Samuel Arnold Finley (1873-1933) was born in Montreal, David Jerome Spence (1873-1955) was born in Louisville Kentucky. The firm of Finley and Spence was active between 1902 and 1914. The architects designed numerous industrial buildings in Montreal.

CAC holdings for Finley and Spence include drawings and paper files for the L.E. Waterman Company Limited and the Belgo Building in Montreal. Several architects worked on the Belgo Building between 1912 and 1970 therefore we find several project names, project numbers and names of architects or architectural partnerships.

PROVENANCE

The drawings were donated to the John Bland Canadian Architecture Collection by Mrs F. D. Mathias.

  - Historical Significance
Pickwick Landing was a riverboat stop dating from the 1840s. In the 1930s during the depression, the site was chosen for one of the Tennessee Valley Authority's dams on the Tennessee River. What comprises the park today was once the living area for the TVA construction crews and their families. The TVA Village, better known as Pickwick Village was located where the Post Office, Park Office and day use area are now located. A Boy Scout Lodge was located where the old inn is located. The State of Tennessee purchased all 681 acres of Pickwick from TVA in 1969. Since that time additional land has been bought to enlarge the park. <http://tn.gov/environment/parks/PickwickLanding/>

- History
Norris was built as a model planned community by the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA) in 1933 to house workers building Norris Dam. It is named in honor of Nebraska Senator George W. Norris, a long-term supporter of TVA.
TVA chairman Arthur Morgan envisioned Norris as a model of cooperative, egalitarian living.[3] The city design was developed by TVA staff,[4] who loosely based their design on the English garden city movement of the 1890s. Winding roads followed the contour of the terrain. Houses did not always face the street. A central common green and a belt of rural land around the town were reserved for use by residents. The houses, which were some of the first all-electric homes, were built using local wood and stone, according to twelve basic house designs that each included a porch and fireplace. Different exterior materials were used for visual variety.[4][5]
Norris represents the first use of greenbelt design principles in a self-contained town in the United States. The town was the first in Tennessee to have a complete system of dial telephones. Norris Creamery was the first milk-producing plant in the world to be powered solely by electricity.[4]
During the 1930s TVA officials excluded black families from the city, purportedly to conform to the customs and traditions of the area. However, black leaders said that poor whites and blacks had lived and worked together in the area long before TVA came into existence. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) complained repeatedly (in 1934, 1935 and 1938) about racial discrimination by TVA in the hiring, housing and training of blacks.[6]
In 1948 the U.S. Congress directed that the city be sold at public auction. It was purchased for US$2.1 million by a Philadelphia investment group headed by Henry D. Epstein, which then sold individual homes to their residents. The city was officially incorporated in 1949. In 1953 the Epstein group sold its remaining Norris real estate to a corporation formed by Norris residents and known as the Norris Corporation.[4]

  - Post49 corr: "When we were last at Kingsport together...you asked me to look at the land owned by the Securities Company, located west of Highway 23 and opposite the Kingsport Cemetery. There appears to be some indication that a new 4-lane State Highway from Kingsport to Gates City may be located through the easterly portion of this property, this highway may be more or less parallel to present Highway 23... In my opinion this location will in no way injure the land held by the Securities Company, but should make more accessible for development purposes of the southerly portion of this tract of 63 acres. A portion of the tract in the northeast corner is much too steep for residential development and you could well afford to donate some five acres to the city for park purposes. It may seem desirable also to donate to the city the land between present Highway 23 and the proposed new highway, as this land would be of no value to you. The object, of course, in placing these two parcels in the hands of the city for park purposes, is to protect properly the cemetery property directly opposite, east of Highway 23." CRP to H.R. Dennis, Feb. 8, 1950
  - [Red Herrings?]:
    - "One ticklish problem was carried over, however. That is the question whether to rezone an area back of Hermitage Drive between the Mason & Dixon Lines terminal and the Sherwood Road neighborhood shopping zone from single family residential to light manufacturing. The change would permit Mason & Dixon to use the property to store tractors and trailers not immediately in use. Nearly everybody at a public hearing Tuesday night agreed that the swampy ground is not very desirable for residential development. And objections to the use proposed by Mason and Dixon were rather mild...[t]hree indicated their main worry was what is going to become of the vacant property fronting on Hermitage Drive, which is not included in the present rezoning proposal. They expressed a worry that this property - equivalent to about two blocks - is being held in reserve for future business use or to provide access to the property under discussion... [One of the three] said he had offered to buy the property on Hermitage Drive from the Securities Co. and build homes on it but the company would not sell. If residences could be built there, he said, he would not worry about the property back of the residential lots." Kingsport Times, June 28, 1961, p.1, "2 Councilmen Quitting posts"

