning light upon a noble hill that swept back from the river, and it was shaded by the silent stature of great trees, and vast swards of velvet lawn swept round it. . . .” Wolfe frequently visited Fox Hollow because of his friendship with Olin Dows, Tracy’s son.

Tracy Dows was closely involved in the design and building of his home for which he hired the architect Harrie T. Lindeberg. It was not finished until 1910, after the birth of his two older children, Olin and Margaret. Deborah was born in 1914, and she was the only child to remember the “big house” as her first and only home when she was in Rhinebeck. She tells how her father was unusual for a Hudson River millionaire in that he personally involved himself in the operation of his extensive farm. She wrote, “My father was a landsman. I adored him and followed him about as he walked over the farm checking the fences and the animals, inspecting the many buildings and directing the workforce.”

- “Some of the meadows are part of the Wildercliffe and Linwood estates, the main houses of which are located in the Vanderburgh Cove subunit to the west. Other farms were once purchased by Tracy Dows and added to the Fox Hollow property in the early 20th century. Dows was an estate owner who was personally involved in farming, belonging to local farm organizations. He was an early member of the Dutchess County Agricultural Society and was partly responsible for bringing the Dutchess County Fair to Rhinebeck. Glenburn, located near Fox Hollow Road, was inherited by Dows' wife, Alice Olin Dows. The dwelling was built in 1850 and remodeled in the early 20th century. The collection of barns is an excellent example of a 19th century farm complex. The grounds include an intact designed landscape by the Olmsted Brothers. The property also contains two humpback bridges built over the Fallsburg Creek in 1850 and 1875. Located on the Glenburn property is the studio of the late Olin Dows, son of Tracy Dows and the painter of the murals in the Rhinebeck Post Office which was constructed during the tenure of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Southlands Farm, which borders NY Route 9, was also once part of the Dows property. - 102 Southlands Drive, Glenburn, Multi-R District, Landmark District, 1906
The Glenburn property was given to Julia Lynch Olin by her father, a grandson of Margaret Beekman Livingston. The house was originally built in 1837 but was remodeled by Harrie T. Lindeberg circa 1906-7. It became the summer home of Reverend Stephen and Julia Olin. Eventually, the property was divided between their grandchildren, Southlands was developed for Deborah Dows as the southern part of the property while the artist, Olin Dows, retained the section known as Glenburn.
With alterations in 1914-15 by Henry Bacon, including an east wing and in 1938 by Theodore Dominick, the house is presently a two-story, multi-bay clapboard residence with an irregular plan including attached wings that recede on both sides from the central block. The entrance door is flanked by six-over-six windows with plain molded sills and lintels, and it is fronted by a one-story pergola, which extends across the facade. Windows on the second floor are multi-paned diamond sash over single lights. Roof dormers are six over six and have gabled roofs.

- “Glenburn (Plate 73) near Rhinebeck is another of the Dutchess County places that has never been sold but has descended to the present owner in a direct line by inheritance. It is part of the original Beekman grant. From Margaret Beekman, who married Judge Livingston of Clermont, this portion of the grant passed on to her namesake daughter who married Dr. Thomas Tillotson. From their share of the Beekman grant, Dr. Tillotson, in 1830, gave his granddaughter, Julia M. Lynch, the 66 acres of Glenburn because "as a child she used to play in the stream and the falls and asked her grandfather to give it to her." The house was built about 1830; there Stephen Olin and his family, the Lynchs and Montgomerys spent their summers. Since 1830 the house has been changed and enlarged several times. The last change was made in 1937 for the present owner Olin Dows, grandson of Stephen H. Olin.” p. 84, Historic houses of the Hudson valley, Harold Donaldson Eberlein, Cortlandt Van Dyke Hubbard, Courier Dover Publications, 1942

949 EAST TERRACE

We've walked south on East Terrace, and are now in front of the home at the corner of Leonard Street. This was once the home of Dwight Preston Montague, his wife, the former Genevieve Allan, and three daughters. Born in 1853 at Chester, Ohio, Dwight Montague came to Chattanooga in 1877. He and others had recognized the potential of the mineral resources, labor supply, and transportation available in Chattanooga. He was an officer of the Roane Iron Company, which operated a foundry on the west side of Cameron Hill along the river. From his home on East Terrace, D.P. Montague could see the smoke rising from the Roane foundry. He later became involved in the Chattanooga Sewer Pipe Works, Montague Brick Company, Hamilton National Bank, and Soddy Coal Mine.

Franklin McFadden (1862-1936), a cotton broker and one of Philadelphia’s wealthiest men, hired the noted Philadelphia architectural firm of Cope & Stewardson to create a grand colonial style house on his 307-acre Radnor Valley Farm. Inspired in part by historic Wyck in Germantown, Stewardson’s ancestral home, the mansion now serves as the main building for the Radnor Valley Country Club.

  - "The trolley trip from Syracuse to Auburn took one hour and 25 minutes. The founder of the inter-urban rail syndicate was Clifford D. Beebe, whose group controlled hundreds of miles of rail transportation in several cities. Beebe built "Lone Oak," an estate on West Lake Street, most recently known as the Ruston House; it was torn down in 2006. He also owned the land today occupied by the Skaneateles Country Club. <http://kihm6.wordpress.com/2010/04/18/the-trolley/>

The lake is, in fact, just over fifteen miles long, with an astonishing depth of three hundred fifty feet, and for over a century it was thought to have been one of the purist bodies of water in the world. With nearly two hundred images, Skaneateles Lake shows early farmland, parks, sailboat races, and well-known Victorian places of water recreation and touring, for those seeking the health spas and bizarre, ornate hydrotherapies popular at the time. The lake and village have been enjoyed by many historical figures through time, from wealthy New York City summer visitors to presidential families from the Roosevelts to the Clintons.”)

- “If the door chimes rang when Janet Ruston was in a distant wing of her 15,000-square-foot, three-story Skaneateles Home, it meant a long dash to the front door. ‘If you were on the top floor, they’d be gone by the time you ran all the way down,’ she said with a chuckle. So the Rustons installed a speaker system to connect all 30 phones in the eight-bedroom, nine-bathroom mansion—even the phones in the turn-of-the-century boat house—to front – and back-door speaker boxes. What else would you expect in a house proceeded at $3,999,000? Aside from the fancy intercom system, the 152-year-old mansion is graced with an indoor swimming pool, an L-shaped kitchen with two refrigerators and two dishwashers, tennis courts and 15 acres with a capacious view of Skaneateles Lake. The Ruston’s Lakelawn is one of an exclusive number of luxury estates that have hit the market in the past five years in Onondaga County, where the average house sale price is currently $128,000.” Jacobs, J. - RAZED MANSION LAUNCHES SUIT; SKANEATELES GROUPS SEEK TO BLOCK PROPERTY OWNER FROM PURSUING DEVELOPMENT.(Local) The Post-Standard (Syracuse, NY) January 6, 2005 | Copyright Byline: Jerry Rosen Staff writer Still stinging from the unexpected demolition of the well-known lakeside mansion at 3384 W. Lake Road, two groups have filed suit to stop the town of Skaneateles from considering owner Lawrence Ruston's plans for Lakelawn, an 11-home development there.
Citizens to Preserve the Character of Skaneateles and the Tri-County Skaneateles Lake Pure Water Association Inc. named the town planning board, Codes Officer Debbie Williams and property owners Lawrence and Janet Ruston in the Dec. 30 filing.
"We feel Larry Ruston has really done a disservice to the community," said Holland C. Gregg III, of the CPCS. "He had a beautiful estate and he's going to replace it ..."

  - Sabin Woolworth Colton, Jr. (March 18, 1847, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania – January 29, 1925, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania) was an American investor. He was the only private individual to ever own a chair on both the Philadelphia and New York Stock Exchanges.
He became an office boy in 1862 at a stock brokerage, later became a clerk there. While a clerk there bought his own chair on the Philadelphia Stock Exchange. His expertise was in underwriting the establishment of utility companies in exchange for stock in those companies.
He retired in 1910, having built a spacious family house, Longmeadow, in Gladwyne, Pennsylvania, and an elegant Arts & Crafts-style summer house, Faraway, on Eastern Point of Greening Island, Maine.

  - Barton Dam is one of Ann Arbor's four dams on the Huron River. It was designed by engineer Gardner Stewart Williams and architect Emil Lorch and built in 1912-13 as part of the development of hydroelectric power on the Huron River by the predecessor of Detroit Edison. The earthen-construction dam is 34 feet high and 1767 feet long, and has a typical surface area of 315 acres and typical storage of 5050 acre-feet. The dam can be accessed from Huron River Drive from the city park located at the foot of Bird Road. The City of Ann Arbor purchased the dam from Detroit Edison in the 1960s, and restarted hydroelectric generation in the 1980s. The facility has a 900-kilowatt turbine that generates 4.2 million kWh per year.

  - In 1892 George Vaux Cresson commissioned architect Frank Miles Day and Harry Kent Day to design a home to replace the former residence of Edward Mellor, which he had recently purchased. Cresson's 16-acre estate, Caversham, was located at the corner of Washington Lane and Ashborne Rd. In 1904 Joseph M. Steele, one of the region's preeminent commercial and industrial construction builders, bought Caversham and added electricity and phone service to the house before moving in. After his father's death in 1908, Steele separated the eastern section of the estate to build a home, Ballanraes, for his mother and sister.

Acreage: 3.27
Acquired in 1940
Elk Rock, a steep bluff on the lower Willamette River directly west of Elk Rock Island, became the property of Scottish grain exporter Peter Kerr (1862-1957) in the early 1900s. The 13-acre estate included six acres of cultivated English-style gardens that were designed in part by John C. Olmsted of the landscape architectural firm Olmsted Brothers of Brookline, Massachusetts.
Mr. Kerr passed away in 1957 and the estate was donated by his heirs to the Episcopal Diocese of Oregon with the agreement that the gardens would be open to the public. They were named the Elk Rock Gardens of the Bishop's Close. This garden and cliff-top estate are in stark contrast to the natural habitat that was given to the city by Peter Kerr in 1940. Elk Rock Island is located in the Willamette River and accessible from Spring Park on the east side of the river in the City of Milwaukie.
In 1955, the Kerr family gave the City of Portland a 3-acre parcel south of their estate with the stipulation that the property "shall be used solely as a public park . . ." This natural habitat contains a substantial portion of a 1,200-foot-long railroad tunnel that had been built through Elk Rock.

  - "The formal relationship that still exists between the house and grounds was popular at the time Whidden was designing the residence. This was brought on by the popularity of the return to period architecture, as evidenced in the expositions such as the Columbian Exposition of 1893 and the Lewis and Clark Exposition in Portland of 1903. Norman Newton refers to this period as the "Country Place Era" in his book Design on the Land. Mr. Newton describes the collaboration between landscape architect and architect on country residences and refers to the influence of the Olmsted brothers as well as that of Charles Adams Platt. Several of Charles Platt's landscape designs can be compared to the "High Hatch" estate. It is the son of Frederick Law Olmsted who can be directly connected with the Kerr family. John Olmsted was hired by Peter Kerr in 1916 to design grounds for his new house in Rivera. It is very likely that John Olmsted also consulted with Thomas Kerr regarding "High Hatch", considering Thomas and his wife Mabel were keenly interested in landscape gardening."

- Elk Rock Garden of the Bishop's Close

The Garden at Elk Rock (also known as The Bishop's Close) on the Willamette River between Portland and Lake Oswego is arguably the oldest, largest, intact private garden in the Pacific Northwest. In his sixty years on the property, from 1897 until his death in 1957, businessman Peter Kerr developed Elk Rock, an estate whose purposes included food production, recreation, socializing, and ornamental gardening.

A Scottish immigrant with cosmopolitan sensibilities, Kerr and two other bachelors rented the five-acre property, which included rough pasture, native trees, and a Queen Anne-style house dubbed the Cliff Cottage for its location on the eastern edge of the bluff. The new tenants created a lawn, tennis court, and rustic golf course, and a cow, poultry, and vegetable garden supplied the kitchen run by the resident Chinese cook/houseman.

Visitors arrived on horseback or by way of the new interurban train at the base of the bluff to socialize and walk the paths that Kerr built himself. "I got it [poison oak]," he later remembered, "through digging the nasty shrub out of a path we were making."

In 1905, Kerr married Laurie King and the couple moved into Cliff Cottage; their two daughters were born there. Peter planted a fruit orchard and a large flowerbed. By 1906 the Kerrs owned three lots in Abernethy Heights, increasing the total acreage of their Elk Rock property to 13.38 acres.

In December 1909, Kerr hired landscape architect John C. Olmsted of New York to evaluate Elk Rock and a five-acre lot at Waverly Heights across the river. Kerr's parents had taught him to garden, so while he referred to Olmsted's suggestions, he followed his own inclinations.

Provided with a client wish list and an image of a Scottish manse, Portland architect Ellis Lawrence was commissioned in 1915 to site a new house. The lawn was retained, but the orchard and flowerbed were eliminated. The new house was built at the base of the hill, with its living and dining room windows facing Mount Hood.

Kerr hired Emanuel T. Mische, Portland's first superintendent of parks, to develop a planting scheme for the property. As with Olmsted, Kerr referred to Mische's plans but experimented with a variety of plants, including favorites from Scotland, Northwest natives, specimen shrubs and trees, as well as brightly colored annuals.

Two years after the Kerrs moved into the house, they replaced the terraced garden and its espaliered fruit trees with a swimming pool, tennis courts, and a two-car garage with apartment above. Adolph Meyer, a Swiss-trained landscape architect, installed new basalt retaining walls, a rock garden, and steps throughout the garden.

The garden at Elk Rock was the family's private domain, but its reputation spread. It was opened to the public in 1959, after Peter Kerr's death, when the property was given to the Episcopal Bishop of Oregon and renamed The Bishop's Close Garden at Elk Rock. Since its creation in 1897 the garden has survived due to the skills of dedicated professional gardeners who worked with Mr. Kerr during his lifetime and under the direction of a volunteer Garden Committee since 1959.

Fine Location of the Club-House of the Mt. Tom Golf Club
The new clubhouse of the Mont Tom gold club on their links on Northampton street, Holyoke, is practically finished, and will be formally opened on Saturday, May 4, by a tea given by the women members. The new house is not unlike the original house of the Country club of this city in appearance, though not as large, costing about $1500m which was raised by subscription by the members of the club practically every member of the club contributing. It was originally planned to have the house shingled throughout, but by a happy thought the walls inside of the wide piazza were finished in log cabin effect, which harmonizes nicely with the trunk posts of cedar that support the roof of the piazza.
There are wide double doors leading from each end of the piazza to the reception hall, which is equipped with a fireplace for use as well as books, and next to the piazza windows is a broad settle, which is made use of as a storage place for fuel as well as for a seat. The locker room lead off from each end of this main room, there being a locker-room for men and one for the women, equipped with water closet, sink and running water. The men’s locker room will also be soon equipped with a shower bath as well. There are 86 lockers in all. There are tables and comfortable chairs and the railing around the piazza is fully a foot wide, a concession to the ever present masculine desire to sit on the same. A seat also is placed under the windows next to the “logs” of the building. The house was built by Contractor F. S. Dibble, and the plumbing was by C. F. Sullivan. Architect E. J. Parlett of this city drew the plans from suggestions of members of the club.
The location of the club house is ideal. Looking northward along the knoll on which it stands, just off from the Northampton road in the immediate foreground rise the towers of “Kenilworth castle,” beyond is seen the flash of the Connecticut and the multi-colored gleam of the canoe camp houses along its eastern shore, and still further left the abrupt sides of the purple Mt. Holyoke range with its white house crown. Looking east the broad fertile meadows of old Hadley are seen, then red Mount Holyoke college buildings against the green slope and further south the blue line of the Wilbraham hills and the white of villages that lie between. Looking south a second glimpse of river is seen and the spires and towers of the city of Holyoke — at night the glitter of its lights. To the west are the links, the blunt uplift of Mt. Tom with its new pavilion seeming but a stone’s throw distant, at nigh, too, the Mt. Tom cars can be seen as they crawl, firefly like, up the steep hill to the summit.

- Wyckoff Country Club was originally established in the 1930's at the Mount Tom Golf Club of Holyoke, Massachusetts. The eighteen hole par 71 Championship golf course was designed by famed architect Donald Ross. Legend has it that Mr. Ross settled in Holyoke for a time and married a girl with the last name Wyckoff. The course was built on a rolling property at the base of Mt. Tom. In the mid 1960's Interstate 91 was built and ran right through the middle of the golf course. So the course was redesigned to fit all on the west side of interstate 91. In 1966 -1967, the course became know as Wyckoff Park County Club and eventually just Wyckoff Country Club.

  - The most significant house in the area, both historically and architecturally, is the Charles Townsend Hubbard House, "Ridgehurst," at 80 Orchard Avenue (1881-3, MHC 378, Map #1) Designed by Boston architect Francis Chandler, this was one of the first estate mansions in Weston and one of the few to exemplify this level of detail. The architectural quality and intact exterior and interior features make this the most outstanding example of the Shingle Style in Weston. The setting and landscaping features are also outstanding. According to family tradition, Frederick Law Olmsted was consulted on the original landscaping. The formal "Italian gardens" were designed by Olmsted Brothers in 1912. The house itself is 2 1/2 stories, with a gable front main block and a gable front north wing. The first level is constructed of rockfaced ashlar pink granite blocks of random size, with tooled joints. Brownstone is used for window lintels and trim. Upper levels are shingled.
Sometime around 1910, Charles Townsend Hubbard's son, Charles Wells Hubbard, added a billiard wing to the back of "Ridgehurst," a change that may have inspired the re-landscaping and "Italian Garden" project. In later years, C.W.Hubbard decided that 80 Orchard Avenue was too large for changing lifestyles and removed this wing, converting it to a separate house nearby at 74 Orchard Avenue (MHC 608, Map #2). The asymmetrical, two-story house has stucco on the first floor and shingles above. The most prominent feature of the first floor is a large polygonal bay window. The roofline is complex but has, as its main feature, a "saltbox" shaped gable, the top of which projects out and is supported on brackets. Design features of this house are similar to those at 153 Ridgeway, just outside the Orchard Avenue Area, which was formerly the servants wing of "Ridgehurst" and was also removed from the main house and moved to its present location.

  - In 1885, a version of this photograph of the Boston & Albany passenger train appeared in the gallery of Allen & Rowell, the noted Boston photograph company, and instantly sparked requests for copies. The photograph was taken Francis Blake, a noted inventor and experimental high-speed photographer from Weston, Mass. From 1884 through the late 1890s, Blake's revolutionary high-speed photographs of trains, birds, tennis players, and horseback riders earned him critical acclaim from scientists and artists alike. This photograph was taken from the garden at Keewaydin, Francis Blake's estate in Weston, Mass. It is now the intersection of Route 128 and the Massachusetts Turnpike. The Boston & Albany Railroad line passed just below the terraces at Keewaydin. In part because the railroad was headed by his cousin, D. Waldo Lincoln, Francis Blake had a standing arrangement with the train's baggage master to have bread and newspapers thrown off the early train from Boston every morning. Occasionally, he also arranged for it to make a stop at the estate just for him. The workers in the foreground of the photograph are building the massive stone terraces that Blake had constructed during 1884 and 1885 along the hillside below Keewaydin.

- KETTERING — Prior to her death in 2003, Virginia Kettering tried to buy NCR Corp.'s Moraine Farm, wanting to entrust one of the area's most prized landmarks to the namesake hospital system underwritten by her husband.

On Friday, Dec. 4, Mrs. Kettering's dream became a reality when the Kettering Health Network purchased the 97-year-old estate and 8 acres from NCR Corp.

“I think today she is smiling upon us,” said Frank Perez, KHN's chief executive officer.

Neither Perez nor NCR disclosed the purchase price, though Perez confirmed it's a fraction of the $8 million initially sought.

Moraine Farm, 1233 W. Stroop Road, will host corporate and community functions; KHN plans to hold a holiday party for its board there on Monday. Outside entities may use it for a fee. KHN plans to have a public open house.

Moraine Farm was home to Col. Edward Andrew Deeds, chairman of NCR's board, who assisted Charles Kettering in inventing the first automobile self-starter.

  - Deeds Farm Preserved in Licking County

December 27, 2011

The William Edward Deeds Farm, 254 acres on Deeds Road in Union Township, was permanently protected in December through an agricultural easement purchase with the Ohio Department of Agriculture. The easement will limit the land to agricultural use in perpetuity.

The District, as the Local Sponsor, will co-hold the easement with ODA and monitor the farm annually to ensure that it remains in agricultural use. Local sponsors also submit and complete applications on behalf of landowners, assist with the easement closing process and provide information on conservation options. Also known as Locust Shade Farm, the Deeds farm was founded by Andrew Deeds, great-grandfather of W. Edward Deeds. The farm was included in the District's 2008 Licking County Century Farms book. Locust Shade is near the Licking Park District's Infirmary Mound Park.

"We want to express our deep gratitude to the voters of the State of Ohio for supporting this program (Clean Ohio) and to the staff at ODA and LCSWCD for their invaluable assistance, without which we could never have successfully completed this process" said Edward's daughter, Amy Deeds.

"I hope that more farmers in Licking County will have this same opportunity. It's not about preserving the past; it's about protecting the future" said Amy Deeds.

- It was one thing to design an engine, but quite something else to find someone to produce it. Secretary of War Newton D. Baker made two trips to Dayton, and finally after he conferred with Ohio Gov. James M. Cox, a group was found to tackle the project.

Gov. Cox, also a Daytonian and a newspaper publisher, suggested that Col. Deeds try his hand at forming a company. Col. Deeds enlisted Harold Talbott, Harold Talbott Jr., Charles Kettering and Orville Wright. They formed the Dayton-Wright Airplane Company.

Col. Deeds had no part in ownership or management because of his position in the government.

While the new company had to start from scratch, it had one big advantage—lease of a plant nearing completion in Moraine City south of Dayton. (This now is part of the Frigidaire division of General Motors.)

The plant at that time belonged to the Domestic Engineering Company (not to be confused with Delco), an organization formed by Col. Deeds and Mr. Kettering before the war to manufacture the Delco farm lighting system. Col. Deeds also placed at the disposal of Dayton-Wright his South Field, a part of his estate close to the new plant. (South Field was a part of the area now occupied by NCR's Moraine Farm in Kettering which is Col. Deed's former home and is used now by NCR for marketing division sales programs. The area actually covered acreage running west of Moraine Farm to near the site of General Motors' Frigidaire Division plant.)

South Field became the experimental center for Dayton-Wright. There, under the direction of Daytonian Jim Jacobs, who learned his aeronautics at the original Wright Airplane Company, the new company built five hangars.

- Home of Charles Kettering, his home, Ridgeleigh Terrace, was built in 1914 and was the first house in the United States to have air conditioning. Ridgeleigh Terrace was the home of his son Eugene Kettering until his death. Eugene's wife, Virginia Kettering, lived in the home for many years, restoring the home and redecorating it. In 1994, the home was seriously damaged in a fire, but Virginia Kettering, then in her 80s restored it. She continued to live there until she moved to a suite in the nearby Charles F. Kettering hospital when in her 90s.

- The Charles F. Kettering House is a National Historic Landmark in Kettering, Ohio, the residence of inventor Charles F. Kettering, founder of Delco. The Tudor style house, also known as Ridgeleigh Terrace, was reputed to be[citation needed] the first house in the United States with electric air conditioning. It was designed by the Dayton, Ohio firm of Schenck & Williams. It was destroyed by fire in 1995 and was rebuilt with significant, unsympathetic modifications from the original blueprints by Kettering's son's widow. It now functions as a conference center.[2]

The former home of Ohio Gov. James Cox is changing hands.
Two business executives signed a contract this month to purchase the 16,000-square-foot mansion at 3500 Governor's Trail in Kettering from Tom Danis.
Ernie Riling, president of Franklin-based Riling Enterprises Inc., and Stephanie Terrill, owner of local design firm Adirondack Jack Designs LLC, plan to re-open the historic home as a social club this summer. Terms of the deal were not disclosed, but the property had been listed for $1.9 million

Butler County (Ohio)
Description The entrance to the Cox farm just west of Jacksonburg, Ohio is shown in this c. 1910 photograph. The farmhouse was built by Gilbert Cox, grandfather of James M. Cox, who was born there. James Cox went on to become a teacher, secretary to Paul J. Sorg, newspaper reporter, editor, newspaper owner and politician. He served in the U.S. House of Representatives (1909-1913) and as Governor of Ohio (1913-1915 and 1917-1921). In 1920 he ran as the Democratic candidate for president of the United States, but was defeated by Warren G. Harding. He is often referred to as being from Dayton, but he was raised in Jacksonburg. Cox did a lot for the little village, including purchasing and fixing up the old farm.

  - “A common theme among America’s finest golf and country clubs is member knowledge of the institution’s history and the respect shown for their traditions. Waverley’s rich history is visible in displays throughout the Club. Members have the ongoing responsibility to record and honor the history and traditions of our Club.
Waverley Country Club was chartered in April 1896, making Waverley one of the earliest private clubs in the nation and the second private golf club established west of the Mississippi River. During the period April to October 1896 The Oregonian coined Waverley the “Portland Golf Club.” In October 1896 a headline read, “Handicap Tournament begins at Waverly Links.” This was the official beginning of the Waverley moniker. This name was derived from the Waverly Richmond district where the club’s original 18-hole course was laid out near 39th and Powell. In 1897 the Club moved to its current riverside location with 18-holes in the ground by early 1898. In 1912, the name Waverly Golf Club was changed to Waverley Country Club. The story that Waverly became Waverley because of an engraver’s error was certainly an example of Scottish thriftiness; but not necessarily true. When Waverley reincorporated from its initial Association to the proprietary membership it is today, Waverly Golf Club become Waverley Country Club.”

  - Rosemary Farm Roland Conklin estate, burned down-Although the main house burned down a few years back, there are still some interesting remnants left of Rosemary Farm. The clock tower, part of the old carriage house, still exists. And the most unusual remnant, the amphitheater, has been fully restored. Built in 1918, the theater was used for outdoor plays and operas. The main stage is surrounded by a moat, and accessible by a stone bridge.
<http://www.ligoldcoast.com/liruins.html>
  - In 1913, Roland Ray Conklin and his wife decided to construct Rosemary Farm in Lloyd Harbor. His wife, Mary MacFadden, had been an opera singer and at their mansion they could entertain their friends, who were leading actors, conductors and singers of the day. Mr. Conklin built his wife an open-air theatre, who was encouraged to do so by his friend and actor William Faversham. The theatre was designed by Frederic Ohlmstead (the firm that designed Central Park). Ruins of the great amphitheatres of Europe were studied in preparing the plans. Mary had died and the estate was sold to the Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn. The Dioceses had constructed the Seminary of Immaculate Conception (1928-1930). The mansion had burned down in the 1990's

  - 'Rosemary Hall', the Foxhall Parker Keene estate designed by Freeman & Hasselman c. 1902 in Old Westbury. Keene was a famous sportsman and polo player (ten-goal) and served as the captain of the American International Polo team in 1913. The Keene stable, Castleton Farm, located in Kentucky was widely known in thoroughbred racing. In 1907 their horses accounted for $400,000 in winnings. Keene never played in the 1913 International match as he had been thrown from his horse in practice and broke his collarbone. He had suffered a similar injury in 1905 when he crashed his car into a telegraph pole during that year's Vanderbilt Cup Race. A 1913 NYTimes article mentions that he had broken his collar bone four times. He had "twice been carried from the polo field for dead. He has had falls as an amateur steeplechase rider, been blown up from an automobile, nearly drowned on a sinking yacht, dragged by runaway horses and bitten by dogs". He retired in 1931 and moved to Canada to live with his sister, passing away in 1941. www.oldlongisland.com/search?q=rosemary+farm

  - Otis Orchards reunion features fond memories of simpler times
Spokane Valley News Herald, 07/30/2010
For over 25 years, graduates of the now defunct school have been gathering in Spokane Valley to reminisce about a simpler time when most people lived on farms and an electric typewriter represented the latest in new technology.
The campus was established in 1911, a year after the formation of the Otis Orchards School District. A total of 28 students were part of the inaugural district, according to Florence Boutwell, Spokane Valley historian.
Starting with the 1961-62 school year, students in the Otis Orchards area began attending the new East Valley High School. A bus barn now occupies land along Wellesley Road where the old Otis Orchards High School once stood.

  - Our Heritage
Through its history, Whitworth has held fast to its founding mission to provide an education of mind and heart through rigorous and open intellectual inquiry guided by dedicated Christian scholars.
In 1853, George Whitworth, a minister in the Ohio Valley, set off for the Western frontier to establish a college that would provide "learning of the highest grade." Of the 50 families who joined this mission trek to the Northwest, only Whitworth's made it to Oregon. It was 30 years before he was able to revive his dream of establishing a college.
In 1883, Whitworth founded Sumner Academy in the village of Sumner, in Washington Territory. Seven years later, the school was incorporated as Whitworth College. The catalog from that year further defined the vision: "It is intended to give both sexes a thorough course of education equal to that of our best Eastern colleges, guarding well the moral and religious life of the students, ever directing them in pursuit of that learning and culture of mind and heart that make the finished scholar. This institution is well fitted for this, being under the control and direction of the Presbyterian Church. While it is denominational, it does not aim to be sectarian, opening its doors to all lovers of truth and learning." In 1899, the college had outgrown the rural community of Sumner and moved to Tacoma. Fifteen years later, when Spokane developer Jay P. Graves offered land in his Country Homes Estates, Whitworth moved once more. In September 1914, classes began in Spokane.

    - In 1910 a new Veterans Home was built in Retsil (near Port Orchard) located on a 31- acre bluff overlooking Puget Sound.
 Today the Veterans Home is a state-of-the-art, non-institutional facility providing a "Resident Centered Care" concept that focuses resources around the individual resident. All primary services for a resident are available within a forty-bed "neighborhood." The Home serves more than 276 residents needing both skilled-nursing and assisted-living care.

- Influential citizens found the Anti-Tuberculosis League of King County on February 15, 1909.

HistoryLink.org Essay 3906

On February 15, 1909, a group of influential Seattleites concerned about the growing number of undiagnosed and untreated tuberculosis cases in Seattle, form the Anti-Tuberculosis League of King County. Among the founders is railroad magnate (and future founder of the Henry Art Gallery) Horace C. Henry (1844-1928), whose teenaged son Walter has recently died of the disease. Tuberculosis, called the "white plague," is Seattle's leading cause of death. In 1911, the League will found the Henry Sanatorium (renamed Firland Sanatorium) on the present-day border of Shoreline and Seattle (at 19303 Fremont Avenue N), at the time about 12 miles north of Seattle's city limit.

The White Plague Plagues Seattle

In 1908 the United States Office of Public Health had declared Seattle's record of fighting tuberculosis to be the worst in the country. Founding League member J. V. Smith publicly declared that the whole city was a tuberculosis camp.

The League's first organized activity was to send a team of visiting nurses into the community. These nurses were charged with discovering people who had or might have tuberculosis and bringing them to the League's attention. The nurses' data showed that at least 1,000 Seattleites required treatment for the disease, and the League was immediately faced with the question of how these patients should be cared for. By July 1909, plans were underway to build a sanatorium.

The League, later renamed the Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association of King County, built the Henry Sanatorium in 1911. Renamed Firland Sanatorium in 1912, it remained in service until 1973.

- King County Hospital begins operation in Georgetown in May 1877.

HistoryLink.org Essay 2982

In May 1877, three nuns from the Roman Catholic Sisters of Charity of the House of Providence open the poor home and hospital in Georgetown on a contract with King County. After 14 months, they find the facility inadequate and move to their own hospital in Seattle. King County will reopen the Georgetown hospital in May 1890 and continued at that location until 1956.

In 1869, King County assumed ownership of 160 acres of farmland from the estate of John Thompson who had died without heirs. At this time, indigent persons unable to care for themselves were taken in by citizens who bid on their upkeep. Since the lowest bidders won these contracts, these arrangements proved inadequate.

The county convinced the Sisters of Providence to take the contract to operate the county hospital on the Thompson property, but they found the remodeled farmhouse to be unsuitable. In August 1878, the sisters built their own hospital at 5th Avenue and Madison Street in Seattle and cared for the county's poor there.

In May 1890, King County hired Dr. C. H. Merick to run the poor farm and hospital out of the old frame building. All county medical cases were handled there. After Dr. Merick died, Drs. Franz H. Coe and C. W. Sharples attended the patients.

In 1894, a modern, brick King County Almshouse and Hospital was completed. The 125-bed capacity was expanded to 225 beds with a new wing in 1908. Tuberculosis patients were housed in tents on the grounds until 1911. By the 1920s, the hospital was so crowded that patients' beds lined the corridors.

Record of Bodies Exhumed from Potters Field Cemetery (1900-1912)

Register of Individuals who died between 1900 and 1912 and were buried in the Potter's Field Cemetery (also called Duwamish Poor Farm or King County Hospital Cemetery) in Georgetown. The remains were exhumed and cremated at the King County Crematory in Georgetown. The index entries contain names, dates of death and ages at death. They are not organized in alphabetical order. The names in this volume have been indexed by an outside source and are online

(<http://files.usgwararchives.org/wa/king/cemeteries/duwamish.txt>) (external link). The King County Archives maintains a separate record of the disposition of 176 of these 855 cremains.

- Cemetery notes and/or description:
- In August of 1873 a petition was submitted to set apart two acres of the County Farm in Georgetown for burial purposes. It was to be a public cemetery. In November and December of 1912 three thousand two hundred and sixty remains were exhumed from this cemetery and delivered to the County Crematory. There were eight hundred and fifty five names and dates on headboards. Four hundred and ninety three had only numbers on headboards. One thousand and twelve had no mark, either numbers or names and no headboards. My recording of this cemetery on findagrave includes not only information from the record book received by the caretaker in 1912, but also additional dates found in newspaper obituaries and King Co Coroner's records. I was told by David Daley of Evergreen Washelli that the story about what happened to all those ashes is that they were dumped into the Duwamish River.....Sad but probably true.

- “[M.L. Hamilton] introduced and voted for a resolution submitting to the people a $3,000,000 bond issue for the purpose of constructing highways, roads, streets, avenues and bridges, which bonds were duly voted in November, 1912. It was he in conjunction with County Engineer L. R. Morrison and County Commissioner A. L. Rutherford that defined the exact location where this large sum should be expended. He insisted on the abandonment of the old Potter's Field for the burial of pauper dead at Georgetown, and voted for the erection of a modern crematory to take its place. The result is an up-to-date plant on the Poor Farm grounds for the disposition of pauper remains, which is also largely used by the general public for a stipulated fee, one-fifth of what is usually charged at private crematories.”

- “Roman Catholic Chancery Building (originally the Western Union Life Insurance Building), W1023 Riverside Ave.
At the easternmost end of the district, on the south side of Riverside Avenue, is the building completed in 1924 at a cost of $260,000 as the home office of Western Union Life Insurance Company. An example of the Second Renaissance Revival Style with a Neo-Classical portico, the building was designed by prominent local architect, G.A. Pehrson, who here made use of glazed white terra cotta, the facing material he consistently favored. Essentially H-shaped in plan with a long east wing and a longitudinal central pavilion and portico, the three-story, steel-framed building is of reinforced concrete and brick masonry construction. Frontage on Riverside Avenue is approximately 130 feet. Brick was used for exterior facing on the rear and east walls which were originally unexposed. Because of recent parking lot development on the east and south, the building presently used as the Chancery office of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Spokane is freestanding on the block.
The shell of a predecessor Western Union Life Insurance building oriented longitudinally on the west corner lot was incorporated in the new building. The earlier, two-and-a-half story, H-shaped building had been constructed of brick masonry in 1910 according to an exceptionally interesting design in the Jacobethan [sic?] Revival Style by Kirtland K. Cutter. With its patterned brick and stepped dormer gables, it was set back from Riverside Avenue behind a low brick walk and "Dutch" garden. Except for fenestration and the outline of the outer wall, there is little sign that the company's first specially-constructed office building was subsumed in new construction and actually constitutes the main block of the expanded building. General contractor for the expanded building was Fred Phair. The new building was so designed that additional stories could be added to the flat roof as required, but no further stories were superimposed before the property changed hands."

Built in 1898, the Peyton Building rose from the ashes of the burned Great Eastern Building (1890), which suffered a tragic fire in that same year, leaving only the exterior walls intact. Colonel Isaac N. Peyton purchased the property in 1898 and built the Peyton using the remaining walls of the Great Eastern. In 1908, the Peyton Annex at 10 N. Post Street was constructed adjacent (south) of the Peyton Building. At the time, the Annex was only the second reinforced concrete building constructed in Spokane (the Holley-Mason Building was the first). Seven stories, the Annex is characterized by its three parts: a base, shaft, and capital. Both the Peyton Building and Annex were known as first class commercial locations, called the "million-dollar corner". The Peyton Building and Peyton Annex stand together as one of several remaining large commercial buildings designed in the Romanesque revival and Commercial styles, respectively, in downtown Spokane.

  - "Liberty Park was officially named in 1898 when 165 residents of the adjacent Liberty Place Addition signed a petition to name the park. That same year, Kirtland Cutter, a well-known Spokane architect donated the original park design. Spokane had no formal parks department at this time, and as a result some of Cutter's original plan was an expensive undertaking for the time period. Cutter had originally suggested a waterfall run over one area of the high basalt cliffs. Although the waterfall was not completed, a small rock shelter near the small lake was finished and used during the winter months. The shelter provided a resting place for ice skaters and a fireplace for warmth. Later in 1908, while drafting the city's first park plan, the Olmsted Brothers of Brookline, MA said that Liberty Park is "so much broken into hills and valleys with abrupt slopes and prominent projecting ledges that it is capable of uncommonly picturesque landscape gardening development.” The firm recommended a new design which included the planting of trees, a stone pergola with octagon shelters at either end, play areas for children and tennis courts. The redesign of Liberty Park was completed in 1913.” East Central Neighborhood Heritage Tour, Liberty Park and Ruins, http://www.historicspokane.org/HeritageTours/east\_central/liberty\_park.html

It begins at Pacific Avenue and A Street and runs southeasterly along the right (east) bank of Latah Creek, rising gradually to the bridge at 6th Avenue and Coeur d'alene Street. It would continue thence along the creek, rising and descending to lessen grading and to connect with streets, southerly to Chestnut Street.   - In 1908 Mr. Williamson returned to Spokane. He was connected during the early stages of its building with the Oregon Trunk Railway but eventually sold out to J.J. Hill. He has been a property owner in Spokane since 1886 and has always called this city his home. He owns mining interests in Mexico with the English Exploration Company of London and still retains small interests in the Coeur d' Alenes. He was interested in an expedition into Alaska during the early period of the excitement there and was connected with the early operations of the Crow's Nest Coal Company in British Columbia, of which he is still a stockholder. He has large investments in land in Oregon and is interested in several towns of that state, including Madras, Redmond, Metolius and Lakeview. He is now president of the Inland Empire Company; president of the Williamson Investment Company, a corporation; president of the State Bank of Metolius, Oregon; president of the Santa Rosa de Mazipil Mining Company, the Santa Rosa Development Company and was vice president of the International Metals Company of Mexico but recently resigned.

Mr. Williamson was united in marriage to Miss Mabel C. Cotter, of Denver, Colorado, in 1905, a daughter of J. Lambert Cotter. Mr. Williamson holds membership in the Episcopal church and is connected with several fraternities and leading clubs. He is a life member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He belongs to the Spokane Club, the Spokane Country Club, the Engineers Club of New York and was one of the committee which secured half a million dollars from Andrew Carnegie for the purpose of building the Engineers Club. He is likewise a member of the Arlington Club of Portland and of the Coeur d' Alene Boat Club.
Few men could speak so largely from practical experience of the west and its history, especially in connection with its mining interests. Mr. Williamson has made an excellent record in his business career, accomplishing what he has undertaken, his sound judgment precluding the possibility of many false moves. He is today one of Spokane's wealthiest citizens and is honored and respected by all who are familiar with his life work.

“Spokane sports team owner Bobby Brett has put his seven-bedroom South Hill mansion – one of the largest homes in Spokane County – on the market.

What would a buyer get for the $3.25 million asking price? Built in 1917 and designed by renowned architect Kirtland Cutter, the roughly 20,500-square-foot manor, 612 W. Sumner Ave., features eight bathrooms and a carriage house. It also includes a third-floor ballroom, eight fireplaces and a bowling alley. Also, former NBA and Gonzaga star John Stockton lives next door”

- “Right now, I am working on the coachman Joseph Rainsberry and he was from Ireland. He married Mathilda Kison, a German from Russia. Mathilda's family had settled in Ritzville, Washington in an area that had a lot of Germans from Russia, and even today has a lot of Germans and a great Oktoberfest. A real mystery for Joseph is that the 1910 census lists Joseph Rainsberry as a servant at the Campbell house, but the head of the house is listed as Volney Williamson, not Amasa Campbell. Amasa, Grace and Helen Campbell are listed two pages before Volney also at the Campbell house. City Directory shows Volney Williamson in the house across the street from the Campbell House, but the 1910 census shows a Harry Woodin in the house across the street, and a note across the census says Harry Woodin is in Europe with his wife. 1909 Postal forwarding addresses, Williamson, V.D. and Mrs. to the Campbell House. Woodin, C. Harry from 2317 Pacific to the house across the street from the Campbell House. 1910 Postal forwarding address, Williamson, Volney D. from Campbell House to S 1001 Monroe. And C. Harry Woodin still in house across street. Amasa and Grace Campbell did go to Europe in 1910, did they go with the Woodins? Was Volney Williamson a house sitter? According to the History of Spokane Volney was a multi-millionaire from mines in Australia, Mexico, South America and in the Coeur d' Alenes, so would he be a house sitter? I have not solved that mystery yet.”

His designs for domestic architecture span a plethora of styles and are particularly innovative, sometimes being mistaken for those attributed to more recent construction. A good example is the A.E.     - Letter: "We shall be very glad indeed to make the plans for a new West Seattle Park. I am under the impression that this consists of about 130 acres" [JFD?], Nov. 10th, 1922
    - New clipping: "West Seattle Salt Water Park OKed; City Council approves 130-acre site; will pay $133,000 for ground on ten-year payment: Final decision to purchase a 130-acre salt water park in West Seattle between Lincoln and Fauntleroy Beaches was reached by council yesterday afternoon." (P-I 9/30/22)
  - ABOUT THE PARK
    - "Lincoln Park is West Seattle's major multi-purpose park – a nose-shaped bluff on Puget Sound just north of the Fauntleroy Ferry Terminal. Switchbacks on the north and gentle trails to the south connect a mile of seawalled, rocky beaches to a bluff of grassy forests and meadows with play and picnic areas galore." Amazingly diverse for its size, Lincoln includes 4.6 miles of walking paths, 3.9 miles of bike trails, five picnic shelters, acres of playfields, and an outdoor heated saltwater pool and bathhouse."
    - (Excerpt from "Enjoying Seattle's Parks" by Brandt Morgan)
    - Acreage: 135.4
    - HISTORY
    - Lincoln Park was called Fauntleroy Park until 1922, when the city bought it. The popularity of the name Fauntleroy in this area springs from the passions of Lieutenant George Davidson, who was taking soundings off the bluff in 1857. Davidson had temporarily left his fiancée, Ellinor Fauntleroy, back in Illinois.
    - The park was put together piecemeal over the years as West Seattle developed: as shelter in 1925; parking areas in 1928; a playground in 1930; seawalls, trails, fireplaces, and horseshoe pits during the Depression; and major additions just after WWII, as people streamed into the area to work in the burgeoning Boeing aircraft plant in the Duwamish Valley.
    - The heated, saltwater Colman Pool began as a tide-fed swimming hole in 1929, and was periodically hosed out by the fire department to rid it of accumulating mud and debris. It became so popular that residents began asking for a concrete bottom and sides - much to the chagrin of the city, which wanted to abandon it entirely. The pool took final concrete form in 1941, when Kenneth Colman, son of Laurence, donated $150,000 to have it built in honor of his father.

- On the 7th of November, 1850, in Milford, Worcester county, Massachusetts, Mr. Pettet was united in marriage to Miss Caroline S. Dean, a daughter of Sylvester and Charlotte (Cutler) Dean, both representatives of old and well known Massachusetts families. The former was a son of Seth Dean, a soldier of the Revolutionary war. Sylvester Dean became a merchant of New York, where he long continued in business. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Pettet were born two children. The son George is now assistant secretary of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company. The daughter, Grace, became the wife of J.P.M. Richards, president of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company, and unto them were born five children: Grace, who is the wife of the Rev. E.P. Smith, of Boise Idaho, and who has two children, Dorothy and Cornelia; Caroline, the wife of Lieutenant Sherburne Whipple, of the United States army now stationed in the Philippines and by whom she has one son, Sherburne; and John Vanderpool, Josiah and William Pettet Richards. In the spring of 1889, three months before the great fire, Mr. Pettet was stricken with typhoid fever from which he never fully recovered. The latter years of his life were largely spent at his home, Glasgow Lodge, on the North boulevard, where he had a forty-acre tract of land within the city limits and a beautiful residence on the banks of the Spokane river, fitted up in English style. His eightieth birthday was celebrated by a garden party attended by over two hundred of his friends. It was said of him: "Mr. Pettet's benign influence has been very sensibly felt in Spokane, to the development of which he has contributed incalculably. He has always been a man of great energy and his superb business ability and keen foresight made him eminently successful in his various enterprises."

- "In 1917, upland landowner John S. Baker hired the Olmsted brothers of Brookline, Massachusetts, to subdivide his acreage into choice residential sites (Olmsted Brothers, Job No. 6454). When the landscape architect [sic] asked about the little camps and summer cottages, Baker explained that these campsites were only leased for the summer season at $10 each. If the Foss Tidelands had been sold to the wealthy Mr. Bkaer after the death of Andrew Foss in March 1937, Salmon Beach would not exist today. Henry Foss refused to sell the the tidelands and actually leased them to the community for several years after Baker tried to evict everybody. Only after abandoned buildings became a liability, did he reluctantly hired [sic] a local resident to tear down the old Foss boathouse in 1963. Then the vacant store, used as a community clubhouse, was torn down in 1969. Finally, Henry Foss provided funds to the Metropolitan Park District of Tacoma to purchase the tidelands in 1971. ...Then in 1949, the worst earthquake of the 20th century caused a major landslide just north of the cabins, and Baker decided to evict all persons and property from Salmon Beach by December 31, 1949.
"The community organized an improvement club to fight eviction in court. Baker died in 1955, but the Baker Investment Company, disguised as the Narrows Realty Company, finally received clear legal title to the tidelands under the cabins in 1958" p.7, Tacoma's Salmon Beach, Roger Cushman Edwards, Arcadia Publishing, 2006

  - “When I was little, my father became the caretaker of a property. It was once run by the Mary Knoll Sisters and then became The Newman School for boys. This was in Lakewood, NJ. The site is now Pine Park and there is only one building left. :( We called that the school building and it's used by Parks and Rec now. The Mansion was beautiful. They did a benefit there once called "The Mansion in the Park" - a designer showcase....it burned down after that. It was so sad...like losing a childhood friend! My sister and I couldn't believe how bad we felt when we saw it on the news. We had moved out of the caretakers cottage a couple years before that because it was bought by the township.
 The Gym, the caretakers cottage, laundry facility and kitchen/mess hall, carriage house/annex have all been torn down. We used to love going with my father to "check the buildings" He had a great time if people broke in and he could sneak in....he's scare the daylights out of them.
 We lived there about 8 years and have so many great memories of that place. There was a wedding there once.....we got to watch from up in the mansion. The people who married had a black dog named "River" (if I'm remembering right!).
 Anyway...several years ago there was a big push to "Save Kuser Hall" which was the kitchen building.....they didn't. Basically, they ruined the whole place. The dinner bell is still there and still has crayon where we drew on the rafters and red paint when my sister and I had the idea to paint it, and ended up painting each other instead. LOL The mansion patio and chapel are still there. There's a water tower and pump house, but they are not in good condition if they are there at all. There's also still a handball court and tennis courts that are in disrepair. The dump was behind the handball court and there's probably so much stuff back there to dig up. We used to go "bottle digging" and find old bottles and other things in it.
 The building next door to the cottage was basically our play house...I think all this contributed to my appreciation of beautiful old buildings. It was a wonderful childhood there.” Marianne Taylor Johnson <http://ko-kr.connect.facebook.com/topic.php?uid=43973726903&topic=44743>
  - “Newman School Lakewood was named after Cardinal Newman whose educational ideals it aims to carry out to fit boys of Catholic families to live in a world which is not preeminently Catholic. Its pupils come from Roman Catholic families of wealth in all parts of the United States. First established at Orange in 1900 it moved in 1903 to Hackensack. Upon the resignation of Dr Locke, its founder and head master for fifteen years, the Very Rev SW Fay STD became rector and CE Delbos, formerly of Sedbergh School, England, became head master. The success and growth of the school necessitating larger quarters, it moved in 1920 to its present site. Thorough preparation is given for all colleges a ml technical schools See page 693. (p.175)
 “FRONT OF HYERWOOD NEWMAN SCHOOL Lakewood New Jersey C EDMUND DELBOS MA
 Head Master .Newman School was established in 1900 under the patronage of the late Cardinal Farley. His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons continues to grant it his kindly interest and influence In 1920 two adjoining estates Hyerwood Hall and Hyerwood Brook comprising 153 acres were acquired .The elevated sandy soil makes the location one of great healthfulness. A lake for Canoeing and Skating and a river with a safe Swimming Pool are unusual attractions. The two beautifully built houses will be used as Residences and also provide for a School Library, Boys Common Room, Dining Hall and Chapel. The Class Rooms will be in a separate Building between the two Residences. The School regards discipline as a means and not an end. The aim is not only to maintain perfect order at all times but also to teach boys to trust in the justice of authority and ultimately as in the case of older boys to cooperate.To a large extent the Honor System prevails.   - “In 1817, 13 men - six clergy and seven laymen - met in the frontier settlement of Hamilton with "13 dollars, 13 prayers, and 13 articles." (To this day, members of the Colgate community consider the number 13 a good omen.) In that meeting, the men founded the Baptist Education Society of the State of New York, the cornerstone in the foundation of what would become Colgate University. The state chartered the Baptist Education Society in 1819, choosing Hamilton as the location for its school; one year later, the school opened. In 1823, Baptists in New York City - soapmaker William Colgate among them - consolidated their seminary with the Hamilton school to form the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution. The Colgate family connection was thus established. The oldest building on the current campus, West Hall, was built four years later in 1827. By 1834, the institution included preparatory, collegiate, and theological departments. In 1839, the first students "not having the ministry in view" were admitted. The year 1846 witnessed a name change (to Madison University) and, through a state charter, the right to grant degrees. Madison became Colgate in 1890, recognizing nearly 70 years of continuous involvement and service by the Colgate family.”

  - Fr. Houghton's most ambitious project was the establishment of a school. In 1882, 32 local students enrolled in the parish school. Three boys were taken into the rectory as boarding students in 1883. As the number of boarders increased, the rectory was enlarged to accommodate them until, in 1886, the parish school was dissolved in favor of St. Paul's Hall, with 33 students and six faculty occupying a range of buildings attached to the rectory. The continuing success of the endeavor led, in 1890, to the acquisition of 300 acres in Rexleigh, about three miles south of Salem, and the development of plans for a splendid campus. The fund-raising campaign for the new campus proclaimed, "Beside the still waters of the Battenkill, upon the bluff that rises from the stream, is one of the noblest sites for a school imaginable." The effort to fund a new campus was stymied by a weak economy, which also took its toll on enrollment. When the school term was completed in June of 1893, St. Paul's Hall closed for the summer and never opened again. As late as 1895 the dream was not quite dead. It was said then, "Some day may yet see Rexleigh crowned with buildings, and there another spring of learning from which our land may draw her increase." In the meantime, Fr. Houghton, having become more and more occupied with school matters, asked for a curate, and the Reverend Harris C. Rush became assistant rector in 1889. Fr. Houghton resigned as rector in order to devote his full attention to the school in 1890 and Fr. Rush became the rector. Several Tiffany windows in the church were installed during his tenure as rector which continued until his resignation in 1901. Fr. Houghton accepted a call to St. Mark's Church, Denver, Colorado, and left Salem in 1892.

  - Hillside (1889) - Built in 1889 for medical doctor Carroll Dunham, the Colonial Revival mansion house was designed for 34 rooms with 16 fireplaces, gables and bay windows, a large staircase, walls of mahogany panelling, and glass designed by Irvington resident Louis Comfort Tiffany. The grounds were designed by Charles Eliot, who also planned the Boston park system with later alterations by Frederick Law Olmsted, the co-creator of New York City's Central Park. The estate was sold shortly after Dunham's death in 1923 to Gordon Harris, the son of American Tobacco Company founder William R. Harris. Gordon Harris, then Vice President of the United States Lines shipping company, and his family lived on the estate until 1946 A caretaker maintained the estate until it was sold to Leonard Reed. Reed used the estate to house his Foundation for Economic Education.

In 1939, H. H. Cotton and H. H. Jarrett headed a syndicate formed to purchase property known as the Arnaz Tract from the Marblehead Land Company, owned by Malibu heir and Los Angeles benefactress

Rhoda Rindge Adamson. In April, 1939, the syndicate incorporated as the Beverly-Arnaz Land Company, with Cotton as President and Jarrett as Director. Also on the board was noted Los Angeles developer Walter H. Leimert. By 1940, the Arnaz Tract was being developed as Beverlywood, a subdivision located near Beverly Hills and what is now Century City in the Los Angeles area. The company was voluntarily dissolved in 1946 and its assets liquidated.

- The Beverly-Arnaz Land Company put the Walter H. Leimert Company in charge of development of the property. Leimert engaged George Gibbs, Eastern landscape architect, to lay the tract. Gibbs made nearly 30 studies of the land: finally drafting a plan which is expected to be final. It calls for extensive tree-planting, impressive entrance gates at several points, and a landscaped strip 15 to 25 feet wide along the entire frontage on Robertson boulevard. No lots will face on Robertson. Streets will follow natural contours to avoid scarifying the hills. Restrictions will provide for moderately priced homes.

  - “PRODUCT DESCRIPTION
Beautifully engraved certificate from the Garden Homes Company issued in 1921. This historic document was printed by the Pernau-Walsh Printing Company and has an ornate border around it. This item is hand signed by the Company's President ( Duncan McDuffie ) and Secretary and is over 83 years old. This is the first time we have seen this certificate.
Duncan McDuffie (1877-1951) received the Pugsley Silver Medal in 1928 “for his services as a member of the California State Parks Commission, in establishing a state park system.” He was a residential developer who was an intrepid mountaineer and an active member of the Sierra Club. His efforts in the 1920s were central to helping create the California State Park system and to securing approval for an initial bond package that would fund land purchases for the system.
Born on September 24, 1877, in Jefferson, Indiana, McDuffie and his family eventually moved to California. He attended high school in Santa Barbara and obtained a B.S. from the University of California in 1899. After graduation McDuffie became a residential developer in the Berkeley area. Over the years, he acted as president of the Mason-McDuffie Company, the Berkeley Development Company, the Westgate Park Company, the Garden Homes Company, and the St. Francis Home Building Company. He was also credited with the development of a number of subdivisions: Claremont Park, Claremont Court, and Northbrae Properties all in Berkeley, and St. Francis Woods in San Francisco.
McDuffie planned a suburban neighborhood that enhanced the spectacular Claremont Hotel and its gardens retaining Frederick Law Olmsted to advise on the project. His subdivisions were not merely roads and residences: they were refined, elegant, and aesthetically pleasing. They were, “...planned around a park or public space that integrated a naturalistic setting with spacious lots for residences of refinement and elegance so as to have ample space for gardens...[with]...planted roadways aligned with the contours of the landscape and upon central transit boulevards planted with overbowering trees, perhaps even supporting an electric line, called "parkways" or "pleasure drives," that were connected to town centers.””

  - “Returning to the center of Town, cross the Depot Street Bridge (The Steel Bridge) and directly in front of you is Beacon Mill Village. Now residential units, Beacon Falls grew up around the handsome brick factory complex, listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Since 1850 the complex had been the American Hard Rubber Company, The Home Woolen Company, the Standard Woolen Company, Beacon Power and Mill and the Beacon Falls Rubber Shoe Company. It is even said to be haunted by the spirit of an electrician who was electrocuted while at work there.
“During the Civil War, The Home Woolen Company supplied shawls to Union soldiers. By 1870 the Home Woolen Company was producing 13,000 shawls per month. But the soldiers came home with long woolen coats that were made elsewhere. So shawls were no longer needed and the company went out of business in 1880. The Town was pretty quiet for a short time after they left.
“But Beacon Falls experienced a boom when the Beacon Falls Rubber Shoe Company moved into the complex. In 1898 George Lewis founded the company. His son Tracy Lewis later became president and ran the company until 1922. The company was very successful and maintained a band which played every noon and gave concerts in the park on summer evenings. The Beacon Falls Rubber Shoe Company produced the nationally known Top Notch brand, with offices in Boston, San Francisco and New York. In 1915, the company hired the Olmstead Brothers from Massachusetts, sons of the man who designed Central Park in New York, to create a plan to develop the Town. Most of the Town was on the hill behind the complex.”

  - “History
In order to fulfill the growing need for young women seeking a strong college-preparatory education in the Catholic tradition, Sacred Heart Academy was founded September 9, 1946, by the Apostles of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, at that time known as the Missionary Zelatrices of the Sacred Heart of Jesus (MZSH). The school was established by Sr. M. Antonine Signorelli, a visionary leader who recognized the opportunity to make a difference in the lives of the young students who would go on to become leaders in the local area and beyond. Archbishop Henry J. O'Brien of Hartford and Diocesan Superintendent of Schools Rev. Francis Heffernan approved the founding of the school. SHA started out with 17 students in New Haven on Greene Street in the provincial house of the MZSH. Each subsequent year brought increasing enrollment and expansion of facilities. In 1953, the congregation, by this time renamed as The Apostles of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, moved to a new location in Hamden: Mount Sacred Heart on Cherry Hill, a property acquired from the estate of a local businessman by the name of Manley Chester. SHA also moved to the same property in 1957.” [<http://www.sacredhearthamden.org/page.cfm?p=352>]

  - “Town real estate firm celebrates century in business this year”
By Frank MacEachern, Staff Writer
Published 09:50 p.m., Monday, August 31, 2009
“At first glance, the advertisement Tom Gorin recently held in his 79 E. Putnam Ave. real estate office could come from Greenwich Time's real estate pages.

Pictured are 14 large houses, a promising location, sweeping views and the latest technological improvements to its targeted audience of wealthy New York City residents.

Instead, it's a 1910 advertisement by a then year-old Greenwich company called Franklin Edson, Raymond B. Thompson Co.

This year that company -- now Cleveland, Duple & Arnold -- is celebrating a century in business, with an overwhelmingly residential focus.

...Edson went on to found his own firm, Edson & Edson, a few years later -- Gorin said those dates are lost in history -- and Thompson took on two associates, Henry Banks and Clement Cleveland.

Edson & Edson produced the Edson Report, "the Bible for Greenwich real estate for decades," Gorin said. At some point, Banks and Cleveland took over the company and renamed it Banks & Cleveland, Gorin said.

In 1934, during the depths of the Great Depression, a Kentucky-born woman decided she wanted to sell real estate.

Eleven years later, Therese Landsdowne Duple, and the only other female broker at the firm, Barbara Arnold, became partners, to join Cleveland, and changed the company's name to Cleveland, Duple & Arnold.

It's the name the company has been known by since. Gorin said he's resisted changing it.

"That's what people know us as through all these years, so why change it?" he said with a shrug.

Anne Young, archivist with the Historical Society of the Town of Greenwich, said real estate is more than simply about buying and selling homes. She said the documents used to market homes and the sale history of those homes are a precious tool for historians.

"They're wonderful," she said enthusiastically. "All the material that is given to us really does get used."

The care that agents use to document homes and properties makes research into them far easier, she said. Part of the town's history can be seen in the 1910 advertisement. In the top corner Gorin points out what is today the Woman's Club of Greenwich at 89 Maple Ave.

The year after it was advertised, William Decker sold the property to Edward W. Packard, according to land documents in the basement of Town Hall.

In 1939, after Packard's death, Helen Packard Stillman and Dewey D. Ellis were listed as "tenants in common" of the property. In 1941, the Weston Corp. of Greenwich acquired the land and it was sold the following year to William MacRossie. He sold it to Blanche Austin Rockhill in 1949. Three years later, in May 1952, the property was sold to the Woman's Club of Greenwich and has remained in the club's hands ever since.

The approximately three-acre property had been sold to Decker by William and Mary Bouchelle in 1899.

They bought the property from Ann Eliza Woodruff in 1884. She received it from the heirs of Joseph Brush in 1873.

No earlier information was available, as those land transfer books were not available at Greenwich Town Hall.