- Wellington faced one more upheaval. In 1971, Mr. Matheson decided to sell his home, and the Soviet Embassy offered to buy the property for use as a retreat or dacha for its staff. In the lingering Cold War, many people, locally and across the country, objected to the thought of George Washington's farm becoming the possession of the Soviet Union. As a result, Congress and the Department of State asked Mr. Matheson to withdraw the property from the market.

Among those concerned by the potential sale was Enid Annenberg Haupt, philanthropist, gardener, and member of the Board of Directors of the American Horticultural Society. Through her exceeding generosity, the Society was able to purchase the 27 acres then comprising the Wellington estate, agreeing to keep the property open for the enjoyment of the American people. In honor of George Washington, one of our nation's first great gardeners and horticulturists, the property was again named River Farm. In 1973, AHS moved its headquarters from the city of Alexandria to River Farm. First Lady Patricia Nixon joined Mrs. Haupt at the dedication of the property and together planted a ceremonial dogwood tree in the garden. Since then, the AHS has made River Farm a living example of the Society's principles and mission. Our goal is to ensure the preservation of River Farm and its contributions to American horticulture for generations to come.

- Kohler Company Factory Complex
444 Highland Drive, Kohler, Sheboygan County
Architect: Richard W. Phillip
Dates of significance: 1901-1960

The Kohler Company Factory is a multi-building industrial complex developed from farmland purchased by the company for this specific purpose. The Kohler Company, founded in 1873 by John Michael Kohler, has remained the leading manufacturer of plumbing fixtures and related products in North America since the 1920s.

His son, Walter J. Kohler Sr., was the driving force behind the creation of the planned community built to support the factory complex. He studied similar communities, traveling to garden cities in the U.S. and Europe, to create a more beautiful model. He met Milwaukee architect Richard W. Phillip, his lead designer, on an early study trip to Europe. The factory complex contains a collection of simple, early twentieth century, utilitarian industrial buildings. There are two types of buildings in the complex, one story tall steel frame "production sheds" and reinforced concrete multi-story "industrial lofts." They consisted of open workspaces defined solely by external and internal walls, floors and roofs.

Only a few buildings were built before 1919. In 1920 the company diversified their product line for off-season demand and created new facilities. The majority of the buildings in the complex were constructed by 1930. Nearly all subsequent growth and expansion took place in these existing structures. The Kohler complex is one of Wisconsin's largest and oldest industrial enterprises defining the term "Wisconsin Industry."

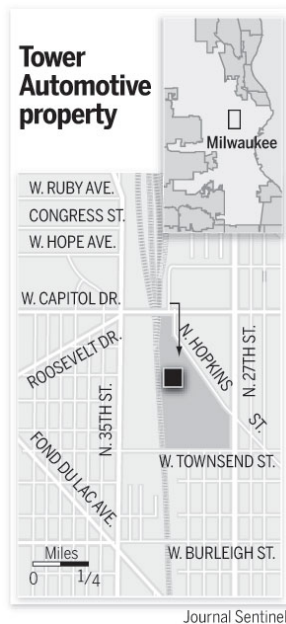

The buildings continue to be used for industrial manufacture and are not open to the public, except for guided tours offered by the Kohler Company.