In spite of the pace of technological advances that saw growing numbers of automobiles, telephones and airplanes in the pre-World War I years, Greenwich was still largely a rural area in 1909, Gorin said.

"It was mainly farmland and mills in the surrounding towns. No one had money to buy those homes," Gorin said about the properties that targeted wealthy New York City residents looking for a place in the country.

The town's agricultural background was seen in restrictive covenants for land sales in Belle Haven just two decades before Edson and Thompson joined forces.

Buyers had to agree not to have any "permanent accommodation of manure or fertilizer except under cover," according to the sale document for one Mayo Avenue residence.

But Greenwich's real estate market -- in many ways -- is the same today, right down to the style of homes, Gorin said.

"It's remarkably similar, even in the architecture," Gorin said as he looked over the 1910 advertisement.

"The homes have shingles and porches much like many of the homes that are being built now."

  - "The state Banking Department is expected to have a hearing by the end of the month on an application from a group of town and area, businessmen and professionals who have applied for a charter to organize a new bank in Watertown.
The application is for a proposed Yankee Bank & Trust Co., to be located in a three-story office building being constructed at 365 Main St. The site is the location of the former historic Heminway mansion, which was destroyed in an explosion on Labor Day in 1982." Town Times, v.43, no.38, Oct. 15, 1987

  - "Watertown, CT - 365 Main Street - Historic Home Blown to Pieces - Labor Day 1982 BOOM!
On Labor Day, 1982, the old Heminway mansion at 365 Main Street next to the Methodist Church was completely destroyed by an explosion. The blast fragmented the house and damaged at least 30 structures nearby. Windows were broken up and down Main Street and the blast was felt in neighboring towns. It was considered a miracle that nobody was injured. Eventually, the owner of the house was charged with tampering with the gas line. Here's a Town Times article that appeared ten days after the blast:
REPAIR BILL CLIMBING AS INVESTIGATIONS CONTINUE

Damage estimates from the Labor Day explosion that shattered the former Heminway home on Main Street have been put at least $500,000, according to Fire Chief and Marshal Avery W. Lamphier..."

  - “Why do some old timers call Lake Park “Kelsey City”?”
“The dream town of Massachusetts restaurateur Harry Kelsey incorporated on November 16, 1923, as the state’s first planned community. He envisioned a metropolis of one hundred thousand people when he bought the land in 1919.
“He brought down his wife and children, pitched a tent on the Intracoastal Waterway and auctioned lots. The Olmstead [sic] Brothers the landscape architects of Central Park [sic?] provided the design. A gate over U.S. 1 that would last for decades welcomed visitors to the “World’s Winter Playground””

  - “Ponte Vedra has enjoyed a rich 400-year history, with a different flare than the other Beach communities. Since the establishment of St. Augustine by the Spanish in 1565, and the founding of Fort Caroline by the French to the north, soldiers have traveled the sands of Ponte Vedra vying for a foothold in Northeast Florida.
“This area has been rich in rattlesnakes, alligators, mosquitoes, and minerals. The National Lead Company mined for minerals in the sand for years, and at that time there were as many mules as people in Mineral City.
“When it became less profitable to extract minerals from the sand, the National Lead Company brought in the Telfair Stockton Company to begin a real estate development of the site. Since the area was being developed for an affluent clientele, one of the first tasks was to change the name from Mineral City to something with a little more widespread appeal. An article on Ponte Vedra, Spain, and its claim to being the birthplace of Christopher Columbus (inaccurate), swayed the decision. The name Ponte Vedra was chosen. The last vestiges of the mining past were obliterated, the slate cleaned, and Ponte Vedra was on its way!
“The remoteness of the Beaches was still a problem. The developers offered initial buyers deep discounts to encourage development and a small, existing golf course was greatly improved. As residential development increased, the State of Florida completed the road from Jacksonville Beach south to St. Augustine, opening the last segment of the East Coast Scenic Highway. Ponte Vedra Beach was in the conceptual stage in 1928 when the owners of the land actually set up plans for serious development of the area as a resort.
“By 1942, National Lead Company sold its interest in Ponte Vedra to the locally driven Ponte Vedra Corporation. The community rapidly developed into a year-round resort community with a substantial permanent population. Today, Ponte Vedra Beach is considered one of the most luxurious recreational and residential locations in the country, offering over 153 holes of golf, 60 tennis courts and miles of fabulous and famous white sand beaches.”

Neighborhood Profile: Severna Park March 02, 1997 | By Judy Reilly | Judy Reilly, SPECIAL TO THE SUNSUN STAFF (Page 2 of 2) The area's role as a summer escape ended in 1910 when entrepreneurs Norvell Chapman, Walter Piper and Ernest LeSeur bought the property from the railroad and began to develop and sell housing lots. The area got a further boon as a residential development in 1944, when various family tracts were sold to developers, who rapidly sold the scenic lots overlooking the Severn River.
By the 1960s and 1970s, baby boomers were being raised in close-knit neighborhoods and developments on the Magothy River, as well as the Severn, where they could bike to Olde Severna Park Village Shopping Center to buy penny candy or cinnamon rolls or stop for a drink at a soda fountain.
Elsie Wingate Mullinex, a resident of the area since 1939, and editor of the newly published "Severna Park Reflections," says of her neighborhood: "There's an amazingly little country atmosphere to it -- people are neighborly and friendly." Empty-nesters, who raised their kids in the area and then moved on, have discovered that their children, now grown and fueled with memories of idyllic childhoods, want to come back and raise their families in the river front setting. Or they want to come back themselves."

“The Freeman Plat is significant for landscape architecture because of both the overall aesthetic that informed the Plat’s realized design as well as many important individual garden landscapes for houses built within the plat. Freeman employed Olmsted & Olmsted as consultants for the layout of the plat, and extensive drawings and correspondence document this process. The resulting elements are a full-blown expression of their aesthetic: winding, hilly streets, ample verges to separate the streets from the sidewalks, and prescribed setbacks of houses on their lots create a highly picturesque suburban residential landscape. The hills and curving roads reveal only a small portion of the neighborhood at one time, a configuration which enhances the sequential nature of the landscape and appears in many other designs by the firm, including the Arnold Arboretum in Boston.” National Register of Historic Places Registration Form, Freeman Plat Historic District

  - “In addition to the landscaping of the plat itself, individual parcels are significance for their landscape design. Olmsted & Olmsted designed, in part or in whole, gardens for the Davis House, 238 Arlington Avenue; the DeWolf House, 25 Freeman Parkway; Freeman’s own house, 42 Freeman Parkway now only partially extant; and the Aldred House, 140 Freeman Parkway. Many other landscape designs of similar quality within the plat are the work of local landscape architects, gardeners, and individual homeowners.”

  - “Zee Rust, built by Arthur Curtiss James/Hubert Vos House (1915-19, 1951 et seq.; Grosvenor Atterbury, architect; Olmsted Brothers, landscape architects): A large, rambling, extended-E-plan, 2½-story stucco house with extensive terraces on the east elevation, irregularly placed late 20th-century 1-over-1 windows and large plate-glass windows on the east elevation’s 1st story, complex high-hip/crossgable/jerkinhead-gable roof; and large central chimney. James, who had owned this property since the early years of the 20th century, built this house, perhaps with Vos’s tenancy in mind, for the plans the Olmsteds developed in 1915-16 are labeled “Arthur Curtiss James, Artist’s Lot.” It was the summer home of Dutch-born artist Hubert Vos (1855-1935), an internationally known if somewhat minor painter who lived principally in New York in his later years. Vos was an avid amateur gardener who here created an extensive naturalistic landscape, influenced by exemplars he knew from extensive travel in China and Japan, between 1915 and the late 1920s. In the 1950s, this became the property of the Sisters of St Joseph of Cluny (see 75 Brenton Road).” From “The Lost Houses” <http://www.newportmansions.org/page9649.cfm>

  - Vedimar (1910)
Arthur Curtiss James Estate
Architects: Atterbury & Phelps
Located on Harrison Avenue
Demolished: 1975
Set atop a rocky outcropping at the end of a long entrance drive, Vedimar was a stucco-over-timber-frame Spanish Colonial style villa built as a guest residence for Commodore Arthur Curtiss James’ adjoining estate. Following auction of its contents, Vedimar was demolished in 1975 for a planned institutional development of the site. That institution went into receivership and the resultant clinic buildings and parking lots were removed by a private Newport preservationist in 1999.

  - Beacon Hill House (1910)
Arthur Curtiss James Estate
Architects: Howells & Stokes
Located on Beacon Hill Road
Demolished: 1967
Occupying the highest, rockiest hill of Newport, Beacon Hill House, named for the beacons that were once lit at its crest, was designed to blend into its natural environment in keeping with F. L. Olmsted, H. H. Richardson, and R. M. Hunt’s recommendations for the development of this sector of Newport. Built of native gray puddingstone, the exterior was relatively austere. The interiors, however, included fully paneled walnut reception rooms and the “della Robbia” room, done in Guastavino tiles. Mr. James was Commodore of the New York Yacht Club, heir to the Phelps-Dodge copper mining interests, and a major Western railroad investor. His estate was the largest in Newport at one hundred and twenty-five acres, with three villas, a “Swiss Village” model farm, formal gardens, and boathouse. With the death of Mr. and Mrs. James, within three weeks of each other in 1941, the estate was willed to a foundation that, in 1951, after ten years of vandalism, gifted the houses and real estate to the Roman Catholic Diocese of Providence. One of the villas, Zeerust, was converted to a convent and novitiate, and a service building into an elementary school. The main house was seldom utilized and, in May of 1967, vandals started a fire in Beacon Hill House. Guttled, the estate was demolished in August of 1967 and seventy acres were sold for residential development. From "The Lost Houses" <http://www.newportmansions.org/page9649.cfm>

  - "703 Oakwood
703 Oakwood Ave.— They Grew up in Town
Robert Thruston Houk built this lovely high-style Queen Anne around 1894. Robert Thruston Houk and his wife Sarah Littler Talbott (known as Lillie) were married in 1887, the same year Robert's sister Katharine married Sarah's brother Harry Talbott. The Houk and Talbott families were some of the earliest families in Oakwood and their history is well documented. R. Thruston Houk grew up in the home known as Runnymede. His father George Houk purchased property in 1856 and built a house in 1860. This house was later given to Katharine and Harry and has its own unique history.
Robert Thruston Houk was a businessman associated with A. A. Simonds, Mead & Company, the National Cash Register Company, and the Dayton Motor Car Company. The Houks, like the Talbotts, lived in large homes with Avenue was home to Robert, Sarah, their 5 children, Sarah's father John Talbott and three servants. Both families were also civic-minded. For years, the carriage house at 703 Oakwood Avenue was used as city hall with all council meetings conducted there. The Houks lived at 703 Oakwood for 36 years, until they sold the home in 1930 to Howard Converse, General Manager of Dominick & Dominick, and his wife Mary. The Houks then moved to 1201 Oakwood Avenue, just down the street. Robert died in 1938, and his wife Sarah died in 1941."   - "Throughout the 20th century, Cord Meyer Development Company played a significant role in Queens development. The company's developments include Forest and Arbor Close, two contiguous blocks of Tudor Style attached single family residences completed in 1926-1927, and the landmark Lexington and Livingston Apartments. All of these projects were awarded a Certificate of Excellence in Design by the Queens Chamber of Commerce. More recent developments include the Seminole and Balfour Apartments built in 1951 and 1957 respectively, the Continental and Forester Apartments erected in 1962 and 1965, and the Forest Hills Apartments completed in 1967. In the 1980s, the Company was well positioned to take advantage of the shift in the real estate market toward individual apartment ownership, and began the successful conversion of its apartment buildings into "co-ops". The company's current projects include the renovation and renewal of several retail and mixed-use properties. Through these residential buildings and others, Cord Meyer Development Company contributes to the Greater New York Metropolitan Area as a stabilizing force in times of rapid change through decade upon decade of growth and prosperity."

  - Suburban Beginnings
 "The turn of the century seemed to herald the opening of a new era and Thomaston began to take on a decided suburban appearance. In 1908, official maps were filed for a development called Great Neck Hills, an area bounded roughly by Shoreward Drive, Susquehanna Avenue and Middle Neck Road. Broad lots and handsome houses in this part of Thomaston today are the result of restrictions included in deeds sold by the Great Neck Improvement Company, which developed Great Neck Hills. The concept of a planned development with minimum building standards was not unique at the beginning of the 20th century but it certainly was unusual. The character of the Hills area was jealously guarded by the Improvement Company, which maintained its own plant nursery and worked with Olmstead [sic] Brothers, a firm of landscape architects. Through the Olmstead firm, the Hills development became a model for other communities across the country." from "The Village of Thomaston" Published by the Incorporated Village of Thomaston, Great Neck, New York, 1976

- “ One important survivor of the salt industry was the Solvay Process Company in the nearby village of Solvay, the first plant in the United States to produce soda ash. The Solvay process for manufacturing soda ash from brine and limestone was patented by Ernest and Alfred Solvay of Belgium in 1861. It remained a secret for almost twenty years until Rowland Hazard, a successful Rhode Island industrialist and his engineer, William B. Cogswell, a native Syracusan, secured the U.S. manufacturing rights to the process. Well aware of the area's resources in the limestone and salt needed to make soda ash, Cogswell convinced his employer to erect the plant on abandoned salt land on the shore of Onondaga Lake. Around the plant grew the village of Solvay. Solvay Process was known for its benevolent paternalistic labor practices. One of the company's projects was a kindergarten, the first in the area. When Frederick Hazard (son of the Rowland) died in 1917, the mayor of Syracuse flew the flag at half-mast in honor of his 'great contributions in dollars and in humanitarian leadership'" (p.6) ... After her death in 1901, the property was divided among the heirs. They formed the Sedgwick Farm Land Company, which began to develop the area. The tract, hailed as the most desirable location in the city, was opened up in sections." p.202 "Syracuse Landmarks: An AIA Guide to Downtown and Historic Neighborhoods" Evamaria Hardin, Onondaga Historical Association, Syracuse University Press, 1993

- “The Sedgwick neighborhood was Syracuse's first residential local historic district. Here is found the City's most beautiful and significant collection of 20th century residential design. The homes represent some of the finest works by Syracuse architects and builders, including Ward Wellington Ward, Dwight James Baum, Paul Hueber, Bonta and Taylor, Archimedes Russell, and Harry King. “The architectural and landscaping diversity of Sedgwick Farms are its hallmark. Along winding roadways, cul-de-sacs, and city streets are wonderful examples of Italianate, Colonial Revival, and Tudor Revival styles.” From Sedgwick Farm Neighborhood Association, Inc. website, <http://www.sedgwickfarm.org/history.html>

- (Upland Farm, the Frederick R. Hazard residence built in 1891; Joseph Lyman Silsbee, architect) “Among [Joseph Lyman Silsbee’s] most prominent architectural works is the landmark Syracuse Savings Bank Building (1876). Built next to the Erie Canal on Clinton Square in Syracuse, it is often referred to as a textbook example of the High Victorian Gothic style. Silsbee also designed the White Memorial Building (1876), the Amos Block (1878), and the Oakwood Cemetery Chapel (1879–80), all extant in Syracuse. Upland Farm (1892), the lost mansion designed for Frederick R. and Dora Sedgwick Hazard in nearby Solvay, New York is an example of the fashionable residential work that Silsbee was best known for.” http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Joseph\_Lyman\_Silsbee
- Enjoying sustained prosperity at the turn of the twentieth century, some Syracusans adopted elements of Country Place Era design for their residential gardens (see Property Type: Residential Gardens). While immense, estate-scale properties were no longer available within the city limits, several properties of significant size were developed beyond the city borders. Upland Farm (1893) was the 400-acre Solvay estate of Frederick R. Hazard, head of the Solvay Process Company. The estate's 40-room mansion (demolished 1940) was designed by Joseph Lyman Silsbee, and the grounds were planned by Olmsted Brothers.” (p.57) From the National Registration nomination form for The Historic Designed Landscapes of Syracuse, New York, 1994 submission

- “In the course of time, the Solvay group built an enclave of substantial homes on Orchard Road and West Genesee Street, an exclusive area known as Upland Farms. They even had private schools, a private country club... (p.44) Before long, both Hazard and Bacon left their homes and moved their families to the area of Upland Farms, thus initiating the enclave for Solvay folks. Hazard's original home became the company's club house... (p.50) Most of the former Hazard Estate is now occupied by a shopping center and houses built by John Tarolli." p.150, “Smokestacks Allegro: The Story of Solvay, a Remarkable Industrial/Immigrant Village (1880-1920)”, Rita Cominoli, Center for Migration Studies, 1990

- 1900 and 1910 censuses list Frederick Hazard (Pres. of Solvay Process Co., with wife Dora Gannett Sedgwick Hazard and daughters Dorothy, Katherine and Sarah and son Frederick) as residing on Orchard Road; 1920 lists Dora, obviously after Frederick's 1917 death, and kids still simply on Orchard Rd. By 1930, Dora is still living at Orchard Rd with Katherine (39 and single); the previous listing in the same census lists Michael Brown and family at 307 Orchard.

- "In Westchester County

Percy M. Hall purchased a portion of the Katherine T. Moore estate at Scarborough, NY lying between the Croton Aqueduct and the Hudson River consisting of fifteen acres and buildings. This property has approximately 800 feet frontage on the Hudson River. James N. Wells's Sons were the brokers for the Moore estate and the Hudson Shore Estates Inc. acted for Mr. Hall in the transaction."

- In T. Wood Clarke's book, "Utica, For a Century and a Half" chapter XI, we found a section titled "The Booming Twenties".
"Land developments began to spring up like mushrooms, especially in the Seventeenth Ward, the no man's land between the southern boundary of Utica at Prospect Street and the Sauquoit Creek, which, after much controversy, had been admitted to the city in 1921. In 1921, Talcott Road running west from Genesee Street, was laid out by Hugh R. Jones Company. In 1923, The Vernon Davis Company bought the unoccupied land between Higby Road and the Sauquoit creek, laid out streets, and called it South Utica Lawns. In 1925, Fay Inman boomed Benton Hills east of Upper Oneida Street, and Harry W. Roberts developed Sherman Gardens and built Sherman Drive on the hills overlooking East Utica. In 1926, Hugh R. Jones Company purchased the old Benton Farm east of Genesee Street, called it Ridgewood, had it landscaped by Olmsted, and sold off the lots rapidly. During the years of prosperity, all these developments prospered, and many fine homes were built. "No Man's Land" rapidly took on a decidedly urban appearance. Thousands of Uticans, tired of the noisy trolley cars of the city and longing for a country life in the city, sold their houses downtown and moved to these semi-rural regions."

- "Originally part of a one-thousand acre grant to General William Preston, Audubon Park was developed as a subdivision about 1910. The Audubon Park Realty Company mapped the lots, planted the trees, laid out the roads, and designated the park areas.
"During World War I the realty company offered to the government 420 acres on the south side of the Audubon Country Club for living quarters of the soldiers. Later named Camp Zachary Taylor, in its early days the cantonment was referred to as the "Audubon Park camp site." Today, it is simply known as Camp Taylor." From the City of Audubon Park website
<http://www.audubonparkky.org/aboutus.htm>
- "Audubon Park - An early twentieth century residential suburban development located three miles south of downtown Louisville. The community was developed on approximately 230 acres of rolling pastureland once owned by Gen. William Preston. Preston had received the land in 1774 as part of a thousand-acre land grant from the British government as payment for services rendered during the French and Indian War. "A portion of the old Preston tract, which became more valuable after the opening of the Okolona line of the interurban in 1905, was sold to G. Robert Hunt of Hunt, Bridgeford and Co. in 1906. The Audubon Park Country Club and golf course were developed by the firm... The Audubon Park Realty Co. purchased the land from Hunt, Bridgeford and Co. in 1912. The developers named the neighborhood after famous American naturalist and wildlife painter John James Audubon."

Olmsted's next Brookline project had an uncomplicated history and a happier conclusion. Possibly in order to assure Olmsted that they were in agreement, representatives of two of the principal land owners on what is now called Fisher Hill, wrote to him in February of 1884 on the same piece of paper and asked him to make a plan for the subdivision of the Benjamin Goddard estate and adjoining "Clifton Hill" and design them as one."

[showing Charles E. Norton Estate]
  - "We meet today on a historic spot. So fully has Shady Hill entered into the life of the neighborhood and into that of Harvard College that it long ago came to possess a genius loci, the distinctive character or spirit of a place. Shady Hill, a white, federal-style house on a fifty-acre tract, was purchased in 1821 by Andrews Norton, in order that he could live near his work at the Harvard Divinity School. The purchase was a part of the bride's dowry, the wife Catherine Eliot being the daughter of the wealthy Boston merchant Samuel Eliot of King's Chapel. Samuel was the uncle of Charles William Eliot, who was destined to become the president of Harvard College. Being born in 1834, Eliot was seven years younger than his cousin Charles Eliot Norton, born in 1827 at Shady Hill."
(Footnote: The home built by Jim and Margaret Adams in Cambridge, Massachusetts, is located on the original "Shady Hill" estate; the new headquarters of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences is across the street. This essay was published in the Bulletin of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences 35, no.6 (March 1982)"

  - "The Chimneys," refers to the estate of Katharine Lane Weems in Manchester, Massachusetts. It includes landscape and architectural plans, photographs, 35mm slides, glass slides, journals, and books dating from 1903 to 1985.
Historical Note: The property on which this estate in Manchester, Massachusetts sits was originally owned by the father of Richard Henry Dana, Jr., the author of Two Years Before the Mast. The estate was subdivided after the elder Dana's death in 1879. Gardiner Martin Lane purchased the land and had his brother-in-law, Raleigh Gildersleeve, design a large Georgian Colonial Revival summer house for him known as "The Chimneys." The Olmsted Brothers landscape architecture firm was hired in 1902 to help with the overall siting of the house and to plan a number of garden areas. During the next ten years, the Olmsted firm designed a number of areas including an approach road, formal terraced gardens, a water garden, and a variety of outdoor structures such as an arbor, tea house, and greenhouse.
Biographical Note: Katharine Lane Weems (1899-1989), the daughter of Emma and Gardiner M. Lane, spent her childhood summers at "The Chimneys." She later attended the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston and went on to specialize in sculpting animals. "The Chimneys" served as her principal studio after the stable was remodeled in 1930; later it became her primary residence. She married F. Carrington Weems in 1947 and published an autobiography, Odds Were Against Me, in 1985. She died at her family estate in 1989. from "The Chimney's" Collection, 1903 – 1985,

  - [Red herring:] Historic Edgefield, built in 1911 as the county poor farm, is a destination resort in the Pacific Northwest that blends Oregon's natural beauty with McMenamins' signature whimsy: original buildings carefully restored with cozy interiors, gardens grown using organic methods, great food and drink, live entertainment and more.
<http://www.mcmenamins.com/54-edgefield-home>
  - In 1854 the territorial legislature gave the counties the responsibility of caring for the poor.[3] 1868 saw the first pauper's farm open in the west hills of Portland. This facility, called Hillside Farm, was located near Canyon Road in Portland's West Hills; the site is now part of Washington Park.[3] Hillside Farm was closed down due to the "deplorable" condition of the building, and the Multnomah County Poor Farm was built to replace it. In November 1911, 211 residents moved to the new farm in Troutdale.[3 This new facility was the largest county-funded relief institution in Oregon.]

  - -- Many thanks again for your help. A few problems to consider are that "Edgefield" poor farm didn't open until 1911 and before that there were other poor farms. There seem to have been at least two Multnomah County poor farms (county farm #1 and county farm #2 as per the Oregon State Archives) before Edgefield, and they were not in Troutdale as Edgefield is. The one in the Sylvan Hills, called Hillside Farm, closed in 1911. It was up there somewhere in the area where the zoo, Washington Park, Hoyt Arboretum, the Japanese Gardens, the VA Hospital, OHSU, the West Hills Golf Course, etc. are now. The Edgefield Records are a continuation of the old records.
-- There's an interesting newspaper article RE: this topic, from the Journal, June 20, 1956: "Recovery of Bones Reopens State History." It's about the human remains that were found when workmen were excavating a trench for a sewer for the new zoo in Hoyt Park. The 200 acres set aside for the new zoo used to be the location of the Multnomah county poor farm 1868 to 1911.

  - "In 1868 Multnomah County acquired the 170 acre farm of Stephen Coffin on which to build its poor farm (figure 4.2). Details of this first county farm's beginnings are few, only in its later years do notable media reports begin on it. For a while it had been an idyllic pastoral setting for its residents, indeed the Board of Charities and Corrections report spoke rather highly of it, at least in relative terms. (n.119, First Biennial Report of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, 141-147). However, by 1909 it had a population of over 180 residents, far more than it was ever intended to accommodate (figure 4.3).

- Multnomah County Poor Farm

The Multnomah County Poor Farm was established in June 1868 on 160 acres of what was originally the Eli and Ann Stewart Donation Land Claim. The Stewarts sold the land to Thomas Carter in 1861. Stephen Coffin purchased the land in 1865 and then sold it to Multnomah County. The farm was about two and a half miles west of the Portland city limits on Canyon Road. It was home to the poor, the sick, and a colony of lepers until 1911. Visitors entered through a swinging gate on the north side of Canyon Road and proceeded about 100 yards up a wagon road to the main building. That structure measured about 60 X 20 feet and was two stories high. A graveyard marked the last resting place of those who ended their days in the facility. n.3 (n.3 Smith, Courtney M. “History of the Origin and Growth of the Multnomah County Hospital.” March 30, 1933. - Multnomah County Poor Farm Cemetery

The Multnomah County Poor Farm was established in 1868 on 160 acres of the Eli and Ann Stewart Donation Land Claim, south east of present-day Mt. Calvary. [7] Visitors entered the Poor Farm grounds through a swinging gate leading off from Canyon Road. The winding wagon road passed the graveyard on the right, went past the one room shack used as the 'pest house' and up the hill to the main buildings. The Farm was home to the poor, the sick, and a colony of lepers. In 1880, twenty-six men and two women were enumerated on the census as residents of the farm. [8] In 1888, David M. Dunne, newly elected Multnomah County Commissioner, arranged for passage back to China, on the English brig "Kitty" for fifteen Chinese lepers who were living at the Poor Farm. - “THE COUNTY HOSPITAL Multnomah County maintains a county hospital in the city now under the care and direction of Dr EP Geary which is fitted up to minister to the indigent unfortunate in the most comfortable manner. This hospital has grown out of the general provision made by the county authorities for the unfortunate poor known as the Poor Farm. This public charity was organized in 1869 by the county of Multnomah purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of land of Gen. Stephen Coffin in the year 1869. The land lay about two miles west of the then city of Portland and was purchased of General Coffin for fifty dollars an acre. It was recently sold by the county for seven hundred and fifty dollars an acre the proceeds of which are to be invested in land for a poor farm near the town of Troutdale and the necessary buildings to be erected thereon.” p.453, Portland, Oregon, its history and builders: in connection with the antecedent explorations, discoveries, and movements of the pioneers that selected the site for the great city of the Pacific, Volume 1, Joseph Gaston, S.J. - “In the early 1900s, sentiment began to change and Portland's forefathers were heralded for their long-range vision. City Park, as it was then called, had developed from a wilderness to a place of drives, walkways, formal plantings, lawns, clipped hedges, ornamental flower displays, and a zoo. While touring Portland in 1903, John C. Olmsted proposed certain adjustments to the park, such as changing its name, moving the main entrance to Park Place, separating vehicular traffic from foot traffic and restoring some of the formally planted areas to their natural beauty with native shrubs and ground cover. In 1909, the park assumed its current name: Washington Park.

“The last major addition to Washington Park was made in 1922, when the entire 160-acre County Poor Farm was transferred to the Park Bureau. The southern half of the property was developed into the nine-hole West Hills Golf Course, and the remainder was designated as a municipal arboretum in 1928.”

- o Isla de la Juventud ("Isle of Youth") is the second-largest Cuban island and the seventh-largest island in the West Indies (after Cuba itself, Hispaniola, Jamaica, Puerto Rico, Trinidad, and Andros Island). The island has an area 3,056 km<sup>2</sup> (1,180 sq mi) and is 100 km south of the island of Cuba, across the Gulf of Batabanó. The island lies almost directly south of Havana and Pinar del Río, and because of its superficial extension, population and for its economic characteristics,[clarification needed] is considered to be a Special Municipality, not being a part of any province. The Isle of Youth is, therefore, administered directly by the central government of Cuba.
The island was called the Isle of Pines (Isla de Pinos) until it was renamed in 1978.

Seattle Mayor. He served as mayor of Seattle, Washington from August 3, 1884 to August 3, 1885. He was born in New Brunswick, Canada and lived briefly in Maine before settling in the Pacific Northwest. He arrived in Seattle in 1869 and was admitted to the Washington state bar in 1871. He was a highly successful and prominent businessman with investment holdings in banking, railroading, newspaper publishing, real estate development, logging and coal mining enterprises. In addition to serving as mayor, he served three terms as a member of the Seattle City Council. In 1892 he ran again for mayor, losing to James T. Ronald, a future district court judge. Later in the year he married Eliza P. Ferry, daughter of Washington's first elected governor Elisha P. Ferry. At the time of his death he held an estimated fortune in excess of two million dollars. - o John Leary House: When completed around 1904, this stone and half-timbered manse was one of the largest and most lavish in the city. The architect was Seattle's J. Alfred Bodley. The owner, John Leary, arrived in Seattle in 1869 and founded the West Coast improvement Company, which was primarily responsible for the development of Ballard [...newspaper magnate, coal mining, mayor of Seattle in 1884 for two terms]. It seemed John Leary could have anything he wanted. But he died at the age of 68 before he could move into his dream house. The mansion is now home to the Episcopal Diocesan offices. A stained-glass window designed for the house by New York's Tiffany & Co. is now at UW's Burke Museum. - 1551 10th Ave. E (between Highland Dr and Blaine St.)

HOUSE OF JOHN W. LANGDON, WALLA WALLA

- “The increase in attendance made it necessary to provide additional dormitory accommodations, for the College had long felt responsibility for housing the out-of-town students on the campus so far as possible. Reynolds Hall had provided sufficient accommodation for the girls until after the war, but, in 1920, a large private residence close by was purchased and named Langdon House in memory of the former owner, John W. Langdon, who had been a trustee of the College since 1910. The fraternity houses had provided accommodation for some of the young men after Billings Hall was discontinued as a dormitory, but, in 1920, a large private residence was given to the College by Mrs. William Kirkman, of Walla Walla, to help house out-of-town men. But these houses afforded only temporary and inadequate relief to the pressure for suitable accommodations, and by 1921 it was felt necessary to take a bolder step and build a dormitory for out-of-town freshmen boys. Three years later it was equally necessary to build a larger dormitory for out-of-town girls. Lyman House and Prentiss Hall were the result.” from “Whitman: An Unfinished Business” http://www.archive.org/stream/whitmananunfinis013447mbp/whitmananunfinis013447mbp\_djvu.txt
- “Langdon House (1920) is a three story building in Queen Anne style. It affords accommodations for about forty women. The first floor comprises a large reception hall and two drawing rooms and a study room. Sleeping accommodations are provided by large sleeping porches on the second floor and five rooms on the third floor. Five rooms on the second floor and one on the first are used for study rooms to which students are assigned by classes. There is a well equipped laundry in the basement.” p.22, Catalogue, Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash, 1921

  - A BRIEF HISTORY OF DOUGLAS PARK
Douglas Park, where St. John Vianney now stands, was opened in 1890 as a trotting track. It was named for Colonel James Douglas, the principal original stockholder. Trotting races were held on the grounds until 1913 when the track changed to thoroughbred racing. Such races were only conducted for five years. In 1918, the Kentucky Jockey Club purchased the 122 acres of Douglas Park, promptly discontinued racing there, and began using the facility to stable and train horses for Churchill Downs. The clubhouse and grandstand were demolished in 1939
A series of damaging fires on the grounds started during the forties. In 1941, a fire destroyed a barn containing eleven stalls, but no horses were lost. Then, on New Year's Eve of 1944, a large blaze destroyed a barn, killing a seventy-seven-year-old track attendant, nine race horses, and a track dog in the process. A smaller fire occurred in April of 1948.
Churchill Downs overhauled and improved the facility in 1950 in an effort to build a "number one training center." In the same year, the Downs sold twenty-one acres of Douglas Park to the Archdiocese of Louisville (St. John Vianney was built on part of these twenty-one acres). Fire struck again in March of the next year, burning a roof of one barn. This was only a prelude to a major fire that occurred on October 26 of 1952. A large barn, reportedly one of the largest horse barns in the world, was destroyed. Sixty-eight thoroughbreds valued at an estimated $250,000.00 were killed. St. John Vianney lost booths and other picnic equipment valued at $12,000 that was stored in one of the barns. The blaze must have created quite a stir in the area because a fireman on the scene called the resulting crowd of on-lookers the largest he had ever seen at a Louisville fire. A twenty-four-year-old exercise boy later confessed to deliberately setting the fire while under the influence of alcohol and marijuana and was sentenced to five years in prison. He also admitted to accidentally setting the fire in March of 1951.
As successive fires plagued Douglas Park, Churchill Downs continued to sell off parcels of the property. In 1954, three acres were sold to George Gould for the construction of offices and seven more acres were purchased by the Archdiocese for $28,000. This latter plot would be the future site of Holy Rosary Academy. Finally, at a meeting of the Board of Directors of Churchill Downs on June 5, 1956, the decision was made to sell off the remainder of Douglas Park. The Board hoped to obtain a total of $1,000,000.00 for capital improvements at the Downs. The last horses left the grounds in July of the next year. By the Spring of 1958, the remaining 78 acres of Douglas Park were cleared of the last ten barns and the land was leveled and sowed with grass.

- "Douglas park Race Course opened in 1895, coinciding with the Grand Army of the Republic convention in September that same year. Developed by James Douglas, the track, located south of Louisville in the Beechmont suburbs where Southside Dr. meets Second St., originally was built as a trotting track. In its heyday, Douglas Park had a grandstand and clubhouse and became a popular source of entertainment. The track closed from 1906 to 1912. In 1913 the property was renovated and the venue changed to Thoroughbred racing."

- "A native of Ontario, Canada, he was born at Villa Nova, November 5, 1869, his father being a banker of St. Thomas, Ontario. In that city the son was reared and supplemented his public school training by a college course. The tales which reached him concerning the golden west with its opportunities stirred his ambition and aroused in him the determination to try his fortunes on the Pacific coast. He was still in his teens when he made his way to the territory of Washington, at which time Seattle contained a population of about seventeen thousand. He felt the stir of life and progress here, recognized the advantageous geographical situation of the city and believed that it would be a favorable place to locate. His first investments were in timber lands.

"From time to time he kept adding to his holdings and has owned perhaps more of that kind of property than any man of his age in the state. His judgment seemed to be infallible as to timber values and he readily recognized the fact that the lumber industry must ultimately become one of the chief sources of activity and business prosperity in the west. His sound judgment has been rewarded in the growing value of his holdings and has won him place among the capitalists of Seattle. In this connection it has been written of him; "He has always invested with a safe margin and was one of the fortunate few who weathered the storms of the financial stress of the early '90s, when the most solid financially were none to secure". And he exhibited his great confidence in the ultimate outcome of this period and the general stability of the country when he was the only one who would take mortgages on timber lands and other real estate.

"Mr. Upper also dealt extensively in city property, both residences and business houses. He has laid out many additions to Seattle and cities and towns both in King County and other counties and has built a great many residences. His business has steadily increased and is now carried on on a very large scale. Not only has Mr. Upper operated in timber and in real-estate but has turned from those lines, perhaps more as a recreation than a business, to farming, owning several thousand acres of land. He delights in the development of crops, the clearing of land and in the raising of stock and is recognized as one whose judgment concerning horse flesh is seldom, if ever, at fault and there can always be found some fine specimens of choice stock on his ranch east of Lake Washington."

  - For many years Prof. Wm. B. Werthner and the writer of the following pages have found pleasure in roaming over the gravel ridge south of Dayton, studying its geological history and becoming acquainted with its plant and bird life. Many changes have taken place within this time.
In 1877 there was a swamp directly north of the present Schantz plat, northeast of Oakwood, full of fringed gentians, the scarlet lobelia, the shooting star, and a host of other flowers, forming a botanical garden unrivaled in the number and variety of the forms growing within such a narrow area.

- JCO Report 6117: “After Mr. S[chantz] told me about the hill part of his father's estate, he told me about the farm he owns on the Cincinnati Pike. It is about 400 acres. Some years ago when on a Com'te of the Chamber of Commerce or Board of Trade, he agitated the idea of securing some large tract of land near Dayton which could be given or sold cheaply to various manufacturing concerns that might be induced to locate near Dayton. Finally they obtained options in 1200 acres of land with railroad frontage between the river and the Cincinnati Pike, south of the city, west of what is now Gov. Cox's Mr. Patterson's Eby Farm and Mr. Deeds' farm but the necessary capital was not forthcoming and so just before the options expired he personally bought this part of the tract which he regarded as the most valuable. He paid about $125,000 for something over 500 acres if I remember rightly. He sold 50 ac. to Gov. Cox (I think it was) lying between the Cincinnati Pike and the "[fraction? traction?] line... Later, Mr. Guild of the Greater Dayton Assn told him he certainly ought to have the two farms south of what he bought, so as to extend his frontage to the E&W County Road. I told him he certainly ought to get at least part of the E'ly of these two farms, wide enough for a street & two rows of lots to the County Road near the [fraction] line. Mr. Patterson's Eby Farm cuts the greater part of Mr. Schantz' farm off from access to the "traction line" and the Cincinnati Pike & I advised him to try to buy that part of Mr. P's land. ...said next day to me that he had spoken to Mr. P. about it and Mr. P said he would sell the triangular piece E. of the "traction line", but not the strip between the "traction line" and the Cincinnati Pike. I said if he could buy this, he certainly ought to get a right-of-way for a street across it to connect what he did buy to the Cincinnati Pike. He said his idea now was to get a subdivision plan...”
- [red herring? Father's estate mentioned above?] “The Adam Schantz Estate developed its “Place to Live” with names from their beloved Florida, like Volusia, Sorrento and Orlando Terrace and from such local historical landmarks as Stonemill, Sawmill, and Springhouse.”

- 81. The Western Gravel Ridges in the Area Between Delco Dell and Hole's Creek
The two most conspicuous gravel ridges in the southern part of the area north of Hole's creek are the Schumacker and Walden ridges. The Schumacker ridge is wooded, but most of the Walden ridge is fully exposed in the open fields. A deep broad valley separates these ridges southward, but northward, along the high ground, the ridges are only indistinctly defined. The Schumacker ridge may be traced as far as the eastern side of the gully on the old Eby farm, directly north of the line between Van Buren and Washington townships. A parallel and much more conspicuous ridge forms the western side of this gully and is interrupted by a gap near the northeastern corner of the Emerick farm.

- Burrwood - Walter Jennings estate, demolished 1995-High on a hill at the end of Jennings Rd. in Cold Spring Harbor, are the remains of the Walter Jennings estate "Burrwood", named after Aaron Burr. The estate was privately owned for a time, then became a school for the blind, reverted back to private ownership, and finally sold to a developer and demolished in 1995. The gate house and a few smaller structures remain along with acres of undeveloped property. However, the main grounds, where once stood a magnificent mansion, now hosts new upscale housing.
<http://www.ligoldcoast.com/liruins.html>
- 'Burrwood' built for Walter Jennings c.1899 by Carrere & Hastings, extensive landscaping by Olmsted Brothers between 1915-38. Jennings was a director and secretary of Standard Oil Company and president of the National Fuel Gas Company. His son would go on to inherit the house, and eventually sold it to the Industrial Home for the Blind, which occupied the house until it was sold for development and demolished in 1994. Pieces of the gardens remain, as do a handful of brick walls and the original gates. Now stands a new stone home built by Kean Developing company.

- Campbell has been a resident of Lloyd Harbor for the past 54 years. She and her late husband Ward built their home at 41 Middle Hollow Road, a picturesque two-story Cape Cod that sits in the center of a grassy meadow.
Behind the house lies the thick-trunked sycamore, a looming 50-foot-high remnant from the estate of Walter Jennings, one of the directors of Standard Oil Co. The tree was already half its current height when Campbell first arrived half a century ago. It's estimated the tree must be at least 100 years old.
"I call it the most photogenic tree on Long Island," Campbell said. "It's a representation of the way things used to be."
Sadly, Campbell will likely leave her sycamore soon. She said she wants to sell her home within a year because "the upkeep is really more than I can keep up with." She will move outside Boston to be closer to her children.

  - “‘Martin Hall’, the James E. Martin Sr. estate designed by Little & O’Connor c. 1900 in Great Neck. Martin was an executive at Standard Oil and had been retired for some time when he was killed on Christmas Eve, 1905 when the car he was in (which was racing his son out to Bayside for lunch with friends) hit a patch of soft road and flipped into a ditch, his head being crushed (he was also the brother of Bradley Martin, father of the B.M. who resided at ‘Knole’ in Old Westbury). Martin’s wife, Florence C. Brokaw, was the sister of Clifford Brokaw who resided at ‘The Elms’ in Glen Cove. Following the death of James Martin, his widow Florence remarried Dr. Preston Pope Satterwhite in 1908. The two continued to reside in ‘Martin Hall’ and Satterwhite hired the Olmsted Brothers to landscape the grounds between 1915-18. Satterwhite remained in the house following the death of Florence in 1927 until a short circuit in the organ caused a large fire in 1932, burning the house to the ground. The estimated damage was $1,500,000. In 1937 William Levitt purchased the estate with plans to build 150 homes on the site, the development to be known as Strathmore-at-Great Neck.”

- Property Name: Charlcote House

Inventory No.: B-4171

Location: 15, Charlcote Place, Baltimore, Baltimore City

Description: Charlcote House is a three-story brick detached Classical Revival dwelling built about 1914-1916 in the Guilford development of Baltimore County (now part of Baltimore City), Maryland. The house is basically rectangular and is set on an east-west axis with the principal entrance in the five-bay north elevation. The entrance is recessed and elaborated by Composite columns in antis. The five-bay south elevation has a central bow element with Composite-capped pilasters and pedimented French doors opening on a terrace. At the east and west ends of the house are enclosed one-story sun porches. The hipped roof is hidden by a plain parapet. The principal rooms are arranged around a T-shaped entry and cross hall paved with marble tiles. The three largest rooms face south and were originally connected enfilade, but the doorway between the drawing room and the library is now closed off. A reception room and office or small library flank the entrance hall and the main staircase rises from the west end of the cross hall. The second floor contains five bedrooms and service rooms. The third floor contains servants' rooms divided by a wall down the central hall to separate white and black employees. The only other structure on the property is a small brick garage directly north of the house. The lot is shield-shaped with its two buildings placed toward the north side and focused south toward the point of the lawn which is enclosed by a brick wall with a wrought iron decorative arc at the south point. The lot contains large trees and groups of shrubbery possibly based on the original landscape plan by the Olmsted Brothers. The house is virtually unaltered since its construction except for minor changes in doorways on the first floor. Its style, size, and setting are eloquent statements of the social and economic status of its original and subsequent owners.

Significance: Charlcote House is one of the two identified domestic buildings in Maryland and the only one in Baltimore entirely designed by John Russell Pope, the nationally prominent architect. Pope is best known for his monumental Neo-Classical work in the early 20th century in Washington, D.C., which helped define a Federal architectural style during the period 1915-1937. His residential designs were also widely recognized for their archeological precision combined with a uniquely American feeling. Charlcote House was designed and built for James Swan Frick just prior to or coinciding with the beginning of Pope's predominantly monumental work. The other known Maryland residential buildings are Woodend, built 1927-1928 in Chevy Chase, a National Register site since 1980, and the 1905 remodeling of the Garrett-Jacobs House (The Engineering Center) at 11 West Mount Vernon Place in Baltimore, also a National Register property. Charlcote House is unique in its suburban setting among the three residences and is one of the relatively few of this type that Pope designed. Charlcote's decorative details were most likely inspired by the library wing at Bowood, Wiltshire, England, where the Composite order was used in the Adam brothers' remodeling. The high quality of design and the setting of the house on a large lot in Guilford mark Charlcote House as an architectural landmark.

That home and estate, completed in 1917, named "The Chimneys," was to become The Muttontown Country Club.

A History of the Houses
The two Italian Renaissance-style buildings that form a part of The Western Reserve Historical Society's University Circle headquarters were both built in the early 20th century as homes for wealthy and influential Clevelanders.

In 1908 Clara Stone Hay, daughter of Amasa Stone and widow of John Hay, engaged Abram Garfield, youngest son of President Garfield, to design a home for her in the Wade Park Allotment. While the house, with terraced courtyard garden and modern conveniences, was completed in 1911, Mrs. Hay never furnished or occupied the house, preferring to return to New York City on the death of her sister, Flora Stone Mather.

After Mrs. Hay's death, the property was acquired in 1916 by Price McKinney, of the McKinney Steel Company. He and his family lived there during the 1920s. In 1938 McKinney's widow, by now Mrs. Corliss Sullivan, sold the house to WRHS, and in 1939 it was opened as the Society's Museum. Today the Hay-McKinney house is furnished as a series of period galleries exhibiting furniture, decorative and fine arts and domestic artifacts from the Society's collections.

Between 1916 and 1919 on the land neighboring the Hay-McKinney property, Harry Payne Bingham built a 35 room house designed by Walker and Gillette, with a landscape by Olmsted Brothers and featuring ironwork by Samuel Yellin and tile pavements by Henry Mercer's Moravian Pottery and Tile Works. Never occupied by the Bingham, who settled in New York, the house was purchased in 1920 by Coralie Walker Hanna, widow of Leonard C. Hanna, who lived there until her death in 1936. In 1940, her son, Leonard C. Hanna, Jr., gave the house to WRHS in return for the Society's building located at Euclid Ave. and E. 107th St.

The WRHS Library moved into the Bingham-Hanna house in 1941. The house has lost the imposing portecochere at the front entrance (demolished for the construction of the CAAM in 1965) and the greenhouse (demolished for the construction of the Norton Central Addition in 1959). Still it retains much that is original, including many of the furnishings in the first-floor rooms open to the public."

"In 1884 Orick Greenleaf, a public-spirited paper manufacturer, began Forest Park with a sixty-five-acre land donation to the city of Springfield (figure 1) [Figure 1: First known map of Forest Park, appearing in the Springfield Sunday Republican, 29 November 1885]. Earlier on 2 May 1871, Samuel Bowles, noted editor of the Springfield Republican and Orick Greenleaf consulted with Frederick Law Olmsted, Sr., about a parkway scheme for the whole city. Additionally, Greenleaf met with Olmsted during his May 2 visit about a private lot for his personal residence (Marston 1986). Beyond a newspaper article entitled "Springfield and how to improve it" in the Springfield Daily Republican, 6 June 1871, there was no further mention of a parkway scheme. However, Olmsted no doubt influenced and perhaps inspired Greenleaf's donation." (citation: Marston, A., 1985, Forest Park: Bibliography and Inventory. Beechwood, Scarborough, NY
  - Beechwood, renowned Hudson River Estate, was created for Mr. Frank and Mrs. Narcissa Vanderlip in Scarborough, New York. Narcissa Vanderlip was also renowned as a prime mover and shaker in the women's suffrage movement in New York State.
The 80-acre (320,000 m2) parkland was designed by Frederick Law Olmsted for the Vanderlips and featured a grove of giant beech, expansive lawns, imported trees from around the world, and an Italianate garden with an alcove, fountain, and small pool wisteria-covered trellises.
At the center of the property sat the eponymous Greek revival mansion that featured two giant porticoed entryways, a two-story octagonal library, numerous porches, verandas, and well over 100 interior rooms. Other major structures included a hunting lodge, a second "Cape Town" style mansion built for daughter Charlotte Vanderlip, a home for Vanderlip's physician, and the Scarborough School, a progressive Montessori method school which the Vanderlips established on the perimeter of their property in 1913. The Beechwood Estate also contained a carriage house, gate-house, squash court (no longer extant), and an artist's studio—named Beech Twig—that had once been home to author John Cheever, whose children attended the school. Descriptions of the building's interior closely match descriptions employed by Cheever in some short stories.
Novelist Richard Yates also lived in the same house as a child, as well as other artists, writers, and composers. The estate also served as a backdrop to a Merchant Ivory film made in 1972, entitled Savages as well as to the 1970 film "House of Dark Shadows".
In 1979, the remaining Vanderlip descendants sold parts of the property to real estate developers. The main mansion and several other buildings were restored and a series of cluster condominiums were built on the estate's great lawns and former orchards.

  - Scarborough Historic District
Beechwood is an architecturally significant estate with a rich history. During the early nineteenth century, the estate was the property of a Benjamin Folger, who became a disciple of a man called variously "Matthias the Prophet" and "Matthias the Imposter." Matthias, claiming to be the "Angel of Revelation," lived in Folger's house for two years, 1833-34. He called the residence Mt. Zion and drove around the countryside in a chariot drawn by four horses, proclaiming his particular version of the gospel.[20] Having bankrupted Folger, and after apparently trying to murder Folger and his family, Matthias was tried in White Plains in 1835 for the murder of another disciple. Acquitted because of lack of evidence, Matthias left Westchester soon after the trial.[21]
The estate was purchased in 1895 by Walter Webb, a vice-president of the New York Central Railroad. Webb, related by marriage to one of Dr. Creighton's daughters, enlarged the original late eighteenth century structure and gave it the name "Beechwood." [22] The architect commissioned by Webb was Robert H. Robertson.[23]
Frank A. Vanderlip bought Beechwood, including twenty-three acres of land, in 1906. He acquired more land, bringing the total acreage to 125, and commissioned William Welles Bosworth to landscape the spacious grounds. Landscape-enhancing components of Bosworth's original plan, still in place at Beechwood, include swimming and reflecting pools, formal gardens, a tempietto, the pergola and a tea house. Vanderlip also commissioned Bosworth to expand the large frame residence to the north with the addition of a luxuriously appointed Neoclassical library with a sky-lit octagonal ante-room.

- “LA Paz: One of the grand Hudson River homes built in the early 20th century, this architectural treasure was designed by Bertram Goodhue, the renowned architect of choice for the nation's business and social elite of the period. Crafted of glittering stone, the artistry and craftsmanship of the original home has been masterfully restored and improved upon with the latest modern amenities. Spectacular view-filled formal rooms, a sleek modern kitchen, artfully-designed bath and a classical loggia overlooking the river count among the many special highlights of this distinctive home, which also shares the grounds with a detached garage. This home is within walking distance of the train station and less than an hour's drive from Manhattan. The current taxes grieved by the seller are based on a 5.4 fair market value.”

  - 1801 Chestnut Hills Drive The Bicknell Mansion
In 1920 when this Meade and Hamilton mansion was completed, a reviewer in a contemporary architectural magazine spoke of the tendency in modern residences to emphasize a home-like atmosphere, looking for comfort and avoiding the theatrical. "The home of Mr. Warren Bicknell," wrote I. T Frary, "illustrates this tendency. It is commodious, to meet the requirements of a man of affairs. It is dignified, as befits his social standing. It is undoubtedly costly, yet is restrained and decorous, and is withal a comfortable place in which to live." And so it is today, when it incorporates seven spacious apartments for senior living as part of the Judson Retirement Community.
During the twenties and beyond, the house was the scene of a lively social group, often centering on the elegant third-floor ballroom. Interestingly enough, a "secret" staircase led from one corner of the living room to the master bedroom above and the wine cellar and billiard room below, perhaps an escape route from the numerous festivities. In 1939 the property was converted to a home for "worthy aged ladies, preferably Baptist, where they can spend their declining years as members of a happy family with gracious living and pleasant surroundings." According to the permit issued by the City of Cleveland Heights, changes included such items as putting a permanent partition through the center of one large room, cutting a door into the hallway from a bathroom that connected two bedrooms, and taking all of the cupboards out of the linen room to convert it to a single room. Thirty-four years later, the Baptist Home began operating as Judson Park in newly constructed facilities on the property.

  - "The Watchung Hills Elks Club was organized in 1961 with 109 members, according to Bryan. Two years ago it took possession of its newly-purchased grounds which front on Mountain Boulevard, almost adjacent to the Warren Township Borough Hall.
"We selected this spot because it possessed the long-forgotten grotto along with two beautiful ponds that were part of the entire setting," explained Bryan. "For our club house we utilized a building already on the property."
The club's acreage is on the former Nathan Hofheimer Estate, once a New Jersey showplace covering hundreds of acres. Hofheimer was one of the original founders of General Motors Corp. and at that time had already made a financial success in the [automobile] electric light bulb industry.
The original Hofheimer home is presently the township hall. On other parts of the former estate are a supermarket, some homes, the Warrenbrook County Club and a nursery. Until development came along, the estate, with its once beautiful well-kept grounds including a private golf course, had fallen into an almost primitive state. The grotto itself was built by help imported from overseas. It is reportedly a replica of a German grotto." <http://www.warrennj.org/wths/grotto.htm>

- Recent History of The Cuvilly Arts & Earth Center Land
  - 1906 Charles P. Searle commissions the building of a renaissance revival Italian-style villa on what may have been known as “Monstone Farm.” The house served as his summer home. According to the 1919 town records, the Searles “removed” themselves from Ipswich in that year. In the book, Images of America, author William Varnell writes that the Searles referred to the villa as “Ingisby” and that following the death of their son, it was purchased by historian Bayard Tuckerman.
  - 1920 The published “Valuation and Assessment of Taxes for the Town of Ipswich for the Year 1920” lists Isaac R. Thomas and his wife Gertrude of Boston as the new owner of the parcel. The Thomas family is listed as owning property on Jeffrey’s Neck at least as far back as 1897. Included in the 1920 assessment are several residences, several barns, an ice house, a piggery, various outbuildings and sheds, upland, marshland and 4.75 acres of Mosley land on Spring St. An interesting note is that the Thomas and Mosely families – neighbors in Ipswich – also shared the 300 block of Commonwealth Avenue in Boston for a time.
  - 1929 During the Depression Isaac R. Thomas is forced to lessen his tax burden and orders many of the farm buildings destroyed. One deed covering the years 1929-1947 lists the Perley family as owning

- part of this land. There were Perleys residing in Ipswich at the time. Carrie S. Perley was an unmarried vocal music instructor for a church in Newburyport. David Sydney Perley and family were cattle dealers listed as residents of Linebrook Road. A 1919 advertisement for the Perley's business boasts "Milk Cows a Specialty." It's reasonable to consider that the Perley family acquired part of the Thomas property, especially if the latter family was suffering because of the Depression.
- 1947 F. Murray Forbes, Jr., conservator for Gertrude F. Thomas, sells the property for $39,000 to Raymond Massey of New York City. By most accounts, the noted actor and his wife never actually lived on the farm or at the villa.
  - 1948 Barclay Warburton III, the stepson of William Vanderbilt II, purchases the property from Raymond Massey of New York City. Warburton christens it "Seracen Farm" and greatly increases farming activities. It was in this period that "the cow barn," the building that houses most of Cuvilly's programs, was built. Warburton was not only a gentleman farmer, but was also elected as a state representative.
  - 1959 The Congregation of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur purchases the property to build their Ipswich Novitiate. The building is completed and dedicated on July 4, 1961.
  - 1961 Notre Dame Training School, Inc., sells "all interest on S.E. East Street, near Agawam Avenue" to the town of Ipswich as part of a "lot lines adjustment."
  - 1983 Cuvilly Arts & Earth Center founded at the base of The Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur property, 10 Jeffrey's Neck Rd. (once known as East Street), Ipswich, Mass.

  - The Village Condominiums- formerly "Fairfield Gardens"
If you've ever travelled down Belmont Street you have seen them but probably don't know the story behind The Village Condominiums. Located in "West" Watertown, the 308 units are located on Belmont Street, Lexington Street, Grant Avenue, Pierce Road and Duff Street. Belmont is located just north of the property and Waltham is nearby to the west. The Village is a popular destination for first time home buyers searching for a unit which feels more like a single family home than some of the other units in this price range in Watertown.
These units have an interesting history. Originally built in 1945 by Paul Livoli, Fairfield Gardens, as it was know was touted as the largest privately owned Veteran's Rental Project in New England. The development consists of twenty-six buildings containing the 308 garden type family apartments spread over 18 acres of land. A description from the original brochure described the units as modern with an up to date kitchen featuring inlaid linoleum floors, a metal cabinet type sink, and metal kitchen cabinets. Lattice fences enclosed the drying yards (laundry) and the parking areas were illuminated by gas lanterns. In my early years in the business, I remember customers referring to the development as the "Gas Lamp Village". These gas lamps have since been replaced by electric ones. Veterans were given the first opportunity to rent the units and they were held aside for 30 days before being offered to the general public. The monthly rent was a whopping $85.00 and tenants paid their own heat and electricity bills. A $50 deposit and a $2 service charge were required with each application.

The complex was eventually purchased by Norman Duffy, Robert Duffy, and James Duffy and I have an original Fairfield Gardens, Inc. brochure with a notation written in pencil that says "being offered for $2,325,000." In 1973 the Duffy brothers converted the units to condominiums in three phases. Original selling prices were in the $17,500 range and options included an updated kitchen, central air conditioning and a finished basement.

The property was improved with an in ground pool and there is a resident's clubhouse which is accessed off Pierce Road. The units have stood the test of time. The exterior brick is still in excellent condition, many of the units still have the original tile bathrooms, and every once in a while we run across a unit with the original heating systems still functioning. Other changes have been made over the years with updating of windows and the addition of enclosed patios.

Finding Aid for Alice and Jessie Bourquin Papers, 1905-1991
"Twins Alice and Jessie Bourquin were born in Muskegon, Michigan in 1909. Their father James, president of Continental Motors, moved the family to Grosse Pointe the next year. At his death in 1923 the Bourquins moved to Hillwood, the family property in Ann Arbor which had been used on week-ends and vacations. Alice and Jessie attended the University of Michigan, taking classes in languages, the arts, and literature while earning teaching certificates in French. A course in landscape design taught by Aubrey Tealdi appealed to their love of art and nature, inspiring them to take city planning courses at the Sorbonne in Paris after graduation and to earn master's degrees in landscape design from the University of Michigan in 1934.
They began a private landscape design practice in Ann Arbor that same year, but found clients scarce due to the Depression. Beginning in 1935 Alice went to work for the State Highway Department in Lansing. The first woman landscape architect hired by the highway department, she did not let minority status deter her, but went on to a 39-year career which involved assisting in the design of most of the 103 roadside parks on the Michigan state highway system. Jessie Bourquin carried on the landscape design practice alone for five years, then joined her sister in Lansing, where she went to work for the Michigan Department of Commerce as an economic research analyst. The Bourquins lived together in Lansing, retired together in 1974, and returned to the family property in Ann Arbor.
Beginning in the 1930s the sisters and their brother James had begun to subdivide and develop the family acreage on Geddes Avenue near the Arboretum. By the 1960s four subdivisions, Hillwood I-IV, had been constructed. After their retirement the Bourquins began the last phase of development on 25 hilly, wooded acres, maintaining the strict building and use restrictions which had served to preserve privacy and natural beauty throughout the property. All Hillwood residents become members of the nonprofit Hillwood Community Preserve Association, and all building exteriors, siting, and tree-cutting had to be approved by the Bourquins.
For their 80th birthdays the American Society of Landscape Architects sponsored a party for the Bourquin sisters, who also received certificates of appreciation from Governor James Blanchard and the Michigan

House and Senate. They continued to live on Hillwood into the 1990s in their 1985-designed "dream house."

Beyond their professional lives, the twins enjoyed traveling around the United States and Europe. Neither sister ever married. Alice passed away in 1995 with Jessie following in 1999."

- Long Description:
A nearby historical marker says:
"The Geddes Dam was rebuilt in a major construction project, and this hydroelectric dam operated from 1915-1959. It is no longer extant. The noted landscape architecture firm of Frederick Law Olmstead [sic] was commissioned to design naturalistic landscapes for large tracts of the companies [sic] land. Farmland, formerly belonging to Robert Geddes was developed for recreational use by Detroit Edison employees. Vivienne Farms was a spacious weekend vacation center for its female employees. The substation property was sold to the city of Ann Arbor."

  - "Abstract: The Arleigh C. Hitchcock Homestyle Center Collection is a devised reference collection which contains articles, images and documents of the 1950's proposed Homestyle Center Project for Grand Rapids, Michigan. The collection is named for Arleigh (Bud) C. Hitchcock, who was a 1949 graduate of the University of Michigan architecture program. The project, as originally conceived by Jason L. Honigman of Market Realty Company, Detroit, was to construct demonstration houses created by notable living architects of the time. The houses were to be furnished with modern or traditional furniture and appliances, matched together as a complete interior design, appropriate to each house. The houses and their contents were considered to constitute a changing 'showroom' with the idea that even the houses could be replaced as new styles and models were explored. Hitchcock was hired by Honigman around 1954 as the Executive Director of the parent organization, the Home Research Foundation. His initial tasks were to conduct 'needs' surveys. This was followed by a nationwide promotion tour of the project. Ultimately, the failure to find the necessary financial backing caused the Homestyle Center to close their office and operations in 1957, before any construction was started. The site planned at that time for the project buildings is now the site of Frederik Meijer Gardens and Sculpture Park. The architects listed in the Prospectus for the project included: Kazumi Adachi; John E. Dinwiddle..." Title: History of Milan, Michigan
Date: Essay presented to Milan Woman's Club, May 9, 1939.
"On the south side of West Main Street stood a small one story three room house painted yellow that was the Freeman Wilcox home. This house stood in a large apple orchard where the Stevens and Bush funeral home now stands. [NOTE: the funeral home is located at 218 E. Main. Mrs. Delaforce meant to say "East" Main Street.] In the summer of 1869 Mr. Freeman Wilcox built the large square house now owned by the F. M. Miller family, which was the only house standing on Main Street east of what is now the village Water Works Park, which was then owned and occupied by Thomas Richards, who drove stage and carried the mail from Monroe to Saline. This old house stood on the same foundation as the present home of Mrs. J. L. Marble and was fenced in with a black walnut picket fence. These grounds included all the west half of the Water Works Park, the Marble Home, the Methodist Church, and Dr. Noble's home, and was then a thrifty bearing apple orchard."

- "Tom Lamont's guests disembarked at his private dock and walked up the gentle slop to "Sky Farm", where the three-winged yellow clapboard farmhouse overlooked the bay and the Camden Hills,. The house gave the impression that it had ramblled into its current configuration over time, but in fact, a small original farmhouse had been relocated on the hill and sited by Frederick law olmsted, the designer oCentral park, and the wings were added later. Olmsted laid out the grounds to retain the sense of a farm, which it still was: to provision the Lamont larders there were thirty sheep, one hundred chickens, six cows, and extensive vegetable gardens."

- The Blue Bowl: a novel, George Minot, Alfred A. Knopf, Mar 30, 2004 - Fiction - 373 pages
A haunting debut novel about a psychically shattered patrician New England family and one of its sons, implicated in the mysterious death of his alcoholic father. The time is the 1990s. Simon Curtis, in his mid-thirties, is a painter ? a yearning, troubled loner still burdened with the unfinished business of childhood. He seeks refuge for the summer in his family's house in Maine, and then, for the fall, in their place in Massachusetts ? despite his father's insistence that he is not welcome. Simon hides out in his old room, sneaking around unobserved, and secretly watches his father ? a remote, eloquent alcoholic who has never seriously noticed him to begin with, and whom Simon blames for everything, including his mother's death. When his father is found dead, Simon is thrust into the center of a news-making trial, under the spotlight in a mad media circus. Instead of despairing, he responds as if life has never been better. In the past, he has always been alone, floating in the curious dimension of his art. Now everyone is paying attention to him. Now his life is happening, on a surprising and grand stage. As the narrative deepens ? infusing Simon's tenuous grasp of present-day reality with his disconnected distress and the lost idyll of his boyhood ? Minot creates a gripping portrait of the disaffected child-man brought face-to-face with the dreamworld of his past and the frightening reality of the present.

  - "In late 1864, the same year the first Ocean House burned down (see below), Stephen H. Wardell commenced the building of the initial portion of the Lincoln House at the western end of Fising Point (also known as Lincoln Point), commanding superb ocean views in three directions. Completed in the summer of 1865, this imposing structure entered a period of fifty years of Wardell family ownership, Stephen W. and Robert B. Wardell, the sons of the founder, succeeding their father as owner-managers. Named in honor of President Abraham Lincoln, the new hostelry at first was an unassuming three-story wood-frame building with a flat roof accommodating 75 people. Actively patronized from the onset, the Lincoln was remodeled and enlarged circa 1870, including an additional story covered by a flat, concave mansard roof. Further expansion from 1894 to 1895 increased the capacity, including cottages, to 200 guests, resulting in a two-section edifice (figs. 5-4 and 5-5) encircled by verandas and capped in entirety by the circa 1870 mansard roof form, surmounted by square cupolas and, at the center of the building mass, by a tall, square tower of Queen Anne-style, "Florentine" pretensions. Promoted in hotel literature of the day were a spacious new dining room, mechanical elevator and remodeled office (fig. 5-6), "handsome in finish, cool, secluded, delightful as a retreat." Passing to brothers Charles H. and Roy F. Bergengren of Lynn around 1915, the Lincoln became outmoded, its fortunes declined during the World War I years, and it was razed during the summer of 1918 to be replaced by privately owned cottages. - Inisfada Nicholas Brady estate, built 1916-Designed in the Tudor/Elizabethan style by John Windrim for businessman Nicholas Brady and his wife Genevieve. "Inisfada" is Gaelic for Long Island. An interesting feature of the mansion is the exterior details. Among them, representations of the Zodiac signs, and various nursery rhymes carved out of limestone. After Mr. Brady's death, Mrs. Brady donated the mansion to the Jesuits in 1937.
Today the mansion is used as the St. Ignatius Retreat House, and welcomes visitors.

<http://ligoldcoast.com/liprivate.html>

- "It's celtic name, Inisfada, in Gaelic, means Long Island. Nicholas and Genevieve Brady built the 87 room mansion between 1916-20 as a summer home. As you drive through its iron gates off Searingtown Road, a strong white figure of Christ greets you with open arms. You have now left the turbulent world and Long Island Expressway for the bucolic surroundings of pine, linden, oak, maple trees and one lone American Weeping Beech, God's own work of art. Thirty-three acres of rolling lawns, shrubs and flowers, a tea garden and reflecting pool soon define your new ambience. Enter with expectation.

Almost immediately a medieval like castle looks down upon you, a tall tower with slated roofs and embattlements. It once was the fourth largest mansion in 1920 and holds what is the most beautiful small chapel in the country, St. Genevieve, on the second floor. Meanwhile thirteen sculptured fairy tales don the outside walls around the Tudor Elizabethan mansion beginning with little red riding hood and the big bad wolf. Ancient but attractive gargoyles, angels, drones and clowns as well as many small animals peer at you from above under eaves and corners.. Even within its walls such creatures and foliage are replicated on ceilings and over fireplaces. A visitor once remarked with reverence, “This is a place with soul.”

St. Genevieve Chapel

After the death of her husband, Genevieve donated Inisfada in 1937 to the New York Province of the Society of Jesus, the Jesuits. By 1963 Fr. John Magan, S.J. converted it into a retreat house. What was formerly a summer refuge for the wealthy eventually became a spiritual oasis for all. The long paned windows on the southern exposure of the main chapel, once the living room, gently filters in the daylight of each season upon the altar and pews to enhance your quiet.”

By the early 1900s the Delaware County landscape was a pastoral array of farmsteads with agricultural fields and pastures separated by hedgerows. Only slopes and a few scattered woodlots retained native forest cover. Samuel Riddle bought up many of the farms and gave them to his niece as a wedding present when she married Walter Jeffords. The Jeffords created their Hunting Hill estate between 1914 and 1924 on land that is now occupied by the park. Landscaped grounds replaced some of the farm fields; others were used to raise cattle and thoroughbred race horses. Still other areas were planted with conifers or allowed to undergo secondary succession."   - "But the Tuckers had the greatest estate of all in the Bedford area. Threequarters of a century ago, Carll and Marcia Tucker bought all the land enclosed by three roads-something like five hundred acres-and hired Frederick Law Olmsted's architectural firm to design an estate for them. The designers called upon the Tudor, Norman, Gothic, Romanesque, and several other styles to give the Tuckers Penwood-a group of weighty stone structures whose last detail, whose every crenellation and machicolation would evoke the best traditions of European culture.

Carll Tucker's family had published a magazine called The Country Gentleman, and he was himself what was known as a gentleman of leisure. His wife was Marcia Brady, whose father, Anthony Brady, was one of Thomas Edison's business partners, and left at his death one of the largest personal fortunes that had ever been accumulated. It was divided nine ways. Tucker managed his wife's money very well. Besides Pen wood, they had residences on Park Avenue and at Hobe Sound, and a huge schooner called Migrant, which was one of the largest private vessels afloat until it was commandeered by the Navy in the Second World War.
Carll died a number of years ago, and Marcia died in 1976, in her nineties. The main house at Penwood has been closed and empty for about twelve years. The Tuckers' son Carll, Jr., became active in local affairs around Mount Kisco, founding a newspaper called the Patent Trader. Near Pen wood, he built an enormous French chateau, on the scale of the mansions of the teens and the twenties, but the year it was finished, 1968, he died of a heart attack, at the age of forty-six. His son Carll III used to invite me to play squash in the court at Pen wood until he moved into the city, where he is now the chairman and editor of the Saturday Review. The Tuckers are one of the few intact dynasties in Westchester, and their status is eclipsed only by that of the Rockefellers of Pocantico Hills.

Several years ago, young Carll commissioned the architect Robert Venturi to build him a new house. The Tucker house, as it is already being called, looks very much like a large birdhouse. According to the architectural historian Vincent Scully, it represents "the ultimate reaction to Frank Lloyd Wright, the reassertion of the vertical." Now that most of the level ground in Westchester has been spoken for, we are probably going to see a lot of vertical housing on the slopes-woodland dwellings with the upper story in the canopy of the forest-of which the Tucker house will be a classic example.

Shortly after the house was ready, I found Carll at home. Outside, two men with shovels were talking to each other in Italian while putting the finishing touches on what would be the front lawn. Inside, Carll was supervising the hanging of his pictures. Most of them were old prints of European landscapes, and there was an Elizabethan portrait in the dining room, where we sat and talked for a while about growing up at Penwood and what the move to a newer and smaller Tucker house represented. "Properties are smaller," he declared. "Wealth has become anonymous. When I was growing up, everybody knew my name. All the shop people. It's no longer the case, which is fine by me. We lived on such a huge place, far away from everybody.. I was alone but had lots to do. Horses and dogs were my playmates. I grew up in an adult world, surrounded by grooms and maids. At Yale, I was never much of a hail-fellow-well-met. I was clumsy socially, and didn't know how to deal with my contemporaries until they became adults themselves. My way of keeping up the family tradition was to be an achiever-writer, musician, top of the class. My father chose to start a newspaper in the town where he had grown up, which was some kind of masochism. He wanted to prove himself not one of the idle rich. Make it in your own back yard. Go to people you had regarded as servants and ask for their advertising."

Carll went into the bedroom and changed into his whites. He was off to the country club. "Tennis is an important part of my life," he said. "I try to play some racquet sport as often as I can."

A few months later, I met Carll at Penwood. He had become engaged, and his fiancée was as curious as I to see the inside of the main house. I had been only in the squash building and the greenhouse, the three long wings of which were maintained by a family of Italians who had kept Carll's grandmother supplied with flowers throughout the year. The main house had been built between 1912 and 1920, with an interruption while the First World War was being fought. Sicilian stonemasons had been imported for the job. "The inner courtyard is Tudor, the outer part is Romanesque, and the inside is Gothic," Carll said. The kitchen took up several rooms, in which only the great cast-iron ranges, with their metal hoods, and the long zinc sinks remained. In the dining room were a magnificent Delft fireplace and a dozen or so high-backed chairs with the Tucker crest (a lion's paw holding up the motto "Nil Desperandum"). Baroque Italian frescoes showing pastoral maidens and shepherds romping in a misty hillscape panelled the walls. Our footsteps echoed down the long dark corridor of a hallway lined with stone arches that might have come from some Gothic cathedral. "The house isn't known for its lightness," Carll said as we felt our way into the study. Several shelves were still filled with leatherbound sets of Thackeray and George Eliot. Twelve servants had been attached to the house. They were quartered over the kitchen, in small rooms whose size depended on the servant's importance. The butler had been given the biggest one." from "Profiles: Westchester County: New Yorker, November 13, 1978"

- "In the 1920's, [Ellen Biddle] Shipman's projects grew in size and architectural complexity. Typical was Penwood, the estate of Carll Tucker, in Mount Kisco, begun in 1926. Shipman's design featured Italianate forms, including a massive pergola, realized in an Arts and Crafts style. (fig 5.12) There were also charming details. An error in measurement for the plumbing of a small pool resulted in a stepped, flagstone coping that provided opportunities for bits of varied plantings. Shipman repeated the distinctive pool treatment in several other projects, including her own garden, Brook Place, in Plainfield." p.123-124, A genius for place: American landscapes of the country place era By Robin S. - “Presidents of the National Association of REALTORS® - 1927 - Clarence C. Hieatt
In a convention that went on record urging increased study of taxation affecting real estate "as one of the most valuable contributions that the Realtors of America can make in the interests of property owners whom they seek to serve," the National Association of Real Estate Boards chose for its 1927 president the man most actively identified with its whole work for tax adjustments. Clarence C. Hieatt had been chairman of the Association's committee on taxation since 1924. As such he prepared the report adopted by the Association in 1925 and its general program for federal, state and local tax action and the more detailed program for state and local tax readjustment adopted by the Association in 1926. He also served as a member of the taxation committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce.
As age six, young Hieatt formed a partnership with his brother, aged nine, to sell newspapers on the Louisville streets. The newsboy later studied law at the University of Louisville and became a member of the law firm of Hieatt, Scheirich and Marshall, Louisville. Continuing the practice of law, he entered the real estate business partnership with his brother. The firm of Hieatt Brothers, of which he was president, dated from 1899. His other companies included the Hieatt Insurance Company and the Mercantile Realty Company. He was developer of more than thirty subdivisions.
Mr. Hieatt was a curator of Transylvania University, served on the Louisville city planning and zoning committee and on its Board of Trade, and was president of the Louisville Real Estate Board. He was chairman of a committee of architects, engineers, contractors, manufacturers, distributors and consumers which prepared a report for consumers' protection on grade marking of lumber for the U. S. Department of Commerce.
It was under Mr. Hieatt's presidency that the National Association of Real Estate Boards created its States Council, a machinery through which the experiences of the various states were drawn upon as the basis of action by the Association.”

  - “Peterson-Dumesnil House
301 S. Peterson Ave., Louisville, KY, 40206
Located in Crescent Hill, the house possesses a memorable history of service beginning with eight decades of ownership and use by one family. The asymmetrical Italian villa has been attributed to Henry Whiteston, a well-known Louisville architect, whose other works include several major buildings on Main Street. The ceilings in the house are 14 feet tall.
The house was built in 1869 as a summer home for Joseph Peterson, a prominent tobacco trader. He died in 1889, leaving the property to his granddaughters, Eliza and Carrie Lindenberger. Eliza married Harry Dumesnil, Carrie married Edward Rowland and they lived in the house with their families. Mrs. Dumesnil lived there until she died in 1948.
After Mrs. Dumesnil's death, the house and grounds were sold to the Louisville Board of Education. In the mid 50's, it became a teachers club, the only one of its kind in the country. In 1976, the house achieved local landmark status, which protects it from exterior change without approval of the Louisville Landmark Commission. In 1977, the Crescent Hill Community Council leased the house and made it available to groups on a rental basis. In 1982, when the Board of Education declared the property as surplus, the house, carriage house and 1.3 acres were sold to the newly formed, non-profit Peterson-Dumesnil House Foundation. All rental proceeds are used to steadily improve the house and grounds.”

- History: The St. Matthews Branch library has been a proud member of its community for over forty years. After being in temporary quarters over a bank along Shelbyville Rd. and later in a home on Brown Ave., the library moved to Church Way in 1958. The Eline family donated the land behind the St. Matthews Methodist Church as a memorial to Sidney Eline, Jr. who had been killed in the Second World War. The City of St. Matthews erected a modern ranch-style facility on that site and it quickly became a focal point of the neighborhood.

The brisk activity of the Sidney Eline Memorial Library prompted two expansions of the Church Way facility. In 1993 the City of St. Matthews acquired a 3-story brick building on Grandview Ave. that had formerly been the Futural Federal Savings and Loan and prior to that the Greathouse Elementary School. A million-dollar remodeling project by the City of St. Matthews resulted in a unified City Hall building housing the Clerk's Office, Police Department, Beargrass-St. Matthews Historical Society and the library. Because of the generosity of Mayor Art Draut and the City Council, the library was re-named as the St. Matthews/Eline Branch and moved into its new home on April 11, 1994.

"Location
The property is located at 2114-2116 Edgehill Road in the Highlands-Douglass area of Louisville and consists of 1.05 acres. It is bordered on the north and east by private homes located along Edgehill Road and Dorothy Avenue and it is bordered by Edgehill Road to the west and Walnut Place to the south.
History.
The land that now includes the Dean-Bishop property was first surveyed for Richard Charlton and James Southland. They were given 6000 acres of land in 1774 by Thomas Jefferson who was the Governor of Virginia. Kentucky during this time was still a part of Virginia. Upon the death of Richard Charlton, James Southland was bequeathed all of the land. Southland sold part of the land to John M. Galt and another part was given to the family of Charlton. Southland ended up with 4,386 acres. Upon Southland's death, he willed his estate to his three sons, James Jr., George, and Peyton. Each son received 1/3 of the property. In 1810, 2,690 acres were sold to David Ward, John Speed, and William Pope, Jr. Part of the land included in the sale included George and Peyton's portions of the land as well as other family members' portions. This left 1,696 acres of land to be divided amongst the remaining heirs of the Southland family.
In 1838 Pope sold 101 acres to Judge John McKinley. The McKinley family continued to own the property until it was sold in 1850 to William Glover. In 1865 the property was sold to Andrew B. Dean, a tobacco merchant who built the house that is currently on the property. In 1880 the property was acquired by Jacob Krieger and subsequently sold in 1892 to Harry Bishop. The property was owned by the Bishop heirs until 1920 when it was acquired by William F. Randolph, who developed the Lauderdale Subdivision. The parcel on which the Dean-Bishop House is located was acquired by J. Wallace and Barbara Van Cleave in 1956 and it is still owned by the Van Cleave family."

o McKinley's Palace

One of West Virginia's most famous and elegant mansions is Willow Glen, known in the Wheeling area as McKinley's Palace. Requiring six years to build (1914–20), the mansion was the gift of Johnson Camden McKinley to his new bride, Agra Bennett McKinley.

Born in Parkersburg, McKinley came to Wheeling in 1893, and by 1908 had become a millionaire coal operator. He was named for his uncle, the industrialist and U.S. senator, Johnson Newlon Camden. His young wife, a member of Weston's distinguished Bennett family, had on her 18th birthday been presented at the court of King George V and Queen Mary of England.

Built of locally quarried sandstone, Willow Glen featured a grand salon where more than 300 guests danced to the music of Fred Waring at the mansion's completion in 1920. In addition to the ballroom, Willow Glen had 11 bedrooms, eight baths, a formal dining room, a library, a billiards room, and, in the basement, a mine that provided coal for the furnace. The mansion was furnished with treasures from the McKinleys' extensive travels, each room containing some unique art object or item of furniture, such as a bed once owned by Benjamin Franklin. Many of the stained glass windows and other interior features, such as lighting and metal fixtures, were especially designed for the home by Tiffany Studios.

Designed by Pennsylvania architect Fred Dempwolf, the house was added to the National Register of Historic Places in 1983. Willow Glen is still privately owned and occupied, with its 1920s grandeur intact.

In reference to Havemeyer Bay Shore property -

The original house on the property was named Olympic Point. Harrie T. Lindeberg designed the modified Cotswold-style house (1917-1919) for Harry's father Horace Havemeyer, Sr. The estate's farm complex was designed by Alfred Hopkins and the landscaping was designed by Olmsted. The house was demolished by Harry's father in 1948. Horace then built a smaller colonial-style house on the property for the family. The colonial house still exists and is owned by Harry. In 1960 Harry built a 20th century contemporary house on the property for his family. It was designed by Frances Day Rogers of Rogers and Butler. The farm complex no longer exists.

Published: February 26, 2009 8:13 PM By KRISTIN TAVEIRA
The story of Sycamore Lodge was interesting enough to Catherine Fahnestock to write a 1964 book about the Roslyn Harbor estate: Owners included Richard Storrs Willis, who composed the melody for "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," and Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces during World War I, says listing agent Mollie Grossman of the Roslyn office of Prudential Douglas Elliman Real Estate.
Grossman says the most recent owners of the 1862 property - orthopedic surgeon and New York Jets team doctor Kenneth Montgomery and his wife, Leslie Montgomery, a breast surgeon - are following the NFL team and moving to New Jersey.

Grossman describes the architecture as "kind of rare. It's called a Gothic Victorian." The six-bedroom, 5 1/2-bathroom home features a five-car garage, wraparound verandas, a remodeled guest house and a boathouse. The property includes 300 feet of waterfront on Roslyn Harbor.

Grossman is listing the property with Sue Botticelli and Donna Ferrara for an asking price range of $2,999,999 to $3,499,999. Annual taxes are $49,587.

It became Mellon Park in the 1940s. In 1999 when the project team began the Mellon Park Preservation & Management Plan, recent vandalism had raised an alarm and the former estate landscape showed serious decline. The planning process recommended a detailed rehabilitation treatment that responded to daily and event uses. The presence of Phipps Garden Place and the Pittsburgh Arts Center in Mellon Park, degraded conditions, park user needs, maintainability issues and local foundation interest all directed to landscape renewal. Phased recapture addressed circulation, perimeter control, tree care and specific garden areas. An important component of the planning project was a park management structure and strategy investigation. Heritage Landscapes conducted research on current Mellon Park management and several park management organizations. An expert panel from Prospect Park, Brooklyn NY and the Louisville Olmsted Parks Conservancy assessed findings addressing organization, operations, services, and facilities of Mellon Park. Using case study models from Central and Prospect Parks, Hartford Riverfront Recapture, Louisville Olmsted Parks, Louisville Waterfront Park, and Boston Commons, the team identified areas of strengths and weaknesses of the current management structure and operational procedures. A multi-day work session with experts, stakeholders and city staff, partnership and management strategies for Mellon Park were explored. One related outcome was a shift in DPW organization with a dedicated park crew for the district.

- “Brief History of the Pittsburgh Center for the Arts

Welcome to Pittsburgh Center for the Arts. This is a brief overview of the history of Pittsburgh Center for the Arts. For the industrialists in the early 1900’s, a major living area was Pittsburgh’s East End, where a building boom was underway. A parade of mansions were commissioned along Fifth Avenue to what became known as “Millionaires Row” for some of the wealthiest and most celebrated families in Pittsburgh, such as the Mellons, the Benedums, and the Fricks.

In 1909, one of the most impressive mansions built was the 65-room Richard Beatty Mellon House on the 11 acres of land bordering Fifth Avenue, Shady Avenue and Beechwood Boulevard or what is now known as Mellon Park. Richard Beatty Mellon and his wife Jennie King Mellon raised two children, Sara Cordelia King Mellon and Richard King Mellon. Jennie King Mellon had a love for flowers, and had two very large flower gardens facing Beechwood Boulevard, which still exist in Mellon Park today. Next to the mansion was a garage and carriage house, which housed servants on the second floor. This carriage house was donated to the City and is now the Phipps Garden Center. The 65-room mansion was torn down in 1941. In 1904, there was another earlier Tudor revival mansion built on the Mellon Estate. It was given as a wedding gift in 1927 to Richard Beatty’s daughter Sarah, who married Alan Magee Scaife, fifth generation industrialist and Mellon National Bank Director. In February 1946, the Scaife’s also donated their home and property to the City. This mansion is now the Scaife Building that houses art classes at Pittsburgh Center for the Arts.

Next door to the Mellon Estate, on the corner of Fifth and Shady Avenues, Charles D. Marshall, president and co-owner of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Company, which later became Bethlehem Steel, built the Marshall mansion. It was completed in 1912. It was an impressive formal 17th-Century Carolean-inspired building. In 1943 Charles Marshall donated the Marshall mansion to the City. The City was only responsible for the exterior maintenance. In 1945, the Marshall mansion became the Arts and Crafts Center of Pittsburgh. In 1980, the name was changed, again, to what is presently known as Pittsburgh Center for the Arts. Effective January 1, 2006, Pittsburgh Center for the Arts officially merged with Pittsburgh Filmmakers.” http://pittsburgharts.org/sites/pdf/pca\_rentals.pdf

- Shadyside Campus

Chatham’s urban Shadyside Campus is located minutes from downtown Pittsburgh and is comprised of the original Woodland Road campus and the new Chatham Eastside.

The Woodland Road location is the University’s foundation, and features many stately mansions which now serve as academic and residence halls. The campus architecture includes historic structures – such as the c.1861 Howe-Childs Gate House – and modern amenities, including the Science Complex and the Athletic and Fitness Center.

With elements designed for the original Andrew Mellon estate by the renowned Olmsted Brothers, the Chatham University campus is one of the most idyllic locations in the City of Pittsburgh.

[showing "Erdenheim", Geo. Widener estate]

- [Fitz Eugene Dixon Jr.] was the son of banker Fitz Eugene Dixon, Sr. and his wife Eleanor Widener, a member of the wealthy Philadelphia Widener family. His grandfather, George D. Widener, and uncle, Harry Elkins Widener, had both died in the 1912 sinking of the RMS Titanic. The Dixons built "Ronaele Manor" ("Eleanor" spelled backward), an Elizabethan mansion in Elkins Park, Pennsylvania, where Fitz Jr. grew up.

Fitz Jr. graduated from Philadelphia's Episcopal Academy, then Harvard University, after which he returned to Episcopal to teach English, French, and Health; he also coached the school's squash, tennis, and 120-pound football teams and served as director of athletics and assistant to the headmaster.

In 1952 he married Edith B. Robb, and they had two children: George Widener Dixon and "Ellin" Dixon (Miller).

On the 1971 death of his mother's surviving brother, George Dunton Widener, Jr., Fitz Jr. inherited the childless uncle's entire estate, including the 500-acre (2.0 km<sup>2</sup>) Erdenheim Farm in Whitemarsh Township, Pennsylvania, and took over the running of the Widener Foundation. The Widener fortune, amassed in the meat-packing and streetcar businesses, saw Fitz Eugene Dixon, Jr. listed in Forbes Magazine's 400 Richest Americans in 1985, 1991, and 1995.

  - The History of "The Ridge"
  - The First Range of the Watchung Mountains was known to the families that lived there as "The Ridge". Its altitude of 610 feet was quite low as mountains go, but it towered over the land stretching the 15 miles to New York. In the 1870's, the "Ridge" had a number of well-known people who either moved from New York City, or spent their summers on the mountain, overlooking New York City. General George McClellan owned a gentleman's farm that stretched from Mt. Pleasant Ave. to Northfield Rd., After the General's death in 1881, his mansion and part of the estate was purchased by Eugene Delano. The property was further subdivided into six or seven estates. John Crosby Brown, another NYC banker, purchased acreage that went as far south as Northfield Rd., and built two mansions, located where Seton Hall Prep now has a playing field. The mansions were called "Brighthurst" and "Holmhurst". The General's home was called "Maywood", and was farther north. The foundations of these three homes were lost when the field was built. The remains of the Delano Orchid Greenhouse and the overgrown formal gardens are still recognizable, west of the "Maywood" location. Seton Hall Prep is using several of the drives from the estates as cross-country tracks. Further north on Prospect Ave., then called "Perry Lane" was the property of Maria Harding Farr. Barkley Farr was a prime force in establishing the Williamsburg Restoration. The next property was the Douglas Robinson estate. Mrs. Robinson was the sister of President Teddy Roosevelt.

- The amazing former residence we now call home has a long and fascinating history. The story of Joseph Roush and the design and construction of his fabulous home on Washington Road was documented recently by John Conti in the October issue of mtl — Mt. Lebanon Magazine and is reprinted here with permission. <http://www.sunnyhill.org/building/history.html>

- "Roush was in every respect a 1920s version of what a few decades later we would call a "dotcom millionaire." On October 23, 1920, he took a big step toward achieving his dream house: He hired the Olmsted Brothers—the most famous landscape architects in the country—to design the four acres of grounds around his half-built Mt. Lebanon home, called "Sunnyhill."

It wasn't sunny at Sunnyhill on that late October day, though. As he toured his Washington Road property that morning with Edward C. Whiting, one of the Olmsted's chief designers, a thick fog obscured what Roush assured Whiting were stunning views of the rolling, wooded hills to the west. But Whiting was impressed nonetheless, and Roush was pleased with his choice too. The deal was quickly done, and a pleasant lunch at a fancy Downtown restaurant followed. Roush, Whiting concluded in his notes on the meeting, is "a good reliable sort of man." "Sunnyhill" is still there at 1240 Washington Road at Sunnyhill Drive. We know it today as the Unitarian Universalist Church of the South Hills and the home of the Mushroom Family Learning Center. It is one of the most prominent landmarks in town. And it's a vivid reminder of Joseph Roush—a long-time Mt. Lebanon Commissioner, who, despite serious business reversals in the Depression, became a partner in the 1930s in developing substantial parts of other Mt. Lebanon neighborhoods.

Moreover, Sunnyhill's association with the storied Olmsted family lends it a historic cachet that only a few other landscapes in Western Pennsylvania can match."

  - Historical Information

The Olmsted, constructed between 1925 and 1927, is located on the campus of the former Masonic Widows and Orphans Home. It is located at 3701 Frankfort Avenue in the historic Crescent Hill-St. Matthews area. Designed by the architectural firm of Joseph and Joseph, the buildings were arranged on an elongated oval landscape plan with most of the buildings placed along the outer edge of the property, which extends roughly 80 acres. At the center of this plan lies The Olmsted. Once referred to as the dining hall, The Olmsted was the center of activity for all occupants of the Home. The Olmsted was named after Frederick Law Olmsted, Jr., of the nationally recognized landscape architectural firm, The Olmsted Brothers. The Olmsted Brothers were well recognized in Louisville at the time, having designed numerous parks and other projects in the city since the late nineteenth century. Frederick Law Olmsted Sr. was most famous for having designed Central Park in New York City. Frederick Law Olmsted Jr. continued the legacy of his family by specializing in the preservation of natural park like settings, especially in urban areas. Believing that natural environments provided healthier living conditions, he designed many of these areas for neighborhoods with a predominance of concrete. The Home's landscape design includes mature trees lining the paved driveways and two large grass areas in the center of the complex. This setting provided the occupants of the Home an abundance of natural space for activities and relaxation.

  - History of Shelburne Farms
In 1886, Dr. William Seward and Lila Vanderbilt Webb began acquiring farmland on the shores of Lake Champlain to create a model agricultural estate. They were assisted in the effort by two of the most prominent planners in the country: architect Robert H. Robertson and landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted, Sr. By 1902, Shelburne Farms encompassed a 3,800-acre farm dedicated to demonstrating innovative agricultural and land use practices, a hackney horse breeding enterprise and a grand family residence.
<http://www.shelburnefarms.org/about/history.shtml>
  - While much of Olmsted's farm-forest-parkland divisions remain intact today, the landscape has experienced some alterations consistent with its character as an evolving farm and residential property. W. Seward and Lila Webb's 1893 decision to build their estate residence on Saxton Point overlooking Lake Champlain, instead of on Lone Tree Hill as initially planned, shifted the boundaries of the farm and parkland sections of the estate. - History: Midway College is a private college and was established in 1847 by Dr. Lewis L. Pinkerton, a Christian minister and physician. Originally named the Kentucky Female Orphan School, the original purpose of the institution was to educate female orphans to become teachers. Through the years the school evolved and became Pinkerton High School, Midway Junior College, and finally Midway College. Today Midway College is known for excellence in its Business, Equine, Nursing, and Teacher Education programs throughout Kentucky and beyond.

    - During the 1990s, Pine Cobble had reached new levels with regard to programming and athletic space. With the help of generous donors, Pine Cobble purchased the campus of the High Croft School, a proprietary boarding school one mile from the Main Street location. This brought Pine Cobble to its current home, at 163 Gale Road, originally an estate owned by the Cluett family, and designed by Olmsted Associates. As part of the transaction, the former Pine Cobble campus became the David and Joyce Milne Public Library, which it remains today.

    - Eagle's Nest, the Ferdinand Frazier Jelke House (1922-24; William T. Aldrich [Boston], architect, & Henry Davis Sleeper [Gloucester, MA], interiors; Olmsted Brothers, landscape architects): A large, picturesquely massed, stretched-shallow-H-plan, 1½-story, complex-steep-cross-gable-roof shingled house prominently sited on a terrace above the rocky-cliff-edged 2½-acre property with conical-roof circular-plan tower off center on the façade, double row of dormers on the roof, and three prominent chimneys. A 1½-story, splayed-Z-plan, multiple-stall garage and service quarters is located near the entrance to the property, with a small greenhouse adjacent to it. On the landward side of the property, dense tree-and-shrub plantings shield the main house, located on a hill well above the road and reached by a curving drive that circumnavigates the hill. Olmsted Brothers' services included siting the house and garage, grading the property, creating internal vehicular and pedestrian circulation paths, and planting. Picturesque, informal landscaping surrounds the main house, and a dock extends into the water from a promontory at the property's northeast corner. Jelke (1880-1953) came from a Midwestern family made rich through the production of margarine, but after achieving his majority he lived principally in New York, where he owned an investment firm, Frazier Jelke & Co. One of several French-farmhouse-inspired dwellings constructed in this section of Ocean Avenue in the 2nd-through-4th decades of the 20th century, this is the least known of the group, probably because it is the least visible, but may well be the most interesting because of its association with Sleeper, whose work has only recently garnered incipient scholarly attention. <http://wikimapia.org/18010917/Eagle-s-Nest>

- 41.557327,-71.240373 07161 Taylor, Moses Newport Rhode Island 45 1921-1933
  - In 1882, H.A.C. Taylor, who had homes in New York City and Newport, RI, began to buy farmland in Portsmouth, RI. Through 1909, Taylor and his son, Moses, continued to add additional farms for a total accumulation of over 700 acres of excellent grazing and farm land.
By the 1920's H.A.C Taylor developed plans to build a proper home on his farm. He hired the famous architect, John Russell Pope, to design the home. Pope was an architect of world-wide fame, having designed the Jefferson Memorial in Washington, D.C. among other significant achievements. His design for the Glen Manor House was based on the French Petit Trianon at Versailles, and was quite unique to the area. The plans were completed in September of 1921 and construction began soon afterward. H.A.C Taylor died in May of 1921 and the work was continued by his son, Moses Taylor who occupied the house in 1923.
Moses Taylor died in 1928, and his widow, later Mrs Edith Taylor Nicholson, lived in the house until her death in 1953.
The Portsmouth Historical Society was later asked to create a plan for the use of the Glen Manor House, and from that organization was created the Glen Manor House Authority, a group of volunteers from the town. Although the house is owned by the city of Portsmouth, this group, along with the Resident Manager, now makes the house available for special functions.

- The Inn at Buck Hill Falls originally opened in 1901 as an 18-room inn and was expanded over the years to become a 400+ room resort and conference center. As shown in the attached article, it was once named as one of the top ten convention centers in the U.S. Click here to download the article. The attached brochure printed in the mid-1980's by the then owners of the Inn truly captures the former elegance of the Inn. Click here to download the brochure. The Inn at Buck Hill Falls ceased operations in 1991.

- History, Researched and Written by C. Pike

Buck Hill Inn opened its doors in 1901 as a 18 room hotel. In 1926, Buck Hill was expanded and added onto with the addition of the first stone building. Buck Hill enjoyed many successful years, adding and improving the inn slowly over the course of time. By 1985, as written in an official Inn brochure, the resort had over 250 guest rooms, an indoor and outdoor pool, tennis courts, golf course, an 800 seat auditorium, a library, horse stables, hiking trails and video arcade. It was voted as one of America's top 10 best conference centers in the country with its 14 different meeting room facilities. Also in 1985, the Inn was the largest all-season resort in the Northeast.

Years of financial trouble finally caught up with Buck Hill Inn in 1991, when it closed its doors. At the time of its closing, the resort had over 400 rooms.

The resort has been closed ever since 1991, but became a big target of vandals and trespassers after MTV aired its "Fear" show highlighting Buck Hill Inn in 2001. Since then, there has been a debate about the actual history of the Inn. Claims have put 73 deaths into the Inn's rich history. The claims include that there have been numerous murders and suicides within its walls during its time of operation. 5 deaths are said to have happened all in the same room, #354. The Inn, because of these claims, is said to be haunted by numerous spirits.

Sorting out the factual history of the Inn has turned into a blur. Could the Inn be haunted? Yes. It's possible, but finding the truth about why it could be haunted is a difficult task. So far, in our historical research, no evidence has been found of a single death in or on the property of Buck Hill Inn.

  - Caumsett, The Estate of Marshall Field III, Lloyd's Neck, Huntington, NY

We spent the afternoon at Caumsett State Park in Lloyd's Neck on the north shore of Long Island. The house is not open for tours, but you can hike its many trails, watch the horses run and play at the stables and just enjoy the surroundings at another Gold Coast estate.

Marshall Field III was the richest man in the world when he purchased a strip of land on Lloyd's Neck in 1921. It was a sizable fortune, inherited from his grandfather, Marshall Field I, who founded the now famous department store in Chicago.

Marshall Field III was famous for many things in his lifetime. He was a publisher, philanthroper, merchant, banker, and farmer who owned several properties. There was an estate in New York City, one in Chicago, another in Maine and a hunting plantation in South Carolina in which they all spent time. But Mr. Field and his wife, Evelyn wanted to create a self sustaining country estate similar to one that the family enjoyed in England. And so, in 1922, work began on one of the grandest of the Gold Coast estates, Caumsett, a Matinecock Indian word meaning "place by a sharp rock."

The Winter Cottage

After the lands were cleared, the Fields hired noted architect John Russell Pope to build everything that would require a self sustaining estate including Summer and Winter cottages and a stable for the polo grounds, not to mention the manor house and smaller homes for the caretakers and workers. The famous Olmstead Brothers worked on the landscaping. This estate was to be used for every outdoor activity; polo, hunting , riding, sailing, yachting , tennis and swimming plus a dairy and greenhouses. The Field family and their guests could easily access the estate from New York City by airplane, yacht or car.

Horses feeding at the stables

In 1961, Mrs. Ruth Field, Marshall Field's widow and third wife, sold the estate to State of New York with the promise that Caumsett would be "used forever for park purposes." and to this day remains a beautiful park with many things to see and do. In 1996, the Caumsett Foundation was formed and in 2010 Caumsett State Park was designated as an historic park preserve for everyone to enjoy.

Caumsett History

How the park began

In 1921, Marshall Field established the Field Foundation, a charitable organization whose purpose was to deal with the problems of child welfare, social and racial relations and education. Field then began to create an English-style estate at Caumsett. The self-sufficient rural establishment was a combination of country club, hunting preserve and home.

In 1922, Field engaged New York City architect John Russell Pope to advise him on the design of the estate. When finished, the estate had facilities for almost every sport except golf. Visitors to Caumsett were able to enjoy tennis (indoor and outdoor), horseback riding, pheasant shooting, skeet-shooting, polo, trout fishing, swimming and boating. Many miles of roads were built for motoring and dock space accommodated Field's steam yacht, Coursande. Field developed a herd of eighty prize cattle and a complete dairy farm. The self-sufficient, self-contained community had its own water and electrical supply. Vegetables were raised in its truck gardens and wood came from the estate's own stands of oak, pine, dogwood and locust.

Located at Lloyd Neck in the Town of Huntington, it is situated on a most scenic peninsula extending into Long Island Sound . Approximately 1600 acres of woodland, meadows, rock shoreline, salt marsh and former farm and garden areas make up the current park. The former Marshall Field house is under renovations. The polo pony barn now serves as part of the Willow Tree Farm Equestrian Center . The summer cottage now house the Nassau County BOCES Outdoor and Environmental Education. The calf barn is the home of Volunteers for Wildlife. The Henry Lloyd Manor house and Barn (circa. 1711), are maintained by The Lloyd Harbor Historical Society.

Upon Mr. Ward Jr's passing in 1920, he had created a place where mature gentlemen could enjoy their retirement years. Its name: the Marcus L. Ward Home for Aged and Respectable Bachelors and Widowers. The executors of the estate acquired 50 acres in Maplewood, New Jersey and initiated the building of the project. They traveled to Europe to research architectural masterpieces, and engaged the services of noted New York architect John Russell Pope, who designed the Jefferson Memorial and West Building of the National Gallery in Washington, D.C.
To ensure that the surroundings would be as spectacular as the structure, the executors retained the landscape architecture firm of Frederick Law Olmsted, designers of Central Park in New York City. Opened on August 31, 1927, the original "Ward Homestead" has since grown from a superior residence for 80 gentlemen to the present Winchester Gardens, a continuing care retirement community that is home to many men, women and couples. Today, residents can still walk through the 37-acre campus, and take in the original English country gothic style estate created by a true master of architecture.

- "Manor house on River Road is demolished
 Apr. 21--Whether through beauty, pedigree, age, or style -- perhaps a bit of all four -- the gray stone manor estate that overlooked the Maumee River had a way of capturing admirers throughout its more than 80 years.

The 18-room manor house was built in 1927 in what is now Perrysburg Township by Carrie Ross Ford, widow of Libbey-Owens-Ford's Edward Ford, and for whom the glass industry titan had named his newly founded town of Rossford.

It was designed in the Tudor and Jacobethan Revival styles, complete with gabled roofs, 18-inch-thick walls, and heavy wrought-iron front doors that generations of the hired help would strain to swing open. Mrs. Ford lived in the Graystone estate along East River Road until her death in 1936 at age 83.

The manor estate found a new owner last year in a $1.4 million property deal. Last week, it met the wrecking ball. Neighbors, preservationists, and family descendants remain in disbelief.

The late Edward Ford in 1898 founded Rossford the same year he founded the Edward Ford Plate Glass Co., which later became Libbey-Owens-Ford Co. and is now Pilkington North America. He died in 1920, and four years later Mrs. Ford paid $25,000 for the land for her new home...

Her Graystone estate, which was designed by renowned Toledo architects Mills, Rhines, Bellman & Nordhoff, is not to be confused with the estate of her son, George Ross Ford, Sr. In 1922, he built a larger mansion that still stands in what is now The Hamlet development." Toledo Blade, 4/21/2008

How an audacious real estate venture nearly a century ago led to significant open space for Falmouth today
 By Les Garrick

Charles R. Crane was already a summer resident on Juniper Point in Woods Hole and a generous trustee of the Marine Biological Laboratory there, when, in 1914, he retired as President of the Crane Company and relocated to New York City. During the next quarter century he raised funds for President Woodrow Wilson's re-election campaign, served as Ambassador to China, donated $13 million to his favorite institutions, people and causes, and traveled extensively.

When Crane left Chicago both his son-in-law Robert W. Leatherbee and his son Richard Teller Crane III, who had been employees of the Crane Company and close friends at Harvard, relocated to Woods Hole. Robert Leatherbee was married to Crane's elder daughter Frances Anita. Richard was waiting for a job at the U.S. Department of State, whereas Robert, who had sold his farm called "Brae Burn" in Lake Forest, Illinois, wanted to farm in Falmouth. Robert shared his plans with his younger brother, Frederick Leatherbee, a Boston stockbroker, who would soon reside in Falmouth. Also in the family circle was Wilfrid Wheeler, the husband of Emily Lillie. Emily was the sister of MBL Director Dr. Frank R. Lillie, who was married to Charles Crane's sister Frances. Wheeler, an innovative Concord, MA farmer and member of the State Board of Agriculture, knew from experience that Upper Cape Cod had outstanding soil for farming.

The Plan

Sometime during 1914 a plan crystallized: they would buy land and on part of it start a modern farm that would serve the growing demand of the up-market summer shore residents for fresh food. Although never directly involved in its operations, Charles Crane financed this venture with at least $275,000 of his own money. Two of the Crane family circle bought mainly contiguous parcels of land in the townships of Bourne, Falmouth, Mashpee and Sandwich: Wilfrid Wheeler, between 1914 and 1917, bought 8,702 acres of woodland in Sandwich and Bourne; and Frederick Leatherbee, between June 1915 and September 1917, bought 2,936 acres of farms, farmland and pastureland in the Falmouth Village of Hatchville. Additional land, including cranberry bogs, purchased after 1917 brought the total Coonamessett Ranch Company holdings to a staggering 14,000 acres. The Boston Globe called it the largest land holding east of the Mississippi River.

The Coonamessett Ranch Company

What were they going to do with all this land? When the Coonamessett Ranch Company incorporated in Massachusetts in 1916, it planned to engage in agriculture, timber, land sales and development.

In 1924, Robert and Frances Anita divorced, and Frances Anita married Czechoslovakian diplomat and politician, Jan Masaryk.

- Conservation Lands
Braeburn Farms
The topography of Braeburn Farms is rolling upland forest, but in the early 1900s the farm was open field where cattle grazed. Braeburn Farms, Atamansitt Farm and Coonamessett Ranch were the three large farms that made Hatchville a major dairy center in the 1920s and 1930s.
The 28-acre parcel on Route 151 abuts the town-owned Coonamessett Reservation on the west and houses on Hunters Ridge Road on the east. The state Frances Crane Wildlife Management Area is on the other side of the highway.
Riders from nearby horse farms often use the paths through the woods of Braeburn Farms.
The property was purchased by the town in 2002. A conservation restriction permanently protects the land from any uses other than conservation and passive recreation.
- The conservation restriction also applies to 3.8 acres around Little Jenkins Pond nearby, purchased from the same owner, the Clauson family, in 2002. The small pond lies behind the subdivision and gas station at the corner of Route 151 and Sandwich Road.
Access to Braeburn Farms is from Route 151.
<http://www.300committee.org/braeburnfarms.htm>

- Provision has also been made for building sites for investigators by the purchase of 21 acres of woodland in the Gansett woods, immediately joining the Crow Hill region of Woods Hole, in which many of the Laboratory members now have homes and extending from Quissett Ave. nearly to Buzzards Bay.

  - "DESIGNING ANNAPOLIS ROADS, 1926-1934 (by James Gibb)
 Annapolis Roads lies closer to the utopian end of the spectrum, at least in terms of the intentions of its first developer, and its creation is well- documented in the records of one of the foremost landscape design companies in the world: the Olmsted Brothers.
 Several years after the death of her husband, playwright Paul Armstrong, Rella Abell Armstrong decided to develop the family's 341-acre farm, called Belmont. Resort and residential communities had been popping up all along the Chesapeake Bay in the late 19th and early 20th centuries as safe and reliable electric train service, then automobiles, eased access for urbanites. Rella Armstrong undoubtedly was aware of the newly developed communities of Wardour (1907- 1915) and Gibson Island (1923), both designed by the Olmsted Brothers firm, the sons and intellectual heirs of Frederick Law Olmsted (1822-1903), designer of Central Park in New York City and the grounds of Commodore Vanderbilt's Biltmore estate in North Carolina. The Olmsteds designed Roland Park, Guilford, and other residential neighborhoods in Baltimore, as well as parks, university campuses, and residential subdivisions across the United States. Frederick, Sr., believed that landscape design was a fine art--on equal footing with painting, sculpture, and music--that employed the healing power of nature. His firm's naturalistic designs sought to "suggest and imply leisure, contemplativeness, and happy tranquility." Rella Armstrong approached the Olmsteds, whose offices were in Brookline, Massachusetts (now a Brookline, on a piece of hotel stationary, sketched the road layout and named each of the streets after figures important in Maryland's Colonial history. In April of 1926, the Olmsteds worked on grading plans for the main road (now Carrollton), planning a 50 ft right-of- way with an 18 ft wide graveled road bed, but noting that "as the place grows, it will be necessary to widen the 18-foot graveled space to at least 28 feet, in order to permit parking in front of each lot."

  - The Crieve Hall subdivision takes its name from a grand mansion that once stood atop the high ground of what is now Barrywood Drive at Brevity Lane. The owner, Mr. Herbert Farrell was a multi-millionaire steel magnate from Sandusky Ohio who came to Nashville to marry Helen Ritchie Cheek, wealthy daughter of Mr. Joel Owlsey Cheek (1852-1935). Mr. Cheek and his cousin were in the coffee business. In 1928, Mr. Cheek had sold his company and its famous brand "Maxwell House" for the staggering sum of $25 million in cash and stock to the Postum Company, later to be known as General Foods.
In 1925, the Farrells purchased Overton Hall, the estate home (and 433 acre farm ) of Jesse Maxwell Overton (1863-1922) businessman, stock breeder and civic leader and his wife, Sadie Williams Overton (1872-1963), civic and cultural leader of Nashville. Mr. Overton had built his large brick home and breeding farm in the year 1900 on a portion of his grandfather's 3,600 acre Traveller's Rest Plantation. The Farrells expanded and brought extensive changes to the exterior of Overton Hall. When complete, Mr. Herbert Farrell re-named his palatial Tudor styled estate home after Crieve County, in Northern Ireland, as the green countryside reminded him of his ancestral home.
By the late 1940's, Mr. Farrell had passed away and the Crieve Hall estate was put up for sale. Years passed with no buyers. Few to none could afford such opulence. By the early 1950's, a weary Mrs. Farrell ordered: the contents of the house to be sold at auction, the land sold to developers, and the mansion completely demolished ("no stone to be left upon another"). The massive wrought iron gates were passed along to Mrs. Farrell's cousin who had them re-erected at their home, Cheekwood, where they can be seen today.
Soon after, roads were cut, lots were sold, and a housing boom began. The Crieve Hall Elementary School was built on a 17 acre campus in 1954 on a hill across from the old mansion.

  - Harry Leo Bloser and Ida Dunn Bloser lived on the Chase estate, Highfields, on Highbridge Rd. by 1930, having lived earlier at 315 Whittier Ave. in Syracuse. Mr. Bloser was born 7-15-1885, and the couple wed about 1907. Mr. Bloser worked earlier as a machinist for the Continental Can Co. While living in Lyndon, however, he was a chauffeur and later a maintenance worker for the Precision Castings Co. Mrs. Bloser was born in Constantia, about 1889, and was a dressmaker. She also taught adult education classes in sewing for the Syracuse school district. Mrs. Bloser died on 3-12-1957. and Mr. Bloser died in December, 1969. Their children: Bernard Duane Bloser, who was born about 1909, graduated from Syracuse University in 1931 with a degree in engineering, wed Florence Grann about 1935, worked 42 years for the Continental Can Co., lived in Sandy Springs, GA, at his death on 11-4-1997, and R. Arabelle Bloser, who was born about 1913, married Foster Applegate, and lived at 101 Revere Rd. in DeWitt.

  - Arthur Gilbert Chase and Mina Assman Chase lived on Highbridge Rd. by 1930, having lived earlier on Walnut Ave. and at 310 Highland Ave. in Syracuse. Mr. Chase was born at Port Richmond on Staten Island, NY, on 4-11-1880, and came to CNY about 1909. He was an executive at the Continental Can Co. and later became the president and chairman of the board of Precision Castings Co. Mrs. Chase was born in NYC about 1882, and before her marriage was a dramatic soprano and pianist and had performed throughout Europe. The couple wed in East Orange, NJ, in 1909. Both were very active in club and society activities. Their home in Lyndon, known as Highfields, was built in the late 1920's, and was a local show place. It had an estimated value at that time of $200,000, and a staff of four live-in servants. At her death on 4-3-1952, Mrs. Chase left an estate of $2 million. Mr. Chase died on 10-17-1961, at Highfields. They had: Marie-Louise Chase, who wed Donald Tiffany, (see their listing), and Marcia Chase, who was born about 1919, wed a Mr. MacCallum and John T. Bunch, and lived in New Canaan, CT.

[showing Inglis property in SW quadrant of square 27, N of Geddes Ave.]
  - The Inglis estate, about a mile east of central campus, comprises eight acres in a residential area north of Geddes Avenue. The twelve-room, four-floor house was built in 1927 as the Inglis' retirement home.
<http://www.umich.edu/pres/pdf/englishhouse.pdf>
  - James and Elizabeth Inglis started their married life in an apartment on West Kirby Avenue, just off Woodward Avenue in Detroit. On February 18, 1905, Josephine, their first child was born, but she lived only two days. The [Inglises] next lived in a rented house on Van Dyke Place where their daughter Betty was born on September 20, 1906. They built their house on East grand Boulevard, at the corner of Charlevoix and their son Jim (Jamie) was born there on January 23, 1910. In 1920 they moved to Ann Arbor, Michigan, and purchased a house at 920 Baldwin Ave (which still exists today as a fraternity house at the University of Michigan).
James Inglis' sister Kate moved to Ann Arbor with her husband Frank Smith in 1901 and purchased a farm on the east side of the city. The Smiths began subdividing the farm into residential lots on what are now Highland, Concord, Lenawee and Lafayette Streets.
James and Elizabeth bought an 8.5 acre plot on the farm that was perched on a hill and extended down toward the Huron River, as the site for their retirement home. They turned to a family friend, "Lilburn "Woody" Woodowrth, to design and build a house in the English country style, constructed of stones and irregular brick with a slate roof. The 12,000 square foot home cost around $250,000, a rather considerable sum at that time.
James Inglis died in March, 1950, leaving the house to his wife, with the stipulation that after her death, the estate would be given to the University of Michigan to serve as a home for the university's president.

However, Elizabeth delivered a quitclaim deed to the estate to the Board of Regents on May 23, 1951 on May 23, 1951 and moved to Kalamazoo to be near her daughter. Elizabeth Inglis later moved to Portola, California.

- o In 1902, William H. McElwain built a factory at the southeast corner of Valley and Hall Streets in East Manchester's shoe manufacturing district. Due to his death in 1908 at 41, he never saw his company spread into another eight locations around Manchester. In 1912, under his brother, J.F. McElwain, the W.H. McElwain Company's central Plant opened as the country's largest shoe factory under one roof. This held true even before the addition of its northern wing in 1917, which was not yet built when this photograph was taken. The view looks south before the Queen City Bridge crossed overhead. In 1921, the International Shoe Company absorbed the McElwain plant and flourished along with Manchester's other shoe manufacturers, including J.F. McElwain, who had resigned and started a shoe company under his own name. Gradually, shoes replaced textiles as the city's primary industry. By the 1960s, shoe manufacturing had begun to decline. Various firms have come and gone since the International left. Today, among others, Hesser College, which moved in as of January 1990, occupies the entire south wing and part of the west.

  - PI Cards refer to Middlebrook Farm and Hodgdon [Lane? Land?]
  - The large white colonial home on Stark Avenue was named Middlebrook Farm about 1900 when Governor Charles H. Sawyer and his family retired there. Originally built by farmer Caleb Hodgdon who owned several hundred acres of land in this area, the farm was inherited by Governor Sawyer's wife, the former Susan Cowan (Caleb's great-granddaughter).

Charles Sawyer had served as president of the Sawyer Woolen Mills since 1891 but had sold the company in 1899. The farm, which extended from Watson Lane to the present location of Hoppy's Store and back to Middle Road, seemed an ideal estate for a retired magnate and former N.H. governor. The Sawyers had lived previously at 2 Central Avenue (between Dunn's Tavern and the Bellamy river; house torn down ca. 1967) but having no further reason to live so close to the mills, moved happily to Stark Avenue to start a dairy. - Early in the 1900's, James and Margaret Pepperall (Frost) Sawyer took over the estate, completing the transformation of the grounds and turned into a Colonial Revival summer estate with extensive formal gardens, arbors and an elaborate stone wall. Tennis courts (now gone) and a swimming pool, which remains as a reflection pond for the Inn, were added in 1912. After this revival period the building and grounds passed from hand to hand and were left, essentially, to fall to ruin.

  - The "commemorative occasion" for which conversations With him was written was the 100th anniversary of the birth of Walter C. Janney, an investment banker from Philadelphia, born in 1876. The birthday celebration was held at the Janney's summer home in Gansett on June 25, 1976. The house was built in 1927 on ten acres of land purchased from Sarah Bryant Fay, with the understanding that she could continue her daily summer drives to "my Point" as long as she wished. Before the family's move to Gansett, they had spent four happy summers at the Quissett Harbor House. While there they lived in The Cottage, after the DeWitt family's occupancy and before the Sawyer's.

Built in 1927 by Walter C. Janney (b. 1876), a Philadelphia banker whose winter home was in Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, the Gansett Point house has passed on to the descendants of his daughter Marian Janney Ware. The long shingled Colonial Revival Cape Cod style house contains the family rooms as well as sections (each like a complete house but attached to the main) for the maids, chauffeur, boat captain and caretakers, the entire length being 228 feet.
"The gardens and landscaping were designed by Olmsted Brothers of Brookline and constructed by HV Lawrence in 1929. There are graceful sweeps of lawn edged by masses of low juniper and a hidden rose garden. Originally this walled garden had four-foot wide beds. A lovely cedar pergola with curved stone benches at the sides leads to grass paths meandering down to a low cliff overlooking Buzzard's Bay. The rose garden has been used for many weddings."

Khan has sold Cedar Court, his million-dollar country estate at Normandie Heights, Morristown, NJ to a New York and Philadelphia syndicate, headed by Dr. F. M. Allen, a specialist in diabetes. The estate will be used as an exclusive research and curative sanitarium for the treatment of this malady. The estate was laid out originally by Abraham O. Wolff, who built two large houses of Spanish type of architecture for his two daughters, Mrs. Henri Wertheim and Mrs. Otto Khan. One of the two houses burned down and Mr. Khan then took the whole place over, reconstructed it and made one large dwelling. With all this work and the original amount spent by Mr. Wolff the property cost more than a million dollars...The grounds were laid out by Brinley & Holbrook and they are famous in that section of the country for the specimen trees and shrubs which abound. The property adjoins the Morris Country Golf Club, the H. McK. Twombly estate and the property recently sold by Pease & Elliman for the estate of W.V.S. Thorne to T.H. Symington." - 40.729226,-74.323701 12073 Pitcher, James R. (7/3) Short Hills New Jersey 0

- Local History: Millburn's Tropical Forest

There is an extensive collection of Pitcher & Manda in Short Hills items at the historical society.

Recent correspondence about the nursery added to the society's files this Manda biography from the 1895 American Chrysanthemum Annual:

"W.A. Manda. The giant figure and earnest face of this wizard of horticulture are well known to all the more prominent gardening specialists of Europe and America. His name is familiar to amateur and professional growers of plants and flowers the world over; but there must still be many of the rank and file to whom his personal appearance is unknown, and such as these will gladly welcome his portrait, which, by the way, is a most excellent one.

"Mr. Manda is a native of Bohemia, where he first saw the light in 1862. His father was a forester, and thus our horticulturist of to-day was in a measure born to the profession. Indeed, from his earliest days he had a strong inclination to studies of plants and their cultivation, and in full sympathy with this he was after completing his school education, sent to the gardens of the Grand Duke of Hessen-Cassel, at Harowitz, where he served three years.

"Having been employed for lengthened periods in prominent gardens, nurseries and seed houses of Vienna, Paris and London, he came to this country in 1883, and soon secured a situation as assistant superintendent of the Harvard botanic gardens, Cambridge, Mass., and on the resignation of Mr. William Falconer some months later, he was appointed superintendent. In 1888 he joined with Mr. James R. Pitcher in establishing the United States Nurseries at Short Hills, N.J., and this concern being changed to a stock company, he severed his connection with it, and commenced business on his own account at South Orange, N.J., about a year ago.

"Mr. Manda has raised innumerable new Chrysanthemums of the highest quality, and in purchasing the variety Mrs. Alpheus Hardy, gave the highest price that has ever been paid for one."

This ca. 1895 envelope is the latest acquisition for the museum's Pitcher & Manda collection. It underscores one of the primary attractions of Pitcher & Manda's United States Nurseries—the tropicals and, in particular, the orchids.

It is difficult to imagine the acreage near the intersection of Hobart and Highland avenues covered with palm trees, orchids, giant tree ferns, and many more tropicals, but, as the sketch of the greenhouses shows, they could be accommodated by the many very tall greenhouses on the site. As also can be seen in the photo from one of their catalogues, there was a "Tree Fern Forest at Short Hills" in at least one of those buildings. It was surely an exotic and remarkable place to visit on a frosty Millburn morning.

- Local History: When a Short Hills Business Isn't Really a Short Hills Business

An 1892 The New York Times article about [Frederick Crane Chemical Company] notes: "The little town of Millburn and the surrounding country was shaken at 7:55 o'clock to-night by a terrific explosion, which shook the houses and ground and caused terror to the inhabitants for several miles about. The explosion occurred at the Celluloid Zapon Works at Springfield, a mile and a half south of Short Hills, and the concussion was heard as far away as the City of Newark.

"The works where the explosion took place are in ruins, and the houses near the factory are wrecked, while for a radius of two miles there is hardly a pane of glass unbroken. One man, a negro, employed in the mill, is missing.

"The factory is situated in a hollow about a mile from Short Hills, and is operated by the Frederick Crane Chemical Company of New York, which has an office at 14 Barclay Street. The company manufactured varnish and patent brass and silver lacquers.

"The works included about twenty brick buildings, which were erected five years ago. Since then the works have been burned down three times. About twenty men are employed in the factory.