  - The Chair then asked if anyone wished to speak in favor or opposition to the project. Mr. Robert Franklin of 145 Lagrange Street rose to speak. He stated that he was speaking on the behalf of his elderly mother who is a direct abutter to the Schechter's at 80 Kensington Circle. Mr. Franklin stated that his parents had lived at this address since 1969 and he was speaking neither in support nor opposition to the request relief. He stated that his mother wished to be il.good neighbor but since her lot is similar to the Schechter's he was not sure whether the requested relief met the statutory grounds for a variance. Mr. Franklin stated that he cominends the Schechter's for utilizing the prescribed legal process under the by-law for the relatively small incremental relief.
Ms. Polly Selkoe, Assistant Director for Regulatory Planning, described the property at 60 Kensington Circle is a Colonial-style, wood clapboard house. Built in 1942, it is a single-family house with two stories and a slate gable roof. The pared on which 60 Kensington Circle sits is a pie-shaped lot - the smallest of three such lots at the intersection of Kensington Circle and Arlington Road, near the town border with Newton.

APPELLATE TAX BOARD
BROOKLINE CONSERVATION LAND TRUST v. BOARD OF ASSESSORS OF THE TOWN OF BROOKLINE
Docket Nos. 281854-56, 285517-19      Promulgated: June 5, 2008
c. The Cottage Street parcel.
Appellant acquired the Cottage Street parcel in 1998. Mr. Lawrence testified that the parcel was acquired by gift from Clarita Bright, who lived immediately next to the parcel. Mr. Lawrence also testified that Ms. Bright was not a trustee of appellant, and no trustee of appellant owned any land abutting this parcel. Mr. Lawrence testified that the desirable feature of this parcel is that it is contiguous to other significant conservation lands in Brookline, particularly the Sargent Pond and a stream that feeds into Sargent Pond.

Lawrence testified that “there is no activity going on” in this parcel, and that “[i]t is a habitat for natural life, including deer and other animals such as that. It’s fairly, quite frankly, quite wild, although there is an open portion of it that is maintained in the manner in which Mrs. Bright had it prior to the gift.”

  - "Hurricane Destroys Buzzard Bay Home Of Edgar - The hurricane on the Atlantic sea board last week caused the total loss Edgar Davis palatial house known as A House on the Sands at Buzzard Bay. The house located on Sands Point was one of the famous show places of Cape Cod. Included in the home was a music studio seating 250 people with room on an adjoining gallery for several hundred more. Here, from 1925 to 1929, Davis gave weekly recitals for his friends with grand opera stars participating. Valuable curios collected by Mr. Davis when he resided in Sumatra were also lost. The home was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. K.C. Baker and who formerly resided in Luling where he was general manager of the United North and South Oil Co. They escaped without injury but lost all their possessions. - Luling Signal" Lockhart Post Register, Oct. 6, 1938