"Pitcher & Manda's conservatories at Short Hills, which cover about five acres, were badly damaged, nearly three acres of glass being broken. The train due at Orange at 8:14 was passing Short Hills at the time, and the shock threw passengers from their seats."

The Pitcher & Manda greenhouses were on Hobart Avenue near where Inverness Court is now.

  - "The following summer, Grant returned to Long Branch not as General Grant but as President Grant. And this time it was not as a hotel guest, but as a homeowner. His neighbors would be that same group of millionaires who had befriended him many years ago...Wanting the status of having a president of the United States as a neighbor and political playmate, George Childs, Anthony Drexel, George Pullman and Moses Taylor pooled their money and presented the Grant family with a beautiful seaside cottage. It was located at 991 Ocean Ave in Elberon. To the south of the Grant Cottage stood the cottage of Moses Taylor and the north, the George Childs home. All three structures stood stately on the bluff overlooking the Atlantic Ocean. Anthony Drexel and George Pullman lived a bit to the north on Ocean Avenue...The Grant cottage was built in 1866 for Howard Potter, a wealthy New York banker. The New York Tribune called the 2 1/2 story house a mixture of English villa and Swiss chalet and noted that the president and Mrs. Grant often sat on the octagonal porch that faced the street, rocking and watching the sightseers passing by on Ocean Ave...The cottage at 991 Ocean Ave. in Long Branch would be their summer home for the next fifteen years. Their residence there would give Long Branch the epithet "the Summer Capital". In the year 1869, besides being the recipients of a lovely home in the city, the Grants were also on the receiving end of many receptions and balls given in their honor." p.27
  - "When [the Hayes family] arrived for the summer of 1877, the [Elberon Hotel] was only a year old and already had caught on as one of the premier places to stay. The hotel was built by Lewis B. Brown, the developer of the Elberon section of Long Branch. The town was named by using a combination of Brown's initials, L.B. and pronouncing it "El-Bron". He planned the hotel, located at the Southern end of Long Branch, to look like a country estate." p,35

History:

James A. Fenwick established in 1857 a commercial cranberry bog along Cranberry Run. A few years later, in 1866 Joseph J. White developed thirty acres of cranberry bogs near Rake Pond in New Lisbon. White married Fenwick's daughter, May, and Whitesbog developed into the largest cranberry operation in the pine barrens. It was also the larger blueberry operation here. Actually, this was the place where between 1911 and 1916 the first cultivated blueberries were developed.
Burrs Mill in Southampton Township. The first cultivated cranberry bog in the Pines was planted in the 1830s by Benjamin Thomas. In 1857 James A. Fenwick purchased 108 acres in what became Whitesbog. He was recycling the water and workforce from nearby Hanover Furnace. The bogs themselves were "remodeled cedar swamps."
Between 1884 and 1909 Joseph H. White, Fenwick's son-in-law, purchased many acres, finally accumulating to 3,000 acres. At its height Whitesbog included cranberry bogs, blueberry fields, a water supply system, the village of Whitesbog, and the migrant workers' villages of Florence and Rome. (Stinton 1987:191)
Between 1857 and 1912, 40 bogs covered 600 acres. At Whitesbog Elizabeth White (daughter of J.J. White) and Dr. Frederick V. Coville (of the US Dept of Agriculture) developed the world's first cultivated blueberries in the early 1900s. <http://www.nynjctbotany.org/njoptofc/whitebog.html>

- Mansions revisited; Project researches homes of early industrialists.
Byline: Valerie Franchi Sept. 9, 2010 Worcester Telegram & Gazette
SHREWSBURY - Sometimes it takes a newcomer to remind longtime residents of the importance of the history surrounding them.
Lyn Lincourt moved to Shrewsbury only two years ago, but already she has taken on the task of chronicling a principal part of the town's history beginning at the turn of the last century.
"I've always been fascinated by history since I was a kid," she said from her new home at the Southgate at Shrewsbury retirement community. "I joined the historical commission right away."
At the first meeting of the Historical Society, Ms. Lincourt volunteered, along with fellow member Chris Kirk, to take on the job of researching and documenting the history of a group of mansions built by the area's earliest industrial magnates.
Beginning in April 2009, she focused initially on the 365-acre estate acquired by Philip Washburn Moen in 1899 between what is now West Main Street and Maple Avenue. Mr. Moen, a prominent wire manufacturer, sold his company to American Steel & Wire the same year.
According to Ms. Lincourt's research, Mr. Moen's estate included a 30-room mansion, known as Ard-na-Clachan - Village on the Hill in Gaelic - and a self-supporting commercial farm.
The property would see two more owners, Charles Hutchins, president of Crompton & Knowles Loom Works, and Howard Brewer, president of the Worcester pharmaceutical firm Brewer & Company, before it was sold to the Worcester Foundation of Experimental Biology in 1962.

Ms. Lincourt said she was impressed by the industrialists who settled in Shrewsbury. "These were men of vision and energy," she said. "They were trying to make something of themselves and move the country forward."

Hutchins provided homes on the property for his son and daughter, Arthur and Helen, and they are the only structures that remain today. Arthur Hutchins' former home is now part of St. John's High School on Main Street, while Helen Hutchins' former home is now the Stoddard House, an administration building on the campus of the UMASS Medical School on Maple Ave.

  - "On the Camp property is an 8,500 square-foot home atop a gently sloping hill with a stunning view of White Rock Lake. It was designed and built by well known architect John Staub and completed in 1938. Alex Camp and Roberta Coke Camp were from prominent Dallas families. Roberta Coke Camp was a generous philanthropist, who supported local civic and charitable organizations including the symphony, art museum, ballet, and her church. The house is a combination of Latin Colonial, English Regency, and Art Deco styles combined very harmoniously. It is one room deep throughout, with all living and bedrooms having three exposures." - "The result of all these covenants is that anyone traveling the East End's single paved road sees only a Scottish jewel - a mile of forests, lakes and inlets, followed by a mile of moors and rocky beaches. Invisible on the drive is one of the island oddities: virtually identical houses on each side of the road. The first, facing Fishers Island Sound and Connecticut, was built by Mortimer Buckner as a surprise for his wife. But when she returned from Europe and was presented with her new house, she blanched - she wanted a house facing Block Island Sound. And she wanted a house with closets. Buckner complied." New York Magazine, Jul 1, 1985, p.35 [not sure of the veracity or the continued existence of this mirrored house, although Plan #7890-17 is titled "Study for Relocated House" (1928)]

  - Jackson Heights started in the 1910s and 1920s as a planned community of novel cooperative apartment buildings designed to let in plenty of light and air. The co-ops, which often surrounded their own private gardens, were a new idea, pioneered by the Queensboro Corporation to lure residents from Manhattan to what had been farmland.
Most pre-World War II co-ops and homes built by the Queensboro Corporation in Jackson Heights have been landmarked, and are now part of the Jackson Heights Historic District.
Unlike many other co-ops, the Greystones (pictured) do not have an interior garden. Built in 1917 and originally named simply the "Garden Apartments," the Greystones were the first of the famous Jackson Heights co-ops. They line 80th Street between 35th and 37th Avenues in Jackson Heights.
http://queens.about.com/od/photogalleries/ss/jh\_coops.htm
  - In 1917 the Queensboro Corporation built its first major apartment complex, naming it the Garden Apartments (thus coining the term "garden apartment"). It was renamed the Greystone Apartments in 1925, since garden apartment had by then become the generic name for this kind of building, and MacDougall wanted to distinguish this complex from his others.

- “The Queensboro Corporation's planned community at Jackson Heights was recognized at the time of its development as one of New York's important centers of new housing concepts, particularly the "garden apartment," and many of the ideas and features explored there are now standard for middle-class housing. From the time of its development, Jackson Heights attracted middle-class families desiring a convenient, pleasant alternative to the typical urban neighborhood. Today, Jackson Heights continues to be a vibrant community which, because of its overall design, planning, and integration of open space, as well as its high degree of intactness, has a strongly defined sense of place.” p.5

“Although a number of architects worked for the Corporation, the two most influential in the evolution of the garden apartment type were George H. Wells and Andrew J. Thomas. The Greystone Apartments (1917-18) on 80th Street between 35th and 37th avenues, designed by Wells, mark a departure from the architect's earlier Laurel Court in the reduction of lot coverage and allocation of garden space. The buildings are arranged in rows on two facing blockfronts, creating uniform streetscapes of unbroken masonry facades along both sides of the street; continuous landscaped garden areas are provided at the rear of each blockfront.”p.23

  - THE GINGERBREAD HOUSE ON OXFORD ROAD
By Doug Preston
[This article originally appeared in the April 1985, Number 3, Volume VIII edition of the Tally-Ho!]
About 1889, Morgan Butler retired from farming, leased his farm and house to Charles S. Green of Utica, and moved to a house on the present site of the Oxford Road school in order to be able to personally supervise the construction of Butler Hall. Morgan Butler passed away in 1892, but Mr. Green continued to lease the farm. Charles Stewart Green (1835-1903) was a son of the Rev. Beriah Green of Whitesboro, the famous abolitionist. Young Charles did not follow in his father's footsteps, however, but gained fame of his own as a trainer, driver and dealer of race horses. He lived on Long Island for many years until about 1878 when he returned to Utica, and leased the old Utica Driving Park. When that was sold to become the site of the Masonic Home, he leased the Butler farm. He laid out a half-mile track on the flat land across Oxford Road from the house, and, according to one newspaper account, "in the barn had everything that a first class horse could wish for." He gave up the farm and returned to Utica about 1900.
Following Mr. Green's departure, it appears that Morgan Butler's widow gave the old place to William E. Dewhurst, the Butlers' hired man/coachman/gardener for many years. Mr. Dewhurst died in March of 1913 and in June his widow sold the farm to Christopher and Minnie Hoffman, owners of the next farm south on Oxford Road, which also included a Gothic collage, now located at the corner of Beechwood Road.

The exact history of the house at 116 Oxford Road (as its address had come to be listed after being simply "South near limits" is somewhat unclear through the 1920s and 30s. It appears that, soon after purchasing the Butler farm, the Hoffmans built the house known today as 112 Oxford Road (across Hoffman Road) , lived there and tried to sell the big old house. At least two other families, the Vincent Callaghans and the Everett Whitmyres, are understood to have lived there during this period, during the late 1920s and about 1932, respectfully.

Nevertheless, tradition has it that it was Minnie Hoffman who applied the extensive wall stenciling throughout the house (mostly now masked by layers of paint), who commissioned the small mural of a Scottish castle in the front hall, and who—as a sometime dealer—filled it with antiques. In 1924, the Hoffmans sold practically all of the farm but the property now remaining with the house to the Hugh R. Jones Company of Utica which began the development of "Oxford Heights" including a new street, named Hoffman Road. A map made at this time includes a detailed outline of the old house and shows an extension to the rear which has since been removed, as well as several farm buildings.

- "I wondered if the file on Villa Park at the Olmsted Archives would have information on Central Park or Parkside (No discreet Olmsted files for these projects apparently exist at the Archives, maybe the firm grouped everything together?) I found this passage in Dunn's book on Delaware Avenue. "He (Olmsted) planned this region [the future Central Park] for Samuel S. Jewett and Bronson C. Rumsey and others, primarily involving property of the Villa Park Land Company and Hyde Park Land Company" NOTE: Here Dunn is quoting from Kowsky's 'Best Planned City'. Also note that S.S. Jewett was no relation to Elam Jewett, the farm owner and Good Shepherd Chapel benefactor that Jewett Pkwy is named after."

- "By the early 20th century, Parkside had become a desirable address, attracting among its residents Darwin D. Martin, who, at Frank Lloyd Wright's suggestion, purchased a prime tract of land there for the Prairie Style home that Wright built for him between 1903 and 1906. In addition to Martin, other Larkin Soap Company executives who patronized Wright also avoided fashionable Delaware Avenue - where, in 1868, Dorsheimer had constructed a house designed by Richardson (See the author's "The William Dorsheimer House: A Reflection of French Suburban Architecture in the Early Work of H. H. Richardson," "The Art Bulletin, 62 (1980), 134-147. ) - and chose instead to build in Buffalo's Olmstedeian landscape. Walter Davidson commissioned Wright in 1908 to erect a home for him on another Parkside street near the Martin residence, and William R. Heath purchased for his dwelling a lot on Soldiers Place, the most spacious (and best preserved) of the circles of Olmsted's parkway system.

John D. Larkin, who was secretary of the Hyde Park Land Company, another organization doing business with the Olmsted office, purchased land for his own home (not designed by Wright) on Lincoln Parkway."

  - “The boundaries of the Montauk Association Historic District approximate those of the original complex of 1881 except for the area southwest of the present DeForest Road, where public recreation areas, private beachfront development, and a trailer park have encroached upon former Association property during the twentieth century. The Montauk Association Historic District, encompassing approximately 100 acres, is bounded on the south by the Atlantic Ocean, on the west by the hamlet of Ditch Plains, and on the north and east by marshland and coastal scrub growth.
 The site plan for the seven summer residences takes maximum advantage of surrounding natural features. The houses are widely and randomly spaced on high ground above salt marshes, and are connected by unpaved roads and trails which conform to the undulating topography of the area. Little formal landscaping was attempted, and the former Association properties retain the natural environment of low tangled scrub growth and marshland incorporated in the original design for the site. Architecturally the seven extant houses, which were the original and only documented residences of the colony, are a response to their natural surroundings: each is situated and planned so as to take advantage of ocean views and prevailing sea breezes. The stylistic freedom displayed in the architecture of each "cottage" compliments the overall setting of the Montauk Association complex.
 The individual houses of the Montauk Association group follow no common plan, though all are rambling, gable-roofed frame structures characterized by wide verandas, balustrades, and shingle covering. The general horizontal emphasis embodied in each cottage is relieved by one or more transverse gables or dormers. Decorative elements such as raised rectangular porches, polygonal bay window and porch projections, and patterned shingle and lattice details give variety to the elevations and wall surfaces of the cottages.

A prime mover in the seasonal exodus to eastern Long Island was Brooklyn financier Arthur W. Benson, who purchased much of the Montauk peninsula for $151,000 in 1879 as a speculative venture. Benson envisioned an exclusive resort colony of summer cottages to be developed at Montauk Point, and toward this end interested several of his New York associates in the enterprise. Benson's group, which included lawyers Robert DeForest and Henry DeForest, in 1881 commissioned noted landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted to plan the site.[2] Other New York friends soon joined with the original group to form the Montauk Association the same year. The membership included businessmen Henry Sanger and Alfred M. Hoyt, author William L. Andrews, merchant and financier Alexander E. Orr, and Cornelius R. Agnew, a prominent ophthalmologist.

Olmsted's plan for the Montauk Association colony utilized existing contours, taking maximum advantages of vistas and prevailing sea breezes. The asymmetrical design placed individual structures in a natural setting along a ridge facing the Atlantic. Connecting the buildings of the complex was a maze of unpaved roads and trails. The natural coastal marshes and tangled undergrowth of the Montauk peninsula became integral elements in Olmsted's overall scheme. Despite the demise of the Montauk Association, the site today remains a significant example of Olmsted's pioneering design concepts in landscape architecture. Soon after the Montauk Association was organized in 1881 the group contracted with the prominent New York architectural firm of McKim, Mead, and White for a design for their clubhouse, the central structure in the summer colony. Begun in the fall of 1881, the clubhouse was completed in 1883 and stood near the site of the present Tweed house. The building accommodated fifty guests, and the seven member families dined there frequently. The clubhouse burned in 1933.

While the central clubhouse was under construction, each member of the Montauk Association commissioned McKim, Mead, and White to design his own cottage, to be built on one of the plots flanking the clubhouse in accordance with Olmsted's site plan. McKim, Mead, and White prepared plans for the seven Association houses in 1882, and all were built by the end of 1883.[3] Ranging in size from the small, modest Benson and Andrews cottages to the large, imposing Hoyt and Orr residences, the Montauk Association houses share a similar spatial arrangement and large dominant gable. All are outstanding early examples of the innovative "shingle-style" resort architecture being developed by H.H. Richardson, McKim, Mead, and White, and their imitators during the early 1880's."

The map of Wompenanit was completed by Frederick Law Olmsted and his son John Charles Olmsted in 1898 and the map of Hither Hills was completed by the firm of Olmsted Brothers in 1904. Both maps were filed with the Suffolk County Clerk for use in sales of the lots of land laid out in them. [20017] (East Islip). 1913 Map of Nicoll Park, Incorporated to H.B. Hollins, Jr. East Islip, Suffolk Co., N.Y. Oct. 1906. Scale 100 Ft. To 1 Inch. Copied Nov. 1913.. Islip Long Island New York: Eugene R. Smith, Inc. Civil Engineers, 1913. Map well-drawn in black ink on cloth; delineating about 42 acres of land, the main feature being the dividing line in the middle of Nicoll's or Widow's Creek and to the west the property of Evelina K. Hollins along the fence line; and the engineer, Eugene R. Smith, Inc. Civil Engineers Islip, N.Y.; rolled map, approx. 19" x 20" size; old creasing; discoloring, wear, staining; still, in good condition and interesting Long Island real estate historical ephemera from the development days of the early 1900s; since it was created on cloth, it has survived and should continue to do so; The reason for the map being re-done from the original of 1906 is perhaps the collapse and bankruptcy of the major investment firm and financial house of H.B.Hollins Sr. in 1913, wafter much of the family property in Islip was sold and the family moved to a smaller portion of their holdings. - o History of the Jerome Park Community

In 1877, the Department of Public Parks issued plans of existing streets and planned streets and parks designed by Frederick Law Olmsted, Landscape Architect and J. J. R. Croes, Civil and Topographical Engineer. This project, intended to develop the newly acquired districts in a way that would preserve the beauty and park-like character of certain areas, such as Riverdale and Kingsbridge Heights. According to Charles E. Beveridge, Editor of the Frederick Law Olmsted Papers, the plan for the 23rd and 24th Wards was Olmsted's, "...largest and most comprehensive city planning project for which he actually prepared plans as well as written reports...the closest thing to a full city plan that Olmsted ever attempted."

The area surrounding the Jerome Park Reservoir is a remarkably intact portion of the Olmsted and Croes plan of 1877. According to Daniel J. Donovan, the Topographic Engineer of the Borough of the Bronx: "To determine the extent to which Olmsted's design was actually followed in the Kingsbridge Heights vicinity, the plan [Adopted Map D No. 23] was compared with the final adopted map: Section 21 of Final Maps and Profiles of the 23rd and 24th Wards, dated June 17, 1895, Topographical Bureau, Louis A. Risse Chief Engineer. Comparison of these plans confirms that the Final Map of 1895 is substantially in conformance with the 1877 Olmsted plan, much of it, in fact, in exact conformance. The most significant change in the Kingsbridge Heights vicinity from the 1877 Olmsted design to the Final Map of 1895 is the inclusion of the Jerome Park Reservoir."

It is clear that Olmsted's intent in providing neighborhoods like Kingsbridge Heights with narrow, curvilinear streets was to assure that they would maintain their residential character, discourage inappropriate development, and preserve their existing natural beauty. The charming character of the residential neighborhoods surrounding the reservoir is due not to chance, but to the intervention of Olmsted, whose influence similarly saved Riverdale from the imposition of a rectilinear street grid.

- The section of the Bronx west of the Bronx River, including Riverdale, was part of Westchester County until it was annexed by the City of New York in 1874. As the city prepared for future growth and development in that area, the Department of Public Parks asked Frederick Law Olmsted and J. James R. Croes, civil and topographical engineer, to prepare a report on the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards (upper Manhattan and the West Bronx). Olmsted was struck by the beauty of the area: Generally, it is highly picturesque, with aspects of grandeur, and from nearly all parts, broad distant prospects are commanded of an extended, interesting, and even impressive character. 5 Olmsted rejected the idea of extending Manhattan's gridded street pattern into Riverdale, recommending that it remain a picturesque suburb. He also pointed out that maintaining a road system that followed the topography would be more economical in the long run than would a road system that did not take the terrain into account. As the Country Club of Scranton continues into its second 100 years, we pause to reflect on its inception and subsequent storied history, for ours is a Club with a long and proud tradition. Incorporated in 1896, the course was first located in the Green Ridge section of Scranton at the North end of Washington Avenue. In 1925 a 300 acre tract of land was purchased along the Morgan Highway in Clarks Summit and in 1927 an 18 hole course was constructed by the famous golfer and architect, Walter J. Travis. An original garden wall from the Garvan estate, with its distinctive brick pattern, still exists. Today, that wall surrounds a recently constructed house. What once was the sweeping lawns of a vintage gold coast mansion, is now a typical upscale Long Island housing development.

  - 'Roslyn House' Main Residence Location (Old Westbury, NY)

Built in 1891 for Stanley Mortimer, a founder of the Meadow Brook Club and an accomplished artist, horseman, and businessman. Francis Garvan purchased the estate in 1919. While the original house was demolished in the mid 1970's, two original rooms were kept and incorporated into the new house; the formal dining room and a chapel. Current development is called Stone Arches, due to the numerous stone arch bridges that lay randomly throughout the property in between small dips in the hillside known as the Wheatley Hills.

Thus emboldened by its statewide success with introducing "Californian" as a bonafide architectural style, the Art Jury established a local awards program in 1924 to recognize the "best example of architecture constructed on the Peninsula during the previous year." First prize of $50 went to A.E. Cameron, 881 Via del Monte, for the "Best House of 1924," so reported the Palos Verdes Bulletin in its January 1925 newsletter. Kirtland Cutter was the architect of this and many other houses in the community. He evidently had a right touch with that Californian style.

Lots in the higher elevations, west of Granvia La Costa, are also arranged in clusters around street networks. As the contours of the northeastern section of Palos Verdes Estates rise, the lots are more irregular and varied in size and shape, becoming rectangular, trapezoidal and even triangular. The curvilinear street system determined the shape of lots, exemplified by the plan of the garden and grounds for Mr. A. E. Cameron. The curving street Via del Monte borders one side of the heavily landscaped property. (Fig.59)

- 33.740489,-118.370626 08060 Benedict, H. E. Palos Verdes California 9 1926; 1929
  - "Walking up the short, rustic road off of Peppertree Drive in Portuguese Bend, Kay Bara pointed to a sea-view promontory a little farther up the hill.
"The mansion was supposed to be up there," she said, "but it never got built."
What did get beyond the architectural drawings was a Mediterranean-style guest house and a compound of outbuildings around a courtyard reached through an archway that could well serve as the main gate to a Renaissance Italian township.

The phantom estate, a casualty of the Great Depression that shattered many dreams of gracious living, was to be the domain of Harry E. Benedict, manager of the landholdings of Eastern financier Frank A. Vanderlip, who owned most of the Palos Verdes Peninsula and had dreams of his own about developing his 16,000 acres. Most of those dreams, too, died with the Depression, and the Peninsula had to wait two decades to really blossom.

After the stock market crash of 1929, according to Delane Morgan's book, "The Palos Verdes Story," Benedict said, "People who could still afford to build elaborate homes were in no mood to construct them." This included Benedict, who moved into the completed guest house with its adjoining garage, stable and servants' quarters in 1930, naming it Villa Francesca after his first wife. He called it home until shortly before his death in 1977 at the age of 87.

After a brief ownership by another family, it was bought by Bara, who sells real estate, and her husband, Richard, a maritime union official."

- Villa Francesca: Harry Benedict, the personal secretary for Frank Vanderlip, built the "Villa Francesca" as a gatehouse to the other entrance to the Portuguese Bend gated community on Peppertree Drive. He had planned to build a more palatial estate further up the hill, but as the Depression hit, he too abandoned his plans. Elin Vanderlip, in her memoirs tells the story that Frank Vanderlip Sr. , while vacationing in Paris, had cabled Mr. Benedict just prior to the 1929 stock market crash to sell his stocks, but Mr. Benedict thought better of it and did not, thus costing Mr. Vanderlip millions of dollars. Mr. Benedict also had control of the Palos Verdes Corporation from 1943 to 1945, which owned the Vanderlip family's remaining ownership of the Palos Verdes Peninsula.

Etching of Villa Francesca by Nancy Backe

The historical marker for Villa Francesca reads : This plaque identifies the estate of Harry E. Benedict (1890-1977). Mr. Benedict, an associate of Frank A. Vanderlip, the initial developer of 16,000 acres of the Palos Verdes Peninsula, completed the gate house and the farmstead in 1930, the name "Villa Francesca" honors Mrs. Frances Homberg Benedict, his wife. The architect was Gordon B. Kaufmann, one of Southern California's masters of the Mediterranean style. The site is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

- Plan #05950-5091-sh7 shows lands now at Narcissa Dr. as belonging to Filiorum Corp. and F.A. Vanderlip
- While Frank Vanderlip and his family continued to reside in New York, he traveled to and from California by train. In 1916, he brought his family to Rancho Palos Verdes for the first time for an extended vacation and began building the Vanderlip estates near Portuguese Bend. A meteorologist helped him select the plot of land where there would be the most sun and least amount of fog and wind, and he built the family's home-away-from-home: The Cottage.

He later built the Italian Renaissance Villetta (later re-named Villa Narcissa) for guests—a villa that for years to come would delight visitors with gracious Vanderlip hospitality. The once-barren ranch and farmland had landscaping and new roads that were graded by mule-driven wagons, and the peninsula was being transformed by the vision and passion of Frank and his wife.

- During World War I, not only was there no Autumn Ball, but the Main Clubhouse was closed and demolished and the activities transferred to the Winter Clubhouse, which had been used in colder months as it was smaller and fitted with steam heat. Members quickly came to the conclusion that the Winter Clubhouse was too small for year-round use, and so in 1926 construction was started on the second Main Clubhouse, which was opened in the spring of 1928. Designed by John Russell Pope, its long lines were in striking contrast to the square wooden building it replaced. Built in the style of English country houses, it had open terraces instead of porches and a large new pool instead of the old swimming tank. When the new clubhouse was completed, the Winter Clubhouse was torn down, as Pope's building had been constructed for year-round use.

McKnight, Treasurer of the McKnight Realty Company, said yesterday regarding the syndicate's plans: "Some very novel development ideas will be worked out at Great Neck within the next three months. The thirty-six acres just purchased will be cut up into villa plots, and each plot will have its own shore rights on Little Neck Bay' One of the attractive features of the plan will be the reservation of a good-sized open space in the centre of each block. This will be the joint property of the plot owners, and will be available for tennis courts or whatever purpose the residents shall agree upon." NYT Apr. 11, 1909

- CARL FISHER'S BAYVIEW COLONY, Port Washington

In the summer of 1922 Carl Graham Fisher, entrepreneur and creator of Miami Beach, rented a cottage in Port Washington. Deciding that Long Island was the place he wanted to be in the summer, Fisher then purchased a house on Manhasset Bay. In the next two years he built a shipyard for the Purdy Boat Works and planned a development called Bay View Colony, laying out the streets—South Court, North Court, and Pine Drive. The "colony" was intended to be a millionaires' paradise. According to the book, Pacesetter, written by his cousin Jerry M. Fisher, his 110 ft lots were "professionally landscaped on the waterfront with a view of the bay." Here he made his home while developing Montauk where in 1925 he purchased 9,630 acres from Arthur Benson. His vision was to establish at Montauk a deep-water port of entry and to create there a "first-class resort."*

2. Same house as seen from the road in 1999.

  - In 1878, John Bixby leased Alamitos and moved his young family into the deteriorated adobe. By 1881, in partnership with Jotham Bixby and I. W. Hellman, he was able to acquire the property. John and his wife, Susan, planted trees and a garden, and began transforming the worn structure into a home. John's son Fred, and his wife Florence, moved into the ranch house in 1906. While Florence created the expansive gardens that surround the house today, Fred focused on ranch-ing, business, oil and his passion for breeding majestic Shire horses. Fred Bixby died in 1952, and Florence lived at the ranch house until her death in 1961. Seven years later, their descendants gave the furnished house, gardens and six barns to the City of Long Beach to maintain and develop as a regional historic and educational facility.

  - Once part of a 300,000-acre land grant from the Spanish Crown, Rancho Los Alamitos began as the nearly 30,000-acre inheritance of Juan Jose Nieto, who sold the land to Governor Figueroa. Deeded to the City of Long Beach in 1967, the historic site has been reduced to 7.5 acres and includes the original adobe home and four acres of historic gardens. When John and Susan Bixby arrived in 1878, the outdoor living space developed organizational habits that continue to this day.

Daughter-in-law Florence Green Bixby moved into the ranch house in 1906, and hired Pasadena landscape architect Florence Yoch to design a gazebo and belvedere walk around 1922. Five years later, Olmsted Brothers was commissioned to design a walled garden. They also developed an Oleander Walk, designed to screen out the encroaching industrial city. Today the understated elegance and modest domestic tranquility of the ranch includes a collection of garden spaces, including the Cactus, Cutting, Friendly, Rose, and Jacaranda Gardens, the Oleander and Geranium Walks, and the Cypress Steps, as well as a Native Garden, designed in 1929 by landscape architect Paul Howard and native plant expert Allen Chickering.

Rancho Los Alamitos was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1981.

Bryant Ranch Property: A Look at Its Past

- Yorba Linda Star March 7 1984 page 3

Part II is on the history of the ownership of the land. And, Part III highlights Susanna Bixby Bryant and the botanic legacy she left to the world.]

About nine years later, John W. Bixby, the ranchland's next owner, came into the picture.

Bixby, born in Maine the year California became a state, was a sixth generation American. He came to California in his early 20s to work for his cousin Jotham Bixby at Rancho Los Cerritos in Los Angeles County.

Also living at the ranch was Jotham Bixby's sister-in-law, Susan Hathaway. John Bixby and Susan fell in love, were married and moved to Wilmington to live. A son Fred was born there.

A few years later they subleased a part of the Rancho Los Alamitos and moved back to Los Angeles County. A daughter, Susanna, was born on the ranch. Entering into a partnership which purchased Rancho Los Alamitos, John Bixby took over as manager.

Some years before this the Yorba land holdings offered for sale. At different times, John Bixby purchased three adjacent portions of this land, comprising nearly 6,000 acres and forming Rancho Santa Ana. The ranch was used for stock raising and the family never lived there.

In 1887, at age 39, John Bixby died of appendicitis. After his death his wife, Susan Bixby, became almost a recluse, withdrawing from family and friends. With her children, Fred and Susanna, she moved to Berkeley. Fred graduated from the University of California and Susanna went to finishing school in Boston. Her formal education ended in 1900 and she toured Europe with her mother, followed by a trip around the world with her friends. In 1902, she returned to California to live, buying an apartment in the Russian Hill section of San Francisco.

In reports written about her, it is said that Susanna was a lovely young lady, slim, with blue eyes and wavy brown hair, and she had an excellent mind and a strong will. When two years later she met Dr. Ernest Albert Bryant, a prominent physician and surgeon, it was love at first sight.

After a three-month whirlwind courtship, they were married and honeymooned in Alaska. They lived in Los Angeles and had two children, Sue and Ernest Jr.

After her mother's death, Susanna inherited a share in the Los Alamitos ranch as well as one-half of Rancho Santa Ana, her brother Fred inheriting the other half.

According to a book written about her life by her daughter, Susanna Bryant Dakin, called "Scent of Violets." Susanna decided to assume active management of Rancho Santa Ana in 1911 after she became "tired of women's luncheons and teas, committee meetings and benefits."

The Planning Commission at its Oct. 9 meeting unanimously approved plans to restore the historic Bryant Ranch House to its original glory.
If restored to its "historically correct" condition, using the same type of building materials and construction techniques common during the era in which the 85-year-old house was built, Bryant Ranch House will become eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.
Once restored, the Craftsman-style ranch house will also be used as a small museum by the Yorba Linda Historical Society and Heritage Museum.

A SHORT HISTORY of the Rancho Santa Ana Botanic Garden By PHILIP A. MUNZ

May, 1947
Introduction
The year 1926 was notable in the history of Rancho Santa Ana Botanic Garden; for it was then that the concept of such an institution came to Susanna Bixby Bryant. Mrs. Bryant had long hoped to establish a memorial to her father, John W. Bixby, desiring something that would be a fitting tribute to the pioneer spirit of adventurous and inspiring courage that had motivated his short life of thirty-nine years. Mr. Bixby was always a great lover of the out-of-doors and turned naturally to ranching on his arrival in California from Maine. He was but twenty-five, a young man in a new land. It was a country only recently recovered from the mad fever of the Gold Rush; colonizing was under way. With a vision of the untold possibilities for the development of his newly adopted home and with an appreciation of its scenic and floral beauty, he purchased land which combined these various assets.

Such a property was the Rancho Santa Ana with a large acreage extending from the banks of the Santa Ana River into the lofty Puente hills to the north.

o Time Line

1875: John Bixby purchases a parcel of land from Bernardo Yorba's Rancho Cañon de Santa Ana.

1911: After Bixby's death, his daughter, Susanna Bixby Bryant, builds a home on the property and assumes management of the ranch's cattle business and citrus groves.

1927: Susanna Bixby Bryant establishes a botanic garden as a memorial to her father, and 200 acres of the ranch are developed as Rancho Santa Ana Botanic Garden.

1946: Susanna Bixby Bryant dies. The property is distributed to her son and daughter, and the ranch is managed by Ernest Bryant III (grandson of Susanna Bixby Bryant).

1951: Rancho Santa Ana Botanic Garden is moved to Claremont College.

1978: The ranch is sold to developers.

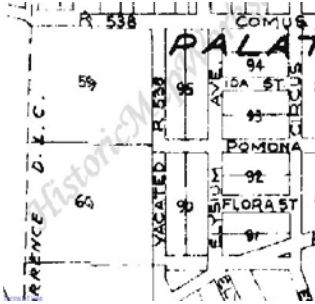

1983: The site is annexed by the City of Yorba Linda.

1997: Through the joint efforts of the City of Yorba Linda, Yorba Linda Heritage Museum and Historical Society, Pacific Heritage Development and Rancho Santa Ana Botanic Garden, the ranch house is renovated and dedicated as the Susanna Bixby Bryant Ranch House and Museum and now serves as the home of the Yorba Linda Heritage Museum and Historical Society.

  - “By the middle of the 1980s[?], there were eleven train stations between Portland and Oswego. The Portland and Willamette Valley Railway made fourteen trips each day along that route. Five of the stops served the little settlements of Riverwood, Riverdale, Rivera and Elk Rock.
The second generation of Portland wealth built the Dunthorpe area. Several hundred acres of land to the south and west sides of Riverview Cemetery had been bought as iron ore speculation by William S. Ladd and Simeon Reed. Ladd’s son, William S., platted 125 acres in 1916 to become upper Dunthorpe. His company, the Ladd Estate Company controlled the lower area of Dunthorpe as well. In 1909, the Riverwood and Abernathy Heights were platted by Henry Ladd Corbett. A stately French chateau was built by Hamilton Corbett. Not far away, Peter Kerr, a grain merchant, spent two years to build a Scottish baronial mansion (now known as the Bishop's Close) with its Olmstead designed garden. Soon his neighbors included his brother, Thomas Kerr, and C. Hunt Lewis and Faber Lewis, sons of the grocery magnate Cicero Lewis. William M. Ladd finally completed his own 16 acre estate in Dunthorpe. He also imposed restrictions to secure an exclusive surrounding district with covenants that prohibited swine and goats, persons of African or Mongolian descent; there was to be no selling of liquor, no advertising signs and no house less than $3,000. But the finest estate of them all was Fir Acres. It was developed for Lloyd Frank, a partner in the Meier and Frank Department Store. This 64 acre estate was terraced around an Elizabethan tudor centerpiece called Palatine Manor and completed in 1924. It cost $1.3 million at the time. - Lewis & Clark purchases Corbett mansion

POSTED: Thursday, June 1, 2000 at 01:00 AM PT

BY: gretchen.fehrenbacher

Little did Hamilton F. Corbett know when he sold his 40-room mansion and sweeping estate to the Sisters of St. Francis in 1942 that his family's role in the property wouldn't end there.

Fifty-eight years later, neighbor Lewis & Clark College has used a gift from daughter Harriet Corbett's estate to help buy her former home, several buildings and surrounding 18 acres. The transaction – just under $13 million – includes $4.3 million from her estate.

The property is as lush in history as it is in grace. The Corbetts are considered one of Portland's founding families.

Architect Pietro Belluschi – whose projects include the Portland Art Museum and the Commonwealth Building (the first building in the country sheathed in a curtain of metal and glass, as opposed to a masonry finish) – designed the mansion, his first solo commission in a career crowned by a gold medal from the National Institute of Architects. America's legendary Frederick Law Olmsted was landscape architect. The college plans to use the property – which includes a chapel and two other buildings – to house graduate school programs. Included are the Lady of Angels Chapel, a complex of kitchen and dining hall facilities and the Franciscan Renewal Center, a three-story building used as a retreat and conference center. All were built in the 1950s., Daily Journal of Commerce, <http://djcoregon.com/news/2000/06/01/lewis-clark-purchases-corbett-mansion/>

- Setting and Background Information

The Henry Ladd Corbett Residence was built in 1915 and 1916 on a 19-acre tract acquired by Corbett in 1904 in the Dunthorpe/Riverwood area, then known as Rivera. It was part of the 1850 land claim of 640 acres of William S. Torrance and his wife Mary Jane. The land had previously been inhabited by the Clackamas Indians.

Henry Corbett's Residence, designed by the prominent Portland architectural firm of Whitehouse & Foulhoux, was sited at the top of the property with a view of Mt. Hood to the east. Henry Corbett lived in the house until his death in 1957, and his wife Gretchen Hoyt Corbett continued to live there until her death in 1978. The original 19 acres was then subdivided into a number of building sites ranging in size from 1/2 acre to more than 3-1/2 acres. A site of 1.57 acres was retained around the Henry Corbett house and designated as Lot 10 of Block 2, Henry Ladd Corbett Estates Addition. Houses have since been built on most of the other platted sites of the original property." National Register Nomination Form, Corbett, H. - Background and Setting

The El Mirador Building and Tower at 1150 North Indian Canyon Drive completed in circa 1927 as the El Mirador Hotel is a Spanish Colonial Revival style building. The architectural firm of Walker and Eisen of Los Angeles designed the hotel consisting approximately of 200 rooms. The hotel contained a main building, swimming pool, dining rooms and detached bungalows; all components that reflected a "grand hotel" of the 1920s. After the sale of the hotel in 1973 the detached wings and bungalows were demolished (November 1979) to accommodate the expanding Desert Regional Hospital Campus.

  - HD: My grandfather married Annie Mecham - I think it was in [18]'68. In any event, he bought property in Ross and moved here in 1870. The property, as I remember it, (I don't know the exact amount) was roughly bordered on the north by Bolinas Avenue and went from Sir Francis Drake up to the timberline on Bald Hill, then went across following the timberline down the water company line to the road that comes up from Lagunitas Road into the water company property.
  - CE: Where Phoenix Lake is now?
  - HD: Yes, that is now called, I think, Dibblee Lane from there down to Lagunitas Road. And then it angles over on top of the hill, which is to the south of the Branson School today, and then from there, more or less down to Sir Francis Drake. That property is outlined on the county map, which we have in Bolinas, and is dated (I think), 1894.
  - CE: How much acreage was that?
  - HD: I don't know. Incidentally, my grandfather was very much interested in plants and he planted a great many things, including his driveway, which goes from what is now the entrance of Branson School down past the Catholic Church. The elms there were all planted by my grandfather.
  - CE: All that, what is now Fernhill?
  - HD: Yes. Well, the place was called "Fernhill."
  - CE: Yes, what a beautiful name.
  - HD: And he also planted the elms along Shady Lane in Ross. Shady Lane, incidentally, was named Longfellow Lane but was never known as anything but Shady Lane, as far as I know.
  - CE: Had you visited the place as a young man?
  - HD: Yes, yes. When I was about six. But before we get to that, my grandfather was very much interested in plants and as he had a lot of contacts with shipping captains, who sailed all over the world, they would bring him plants from various areas. And he developed those at Fernhill, many of them in his hothouse, which he loved to work in. They also had dairy cows they ran up in the area and so on. My grandfather died in 1895 and my grandmother sold the property, I believe, around 1900 or shortly thereafter, and built on what would be the southwest corner of the property. That's on Upper Road, where she built a home then, which was later bought by my Uncle Benjamin.

CE: That house is still there, is it not?

HD: Still standing. It was sold to the Ross' about five or six years ago and since been resold.

CE: Such a beautiful home and beautiful gardens there.

HD: Well, he was very much interested in gardens and particularly in azaleas and rhododendrons and things of that kind. They started to grow up, all the children in Ross, that is my--

CE: Well, how many were in your family? Do you have brothers?

HD: My uncle, Albert James, my father, Harrison, and my youngest uncle, Benjamin H., and my aunt, Anita L. The boys went to school in the Bates School in San Rafael. That was off Mountain View Avenue. If you know that area, it's where the Madison home was later built.

- o ALBERT DIBBLEE'S FERN HILL ESTATE

In 1870, soon after his marriage (to Annie Meacham of San Rafael) Albert Dibblee bought 78.4 lush acres of land from Annie Ross. As a condition of this original sale, Dibblee obtained the right to call his land "Fern Hill", a name that was originally coined by James and Annie Ross.

In 1873 and 1875, Albert and wife purchased additional parcels adjoining "Fern Hill" creating a 110-acre estate where they built their Gothic Style Victorian mansion. The land at 20 Glenwood was part of the vast "Fern Hill" estate (located near the estate's south western border).

The Dibblees joined the James Ross heirs and the William Barber family to become one of the first full-time residents of the Ross Valley. The Dibblees raised their five children Albert James, Harrison, Benjamin, Anita and little Annie. All but Annie lived to adulthood, and the three boys all married and remained Ross residents.

THE DIBBLEE SUBDIVISIONS

In 1895 Albert Dibblee died. Soon thereafter, the newly-widowed Annie Dibblee began to subdivide the grand 110-acre Fern Hill estate into new subdivisions of salable parcels of various sizes.

Annie sold the Fern Hill mansion on reduced parcel to early railroad and energy innovator John Martin. Martin razed the Dibblee's Gothic mansion and built a "modern" stucco mansion for his family on the site. Branson School now stands on this location.

The Dibblee heirs kept choice parcels in the new "Dibblee Villa Lots" tract for their new homes. Annie Dibblee retained the largest parcel (parcel D*) located on Upper Road and built a spectacular new home for herself and her youngest children (now 7 Upper Road). Eldest son, Albert James Dibblee and his wife Ethel, chose lot #14*, along Glenwood Ave, near his mother's new home. Albert and Ethel remained in their home for about 30 years. The Dibblee Estate Co was formed to sell the remaining parcels.

One of the finest of these lots (due to its creek side setting and rare level topography) was the large parcel (#13*) at 20 Glenwood Ave. This lot adjoined Albert and Ethel Dibblees lot (#14*) to the north, and Henry Bothins estate (# 12*) to the south. The Hale family purchased this multi-acre property and built a lovely country home there at the turn of the century. Although research on this family has resulted in little information, it is known (from historic oral histories) that the "Hale family" became part of the Ross Community and remained in the home for over three decades. (Title held under Mary J. Hale)

This Victorian Italianate style house, built in 1875, was once the home of John L. Gilpatrick, a Professor of Mathematics, and his wife. In the first half of the twentieth century, it served for sixteen years in the Denison Co-op housing option, and around a dozen women suffering financial difficulties were able to live in the home and provide for themselves under a housemother. The house, once located on the site of Huffman Hall, was moved to its present site in 1958 in anticipation of the new dorm's construction. Now, Gilpatrick houses the Honors Program offices, rooms for 10 coed Honors Students, and seminar and meeting rooms.

Edward Deeds House, 231 West Broadway

The Edward Deeds House is one of several properties owned at one time by the successful businessman and Denison graduate. After his time at Denison, Deeds became a co-owner of Delco, a company sold to the United Motors Corporation for $7 million in 1916. Receiving half the money from the sale, Deeds proceeded to nearly double Denison's acreage through donations of land north of College Hill, and purchasing all of Prospect Hill, today known as the East Quad. Additionally, Deeds was a Colonel in the US Armed Forces, a publisher of the Granville Times newspaper from 1924-1928, and one-time director of the National City Bank in New York City.

  - Ralph Russell established the North Union Settlement in 1822 with just over 80 individuals. In 1826, the group dammed Doan Brook, thus creating the Lower Lake and establishing a gristmill and a sawmill. Later, in 1854, the community built a second dam creating the Upper Lake, and constructed another mill.[21] Also called 'The Valley of God's Pleasure', the colony peaked around 1850 with about 300 settlers.[22] As the Shakers practiced celibacy, the colony faded away and was closed in 1889. In 1905, the land was bought by brothers M.J. and O.P. Van Sweringen who envisioned the first garden styled suburb in Ohio for the site.[22] The brothers constructed homes, set aside land for churches and schools, and planted trees. Originally referred to as Shaker Village, the community was incorporated in 1912 and reached city status in the 1931.[23] Shaker Heights is known for its stringent building codes and zoning laws, which have helped to maintain the community's housing stock and identity throughout the years.[24] Approximately seventy percent of the city of Shaker Heights is listed on the National Register of Historic Places as Shaker Village Historic District.

    - McLeans House Designed by John Lyle (Toronto, Ontario)
John Bayne Maclean was a successful reporter and editor of the Toronto Daily Mail before he created his first magazine, the Canadian Grocer, in 1887. That kicked off a publishing career that eventually led to the founding of Maclean's in 1905, as well as the Financial Post, Chatelaine and Mayfair. The house on Austin Terrace was built in 1910 by John Lyle, the Canadian architect behind Union Station and the Royal Alexandra Theatre. Much of Lyle's work has been torn down, and the Maclean House is one of only a handful of Lyle buildings still standing in Toronto. Maclean died inside the home in 1950, at the age of 87.

  - But Crieff in 1987 did not look shabby and neglected. The Rev. Andrew McLean had spent barely sixteen years at Knox Church, Crieff, before his death, but his older son was Col. John Bayne Maclean, who founded the Maclean-Hunter Publishing Company, and his younger one, Hugh, started the Hugh C. Maclean Publishing Company, which became the nucleus of Southam Business Publications. Floyd Chalmers, in his biography of Col. Maclean, "Gentleman of the Press", describes how the colonel returned to Crieff in 1916 to bury his mother in the churchyard alongside her husband, and was shocked at the neglect he saw. He engaged Olmsted Brothers, North America's leading landscape architects of the time, to change all that. The citizens of Crieff were grateful and overwhelmed. The manse where Col. Maclean was born was empty, and the Knox Church congregation presented it to him as a gift. Painted and remodelled, it became his country home. From then until his death in 1950, the colonel was a familiar figure in Crieff.
<http://www.clarksoftomfad.ca/RoadtoCrieff.htm>
  - The Colonel not only restored the old manse but also added a library, a greenhouse and supervised by his gardener Frank Gartland constructed a rock garden, which as a beauty spot of this kind was considered by some as being unequalled in Western Ontario at this time.
The manse property was inherited by his nephew, but by an error the clause relating to the return of the manse to the congregation had been omitted from the registered deed. It was eventually sold which may have been a blessing in disguise. It is now Sunset Villa.

In early 1950 a group of Southern Ontario Danes had an idea to build a retirement home for Danes, and on May 13, 1950 the first Board of Directors was elected.
  - The History of Sunset Villa.
On May 13th 1950 the first Board of Directors was elected for Sunset Villa. They were: Magnus Jensen, Frederick Nielsen, Erik Thure, Aksel William Suder, Christian Jensen, Emilie Nielsen and Karen Eriksen. In 1954, after many dances, bazaars, lotteries and bake sales, the necessary funds were raised to purchase about 50 acres of land in Crieff, Ontario from the well known publisher of MacLean Magazine, Lt. Colonel J.B. MacLean.
On June 5th 1955, the inauguration took place, marking the first Danish Constitution Day celebration held at Sunset Villa. This yearly event has taken place, without interruption, on the first Sunday in June each year with visitors by the thousands attending.

- o The property of Crieff Hills Community was first worked by Highland Scots who settled this area in the 1830's. They cleared the land, building log cabins and barns. When their families grew they used the stone of the area to build solid stone houses. They borrowed the name Crieff from a town at the edge of the highlands. They spoke Gaelic and for this reason brought their first minister - The Reverend Andrew Maclean, from Scotland as well. The first child born in the manse was John Bayne Maclean, who grew up to become a newspaper man. He founded "Maclean's magazine, "The Financial Post" and Maclean-Hunter publishers. He was known as Col. Maclean since he attained the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the Canadian Militia.

In the 1920's Col Maclean was responsible for having restoration and renovation work done on the church grounds and cemetery at the cross-roads of Crieff. In recognition of his service, he was given the old manse and an acre of land in 1925, which he made into his country home. He gradually bought up 300 acres of adjacent farm land and made a model working farm with a dairy herd, pigs, grain fields, orchards and about 100 acres of reforested land. His estate - Crieff Hills Farm - became known far and wide for its beautiful landscape and gardens.

When he died in 1950 he left 250 acres of the farm and its buildings to the Presbyterian Church in Canada, along with money invested to be used "to maintain and develop the several properties at Crieff ... as a model and example to other communities." After 25 years of being rented out for farming and private residences, the property began to be developed into a retreat and conference centre for the church under the Directorship of the Reverend Robert Spencer and the Maclean Estate Committee.

  - o "When Richmond College purchased the former Westhampton Park in 1910, there were several buildings standing on the property that had been a part of the former amusement park. One of these was the Westhampton Park Casino, a two storied open pavilion for dancing and dining. When funds were not available for building a chapel-auditorium on the site where the casino stood, the building committee for the new campus decided to enclose the pavilion and use it for the needed chapel-auditorium.

From 1914 to 1925, commencement ceremonies for both Richmond College and Westhampton College were held in the building. In June 1918, the Playhouse became a barracks for enlisted men serving in World War I, and a second floor was added. After the war, the building was again used as a chapel until Cannon Memorial Chapel was completed in 1929.

The Playhouse was used at various times as an auditorium, gym, office space, and theater for both Richmond College and Westhampton College. After Science Hall was destroyed by fire in 1925, the science departments moved to the Playhouse. They remained there until the new science buildings (Puryear, Maryland, and Richmond Halls) were completed between 1927 and 1933. The University Players performed in the building throughout the 1940s.

On November 19, 1950, a fire destroyed the stage and backstage area of the Playhouse. The building was used to a limited extent afterwards. After the January 1951 fire at the Student Shop, the Slop Shop was moved into the west wing of the Playhouse under the balcony, extending from the Messenger office to just in front of the stage. Eventually the Slop Shop and the post office were moved into the building that is now called Weinstein Hall when it opened in 1951. When the Playhouse was torn down in 1953 to begin work on Boatwright Memorial Library, the Richmond Times Dispatch referred to it as "the oldest landmark on campus."

Vestavia Country Club, nestled in the mountains of Vestavia Hills, spans over a 340 acre area. In the late 1940's the original plans for VCC started with a riding club called Vestavia Hills Riding Club. It was eventually decided that a country club would better suit the needs of the people of Vestavia and the name was changed to Vestavia Country Club.
Construction began on the club the latter part of 1948 and it was opened to membership on June 12, 1950. From its inception, Vestavia Country Club has endeavored to offer to its members a friendly, family oriented atmosphere and to promote the kind feelings and culture of its members. It has been successful in this endeavor and has been a credit to Birmingham and the South.

  - “The first recorded deed to the land was signed by President Grant to Abraham and Sarah Hartzell in 1875. More land was deeded to Samuel and Mary Hess in 1880. The Denver Lookout Mountain Resort Land Transit and Improvement Company acquired 2300 acres of Lookout Mountain in 1889 for a resort capitalized with $500,000. Investors hired Frederick Law Olmsted (creator of New York’s Central Park) to plan a resort hotel at the east summit (where nonconforming antenna towers now stand) with hiking and horse trails connected clusters of summer cabins. Colorado’s silver bust in 1893 and lack of a water supply delayed the project.
In 1902, the Lookout Mountain Resort Company was again capitalized. In 1903, the City of Golden agreed to provide water taps for Lookout development in exchange for a pipeline right-of-way from Beaver Brook Watershed to Cedar Lake Reservoir and down to the city. British developer Rees Vidler acquired much of the resort land in 1907. Golden booster “Cement Bill” completed the Lariat Trail to Lookout from Golden and Vidler built a funicular up from Golden in 1914. The City of Denver acquired land for Lookout Mountain Park and a gravesite for Buffalo Bill in 1917. Mount Vernon Country Club, established in 1922, became THE primary amenity as Lookout Mountain for wealthy nature lovers. The 1930s Depression and World War II delayed further development until the housing shortage of the 1950s brought GIs to build homes in the foothills with federal Veteran Administration loans.”

  - Many developers dreamed of capitalizing on the extraordinary views. Colorado pioneer W. A. H. Tabor and other investors hired New York City Central Park designer Frederick Law Olmsted, Sr. to design the “City on the Hill” in 1889. Olmsted planned roads that respected natural topography. Cedar Lake Reservoir at the east summit would provide water for the development. On January 18, 1890, investors offered $120,000 in stock options to build the “Denver-Lookout Mountain Resort” on 2,390 acres. The plan called for a hotel (above Cedar Lake Reservoir, where most of the antenna towers were erected), summer cabins, and trails through native flora and fauna. A promotional bon fire “on the hill” in February, 1890 promoted “ Denver’s greatest attraction.”

- While the first Garden Club in the United States was organized in Athens, GA in 1890, it was not until the mid-1920's that Garden Clubs began to be organized in Tampa. Representatives of those garden clubs met on January 31, 1928 at the home of Mrs. Sheldon Stringer to form the Tampa Federation of Garden Clubs, Inc. Azalea, Bayshore, Founders, Garden Gate, Heights, Old Fashioned, and Rose Circles were represented at that organizational meeting. Mrs. Stringer, then President of Founders, was elected the first President of TFGC. Tampa Federation immediately became a member of the Florida Federation of Garden Clubs, Inc. which had been formed in 1925.

The first club house was located at the intersection of Platt Street and Bayshore Boulevard. Around 1948, that house was sold and another was purchased on Bayshore Boulevard. Fifteen years later, this house was demolished to make room for our present building. The new club house, occupied in 1969, was named the Tampa Garden Center. About this same time, additional land was obtained, making room for our spacious gardens.

- This is a great article, but it got me to wondering if what I think is the Jacobs estate is correct. Around 1975, a Goodyear property at Bowen and Seneca was sold, the mansion was refurbished and the rest of the property developed into townhouses. I think the Jacobs property is near the 90-degree bend at Willardshire near Seneca St., since the Cazenovia Creek area which would be around 1-2 mi away was, I believe, either donated or sold by the Knox family to the US Army for the launching area of the Orchard Park Nike base which was decommissioned in 1962 (the Integrated Fire Control component was on Transit Rd near Milestrip and the old buildings there were used for awhile by Roswell Park, but none of that remains except for some asphalt helicopter pads). I'm hoping someone reading this article might have a bit more information to share and thank goodness that the vast green space in that area is so well appreciated - and thanks to whoever might have something to share!

DAVID THOR, EAST AURORA, NY

@David, the house you refer to on Seneca Street belonged to a member of the Knox family. You are correct that the Jacob's house is actually in Elma.

- "Ruth Hill Beard House, "Chastellux", 1929, McKim, Mead & White
In 1916, Ruth Hill Beard, daughter of railway entrepreneur James J. Hill, who built the Great Northern Railway, purchased the William Kent house from the estate of Emily Lorillard Kent. In the late 1920s, Beard sold sufficient shares to build a new house, which was completed following the death of her husband in 1930. The home, the largest in Tuxedo Park, was given the name "Chastellux" because it was said to have been built on the spot where the Marquis de Chastellux, who visited America in 1780 and travelled on the nearby Continental Road, first set eyes on the Tuxedo lake. In 1931, Beard married Pierre Lorillard V (Percy, also known as the Squire), the son of the founder of Tuxedo Park, who had been a widower since his wife's apparent suicide in 1909. The Lorillards lived in "Chastellux" until Percy's death in 1940, whereupon Mrs. Ruth Hill Beard Lorillard donated the house to the Academy of Mount St. Vincent" p.264-265, Tuxedo Park: The Historic Houses, Tuxedo Historical Society, 2007

- "I attended school at the now-defunct Academy of Mount Saint Vincent, during the shabby years of the Park. The main instruction/administration building was Lindley Hall (The Whitney Munroe house). We used the sunroom for chorus practice, and the bedrooms for classrooms. They must have removed the wing which held our science labs and cafeteria. Up a small hill there was a gym and theater. Castellux (the Lorillard house) was where most of the nuns lived, a beautiful chapel is part of the original house and the freshman boarders lived there, too. The Sophomores and juniors lived at Marian Hall, and the lucky seniors lived at Renamor where they had a pool which was used in hot weather for gym classes. It was a beautiful and peaceful place and I often think of how lucky we were to have spent our school days in such special surroundings." <http://domicidalmaniac.blogspot.com/2010/01/tuxedo-park-ny.html>

  - "In the summer of 1915, the Nims were invited by Lotawana's sister Kate Ratcliffe to visit her in Woods Hole. It is clear that both the social and horticultural atmosphere must have captivated them for they returned year after year. In 1923 they bought a small piece of property on Church Street and had plans drawn up to build a most imposing house. On a whim, they also made an offer on a large adjacent tract (44 acres) that sat between the Vineyard Sound beach and the railroad tracks. The previous owner, John Glidden, had been the Treasurer of the Pacific Guano Company and when the company went bankrupt, he had been blamed... In 1929 Mr. Nims contacted the Olmsted Brothers to do some extensive landscape planning. They were charged with dividing the property into house lots, creating bridle paths through the brambles, moving the vegetable garden closer to the house and trying again to integrate the steep eastern bluff, the house and the surrounding land. Mr. L. H. Zack from the Olmsted office came that winter and took pictures of the land and began a survey of the property." Impressed by Higginbotham, Prince sold the 1,000 acre estate to Gordon for a very small sum and donated a large sum to construct what would become the Prince Memorial Chapel. In 1955, Gordon moved to Wenham, Massachusetts, selling its old facilities to Wentworth Institute of Technology (WIT).

- The Chapel's Trip to America
In 1926 Gertrude Hill Gavin, daughter of James J. Hill, the American railroad magnate, acquired the Chapel, and it was Couelle who negotiated its transfer to her fifty-acre estate at Jericho, Long Island, in the New World.
When the Chapel was dismantled the Mayor of Chasse collected, from the remaining records and from the older aristocratic families of the countryside, some of the ancient traditions associated with the Chapel, "the stones of which you have removed some days ago." To Couëlle he further wrote:
The Chapel in question must have been built in the fifteenth century, perhaps even before, and was called the Chapelle de St. Martin de Sayssuel...this Chapel, dating from the Middle Ages, formed a small edifice which was without doubt used for devotions and for the burial of influential people of the community.
Among the many historic memorials in the Chapel he especially noted the tomb -- still a part of the sanctuary floor -- of Chevalier de Sautereau, a former Chatelain of Chasse, who was "Compagnon d'Armes" of Bayard (1473-1524), the famous French knight "Sans peur et sans reproche" (without fear and without reproach). Stone-by-stone the Chapel was dismantled and shipped in 1927 to Long Island amidst anxieties lest the French government stop the exportation. These fears were well founded, for shortly thereafter the French "Monuments Historiques" halted shipments of such monuments abroad.

In 1919, Mr. King replaced Mr. Jephtha Wade II as the First Vice President of the Museum Board of Trustees and also served for a short period as Acting President of the CMA Board of Trustees following Mr. Wade's death and before his own sudden death in March of 1926. Mrs. Fanny Tewksbury King served on the Advisory Council of the CMA from 1926 until her death in 1949, at which time her daughter Frances King (Mrs. Gilbert) Schafer began serving on the council. Mrs. Schafer served on the Advisory Council until 1968. She was an active board member of Rainbow Hospital, the Visiting Nurse Association, Family Health Association, and Church Home of the Episcopal church.

- 40.09494,-75.243827 09095 Elkins, William M. Montgomery County Pennsylvania 52 1929-1931
  - Hidden behind ornate turn-of-the-century wrought iron gates and stone walls since its construction 115 years ago, the Estate is now open to the public for the first time in its storied history. Built as a summer retreat for William L. Elkins, railway magnate and titan of industry and philanthropy, the Elkins Estate boasts two of only a few remaining examples of Gilded Age architecture in Elkins Park, Pennsylvania, a quiet suburb that once provided a popular refuge for the wealthiest and most prominent Philadelphia businessmen and their families. The Estate was designed and built by renowned architect Horace Trumbauer, whose resume includes such notable monuments as the Free Library of Philadelphia, 30th Street Station, and the Philadelphia Museum of Art, and this private, 42-acre property boasts a magnificent 64,000 square foot Italian Renaissance-style palace and an elegant 31,000 square foot Elizabethan Tudor mansion nestled among rolling lawns, sculpted gardens and water features. In 1932, the Elkins family sold the Estate to the Order of the Dominican Sisters of St. Catherine de Ricci, who preserved and maintained the property behind closed doors and a tree-lined perimeter while operating it as a religious retreat house for women for 75 years until financial pressures forced them to sell. Land Conservancy of Elkins Park Inc. rescued the historic Elkins Estate from demolition and development in February 2009 and has been focused on preservation and conservation issues while adapting the property for reuse as a health and wellness retreat as well as a wedding, corporate event, and special occasion venue. <http://www.elkinsestate.org/index.php/history/the-estate>

Posted on April 19, 2011
Owned by an order of the Dominican Sisters for almost 80 years since they purchased the estate from the family of tycoon William Elkins, it was sold by the sisters in late 2009 to the nonprofit Elkins Park Land Conservancy. The Conservancy is the brainchild of nonprofit entrepreneur David Dobson of Wyncote, the Executive Director and President of Food For All, Inc. of Philadelphia, which he has headed since 1983. Food for All is primarily a housing service organization for at-risk clients. <http://www.citizenscall.net/neighborhoods/ep/inquirer-again-targets-elkins-estate-controversy/>

- "Briar Hill was built between 1929 and 1930 for Geroge W. Elkins's son William McIntire Elkins. It was located across Thomas Road from Widener's Erdenheim Farms. Elkins was an investment banker and a philanthropist. The Georgin Revival-style mansion, set amid a 95-acre estate, incorporated elements of the American Federal style. The front facade featured two forward-[rojecting wings connected by curved arcades and awhite marle front door surround. The styles of the interiors ranged from American Feeral to Greek Revival [accompanied by photo of facade with entrance gates]...In 1948, Briar hill was sold to Rosabelle Deichelmann. - Frank J. Sensenbrenner, 1864 - 1952
President and Chief Executive Officer, Kimberly-Clark Corporation
Neenah, Wisconsin, U.S.A.

Frank J. Sensenbrenner was born in Menasha, Wisconsin, on December 23, 1864. He was educated through the eighth grade in public and parochial schools. His first job was as a grocery store clerk in 1878, followed by a postal clerk in the Menasha Post Office in 1879. Between 1880 and 1884, Mr. Sensenbrenner worked as a bookkeeper for the Menasha Chair Company, and then for John Strange Lumber and Saw Mill until 1888, when he joined Webster Manufacturing Company. In 1889 he went to work for Kimberly-Clark & Company, again as a bookkeeper.

When the firm was reorganized in 1907, Mr. Sensenbrenner became a stockholder and rose successively through the ranks to president and chief executive officer of the corporation, a position he held from 1928 to 1942. Although John A. Kimberly retained the title of president until his death in 1928, Mr. Sensenbrenner, as first vice president, actually ran the company through the teens and most of the '20s, until he was officially elected president in 1928. He was chairman of the board until 1944 and remained a director until 1952.

Mr. Sensenbrenner and his wife, Margaret, who died in 1912, had four children, John, Gertrude (Bergstrom), Margaret (Gilbert), and J. Leslie. Throughout his life, F. J. Sensenbrenner lived in Neenah or Menasha, WI.

  - "The earliest families who came to The Hamptons looked for the Bay life to fill their summer vacation needs. Many of these families came from Connecticut, looking for a summer of fishing and quiet enjoyment. Many built their homes right on the inlets and the tributaries that the North Sea Area is known for. Small fishermen cottages dot the landscape and many have been there since the turn of the 20th century.
---Back on the road, you will pass the intriguing Salms Estate on the left as you head North towards the Great Peconic Bay. "The Port of Missing Men" was named after the 17 men who died on a shipwreck in the port in the early 1800's. It is the location of famous hunting grounds called Cows Neck. Oil Tycoon Henry Huttleson Rogers bought 1200 acres and built the Lodge for his family and friends as an escape from the lavish home (Black Point) in the estate section in Southampton Village.
Here, men have gathered over the decades to hunt and to enjoy respite from the business world--It is also a favorite of European royalty who have enjoyed frequent pheasant hunting parties over the years. Currently, the Lodge is owned by Willie Salm, widow of Peter Salm who was the son of Millicent Rogers and her Austrian husband. The Lodge is still used during the winters for the remaining family members and their traditional gatherings. Below is a link that takes you to an article written for Dan's Papers, a local paper, regarding the Port Of Missing Men and it's most famous owner Millicent Rogers, granddaughter of the famous owner and a society princess from 1900 until her death in 1950.
The majestic entry to the fabled lodge and estate stands open and welcoming, however, rarely is the public invited into this American Treasure. Once in a great while Willie Salm will hold an open house in conjunction with the Southampton Historical Museum; Fund raisers for the museum have been held there with enormous success. The Lodge is a copy of European Shooting Lodges, with an enormous fireplace a the end of the main Hall. There, the family still gathers at certain winter holidays and a tradition from the earliest part of Southampton history becomes real once again.

- “[Millicent] Rogers lived as well as she dressed, in settings equal to her wardrobe. She grew up in Manhattan, in Tuxedo Park, N.Y., and in Southampton at Black Point, a 1914 Italianate villa on the ocean commissioned by her father, with gardens by Frederick Law Olmsted. In the 1920s, Col. Henry Huddleston Rogers II went on to consolidate a breathtaking 1,200 acres of meadows, ponds, woods and wetlands rich in wildlife on Southampton’s Cow Neck, a peninsula reaching into Peconic Bay. He christened the property Port of Missing Men (which takes the prize for the most flummoxing name ever harnessed to a piece of real estate.) It was the largest tract on Long Island until 1998, when the financier Louis Moore Bacon purchased nearly half of it for $25 million.

Port of Missing Men, designed by John Russell Pope in the style of a hunting lodge, was originally intended as a manly retreat from formal life in the big mansion on the beach, according to Ann Pyne of McMillen, the blue-chip firm that decorated it in an 18th-century country vernacular, with hooked rugs, Windsor chairs and the kind of collectibles that a ship captain might have brought back from his travels. Almost everything remains in the house, which is now owned by Countess Salm, Millicent Rogers’s daughter-in-law. Bacon donated his 540 acres as a conservation easement.”

On October 17, 1907, the Clubhouse at the Lexington Country Club was opened in a gala event. Following the opening of the Clubhouse, the Lexington Country Club became a popular location for outings for the entire Lexington, Fayette, and surrounding counties' community. Social activities on the weekend drew large numbers of attendees. This was the era of the big bands, and Saturday evening dances in spring or fall were a popular pastime for the people of Lexington. For some members, Saturday evenings involved a social dance at the Club with a trip to ride the roller coaster or carousel at the nearby amusement park when the band was on intermission. The Club also hosted events for major holidays throughout the year, a tradition that continued on into the twenty-first century. These events earlier featured live entertainment and food in the old picturesque bungalow Clubhouse. Now that the Clubhouse was constructed, the Board of Governors turned to the next matter at hand? The construction of a golf course. Famous golf course designer Tom Bendelow was selected to complete the course layout. Bendelow had created a substantial reputation for golf course design well before coming to Lexington.”

  - “Many of us may not be aware that Big Spring is located in one of the most historic areas of Louisville and Jefferson County. Our club property of 162.91 acres borders the Middle Fork of Beargrass Creek and the site of Floyd’s Station, a fort built by John Floyd in 1779. Floyd, who served with George Rogers Clark during the Revolutionary War, held a deed for 1,400 acres, part of which includes our club’s property as we know it today.

The founders of our club so named it because of a “big spring” which once furnished water for pioneer settlers in the area. This spring, located just below the 13th green of our golf course, is still flowing today. Few of us remember how in 1926 Harry Dumesnil and Alvah H. Terry formed the Big Spring Land Company, a corporation organized to purchase property for the establishment of a private golf club. A tract of approximately 160 acres with boundaries on Cannon’s Lane and Dutchman’s Lane was purchased, and in May 1927 the Big Spring Golf Club was formally opened with Dumesnil serving as its first president. The early years were extremely difficult from a financial standpoint, especially during the depression years of the 1930’s. However, dedicated and optimistic leadership brought the club safely through these depression years, and during the past three decades the club began to grow and prosper. Additional social and recreational facilities were added: so much so that we were no longer just a golf club. In 1962 the name was changed to Big Spring Country Club in recognition of all the facilities and enjoyment that had been made available to every member of the family.”

The Parmachenee Club, a private hunting-fishing club on Treat's Island at Parmachenee Lake is seen from a distance across the lake.

The club began in 1890 on the Meadows of the Magalloway River and moved to the island when a paper company dam flooded the first locale. A camp farm on the mainland provided staples for lodgers.

Lunch camps were located at Indian Cove, Little Boy Falls, Cleveland Eddy, Taylor Eddy, and Fireplace.

By Jonathan Gaither, Special to the Sun Journal

John Danforth's life led him through Maine, Florida and Idaho, before his ultimate demise, and left a trail of interesting stories, unique inventions and lots of history. In August of 1913, in Juneau, Alaska, Danforth passed away.

More than 85 years later, Robert Cook of Farmington developed an interest in Danforth, a man whose life was shrouded in mystery as well as intrigue, and set out to write a book, called "Chasing Danforth," which was recently published.

It was in 2000 that Cook and his wife, Florence, purchased two of the seven remaining camps on Treat's Island at Parmachenee Lake. In the 1870s Danforth had established Camp Caribou, and it was that connection that would start Cook's quest for the truth, and the story, behind the man.

Cook said his interest in Danforth started mostly out of curiosity.

"I started nosing around, and all I knew was a little bit about this and that, and a little history about the place," said Cook.

Cook's interest quickly turned to a diary, written by Danforth and his friend Fred Barker.

In 1876, Danforth and Barker embarked on a hunting and trapping expedition, which would be chronicled in the diary, called "Hunting and Trapping on the Upper Magalloway and Parmachenee Lake: A Winter in the Wilderness." Originally published in 1882, the diary was reprinted by Barker in 1929, with a forward that recognized his friend Danforth, who had passed away in 1913.

"That was the only thing I knew about Danforth, his date of death in 1913," said Cook. "I had no idea when in '13, where, or anything. So we started doing research."

The research led Cook and his wife to Augusta, and the Maine State Museum Archives. After over eight hours of searching, they finally stumbled upon what they needed.

"We spent most of the day going through microfilm," said Cook. "Ten minutes before they closed, my wife, Florence, was going down the thing, and bango, she found the birth certificate of John and Sarah's son, Richard. And that gave us John's original birthplace, being Bristol, New Hampshire. And that's when the chase all started, Chasing Danforth."

Cook was able to discern that Danforth had established Camp Caribou, along with several other camps in the area, which he rented in a rotational system, allowing renters to move from camp to camp around the area, seeing many different lakes and ponds, as opposed to just one.

Danforth's story continued with a boat ride to Florida on a ship he had built on his own, the first floating hotel in Stewart, Fla. He then continued on to Idaho, where he mined with his son until 1913, at which point he took a mysterious trip to Alaska, and ultimately died of pneumonia three weeks later.

- o Description: A classic Maine sporting camp from the 1870's, Camp Caribou on Parmachenee Lake has 7 vintage camps nestled together on their own island. These cabins are in remarkable good condition after 125 years. Power is supplied by a generator, and 6 wood stoves plus a large fireplace are the heating sources. Treats Island, approximately 2 acres in size, gives plenty of privacy plus a beach area and even a vegetable garden. Swimming, boating, and fishing are literally at your doorstep. A unique place to get away from it all and enjoy peace and quiet, wildlife, and expansive views of the lake and mountains, Parmachenee Lake is world-renowned for its trout and salmon fishing, with 912 acres and depths up to 93

ft. Located in Oxford County, about 1 hour from the Rangeley Region, presently on leased land, this sportsman paradise/lodge would be ideal for a family compound or corporate retreat.

- "Camp Caribou on Treat's Island, in the Rangeley area of western Maine and Lake Umbagog, NH established by John S. Danforth (1847-1913) in the early 1870's, emerged as one of the earliest legendary deer camps of the time. He leased approximately 200,000 acres from Berlin Mills Company and initially set up a floating camp that would eventually be pulled ashore and have a foundation added to it. Ultimately, Danforth constructed further additions as more deer hunters and fishermen learned about the great adventures and big bucks at Camp Caribou." p.16 (with photo of Danforth and company at Camp Caribou), Classic Deer Camps, Robert Wagner, Krause Publications, Aug 4, 2008

- At the close of the 19th century a few cabins were constructed along the shores of Tunk Lake, principally for summer recreation and winter hunting camps. The most famous of these cabins, called the Wickyup Club, was constructed by Admiral Richard Byrd, the famous polar explorer. Byrd would visit his oversized cabin by float-plane until his death in 1957. The cabin was lost to fire approximately 20 years later. Marshal Dodge, famous for his recordings of “Bert and I” and other Downeast humor also summered on Tunk Lake, arriving by float-plane. Tunk Lake is likely to retain its natural character thanks to public land acquisition through the Land for Maine’s Future program as well as large public-use conservation easements granted by land owners.

- Withdrawal of National Historic Landmark Designation
Wickup [sic], Vicinity of East Sullivan, Hancock County, Maine
The Wickyup estate was originally developed by the Eagle Mountain Lake Club in the late 1920s. The members were Florida millionaires who wished to vacation in Maine during the summer. The main structure was completed in 1929. Admiral Byrd and his wife first visited the estate in 1933 as guests of a friend. As a result of the Depression and the insolvency of some of the club members, the property became available for purchase a few years later and Byrd secured a mortgage for it. The Byrds spent their first full summer at Wickyup in 1937 and returned each summer thereafter.

Designated a National Historic Landmark on August 29, 1970, Wickyup was destroyed by fire in July 1984; only the four chimneys of the main house remained standing. Estate outbuildings remained after the fire, but these were peripheral structures and not the essential feature of the Landmark designation.

Accordingly, given the complete destruction of the main house, the designation was withdrawn on March 5, 1986, and the property was removed from the National Register of Historic Places.

- Built in 1878 by the Kahler family, Black Point Inn's colorful history includes rail barons, political leaders and one of Maine's most famous native sons, world-renowned artist Winslow Homer. Black Point Inn, originally known as Southgate House, was once one of many grand hotels to call Prouts Neck home.

Today, it's the area's sole remaining hotel, and a landmark to gracious hospitality.

With its wealth of natural beauty and abundant wildlife, Prouts Neck has long been an alluring destination.

Discovered first by native American Indians who came by canoe to fish the sea, Prouts Neck, Maine was colonized by English settlers in the 1600s. The area's rocky coast and dense pine forest made it appear dark from the water, inspiring the name Black Point.

Summer tourism led to a Prouts Neck building boom in the late 1800s when the Inn was built. The area also was beloved by Winslow Homer, whose family owned a cottage steps from the Inn. This renowned painter spent 25 years here painting and drawing inspiration from the sea surrounding the Inn. Located within his cottage is his artist studio, now owned by the Portland Museum of Art, which is undergoing renovations and hopefully will soon be open to the public on a limited basis during the summer season.

The Inn was sold in 1923 to the Sprague family who increased its size and added guest cottages built for rail barons. After Prohibition, Black Point Inn's Oak Room became Prouts Neck's first speak easy. During World War II the Black Point Inn continued to thrive, while many other resorts were demolished, some consumed by fire.

Since then, Black Point Inn has changed ownership several times, yet an emphasis on Old World charm and tradition remains. In 1969, two gentlemen in short sleeves were asked to leave the cocktail lounge as it was after 5:30 p.m. No matter that they were the governors of Connecticut and Rhode Island.

- History

Established in 1874, the Manitoba Club is the oldest private club in Western Canada. The first Clubhouse was founded in a rented building which burned to ashes in February 1875 when Winnipeg's first steam fire engine, on its inaugural run, failed to get there in time. Within 6 weeks, our intrepid founders found new quarters and a billiards table.

The temporary quarters served the Club for 6 glorious years. The third clubhouse was owned by the Club and located on Garry Street.

In November 1902, 3 lots were purchased from the Hudson's Bay Company at a cost of $8,000.00. A deposit of $500.00 was required. The East Wing was not part of the original 194 Broadway building, and was later added in 1909. The Clubhouse has 5 floors and covers 55,000 square feet.

194 Broadway was officially opened by His Excellency, The Governor General, Earl Grey on October 10, 1905.

The Jubilee Window was originally acquired during the Club Presidency of Sir Hugh J. MacDonald to commemorate Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee (1837 - 1897). Subscriptions were taken from members in 1887 to cover the cost, and it was installed in the Garry Street clubhouse in 1889. It was moved to 194 Broadway on June 9, 1904, and provisions were made to ensure its place of prominence at the top of the Grand Staircase.

The Club was once known as "the famous Manitoba Club" across Canada and throughout the northern United States. Its rooms have known many dignitaries, past and present; a testament to the impeccable service and unwavering quality of its food and beverage offerings.

- "In 1926, a group of members belonging to a social club called "The Amity Club" (located on Eutaw Place in Baltimore City) decided it was time for them to select and purchase a site in the countryside for a new club, which would eventually provide the membership's base for social and athletic activities. After looking at many sites and much deliberation with the forty-nine (49) original "founding fathers," a site was selected. The home and farm of Dr. Theodore Cook was purchased, and Woodholme was set-up on about two hundred acres behind what is now a flourishing commercial district on Reisterstown Road in Baltimore County.

In early 1927, they had inducted fifty new members and, at the same time, a temporary 9-hole golf course was completed. On June 27, 1927, the new club was dedicated and its name was changed to the Woodholme Country Club.”

- “History of the Country Club of New Bedford

Since the beginning of the century, the Country Club of New Bedford has had a great tradition, which has led to its current prestigious reputation in the New England area. The Club has a modest beginning, which took place before the turn of the century. The original club was located in the West End of New Bedford bordering on Hawthorne, Brigham, and Allen streets continuing out to Rockdale Avenue.

Several enthusiasts of golf formed the Club. It was called the Hawthorne Club. The six-hole layout became so popular that the club founders decided the course was too short and crowded. They closed the course and moved to our present site.

Although some were pessimistic about this move, within 16 months after its 1902 incorporation, the Club had 350 members and a waiting list. The original Board of Governors consisted of Club President John Bullard, William E. Hatch, Edward S. Brown, Edward T. Pierce, Oliver Prescott, William West, Clarence A. Cook and Frederick D. Stetson.

In 1923 the clubhouse burned to the ground, and the present clubhouse was built over the original foundation in 1924 with several additions, alterations and other improvements over the years.”

- The Somerset Club is a private social club in Boston, Massachusetts, founded perhaps as early as 1826.

The original club was informal, without a clubhouse. By the 1830s this had evolved into a group called the Temple. In 1851 the group purchased the home of Benjamin W. Crowninshield, located at the corner of Beacon and Somerset Streets. Originally called the Beacon Club, it was renamed the Somerset Club in 1852.

In 1871 the Somerset Club purchased the David Sears townhouse at 42 Beacon Street on Beacon Hill. Originally designed by Alexander Parris and built in 1819, Sears had added to the house in 1832 and had built the adjacent Crowninshield-Amory house at 43 Beacon Street for his daughter. The land on which the house stood was originally part of an 18-acre (73,000 m<sup>2</sup>) parcel owned by John Singleton Copley, who called it "his farm on Beacon Street." Eventually the Club bought 43 Beacon Street and joined the two houses into one large clubhouse.

- David Sears House / Somerset Club, Alexander Parris, 1819 / 1832

At 42 and 43 Beacon St. the Somerset Club dominates its section of Beacon hill. Its double bays rise above the roof line, and a substantial rusticated wall in front of it sets a monumental tone. Though French in design, the cartouches on its bowed front and the strong roof line give it styling which fits with its federalist styled neighbors.

Perhaps the most interesting element of the building is how it has been remade as the Beacon Hill neighborhood grew. Originally the mansion of David Sears, this was a free standing building, with only the bay on the right, and a garden between it and the Otis estate by Charles Bulfinch at 45 Beacon St. As land values skyrocketed through the 1820's, maintaining yards and separate structures on the hill become financially impractical. The Sears family doubled the home's size, establishing it as the most expensive dwelling in 1830's Boston.

Merging these mansions was clearly not a consideration when they were constructed. The neighboring Otis House had a large oval salon facing the Sears House. When these buildings were connected, the Sears House had to be built around the Otis' curved side.

In the 1860's Sears relocated to his country estate, the Longwood Cottage and Farm, in the exclusive Brookline enclave which he had developed. The Sears House underwent a final expansion after the Somerset Club took it over in 1872 and added the third floor which is seen here. This final addition completed the Sears House's transformation from being a distinctive granite mansion, to the fortress-like row-house seen here as the Somerset Club.

- The Tavern Club is a private social club in downtown Boston, Massachusetts, established in 1884 by Royal Whitman, T. Adamowski, B.C. Porter, George Munzig, and Frederick Prince. Charter members included Arthur Rotch and others. Membership is by invitation; in recent years membership includes women. Notable members of the Club have included William Dean Howells, Henry Cabot Lodge, Henry James, and Charles Eliot Norton.
 In February, 1885, the Club adopted the Totem of Bear, which continues today as mascot for the group. Frequent dinners, lectures, and musical and theatrical performances take place in the Club for the members and their guests. In March 1885, Mark Twain attended a dinner in his honor, and another in 1901. Dinners have been given in honor of many others, including Winston Churchill (1871) Elihu Vedder (1887), Rudyard Kipling (1895), Oliver Wendell Holmes (1902), John Singer Sargent (1903), Booker T. Washington (1905), Norman Angell (1913), George Macaulay Trevelyan (1924), Owen Wister (1929), Ignace Paderewski (1930).
 A pervasive sense of humor and occasion characterizes many Club activities. The 1907 Annual Meeting treated the Members to a Puppy Raffle. The Club played a baseball game against the rival St. Botolph Club on June 25, 1913.

  - "[Samuel] Parsons found at first, as Manning had earlier, that there was no great interest in Boston for a national organization. In July 1898 John Olmsted replied to Parsons to the effect that the few landscape architects of Boston thought it "entirely unlikely that any such comprehensive and elaborately organized professional association as you seem to have in mind will be successful until there are more experienced and well recognized practitioners willing to join it." Olmsted did say that the Boston group had agreed to start a purely informal local club, the Repton Club, to meet occasionally for dinner and discussion of each other's plans and sketches." p.386, Design on the Land: the Development of Landscape Architecture, Norman T. - 42.320034,-72.632203 03174 Home Culture Club Company Northampton Massachusetts 5 1903-1906
  - History
The People's Institute was founded in 1887 by Southern novelist George Washington Cable (1844-1925). Originally known as the Home Culture Clubs, the Institute continues to serve people of Northampton and the surrounding communities.
The initial Home Culture Clubs were organized as reading groups to help build bridges between peoples of different economic circumstances; they at first met in the homes of participants. Cable soon discovered that people of different means felt uncomfortable meeting in one another's homes and so determined that it would be better to hold meetings in some public location. As a consequence, by 1880 two reading rooms (one of which was reserved for the "ladies") were rented above what was then McCallum's Department store at 152 Main Street. With the availability of this public and mutually comfortable space, club membership did indeed increase, so much so that by the early 1890's a clubhouse was needed, and one was established in the old Methodist Church at 41 Center Street. The Home Culture Club movement which Cable founded spread to several other states; in fact, by 1892 there were some 300 members belonging to some 42 clubs. The greatest concentration of Home Culture Club activity, however, always remained in Northampton.

Initial funding of the Clubs came from small fees and contributions, most especially from the Lyman family of Northampton and the James family of New York City (one of whose members was originally from Northampton). In 1905, the building presently housing the People's Institute was officially opened; it was constructed using a $50,000 gift from philanthropist Andrew Carnegie.

Over the years, the People's Institute has housed a variety of programs offering different services designed to benefit the community in the 1890's classes were taught specifically for the working people in every subject from botany to bookkeeping. In the early 1900's, a school of domestic arts was established. English language classes and physical education programs were offered. A ballroom provided space for dances and theatrical programs. Annual garden competitions were sponsored. Education and enlightenment became the goals of the Home Culture Clubs. According to the founder Cable, "we seek to establish between homes of contrary fortunes - and between homes and the homeless - relations which something must establish."

Because of this aim, the organization in 1909 became officially known as The People's Institute.

Since its inception, the People's Institute has enjoyed a strong relationship with another Northampton institution, Smith College. Smith College students frequently have served as tutors in a variety of subjects, and proceeds of the College's annual Rally Day are donated to the Institute. College Presidents Seelye, Burton, and Neilson served on the Board of Directors, as did U.S. President Calvin Coolidge and his wife Grace.

The People's Institute continues to offer programs funded by user fees and the United Way. Recent efforts have been directed especially toward serving children and senior citizens. As in the early part of the century, when meeting space was rented to union locals and the Carnegie Coin Club, additional income is generated by renting office space to various groups and individuals.

  - Golf lives here! Founded at another location in 1900, Worcester Country Club contracted with renowned architect Donald J. Ross, who personally oversaw the design and construction of a gem that stretches to over 6650 yards and plays to a par of 70. One unusual feature is the five par threes, which make the course play longer and tougher than the yardage indicates.
The Opening Dedication, in 1914, featured William Howard Taft, the immediate past President of the United States. Taft, an avid golfer, had the honor of striking the first drive and authored a mean duck hook about 125 yards down the fairway. Several mulligans improved the President's performance!

- The Club was organized in 1922 when it assembled several parcels of land and engaged Ross. Traversing subtle and, at times, dramatic terrain, the architect's routing calls for the judicious use of both power and finesse. His knowledge of the game combined with unique horse drawn shapers produced the complex aprons and putting surfaces that were the crowning glory of a Ross creation. The course was completed in 1924 followed by the clubhouse in 1926 when Architecture magazine featured Longmeadow including the landscape architecture of Frederick Law Olmsted. Racquet sports and aquatics have since rounded out the Club's sporting facilities.

In 1927, Longmeadow hired its first professional, J. Victor East of Australia. A world renowned club maker and teacher who counted the Prince of Wales as a student, East's presence completed the founders' vision of a golfing club. By 1932, as the first head of nearby A.G. Spalding's Custom Built Department, East was working secretly with icon Robert Tyre Jones and founding member Milton Reach to produce the country's first matched set of flanged soled irons with steel shafts, technological breakthroughs that helped sustain Spalding through the Great Depression and ushered in a remarkable parade of players who used Longmeadow as a proving ground for the company's equipment.

- In 1898, the United States of America was preparing for its first encounter in international war. The preparations were busily being made for what was to become the Spanish-American War. Closer to home, the town of Milton was a rural village of 5,000 men, women, and children. The primary economic activity was farming, with some men going into the city of Boston to engage in their investment activities.

Despite this rustic setting, a small group of women established the Milton Woman's Club under the indomitable leadership of Miss Mary P. Webster. This new club was a nonpartisan, nondenominational organization. The club's purpose was to provide service and work for town improvement, library growth, and all matters pertaining to the public schools. These were truly ambitious goals for such a small group in a rural setting. The annual dues were set at 25 cents. Virtually every activity pertaining to the well-being of humans in the town of Milton is an outgrowth of the Milton Woman's Club.

Within a year of our foundation, the branch of the club for volunteer aid was so active in the efforts to help the local soldiers that it led to the establishment of the local chapter of the American Red Cross. Concerned with the intellectual development of the children, the club was the first to arouse the citizens of Milton into founding a public library. A fund was also established for the development of a children's room at that planned library. In 1904, the library was realized.

By 1906, the club sent money and clothes to the people made homeless by the San Francisco earthquake. That same year, the Woman's Club established a program for maternity clothing, as well as help to the townspeople who could not afford to buy clothes for their children. This effort grew into the Social Service League, which in time, developed into the Visiting Nurses' Association.

The Milton Woman's Club was also concerned with local schools and the advancement of the children. Summer Vocational Schools taught manual training, and a printing press was given to the high school. That same year, the club initiated a hot lunch program by paying the money to establish it and providing the service of its members. Eventually, the town took over the project. Again, that year the Collicott School was given a Fresh Air Room.

Ever mindful of the needs of the students, a College Loan Fund was established and later a Scholarship Fund was set. Most of the organizations in town followed the club's actions and offer Scholarship Aid to college-bound students.

In 1909, a Tuberculosis Clinic was established through the funding and efforts of the club, and the clinic was supported by vigorous sales of Christmas Seals. In the same year, the club gave $3,000 toward the establishment of a free bed in the Milton Hospital. The club also furnished a sitting room at the War Veteran's Hospital at Bedford.

During the 1920s, the Milton Woman's Club toiled steadily in the establishment and equipping of playgrounds for Milton's youth. During this period, ever mindful of aesthetics, the members of the club agitated to remove all billboards from the town, which gives Milton a more pleasant appearance today.

- 42.424153,-73.255806 09209 Pittsfield Country Club Pittsfield Massachusetts 3 1930
  - The beginnings of the Country Club of Pittsfield date back to 1897 when a group of local men and women decided to become familiar with the game of golf. They rented land for the construction of a nine-hole course in a quadrangle bordered by Dawes Avenue, Holmes Road, William Street and Arlington Street.

Two years later, they made plans to purchase the estate of Sarah Morewood, a 230 acre tract including a mansion known as "Broad Hall" and on August 24, 1900, the Country Club of Pittsfield was chartered by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The mansion had been built in 1785 by one Henry Van Schaack of Kinderhook, NY and the main part of the present clubhouse is that original structure. At one time a noted hotel, the Broad Hall mansion was later owned by Thomas Melville, uncle of Herman Melville (author of Moby Dick et al).

At various times in its history, Broad Hall had as guests President John Tyler, General Lafayette, Chief Justice Shaw and such literary giants as Henry W. Longfellow, Nathaniel Hawthorne and Oliver Wendell Holmes. In the 1850's it was a stopover on the "underground railroad".

The first golf course was nine holes and measured 3,240 yards. Two tennis courts were situated just north of the clubhouse where the first tee and putting green are located today. A new course of eighteen holes was designed in 1917 by the justly famous golf course architect, Donald J. Ross and this is more or less the course we play today.

- 42.482131,-70.894797 09313 Tedesco Country Club Marblehead/Salem Massachusetts 15 1932
  - History of Tedesco Country Club
Tedesco, formally incorporated in 1903, had its inception in 1899 in the minds of two Cambridge women and a Swampscott man: the Misses Houghton and Arthur Little. Their original plan, a modest one, called for a few holes of golf somewhere in the vicinity of the Swampscott waterfront. Presented to their friends, the plan met with only a casual reception, but perseverance on the part of the originators eventually led to a meeting at the home of a Boston man, Mr. H.O. Houghton, where it was decided that a golf club should be organized at an early date.
Fifteen summer residents of Swampscott and its environs agreed to guarantee five hundred dollars each, work commenced, and six holes were constructed on a 65 acre tract of land between Little's Point and Atlantic Avenue. A large summer residence was secured to serve as the main house, a nearby cottage was fitted out for the use of the salt water bathers, and a shed was built to shelter the members' horses. In those days motor vehicles were rare and unreliable, and carriages were the ordinary means of conveyance. With the limit of one hundred members, there were sixty-nine the first year. A golf tournament was held in July, tea was served every Saturday afternoon, there was a clambake on the shore, and all the club activities were maintained with a charge of only $25 for dues. No sooner had the season closed than the members, well pleased with their new golf club, laid plans to increase the six hole course to nine and to obtain a permanent location.
In 1901, the first bylaws of the club were voted on and accepted, and in the summer of that year the club acquired a tennis court, a croquet lawn, and three new holes for the golf course. In the fall of 1902 it was voted to lease the Childs farm and the Phillips land, the present site of the Tedesco Club and its golf course. Organization of the club was put on a more permanent basis, committees were appointed, and in 1903

Tedesco was incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts as the Tedesco Country Club-the name that it has borne for the last ninety-six years. The handsome clubhouse opened in that same year, and for the first time a full nine hole golf course was put into play. Thus Tedesco as we know it today was formally launched.

The first in a series of disastrous fires happened early in the club's history. In the spring of 1904 the clubhouse caught fire. Its construction was unprotected, the small horse-drawn fire engines of the Marblehead and Swampscott fire departments were far away, and the structure was leveled. It was replaced by a fine building, which unfortunately also was unprotected from fire, and two more fires occurred in 1931 and 1932. The second one resulted in a total loss.

From the ashes arose the present beautiful clubhouse-with a complete automatic sprinkler system to guard against a repetition of the disasters of the past.

  - Founded in 1922, the Kittansett Club is one of the region's most historic private golf clubs, and one of only a few seaside courses in New England. Perennially ranked as one of "America's 100 Greatest Golf Courses" by Golf Digest magazine, Kittansett offers both a scenic and demanding test of golf. The Club is situated in Marion, Massachusetts at the end of Butler Point, which extends several miles into Buzzards Bay. The location provides a true seaside golf experience with spectacular water views and ever-changing winds that make a round at Kittansett both challenging and memorable.

  - A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE CLUB by Bob Lundberg
The Bass Rocks Golf Club was started in 1896 by a group of Bass Rocks summer residents who rented the land in the area surrounded by Beach Road, Moorland Road, Souther Road, and Nautilus Road. This area is known as "The Meadows" and is currently used for our 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th holes. The rental fee was based on the value of the hay crop that would normally have grown there.
The first six-hole course was laid out by Alex Findlay, a Scottish golfer who worked as a salesman for a sporting goods company. This job entailed the planning of golf courses to increase the sales of golf equipment.
The original course was known as the Intervale Links. Subsequently Madison Mott Cannon, Gloucester's City Engineer, designed a new nine-hole course. At a dedication of the new nine-hole course in June of 1904, a flag was raised proclaiming it to be the Bass Rocks Golf Links. The membership was about 250. In 1905, with increasing membership and more golf and social functions, it became evident that a more structured organization was in order and the Bass Rocks Golf Club was incorporated for the "purpose of encouraging athletic exercises and the establishment and maintenance of places for social meetings." A formal lease was entered into with the landowners, The Souther Estate. In 1909 the clubhouse was built and the rent increased.
More land was leased from the Souther Estate and the course was increased to 18 holes in 1913. Designed by Herbert Corey Leeds, who also designed the original Essex County Club (since redone by Donald Ross and modified by E.F. Wogan), a new 18-hole course began to take shape at Bass Rocks. Leeds also designed and maintained the Myopia Hunt Club course until his death in 1930.
Henry Souther, the landowner, died in 1917 and the Souther Land Trust informed the club of its planned liquidation of assets. The lease would not extend beyond 1922. The club then sold $150,000 worth of bonds to 60 members and purchased the land, buildings, and equipment in 1923. During the next nine years the bonds were being retired and interest was paid. The Depression stopped any further payments and by 1936 interest of $21,804 remained unpaid on outstanding bonds.

The club, having survived both World Wars I and II, considered bankruptcy on several occasions. In 1956 a new reorganization committee was formed and by planning, cajoling, and maintaining a few token payments, managed to retire the debt in 1967. Forty-four years of indebtedness had ended.

Historical Note

The Young Men's Christian Association of Greater Boston (Boston YMCA) was the first YMCA chapter in North America. It was founded in 1851 by Captain Thomas Valentine Sullivan (1800-1859), an American seaman and missionary. He was influenced by the London YMCA and saw the association as an opportunity to provide a "home away from home" for young sailors on shore leave. The Boston chapter promoted evangelical Christianity, the cultivation of Christian sympathy, and the improvement of the spiritual, physical and mental condition of young men.

The Boston YMCA first met in rooms rented on the fourth floor of a building on the corner of Washington and Summer Streets but moved in the following year to the second floor of the Tremont Temple. In 1872, the Boston YMCA purchased the Gymnasium Building on Tremont and Eliot Streets. It relocated in 1883 to a larger building at the corner of Berkeley and Boylston Streets. After a fire destroyed the Boylston building in 1910, the Boston YMCA launched a fund-raising campaign for the construction of its present home on Huntington Avenue. In 1911, President William Taft laid the cornerstone. In 1913, the Huntington Avenue building was opened for business.

The Boston YMCA was especially interested in providing strong moral guidance and leadership for its youth members. It sponsored social clubs and community service organizations; provided physical and athletic activities; and organized social events. In 1899, the association hosted its first camping season at Sandy Island Men's Camp (formerly, Camp Buena Vista) at Lake Winnepauskee, NH. In subsequent years, the Boston YMCA purchased or leased property to provide more day camps for its young members. Some of the camps included: Camp Ousamequin (1922), Camp Dorchester (1923), Camp North Woods (1928), and Pleasant Valley Camp (1968).

Park's roots go back to 1888, when Miss Caroline Pierce began a proprietary school on Walnut Street in Brookline. In 1923, it was incorporated and named to commemorate Julia Park, principal from 1910-1922. A gift of land from Dr. and Mrs. James M. Faulkner, former Park parents and grandparents, provided the opportunity for the School to move in 1971 from Kennard Road in Brookline to a 26-acre, country-like setting near Jamaica Pond and opposite Larz Anderson Park.

  - SCO Family of Services has been providing shelter and care to people in need for more than a century. It all began in 1895, when a group of wealthy women established the Country Home for Convalescent Babies in Upstate New York.
Two years later, a new home was built on 14 acres in Sea Cliff, Long Island. The Bakers, Carnegies, Morgans, Phipps and Whitneys, – more... in addition to many other prominent New York families, supported the facility that provided care for destitute New York children. During World War II, the facility closed briefly and then reopened in 1947 under the auspices of the Diocese of Brooklyn, when it was renamed St. Christopher's Home.
In 1985, St. Christopher's Home merged with Otilie Home for Children, a Residential Treatment Center in Queens that provides care for adolescents with serious emotional needs and mild mental retardation, to form St. Christopher-Otilie. Since then, the agency has continued to grow and flourish.

- In 1913, Francis A. Bartlett, a well known dendrologist and founder of the internationally known F.A. Bartlett Tree Expert Company, acquired 30 acres of North Stamford woodlands to use as his residence, training school and research laboratory for his successful tree-care company. Over the years he assembled a large number of woody plant specimens on the property from all over the world in particular from North America, Europe and Asia.

By 1965, Mr. Bartlett's research laboratory had moved to North Carolina and his Stamford home, which now covered some 64 acres, was purchased by the State of Connecticut in November of 1965 under the Federal Open Spaces Program. At this time the property was designated the Connecticut State Arboretum. Acquisition of this land by the State and the subsequent development of the Bartlett Arboretum was spearheaded by a local community group of volunteers. This group of citizens who initially banded together to preserve what Dr. Bartlett had created formed the nucleus of what is now the Bartlett Arboretum Association.

When the Bartlett Arboretum was opened to the public for the first time in 1966, the grounds and facilities were under the auspices of the Department of Environmental Protection while the operations and programming were managed by the University of Connecticut's Department of Plant Science. In 2002, the title to the land was transferred to the City of Stamford with the Bartlett Arboretum Association responsible for all managerial and operational oversight of the property. An additional 27 acres of adjacent city property was added to the Bartlett's existing property.

- Francis A. Bartlett graduated from Massachusetts Agricultural College, now the University of Massachusetts, in 1905 (he would later accept an honorary doctorate at his alma mater). He taught horticulture at the Hampton Institute in Virginia for two years before a benefactor of that college persuaded him to relocate to the New York area, where many valuable shade and ornamental trees were declining and dying. Mr. Bartlett accepted the challenge by founding The F.A. Bartlett Tree Expert Company in 1907. Mr. Bartlett had great curiosity and set about learning all he could about the physiology and care of trees and shrubs. His mission would be to provide preventive care that would assure good health, longevity, beauty and safety for his clients' trees. He used the slogan, "America's Trees are Worth Saving." The F.A. Bartlett Tree Expert Company was founded in 1907. In the 1920s, the company expanded into several Northeastern and Eastern Seaboard states, and as far west as Chicago. In 1922, public utility companies asked for Mr. Bartlett's help in keeping their power lines clear of excessive tree growth that tended to cause outages during storms. That was the beginning of our public utility line clearance division, which until February 2001, when it was sold, supplemented our basic private tree care operations. During the Great Depression of the 1930s, the Public Utility service, which was extremely active as rural America electrified, sustained the business. In the 1940s, another expansion occurred when offices were opened in almost all of the states east of the Mississippi.

In the years immediately prior to World War I, it became obvious to Mr. Bartlett that he did not have time to manage a growing business while carrying on research and experiments to satisfy his scientific curiosity. By 1927, there was enough scientific work in progress to warrant the establishment of the Bartlett Tree Research Laboratories, located first in North Stamford, Connecticut, and, since 1965, on a large property in Charlotte, North Carolina.

- "The Story of The Greenbrier

ORIGINS

The story of The Greenbrier begins at the sulphur water spring that remains the center of the resort property. It issues forth below the green dome of the white-columned Springhouse that serves as The Greenbrier's symbol. Since 1778, people have come to "take the waters" to restore their health. In the 19th century, visitors drank and bathed in the sulphur water to cure everything from rheumatism to an upset stomach. Because of the water's draw, the resort was known as White Sulphur Springs.

THE FIRST HEYDAY

Due to its isolated location-along what was then the nation's western frontier-development proceeded slowly until settlers carved a viable stagecoach route through the densely forested mountains. In the 1830s the resort entered its first period of prominence as politicians, judges, editors, lawyers, diplomats, ministers, planters and merchants-primarily from the southern states-annually congregated at the "village in the wilderness". They did so only in the summer months because the 2,000 foot elevation offered relief from the heat and humidity down in the lowlands. The resort originally consisted only of cottages and many-for example, Paradise Row, Alabama Row, and Baltimore Row-still stand today. Perhaps the most historic is the Presidents' Cottage Museum. Before the Civil War, five sitting presidents stayed there demonstrating the resort's reputation as the favored gathering place for the nation's most influential and powerful families. White Sulphur Springs' well-established status as America's most fashionable social resort led to the construction of the first large hotel in 1858. It was officially named the Grand Central Hotel, but known to long-time patrons as the Old White. This hotel boasted three stories of porches to catch summer breezes and ample space to promenade one's stylish attire.

The resort closed during the Civil War. During that conflict, both sides occupied the grounds using the hotel either as a hospital or military headquarters. Shortly after the war's end, it reopened and the resort's prospects were incalculably improved with the completion of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway. For the next one hundred years, White Sulphur Springs was one of the classic railroad resorts in North America. During that period trains brought visitors from New York, Washington, Richmond, Atlanta, Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland and scores of points in between.

INTO THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

In 1910, the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway purchased the historic resort property and embarked upon a major expansion. By 1913 the railroad had added The Greenbrier Hotel (the central section of today's hotel), a new Mineral Bath Department (the building that includes the grand Indoor Pool) and an 18-hole golf course (now called The Old White Course) designed by the most prominent contemporary golf architect, Charles Blair Macdonald. In 1914, for the first time, the resort-now renamed The Greenbrier-was open year round. That year President and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson spent their Easter holiday at The Greenbrier and Joseph and Rose Kennedy traveled down from Boston for their October honeymoon. Business boomed in the 1920s. The Greenbrier took its place within high society's traveling network that stretched from Palm Beach, Florida to Newport, Rhode Island. The obsolete Old White Hotel was removed in 1922, which led to a substantial rebuilding of The Greenbrier Hotel in 1930. This refurbishment doubled the number of guest rooms to five hundred. Cleveland architect Philip Small redesigned the hotel's Main Entrance, and added both the Mount Vernon-inspired Virginia Wing to the south and the signature North Entrance façade. Mr. Small's design mixed elements from the resort's Southern historical roots with motifs from the Old White Hotel.

WAR AND RENEWAL

During the Second World War, the United States government enlisted The Greenbrier for two very different uses. First, the State Department leased the hotel for seven months immediately after the U.S. entry into the war. It was used to relocate hundreds of German, Japanese, and Italian diplomats and their families from Washington, D.C. until their exchange for American diplomats similarly stranded overseas was completed. Following that, in September 1942 the U.S. Army purchased The Greenbrier estate, converted the hotel into a two thousand-bed hospital and renamed the facility Ashford General Hospital. In four years 24,148 soldiers were admitted and treated, while the resort served the war effort as a surgical and rehabilitation center. Soldiers were encouraged to use the resort's entire range of sports and recreation facilities as part of their recuperation process. At the war's conclusion, the Army closed the hospital. The Chesapeake and Ohio Railway reacquired the property from the government in 1946. The company immediately commissioned a comprehensive interior redecoration by the noted designer Dorothy Draper. The origin of The Greenbrier's distinctive décor goes back to this much-publicized redecoration, at a period when Dorothy Draper was at the peak of her fame. As Architectural Digest described her, she was "a true artist of the design world [who] became a celebrity in the modern sense of the word, virtually creating the image of the decorator in the popular mind." She remained the resort's decorator into the 1960s. Upon her retirement, her protégé Carleton Varney purchased the firm and he continues today as The Greenbrier's decorating consultant.

When The Greenbrier reopened in 1948, Sam Snead returned as golf pro to the resort where his career had begun in the late 1930s. For two decades in the post war years he traveled the globe at the pinnacle of his lengthy career. More than any other individual Sam Snead established The Greenbrier's reputation as one of the world's foremost golf destinations. In later years, he was named Golf Pro Emeritus, a position he held until his death on May 23, 2002.

THE BUNKER AND BEYOND

In the late 1950s, the U.S. government once again approached The Greenbrier for assistance, this time in the construction of an Emergency Relocation Center-a bunker or bomb shelter-to be occupied by the U.S. Congress in case of war. The classified underground facility was built in conjunction with an above ground addition to the hotel, the West Virginia Wing, between 1959 and 1962. For thirty years the facility codenamed Project Greek Island was maintained at a constant state of operational readiness. At any point during those years, one telephone call from officials in Washington, D. C. fearing an imminent attack on the capital would have turned the lavish resort into an active participant in the national defense system. At the end of the Cold War, and prompted by exposure in the press in 1992, the project was terminated and the bunker decommissioned.”

  - Assumably, the firm assisted converting the Paul Cottage at Mashapaug Pond for the Wells party in 1930 after moving from the Walker Pond location, after which the Great Room was relocated to Old Sturbridge Tavern (see citations below).
  - The Bullard Tavern at Old Sturbridge Village
A History of the Tavern
The Great Room.
The Tavern's most dramatic feature is the Great Room, with its distinctive arched timbers in the ceiling. It was originally constructed as part of the Wells family's "Mashapaug camp," their rural retreat in Union, Connecticut. In 1946 the Great Room, according to A.B. Wells' intentions, was moved and added to the partially constructed Tavern.
To create the Mashapaug camp, A.B. Wells had taken a mid-nineteenth century farmhouse and transformed it into his vision of the colonial style; he added the Great Room, which he designed himself. Seeking a striking effect rather than strict historical accuracy, he created the Great Room's huge hearth with its unusual and idiosyncratic window at one end.

The Great Room's ceiling timbers date back to 1818 and were taken from a covered bridge, about to be demolished for a new reservoir, which spanned the Sacandaga river in the community of Fish House, N.Y. They are sections of the bridge's curved supporting members, which were originally 125 feet long. Their arched construction represents an American bridge-building technique of the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. It pre-dates the more modern Ithiel Town "Lattice Truss" design which can be seen in the Village's Dummerston Covered Bridge.<sup>3</sup>

After the Great Room had been transferred to the rear of the Tavern, the rest of the Mashapaug camp was eventually moved to the Village as well. At first it was used as a demonstration and exhibit building, and then was moved to a location behind the scenes; it now serves as offices for costumed interpretation in the Department of Education and Public Programs.

- "In 1929 when A.B. was enjoying himself in the hospital in Boston at Brimmer Street and in Southbridge, the George W. Wells' camp was moved to its present location. The three buildings were too close together and A.B. had faith that he was going to be living back at Walker Pond and wanted more room. I well remember that I was staggered when I paid the bill for the moving and grading, etc. – it was something over $6,000.00 – quite a jump in a span of years from the original cost of the camp." [Q:]Why is the Oak Ridge Cemetary Entrance So Narrow?

I recently came across a Seaver Rice account of the reason why the Oak Ridge Cemetary is so narrow and it is copied below.

In Ruth Wells' book, she stated that Channing Wells was responsible, while Seaver (and historian Steve Brady) stated it was "Bill Edwards". Both accounts are provided here; you decide!

Seaver's Account:

Those Memorable Gifts Made to Southbridge" Weekend, Feb. 11, 1984

<http://www.dickwhitney.net/OakRidgeSeaverRice1984Article.pdf>

Here is Ruth Wells' Account:

"Just how far Channing (Wells) would go to avoid a "scene" Is part of a legend about him. Next door to the home of which he was so proud was the Oak Ridge Cemetery. On Sunday mornings, when he enjoyed taking his ease, there were often funerals. One hardly thinks of a cemetery as a source of disturbance, but In his case, It was. Someone else might have complained about the funeral processions, but not Channing. Instead, he consulted with the local authorities that controlled the cemetery and asked If they would not be happy to have a stone gate with a wrought Iron archway at the entrance from Main Street. They were enthusiastic and accepted his proposal. The stone posts and the archway were erected. It just so happened, however, that the gateway was slightly too narrow to accommodate a hearse. However, the Imposing entrance remained. But from then on funeral processions entered by way of Everett Street and Channing could take his ease undisturbed on Sundays." - Page 101

  - Western Electric's Hawthorne Works
On September 14, 1902, Western Electric purchased 113 acres of prairie land west of Chicago in an area known as "Hawthorne" [now Cicero] to build the manufacturing arm of the Bell Telephone System. The rural Hawthorne Works plant became a self-sufficient city, with a hospital, fire brigade, laundry, greenhouse, a brass band, running track, tennis courts, gymnasium, an annual beauty pageant and a staff of trained nurses who made house calls.
In 1913, Western Electric developed the high vacuum tube, thereby ushering in the electronic age. The company subsequently invented the loudspeaker, public address systems, radar, brought sound to motion pictures, and most importantly, the transistor for which Bell Labs researchers won the Nobel Prize. Hawthorne was also the cradle of industrial psychology, with a series of experiments that began in 1924. By 1917, the Hawthorne Works facility employed 25,000 people, many of them Cicero residents of Czech or Polish descent, who produced telephones, cable and every major telephone switching system in the country. In 1900, 676,733 Bell telephone stations were owned and connected in the country; by 1910, 3 years after Hawthorne Works opened, these employees produced 5,142,699 telephones and by 1920, 11,795,747 Bell telephones. Over 14,000 different types of apparatus were manufactured at the plant to provide the telecommunications infrastructure for this exponential growth. In its heyday in the mid-1950's, Western Electric employed nearly 45,000 at its Hawthorne Works.

<http://www.morton.edu/museum/index.html>

- The Hawthorne Works, in Cicero, Illinois, was a large factory complex built by Western Electric starting in 1905 and operating until 1983. It had 45,000 employees at the height of its operations. Besides telephone equipment, the factory produced a wide variety of consumer products, including refrigerators and electric fans. Hawthorne Works was named for Hawthorne, Illinois, a small town that was later incorporated into Cicero. The facility was so expansive, it contained a private railroad to move shipments through the plant to the nearby Burlington Northern Railroad freight depot. Workers regularly used bicycles for transit within the plant. It was purchased in the mid-1980s by the late Donald L. Shoemaker and replaced with a shopping center. One of the original towers remained at the corner of 22nd Street and Cicero Ave.

In addition to its enormous output of telephone equipment, Hawthorne Works was the site of some well-known industrial studies. The Hawthorne effect is named for the works.

- Million-Dollar Grits

Melanie Wells, 09.27.00, 3:25 PM ET

As slave owners go, Daniel Blake was a pretty swell guy. The South Carolina rice farmer, who died in 1873, is said to have "despised affectation and looked with perfect contempt upon all snobbery," according to a book about his life. The Cherokee Plantation offers horseback riding as well as tennis, fishing and golf. Today, he might not even be asked to visit his former plantation in Yemassee, S.C. Cherokee Plantation, six owners later, is a Spanish-moss-draped monument to selective southern hospitality. The resort, where Forbes 400 member Dirk E. Ziff is part-owner, could be the most expensive--and the snootiest--private club in America.

Some of what Cherokee offers is familiar country club stuff, such as horseback riding, tennis, fishing and golf. But at Cherokee, there's no such thing as a tee time. Golfers on the 18-hole Scottish links may find their only company is an alligator that has lumbered onto the lawn from the Combahee River. And members who hunt quail can use a $100,000 Purdey house gun and enjoy an outdoor banquet--complete with tablecloths and candelabra. In the evening, members and guests are invited to pluck a stogie from the walk-in humidifier in the grand plantation house. When guests climb into bed, they find a flannel-covered hot water bottle tucked between the sheets, even in summer.

The price of a membership is $1 million. It costs $85,000 per year after that if you want Cherokee's master of the house, Calvert Huffines, to welcome you back.

The Commissioned architect, S.F. Page of Fehmer and Page of Boston, constructed the house, as well as the Fletcher Memorial Library in Ludlow. This home was the first in Vermont to be fully wired for electricity and the first home to boast an elevator. Utilizing advanced technologically for the time, each floor in the house had two nickel-plated faucets to which a hose could be attached in case of fire. The building itself is of English Cotswold style and constructed of hand-carved California redwood and gneiss stone, which was quarried on property.

- Early history

The Owl Club was founded in 1896 by Reginald Mansfield Johnson, Malcolm Scollay Greenough, Jr., Frazier Curtis, Preston Player, Charles Clifford Payson, Austen Fox Riggs, and Dudley Hall Bradlee, Jr. It originally went under the name Ανλόζχαι'Εχπωμα (meaning the Pipe and Mug), or Alpha Epsilon.

In 1901, land on the corner of Holyoke Street and Holyoke Place was purchased. In 1905, architect James Purdon of Purdon and Little drew up plans for the Georgian clubhouse, and on June 24 of that year the cornerstone of the present clubhouse was laid. The new building was formally opened on March 24, 1906, the tenth anniversary of the Club.

In 1916, it was voted officially to change the name from “Phi Delta Psi Club” to “The Owl Club”. The club had become informally known as the Owl as an abbreviation of its Greek name, Ανλόζχαι'Εχπωμα.

  - History

In 1889, George W. Tapley sold the real estate later known as 50 Maple Street in Springfield for $35,000 to Daniel B. Wesson, one of the founders of the firm of Smith & Wesson, now internationally known for the manufacture of revolvers. In 1892, construction of the beautiful Wesson Mansion was begun and completed in 1898. The architecture was described as being a slight departure from the French Chateau fashion and from the moment of its completion until its destruction by fire in 1966, this mansion was considered one of the most beautiful residential types of edifice, inside and outside, in the country. Final cost of construction exceeded $200,000, not including fees for architects.

Mr. and Mrs. Wesson both died in 1906. After several years of attempts to sell or give away the property, the Colony Club, formed in 1915, acquired this magnificent Wesson property and the officers signed a mortgage for $51,000, just $16,000 more than Mr. Wesson had paid for the land.

Over the years, the Club has entertained such distinguished guests as Presidents Taft, Roosevelt, and Hoover, and the then Congressman from Massachusetts John F. Kennedy, among others. The Club functioned happily in these beautiful and historic quarters from 1915 until February 19, 1966 when a tragic fire swept through most of the building. With such massive destruction, all that could be salvaged was only a few items and ultimately, the structure had to be leveled. Thus, the first era of the Club came to a tragic end.

Several months later, the second era of the Club began with the rental of interim quarters on the third floor of the building known as 110 Maple Street, a few hundred yards south of the beautiful old Clubhouse. These interim quarters served their function well until, after one unsuccessful attempt to move to Baystate West (now known as Tower Square), the land at 50 Maple Street, still owned by the Club, was taken by the City by eminent domain, and funds were in hand to help finance the move to the present Clubhouse in March, 1973.

And so, from an organizational meeting in early 1915, to incorporation and acquisition of the 50 Maple Street real estate in the same year, to the tragic fire in February of 1966, to seven years of interim quarters, and now this elegant Clubhouse, with a full complement of Members and broadened base of membership, we find ourselves today, a strong and happy social club -- still with all the changes, the Colony Club.

Brae Burn Country Club, founded in 1897 and located in West Newton, Massachusetts, provides Boston-area golf enthusiasts and families with a quality experience steeped in tradition, natural beauty and personalized service. The storied past and the Club's integral role in advancing the sport of golf in America has established Brae Burn as one of the most prestigious Country Clubs in the Northeast.
Brae Burn has been the scene of some historic golf moments, serving as the host of four major tournaments of the United States Golf Association. Walter Hagen won the U.S. Open in 1919, Ray Gorton challenged Bobby Jones in the U.S. Amateur in 1928, and U.S. Women's Amateur Championships were won by Harriot Curtis in 1906, Beth Daniel in 1975, and Silvia Cavalleri in 1997. Brae Burn hosted Curtis Cup Matches in 1958 and 1970. MGA Amateur victories by Francis Ouimet in 1914 and Eddie Stimpson in 1935 are also highlights in Brae Burn's rich history.

- Myopia Hunt Club
Myopia Hunt Club is a foxhunting and private country club at 435 Bay Road in South Hamilton, Massachusetts founded in 1882 by J. Murray Forbes. The name "Myopia" is due to some of its founding members having come from the Myopia Club in Winchester, Massachusetts, which had been founded by four brothers with poor vision.[2] Today, the Myopia Hunt Club is a drag hunt, meaning that the hounds follow a laid scent rather than live fox.[1]
Myopia also boasts the oldest continually running polo field in the nation. Polo is still played on Sunday afternoons and is open to the public for a small fee.
In 1902 a real tennis court was opened at the Myopia Hunt Club, but has since been converted to other uses.

- The first home of the American Academy was the Philosophy Chamber of Harvard College. It was there, in 1779, that John Adams proposed to the Reverend Samuel Cooper his idea for the formation of an Academy. One year later, the Massachusetts legislature enacted the Charter of the Academy. For the next sixty years the new society used the Philosophy Chamber as its meeting place.
During the 19th century the Academy shared quarters with the Boston Athenæum and later the Massachusetts Historical Society. It next moved to 28 Newbury Street in 1904 and remained there until 1955. For a few years the Academy was again peripatetic, borrowing meeting places from neighbors. Then an arrangement was worked out with the Brandegee Charitable Foundation, and the Academy moved to Faulkner Farm in Brookline. The Academy remained there until the completion of a brand new house, the Academy's first permanent home, designed for the Academy at 136 Irving Street in Cambridge in 1981.

Charles Franklin Sprague was the son of Seth E. Sprague and Harriet Boardman Lawrence. He attended Boston schools and the Phillips Exeter Academy before enrolling at Harvard in 1875. He studied at Harvard Law School in 1891 and 1893 and became a member of the Suffolk Bar. After that he embarked on an illustrious political career: He was member of the Boston Common Council in 1889 and 1890; member of the State house of representatives in 1891 and 1892; served as chairman of the board of park commissioners of the city of Boston in 1893 and 1894; served in the State senate in 1895 and 1896; elected as a Republican to the Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Congresses (March 4, 1897 - March 3, 1901). He declined to be a candidate for renomination in 1900

Sprague married Mary Bryant Pratt in 1891. Mary was the granddaughter of William Weld and inherited a fortune variously reported between $3,000,000 and $20,000,000. Their daughter Marion was born in 1893 and daughter Eleanor was born in 1898.

When Sprague was elected to Congress in 1896 he was rated as the richest man in the National House of Representatives with a fortune estimated at $7,000,000. He was the owner of the Faulkner Estate in Brookline. When he moved from Boston to Washington, a special train of nine cars carried his household goods.

Sprague suffered from brain disease and after his death at the young age of forty-four, the Harvard Alumni Association paid this tribute:

"One of Sprague's strongest characteristics was his keen sense of humor, and this, together with his attractive personality, caused him throughout his life to be much welcomed at all social gatherings. Perhaps no one in the Class had a popularity so widely spread. It may be truly said of him that he added to the sum of the world's happiness by the enjoyment that his mere presence and conversation afforded, and that this, of nothing else, gave a value to his life. While not given to very serious study during his college course, he showed, immediately after graduation, his determination to take a part in the affairs of the world. He was honest and conscientious in the performance of his public duties, and trusts, and had he lived, would doubtless have attained the higher positions to which his ambitions pointed."

The Boston Herald reported in the April 20, 1896 on Sprague's move from Boston to Brookline. They noted that "Mr. Sprague is a member of several prominent clubs in this city. The family is identified with the leading social elements in Boston and Brookline. The craze for athletics has never attacked Mr. Sprague. He likes to ride a horse and is fond of his bicycle, but his inclinations run in the direction of no particular fad. To him life is a serious business not to be frittered away in idleness and pleasure." "

  - Washtenaw Country Club Courts a Suitor; Deal with owners of Polo Fields could prevent foreclosure By Mary Morgan, Ann Arbor Chronicle, September 30, 2009 at 9 pm
About six months after Washtenaw Community College walked away from a deal to buy the financially strapped Washtenaw Country Club, the private club has found another potential buyer.
The Berger family, owners of the Polo Fields Golf & Country Club in Scio Township, is negotiating a purchase of the 122-acre club, located off of Packard between Golfside and Hewitt in Ypsilanti Township. Ed Shaffran, a local developer and Washtenaw Country Club member, said that Citizens Bank was willing to write down $1 million of the club's $1.9 million debt, if the purchase goes through by year's end. The club, which includes an 18-hole golf course, incurred the debt for renovations, but was unable to pay because of declining membership. There are about 120 members, according to Shaffran.”