  - COMMONWEALTH vs. EDGAR B. DAVIS., 284 Mass. 41
November 16, 1932 - September 12, 1933, Suffolk County
Present: RUGG, C.J., CROSBY, PIERCE, & LUMMUS, JJ.
The case was tried to a jury largely upon oral evidence, the testimony of the defendant being voluminous. The chief question for decision is whether there was error of law in the denial of the motion by the defendant that a verdict be directed in his favor. This is the only exception stated in the bill as allowed. No exception was taken to the charge by either party and all exceptions as to evidence were waived. At the close of the charge, this special question was submitted to the jury: "Did the defendant, Edgar B. Davis, change his domicile from Brockton, Massachusetts, to Luling, Texas, in fact?" The jury answered "No." Thereupon the trial judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount claimed in the declaration. A main contention of the defendant is that there was no evidence to support the finding that the defendant did not change his domicile from this Commonwealth to Texas. It is conceded that the defendant's domicile was and continued to be in Brockton in this Commonwealth from his birth until some time in the latter part of December, 1926. The point in controversy is whether he then changed his domicile to Luling in the State of Texas. Relevant facts and testimony bearing on this point, summarily stated, are these: The defendant was born in 1873, was brought up and received his education in Brockton and never married. He was engaged in business there until 1904 when by reason of sickness he was compelled to give up all business activities. Thereafter he travelled extensively, was absent from Brockton a good deal of the time, but continued to look upon Brockton as his legal domicile and never contended prior to the latter part of December, 1926, that his home was not in the family residence there. That was a house which the defendant and his brother acquired and maintained as a home for their parents during their lives and later for other members of the family. The defendant made his home there. The defendant voted whenever possible and paid his taxes in Brockton. He was engaged in the rubber business in the far east from 1908 to 1918 and was absent from America about three fourths of the time. In 1919 he became interested in the oil prospecting business, organized a New York corporation known as the United North and South Oil Company, Inc., for that purpose and was its chief stockholder. It became financially successful in 1925. In that year he acquired the sole title to the homestead in Brockton of which he had theretofore been part owner, and to the former summer home of his parents on Buzzards Bay in Wareham, and made considerable additions to both of them. For the latter he bought adjoining land and made extensive enlargements and alterations to the buildings at an expense of more than $100,000. It was his purpose thus to provide a summer home for his sisters but also to have the house available for the descendants of his father and mother. The defendant caused to be organized in 1925, and chartered in February, 1926, a corporation known as "A House on the Sand, Inc." Although this was organized under the business corporation law of this Commonwealth, it was not designed and has never been operated for profit. The defendant owns all the stock. To this corporation he conveyed the Buzzards Bay property. Automobiles were bought and paid for by the defendant and transferred to this corporation. He has paid all the upkeep and expenses of the property and has used it and the automobiles as his own since December, 1926, as well as before. In June, 1926, the defendant organized a corporation called "The Davis House, Inc." of which he owned substantially all the stock and conveyed to it the homestead property in Brockton and several automobiles. The transfer of this property has not affected its use. It has been occupied by the defendant's sister and her companion and by the defendant whenever he has been in Brockton since 1926 just as it was before the transfer. All its expenses have been paid by the defendant. The defendant testified that this house "was a nice place to live in"; that "in it they had the nearest approach to a family home in that they had things there that had been handed down in the family, things of the heirloom type"; that it was "conducted pretty much the same as any ordinary dwelling house." <http://masscases.com/cases/sjc/284/284mass41.html>

- "'The House on the Sand", Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts. [Edgar B.] Davis acquired his Buzzards Bay home from the estate of former president Grover Cleveland. He restored the home, adding a music conservatory. It was the site of many elaborate concerts that Davis hosted in the late 1920s, to which he transported the finest of the country's performing artists via special trains. The house and its contents were destroyed by a hurricane in 1938. [photo] Courtesy Riley Froh Collection." p.31, *Texas Art and a Wildcatter's Dream: Edgar B. - Charles H. Wacker
Birth: Aug. 29, 1856
Death: Oct. 31, 1929
He was a 'mover and shaker' in the early days of Chicago. He was part of the Chicago Plan Commission formed to win acceptance of the famous Burnham Plan of 1909. He was a contemporary of Daniel Burnham and helped him promote his plan for the development of the city's lakefront and system of parks. Lower and Upper Wacker Drive (two roads one on top of the other) in Chicago is named for him.

- 26. Frothingham, Eugenia Brooks. THE EVASION. Boston and NY: Houghton, Mifflin, 1906. $45.00 First edition. 8vo, <415>pp; smooth burgundy cloth, decorative rectangular thin rules stamped in gilt at the front cover and in blind at the rear; title and author in gold at the front cover; title, author and publisher stamped in gold at the spine. Pencil ownership inscription ("H.H. / 1906") at front free endpaper; bookseller's ticket ("Brentano's / Paris") at rear pastedown; a touch of agetoning to text. Mild use to binding. Very good. Eugenia Brooks Frothingham was born in Paris in 1874, but lived much of her life in Cambridge and Boston. She wrote a number of novels in addition to THE EVASION such as THE TURN OF THE ROAD); HER ROMAN LOVER (1911); THE WAY OF THE WIND (1917); and, THE FINDING OF NORAH (1918). She also wrote on behalf of woman suffrage ("Fears of the Anti-Suffragist", 1914) and of child labor laws ("Mock Legislative Hearing: 'Senate Bill 575', a bill to prohibit child labor; a play in one act for citizenship classes" [1920]). THE EVASION is the story of Richard Copeland who as a child loses his young, beautiful mother. The deep wound remains with him, even as he moves out into the world as an adult. The treachery of a friend, the "evasion of the title", proves another seismic event, dramatically altering his life and expectations. Smith, AMERICAN FICTION 1901-1925, F.440.