The Catholic Church purchased the property in 1949, after which the property reopened as St. Francis College and was used as a Franciscan retreat house. Located at Central and Sea Roads, the building was demolished in 1996 and replaced by private homes. A nice addition to your early New Hampshire postcard collection!”

- "Stoneleigh Manor. Built by a community corporation in 1919 to be the most luxurious summer hotel in New England, it failed when the Drake family had to pull out their money to complete Chicago's Drake Hotel. For a while, it was an exclusive girls' school in the winter and a hotel in the summer. After World War II, it became the Atlantic Air Academy. In 1949, it was sold to the Catholic Church for $170,000 and operated as St. Francis College, and, later as a retreat house. Despite its varied uses, it remained fundamentally unchanged throughout, and, walking into the building with its custom-made Elizabethan furniture, its monogrammed silver and the formal dining room, was like entering a timewarp. The elevator was taken to pieces during a wartime scrap metal drive in the early 1940's but the metal never left the building and no one could ever figure out how to put the elevator back together again...The hotel ...was torn down in 1998." p.124, Rye & Rye Beach, William M. - Our Story

Over the past 90 years, Millane Nurseries has been growing and providing nursery-grown trees and shrubs to clients and customers primarily throughout the Northeast. In 1913, Cornelius A. Millane, Sr. (Neal) started his tree service in New Haven. In 1918 the business moved to Main Street in Middletown. With little more than a small truck, a rope and hard work, he built a residential and commercial tree service; pruning, spraying, cabling and removing large trees along the East Coast. The nursery began in 1923 when he purchased property on Main Street in Cromwell (the site of the current Corporate Office, Commercial Contractors/wholesale yard, and our Garden Center). Through the depression he continued the tree service and heavily promoted the expanding nursery. [showing Harrison Williams property]

- Complex originally stood west of this site overlapping what is now Oakpoint Drive West. Information paraphrased from Monica Randal's book The Mansions of Long Island's Gold Coast. Sports House for Mr. and Mrs. {Mona} William Harrison from their estate "Oak Point". Described as one of the most spectacular playhouses on the Gold Coast. Glass-domed complex with pillared rotunda entrance housing tennis court, a pool that converted to a dance floor hydraulically and numerous greenhouses. An Art Deco lounge with paneled walls and silver metallic draperies adjoined the tennis court. Two circular stairways led from the entrance hall down to another lounge with colorful murals. In 1950 after the main house was torn down Mona turned the playhouse into her home. Not caring for tennis she turned the courts into a large aviary with tropical birds and plants. Destroyed by fire in 1968. Extensive gardens requiring fifty men surrounded the playhouse. Willow garden with reflecting pool overlooking a Chinese rock garden followed by a yew garden and roses with endless brick paths cut that thru masses of lilacs.

- 'Oak Point', the Harrison Williams estate originally built for Winslow S. Pierce and designed by Babb, Cook & Willard c. 1903 with Delano & Aldrich alterations c. 1926 (for Williams) as well as the addition of a playhouse. Williams was president of North American Holding Co. which controlled a very large portion of the public utilities in the United States. Williams purchased the estate the same year he married Mona Strader. The house was demolished in 1950.

- History

Camp Becket for Boys was established in 1903, and has remained a leader in the field of resident camping. Henry and Ina Gibson, early directors at Camp Becket, helped to establish Chimney Corners Camp for Girls in 1931. The Gibsons ran Chimney Corners Camp for the first ten years, until the camp was purchased by Howard and Evelyn Smith, who operated Chimney Corners as a private camp until its acquisition by the YMCA in 1972. Since their founding, these camps have offered rustic four week resident camp programs that teach leadership and develop strong character in young people.

- “The old Fiske neighborhood in Sherborn was a rather large area, running roughly from the east side of Nason Hill Road where Jonas Fiske had built his home in 1779 (36 Nason Hill Road), on part of the original Hill holding, when he married Mary Hill. Another boundary was Stannox Farm where Jonas' brother John resided and where his daughter Abigail lived after her marriage to Captain Samuel Learned of Revolutionary fame. To the west the area extended to the eastern part of Holliston. Deacon Oliver Fiske lived somewhat north of the neighborhood, having bought ...

Eventually, Francis' father built a Victorian-style house on the same site, which was not far from the homestead (the Stannox Farm), the birthplace of Francis' mother, Nellie Daniels.

The big blow hit Stannox Farm on Nason Hill Road, felling all the trees in the Jonathan Orchard, the apple for which the place was noted, and such a large number of great pines that 20,000 feet of board were milled from them. This lumber was sold, but the 75 cords of hardwood which had to be cleared kept the many fireplaces supplied for some time. In January of 1934, J. Lathrop Motley, son of the great historian, had bought Stannox Farm from the bank which had acquired it by foreclosure. His foreman, Mr. Frank C. Skinner, is now a young 95, and he can recall serving on the Advisory Board. He also remembers the excitement which occurred at the farm the fall before he moved there, when it was owned by the bank. This was another time that Sherborn was featured in the Boston papers. ..

The Federal Agents raided the biggest still operation which had ever been discovered in Massachusetts, and it was at Stannox Farm in Sherborn! The huge vats were set up in an old building a great distance from the entrance, and the cover-up was a herd of cows. Who would ever consider that the 40-gallon milk cans weren't just for milk!”

  - The Cohen Camps Legacy

The Cohen family's dedication to summer camps as a way to nurture and educate Jewish children began over 75 years ago when Eli and Bessie Cohen founded Camp Pembroke. The Cohens believed that education in its many forms was essential to strengthening the Jewish community. They realized the power of the immersive experience of summer camp and its ability to engage, teach and develop children in an informal setting. Expanding on this idea the Cohens founded two co-educational camps, Tevya and Tel Noar, to reach even further into the community.

- 44.150589,-71.182587 06885 Wentworth Hall Hotel Jackson New Hampshire 0
  - Wentworth Hall, 1882 to 1883

Joshua Trickey built the original building on this site, the Thorn Mountain House, in 1869 as a wedding present for his youngest daughter, Georgia, and her husband, General Marshall Clark Wentworth. Capt. Trickey was the first in Jackson to entertain summer guests from abroad and was the proprietor of the Jackson Falls House, built in 1858. (The Jackson Falls House stood on the site of the present Post Office.) General Wentworth was born in Jackson in 1844 and raised on his father's farm. He served in the Civil War although his title was honorary, given to him by New Hampshire Governor Charles Bell, for whom he served as quartermaster general in 1881-82.

Sometime around 1880 General Wentworth began the task of expanding and reorganizing the hotel complex under the principles of a "cottage system". The vision that Wentworth had for the hotel and the entertainment of their guests was both bold and original among White Mountain grand resort hotels but which illustrates a hotel management system then being employed in Great Britain. Under the new plan, the building known as Wentworth Hall was to act as the nucleus for a group of nine detached cottages. The system offered guests much desired privacy in separate cottages while facilitating social interaction in the public spaces of the main hotel. Wentworth hired New York City architect William A. Bates (1853-1922) to perform the master planning and execute the separate building designs, most of which were Queen Anne in style. Wentworth Hall, the principal service building for the complex was the second building constructed, after Arden Cottage.

Completed in 1883, Wentworth Hall is said to be a reproduction of an "English manorial hall of Queen Anne's day". Its luxurious appointments included running stream water, steam heat, telephone and telegraph service, electric bells, open fireplaces in all public rooms, well-engineered sanitation and a magnificent dining hall. It contained a smoking room, a children's and nurse's dining room and thirty sleeping rooms painted in robin's egg blue.

Wentworth Hall was a tremendous success during the 1880s and 1890s. Gen. Wentworth went on to also manage other successful resorts including the Laurel House in Lakewood, New Jersey; La Pintoresca and the Raymond at Pasadena, California; and the New Frontenac in the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence River as well as building the Hotel Huntington in Pasadena.

In 1915, General Wentworth died and the hotel complex was sold by Mrs. Wentworth to Nathan and Estelle Amster, a wealthy Jewish couple from New York. Under their ownership, the Wentworth became the exclusive domain of wealthy Jews from the northeast and anyone wishing to stay would have to be recommended by other patrons.

Estelle Amster continued to own the Wentworth Hall complex as well as Wentworth Castle until 1946 and the hotel continued to thrive. The property was bought by Harry Schiener and E.M. Loew, the movie theater magnate, in 1950. Two orchestras played in the casino which could seat 400 people. Among the entertainers were Alan King, Harry Belafonte, Zero Mostel and Jackie Mason. However, the days of summer vacationing at grand hotels were quickly becoming a thing of the past. In the years following World War II, escalating costs and changing vacation patterns made large hotels increasingly unprofitable. The decline of the Wentworth and most of New England's resort hotels began in the early 1960s.

In 1971, the Wentworth was temporarily closed and sat boarded-up and dilapidated for the next decade. Wentworth Hall was purchased by new owners in 1972 who intended to tear it down and build a modern hotel and vacation chalets. In 1982, the 233 acre Wentworth Hall property was purchased by developer Earnest J. Mallett, Jr. who invested more than $2 million into the complex. The structurally unsound and functionally unstable buildings including the casino were removed until just nine of the thirty-nine buildings remained. A total of seventy-six townhouse units were constructed in nineteen buildings around the perimeter of the golf course.

In the early 1980s, federal energy laws were passed that gave hydro-electric companies the right to pursue property for hydro-electric projects. The Jackson Falls area of the Wildcat was threatened with just such a hydro-electric project. To forestall this, a group of residents and town officials began seeking a "Wild and Scenic River" designation for the Wildcat.

To facilitate this effort, Ernie Mallett and his family deeded land from the Wentworth property along Jackson Falls to the town. The deed stipulated that no structures, including a hydro-electric dam, could be built on this land. (Ernie Mallett also donated land to the town cemetery for additional grave sites and to the church for a playground.) The "Wild and Scenic River" designation was achieved in 1988. At the same time, the town approved zoning ordinance changes that created a river conservation district to further protect the Wildcat.

The Wentworth was acquired by Fritz and Diana Koepfel in 1988 and continues to serve as an elegant country inn with a world-class reputation. Of the thirty grand resort hotels that were once present in the White Mountain region, Wentworth Hall is one of only four grand resort hotels remaining open for business today (the others being The Balsams, the Mount Washington Hotel and the Mountain ViewHouse.)

o History

Sandy Island first began in 1898 and was originally known as Camp Buena Vista, which means beautiful view. With only tent camping, Camp Buena Vista offered a vacation destination exclusively for men. The camp's first prospectus described it as "a summer resort for young men working on small salaries and receiving short vacations where they could enjoy healthfully and economically their summer outings."

Owned by the Boston YMCA, the camp was renamed Sandy Island Men's Camp in 1920. By 1932, the camp, still exclusively for men, offered two dormitories with combined accommodations for fifty men.

It wasn't until World War II ended that many of the young men who summered at the camp, married. That brought some decline in the numbers, as wives did not understand a retreat exclusive to men. It was decided that Sandy Island Men's Camp would now offer a summer destination to families, and the facility became known as Sandy Island Family Camp.

Sandy Island Family Camp is now over 110 years old. The island, comprised of 66 wooded acres, is completely dedicated to family camping. 54 lakefront cabins dot the north and south sides of the island. The Lodge, the center of the camp's social activities, was built in 1938. Its large stone hearths, exposed beams, and wooded floors are reminders of its history. Still in use today, families gather each day to enjoy activities from talent shows to the ever-popular "Sandy Dances."

- o North Woods Camp for boys was purchased and founded in 1929 by The YMCA of Greater Boston. The individuals spear heading the project for the new camp were Gilbert H. Roehrig and Robert T. P. Storer. Located on the shores of beautiful Lake Winnepesaukee, the camp has 200 acres of forest, fields, and miles of trails and ¼ mile of waterfront with a large sandy beach.

- o This story was written by Burns Roehrig, MD, 1978

It was in July, 1928, when the Roehrig family "backed in" to North Woods; yes, literally backed in! We, there were six of us, had a five-hour hesitant and uncertain drive from our home outside Boston in a black (they were all black) Model-T Touring car. Two or three tires had to be changed en route. And there were two hills on the trip that were too steep for the Model-T to conquer, laden as it was with two parents, four boys ranging in age from five to thirteen years, and all their paraphernalia for the summer. One was the hill on the state highway near Bennett farm between Mirror Lake and the camp Entrance. The second was the hill leading from the highway up to the farmhouse.

My father had learned early-on that "the flivver," as the old Ford was affectionately known, had more power in reverse gear than in low, and, when the engine stalled out on a grade in forward gear, he would coast back down to the bottom, turn around, and back up the top. Those were exciting days for automobile travel and like the early days of North Woods, it is fun to recall them.

When we arrived for the first time as a family at the newly purchased camp property in that summer of 1928, there were only three structures standing on the then one hundred ten acres. These were the farmhouse, the ice house behind it and the sap house which stood in a grove of maples about half way up the path from the place where the Great Hall now stands to the present baseball field.

 Baltusrol Golf Club, synonymous with championship golf, sits at the base of Baltusrol Mountain in northern New Jersey, only a stone's throw from New York City. With a rich heritage that dates back to 1895, Baltusrol is considered one of the country's premier private golf clubs. Its two championship courses, the Lower and Upper, have played distinguished roles on the national golf stage since their creation by Golden Age architect A.W. Tillinghast. Together, the courses have hosted 16 national championships, including seven U.S. Opens and one PGA Championship.

  - MAPLEWOOD COUNTRY CLUB HISTORY
 In 1908 a group of civic minded citizens organized under the name of the Valley Land Company for the purpose of providing the youth of the community a location to further their recreation needs. A lease was made on March 2, 1908 for the property of Charles De Grasse, located on the south side of Baker Street, west of Valley Street. The land consisted of 11.17 acres. There was a frame barn on the Baker Street frontage and it is on this site that our clubhouse was built.
 At a later date, the Valley Land Company reorganized into the Valley Land Society for the sole purpose of leasing the property. In 1911 several members of the Valley Land Society organized the Maplewood Field Club, which was incorporated in 1921 under New Jersey Statutes as a non-profit corporation. The Maplewood Field Club built four tennis courts as well as a baseball diamond on this property and in 1919 and 1921 purchased additional land to make an 18 hole golf course. In 1953, the corporate name of the Maplewood Field Club was changed to Maplewood Country Club.

  - Highlights in Coney Island History ... Up Through 1964:
 1609 - Dutch explorer Henry Hudson discovers Coney Island
 1800 - The four story Oriental Hotel capped by exotic minarets opens. The Sheepshead Bay Race Track opened in June. It was built by members of the Coney Island Jockey Club which included millionaire members of the New York business establishment. The rich who patronized the tracks and lived in lodges nearby during the summer racing season, created three great seafood restaurants in the vicinity; Tappan's, Villepique's and Lundy's.
 [...]
 1886 - Members of the Brooklyn Jockey Club built Coney Island's third race track at Gravesend just off the Ocean Parkway. This jockey club included many of the same men who had formed the earlier Coney Island Jockey Club. Now with three race tracks, Coney became the horse racing capital of the country.
<http://buddychai.com/Brooklyn/ConeyHist.html>
  - Sheepshead Bay Race Track was an American Thoroughbred horse racing facility built on the site of the Coney Island Jockey Club at Sheepshead Bay, New York. Old maps and railroad track diagrams for the Manhattan Beach Branch of the LIRR showing the spur that served both the club and the racetrack indicates the entrance to the club was located on the east side of Ocean Avenue between Avenues X and Y.

History

The racetrack was built by a group of prominent businessmen from the New York City area who formed the Coney Island Jockey Club in 1879. Led by Leonard Jerome and the track's President, William Kissam Vanderbilt, the Club held seasonal race cards at nearby Prospect Park fairgrounds until construction of the new race course was completed in 1880.   - A new clubhouse at Seagate was designed by Frank Tallman Cornell and built in 1898 on Poplar Avenue overlooking Gravesend Bay (the site of the old clubhouse becoming the main yard of the Morse Dry Dock and Repair Company). The move to the new clubhouse was driven in large part by Commodore George Jay Gould I, the prominent financier and a son of Jay Gould. The club attracted New York socialites and aristocrats, including prominent members of the Auchincloss, Dodge, Elsworth, Fish, Gould, Hoagland, Iselin, Vermilye and Voorhees families, among many others. Sir Thomas Lipton, J.P. Morgan and the Earl of Dunraven (the British challenger for the America's Cup, with his yacht Valkyrie) were among the club's prominent members.

- 44.286042,-73.988478 06344 Grand View Hotel Lake Placid New York 1 1911; 1916
  - In 1901 Henry Allen sold the Grand View Hotel to Thomas Parkes and built the National Hotel in the lower section of Lake Placid, which he conducted until failing health forced his retirement. The beloved and respected pioneer hotelman, also Sheriff of Essex County for three years and North Elba Supervisor for two years, died at Lake Placid in December 1916 at the age of 68. He left no children, unless one believes that the Grand View Hotel deserves that distinction.
Parkes continued the lofty traditions of the Grand View, keeping the place open from June to October, until his death in 1910, when his widow sold a half-interest to Morton B. Marshall, a native of Ticonderoga, New York. It was Parkes who established the popular baseball diamond that existed for years on Grand View grounds. The scene of lively matches between the guests and employees of the Grand View and those of rival hotels, the field was also used by the local high school and various other north country baseball teams. It was even a practice area for the Lake Placid polo team in the 1920's.
New owner Morton B. Marshall was a seasoned hotelman who up to that time had been the manager of the famous Saranac Inn over at Upper Saranac Lake. Marshall's long career in the hotel business included the Hargrave, Alexandria and St. Andrew in New York City.
Marshall sold the Grand View in 1922 to the Placid Hotel Corporation, of which Walter Arnold Ruykeyser seems to have become the principal stockholder. During his ownership the hotel was always under his personal direction. In the 1920's, Ruykeyser was instrumental in designing for the Soviet government what was to be the largest asbestos mine in the world, and lived in Russia nearly a year.

In the Ruykeyser era the hotel received a long-delayed overhauling. Lobby, public rooms and bedrooms were completely renovated. The day of grand balls had passed, and Henry Allen's splendid ballroom was converted into a cafe with orchestra for dancing. From 1931 to 1956 the old summer hostelry was under the management-ownership of the dynamic Edgar V. M. Gilbert of New York City. The Grand View could then, with the two Annexes, accommodate 400.

Gilbert loved Lake Placid and vigorously promoted it as a resort. He updated the hotel in many ways. Despite the Grand View's ripe old age and now unfashionable facade, despite the Great Depression and the gradual winding down of the hotel era, his strong and engaging personality attracted guests like a magnet. The Grand View took on a Continental aura as a mecca for European refugees, particularly those from Hitler's Germany, during the World War II era. Gilbert made every effort to provide the customs of the lost homeland. "Afternoon coffee and Schnecken on the porch" was a featured ritual. From the broad veranda guests looked out nostalgically on a mountain landscape reminiscent of the summer retreats they once knew.

During World War II Gilbert served a stint as food director for the American Red Cross in Africa. When Lake Placid boys came into his orbit he saw to it they received special rations, and plenty of them. Following the war, he joined the firm of H. Hentz Co., New York stockbrokers, with whom he was associated until his death in 1962. He was the founder and donor of the E.V.M. Gilbert annual art awards at Brandeis University.

Edgar Gilbert closed the doors of the Grand View in 1956. They were never again opened. The times were a-changing. Guests no longer came for an entire summer season. Vacationers were bypassing the faded old Adirondack Victorian hotels for the new breed of cabins and motels. At last, vacant for several years, the once again grand edifice on Grand View Hill, sole remaining relic of Lake Placid's Golden Age of hotels, and a part of it dating back 84 years, was demolished in 1961.

- "For six decades, the principal rival to the Stevens House in Lake Placid was the Grand View Hotel. In 1878 Moses Ferguson, proprietor of the Excelsior House (see above) decided to enter the hotel business on his own and purchased from Reuben Clifford a tract of land on the Nash Farm Hill (later known as Grand View Hill) above lakes placid and Mirror. It was situated about one-half mile southeast of the Excelsior on a site that today overlooks the main street of the village. On the spot, in the spring of the same year, he erected a modest, pitched-roof, three-and-one-half-story building (fig. 4-29) with encircling verandas and a square, open observation cupola perched in the center of the roof ridge...In 1881, Henry Allen, who in 1881 had built his own hotel nearby (see below) purchased the Grand View House from Ferguson and quickly elevated it to grand resort status." p.141, Resort Hotels of the Adirondacks: the Architecture of a Summer Paradise, 1850-1950, Bryant Franklin Tolles, UPNE, Jun 1, 2003

The estate was reduced to 220 acres by the end of the Revolutionary War. It was bought in 1836 by Robert Bartow who built the present Grecian style stone mansion with Greek Revival interiors. He moved into the house with his wife and children in 1842. The Bartow-Pell Mansion opened as a museum in 1946.

- No records for this project seem to exist with the firm's holdings
- The Club was originally incorporated as the Queens County Golf Club; there was no Nassau County. In 1898 our new County was formed and the Club was renamed Nassau Country Club. ...Thereafter, American golf saw great expansion, and a number of new courses were formed at the turn of the century.

In those days, inter-club matches were in vogue, and Nassau teams, as well as those at other nearby exclusive clubs, had many prominent members who often were in the news of the day. They were embarrassed and often objected to the ribbing of being defeated by some score such as eight and seven. The former Halfway House at Nassau has been renamed Calamity Jane House and contains golf relics of the past at Nassau, antique golf clubs and pictures of past professionals. It is dedicated to our connection with one of the greats of golf, a part of our legend, Bobby Jones, and our first professional, Alex Smith, who came to us directly from Carnoustie, Scotland and later became a two-time winner of the United States Open.

- Club History

In 1920, several of the surviving Midland members joined with a group of Hempstead businessmen to form the Hempstead Golf Club. Many of them were members of the Morton Masonic Lodge, which dated back to 1797 and counted among its members over the years signers of the Declaration of Independence and two governors of New York.

The new club purchased 122 acres of farmland and woods, and engaged the noted English greenkeeper Peter Lees to lay out a golf course. Lees first molded the farmland, and had nine holes ready for play on September 17, 1921, when an official opening-day match was played in a downpour. All 18 holes were ready by the start of the 1923 season. Lees' design was altered significantly when A.W. Tillinghast carved seven new holes from the woods for the 1927 season.

The Hempstead clubhouse was a farmhouse, expanded several times over the years. The front of the building dates back to 1756, and was occupied by Tories during the Revolution. Inside the clubhouse in 1935, Hofstra University was founded by a group of club members.

Hempstead members today have a swimming pool complex with snack bar, four Har-Tru tennis courts, and four AMF bowling alleys. The clubhouse has recently undergone major renovation work in all areas.

- History

In 1895, newspapers across the country carried detailed reports of the opening of a prestigious new club on the banks of the Hudson River. With the support of some of the most notable and successful men in the United States, including Jay Gould, Cornelius Vanderbilt, J. Pierpont Morgan, William Rockefeller, and Amzi Lorenzo Barber, the establishment of The Ardsley Casino was a nationally noted event.

The original clubhouse overlooked the Hudson River on the site where Hudson House now stands, opposite the Ardsley-on-Hudson railroad station. That clubhouse, which the station matches in architectural style, had a private dock to accommodate the yachts of Casino members. The "finest and longest golf course in the world" was designed by golfing great of that era Willie Dunn, who was also engaged as the Club's first Golf Professional. The course would later be redesigned by such noted architects as Donald Ross and Dr. Allister Mackenzie. In 1898 the Ardsley course was the site of the third USGA Women's Amateur Golf Tournament. Grass tennis courts were also constructed, which attracted top-ranked professionals from across the country. Stables were built on the hillside, from which the Ardsley stagecoach Tally-Ho! departed each weekday for the Hotel Brunswick on lower Fifth Avenue.

In 1936 the old Casino clubhouse was torn down, The Ardsley Club having merged with the newer Racquet and Swimming Club in 1935. This more informal offshoot had been formed in 1927 with the big stables annex as its clubhouse. Renamed The Ardsley Country Club, the revitalized club continued as a golfing and lawn tennis center at the riverside location for several decades.

- An address by Irving L. Spanier on the occasion of Founder's Ball, July 2, 1983

Fellow Members of the Glen Head Family

Our House Committee and Board have asked that I report to our newer members upon a part of the history of Glen Head. Although I have done so before, I regard it as a privilege to do so again.

Glen Head began in the early 20's when members of the Creek Club decided that they no longer wanted women golfers, most of whom were their wives, intruding on their private domain. They assembled 176 acres and built Women's National Golf & Tennis Club, a renowned golf course for women, with 22 tennis courts, among them 11 of the finest grass courts in the world. When we took over, we used all but two for parking and putting, and we had a good deal of trouble persuading the 21 man Board that at least two should be preserved because some day tennis might be "in".

Women's National existed actively until the 30's. Then the Depression caught up with it and the Creek Club Trustees, holders of the mortgage, foreclosed.

The Club was administered by Manufacturers Trust Co. during the early 40's through the war years but did not function as a golf club. It served as a private dining club for an exclusive Nassau County high society membership, and was operated by a Mr. Coles as the Penguin Club. He maintained 14 rooms upstairs for the convenience and pleasure of its members.

During the early 40's a small group of us from Great Neck were releasing our energies playing ball as members of the Great Neck Temple team. Soon after the war ended we joined Soundview Country Club in Great Neck Estates. The owners were operating it as a semi- public course until it was ready for development. We played there during 1945, 6 and 7, and that's where golf began for most of us, except for Arthur Guterman, who had grown up with the game, Buster Paltrow, who grew up caddying in Bayside, and I, who had begun to play occasionally in the mid-30's with college peers.

  - "It seems likely that the Websters purchased the charming shingled house at 276 Woods Hole Road built by Milton Fish since all their garden superintendents lived there. It is currently called Webster House and is owned by Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. Mrs. Webster had purchased 45 acres of land extending from Woods Hole Road and Oyster Pond Road to Surf Drive from Arthur Metcalf Morse of Hurricane Hall in Quissett in 1948. Mrs. Webster died in 1969. The property was inherited by her grandson, Edwin W Hiam, who decided to demolish both house and garden. Rose plants were given away to those who wanted them and the demolition took place in 1971. A grasscovered piece of land graced by a few remaining large specimen trees overlooking Quissett Harbor and Buzzards Bay is all that is left. The tower-trimmed carriage house across Quissett Avenue remains in the family and is traditionally painted with deep blue trim. The Webster Rose Garden's reputation is so powerful that it is still spoken of with nostalgia and regret more than 30 years after its destruction." p.38, "Gardeners and Caretakers of Woods Hole" By Susan Fletcher Witzell <http://www.woodsholemuseum.org/woodspages/sprtsl/v19n2-Garden.pdf>

  - History - Kanuga Lake Club
Kanuga began in 1909 as "Kanuga Lake Club," the dream of George Stephens[disambiguation needed ], a Charlotte banker, real estate developer, and newspaper publisher. Kanuga Lake Club was designed to be a place for families from the "low country" of South Carolina and North Carolina to take vacation. Stephens employed John Nolan as his planner, and Richard Sharp Smith as his architect.
After 950 acres (3.8 km<sup>2</sup>) were purchased, a dam was built over Mud Creek, creating a lake (much larger than the current Lake Kanuga). Thirty-nine cottages, an inn with dining rooms, and a lakeside pavilion were built. Utilizing his successful businesses, American Trust Company (now Bank of America and his newspapers, the Charlotte Observer, and the Asheville Citizen, Stephens attracted people to Kanuga. In 1916, tragedy struck. After heavy rains, the dam to Lake Kanuga broke, sending water through Hendersonville and Asheville. Subsequently, Kanuga went broke and was closed. Four attempts at reorganizing the facility ended with four bankruptcies.
Kanuga, an Episcopal Center
In 1928 Bishop Kirkman George Finlay of the Episcopal Diocese of Upper South Carolina spearheaded the effort to purchase the land and open a camp and conference center for the North Carolina and South Carolina Episcopal dioceses.
Money was raised for the operation, and in the 1940s, Scottish architect S. Grant Alexander was commissioned to build the Chapel of the Transfiguration. The chapel was built out of pine wood, not as strong a wood as Alexander had hoped, so support beams were later added to prevent the chapel from collapsing.

  - "In 1909 a successful Charlotte businessman opened the Kanuga Lake Club. George Stephens was a highly successful real estate developer, banker and newspaper publisher. Impressed with the mountains of Western North Carolina, Stephens envisioned a mountain retreat for well-to-do families from Charlotte and South Carolina. Stephens, the creator of Myers park in Charlotte, purchased 950 acres and dammed Mill Creek to create a large lake. Guests of the Kanuga Lake Club traveled to Hendersonville by train. The flood of 1916 broke the Kanuga Dam." p.89, A Guide to Historic Henderson County, North Carolina, Alexia Jones Helsley, George Alexander Jones, The History Press, Jul 31, 2007

  - The Dayton Country Club was established in 1897, and is the oldest continuously operating Club west of the Alleghenies. It is located south of downtown Dayton, on a 126-acre oasis just minutes from the center of the city. Amenities, at Dayton Country Club, feature an 18-hole Donald Ross designed golf course, driving range, and indoor teaching facility for lessons in winter. The golf facilities provide a full-service golf pro shop attended by two golf professionals and complete locker room services. Our two outdoor swimming pools offer summer activities from Memorial Day to Labor Day. The pool facilities are complete with bathhouse, full-service patio dining area as well as a snack bar. For the tennis enthusiast, we provide four clay tennis courts with activities for both adults and juniors, two platform tennis courts, and a racquet pro shop. Inside the clubhouse, we staff four full-service restaurants, offering both casual and formal ambiance. The banquet facilities, whether for a business meeting or that very special occasion, seat up to 300 comfortably. Our very popular South Terrace offers seasonal dining with a breathtaking view of our outstanding golf course. Dayton Country Club is located at 555 Kramer Rd., Dayton, OH 45419.

  - “A rumor circulating through Hamilton the morning of Tuesday, March 25, 1913, saved hundreds, perhaps thousands of lives. Believers survived; many skeptics died. If other people had reacted to the baseless story, it's likely that the city death toll would not have exceeded 200 during the next few days. About an hour after classes had started a warning reached Hamilton school leaders from a source in Dayton, Ohio, also located along the restless Great Miami River...
On the West Side, hundreds of people found refuge at the Hamilton Country Club, located on Wilson's Hill (later Washington Blvd.). The club was west of the Butler County Children's Home on South D Street. and south of Millikin Street.” "Flood March 1913" [p.3 of 7] <http://lanepi.org/scanned/FLOOD/flood%208-14.pdf>

  - History of the Club
...the land on which our Club now sits was used for farming, a gypsy camp, and a church through the mid and late 1800's. It was owned during this time by the Mumma family, and then the Sellars family. Sometime after the turn of the century, it was purchased by Mr. & Mrs. Walter and Georgeanna Kidder, who were the true founders of our Club.
The Kidders lived in Dayton view in a home at Grand Avenue and Arnold Place. They originally wanted the property to build a community center and park to be a gathering spot for local residents. They then got the idea to put a golf course in to provide additional recreational opportunities for the residents, and bought additional adjacent land to bring the total size and acreage of the property to 157 acres.
In addition to their strong sense of community benevolence, the Kidders were very wealthy. Mrs. Kidder was the daughter of William Hayner, who owned a distillery in Troy. Mr. Kidder first worked for Mr. Hayner and later became his business partner. Initially they sold a patent medicine called “Doctor Harter’s Iron Tonic”. But they really began to make money when they started a mail order whiskey business. In this business, they sold liquor by mail to people residing in areas of the country that had been voted “dry”.

Unfortunately, this business was killed when the 18th Amendment and Prohibition was passed in 1919. However, both of these gentlemen went on to successful other businesses.

Once they decided to build a golf course, the Kidders were determined to go first class. They contacted the premier architect of the day, Donald Ross, to do it. Mr. Ross unfortunately initially refused, because he was so busy with other projects. However, he was finally persuaded to come to Dayton and stayed at the Kidder's residence while he looked over the property. One night Mr. Ross met with Kidder and eighteen others who later became Miami Valley Golf Club charter members at the Kidder home. He laid out the course on a blackboard, and later this was reduced to a drawing which is now hanging on the wall outside our foyer at the Club.

The construction of the golf course actually started in 1915. Numerous difficulties were encountered. For instance, the soil had to be revitalized. Existing buildings were torn down. The entire tract was plowed and planted in cow peas to fertilize it. There were also drainage problems, especially where our hole #5 is now. However, the golf course was finally completed by 1919.

- "In November 1919, a corporation was formed - F.B. Patterson, G.H. Mead, Frank Hill Smith, E.S. Reynolds and H.E. Talbott, Jr. under the name of the Miami Valley Hunt and Polo Club for the purpose of "promoting polo, hunting, riding and other outdoor sports and for the social entertainment of the members and their guests." The hunting activity never became as popular as polo, largely because it was not a spectator sport.
 The original membership was divided into three categories: life members, who did not pay initiation fees or dues for 15 years but were the original purchasers of club stock at $2,500 per share (which became worthless when the club was reorganized in 1938), annual members, who paid an initiation fee of $250 plus $150 per year in dues, and out-of-town members, (more than 50 miles from Dayton) who paid $50 per year in dues. A sign of the times, men were the members with women and children being extended privileges. The club was formally opened on July 3, 1920 with a large dinner dance with waiters dressed in full livery. Another traditional activity was started with the very beginning of the Polo Club-the first 4th of July children's "Field Day" races were organized in 1921 by Mrs. Robert T. Houk, Jr. And one of our most beloved annual events, the spectacular Fourth of July Fireworks, was first organized in 1922 by Bennett Gates. The Great Depression almost closed down the Polo Club. The staff, except for Frenchie Owings was dismissed and the polo ponies sold. Mrs. Minerva Seekamp with her two daughters came to live in the north upstairs guest rooms while they cooked and cared for the clubhouse until 1958. The club was able to survive from a financial standpoint, even though the membership fell off drastically, because the land was owned by Colonel Deeds, and he leased it to the club at only $1 a year through the hard times."

- About Us

Welcome to The Dayton Woman's Club -- founded in 1916 and serving the community for over 90 years. The traditions and heritage of our "founding mothers" have been passed down to today's energetic and enthusiastic women and men.

May 1917

In the late 1840's Robert W. Steele, for whom Dayton's first high school was named, built a home at 225 North Ludlow Street. Napoleon Bonaparte Darst purchased the house in the 1860's and began extensive renovation and enrichment, thus changing the Classic Revival style of Mr. Steele's home to the Second Empire style.

In 1916 a group of civic-minded women met to plan the establishment of an organization to provide women of the area with a center for social, civic and literary activities.

September 1920

To finance its purchase, the founders sold stock at ten dollars per share. Mrs. Charles H. Kumler, president of the Dayton Federation of Women's Clubs, later the first president of The DWC, headed a stock-selling drive among the members of The Federation.

On November 1, 1916, The Woman's Clubhouse Company of Dayton, OH --The Dayton Woman's Club -- was incorporated under the laws of the State of Ohio.

Goals & Purpose

The goals of The Dayton Woman's Club are:

- to preserve and maintain the historic home at 225 N. Ludlow Street in Dayton, Ohio;
- to provide a gracious setting for The Club's members and guests for social events and business meetings;
- to present programs for personal, social, professional and philanthropic growth of members and guests.

- o "The Old Barn Club stood at the intersection of Patterson Boulevard and Oak Knoll. It was a manifestation of John H. Patterson's philosophy of making the privileges of belonging to a club with many amenities available to the working people of his factory and the community. He had it built in 1907 on 16 acres he leased to the company for the purpose of an officers' club and agents' school. He recently had bought the Coleman and O'Neil farms in the Dorothy Lane area. It was designed by his favorite architect, Louis Lott, in the Swiss chalet style of his home, The Far Hills, with brown stained clapboard siding, wide eaves and porches on several sides."

- Scenic Congress Lake Club, located near the small village of Hartville, Ohio, is steeped in history that is both unique and colorful. Today we recognize and celebrate what has occurred in years past along the shores of this lake through the research and educational activities organized by our Preservation and Heritage Committee, with assistance from the general membership and Congress Lake Club staff. One of the Club's most celebrated and famous founders was Canton Attorney William McKinley, who, as Governor of Ohio in 1894, provided assistance leading to the formation of the public Canton Outing Club. Two years later the Club was renamed the Congress Lake Club Company, and by 1899, it became a private club. Republican William McKinley would vacate the state Governor's office to become the 25th president of the United States in 1896.

- "The Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul traces its history back to 1832. At that time, Rev. John Corry was the priest in charge of the missionary territory incorporating the city of Providence. Acting through Mr. Francis Hye as his intermediary, Father Corry purchased a plot of land in the city on a slope of land that was then called, "Christian Hill". When Father Corry first saw the site that Mr. Hye had purchased for him, he remarked, "In a few years there will be no such place in Providence as this for a Catholic Church".

Prior to 1968, the Cathedral had never undergone a major renovation. Normal maintenance had kept it intact, the building survived several hurricanes over the years, yet its only major face-lifting was painting in 1921. But in 1968, the late Bishop Russell J. McVinney, in anticipation of the 100th anniversary of the founding of the diocese, initiated a massive renovation program under the direction of Rev. Msgr. William J. Carey, then the Cathedral rector. This renovation was designed to refurbish the Cathedral in line with the liturgical reforms of the second Vatican Council. The renovation process took more than three years to complete.” <http://www.cathedralprovidence.org/history.html>

Description: A rare 1868 example Vaux & Olmstead's map of Washington Park or, as it is now known, Fort Greene Park, Brooklyn. Fort Greene Park is considered to be Brooklyn's first park. Depicts the park as a whole and includes pathways, lakes, buildings, individual trees, rocks, and elevation measurements. The streets and avenues surrounding the park are also noted. The layout of Fort Greene Park shown here reflects Vaux and Olmstead's 1864 redesign. Like their most famous works, Central Park and Prospect Park, Vaux and Olmstead were meticulous in their design of the park, with every tree, pond, and bench planned. Olmstead wrote: "Every foot of the parks surface, every tree and bush, as well as every arch, roadway, and walk and been placed where it is for a purpose." Today, because of Vaux and Olmstead's efforts, the citizens of Fort Greene have the privilege of enjoying what is, without question, one of the finest examples of a planned urban public recreation area in New York City."

- History: The Schuylkill Arsenal was built in 1800 to function as a quartermaster and provide the U.S. military with supplies.[1] One of its most famous tasks was outfitting the Lewis and Clark Expedition. It was the third federal facility in the young nation.[2] The arsenal made clothing and flags for all the military's needs for the next 150 years.[3] In 1926 the Schuylkill Arsenal was renamed the Philadelphia Quartermaster Depot. The original site at Grays Ferry Avenue and Washington Avenue was closed and the site was razed in 1963. The functions of the Quartermaster Depot were all moved to West Oregon Avenue & South 22nd Street In 1965 the operation was reorganized into the Defense Personnel Support Center. In 1993 the government closed the textile factory and moved the remaining part of the South Philadelphia operation to the Naval Support Station in Northeast Philadelphia. It was renamed the Defense Supply Center Philadelphia in 1998,[1][4] and was renamed Defense Logistics Agency Troop Support, or DLA Troop Support, in 2010. The site was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 2010.

- Interior designer Henry Johnson had heard stories about the grand days at Baltimore's Windy Gates, a beautifully landscaped estate that stretched the length of Lake Avenue, from Falls Road to Roland Avenue. Railroad and investment executive Joseph W. Jenkins had moved his family onto the property in the late 1880s, believing the shingle-style house and surrounding acreage would be a fine place to raise his 10 children. Two bedroom, two and a half baths, 3,400 square foot luxury condo in Devon Hill, with private garden, cook's kitchen, wine cellar: $845,000

What: In the world of Baltimore condominiums, this is the 1%. And this particular condo is the glamour girl of Devon Hill. Originally part of the legendary Windy Gates estate, owned by the Jenkins family, Devon Hill was developed in the early 80's by Tony and Martin Azola, local developers much admired for their style and historic sensitivity. They turned the main building (Queen Anne, single style) into five modern condos, leaving intact many of the period details. Each condo has unique features that were part of the old house. The stone home at the entrance to the property was the gatehouse.

- “History of Roland Park: A Brief Overview
Roland Park was developed between 1890 and 1920 by the Roland Park Company. The development was named for the early Baltimore county landowner, Roland Thornberry. The company was incorporated in 1891 by William Edwards, president of a trade publication, The Manufacturer’s Record; Edward H. Bouton, a planner; Charles Grasty, a Baltimore newspaper publisher; and several Midwestern bankers. The company, capitalized with money provided by an English business syndicate, the Land Trust Company of England, purchased two large estates. The first was a 264-acre Oakland Estate located approximately seven-tenths of a mile north of Cold Spring Lane on a ridge above Falls Road...”

- 39.415135,-76.733891      03993    Bowles, Thomas H.      Baltimore      Maryland      0

- "Westburn" was originally built by Mr. Samuel Shoemaker for his daughter Blanch when she married Mr. Frederick Wm. Brune in the late 1800s. The name "Westburn" probably suggested itself because his own property was "Burnside" and the new house was on the west side of the stream which ran through the property. This was not the honeymoon house where the older daughters stayed which was adjacent to the main house, but was built on a hill half a mile away overlooking "Burnside" farm. Blanch Shoemaker Brune had three children, the eldest, her namesake, married a Mr. Van Dusen and moved to Minneapolis. The other two children, Augusta and Fred W., Jr. who became a judge and died only recently, were minor when their parents died, so the record of the present house has a beginning in 1915 when the Mercantile Trust Co., as Trustee, sold the property to Mr. & Mrs. Thomas H. Bowles. The deed indicates that the Bowles sold the house to Mr. & Mrs. Thomas E. Cottman in May of 1920. however, the house burned to the ground on June 15, 1920, and in an article describing the fire Mr. Bowles was said to have acquired the property nine years before or 1911 instead of 1915, and Mr. Cottman to have purchased the house in 1918 instead of 1920. There is no accounting for this discrepancy. The Cottmans were abroad when their house, described as a "showplace of the valley" burned, but on their return they immediately rebuilt using part of the old foundation. This is the present house. On January 30, 1931, Mr. Cottman committed suicide. Mrs. Cottman returned to New York, selling the house to Mr. Harry N. Baetjer in May of 1932. She remarried in December of 1933. When Mr. Baetjer died in April 1969, the house was put up for sale as part of his estate. Rather than let it fall in to the hands of developers, Mr. E. Bruce Baetjer bought it in February of 1970 and sold it in May of that year to Mr. & Mrs. John G. McCormick, bought the house in June of 1978.” Maryland Historical Trust, Inventory Form for State Historical Sites Survey

  - Allegheny Country Club had its origin in 1895, but not at its present location. At California and Brighton Avenues on Pittsburgh's North Side, the first site of the club, a 6-hole golf course as well as tennis courts and a clubhouse were constructed. The Club proved so popular, however, that it soon outgrew this facility. A new 150 acre site off Blackburn Road, then known as the Dairy Farm or McKean Tract, was purchased. The land was cleared and the clubhouse, designed by William Ross Proctor, was erected. A golf course, tennis courts, and a road were constructed and the property generally improved. In May 1902, the New Allegheny Country Club opened.

- 40.037201,-75.189679 03325 McIlhenny, John D. Philadelphia Pennsylvania 2 1906
  - Upon returning to Philadelphia in the late 1870s with his wife and four children, John McIlhenny founded the gas meter-manufacturing firm of Helme and McIlhenny. Succeeded in the business by his son John Dexter (John D.), the family amassed a fortune, and their ingenuity furnished the younger McIlhenny's children with trust funds that sustained them all their lives. In 1898 John D. McIlhenny married Frances Galbraith Plumer. The couple had four children, of which Henry was the youngest. A sister died before he was born, and an older brother died in 1935. McIlhenny had a close relationship with his remaining sibling, Bernice, who was usually referred to as "Bonnie." Both children followed in their parents' commitment to civic involvement and love of the arts. Although McIlhenny's tastes deviated from that of his family, his passion for art was cultivated early on by his parents who were enthusiastic collectors of Oriental rugs, decorative arts, and 17th and 18th century paintings.
Following his return home, McIlhenny in 1950 sold Parkgate, the family home in the Germantown section of Philadelphia and purchased a townhouse in the center of the city, at 1914 Rittenhouse Square. His Philadelphia domain would eventually expand to include the two adjoining residences, renovated to contain a grand ballroom and courtyard fit for lavish entertaining.

- 40.064787,-75.209548 03798 Philadelphia Cricket Club Philadelphia Pennsylvania 0
  - The History of the Philadelphia Cricket Club
Founded in 1854, The Philadelphia Cricket Club is one of the oldest clubs in the country devoted to the playing of games. As the name indicates, the Club was formed by a group of young men of English descent who had played the game while students at the University of Pennsylvania. With the wish to continue to play together after their graduation, they formed the Club under the leadership of William Roach Wistar. If long on enthusiasm for the game they were short on funds and for the first thirty years of their existence they did not own their own property. They would meet and play Cricket on any ground available and thus they "wandered" from Camden, New Jersey, to Frankford to Chestnut Hill to Nicetown playing against teams who could provide a "home pitch."
In 1883, The Club "came home" to Chestnut Hill through the generosity of a benefactor, Henry H. Houston who arranged for them to settle down at The Club's present location on West Willow Grove Avenue in the St. Martin's section of Chestnut Hill.
Shortly after, other games and amusements were added. The Club was one of the founding members of the American Lawn Tennis Association in 1881. When a National Women's Tennis Championship was inaugurated in 1887, the event was conducted at The Club and held there annually until, in 1921, the championship was moved to Forest Hills, New York.

Additionally, one of the highlights of the year, The Philadelphia Horse Show was held for many years on the grounds of The Club. Today, that show is held annually at the Devon Horse Show grounds.

When the Golf Association of Philadelphia was organized in 1897, The Club was one of four founding members. The nine-hole course was built in 1895 and a new eighteen-hole course in 1897. The old eighteen-hole course, known as St. Martin's and now reduced to a pleasant nine-hole layout, hosted the United States Open Championships in 1907 and 1910.

Because The Club did not own the grounds on which the golf course was built, a large tract of land was purchased in 1920. A new championship course was constructed in Flourtown, which opened for play in 1922. Over the years, it has hosted numerous city and state championships.

- 40.208213,-79.20692 06760 Rolling Rock Club Laughlinstown Pennsylvania 155 1919-1931
  - History
Rolling Rock Club was originally 12,000 acres (49 km<sup>2</sup>) of land owned by Judge Thomas Mellon, who left it to his son Richard Beatty Mellon, brother of Andrew Mellon and onetime president of Mellon Bank. Richard Beatty Mellon turned Rolling Rock into a rural retreat for his friends and family to hunt, fish, and ride. From this it steadily developed into an establishment that, in addition to the usual country club necessities - swimming pool and golf course - also boasted stocked trout streams, duck ponds, game birds and shooting ranges. The Club also kept up one of the best United States packs of English fox hounds, raising pheasants, and running the Gold Cup Steeplechase (from 1933 until 1983). R.B. Mellon left the estate to his son, Richard King Mellon, when he died in 1933. In the middle years of the twentieth century, Rolling Rock Club hunted over 75,000 acres (300 km<sup>2</sup>), mostly owned by 240 farmers whose acres surround the Mellon 12,000 acres (49 km<sup>2</sup>).

  - The Founding
The Longue Vue Club was founded in 1920 and is widely recognized as one of the first club's of its kind. The Club was established by several of Pittsburgh's wealthiest and most prominent businessmen. The overall wealth of these men led Longue Vue to be known as "The Millionaires' Club". Led by the Club's first president, Mr. E.W. Mudge, it took the men very little time to put their plan into action and purchase the land on which Longue Vue still sits today. The Longue Vue Club sits on what was once known as "Martinsville", named after Thomas Martin, as well as several other pieces of land. Mr. Martin was a Revolutionary War veteran who was given the land through a Warrant granted by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on April 10, 1786. The land and Club are situated on 370 acres of ground that rests 200 feet above the Allegheny River.
Just as the founders spared no expense in purchasing the land, they sought out the very best in architecture for both the building and landscape design. The task of designing the Clubhouse was put on the shoulders of Mr. Benno Jansen, after whom one of our dining rooms is named. Once Mr. Janssen's plans were approved in November 1921, Mr. Edward A. Wehr began construction utilizing stones from a quarry located only 1 ½ miles from the Club. The magnificent main Clubhouse is of Norman design, with the covered vehicular entrance in English country house tradition. The Clubhouse's exterior was completed in 1923, but the Clubhouse was not used until 1924 and was completely finished in 1925. The beautiful Clubhouse décor and facilities remain to be a staple at Longue Vue. While construction on the Clubhouse was taking place, the founders placed their emphasis on the landscape and golf course design.

Landscape Architect Albert D. Taylor and his firm were commissioned to design the plans for the layout of the grounds at Longue Vue. Taylor was well-known for laying out equestrian trails, which were a key feature at Longue Vue prior to World War II. Taylor sent a young employee, Ralph Griswold, from the Cleveland-based firm to be the on-site manager during the construction of Longue Vue's Landscape. As these plans were carried out, the old farm began its transformation into the spectacularly beautiful grounds that delight us today. As the landscape was being transformed, the last major undertaking was the construction of the golf course at Longue Vue. Mr. Robert White, a prominent Scottish golf course architect, was hired to design the Club's first rate golf course. Mr. White used the area's terrain to develop this picturesque course and was just as successful at Longue Vue as he was at the several other courses he designed throughout the country.

As the Club was founded and all of the major pieces fell into place, the Club and its founders focused on developing the Club's first recreational activity, horseback riding. The Longue Vue stables were erected 1922, and enlarged in 1925. Eventually, the Club provided six miles of bridle paths for the member's use. These activities, however, were relatively short lived and by 1941 Longue Vue had discontinued its stabling program. As this occurred, the interest in horses continued to diminish, and all things equestrian were eliminated for the Club.

  - Early in 1922, a group of 26 men met in the Kennett Square fire house to talk about organizing a golf club. During the months that followed they were able to interest friends and neighbors in the project, and on December 15 the first parcel of land, 1.5 acres, was purchased. It was a start. Two days after Christmas, a charter was granted to the Kennett Square Golf and Country Club. John W. Chalfant was elected president. The board of governors consisted of ten members and an elected president. In early March of 1923, construction got underway on a two-story stone and frame Clubhouse, and by the end of that month the Club had acquired, in two separate purchases, 99.7 acres to go with the original lot. There was now ground enough for golf, and though it might have been possible to lay out a full eighteen on the 101-acre property, a decision was made to build only nine holes. Donald Ross was retained to design the first nine, several holes of which opened for play late that same year.

  - About the Club
 Since 1873, the Westmoreland Club has perpetuated its history of excellence with an unwavering commitment to the service and standards set forth by its founders. Club members, comprised of leaders in business, industry, government, arts and education reflect the exceptional and exciting dynamics of Northeastern Pennsylvania.

The Club's quarters are located in a landmark Georgian mansion in the heart of downtown Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania. The city and its surrounds lay claim to five colleges and universities, several large medical facilities, performing arts centers, theaters and museums and is home to a variety of large businesses and corporations.

The distinctive style of the Westmoreland Club, with its finely appointed furnishings and elegant dining rooms for both intimate and grand occasions, make it a unique and refined choice for social, business and family entertaining. Members treasure the Westmoreland Club for its world class cuisine, impeccable service, personal attention and exceptional facilities. An enduring heritage of excellence has established the Westmoreland Club as one of our country's finest and most esteemed private city clubs.

  - DREAM BECOMES A REALITY
At a board of directors meeting on January 13, 1923, there was a proposal made by C. Elmer Smith on the possibility of looking for a location to build a new eighteen-hole course and a modern clubhouse. It was not until the following year on January 12, 1924 that the board of directors formed a committee to investigate locations and make recommendations for a new country club. There were many sites considered, but they narrowed them down to two locations-one some distance from York and the other one at the present site. Due to the proximity of the one, it was decided that "Crows Nest" would be the ideal site. In May of 1926, the committee chose Donald Ross and Associates to design the golf course. Mr. Ross tramped over the terrain and plotted the course. The course combined natural hazards of the terrain with artificial lakes and bunkers for a total of 6,550 yards for play with a par 72.

  - In 1925, when the nation's post-World-War-I prosperity was still at its height, John Stubbs, Frederic Smith, Earl Mayne and Sam Packer had an idea to build a grand resort in the Poconos on a high plateau three miles north of the village of Canadensis. They purchased eight tracts of land, totaling 2,500 acres, hired a landscape architect to decide on the location of the lodge and golf course, and Skytop was born. Overlooking Skytop Lake with picturesque West Mountain rising in the background, the location proved ideal. The Lodge and Golf Course opened in June 1928. In 1930 a dam was completed and the lake was enlarged to its present size. Later, cottages were built and the 2,000-acre Goose Pond area was acquired.

- "Did the Great Depression Save the Yorktown Battlefield?"
Submitted by Jim Burnett on December 8, 2008 - 4:24am
"Back in the mid-1920s, prosperous Americans were becoming increasingly interested in leisure activities, and good train service, a growing highway network and budding air travel made weekend trips more practical for the well-heeled. A sleepy historic village in southeastern Virginia caught the attention of real estate developers looking for a site for a golf-based resort.
The gently rolling terrain, view of the nearby York River, and relative proximity to large population centers made the area a fine site for the Yorktown Country Club, and at that time the place where America finally achieved victory in its quest for independence from Great Britain was still in private ownership. In 1926 the 18-hole Riverview Golf Course was constructed around the earthworks remaining from the Civil War and Revolutionary War on the Yorktown Battlefield, and work was begun on a large hotel. The Great Depression halted construction on the hotel in 1929 and ended plans for a second golf course on the battlefield.
Colonial National Monument (later renamed Colonial National Historical Park) was established the following year, and the NPS acquired the former country club property. The present-day Yorktown Visitor Center stands on the site of the hotel."

Van Horn's plans revitalized the small town: streets were platted, lots were sold, and soon Centennial boasted a newspaper, bank, hotel, several saloons,,even a country club. In all, over a-dozen corporations were formed to promote the village, Issac Van Horn's most ambitious plan was put into effect in February, 1901, when the Laramie, Hahn's peak and Pacific Railway Company was incorporated in Cheyenne, Wyoming, with Van Horn as president and Fred A. Miller named vice-president. The railroad was formed to transport the expected windfall of gold."

- EARLY HISTORY
"The early history of the Hotel Washington is well known. The original hotel was built about 1870 as a residence for employees of the Panama Railroad Company. It was a two-story frame building located on the present hotel site. In 1905, when construction of the Canal swelled American forces in the Canal Zone, a third floor was added to the hotel and in 1908 it was taken over by the Isthmian Canal Commission. In May 1910, the Washington began to take transient visitors and the load soon became so heavy that the adjacent Bennington House was also turned into an inn for overnight guests, or those staying longer. President William H. Taft, a frequent visitor here during construction days, was convinced of the need for a good Atlantic side hotel - although his favorite local stopping place was the residence of Col. George W. Goethals - and in 1910 he authorized construction of the new Hotel Washington. He decided on its architecture, selected the architects, and set the sum of $500,000 as the top limit for its cost. The old hotel was moved, the seawall reinforced, and work begun on the new building. On March 13, 1913, the Washington -as we know it today- housed its first guest, a well-known American named Vincent Astor. Ten days later it was opened formally to the public."

  - History

The Episcopal Church in Hingham had its earliest beginnings with summer services held in the 1820's. The first regular services were held in Hingham Square over what is now Winston Flowers. In 1883 a small wooden building was erected on Main Street opposite Water Street and the Rev. Charles Wells was appointed the first priest in charge of the congregation.

In 1906, during the rectorship of the Rev. George Weld, the church building was moved across the street to the top of the hill, the site on which the present building is now located. The federal style house next to the church, built in 1789, was purchased to serve as a rectory. A parish hall was added and the church was remodeled after a fire when a bell tower was added. In 1914, the present stone parish hall was erected, containing a gymnasium on the lower level.

In 1919, the old wooden building was razed and the present stone church was erected. Made of locally quarried Weymouth "seam-face" granite, it was built as a gift of Mrs. Ezra Ripley Thayer in memory of her husband who had been Dean of the Harvard Law School. The church building was completed while the Rev. James Bullitt was Rector. The Rev. Daniel Magruder was Rector from 1921 to 1951, a ministry that lasted through the Great Depression and World War II. He is remembered by many for his dramatic flair and kindly ways. Under his leadership, the church school expanded and a boys' choir was established.

Construction of the home where he and his mother planned to spend their summers was interrupted by the Civil War and it was not completed until 1869, by which time his mother had died. The house remained unfinished until 1888, when Tyson, then a 61-year-old bachelor, took a bride, the much younger Edyth Johns, a debutante of 19 years. They spent 16 years together at Cylburn. Tyson died in 1906, and four years later Edyth married Major Bruce Cotton. The Cottons lived at Cylburn until her death in 1942, when the city purchased the 207-acre property from Cotton for a mere $42,300, with the promise that it would be turned into a park, which happened in 1954. Helmcore, Lucas House, 901 Greenspring Valley Rd., Brooklandville, MD
"Samuel Brady, a former mayor of Baltimore City, bought the Helmcore estate on 15 April 1842...A native of Delaware, Samuel Brady and his wife Mary Proctor Stansbury raised eight children...The 1870 US census listed the senior Brady as a farmer with holdings valued at $115,000. With his death a year later at 82, Helmcore passed on to his son Samuel. Samuel Brady Jr. devoted his life to making Helmcore a prosperous farm...Samuel died as Helmcore in 1890 at the age of fifty-seven and his estate passed to his family. His wife Helen had been daughter of Upton Slingluff who had once lived next door at Oakdene (Summerfield). Brady's son Upton Slingluff Brady gave up his career as a civil engineer to manage his father's Valley farm. This Brady, as a trustee appointed in a court case between himself as complaintant and his brother S. Proctor Brady as defendant sold Helmcore to Jacob A. Ulman in 1902."

- "Two splendid agricultural buildings survive at the present Oakdene estate, one a long stone barn with ten stalls, the other a turn-of-the-century carriage house in Queen Anne Style. This property has been occupied since at least 1714 when it was a tobacco plantation of the Cockey family, the land survey name being "Cockey's Trust". The present outbuildings, however, date from the late 19th century when the property was a well developed country residence rather than a working farm. Some of the owners of the property were wealthy and prominent.
William B. Ogden was the owner at the time of the 1896 tax ledger, which showed him with 132 1/2 acres on the south side of what was then called Dover Road in Green Spring Valley, adjoining the land of the late Samuel Brady. The improvements consisted of a dwelling house, stable, barn, carriage house, and other out buildings, assessed at $12,000 in all.
The large barn under study was probably the one listed on the 1896 tax ledger. It was probably designed for riding, racing, and carriage horses rather than the operations of a general farm. James T. Wollon, Jr., in his 1976 study of Green Spring Valley, estimated both barn and carriage house at 1895-to-1905 in origin.
William B. Ogden was the owner from 1892 until his death in 1921 and probably commissioned both structures.
We are unable to supply biographical data on William B. Ogden. Starting in 1898, the property was leased to Thomas Deford who had it about two decades; the estate was spoken of as if it actually belonged to him, the Sun in 1906, for example, presenting a photograph of the "deFord house" as the spelled it.
The Towson weekly paper reported the construction of a carriage house in late 1900, citing a contractor, if not an architect:

Mr. Charles E. Thomas, contractor of Towson, is now engaged in erecting a very large carriage house on the "Oakdene" estate of Mr. Wm. B. Ogden, in Green Spring Valley. The property is under lease to Mr. Thomas Deford Jr. (note 4, Baltimore County Union, Towson, October 27, 1900)

Thomas Deford was involved in a family owned tannery business and in 1912 moved to Luray, Virginia to serve as vice president of the company. Dawn F. Thomas credits Deford with naming the place Oakdene. ...During the 1920s, Mrs. Amelia Carroll was carried as owner, having acquired from the Ogden trustees in 1923. It was Mrs. Carroll who had the boxy Greek revival main dwelling restored to the Georgian appearance it had enjoyed before suffering a fire somewhere before 1833. Mrs. Carroll continued to use the name Oakdene selected by Mr. Ogden. The other known names for the estate were "Summerfield" used in an 1833 sale advertisement and "Anneslie" found in an 1841 tax ledger. The name "Anneslie" had been used during the ownership of Frederick Harrison and moved the name to his next residence, an Italianate villa on Dunkirk Rd, in the 1850s." from "Maryland Inventory of Historic Properties (MIHP) Property Detail Report, Inventory #BA-814"

- Mary Pickersgill served as president of the Society in 1851 when the doors to the Aged Women's Home first opened at West Lexington Street and Franklin Square. Designed by architect Thomas Dixon, the Gothic Tudor building became a city landmark. Fourteen years later, an Aged Men's Home was built adjacent to the Aged Women's Home.

By the 1950s, the original homes faced considerable repairs, and the city threatened to buy the buildings. The board of directors decided to build a new home. They chose a 16-acre site in Towson that had been familiar to the residents; it had served as a summer vacation retreat since 1943 when a bequest from Roberta and Augusta McLaughlin made the purchase of the property possible. The residents moved to the current location in 1959.

The new residence, designed by Bryden B. Hyde, was renamed Pickersgill in 1962. In the late 1970s a wing was added to the building with 28 resident rooms, an activities center and a beauty shop.

- "Not far from Blakehurst is the site of another seniors' complex in Chestnut Ave., Pickersgill. In 1840, this property was recorded as the farm of William Althier who is thought to have enlarged an existing house on his land, a portion of which had been built by the Gotts before 1740. The Althier farm changed ownership several times until it fell into the hands of the Imwold family in 1882. Mr. Imwold, a furniture merchant, improved the house for his wife Anna and six children and dubbed it "Dulce Donum" (Sweet Gift). In 1910, Robert Deford bought Dulce Donum and renamed it "Folly Farm".

In 1942, Folly Farm was sold to the Aged Men's and Women's Home located at Lexington and Calhoun Streets and operated by a women's philanthropic society. The society used Folly Farm as a summer retreat...The society eventually outgrew the original Aged Home which was razed in the 1960s and is the site today of the Franklin Square Elementary School. Folly Farm was razed in 1950 to become Pickersgill Retirement Community complex." 1926-1930                            Rockville Pike, Washington, DC
  - Q: Where did the name "Pooks Hill" come from?
A: In the 1920's, North Bethesda was a patchwork of farms and estates. NIH, the Bethesda Naval Hospital, the Capital Beltway, were not even imagined. Prominent Washington families kept homes along Rockville Pike, which was two lanes wide. In 1927 a prominent Washingtonian, Merle Thorpe, founder and publisher of Nations Business Magazine, bought 102 acres along the west side of the Pike, south of National Geographic founder Gilbert H. Grosvenor's 104-acre estate, "Wild Acres." Thorpe was a journalist by profession and an "omnivorous reader" by habit said his son, Merle Thorpe, Jr. One of the senior Thorpe's favorite writers was Rudyard Kipling, best known for The Jungle Book (1894/1895) and Kim (1901). So when time came to pick a name for the estate, which sat up on a hill, Thorpe chose "Pooks Hill" after Kipling's 1906 story, "Puck of Pook's Hill." The original Pook's Hill Lies near Kipling's home in Sussex, England.

- The second bishop of Providence Most Rev. Matthew Harkins was consecrated in the Cathedral on 1887. Regular services in the Cathedral had begun in November of that year. When the work on the building was finally completed, the Cathedral was consecrated in Sunday, June 30, 1889. Prior to 1968, the Cathedral had never undergone a major renovation. Normal maintenance had kept it intact, the building survived several hurricanes over the years, yet its only major face-lifting was painting in 1921. But in 1968, the late Bishop Russell J. McVinney, in anticipation of the 100th anniversary of the founding of the diocese, initiated a massive renovation program under the direction of Rev. Msgr. William J. Carey, then the Cathedral rector. This renovation was designed to refurbish the Cathedral in line with the liturgical reforms of the second Vatican Council. The renovation process took more than three years to complete. Bishop McVinney died in August of 1971 before renovations were completed. Ironically, he like Bishop Hendricken, did not live to see his dream fulfilled. Renovations were nearly completed on January 26, 1972 when The Most Rev. Louis E. Gelineau was ordained in the Cathedral as the sixth Bishop of Providence. In that same year the Apostolic Delegate to the United States, officiated at the dedication ceremonies for the renovated Cathedral.

  - History of the Jesuit Center
In the years 1927 and 1928 an exploding Catholic population in the Maryland - New York Province was creating a need for an administrative split to produce two provinces. Along with that decision was the necessity of an additional novitiate for the training of novices. Pennsylvania was a good location for the school that was to teach and form Jesuits of the Maryland Province. During this time, the prevailing Jesuit training concept was to remove novices from the mainstream and educate them in an idyllic, secluded setting. Attracted by Wernersville's rail lines, beautiful topography, and health resorts, the Jesuits selected the Mary Gaul Homestead in Lower Heidelberg Township, Berks County, Pennsylvania, as the site for the new project.

  - Atonement Lutheran Church: A Brief History
The first services of Atonement were conducted in September 1909 at the home of Henry M. Stetler by the Rev. F.K. Bernd, president of the Reading Conference. There were 31 participants. Sunday school was also organized in the same month.
In January 1910, an application was filed for a charter for the Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Atonement.
The congregation was received into the Ministerium of Pennsylvania in 1910 and the Rev. William K. Fisher became the first pastor. Services were held in Borough Hall.
After the resignation of Fisher in 1913, there was a two-year pastoral vacancy and the organization nearly disbanded.
In 1915, field missionary Charles K. Fegley arrived and began reorganizing the congregation. In 1918, the Rev John Deaton, fresh from the seminary, accepted a call to the parish.
During early 1920, the congregation used Bausman Memorial Reformed Church auditorium with Holy Week services at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kuhn, 740 Penn Ave., West Reading.
Ground was broken for a new church on July 24, 1920, with the cornerstone laid on June 12, 1921.
For four months in 1921-1922, the congregation worshipped in a tent, "The Tabernacle in the Wilderness," which was on a vacant lot on Belmont Avenue. Harry Kauffman, who lived next door to the tent, ran an extension cord from his garage to supply power to the tent.
The new church was dedicated on May 7, 1922.

  - Parish History
The early Greek Orthodox immigrants came to Dayton, Ohio, individually, not as a group. ...These young men wrote back home with the message that Dayton was a good and beautiful place with plenty of jobs...In 1900, Dayton, Ohio. had the 45th largest population in the nation and 33rd in highest wages paid.
By 1910, there were more than 15 families. These immigrants found strength in the friendship they developed and faith they shared. As their numbers increased through additional immigrations, marriages and births, their religious needs were provided for by a monthly visit of itinerant mission Greek Orthodox priests who were assigned to Southern Ohio... By 1921, there were over 65 families many of whom lived in the Robert Boulevard neighborhood. The area is now the campus of Sinclair College. Bound and determined to preserve and perpetuate their faith, language, customs, and traditions they turned their attention to establishing their own church. A fund drive amassed $5,000 so they were able to purchase an existing small church at 15 South Robert Boulevard.

May 12, 1921 The Greek Orthodox Community was officially formed and a charter signed under the laws of the State of Ohio. Charter signers were: George Z. Lambesis, Spiros Pandely, George Steffens, Otto Zavakos and John Zonars. (A complete list of persons serving as Parish Council president is attached.)
December 1934 Families and business had flourished to the point that the community had outgrown its present location. The General Assembly voted to explore expanding or moving. A building committee was established.

October, 1945 The 1910 Keys mansion, sitting on 3 1/2 acres at 500 Belmonte Park North, was purchased with expense to the parish of $34,157.00.

1945 Ground breaking for our present Church. Apostolos Gelep worked with the architectural company, the Alexander K. Eugene Bros, Inc., and oversaw the construction that cost $450,000. Extensive delays were encountered because of scarcity of materials due to WWII.

June 26, 1949 The cornerstone ceremonies took place following the Divine Liturgy.

September 9, 1951 Full time use of the undecorated edifice begins. Philoptochos commits to purchasing the pews and individual families donated different icons.

June 6, 1961 The old red brick house known as the Keyes Mansion was razed to make room for the future Phase I and II.

- o A brief history of St. Paul's

In October of 1835, a group of people met one evening at a private home in Akron to organize an Episcopal Church congregation. These small gatherings for worship continued for nine years until the first church building was built. From 1844 onward, St. Paul's enjoyed tremendous growth and success, requiring new and larger church buildings in 1884 and 1907. In 1952, our present church building was dedicated on eight acres of land donated by the family of Harvey S. Firestone. Our current building is an Akron landmark and has been expanded multiple times in the last 50 years. <http://www.stpaulsakron.org/history.aspx>

- o OPRS History

The essence of Ohio Presbyterian Retirement Services (OPRS) is its spirit, nurtured through more than 80 years of history. Our story begins with a life cut short – the death of young Dorothy Love in 1921. From this loss, a tradition of caring and quality services was born, and continues to flourish through creativity, innovation and expansion.

Dorothy Love, the 7-year-old daughter of the Reverend and Mrs. Wilbert Blake Love of Sidney, died after being struck by a car a half-block from her home. Mr. Love's entire congregation was shocked and saddened, but the news fell especially hard on Moses Russell, a ruling elder and close friend of the Love family. Grief-stricken by the girl's death, Russell and his two sisters, Martha and Elizabeth, donated a 294-acre tract of farmland in Dorothy's honor. This early location would become today's scenic Dorothy Love Retirement Community.

Originally, the Synod of Ohio owned the earliest communities, which were supported solely by contributions from Presbyterian churches. In 1973, Ohio Presbyterian Homes (OPH) reincorporated as a non-profit, interdenominational corporation, and in 1981, the Articles of Incorporation were revised to remove any control or liability of OPH from the Ohio Synod or United Presbyterian Church of the USA.

  - 1927 On June 26th, Bishop Edmund F. Gibbons laid the foundation for the new church.
1929 The present site of the church included a small pond which was a favorite play area. When it flooded and froze in winter, the children and neighbors had a fine skating rink. At the same time, Mr. Marinello was building a series of two family houses on both sides of Summit Avenue. Also the name Revere Street was changed to St. James Place.

The new church was completed with seating capacity of 750. Bishop Edmund F. Gibbons dedicated it on May 12, 1929. Father Edward Riley led the drive and construction program.

The church is Gothic style, Tennessee marble and Indiana limestone, harmonious, with exquisite detail including hand carved back wall and pulpit and two gorgeous stained glass windows (the rose window above the sanctuary and the Ascension window above the choir loft in the rear of the church). The main altar is flanked by wood carvings of St. Joan of Arc and St. Michael the Archangel.

The church has been acclaimed by some as one of the finest examples of Gothic architecture on the Eastern Seaboard. "The exquisite detailed work portrays a harmony that includes the arcade, the ends of the rows, the rear screen supporting the choir, the reredos of the altars and even the sculptures." A simple organ costing $30,000 was included, later replaced with the beautiful pipe organ at a cost of $500,000 now housed in the church.

The architects were Maginnis & Walsh of Boston and the Rose Window and Choir Window were designed by Mr. Connick of Boston who became famous for the color "blue" known as "Connick Blue"

1930 The debt stood at $447,000 reflecting part of the cost of the construction. This was a substantial burden that had to be settled before considering a School building program. A debt of $447,000 in today's dollars is equivalent of a $5.0 million debt in 1997.

First Presbyterian Church of Far Rockaway
The First Presbyterian Church of Far Rockaway, formerly known as the Russell Sage Memorial Church, is a historic Presbyterian church located in the Far Rockaway neighborhood of Queens, New York. It was designed by noted architect Ralph Adams Cram (1863-1942) as a memorial to Russell Sage (1816-1906). It features a large landscape stained glass window designed by Tiffany Studio. The church was built between 1908 and 1910 and is a Neo-Gothic style building laid out in a traditional cruciform plan. It is constructed of brick with concrete trim and a steeply sloping slate covered roof. Connected to the church are a parish hall and manse. The surrounding landscape is also a contributing element and it was designed by the Olmsted Brothers.[2]

It was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1986.

The original Plymouth Church building was built in 1900 on donated land on Common Street in Belmont. This first sanctuary was destroyed by fire in 1942 during World War II. Building materials were scarce, and the congregation met for worship in a local school until the end of the war. The present sanctuary was inaugurated on Christmas Eve in 1946--despite the absence of a roof! Plymouth Nursery School was opened in the same year as a non-profit, semi-cooperative school sponsored by the church to benefit the greater community--the school continues today. The Parish House and steeple were completed in 1957.

- The First Parish in Cambridge

Site History

The original First Parish, called at the time the first Meeting House, was built near the corner of Dunster and Mount Auburn Streets in 1632. The Meeting House's first minister, Thomas Hooker, stayed only a handful of years; he and most of his flock moved to Connecticut to escape religious persecution in 1636. Reverend Thomas Shepard, a significant leader of the great Puritan migration to New England at the time, gathered a new church, the First Church in Cambridge on February 1, 1636. One year later, Reverend Shepard used his influence with the General Court of Massachusetts to move Harvard College to Newtowne (later called Cambridge), a short distance away from his newly established church, so that the Harvard college students might 'benefit from proximity' to his evangelical preaching. The Harvard College Yard became the site for the second Meeting House, built in 1652, and the third, in 1706, and the fourth, 1756, all located in the corner now occupied by the college's Lehman Hall.

In 1833, the congregation built the fifth and final Meeting House, which stands adjacent to present-day Harvard Yard. Harvard College held its annual commencement ceremonies therein for the next forty years. Five Harvard College Presidents---Everett, Sparks, Walker, Felton, Hill, and Eliot---began their inaugural terms there as well. The Parish House was built in 1902, and the interior of the Meeting House remodeled in 1914. The Crothers chapel was dedicated in 1941.

The Chapel is a simple room with carpeted floor and flexible seating. There is an organ (two-manual Wick with full pedalboard) and a non-denominational altar at the front of the room. Windows overlook a the historic Old Burying Ground. Lights can be dimmed. The room is suitable for meetings, classes and ceremonies such as weddings, memorial services and child blessings. Entry is normally at 3 Church Street. 90 people can be seated lecture style.

- 41.698391,-71.157846 07931 Fall River - St. Mary's Cathedral Fall River Massachusetts 15 1927-1928
  - St. Mary's Cathedral was designed in the Gothic style by renowned architect Patrick C. Keeley of Brooklyn and built of native granite. It was dedicated by Bishop Fitzpatrick on December 16, 1855. The steeple was completed three years later in 1858. Its spire, surmounted by a gilded cross, rises 190 feet above ground. Two chapels adjoin the Cathedral. The Lady Chapel, situated on the Second Street side of the building, was completed in 1869 and serves as a Blessed Sacrament chapel where daily Mass is offered. The Bishop's Chapel, on the other side, was completed in 1935 and is dedicated to the English martyrs, Saints John Fisher and Thomas More. Beneath the chapel is the Bishops' Crypt, where four bishops of Fall River are buried.
  - The windows in the Church date back to different times. Those in the nave are the oldest. Of German origin, they were installed in 1891. The sanctuary windows were designed in Brooklyn and installed in 1915. The three lancet windows above the choir loft, commemorating the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, were designed in Boston and installed in 1952.
  - Over the years, the Cathedral has been beautified in four major renovations: in 1890-1891, in 1912-1913, in 1951 and in 1978-79, in time for the seventy-fifth anniversary celebration of the Fall River Diocese. In this last renovation the principal objective was to provide a setting for divine worship in keeping with the liturgical renewal fostered by the Second Vatican Council.

- 42.696915,-71.174877 09146 Aldred, John Memorial Chapel Lawrence Massachusetts 1 1929
  - The history of this church is closely intertwined with the development of the city of Lawrence. At first, Sunday school classes for children in the area bordering the Merrimack were conducted with the assistance of teachers from various churches throughout the city. Evening prayer meetings were added to these classes, led by laymen from other churches.
  - The next step toward establishment of a separate church came in January 1863, when the former Union Schoolhouse, donated by Deacon Benjamin Coolidge of Lawrence St. Church, was dedicated and became the new chapel.
  - The building had to be moved from Essex St. and was set up on the banks of the Merrimack on Water St., present location of the church.
  - In the golden jubilee year, the major effort of parishioners resulted in the erection of the present stone chapel. They started out in a small way, seeking only to add a steeple to the converted school to make it look more like a church.

John Edward Aldred, son of one of the early founders, offered to donate a whole new church to be known as the John Aldred Memorial – the handsome stone edifice that has been the pride of parishioners during the second half of the church's history.

  - Church of the Holy Spirit
A mission of All Saints' Church in the 1880s. It was during George Bennitt's tenure that All Saints' began services in Mattapan, which later resulted in the establishment of the Church of the Holy Spirit, the only mission of All Saints' to become a parish. Father Bennitt went to Mattapan because Annie Rotch offered to assist in the work there. In April 1895 fourteen communicants were set off from All Saints' to Mattapan. The Church building was given by Annie Lawrence Lamb in memory of her father Benjamin Rotch. It is Dorchester's second stone Gothic Revival church and was designed by Arthur Rotch to draw the puddingstone of the church and the grounds into a rural ensemble sensitive to the topography of the site. The Church of the Holy Spirit is the first recorded association of Ralph Adams Cram with church architecture, for he was an apprentice in Rotch's office and drew sketches of the church. Twenty-five years later, after he designed All Saints', Ashmont, and after he had become perhaps the most eminent ecclesiastical architect in the United States, he deisigned the parish house next to Rotch's church.

In 1889 the Rev. John T. Magrath was rector.

- "As a tribute to this man whose 'good judgement always made him a wise councilor,' his family also decided to build the Church of the Holy Spirit at Mattapan in his memory. Designed in 1886 by his son Arthur Rotch, partner of George T. Tilden in the firm of Rotch & Tilden, the church was commissioned by Annie Rotch Lamb, wife of Horatio A. Lamb, who later was to inherit the [family] farm in Milton. A country church built of Roxbury puddingstone, it has a squat tower in the center with Tudor-inspired gables projecting from it. The church, consecrated by Bishop Phillips Brooks, was furnished with gifts from the family", p. 128, Milton: A Compendium, Anthony Mitchell Sammarco, The History Press, Nov 15, 2010

  - The cornerstone of St. Bernard's was blessed on November 12, 1871, and on August 23, 1874, Bishop Williams dedicated the tasteful Gothic brick church, which had cost about $45,000.00. Two years later, West Newton was made a separate parish under father Michael T. McManus (appointed April 20, 1876). Under its third pastor, Rev. Lawrence J. O'Toole (1886-1911), the church was almost completely destroyed by fire on the evening of June 23, 1889. Once more, the congregation went for a season to the Town Hall, but, thanks to the resolute efforts of the pastor and the people, the church was promptly rebuilt - substantially along its old lines, but larger and more beautiful than ever - and rededicated on April 27, 1890. http://www.ccsbparish.org/history\_st\_bernard.cfm

  - The furnishings of our church, carpeting, pews, baptismal font, pulpit, bishop's throne, chanter's stand, iconostasion and all the sacred vessels and appointments that are essential in a Greek Orthodox church began to appear in place through the efforts of many parishioners. Magnificent mosaics of Christ Pantokrator, St. John the Baptist, Our Lady Theotokos, The Baptism of Christ and The Resurrection were ordered from Italy and installed in time for the Consecration in 1979.
Our parish, as it has grown, has experienced many events, both joyous and sad. We have had many marriages of new members and marriages of the children of the early 60's. St. Demetrios has also noted the passing of many of our faithful family members.
The Consecration of our church took place on Sunday, October 28, 1979, under the presidency of Gus Pappas, with Archbishop Iakovos officiating and assisted by His Grace Anthimos, Bishop of Boston. In commemoration of the Consecration, a dance was held on Friday evening in our parish hall, and a banquet on Sunday night at the Chateau de Ville in Framingham. <http://www.stdemetriosweston.org/history/>

- History

The North Woodward Congregational Church was built in stages, with a small chapel, designed by the firm of Malcomson and Higginbotham,[3] on the site of the present church constructed as early as 1907. The construction of the main sanctuary began in 1911 and was completed in 1912.[4] Sections were added, with the most recent, the church house, being added in 1929.[4] By the 1950s, the congregation had substantially moved out of Detroit, and the building was sold to the St. John's Christian Methodist Episcopal Church congregation.[5] This congregation had been organized on July 8, 1917, as St. John's Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.[5] A State of Michigan historical marker commemorates this church.[5] The official denominational name was changed from "Colored" to "Christian" in 1954. St. John's Christian Methodist Episcopal Church was the first C.M.E. church established in the state of Michigan and, as of 2009, it remains the largest and most recognized Christian Methodist congregation in the state. The Reverend Joseph B. Gordon, a native Detroiter, was appointed as pastor in 2008.

- History

Christ Church Cranbrook, as well as the Cranbrook Educational Community, was the brainchild of newspaper magnate George G. Booth and his wife, Ellen. The Booths bought a 175-acre farm in Bloomfield Hills, Michigan in 1904 and established a series of buildings beginning with their residence, Cranbrook House, in 1908, and an elementary school in the early twenties.

In 1923, George Booth saw that a church was much needed in Bloomfield Hills as many residents were traveling to neighboring towns for worship services. He decided to establish an Episcopalian church as part of the Cranbrook community. The designs of architectural firm Goodhue Associates were selected in 1924, and groundbreaking began in 1925.

A reflection of the artistic spirit and inspiration which characterized the lives of George and Ellen Booth, Christ Church Cranbrook is rich in architectural detail. Including work by woodcarver John Kirchmayer and silversmith Arthur Nevill, stained glass designs by G. Owen Bonawit, sculptures of the "Dawn Men" on the exterior buttresses by Lee Lawrie, and the large fresco at the front of the church by Katherine McEwen, the church was developed with meticulous care and aesthetic attention.

Christ Church Cranbrook was consecrated on September 29, 1928. Since its dedication, the church has flourished with approximately 900 families in membership and a wide variety of worship, fellowship, music, and outreach opportunities.

- 42.961404,-70.773588      09576   Union Chapel   Rye Beach   New Hampshire 3   1939

- Union Chapel would be inconspicuous if it were not opposite the Fuller Gardens. But why was it built? Who built it? How is it used today?

With a growing summer colony at Little Boar's Head, the wish also grew to have religious services nearby. A Union Chapel Fund Society was formed in 1875 to raise the money, a total of $3,000, in gifts ranging from $5 to $300.

George A. Moore was the architect with Elmer Hutchins and William Maddox as the builders. The chapel was to be constructed "exactly like Mr. Wingate's Episcopal Chapel at Haverhill." The style is that of an English country church, with interior Gothic Revival arches.

The site of the Chapel was part of the Brown farm in the early 19th century. Franklin Pierce, when President, bought that part of the Brown farm in 1853 and then, when out of office, built a home in 1866.

That land was then sold in 1869 to Mrs. Eliza P. Philbrick and she subsequently deeded the lot for the Chapel to the Trustees in 1877. The land between the Chapel and the sea was a field at the start of the 20th century, owned by Joseph Merrill. Alvan Fuller bought that field and built a large home in 1914, prominently sited until it was torn down in 1960. Since then it is a well-maintained lawn.

For two years during the construction of the Chapel, summer services were held in the Cathedral Woods, near the present intersection of Locke Road and Chapel Road, until the first service in the new Chapel was held on August 5, 1877.

  - In the 1930s, Governor Fuller hired the Olmsted Brothers Firm of Boston to improve the gardens and create a rose garden that would honor his wife, Viola. Fuller wanted the front garden to be more of a 'showpiece'. Leon H. Zach, a partner in the Olmsted Firm, reports on the meeting with Alvan Fuller in April of 1938: "Mrs. Fuller (Viola) does not go into the garden more than three times a year and Mr. Fuller not more than half a dozen times, but they both get a great deal of pleasure looking from their bedroom windows over the road into the garden, seeing a great deal of people — especially weekends — enjoying its charm. The garden is known to be open at all times and apparently there has been little if any abuse of this privilege. Mr. Fuller wants the garden design revamped so that even more color can be seen from the road as you drive by."
Cherry Hill Nurseries installed the Olmsted designed "side garden" which is laid out in a circular pattern of rose beds and grass pathways, surrounding a central antique wellhead. The garden is enclosed by a privet hedge and a cedar fence upon which are trained espaliered apple trees. The rose gardens boast 1,700 bushes and 125 different varieties. <http://www.fullergardens.org/about-fuller-gardens/garden-history/>

- His son Dudley Leavitt Pickman Jr. attended Noble and Greenough School,[31] Harvard College, where he was president of the Hasty Pudding Club,[32] and Harvard Law School,[33] practiced law in Boston and lived in a 40-room granite mansion, staffed by five servants and designed by architect Stanford White at 191 Commonwealth Avenue in Boston, as well as in Beverly, Massachusetts.[34] He served as a director for a number of public companies, including a subsidiary of Calumet and Hecla Mining Company [35] and as one of the first three trustees of the Henry Wadsworth Longfellow House National Park site in Cambridge, Massachusetts.[36]

Dudley Leavitt Pickman Jr. continued the family's tradition of making gifts of significant family heirlooms and antiques to the collection of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts,[37] including a teapot by silversmith John Coburn bearing the Pickman family coat of arms.[38] Born in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1885, Dudley Leavitt Pickman Jr. also became a noted mountaineer and porcelain expert,[39] who published several books on the subject.[40] Along with his friends Harold Stirling Vanderbilt, Francis Bacon and Frederic Allen, Pickman played the first game of contract bridge in its modern form.[41] He married the widow of Boston businessman Alexander Lynde Cochrane

The family also later owned an estate located near Two Brothers Rocks in Bedford, Massachusetts, so named because the lands were patented by both Massachusetts Bay Colony governors John Winthrop and Thomas Dudley.[47] Dudley Leavitt Pickman and his progeny were descended from both early governors.

- “The site of the home of Lieutenant Stearns is that of the residence recently purchased by Dudley L. Pickman of Boston. Mr. Pickman is a lineal descendant of Lieutenant-Governor Dudley, who, with Governor Winthrop, received the early grants of this territory. Chestnut Avenue, leading to the residence and historic grounds, makes a most beautiful modern connection of these farms of colonial history.” p. 333, Governor Winthrop's Farm: A Chapter of Old Bedford History

[showing S.W. Huckins estate on then-Huckins St., now Dudley Rd.]

- Samuel W. Huckins, born in 1817, settled on the land about 1870. Huckins was respected for his good judgment and was honored with various offices in town. Maps circa 1875 indicate that what we know as Dudley Road was called Huckins Street. Samuel Huckins lived there until his death in 1892. He had a son, Henry, who was born in 1849, and was living in Bedford in 1910.

In the late 1800's, Dudley Pickman and his wife, Ellen, fell in love with the land and bought a substantial parcel (mostly Winthrop's land and a portion of Dudley's grant). Included in this purchase was Huckins Farm. Pickman, a direct descendent of Winthrop and Dudley, bought the land without knowledge of the Winthrop-Dudley grant. He found out much later that he had purchased his ancestor's land. The land was used as a dairy farm and apple orchard, in addition to the fields, pasture land, bog garden, and ponds. Chestnut trees lined the old road between the fields. Dudley Road had been named Chestnut Avenue around that time.

A large portion of the Pickman land, Huckins Farm, was sold to a developer for condominium development in 1987, and other parcels including the large Pickman house (Stearns Farm) were sold to private parties.

  - Chester Noyes Greenough (1874 – February 27, 1938) was a Professor of English and Dean at Harvard University.
Born in Wakefield, Massachusetts in 1874, Greenough graduated from Harvard College in 1898, received his master's degree in 1899 and his doctorate in 1904, both from Harvard University. He taught at Harvard briefly before becoming head of The English Department at the University of Illinois in 1907. He returned to Harvard as Assistant Professor of English in 19010 and became Professor of English in 1915.[1]
While serving a two-year term as Acting Dean of Harvard College from 1919 to 1921, he played a principal role in Harvard's purge of homosexuals known as the Secret Court of 1920.
He held the post of Dean from 1921 to 1927.[1] He became the first Master of Dunster House, a Harvard student residence, serving from 1930 to 1934.[2]
One of his publications became a popular textbook, History of Literature in America, authored with Barrett Wendell.
He married twice. His first wife, Marietta McPherson, died in 1925. He married Ruth Hornblower Atkins, who survived him, in 1931. He died in Belmont Massachusetts, on February 27, 1938.[1]

  - At the southwest corner of the Fernald Center is the City of Waltham Forest Street Park, originally part of a larger parcel deeded to the City by the estate of Cornelia Warren. This 11-acre parcel is located along Forest Street between the former Army Corps of Engineers site and Cedar Hill Girl Scouts' Camp. The new Veteran's Memorial Field with six playing fields located on the former Army Corps of Engineers site in the City of Waltham is nearing completion. Cedar Hill Girl Scouts' Camp is fenced for the safety of the children camping there, but the reservation also acts as a wildlife corridor within the greenway. The 75-acre camp includes Clematis Brook, a spring-fed pond, diverse plant and tree species, and the 1730 Isaac Mixer House. Situated on the western side of the Girl Scout camp is another Cornelia Warren estate gift, the 15-acre Waltham Woods, the peak of Cedar Hill offering views to the south.

Across Beaver Street from the Cedar Hill Reservation is Cornelia Warren Playground, deeded to the City of Waltham and used as a softball field. Adjacent to Cornelia Warren Field is the University of Massachusetts Field Station. <http://www.mass.gov/dcr/stewardship/rmp/downloads/beaverbrk/ch2.pdf>

  - Henry Hills House, 38 Gray Street, Amherst, MA
The Henry Hills Mansion was designed by well known local architect William Pheno Pratt at the behest of Henry Hills, owner of a palm-hat factory. (His father, Leonard, ordered built a similar Victorian house at about the same time on an adjacent 3-acre lot.) The particular style of this Victorian house is generally called Italianate. It was built in 1865.
The building sits on a 1.25-acre "flag" lot with entrance at 38 Gray Street and open views from Main Street. After renovations, the Henry Hills house will boast close to 6,000 square feet of living space, eight fireplaces - some gas, some natural - and a high-efficiency hot-water radiator heating system. In addition to the main house, the home includes a two-bedroom apartment on the second floor with separate entrance and parquet floors in the sunny living room, and a three-bay garage with a second floor.

- Bob Hope Airport began its history as United Airport when it opened on Memorial Day weekend, 1930. Built by the United Airports Company of California, Ltd., it was said to be the first multimillion-dollar airport in the country, and it quickly became the primary airport for the greater Los Angeles region. Many of the early heroes of aviation frequented the facility, especially those connected with nearby Lockheed Aircraft Company, such as Wiley Post, Amelia Earhart, and Charles Lindbergh.

- The Chase Headquarters Building in Waterbury, Connecticut is on Grand Street across from the city hall. It is now occupied by the city of Waterbury's offices. Chase Brass commissioned well-known architect Cass Gilbert to design it in 1916, across from his recently completed Waterbury city hall. Henry Chase, the company president, specifically requested that the headquarters be designed to contrast with the style of the city hall, resulting in a design which shunned colonial marble and brick. The company sold the building to preservationists in 1963 for one dollar, who in turn sold it to the city of Waterbury to be used as city offices, a function it still serves today. It is now known as the Chase Municipal Building and is part of Waterbury's Cass Gilbert Historical District.

- The Waterbury Manufacturing Company was incorporated in 1876 from the assets of the bankrupt U.S. Button Company. Waterbury Manufacturing produced small metal goods, including buttons, umbrella parts and upholstery trim. By the 1890s, the company employed four or five hundred workers. The company had a casting shop for making brass ingots, but had to take the ingots to other companies for rolling into sheets or forming into wire, both of which were essential for producing finished consumer goods. In 1900, to remove its dependence on other companies, Waterbury Manufacturing established its own rolling mill, the Chase Rolling Mill Company, producing sheet brass and wire.

One symbol of Chase during this era, and something of a tourist attraction in Waterbury, was its team of Percheron horses used for hauling cordwood from forests in Kent, coal from the Freight Street railway station, and heavy loads from the Waterville plant to the mill on North Main Street. At their height of use, Chase had close to 350 horses, typically used in eight-horse hitches, but they also had a 24-horse team and a 40-horse team. In 1913, after a trolley railway for freight and passenger service connected the Waterville Chase Metal Works to the mill on North Main Street, the horses were sold to the Barnum & Bailey circus. At least one of Chase's horse team drivers, Jim Thomas, joined Barnum & Bailey to drive the horse teams for the circus.

TORRINGTON — With the demolition of the last few walls of the Torrington Manufacturing Company's Franklin Street plant, the city has lost one of its largest former manufacturing giants, and one of the city's largest employers.
The company was first organized in 1885 as a manufacturer of tacks for a short period, before becoming a large machine producer in later years. The plant extended along the East branch of the Naugatuck River fronting Franklin Street, and Franklin Drive. The plant consisted of a machine shop, an office building, a laboratory and the air impeller division, which became a large part of the company's production.

Anthony,

Cheshire Nursery is the former Northeastern Forestry Co. We own the remaining 12.5 acres of the original acreage.

History is vague. I would like to know what you find out.

  - Great Gardens: Life is a blooming thrill on Blueberry Hill in Blandford
By Christine White | Special to The Republican

BLANDFORD - A long driveway winds up to Blueberry Hill, stopping at the foot of a steep incline which is covered with rhododendrons, azaleas, and mountain laurel, all shrubs that Linda Smith says give her home a woody look. Myrtle hugs the ground.

Cutting through the landscaping and curving up to the house, a long stairway is flanked by two wrought-iron lampposts from the original Colony Club in Springfield.

Linda Smith and her husband, Dr. Chris Smith, have painted the house black so it "settles into the landscape," she explains.

On the front side, a large terrace faces east where one can catch the sunrise over the spectacular mountain view, while relaxing on wooden furniture built by Chris Smith.

The Smiths will welcome visitors to their gardens on June 14 and 15 as part of the annual garden tour to benefit Grandmothers' Garden in Westfield.

Gloria Chapin, the wife of the original owner, was Finnish, and the house features many Scandinavian elements, starting with the Dutch doors, copper hardware and painted-porcelain doorknobs. Inside the side door, a small kitchen sports colorful European tiles behind a hooded stove.

  - “After the death of James Beebe in 1875, his children built two grand residences on the hill. Brothers Pierson and Franklin and sister Emily built a lavish "summer cottage" in the Queen Anne stick style modeled after the British Pavilion in the great 1876 Philadelphia Centennial Exposition. Highfield Hall was completed in 1878, and its sister mansion, Tanglewood, where the J. Arthur Beebes took up residence, was finished in 1879. Thus began over fifty years of Beebes living and entertaining in their "summer cottages" at Highfield. In its heyday, the hill must have been a bustling scene. The miles of carriage trails, riding trails, gardens, two huge homes, and numerous outbuildings required a small army of servants to maintain. The Beebes even started a farm on Shore Street to provide produce for their Falmouth and Boston residences.” <http://www.highfieldhall.org/history.shtml>

No longer assigned; renumbered in its entirety as I-395.

The Route 52 number was applied Sept. 15, 1964 to two sections of highway that had not previously been numbered: a segment of the Connecticut Turnpike from Waterford to the US 6 cutoff (SR 695), and a segment of "relocated Route 12" extending north from SR 695 to Route 101. "Relocated Route 12" was more of a planning number for the non-turnpike section, since there isn't evidence of it having been signed Route 12.

  - History of the ATCO, Georgia Mill
Summer, 2006, City of Cartersville Newsletter
"Located on the west side of Cassville Road, just a couple miles northwest of Cartersville's City Hall, is the former American Textile Company (ATCO) mill that dates back to 1903. The company was started by Edward Lee McClain to manufacture cloth for his horse collar pad business that began in 1884 in Greenfield, Ohio.
ATCO was unique among many other mills at that time. Mr. McClain made great efforts to create a community surrounding the plant that would offer his employees a place where they could work, live and play. The company built houses around the mill for the workers. As of 1930, the population of ATCO was 1,562; that did not include an estimated 300 employees that worked at the mill, but did not live in ATCO. In addition to the houses, the village included a church, school, baseball and basketball facilities, a swimming pool, general store, barber shop, beauty shop, tennis courts and a laundry/ice house.

  - History
The Visionaries
Lafayette Place is the innovative development of Lee J. Ninde, president of the Wildwood Builders Company, and noted landscape architect Arthur Shurcliff.
Lee J. Ninde was a nationally and regionally master proponent of city planning as builder, promoter, realtor, magazine editor, and developer. He was a founding Fellow of the American Institute of City Planning, a member of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges and president of the Indiana Real Estate Association. He also served as the first president of the Fort Wayne Plan Commission.
By 1915, Wildwood Builders Company had grown into eight separate companies, one of which was the Lafayette Place Company. In an agreement dated June 19, 1915, the Lafayette Place Company sold a tract of land called Lafayette Place Addition to Lee J. Ninde for development. This tract of land was bounded on the north by McKinnie Avenue, on the west by Calhoun Street, on the south by Pettit Avenue and on the east by Lafayette Street.

Arthur Shurcliff was a nationally prominent landscape architect from Boston. In 1899, he co-founded the country's first four-year landscape program at Harvard. Shurcliff was a two-term president of the American Society of Landscape Architects and one of the 52 founding members of the American City Planning Institute.

In 1915, Shurcliff was hired to design Lafayette Place. It is one of Shurcliff's hallmarks of the early 20th Century. He designed three Fort Wayne subdivisions for Wildwood Builders: Wildwood Park in the curvilinear style in 1914; Lafayette Place with an Esplanade, modified grid and formal pattern in 1915; and Brookview that was designed around the Spy Run Creek in 1917. Shurcliff also completed master plans for Swinney Park in 1916 and Franke Park in 1924. <http://lafayetteplace.org/history>

- Shawnee Place Historic District

Significance

The Shawnee Place Addition was a residential development by the Wildwood Builders, under the direction of the innovative husband-and-wife team of Lee J. and Joel Ninde. An article which appeared in The Wildwood Magazine in 1916 stated that Shawnee Place "is a small residence district comprising less than fifty homes, but as it was designed and built as a whole, the houses express a harmony of architecture, while the neighborhood interests run in the same channels towards general betterment and attractive surroundings." This unity of character and design, as well as the attractive surroundings, remain today in the Shawnee Place Local Historic District. These are the primary elements that give the district significance in the areas of architecture, and community planning and development. Shawnee Place is equally significant for its association with the Wildwood Builders, and particularly for the unique and original house designs of self-trained architect Joel Roberts Ninde, produced with the assistance of Wildwood "draftsman" Grace Crosby. <http://www.cityoffortwayne.org/shawnee-place-historic-district.html>

  - Dix Dam was built to create a reservoir for operating a hydroelectric generating station. The dam also helped mitigate flooding on the Kentucky River by holding water in Herrington Lake during critical periods. Construction began in the fall of 1923, impoundment of water began on March 17, 1925, and the project was completed and power generation began in October 1927.[1] The project cost more than US $7 million.[2]
Dix Dam was constructed Kentucky Utilities, a private corporation prior to the Great Depression. Consequently, Kentucky Utilities owns the land beneath Herrington Lake up to the maximum possible lake level of 760 feet (230 m) above sea level. It also owns Dix Dam.[1]
When Dix Dam was built, it was the largest rock filled dam in the world. The top of the dam is 287 feet (87 m) above the riverbed and 1,087 feet (331 m) across and is 24 feet (7.3 m) wide at the top and 750 feet (230 m) wide at its base. Herrington Lake is the deepest lake in Kentucky. It is 35 miles (56 km) long, up to 1,200 feet (370 m) wide, covers 2,335 acres (945 ha) and has 325 miles (523 km) of shoreline. It is deepest near the Dix Dam with water depth of 249 feet (76 m) and has a mean depth of 78 feet (24 m). The estimated capacity of the lake is 175,000,000,000 US gallons (660,000,000 m3).[1]
The hydroelectric generating station was originally designed to produce 30 megawatts of power. Over time other generating plants were constructed near the dam and the facility was named E. W. Brown Generating Station.[2] A coal-fired generator was added to the Brown Plant in 1957. More recently, a combustion turbine generating facility was added with six turbine units - four more are planned. They are fueled by either natural gas or fuel oil.[3] http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dix\_Dam

  - "Preliminary Findings of Historical and/or Architectural Significance: The house at 300 Allendale Road, built in 1951, is a fine example of post World War II modernist residential architecture. Designed by the prominent Boston-based firm of Richmond and Goldberg, it was the private home of Carney Goldberg and his family. The house is located on a very visible site at the corner of Allendale and Risley roads, on a low hill with puddingstone outcroppings. Built of brick painted pink and with simple block massing, the house seems to rise organically out of the ground. There are two principal facades: along Allendale Road where the front entry is located at the far end of an ell set back from the primary volume of the house, and along Risley Road, containing a side entry and garages." from Brookline Preservation Commission Demolition Application Report

- Fernwood
While the Olmsted firm received more commissions related to property south of Boylston Street, this work tended to be on individual estates. For example, the Fernwood Estate off Clyde Street bounded the north side of The Country Club. Alfred Douglass from New York acquired the property in 1909, demolished the old Gardiner House, and hired Boston architect Charles Patch to design a house, servant's house and carriage barn. The Olmsted records include extensive plans for work on this estate with its Tudor Revival style buildings.<sup>458</sup> According to a promotional brochure for the subsequent subdivision of the property, "Under their direction over three miles of macadam road were built, paths located, the entire property graded, and a section kept moist by a dozen springs transformed into a beautiful pond covering nearly two acres."<sup>459</sup> Douglass evidently ran into financial difficulties and sold the property in 1924. He died early in 1925. The 1922 subdivision projected sixteen large houses on large lots of at least two acres <sup>458</sup> The Olmsted job number for Fernwood is 04010.

459 "Fernwood Brookline", promotional brochure, c.1922, copy in the archives of the Brookline Preservation Commission.

(Fig. 10). The largest lot, over 18 acres, included a pond. The Douglass Mansion became a school, and large single-family homes were not built until the late twentieth century. Ironically, the new construction seems to have respected much of the intent behind the 1922 plan in the sense that the area has not been intensively developed.<sup>460</sup> <http://www.bu.edu/av/ah/fall2009/keith/commBYdesign.pdf>

Preliminary Findings of Historical and/or Architectural Significance: The three buildings at 395 Warren Street date to 1945 (house), 1930 (indoor badminton/squash court) and c. 1860 (carriage house/garage with apartment). The house was built for William Tripp after a Colonial-style design by the architect Charles Wait. Characterdefining features include the hip roof, large chimneys, central entry and large first story windows. While working for the Olmsted Brothers from 1910 to 1922, Charles Wait designed the Mountain Lake Colony House and several residences in Lake Wales, Florida. His work helped revive the Mediterranean style popular in Florida in the interwar years. Later he established his own firm in Boston and designed private and public buildings, including veterans housing and hospitals in Massachusetts. Tripp, who owned the property in the 1940's, was a prominent builder and developer in Brookline. The badminton/racquet court building was designed by architect H. B. Prescott for Gorham Brooks, an attorney. It is a cement block building (likely steel-framed), with brick quoins and lintels, a flat roof and minimal fenestration.

  - Harvey P. Hood Garden 1930-1988.
General Note: With grounds dating to 1898, this is the oldest unaltered Olmsted design in Massachusetts. The two-acre garden slopes very steeply south and is a walled series of large terraces ending in a street. The central terrace features flowering trees, wisteria, and flower beds, while the lower terraces includes a reflecting pool and berry patches. A walkway goes down the east border. A wisteria arbor parallels this walkway.
Persons associated with the property include: the Thayer family estate (former owner); Mr. and Mrs. Harvey P. Hood (former owners, 1898-1962); Dr. and Mrs. Chilton Crane (former owners, 1962-1968); and the Olmsted Brothers (landscape architects).

Interviewed March 13, 1980, Concord Oral History Program, Renee Garrelick, Interviewer.
Then in 1928 we moved to Nine Acre Corner in the house we now live in. The farms in this area were owned by Andersons, Wheelers, Brighams, Lutkins, Hallecks, Verrills. The farms of Andersons, Wheelers, and Brigham had been here for several generations, and the Lutkins to some extent.
I understand long before our time, they had their own school out here. It was a town school of course, but it was where this area went to school.
We had our own social life out here. I well remember the parties we had at Esther Anderson's farm where we shucked colored corn to hang on our doors for Thanksgiving. Our house is built in what was the orchard for the farm where the Trustman's now live on Powder Mill Road. The farm was then owned by a Mr. Miller. This pond behind the house was where our children used to canoe. If they didn't have a canoe, they went on asparagus boxes from Mr. Miller's farm because he grew asparagus. These boxes would float on the water.
This house was known as The Green Apple Tea Room, which also sold antiques, and there is a box in the attic which confirms that. Sudbury Road and Old Road to Nine Acre Corner were the only roads to Sudbury, and it was not a good place for a tea room or selling antiques. It was not a well traveled road then. But there are times today when I have to sit in my car in the little triangle where the roads meet to wait to get in my driveway especially in the late afternoon when it's commuting time.

- FARMING RUSTY WHEELER 'S NINE ACRE CORNER, Interviewed in 1977, notes typed September 12, 1979, Concord Oral History Program, Renee Garrellick, Interviewer.
Rusty and Marian Wheeler
Rusty (Russell) Wheeler is the tenth generation descended from George Wheeler, one of the founding fathers of Concord. George Wheeler's corner was at Powdermill Road and the home is presently occupied by the Trustman family. Rusty and his wife Marian tell of the feud between George Wheeler and another founding father, Peter Bulkeley, over who had claim to the disputed nine-acre parcel of land. The issue came up so many times during town meetings that it became know as Nine-Acre Corner.
My home was the "plains" area of Nine-Acre Corner which included Powdermill and Plainfield Roads and roads that would subsequently bear the names of my grandfather, father, and uncle - Anson, Raymond, and Alden Roads, when the family

- Town officials, are prepared to take legal action against a landowner on Powdermill Road if the owner does not immediately stop dredging and filling a private pond on his premises, in violation of the Hatch Act provisions. The selectmen voted last night to procede in requesting an injunction against Alan R. Trustman of Parkman Tavern, 20 Powdermill Road, ordering him to stop excavating the bank of his pond and removing muck from it. Trust - man is an attorney and the author of several recent screenplays, including "The Thomas Crown - Affair" and "Call Me Mr. Tibbs." Legal action by the town will come, however, only if the Mass. Department of Natural Resources does not give Truslman a desist order today. The selectmen contend "mat all work must cease" on the dredging and filling project, which "has not followed set procedures in coming before the board for a public hearing." Town Manager Paul J. Flynn told the selectmen that Trustman was notified that tl hearing was mandatory before he began cleaning the pond. The selectmen unanimously voted three separate motions covering different aspects of the legal procedures. The board said "it has no Idea what Trustman is going to do." A Hatch Aet hearing is designed to give local veto to the dredging or filling of inland waterways. "If we do not know what he is going to do, Flynn said, "it will be difficult later to alter his plans. Town personnel said earth moving equipment on Trustman's prlperty has a!ro;Wy moved a small knoll to compact an area so it will hold a bulldozer. They estimate that some 2000 cubic yards of earth have been moved. Of particular concern to the town is that removal of muck from the pond may cause Powdermill Road to bo imdcnnined, The pond cussinn was eventually suspended for more study."

Wilkins, on behalf of the town of Concord, has filed suit against Trustman charging a violation of the state Hatch Act. The suit also names the realty trust which owns the land, the contractor who has done the dredging and filling work at the project, and the department of natural resources, which the superior court said last week "has taken inconsistent - positions" in the ease. Prior to the town's action, Trustman brought suit against the town seeking to enjoin Concord from suing him. Trustman maintains that the Hatch Act does not apply to his pond. Tile town, according to town counsel's report last week to the selectmen, maintains that proper procedures were not followed. No Hatch Act hearing prior to Trustman's alleged filling and dredging was held. Superior Court Judge Allan M. Hale's opinion, according to Wilkins, is that a public hearing should take place. He denied Trustman's request for ah injunction. The selectmen said that the project might prove to be perfectly acceptable to the town, but that since proper procedure had not been followed, tiiey must insist on it, Trustman stated that his purpose in dredging and filling the pond was to keep down weeds and bugs and bring the pond to a point where it might be stocked with fish or used for swimming. The town maintains that taking muck from the waters might undermine Powder Mill Roarl, which runs adjacent to it. The town engineer said there is a watercourse all the way from the Trustman Pond to the Sudbury River. It is believed to serve as a water shed of some 50 acres."

- "Dead Fish And A Bullet – (p2 of 7) "Changes at World Jai Alai continued. The stockholders, led by Boston native Alan Trustman, author of the Steve McQueen screenplays "Bullitt" and "The Thomas Crown Affair" ultimately decided to sell the business. There were two curious events about the time of this decision. Trustman became alarmed after finding a dead cod on the bank of his freshwater pond, far from the ocean in Concord, Mass. Another World Jai Alai officer found a bullet on his front step. Forensic analysis showed that someone had taken the trouble of firing the bullet from a gun into a soft substance before placing it on the step. Rico became a key player in the effort to sell World Jai Alai. The first potential deal involved a man named Jack B. Cooper.

Not long before, a lengthy organized crime investigation in South Florida had identified Cooper as a business associate of Meyer Lansky. Rico had participated in that investigation, a Florida detective who supervised the case said, as an FBI expert on organized crime." from "Did The FBI Hinder The Investigation Into The 1980s Jai Alai Killings? - The Jackson Laboratory fire
On May 10, 1989, a flash fire destroyed the Morrell Park mouse production facility. The fire raged for five hours, requiring over 100 fire fighters from 15 companies and a total of 16 trucks to be contained. Four workers of the Colwell Construction Company who were installing fiberglass wallboard in the room where the fire broke out were injured, one with burns over 15 percent of his body. Additionally, half a million mice were lost, resulting in a national shortage of laboratory mice and the layoff of 60 employees. This was the second fire to severely affect the laboratory; the 1947 fire that burned most of the island destroyed most of the laboratory, and its mice. Worldwide donations of funds and mice allowed the lab to resume operations in 1948.[2]

- History of the Southwood Lands
In 2008 the University of Manitoba purchased the Southwood Golf Course and acquired the lands in November of 2011. It was then the oldest 18-hole golf course in Manitoba, dating back to 1894.
Turn of the Century
“For a long time there has been a great need among Winnipeg golfers for a permanent eighteen hole golf course at a convenient distance from the city, and served by the Street Railway as well as a paved road. And so it is with the aim of a perfectly laid out eighteen hole course with its attendant club house, which can be reached either by auto or street car, that this appeal is made to rally round the means to a newer, bigger and better game of golf.” -
Excerpt from the prospectus for the Southwood Golf Club - An amalgamation of the Norwood Golf Club, established in 1894 and the Winnipeg Hunt Golf Club.

The Southwood Golf Course lands were originated as the Norwood Golf Club in 1894. It was also known as the Winnipeg Golf Club. By the early 1900's the Winnipeg Hunt Club was also established on the lands with stables, kennels, and grooms' quarters. Members imported hounds from England and pursued hunts across the Fort Garry lands.

Leading up to World War I, men skilled at riding horses were drafted as cavalry officers. Club membership quickly disappeared. With the introduction of the automobile, game became scarce. Without live game or members, a hunting club soon became obsolete.

World War I Ends

In 1918 seven golf holes were built and in 1919 the club purchased additional land from the University of Manitoba (known then as the Agricultural College) and the club became the Southwood Golf Club. Annual dues were $65 for "Gentlemen Members;" $20 for "lady members".

The original 18 hole golf course was designed by a Scotsman named of Willie Park, winner of the British Open in 1887 and 1889. The course was later redesigned by golf course architect Stanley Thompson.

The original clubhouse burned down in 1935 and the current clubhouse was built in 1957. In 1956 the club was reincorporated to become the Southwood Golf and Country Club. Since then it has operated as a private golf club until it officially closed in 2011. The club has since moved to another location south of Winnipeg and retains the Southwood name.

- LIBERTY HOUSEING COMPANY, DUNDALK COLLECTION 1918

Prints and Photographs Division, Maryland Historical Society, 201 W. Monument St., Baltimore, MD 21201

History

In 1916, the Bethlehem Steel Company purchased an existing foundry from Henry McShane in Dundalk, Baltimore County, with the intention of expanding it. McShane had built a foundry in this farming area, formerly known as Patapsco Neck, ca. 1870, later naming it Dundalk after his home town in Ireland. In 1917, Bethlehem Steel purchased some thousand acres of land and formed the Dundalk Company in order to construct housing for their workers. With the onset of World War I, the U.S. government took over steel production facilities in the vicinity of Fort Holabird for defense purposes, and secured the area, with the U.S. Shipping Board taking over the house building at that point. After the war, private development resumed, and the community was marketed to steel workers at the Sparrows Point Ship Building Yard. The result was Dundalk, the first planned community in Baltimore County, created in consultation with the developers of Roland Park in Baltimore city.

The St. Helena section of Dundalk was marketed by the Liberty Housing Company, with houses designed by Baltimore architect Edward L. Palmer, Jr. in conjunction with Edward Henry Bouton. Homes were available in detached and semi-detached styles, and in blocks of four, six, or nine. Houses featured brick foundations laid in cement, slate roofs, and walls of hollow tile with stucco exterior. Indoor conveniences included gas for cooking and hot water, both gas and electric light connections, coal furnaces, and modern plumbing and sewer systems. Streets in the area were paved with cement sidewalks, and the area was carefully landscaped to avoid the perception of crowding and to allow gardens for growing vegetables and flowers. <http://www.mdhs.org/findingaid/liberty-housing-company-dundalk-collection-pp137>

- Dundalk's Timeline [1995] by Terri Narrell Mause

There are probably few areas in the nation as full of history as that of the North Point peninsula. The following is a sampling of local historical trends and events during the last 100 years.

Henry McShane's bell foundry in Baltimore, built in 1856, had become world famous. The foundry's church bells rang out across nearly every state and across the world, and the company, which also produced piping and plumbing fixtures, had as much business as it could handle.

When part of the foundry burned in 1893, McShane decided to relocate in a wilderness area off the Patapsco River. He built his foundry, along with a grand summer vacation home, near what is now the site of American Legion Post 38.

The railroad line followed the foundry to the area in 1895, and officials told the McShanes that they must choose a name for the railroad stop. William James McShane, Henry's son and the vice-president of the foundry, wrote "Dundalk," the name of his father's hometown in Ireland, on a board and nailed it to a tree near the railroad. The town, with only a few farming families to claim as residents, was born.

The McShanes sold the bell foundry to Central Foundry in 1900 and their Dundalk Avenue mansion later became the Maryland Swimming Club. But the Irish names of the family's railroad stop remained.

In 1916, Dundalk boasted 62 homes, one church and two stores. The same year, Bethlehem Steel bought its Sparrows Point plant from the Maryland Steel Company. The result: Dundalk became one of the country's first planned communities.

The steel giant created the Dundalk Company, which purchased 1,000 acres of land near McShane's railroad stop. The company hired E.H. Bouton, designer of Roland Park, to create a "workingmen's" Roland Park. The community was designed to be close enough to the Point to commute to work, but far enough away from workers to escape the noise of the mills.

With the United States' entry into World War I in April 1917, there was an immediate housing need for Bethlehem Steel's defense workers and shipbuilders. The government took over the Dundalk Company's project and sold houses to workers as much as 50 percent below construction costs. One report said the houses "531 in Dundalk and 284 in St. Helena" were raised as quickly as one every three hours. Bethlehem Steel offered assistance to its employees by providing the cash needed for down payments on the stucco homes.

the headquarters of the Company (the first building was the Tower Building, later known as Hearst Tower, located at 222 Baltimore Street in downtown Baltimore), was designed by Otto B. Simonson, the same architect who designed the Tower Building, and was erected in 1921. The clock was made by the Seth Thomas Clock Company and strikes the Westminster chimes on the quarter-hour during the day. At the time of this photograph, the daytime chimes had been replaced at night by a red flash of light on the quarter-hour, two red flashes of light on the half-hour, three red flashes on the three-quarter hour, and four red flashes on the hour. Once the red light flashing was complete, a white light flashed the number of hours. <http://collections.mdch.org/cdm/singleitem/collection/tcsk/id/67/rec/10>

  - “The H. A. Johnson Company of Boston was located in five old buildings. Three of these buildings were eight stories and the other two were seven stories. The elevators in these buildings prevented free flow of food products and equipment in and out of the buildings. The company built a two story plant in the Brighton District with the admitted purpose of reducing handling costs and more efficient processing of their product. The new building cut handling costs over 60^ and the same volume of goods are easily handled in 5^ less space. Here is a company that recognized the adverse effects old buildings were having on its production and did something about it.” Marketability studies, new york streets project, u.r. mass 2-1, Boston Redevelopment Authority, 1953

  - What a surprise to see these items posted. My father worked for HA Johnson Co. from around 1930, until he retired in about '72. He took time off to go to the army in WWII, as did many Johnson's employees. He started in the downtown Boston building, which even up into the 90's as I remember the name was still on the side of a building you could see from the expressway. After the war, he got to manage the Johnson's oven factory in Newburyport, and when that closed, went to work in the new building on North Beacon Street in Brighton. I even worked there 3 summers during college.
Not to many folks any more get to work "cradle to grave" !
I remember the Johnson's jams and pie fillings were the best! They also in those years owned the Murray's soda fountain line.

  - Braintree, Massachusetts -- 150 Granite St
Located in a highly visible spot, real estate for the Braintree Red Coach Grill was acquired in 1963. However the upscale luxury restaurant did not open until June of 1969. Built as a stand alone eatery, the building served as a Prototype Red Coach for the Howard Johnson Company, and it was to be the forerunner of a new standard design. Featuring a 125 seat dining room, cooking was accomplished on an open hearth in full view of patrons. The restaurant also housed a lounge complete with a piano bar. Near a shopping mall and a host of roadside businesses, the Howard Johnson's site became valuable real estate, and was eventually redeveloped into a Barnes and Noble. Nothing of the Motor Lodge and Red Coach Grill remains, and the nearby Howard Johnson's Restaurant also succumbed to "progress."

  - "The Temple Had No Roof"
Based on the 2001 Kolehnik article originally written by Judy Wurtman
"The Temple had no roof, only walls, and there was canvas stretched across what would be the ceiling. Heat was pumped in by a heating company that had also donated the tent-like roof. The Holidays were late that year and it was cold. We sat through the services with our coats on." Gabe Belt, an honored and esteemed member of Temple Beth Zion was describing the first High Holiday services at the Temple which took place in the fall of 1946.
Gabe, the son of one of the founders of the Temple, told how his parents along with 13 other families from Roxbury, Dorchester and Mattapan felt the need for a shul in their part of Brookline. They moved to the Washington Square neighborhood in 1945-46 and at that time, there was no shul nearby. The closest synagogue was Kehillath Israel, a long walk for these Shabbat observant Jews.
The need for a local shul was pressing. But there were many problems to be overcome before they could have a place of their own in which to worship. The most pressing of course was lack of money. But even in the forties, there was little available land on which to build in that area. The only piece of property large enough for a synagogue was owned by a man had no love for the Jews and was not inclined to have them going to services next door. Moreover even if he were to sell, it was not certain that a mortgage could be obtained. But eventually the property owner decided to sell; business was not good and he needed the money. To raise the funds to buy the property and to build required patience and persistence. Gabe remembers as a 14 year old going from apartment house to apartment house, looking for Jewish names on the mailboxes. He would ring the doorbells of people he thought might be Jewish and ask for donations. And everyone who was asked gave.

The first High Holiday services of this new congregation took place in the Torf Funeral Home at the corner of Washington and Beacon Street the same year. The Rabbi who conducted the services was a member of Congregation Kehillath Israel; he was paid $100.00 for the three days. "The chapel was full," said Gabe. "There must have been at least 400 people attending our services."

130 Worcester Rd

Opened in one of the busier areas near Boston, Framingham had a long history with Howard Johnson's going back to the 1930s. Having seen much redevelopment and highway realignment over the years, the Motor Lodge [sic] became a Best Western, and retained the Gate Lodge. The restaurant endured many insults before being becoming a Chili's. What I cannot determine with certainty from the pictures is whether or not the original Restaurant building remains.

- Route 128 was built along the north edge of the town by 1958, and the American Mutual Insurance Company built its headquarters between Lake Quannapowitt and Route 128. American Mutual had over 1000 employees, most of them commuting to work via Route 128. By the late 1980s American Mutual was in liquidation due to the Woburn W. R. Grace litigation. The headquarters building was sold to the Beal Company and was home to Boston Technology Inc. which invented and manufactured corporate voice mail systems that operated on computer systems. Boston Technology merged in 1997 with Comverse Technology, a digital telecommunications equipment manufacturer, who later bought the building. Once the executive headquarters for American Mutual Insurance Company, this 40 acre site is bounded by Route 128 & 95, served by two exits, and sits along the edge of scenic Lake Quannapowitt, with full natural amenities of jogging trails, exercise stations, and attractive open spaces with scenic vistas. Redeveloped in multiple phases as first class office space, the new building of 168,000 square feet with structured parking at 100 Quannapowitt Parkway became the focal point for expansion of the corporate headquarters of Comverse, a high tech public company with ties to Israel, who continued to occupy the original 200 Quannapowitt Parkway building of 225,000 square feet.   - The Old Colony Railroad Station, also known as the North Easton Railroad Station, is a historic railroad station designed by noted American architect H. H. Richardson. It is located just off Oliver Street in North Easton, Massachusetts, and currently houses the Easton Historical Society, and was added to the National Register of Historic Places in 1972. In 1987 it also became part of the H.H. Richardson Historic District of North Easton, a National Historic Landmark District.
The station was commissioned in 1881 by Frederick Lothrop Ames, director of the Old Colony Railroad, during the same year that Richardson designed the Ames Gate Lodge for his nearby estate. Frederick Law Olmsted landscaped its grounds.
In 1969, the Ames family purchased the property from the Penn Central Railroad and gave it to the historical society.