[showing Amos A. Lawrence estate at Ivy and Prescott]
- The Lawrence brothers built their own homes in Cottage Farm and, in contrast to the southern side of Beacon St., purposely limited development in the area. As a result, most of the homes date back to the early 20th century. The name "Cottage Farm" derives from the then popular English Cottage style of building and associated lifestyle of genteel country living, particularly the Gothic Revival form. Amos Lawrence's house at 135 Ivy, designed by architect George Dexter and built 1850 -1851 of pudding stone from Roxbury, illustrates this style. George Dexter purchased a lot at 156 Ivy from Amos Lawrence and built a similar house in 1851. Another classic example of this style is the cottage built in 1850 for Frederick Sears at 24 Cottage Farm Road. <http://www.cottagefarmbrookline.org/history.html>

  - "The most famous of these [boulders] is Tipling Rock, perched upon a ledge in Edward Wheelwright's estate about a half mile west of Jerusalem Road at Bow Street, and a half mile north of Main St. at Albert S. Bigelow's driveway. Its greatest length is twenty feet, breadth twelve feet, and height..." p.44
"This same stream was probably the one that had carved out Indian Pot years before when it flowed along in the same general direction upon the top of the glacier.
What is now North Main Street was a part of this broad river bed when the ice had been melted from beneath.
One can easily see upon the map or upon the land that an eddy or corner must have been made by the edge of the rock along the north side of what is now the Albert S. Bigelow estate and by the ice which lay in Little Harbor. In this angle were lodged thousands of tons of gravel by the stream as it swept around over that is now the town Common, past the ledge at Depot Court, and thence into the Cove. That the ice really did lay in Little Harbor, reaching a hundred feet or more in height, is proved by the great steepness of the banks of gravel in some places along the margin. Gravel cannot be made any steeper than it is just at the roadside in front of Albert S. Bigelow's estate." p.51 A Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset, Massachusetts, Edwin Victor Bigelow, 1898

  - Richardson was commissioned to build the home by Dr. John Bryant and his wife Charlotte on his inherited property on the Cohasset shore. He called the property "Hominy Point."

Bryant came from a long line of Cohasset summer residents. Historical Society President Kathy O'Malley said he was of the fifth generation devoted to Cohasset. His mother and family spent all their summers in Cohasset. When his mother passed away, he inherited the Cohasset property. A yachtsman and a sportsman, Bryant enjoyed the waterfront Hominy Point property immensely. He was one of the founders of the Boston Athletic Association, which began the Boston Marathon, and he enjoyed racing small boats. The Bellarmine House is a prime example of the Arts and Crafts era in architecture, where architects brought together artists and artisans to work collaboratively to create a truly unique home. The home was built between 1880 and 1881. The interior of the house includes many details associated with the Arts and Crafts movement — exposed oak ceiling beams, raised oak paneling and leaded glass windows.

  - Ledlie Laughlin Woolsey died August 6 at Edgewood retirement community in North Andover at the age of 93. She was born Rebecca Ledlie Laughlin on December 2, 1917 at her grandparents' house in Brookline MA. She was the daughter of Henry and Rebecca Laughlin and the wife of the late John M. Woolsey, Jr..
As a student at Bryn Mawr College (class of 1940), she lived with a French family in Paris in 1938-39 and wrote letters home full of first-hand observations of developments there in the months preceding the Nazi occupation of France. A wartime marriage to David B. Rodd ended in divorce in 1946 and Ledlie married John M. Woolsey Jr. In 1948. The family moved to Cambridge in 1949. Over the next 22 years, Ledlie was involved in parent activities at the Shady Hill School and civic organizations in Cambridge.

- Bequests add up for local groups

By Brad Lynch

With payment of legacies to churches and other non-profit institutions on Cape Cod -- especially in Cotuit-- three generations of philanthropy by members of the Whitcomb family of Chicago, New York and Cotuit appear to be completed.

The nature and amounts of bequests, most of them said to be approximately $194,000 each, that were made by the late Pemberton Whitcomb and his wife, Bernice Madden Whitcomb, are guarded from public scrutiny. Through creation of at least three family charitable trusts, the Whitcomb family was able to give six-figure sums to religious and community organizations without having either the beneficiaries or the amounts of bequests become public record in probate.