  - History

Founded in 1868, Washington Mills began as Washington Mills Emery Manufacturing Company. It was the first abrasive producer in the United States and its sole product at that time was imported Turkish Emery Ore – a natural abrasive that was crushed and sized primarily for the polishing of farm tools. By 1929 sales of Turkish Emery had fallen as more consistent man-made materials in the form of electrically fused aluminum oxide became available. In order to keep pace with the superior fused materials, Washington Mills converted its emery plant into a more modern plant suitable for processing the new fused materials.

In 1929 the company updated and expanded its facilities in North Grafton, MA to process furnaced electrominerals. In 1980 it installed a new greenfield aluminum oxide fusion plant and modern refractory grain crushing and grading plant in Niagara Falls, Ontario. This gave the company the ability to fuse its own electro-minerals and gain total control of the production process. Washington Mills further expanded its furnacing, crushing, and grading capabilities through the acquisition of three distinct facilities from The Carborundum Company in 1986. This acquisition added one plant in Niagara Falls, Canada, one in Niagara Falls, NY and one in Trafford Park, England. With increased capacity, Washington Mills began to manufacture a broader line of products, expand its position in the marketplace and service more diverse industries. The company's steady growth resulted in a world-wide sales expansion into Europe, Africa, South America and Asia.

  - I'm getting thirsty just thinking of this place! Are you thirsty for cranberry juice?! Then you've come to the right place. There is a unique exhibit here that traces the cranberry from colonial times to the present. There are several features here, including a few outdoor demonstration bogs, some antique and modern harvesting tools, a scale cranberry farm, and some demonstrations on how to cook cranberries. You'll be amazed to learn the differences between a good cranberry and a bad cranberry. Is it the color, the bounce, or both? Hmm.. How do you tell the difference? Tune in next time... or just go there and tell me when you've learned the answer!
It's been free admission with free cranberry refreshments, but you should always call ahead to verify this is still the case. There's a boardwalk there and there have been free concerts there, too!
They are open daily from May 1 to Nov. 30 from 9:30 to 5pm, including weekends. Always call ahead to ensure they are open, when the best times are to visit to avoid the crowds, and any entrance or parking fees. Last I knew, there were no charges for admission or parking! If it's for free, it's for me!! ;o)
They are located on the waterfront, about a 10 minute walk north from Plymouth Rock and the Mayflower. This place seems to be owned by Ocean Spray, which has made a significant positive impact to the area.

  - Description: Constructed of brick with brownstone trimmings, located on Main Street, the Southbridge Savings and the Southbridge National Banks are adjacent to the YMCA building (razed January 3, 1975). The Southbridge Savings Bank was incorporated April 23, 1848. The building has two arched windows on the first floor and a large arch overhead. There are chimneys and a balcony depicted. The corner of the Columbian block situated on the Elm and Main Street is on the right. A water trough with light fixture is viewed in the middle of the street, where a horse is drinking. The Southbridge National Bank was originally organized June 7, 1836, when ten of the most prominent town citizens met in the sitting room of William Healey's Tavern: Bela Tiffany, Ebenezer D. Ammidown, recognized as the leader of the initiative; Samuel A. Hitchcock, Linus Child, John Seabury, Theodore Field, Jr., Moses Plimpton, Holmes Ammidown, William Beecher, Chester Clemens, John M.   - About Coach Grill
Coach Grill, on the site of the original Red Coach Grill, introduces guests to a new and unique dining experience focusing on the finest-quality food and five-star service. Our dining room represents an atmosphere of casual elegance with cozy booths, wood detailing and a stone fireplace.

  - Wayland, Massachusetts -- 55 Boston Post Rd (Rt 20)
Howard D. Johnson acquired the Wayland Red Coach Grill Restaurant in the middle 1930s and created a chain of upscale luxury dining facilities based on its pre-Revolutionary American post house theme. Similar to an English tavern, the circa 1934 restaurant featured a red-shingled roof and log siding exterior. Inside, patrons were treated to two massive fieldstone fireplaces and accurate reproduction Colonial fixtures and furnishings. Select cuts of meat, lobster, seafoods, and other choice entrees as well as fine wines were offered on the menu.
Nearly completely destroyed by fire in January of 1976, the Howard Johnson Company rebuilt Wayland to rave reviews when it reopened on April 4, 1972. A fixture in Wayland, the Red Coach had become The Coach Grill by 2005. <http://www.highwayhost.org/Massachusetts/RedCoach/redcoach2.html>

- United Electric Light Company

Thanks to an experiment by Blair and Fiske Manufacturing Company, a lawnmower manufacturer, electricity came to Springfield. In January 1881, the company decided it needed better lighting for night work and began experimenting with arc lamps and later extended this lighting to their roof to light an adjacent ice skating rink, attracting the attention of local merchants, who began installing the lights. Demand continued to increase, and in June of that same year the Springfield Electric Light Company was incorporated, taking over the electric portion of Blair and Fiske's business.

Unfortunately, the new electric company could not handle the rapid expansion which followed. In 1887, United Electric Light Company was formed and purchased the Springfield utility. United immediately purchased land for a new generating station, which went into operation in 1889.

In 1912, United made a contract with Amherst Power Company, covering the sale and purchase of electric power, which continued until 1942. Expansion continued and on Dec. 13, 1942, United joined three other companies to form the Western Massachusetts Electric Company or WMECo as we know it today.

  - "Land use surrounding Indian Lake today is a mixture of residential, recreational, educational, and industrial. The primary city-owned recreational uses are Morgan Park on the southwest shoreline where fishing, boating, and a tennis court are available, and two city-owned swimming beaches. At I Indian Lake Park on the eastern shore at the foot of Clason Street is a supervised beach and a bathhouse. The former Heald Machine Co. beach on Shore Drive (now called Shore I Park), near Ararat Brook was recently transferred to the City.   - “Mr. Frederick Beck was formerly connected with the Boston banking house of Dupee, Beck and Sayles, but had lived in retirement for several years. He had lived for a long time in his pleasant home on Davis avenue, his grounds joining those of his old friend, Dr. Francis. It was a blessed Providence that these two neighbors for so many years here should be so soon re-united in the beyond. The fine old house so long occupied by Mr. Beck was built about 1840 by Mr. Isaac Thayer, and on what was then known as Washington place, and the garden extended to Washington street. Mr. Beck was a great reader, was for many years a member of the Thursday Club and had contributed many papers to that organization.” from Proceedings of the Brookline Historical Society at the Annual Meeting, January 19, 1910, Brookline, Mass.   - Gardner Washburn to Occupy Costly New Residence in Brookline

"The new dwelling house of Gardner Washburn in Warren street, Brookline, is one of the finest recently erected in Brookline. Work on it has just been completed after nearly three years of labor and an expenditure estimated to be about $150,000. The house, which is near to The Country Club, is on an elevation ninety feet above the road...The entire estate is about five acres and adjoins the Lees estate, one of the largest in the area...Mr. Washburn will immediately vacate his estate in Dudley St. Brookline, and remove to the new house."

College Life Savers Perform Brave Feat; Hugh Bancroft and Robert Blake Put to Sea in Lifeboat and Rescued Crew of Schooner - they are New Heroes in Boston
Boston, January 8 - Hub society is busy these days telling and retelling again of the heroism of two of its members, Hugh Bancroft and Robert Fulton Blake, whose daring rescue of the crew of the fishing schooner Allen H. Jones on December 26 was one of the most courageous ever chronicled on the Massachusetts coast. late in the afternoon of December 26, the schooner was discovered off the port of Cohasset flying signals of distress. Cohasset is the coast resort of a number of wealthy Bostonians, and Blake and Bancroft had gone there to spend a few days.
From the window of their cottage, they saw the signals of the doomed schooner and hurried to the beach. Manning a lifeboat, they put to sea in the teeth of a gale, despite the warnings of numerous old seamen who had gathered to witness the destruction of the vessel.

- By 1897, it was the home of Dr. John George Blake and his wife, Mary Elizabeth (McGrath) Blake. He is shown as the owner on the 1908 Bromley map.

Mary Blake died in February of 1907, and Dr. Blake continued to live at 212 Beacon. Living with him were his four unmarried children: Arthur Blake, an insurance agent; Marie Blake, Robert Fulton Blake, a naval architect; and Gerald Blake, a physician.

They all continued to live there in 1910. By 1911, Gerald Blake had moved but continued to maintain his medical office at the house, probably in association with his father.

Dr. John G. Blake continued to live at 212 Beacon in 1917, but had died by 1920.

By 1920, 212 Beacon was rented from the Blake estate by banker and broker Lawrence Paine Dodge and his wife Anne Woodwell (Thurlow) Dodge. They also maintained a home in Newburyport. By 1922, they had purchased and moved to 208 Beacon.

212 Beacon was not listed in the 1922 Blue Book.

By 1923, 212 Beacon was once again the home of Frederick, Robert, and Marie Blake. They had lived at 497 Beacon in 1923. By this time, Frederick and Robert Blake formed the Back Bay Patrol and Emergency Service, with Robert as the president and Frederick as the treasurer.

John G. Blake's Heirs are shown as the owners of 212 Beacon on the 1928 Bromley map, and Gerald Blake et al, Trustees, were shown as the owners on the 1938 map.

Frederick Blake died in April of 1937. Robert and Marie Blake continued to live at 212 Beacon in 1940.

They also maintained a summer home at Green Hill in Nantasket. By 1940, their brother, Gerald, also had moved his medical offices to the house (he and his wife, Edna, lived in Brookline).

Robert Blake continued to live at 212 Beacon in 1941, but had moved to 168 Newbury Street by 1942.

Griggs, who went west in the early days from Connecticut, settling in Chicago around 1848 to become pioneers in the literary and cultural life in that city...From such distinguished parents, Mrs. plant inherited creative and artistic talent which was displayed in her planning and development of her magnificent gardens on the 40 acre Plant estate at Cohasset, Mass. These gardens have been opened to the public many times for charity benefits and reproduced pictorially in the newspapers." p.4, Winter Park Topics - A Weekly Review of Social and Cultural Activities During the Winter Resort Season v.14, no.10; Friday, March 7, 1947

- In the midst of the "Shoe Machinery Wars," Caroline left him, taking up residence in Cohasset. She charged him with long-term infidelity. He said his goodbyes to his employees at Christmas 1910. In January, 1911, he sailed again for Europe with William's daughter, Amy. It is said that he was as close to William's children as if he had been another parent. The purpose of the trip was to find a place for his retirement.
On the cruise, Amy talked to him about the beauty of Ossipee Park. He called William and his secretary, Alfred Handley, to begin buying up land at the park.
In 1912, he and Caroline attempted briefly to reconcile. But on yet another trip to Europe, Plant met Olive Cornelia Dewey, a graduate of Wellesley, 24 years his junior. He was smitten.
On his return, he sought a divorce, giving Caroline the house in Cohasset and $1 million. It is said that he put the check in her napkin ring, and she found it when she came down for breakfast.

- It was not until the late 1880s that the development of house lots really got under way. With Buckminster already completed most of the new houses were built on that road. Between 1888-1892 there were eleven houses built on Buckminster, including a large stone mansion at 62 Buckminster for Jonathan White, the brother of Joseph White, designed by Peabody & Stearns. Clarence Blackall, writing in an architectural journal in 1889, commented on the Jonathan White House that it was "... pleasing not only for its well-studied details and good general effect, but also for the manner in which Mr. Olmsted's landscape work and the architect's design are so united that the house seems to be just as thoroughly in place, and a part of the surroundings, as though it had grown there."

    - In 1880, Boston banker Arthur Welland Blake engaged landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted to draw plans for the subdivision into roads and lots of the Blake family estate in Brookline, Massachusetts. Olmsted and his firm drew numerous plans for the Blakes over the next 15 years, but they were never executed. The estate remained something of an anomaly: a large tract of open land, renowned for its landscaping, in the heart of a community rapidly developing as a "streetcar suburb" just minutes from downtown Boston,
It wasn't until 1916 that land was sold, roads were laid out -- somewhat differently than Olmsted had envisioned them -- and the development of "Blake Park" was announced with some fanfare. The death of one developer (right after the project was announced) and a financial scandal involving another delayed development for another decade. Finally, in 1925, with both Blake and Olmsted long dead, a new largely middle-class neighborhood began to emerge, populated by the families of bankers and brokers, doctors and lawyers, salesman, college professors, contractors, and local merchants.

    - On the left is Hart Street, one of the few streets in the Point which still carries its original name. It has an interesting history dating to the mid 1800s. Captain Benjamin Bradley, who lived up on Bradley's Hill (where Clark and Philbrick roads are today), built a heterogeneous collection of small frame houses. After his death in 1856, the properties remained on Bradley's Hill until 1871 when the houses were bought by

Mr. Hart and moved to Hart Street, or 'Hart's Content' as it was then called. When the residents from Bradley's Hill moved to this new location, they were joined by another group of residents from Pearl Street. These attractive houses still stand today forming a close-knit community with their picket fences, steep gable rooflines, and diminutive scale.

To Beautify Huron Valley

"Frank Law Olmstead [sic, sic], of Harvard University, probably the most eminent landscape designer in this country, has been engaged by the authorities of the University of Michigan, to make a study of the campus, in connection with the certain plans in landscape design contemplated by the Civic Associations, and the park commissions of Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti, as well as the plans for beautification of the Huron Valley already made by the Eastern Michigan Edison Company.

The purpose of the regents is to have a comprehensive plan made, toward which they may work, whereby the city and the university will be in better harmony, and in which the big buildings of the future, both university and city, the walks, drives, malls and boulevards may be so planned that more ideal landscape effects may be produced.

Mr. Olmstead has for some years been working with the Eastern Michigan Edison Company in the beautification of the Huron Valley. In this connection, he was engaged over a year ago to make a plan of Ypsilanti, and of the Normal college grounds. These plans will be considered in the future buildings of parks and boulevards in Ypsilanti, and in the erection of new buildings on the Normal campus.

Here Lies Kansas City by Wilda Sandy
Hare and Hare, father and son, were the first and last word in Kansas City landscape architecture from the late teens into the 1930s. any large and prestigious project from that era bears witness. Downtown the Courthouse, City Hall and Municipal Courts complex is theirs; the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art; J. C. Nichols' vast Country Club empire; and parks and cemeteries on both sides of the state line. And scores of cities in 28 states owe their ambiance to Hare and Hare, including R. A. Long's planned city of Longview, Washington.   - Lake Sacajawea Preservation Plan describes planning of Longview by Hare & Hare <http://www.ci.longview.wa.us/publicworks/documents/park-plans/sacajawea/Identification.pdf>
  - The Beginnings
The city's origins can be traced back to decisions made in a Kansas City, Missouri board room in 1918. Present at that meeting were Robert Alexander Long, president of Long-Bell Lumber Company, and Mr. S. M. Morris, among others. By 1918 the southern timber holdings of Long-Bell lumber were nearly depleted. In the days before tree farming, logging operations clear cut all the timber in a given area and then moved on. The board of directors had to decide whether to liquidate the company's sizeable logging operation and concentrate on their line of hardware stores and commercial lumber yards or to look elsewhere for another source of timber. No one present that day could have imagined that just six years into the future Long-Bell would be responsible for the incorporation of a fully modern city.

The City

Longview is the modern city that it is today due in a large part to the personal determination of Robert A. Long. George B. Kessler of St. Louis, and Hare & Hare of Kansas City, nationally known city planners, were contracted to complete the plans for Longview. Monticello Hotel, R. A. Long High School, the YMCA building, and the Longview Public Library were donated by Mr. Long personally. The city planners originally imagined a fully developed Longview to be a city with 75,000 residents.

  - THE HACKENSACK RIVER: A True Come-Back Story
By the end of World War One, the water company could no longer meet the water demands of the still-growing population within its service area. A reservoir was needed. On the company's behalf, the state of New Jersey began condemnation proceedings against landowners along the upper reaches of the Hackensack River in order to acquire their property. In 1921, construction of the Oradell Dam was begun and completed two years later, creating the Oradell Reservoir. Eventually, three more reservoirs were dug to satisfy the ever-increasing need.

Today the Hackensack Water Company is no more and it is United Water New Jersey that provides water to over one million people from the river's upper watershed – one of the most urbanized drinking water resources in America. With very little forested buffer lands remaining, Oradell Reservoir, Woodcliff Lake, Lake Tappan and Lake DeForest are ringed by golf courses, residential subdivisions, major roadways and other development – much of it built with the blessing of the water company.

- PROCEEDINGS OF THE BROOKLINE HISTORICAL SOCIETY AT THE ANNUAL MEETING, JANUARY 23, 1913 BROOKLINE, MASS. PUBLISHED BY THE SOCIETY MCMXIII
BROOKLINE HISTORICAL SOCIETY TWELFTH ANNUAL MEETING.

The following is a list of deaths of members: -

June 5, Thomas Doliber.

Mr. Doliber was the head of the Mellin's Food Co., and came to reside in Brookline about 1889. He had a beautiful home on Goddard Avenue, which before his occupancy was known as the "Raymond Place." Mr. Doliber married a daughter of Charles Henry Heath, whose father and grandfather had lived in the old house, on Heath street, now occupied by the Misses Dana. His wife wrote a most entertaining paper on the Heath family which was read before our Society.

Mr. Doliber was a most kindly man, and his beaming face suggested a resemblance to one of the Cheeryble brothers of Dickens' creation.

○ The Paine Estate, 325 Heath St. Brookline, Massachusetts

Designed in 1893 by the Boston architectural firm of Andrews, Jacques and Rantoul, 325 Heath was built for Ruth and Robert Treat Paine II by Mrs. Paine's father, Walter Channing Cabot... The firm of Andrews, Jacques and Rantoul had been engaged by William Cabot to design his own estate, Roughwood, at 400 Heath St. Like the Cox house, 325 Heath St. favors a large, but in formal idiom; in this case, the Tudoresque style known somewhat jocularly as the Jacobethan...Ironically, although nominated in 1980 to the National Register of Historic Places in part for its being one of only a few remaining nineteenth-century country estates on Heath St. whose original acreage remained undeveloped, the property has been subdivided for the construction of a modern country house. Designed by Robert A.M. Stern, it may be said to crystallize the tastes and values of its period and patronage as surely as the Paine Estate represents its own distinct, but not wholly dissimilar, provenance." William S. Young, Massachusetts Historical Commission

○ Andrews, Jaques and Rantoul was a leading Boston architectural firm specializing in the design of suburban and country homes. The firm's senior partners both lived in Brookline: Robert Andrews (1830-1903) at 50 Fisher Avenue and Herbert Jaques (1857-1916) at 50 Dunster Road (demolished). Two very large Brookline estates designed by the firm were Roughwood, including the house and the carriage barn of William Cox, now part of Pine Manor College, and the main house and stable (demolished) of the Paine estate at 325 Heath Street. The firm also designed the Brookline High School and an 1890 fire station (demolished) for the town.

  - The 1920's saw the residential development of Westover area on the Westwood/Walpole line, presided over by George Willett. Simultaneously, the town center saw the erection of three buildings which citizens use extensively to this day. St. Catherine's Parish opened an elementary school in 1926, while the town hall, formally known as the Norwood Memorial Municipal Building, was dedicated in 1928, its 170 foot tower soaring over the center of town. Two years later the state armory was opened a few hundred feet down Nahatan Street, a structure that was ultimately to serve as the new Civic Center after the old Civic Association building had been razed to allow for the construction in the early 1980's of a new wing for Norwood Hospital. In 1928 Norwood resident Frank G. Allen was elected governor of Massachusetts, after having risen through the ranks of government as assessor, selectmen, chairman of the draft board, representative, senator, and lieutenant governor. In the world of business, he had advanced to the presidency of the Winslow Brothers and Smith tannery. Running for re-election in 1930, he fell victim to the weakening Depression economy.
The year that opened the decade of the Depression also saw the virtual destruction of the Civic Association building (later re-built), as well as the opening of the municipal airport. Two years later, in 1932, Wiggins Airways provided a solid financial footing for the new enterprise when it signed a twenty-year at the facility. The Norwood stretch of Providence Highway (U.S. Route 1) was completed in 1934, providing a new strip of land available for commercial development to the south of and roughly parallel to Washington Street. The second half of the decade was marked by another strike at the Winslow Brothers and Smith tannery and over two hundred thousand dollars in damage caused by the 1938 hurricane.

  - Tour 10
  - Hill and Mountain Country – Mendham
  - MENDHAM, 24.9 miles (600 alt., 1,278 pop.), is a village of bay-windowed Victorian homes and great maples that arch over Main St. to shade the quiet walks. Two inns opposite each other at the town's cross-roads center dimly echo a rivalry that dates back to Colonial times: the BLACK HORSE INN (R) and the PHOENIX HOUSE (L). A sign outside the Black Horse fixes the date of its establishment at 1743. In the barroom, however, is a framed card that advertises the birth year as 1735. According to those inhabitants who have wondered about the discrepancy themselves, 1735 was the estimate of a former proprietor. He had the card made, and then commissioned a local sign painter to emblazon the date outside. That sign painter seems to have been a man of considerable historiographic conscience. The true date, he said, was 1743. He thought the sign was a good idea; but it would go up right or not at all. The sign went up. The present owner is inclined to agree with his predecessor, but the sign still sways in the breeze.

A lone white frame building on sloping meadowland houses the BELL TELEPHONE AERONAUTICAL GROUND STATION (not open to public), Kennedy Rd., established in 1930. It is the only experimental laboratory of its kind in the country. Aviators commonly call it the "central office of the skies" because it is in frequent contact with airliners in order to improve radio-telephoning between airships and the ground. High on a hill at 25.7 miles is ST. JOHN BAPTIST SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, an Episcopal institution conducted by the Sisters of St. John the Baptist.

At 25.9 miles is (R) the WELL SWEEP ANTIQUE SHOP, housed in an old frame dwelling with the clutter of years on its porch. Rising majestically out of the jumble is its most startling exhibit, a life-sized wooden horse of the type once common in harness shops and now extensively collected by Henry Ford. Beside the door is a slate for messages from callers when Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Fisher are not at home. In the summer of 1937, Mrs. Fisher found a note left by a motorist who contemplated buying the horse for two enraptured grandchildren. The signature was "Eleanor Roosevelt." The antique-shop owners have preserved the Roosevelt slate, but they wouldn't think of selling the horse. "Mrs. Roosevelt wouldn't know what to do with it if she got it," they say.

- "Meanwhile, this laboratory was used so constantly for transmitter work that it was necessary in 1930 to find a new location for field strength measurements and for radio receiver developments. The location desired was one sufficiently removed from the Whippany laboratory to avoid interference from tests on transmitters and yet close enough to facilitate transportation between the two of engineers and equipment employed at both paces. Such a place was found about ten miles away at Mendham where, for the past seven years, studies have been conducted in broadcast receivers, and communication equipment for aircraft, police and marine service..."

- o Brief History of the Deal Test Site

The property known as the Deal Test Site is a 208 acre parcel of land in Ocean Township, Monmouth County, NJ. It is two miles inland from Deal and bound by Deal Road on the south, Whalepond Road on the east, Dow Avenue on the north, and private property to the west.

The area was used agriculturally throughout most of the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries. The land was originally owned by the Woolley family, but the first farmhouse on the land was erected by Henry and Charles Herbert in the mid 1850s.

In 1823/1824, a Late Pleistocene/early Holocene mastodon was excavated from a peat bog on the south side of Poplar Brook. Fossil vertebrate remains were also found from the Tertiary marls along the Brook. The site was acquired by Western Electric in 1919. The company began setting up an experimental station for ship to shore radio telephony. The property transferred to Bell Laboratories in 1925. Extensive radio communications and radar experiments were carried out between 1920 and 1953.

- o "When Bell Telephone Laboratories began operations in 1925, it took over from its predecessor, the Engineering Department of the Western Electric Company, a field laboratory at Deal, New Jersey, where work had been done on ship-to-shore radio telephony. Four years later, additional land was purchased, bringing the acreage up to 208 and facilities for studies of radio transmission were greatly augmented." from "The Geography of Bell Telephone Laboratories" by R. The Bell Labs Holmdel Complex functioned for forty-four years as a research and development facility, initially for the Bell System. The centerpiece of the 472-acre (1.91 km<sup>2</sup>) campus is an Eero Saarinen designed structure that served as the home to over 6,000 engineers and researchers. This modernist building, dubbed "The Biggest Mirror Ever" by Architectural Forum, due to its mirror box exterior, was the site of at least one Nobel Prize discovery, the laser cooling work of Steven Chu.

  - History

On April 19, 1939 the outreach to the needy had grown to such proportions that it was necessary to incorporate the Wiley Mission. It was granted a charter on that date under the church act of the State of New Jersey.

In 1940 Wiley began to dedicate all of its efforts in health care to those in sunset years. A permanent location was established here in Marlton, New Jersey.

  - The Solvay Process Company (1880–1985) was a pioneer chemical industry of the United States in the manufacture of soda ash and a major employer in Central New York. The company was the origin of the village of Solvay.
The Erie Canal passed through the Solvay Process plant, providing water transport, as did subsequently Onondaga Lake, connected to the New York State canal system. The main line of the New York Central Railroad also passed through company property, providing transport.
Solvay Process Company - about 1900
The village grew around the Solvay Process plant. The Church and Dwight Company, producer of "Arm and Hammer Baking Soda," which used material from the Solvay Process, built a production facility nearby.
The Solvay Process Company plant at Solvay, New York closed in 1985 and was demolished.

  - George Grey Barnard (May 24, 1863 – April 24, 1938) was an American sculptor, "an excellent American sculptor", the French art dealer René Gimpel reported in his diary (1923), "very much engrossed in carving himself a fortune out of the trade in works of art." [1] His lasting monument, rather than any sculpture of his own, is the architectural nucleus of The Cloisters, New York City.
Barnard was born in Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, but grew up in Kankakee, Illinois, the son of Joseph Barnard and Martha Grubb, and the grandson of his namesake George Grey Grubb. He first studied at the Art Institute of Chicago, and in 1883–1887 worked in the atelier of Pierre-Jules Cavelier at Paris while he attended the École nationale supérieure des Beaux-Arts. He lived in Paris for twelve years, and with his first exhibit at the Salon of 1894 he scored a great success, returning to America in 1896.

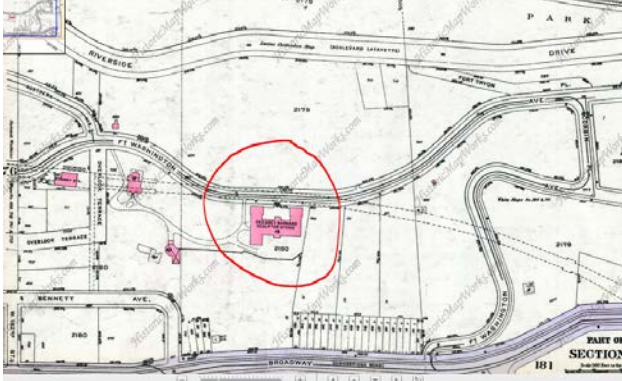

Interested in medieval art, Barnard gathered discarded fragments of medieval architecture from French villages before World War I.[3] He established this collection in a church-like brick building near his home in Washington Heights, Manhattan in New York City. The collection was purchased by John D. Rockefeller Jr. in 1925 and forms part of the nucleus of The Cloisters collection, part of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.[4] http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/George\_Grey\_Barnard

- A leader of Boston society and characterized in newspaper articles as one of the city's wealthiest women, Murray was in the forefront of those who discovered the rural charms of this part of Connecticut. Because so many of her contemporaries gravitated to the area to transform colonial farmsteads into country estates, what today is dubbed the "Quiet Corner" was then known as the "inland Newport." Few estates of this caliber in the region are still intact; several others have been destroyed by fire. At Glen Elsinore in Pomfret, her parents' estate, the gardens are in ruins." from the NRHP Nomination Form for Glyn Careg

In December 1999, the Ontario Power Generation Company (formerly Ontario Hydro) decommissioned the Ontario Power Station from service. This was done to accommodate the building of the permanent Casino Niagara on the former transformer building site overlooking Queen Victoria Park. According to the Ontario Power Generation Company, this power station has been mothballed and its future status will be reviewed from time to time.

- TBD      12037 Brimmer, Martin (3/7)      Brookline      Massachusetts      0

- From Baronet to Prince

In an earlier entry, we saw how Captain John Prince sought to put a street through his property, from Pond to Perkins streets. The estate probably ran from Perkins street on the Brookline side of the pond, south and east to today's Arborway. The advertisements below give us a view of how the property changed hands, from the Colonial Governor, Sir Francis Bernard, to businessman Martin Brimmer, and from Brimmer to Captain Prince, the buyer of the Brimmer estate.

- Prominently sited at the north west corner of Commonwealth Avenue and Sutherland Road, is a V-shaped configuration of three, 12 family apartment buildings at 1706-1710 Commonwealth Avenue and 148 Sutherland Road. Designed in the Georgian Revival style in 1915, from designs provided by Somerville architect John C. Foley, this ensemble was constructed by Dorchester builder Frederick A. Corbett. A review of its tenants in 1930 reveals an eclectic mix of Jewish, Irish, Italian, and Swedish names. Among the best known apartments in Allston-Brighton is the group of James A. Halloran-designed apartments at 1714-1742 Commonwealth Avenue. These apartments were built by the Dorchester contractor Frederick A. Corbett. Douglass Shand Tucci, in Built in Boston. City and Suburb, includes photographs of these eight six-unit apartment buildings noteworthy for their lively Tudor Revival and Spanish Colonial Revival surface treatments. During the late 19th century, this group's land had been part of the J. Homans tract (1870s), Reuben E. Demmon tract (1880s) and the Horace W. Jordan and George A. Wilson lands.

- "In the autumn of 1905, there were, then as now, four power companies and five power houses at or near the Falls using the water from above the Falls. On the American side there were two New York corporations deriving their powers from the Legislature of the State of New York, namely, the Niagara Falls Power Co. and the company whose corporate name is now the Hydraulic Power Co. On the Canadian side there were three Canadian corporations, namely, the Ontario Power Co. of Niagara Falls, the Canadian Niagara Power Co. and the Electrical Development Co. (Ltd.)" p.97

"As long ago as 1884, I remember with great pleasure having attended the opening of the New York State Park, purchased at great expense by the State of New York, and placed under the control of a commission in order that the public - not merely the public of New York State, but of the entire United States and of the whole world - might have access to the beauties of Niagara free of cost. They removed all things which might be considered an eyesore in the district included by the park. Mills, which formerly stood on Bath Island, now called Green Island, after Commissioner Green, and anything within the territory which tended to affect or injure the scenic beauty were removed. This park extends up the Niagara River to what is called Port Bay, or the entrance to the canal of the Hydraulic Power Co. It extends out into the Niagara River to the international boundary line. It extends down, following the international boundary line to the properties at the outlet of the Hydraulic Power Co.'s canal, New York State itself being the riparian owner, as I understand, between the intake and the outlet of the Hydraulic Power Co.'s canal." p.144

- Expansion and a new plant 1900-1914
In 1902, NYAB bought the 268-acre (1.08 km<sup>2</sup>) Poole Farm in Watertown, NY, and began its move to its present location. The new Works were planned as a model industrial enterprise, providing housing, work, and recreation for 1,000 employees on the grounds. The workers, however, decided that they did not want to live next door to their workplace and the plan was scrapped. In 1903, the new foundry became the first part of the new plant to begin operations.

  - Back in the 20's & 30's the rich and famous built "Great Camps" and private retreats in the Adirondacks to get away from their busy lives and the general public. Millionaires and movie stars built rustic lakefront chalets many of which could only be reached by small sea planes.
One of these great camps was built about 20 miles NE of Lowville (off of the Stillwater Road) in the Town of Watson by the founder of National Cash Register (NCR). This property is so remote that it won't even show up on our Mapquest Database. Populated by just a handful of other quality homes; you too could still enjoy the privacy, solitude, great morning and evening views and meandering walks along the tall pine forested shore lines of Beaver Lake. <http://www.nnyrealty.com/wlf.htm>
  - Patterson lived in his Swiss chalet estate "The Far Hills" in Oakwood, Montgomery County, Ohio. Patterson loved the Adirondacks and built his summer estate on Beaver Lake in New York. His family built two other estates on the lake. All three estates still exist, two as church camps, one as private bed and breakfast. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/John\_Henry\_Patterson\_\(NCR\_owner\))
  - Nestled on the shores of Beaver Lake, is one of the original Adirondack Great Camps. The architectural style was made famous by industrialist and financiers from the end of the Civil War to the beginning of the Great Depression. Beaver Lake is the showcase for seven Great Camps, this property being one of them. This camp was built about 1910 by John Patterson, one of the founders of the National Cash Register Company. The property has a main building of 4000+ square feet, two self-sufficient lakeside cottages (one doubles as a boat house), a sandy beach and several out buildings. The property has over a 1/4 mile of waterfront and is located in the Adirondack Mountain region on 7.3 acres and the price has been cut by over $1 million dollars. This Great Camp boasts an illustrious history, having been visited over the years by many historic and famous figures. Those visitors include Howard Hughes, the famous debutante Brenda Frazier, President Howard Taft, Edith Wharton, the Duke of Richelieu, Josephine Premise, and Countess Maria Christina Von Staffenberg (the niece of Count Claus Von Stauffenberg, leader of the plot to assassinate Adolf Hitler).http://realestate.yahoo.com/New\_York/Lowville/8912-number-four-rd:8c1249d580ce953470fabfc71644207d

- The Beach House at "Elephant's Nest" is a rental cottage, part of a Historic estate built by the family who founded National Cash Register Co. The main lodge is an Adirondack Great Camp located on Beaver Lake in the Adirondack Park. Beaver Lake is a private, pristine lake about 2 miles long and 2 miles wide located 20 miles east of Lowville, NY and 7 miles from Stillwater Lake. Famous guests at one time included Howard Hughes, Brenda Duff Fraser, The Duke of Richelieu, James Bush, uncle of the first President Bush. The property is on a peninsula, privately owned. <http://www.adkbyowner.com/listings/VR6282.html>

- Dr. Good was offered the presidency of the Sloan-Kettering Institute in New York because of the link between immunity and cancer. We were fortunate to be asked to join him at SKI, at the Walker Laboratory in Rye, NY. In 1982 the Walker Lab was closed in a move to consolidate the research by moving it all to the main facilities in NY City; a move that we found not to our liking.

- 2.2.4.8 Development Trends in the Floodplain and Natural Resource Areas
In 1996, the former Sloan-Kettering research facility property on the Boston Post Road south of Bradford Avenue was subdivided into 38 single-family lots. This property, now known as “The Preserve,” was one of the last large under-developed parcels in the city. With the exception of possible future expansion of the Rye Neck School if enrollments increase, no new significant development is anticipated in this segment of Beaver Swamp Brook.

- 35.397114,-81.201389 02380 High Shoals Cotton Mills High Shoals North Carolina 1 1902
  - The High Shoals Company, High Shoals, NC
High Shoals has been an important community in Gaston County for over 200 years. The excellent waterpower provided by the South Fork River and the change in elevation across the short distance made it an easy site to develop waterpower. John Fulenwider, a Swiss immigrant and Revolutionary War veteran established an iron works there about 1804. The mill practically came to a standstill before the Civil War and was revitalized during the war.
In the late 1890s as textile mills were flourishing in the Carolinas, D. A. Tompkins of Charlotte saw the opportunity and organized a cotton mill. In 1892, he purchased 1,200 acres on both sides of the river. The mill was chartered in 1893, but the various economic panics of the time delayed construction until May 1899. Ragan lists this mill as the 21st textile mill located in Gaston County. The incorporators were ompkins, Fred Oliver, and R.M. Miller, Jr., all residents of Charlotte. While the waterpower available was estimated to have a capacity of operating 50,000 spindles, the three-story brick mill was built and opened with only 5,000 spindles and 150 looms. Earnings would hopefully provide further capital for expansion. The mill was, indeed, a success. In 1906, the capacity was increased and there were nearly 10,000 spindles and 470 looms in operation. Sheeting and sales yarn were produced and sold through commission merchants in the North. By 1910, 16,224 spindles and 534 looms produced sales yarn and sheeting. Tompkins died in 1914. His associates operated the mill until other arrangements could be made. In 1920, a group of Gastonia manufacturers and investors including C.B. Armstrong, A.G. Myers, A.Q. Kale, C.C. Armstrong, and A.K. Winger took over. They operated as High Shoals Cotton Mills Co. until 1923, when the mill was sold to Manville-Jenckes of Pawtucket, RI. They were already operating the huge Loray Mills in Gastonia. A four-story addition of reinforced concrete was added. Sheeting, sateens and napkins were now produced. Manville-Jenckes operated the mill until 1935 when the mill was sold to Jackson Mill, Wellford, SC.

This management continued through WW II, but in late 1944, it was sold to another operator, Carolinian Mills. In 1955, they were bought by Eli Walker Dry Goods Co. of Saint Louis, MO., which in 1957, merged into Burlington Industries, Greensboro, NC. The plants now produced tobacco cloth, corduroys, print cloth and sheeting. Few improvements were made to these old buildings and Burlington closed the plant in 1971. McNeill Industries operated the plant for a few years. In May 1996, a fire destroyed much of the factory.

  - Western Electric Plant and Offices
3300 Old Lexington Road
Western Electric, founded in 1872, initially manufactured telegraph equipment for Western Union, becoming the country’s largest electrical parts supplier before its 1881 acquisition by Bell Telephone, which became AT&T in 1899. Western Electric then served as AT&T’s sole telephone manufacturer. Telephone demand declined during the Depression, but increased significantly beginning in 1939, when the telephone was marketed as a “weapon of preparedness.” In the 1940s, Western Electric produced radio and wire communications equipment for use in national and international defense installations and maintained military contracts through the Cold War. Western Electric began manufacturing military equipment in Winston-Salem in 1946 and soon became one of Forsyth County's leading industrial concerns, operating four plants with over 7,000 employees by 1960. Western Electric occupied their expansive new Lexington Road plant and office building in late 1954. As military equipment demand decreased, the company increased production of switches and circuits for national telephone networks, and, in 1962, converted the Lexington Road plant into a telephone manufacturing operation. The Old Lexington Road facility encompasses almost 700,000 square feet on a sixty-acre parcel. The long, low, blonde brick building's main block features a projecting central entrance bay with three double-leaf plate glass doors below three rows of square green marbled panels and a band of tall, clear glass panels, all recessed within a granite surround. Horizontal bands of square plate-glass windows wrap the building at the first- and second- story levels. from "South Suburban Area Plan" City-County Planning Board, Forsyth County and Winston-Salem, 2010 Draft, p.73 http://media.gatewaync.com/wsj/pdfs/2010/06/SSAP\_Draft\_2.pdf

 “It was during Br. Lineback's pastorate that the building of a new plant by Western Electric on Lexington Road required New Eden to seek a new home. The congregation chose the site of the old Eden Chapel at Old Lexington Road and Palmer Lane. While the new brick building was going up the congregation held services in a tent. Finally the new church was opened on May 8, 1955, with a combined cornerstone laying and lovefeast.”

- 39.094031,-84.519185                    02042 Lane & Bodley Cincinnati Ohio 1                    1897

- “This firm was established by Philander P. Lane in 1850, as a small machine shop operating under the owner's name. In 1852 he was joined by Joseph T. Bodley and the name became Lane & Bodley, with Lane running the office and Bodley in charge of the shop. In 1853 they moved from their original location on Pearl Street to a five-building complex at the corner of John and Water Streets, which they shared with another manufacturer, Reynolds & Kite. They bought out Reynolds & Kite in 1858. Bodley died in 1868, just as the business was expanding in the aftermath of the Civil War. The company incorporated as the Lane & Bodley Co. in 1876. Lane died in 1889, having retired some years previous. By that time, the business was run by his son, Henry M. Lane.

Throughout its history the firm made wood-working machinery and steam engines. Their woodworking machinery line included large planers and circular saws, flooring machines, surfacers, and sash molders. Sawmill equipment was a specialty. In 1874 they developed a line of hydraulic elevators that sold well for the next twenty years or so.

The business suffered a devastating fire in December of 1900. They were involved in 1901 merger negotiations to create an "American Steam Engine Co.", but that effort did not amount to anything. They built new facilities at Paddock and Tennessee streets, where they continued to operate until 1920. In 1901 and 1905 they introduced improved steam engine designs. After 1905 the company's fortunes appear to have headed downhill, and other than directory listings we find little evidence that they were still in business. In 1921, their address was the same as Henry Lane's home address. Lane died in 1929, age 75, in a fire at the Cleveland Clinic where he was receiving treatment.

Lane & Bodley, corner John and Water streets, manufacturers of Woodworth planers, Daniels' planers, Lane & Bodley's patent power mortising and boring machines, sash sticking and moulding machines, tenon machines, hub boring machines, hub hewing machines, turning lathes, spoke lathes, felloe bending machines, scroll saws, wheelwright's machinery, Lane & Bodley's patent portable circular saw mill, and a great variety of other wood-working machinery. They employ fifty hands, and produce one hundred thousand dollars. Lane & Bodley's power mortising machine enjoys an enviable celebrity. Orders for them have been filled from Russia, Germany, Cuba, South America, Canada, and every State in the Union. Their circular saw mills possess some strikingly original peculiarities, that lessen the number of hands necessary to operate them, and increases their products to such an extent as to create a large demand for the article. They make every description of machinery that takes the log from the woods, and makes it up into every variety of products.” <http://vintagemachinery.org/mfgindex/detail.aspx?id=512>

  - The Holden Arboretum was started in 1931 with a bequest from Albert Fairchild Holden.
The arboretum was born out of Holden's desire to create a memorial for his oldest daughter, Elizabeth Davis Holden, who died of scarlet fever in 1908 at the age of 12. At first, he considered making Harvard University's Harvard University's Arnold Arboretum his beneficiary. His sister, Roberta Holden Bole, convinced him to create an arboretum for Cleveland as a place where students and adults could learn the basics of horticulture.
When he died in 1913, at age 46, Mr. Holden left a trust agreement in which he provided that funds be designated for an arboretum after a life interest was realized for his two surviving daughters, Emery May and Katharine Davis. Fortunately, Albert Fairchild Holden's vision caught the imagination of his family and others, who realized that an arboretum was a long-term project and should be started as soon as possible. After a study of possible sites, Roberta Holden Bole and her husband, Benjamin P. Bole, donated 100 acres in Kirtland Township. In 1931 the Cuyahoga County Court of Common Pleas approved establishment of The Holden Arboretum.
The Holden Arboretum indeed took root. Trees were planted, collections established, and programs begun. Mr. Holden's daughters contributed an active interest and generous support.

  - o History

In 1888, Youngstown industrialists George D. Wick and James A. Campbell organized the Mahoning Valley Iron Company, with Wick as president. Five years later, the two men resigned from the firm when it was taken over by the Republic Iron and Steel Company, and their next project would come in response to major changes that occurred in the community's industrial sector. Youngstown's industrial leaders began to convert from iron to steel manufacturing at the turn of the century, a period that also saw a wave of consolidations that placed much of the community's industry in the hands of national corporations. To the rising concern of many area industrialists, U.S. Steel, shortly after its establishment in 1901, absorbed Youngstown's premier steel producer, the National Steel Corporation.

During the previous year, however, Wick and Campbell combined resources with other local investors who wanted to maintain significant levels of local ownership within the city's manufacturing sector. The group established the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company with $600,000 in capital and eventually turned it into one of the nation's most important steel producers. Wick, who emerged as the steel company's first president in 1900, appointed Campbell as secretary.[3]

In 1923, Youngstown Sheet and Tube purchased the assets of The Brier Hill Steel Company (also located in Youngstown), as well as the facilities of The Steel and Tube Company of America in East Chicago and Indiana Harbor, IN, making it the fifth largest steel maker in the United States and the largest employer in the Mahoning Valley. The word 'Iron' was dropped from the company's name in 1905.

The company abruptly closed its Campbell Works and furloughed 5,000 workers on September 19, 1977,[4] a day remembered locally as "Black Monday." The Brier Hill Works and the company's plants in Indiana were sold to Jones and Laughlin Steel, later acquired by Ling-Temco-Vought (LTV), a conglomerate. The Brier Hill Works closed in 1979 as part of a continued wave of steel mill closings that devastated the Youngstown economy. The Brier Hill Works eventually reopened and are now operated as V & M Star Ohio, a recycling mini-mill owned by the Vallourec Group, a French conglomerate.

  - The Patterson Name
Wright-Patterson Air Force Base gets its name from the Wright brothers, and from Frank Stuart Patterson, who was the son of Frank J. Patterson, co-founder of NCR along with his brother, John H. Patterson. Frank Stuart Patterson was killed shortly before the end of World War I when his plane crashed on what now is the site of Patterson Field at Wright-Patterson. First Lt. Patterson and Second Lt. LeRoy Swan, both of the 137th Aero Squadron, were killed in the crash of their DeHaviland-4 after its wings collapsed during a dive while firing at ground targets with a new synchronized-through-the-propeller machine gun. The Air Force complex which was later to bear Lt. Patterson's name as a memorial was originally Wilbur Wright Field. After expansion and various name changes a second landing field became Patterson Field in honor of Lt. Patterson on July 6, 1931. Then in January, 1948, the name Wright-Patterson Air Force Base was made official.
Frederick Patterson, son of John H. Patterson, and who became NCR President in 1921, also played a key role. Like his cousin, he too was a pilot, but a bad knee kept him from becoming a pilot in World War I. However, after joining the Army he earned his commission in the aerial photography service.

The Division of Wastewater treatment serves the City of Dayton and the region, including a large part of Montgomery County which /includes Trotwood, Northridge, Riverside, Harrison Township, parts of Randolph Township, Oakwood, Kettering, Greene County, Moraine, and Wright Patterson Air Force Base. The staff of 90 full time employees serves 340,000 people, businesses, and industries by providing for disposal and treatment of all their collective wastewater discharges. The wastewater is treated to remove pollutants to a high degree of purity to meet Ohio EPA issued permit requirements before it is discharged to the Great Miami River.

The WWTP is located at its original 1929 site in the southwest corner of the City of Dayton at river mile 76.1 on the 170.3 miles long Great Miami River.

Deeds also placed at the disposal of Dayton-Wright his South Field, a part of his estate close to the new plant. (South Field was a part of the area now occupied by NCR's Moraine Farm in Kettering which is Col. Deed's former home and is used now by NCR for marketing division sales programs. The area actually covered acreage running west of Moraine Farm to near the site of General Motors' Frigidaire Division plant.)

Deeds Barn is dedicated in shadow of Frigidaire

By Belva Datcher

With the sprawling Frigidaire division of General Motors as a backdrop, the old Deeds Barn, where much of that corporation's automotive history began, was dedicated at 1:30 P.M. yesterday.

The small green and white structure, now located at 35 Moraine Circle South, Kettering, was surrounded by various state and local government and business leaders as well as relatives of the two men, who made much of that history, Charles F. Kettering and Col. Edward A. Deeds.

- Frigidaire's history reaches back to the earliest days of the household refrigerator. The company was founded in 1916, when engineer Alfred Mellows and a group of investors formed the Guardian Refrigerator Company in Fort Wayne, Indiana. Just a year earlier, Mellows had constructed the first true refrigerator, as opposed to an ice box with a refrigeration unit, by attaching an electric refrigeration system to a wooden cabinet. Mellows set up a small factory and started hand-assembling the appliances, but it was very slow going with workers taking over a week to make each refrigerator. Within less than two years, the company had lost over $30,000 and was headed for bankruptcy. Recognizing the efficacy of Mellows' concept, General Motors Corp. president, William C. Durant, personally acquired Guardian and renamed the company and its products "Frigidaire." In 1919 Durant sold the business to General Motors, moved the operation to Detroit and converted its manufacturing process to mass production. Though productivity increased dramatically, the $775, nine-cubic-foot refrigerators were still priced out of the reach of most consumers.

Frigidaire came into its own after 1921, when General Motors transferred the division to its Delco Light subsidiary in Dayton, Ohio. With guidance from electrical engineer and Delco president Charles F. Kettering, Frigidaire made rapid progress. Incremental innovations over the first half of the decade transformed the wooden food cabinet into a porcelain-coated, insulated, steel "fridge" with temperature controls. Frigidaire also diversified its product line with a number of cooling appliances, especially in the commercial arena. Over the course of the decade the company introduced ice-cream cabinets, refrigerated soda fountains, milk coolers, drinking fountains, room air conditioners, and display freezers for groceries. <http://www.answers.com/topic/frigidaire-home-products>

- Delco folks become better acquainted and enjoy healthful fun by engaging in sports which the Company sponsors. [Line drawing: three men greeting each other, smiling]

As an operating policy, the Company endeavors to provide recreational activities and equipment which would not be otherwise avail- [p. 37] able to employes. Participation is purely voluntary. Activities which embrace the largest number of people are given preference.

The principal sports include bowling, baseball, softball, trapshooting, casting, golf, tennis, and volleyball.

Employes are encouraged to engage in these sports as players or spectators, the motto of the department being "More Participation Makes Better Recreation."

To stimulate enthusiasm, employe teams take part in the Dayton Industrial Athletic Association activities. The entries are composed of the best players selected from plant teams.

Besides, a Class "D" baseball team for boys of 15 to 18 and a Class "E" team for boys of 12 to 15 are sponsored. The Delco entry captured the Class "D" city championship in 1948.

Well known to Daytonians is the Delco Gun Club on Philadelphia Drive and adjoining the Stillwater river. The clubhouse was improved recently. It now can handle much larger departmental picnics and outings.

○ Patterson Homestead

This historic house museum provides a glimpse into the multi-generational lives of Dayton's influential Patterson family, who lived on the site from 1804 to 1904. The Federal style house, which was constructed in three major components between 1810 and 1850, was originally the home of Revolutionary War veteran Colonel Robert Patterson and his wife, Elizabeth Lindsay Patterson.

Frank J. Patterson's son, Jefferson, donated the house and its 8.5 acres to the City of Dayton in 1953 for use as a meeting center and family memorial. At the time of donation, the house was presented fully furnished with 18th and 19th century antiques along with several original family pieces. Over the years, the artifact collection has grown to include more family-related artifacts that are housed in six period rooms. An exhibit gallery showcases the NCR story. - PLANS FOR REHABILITATION OF CROWN LAND TAKING SHAPE FOR THE CIP WET LAGOON IN HAWKESBURY, ONTARIO

Background:

By 1822, twenty-two mills were in operation in the Hawkesbury area using the Ottawa River as a transportation corridor. Following the square timber era of the early 1850's, vast quantities of sawn lumber from the Ottawa valley were sold to the north eastern states to build the great cities of Chicago, New York and Boston. The development and sales of lumber during that period, served as the economic engine for all of Canada. In the 1890's, cellulose manufacturing, a major component in the production of paper, began along the western waterfront in the Town of Hawkesbury. The property and plant was owned and operated by Canadian International Pulp and Paper (CIP) from 1921 to 1982.

With the construction of the Carillon Dam in 1965, waste from the mill was no longer permitted to be discharged into the Ottawa River. As CIP was one of the largest employers in the area, many solutions to the problem were explored. An adjacent parcel of crown land was deemed suitable for the disposal of waste cellulose fibres into a newly constructed "Wet Lagoon". Tenure for use of the property was provided by a License of Occupation, administered by the Ministry of Natural Resources.

In the mid 1980's, the CIP mill was closed and the buildings demolished. A Certificate of Approval was issued by the Ministry of Environment for the use of part of the Wet Lagoon as a landfill for some of the inert demolition materials. The License of Occupation was surrendered at that time but no provision had been made to force CIP to restore the site. <http://www.hawkesbury.ca/cip/factsheete.pdf>

J. F. Hennessy Co. is a division of Digital Geographic Technologies, Inc. (DGT) a multi-disciplined consulting firm offering civil engineering and land surveying services.
In 1922, John F. Hennessy, P.E., R.L.S., a civil engineering graduate of MIT, started his private practice in Brookline, Mass. He built upon an existing landscape contracting business started by his father M. E. Hennessy, who had cooperated much with the renowned landscape architect, and Brookline resident, Frederick Law Olmstead, in 1899. Upon his retirement in 1984, Mr. Hennessy sold his civil engineering-land surveying firm to Gunther Engineering, Inc. of Boston. Gunther Engineering and its various divisions, including the J.F. Hennessy Co., came under the ownership of Digital Geographic Technologies, Inc., also a Boston-based firm, in 2006. Thus J.F. Hennessy Company can boast of continuous operations since 1922.

- 43.091782,-79.072106 07735 Community Plate Company Ltd. Niagara Falls Ontario 3 1925-1926
  - The Oneida Tower
The Oneida Community was established in 1848 at Oneida, New York by John Humphrey Noyes. A segment of this community, under the leadership of John Noyes and his ancestors, established the Oneida Silversmith Factory in Niagara Falls in 1926. They owned a large tract of land along the north side of Clifton Hill where they built a manufacturing business including offices and a factory.
In 1963, the Oneida Community Developments Company (Canada) Limited decided to further develop its Niagara Falls property by building a tower and commercial stores in a complex facing Falls Avenue. Under the direction of then company president, Pierrepont T. Noyes, an observation tower measuring 104 metres tall was built. The top of the flag mast was 108 metres above Falls Avenue.
This tower and commercial complex was designed by architect Alan R. Moody. It was constructed in six months by the Frankel Steel Company of Toronto.
Construction progressed at a rate of six feet per day. The top of this tower was capped with a two storey observation deck capable of holding 1,500 people at a time. Two glass enclosed elevators at the center of this tower were capable of carrying 1,800 people per hour. The upper observation deck was a partially open, providing people with excellent views of the Falls through special openings in the wire mesh fencing and to provide for the taking of pictures.
This tower was built of an open steel frame construction and was the first of its construction type ever built in Canada. In addition to the tower, a five store - two storey commercial plaza was built at the base. The cost of this project was 10 million dollars , with the tower cost of 1 million dollars.
A giant 15 by 9 m neon company sign added to the beauty of the top of this tower. In 1974 this sign was removed because rust had rendered it unsafe.
In 1974, the Oneida Tower became known as the Niagara Tower and Plaza Limited. In 1985, this tower would become the center piece of the Maple leaf Village Shopping Complex under the name of "Kodak Tower".
Currently this tower is situated at Casino Niagara, and visitors are not able to travel up the tower.

- Conard Pyle Co.

Conard Pyle Co, is a horticultural house which has been based in West Grove, Pennsylvania, USA, for over 150 years and the introducer of the Peace rose to America (the peace Rose was developed in Europe), always specialised in rose production, but at one time, they were the leading Canna grower and hybridizer in the USA. A large number of people over 150 years contributed to the success of this internationally known establishment.

History:

- 1855 Alfred Conard formed the firm of Conard & Brother.
- 1862 he started a nursery business with Charles Dingee under the name Dingee & Conard. The business had two greenhouses and the establishment was known as the Harmony Grove Nursery.
- 1867 the firm started propagating roses under a new system introduced by Antoine Wintzer, the head nurseryman, and a world-class hybridiser. Conard conceived the idea of disposing of their rose stock through the mail. Their first catalog offered bedding plants, shrubbery, bulbs, seeds, and roses.
- 1888 Howard Preston sold his farm (a dairy farm and regional creamery) to S. Morris Jones, who continued to operate the creamery.

- 1892 Conard separated from Dingee and along with Antoine Wintzer joined with S. Morris Jones. The new company continued with the growing and distribution of roses and flowering plants. Much of the farmland acquired by Jones became part of Conard-Pyle, the house was eventually provided to the head nurseryman, Antoine Wintzer, as his residence.
- 1895 Antoine Wintzer worked on the improvement of the canna.
- 1897 The name become Conard & Jones Co.
- 1898 Robert Pyle joined the company and purchased control in it after Conard's death on December 15, 1906.
- 1930 Upon the death of Antoine Wintzer, he was succeeded by Sydney Hutton, of New Jersey, as head nurseryman.
- 1950 Upon the death of Robert Pyle, Sydney Hutton purchased Conard-Pyle, and three generations of Huttons have owned and operated it ever since, and lived in the house at West Grove, PA until 1997, when it was sold to a private individual.
Steven Hutton, current owner of The Conard-Pyle Co Company plans to focus on royalties licencing and plant breeding.

  - The Olmsteds in Pittsburgh
When Frederick Law Olmsted (1822-1903) first visited Pittsburgh in 1863, it reminded him of Birmingham, England, which he had seen a decade earlier at the height of the Industrial Revolution. "All the colors and smells and grease," he wrote his wife Mary, "Great steep cliffs opposite, up which I clomb, cinders, coalmines. . . a very grand, mysterious, obscure, gloomy sentiment in the view over the town."

By the turn of the century when his stepson and nephew John Charles Olmsted (1852-1920) and son Frederick Law Olmsted Jr. (1870-1957) began to work in Pittsburgh, all that activity was producing great wealth and corresponding ambitions to build a more beautiful and convenient city. The firm's first clients in the area reflected the breadth of Pittsburgh's interests and pointed the direction for future projects extending over nearly half a century.

In 1895, they designed the new company town of Vandergrift, 40 miles from the city, for the Apollo Iron and Steel Company, makers of galvanized steel. The history of this remarkable project is the subject of Anne E. Mosher's 2004 book, Capital's Utopia: Vandergrift, Pennsylvania, 1855-1916. Twenty five years later the firm did extensive planning for the Fort Pitt Malleable Iron Co.

- o Berkshire Knitting Mill

One of contemporary Berks County's most popular tourist attractions is the VF Outlet. Most visitors to the outlets do not realize the rich history of the buildings that make up the outlet complex. Manufacturing began on the site in 1896 when Ferdinand Thun and Henry Janssen moved their Textile Machine Works to Wyomissing. The Textile Machine Works manufactured knitting and braiding machines. On July 6, 1906 the Textile Machine Works opened an experimental knitting mill as a test bed for the machinery they manufactured. In short order their experiment grew to become the largest full-fashioned knitting mill in the world, The Berkshire Knitting Mill. These pictures were taken in the early 1930's.

- I worked here from 1982 through 2003. We made chips used in the telecommunications industry. Its a somewhat historic place, in that is was the world's first transistor production line in 1951. Was originally a Western Electric plant that made electron tubes, then transistors and finally intergrated circuits. In 1984 it became AT&T Microelectronics, in 1996 Lucent Technologies, in 2001 Agere Systems and what is left of it today is now LSI. In 2003 all manufacturing done here was sent to Singapore and I lost my job.

- LSI Corp. - Union Blvd Complex (Allentown, Pennsylvania)(Allentown, Pennsylvania)
Formerly Agere Systems, and before that Lucent/Western Electric. The world's first transistor production line was built here in the late 50's. On April 2, 2007, LSI completed it's merger with Agere Corporation, and rebranded the company from LSI Logic Corporation to LSI Corporation.
LSI is a global leader in semiconductors for storage, wireless data, and public and enterprise networks. The company's chips and software power a broad range of computing and communications applications, from cell phones, PCs, PDAs, hard disk drives and gaming devices to the world's most sophisticated wireless and wireline networks. Agere's customers include top manufacturers of consumer electronics, communications and computing equipment. Agere's products connect people to information and entertainment at home, at work and on the road -- enabling the connected lifestyle.

  - Lady Meredith House, Montreal
In 1888, Vincent Meredith married (Isabella) Brenda Allan (1867–1959), the youngest daughter of Andrew Allan, who had then succeeded his elder brother, Sir Hugh Allan, as President of the Allan Line and the Merchant's Bank etc. This marriage brought Meredith additional wealth and powerful connections. As a wedding gift, his father-in-law gave him and his wife a parcel of land on the corner of Pine Avenue and Peel Street in the Golden Square Mile, just across from Ravenscrag, where Lady Meredith's cousin, Sir Montagu Allan, lived. In 1894, they employed the architect Edward Maxwell to build them a house there, "Ardivarna", a turreted, red brick mansion, now known as Lady Meredith House. Maxwell had also previously designed their summer house at Mont Saint-Bruno, Quebec. Lady Meredith House was designated a National Historic Site of Canada in 1990.[2][3] Following the First World War, when wounded Canadian soldiers started to return from the Front in 1918, Lady Meredith set up a rehabilitation centre for officers at her and Vincent's Montreal home. During their 1939 Royal Tour of Canada, Lady Meredith was the hostess to King George VI and Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother during their stay in Montreal. In 1942, Lady Meredith donated the house to the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal as a residence for the nurses.