Pemberton Whitcomb, then in his eighties, died in January 1984. His wife was 91 when she died in September 1997.

The couple summered for years, then lived year 'round in the family homestead at 185 Ocean View Avenue, a yellow classic Cape Cod house with dormers, which is regarded as one of the handsomest waterfront estates in Cotuit. Pemberton's brother, Carter P. Whitcomb, whose memory is honored by the Whitcomb Pavilion at Cape Cod Hospital, lived next door. Both grew up in what became Pemberton's house, when their father and mother summered there. A Cotuit neighbor recalls that the father, Franklin L. Whitcomb, owned a company in Chicago that manufactured wheels for railroad cars. At one time Franklin Whitcomb also owned a farm and cranberry bogs in Marstons Mills.

Pemberton and Bernice Whitcomb were childless, and he was the last survivor in his family line. He pursued his career in New York, where he owned and later sold a book publishing company. About a decade before his death. Pemberton Whitcomb was injured in a fire that nearly destroyed the big yellow house and consumed or damaged some of the notable antique furnishings it contained. The house was completely restored and recently was sold, with proceeds being added to one of the trusts. At the time of Mrs. Whitcomb's death the house was valued at $2.5 million.

  - "Though Shepley, Rutan and Coolidge, who inherited his practice, could not always maintain his (Richardson's) standards, they were so deeply moved by his example that they created one country house of which the master might have been proud. This is the tremendous, boulder-hewn residence at Dedham, Massachusetts of A.W. Nickerson, one of the magnates of the Santa Fe." Andrews, Wayne, Architecture, Ambitions and Americans, The Free Press, London, 1964, pp. 169.
<http://www.teachingcompany.com/SC97/Castle34.html>
  - Nickerson Castle (now just called "The Castle") was built in 1890 for railroad tycoon Albert W. Nickerson. It was designed by Boston architect H.H. Richardson. Nobles school bought it in 1921 and now uses the castle as a home for dining services and as a place to live for boarders and faculty members.
Later, I received E-Mail that said:
I lived in Nickerson's Castle a/k/a "The Castle" at Noble & Greenough School in Dedham, Mass. from Sept 1952 to June 1953. Most of us were aware that there was a secret passageway from the entryway to the headmaster's office (your second level) to his living quarters above at the right end of your photo (until a headmaster's residence was built in the late fifties. I assume that the destination is now occupied by a senior faculty member and his family). A second secret passageway descending was rumored to the east end (right side of photo) of the bottom level. This nineteenth century monster was built in the European tradition by a man with very deep pockets in the days before income taxes., there is a great hall (in the middle of the second level of your shot), a large dining area to its left in your photo and what was the school library to its right in your photo (until a new building was added to the north to house more classrooms and the library).
On 11-23-11, I received e-mail that said:
Albert W. Nickerson first arrived in Dedham in 1877. He was the president of Arlington Mills in Lawrence, MA and director of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway where he took an active part in community affairs and made generous donations to charitable causes. Nickerson bought a parcel of land in Dedham, a 600-acre (2.4 km<sup>2</sup>) estate on the Charles known as Riverdale. The estate was the boyhood home of ambassador and historian John Lothrop Motley. In 1886 he commissioned the architectural firm of Henry Hobson Richardson to build him a castle on the estate and hired Frederick Law Olmsted's firm to do the landscaping. The castle has a number of interesting architectural elements but its most famous is by far its numerous secret passages and legendary underground mazes and hallways. It was built on top of a rocky hill so that the Castle and the River appeared magically to carriages or cars arriving through the forested Pine Street entrance. <http://www.dupontcastle.com/castles/nickerso.htm>

○ Historical Narrative

Historically, Crescent Avenue was a path leading from Allen's Plain (Pleasant Street area) to Columbia Point or the Cow Pasture as it was called for many years. In 1804 the the Dorchester Turnpike was completed on the western edge of this area, linking Lower Mills with Boston. When the Old Colony Railroad was set out through this area in 1844, it would seem logical that residential development would follow in the Crescent Street area soon after the introduction of such a major transportation improvement. The 1850 Dorchester Map, however shows only three houses in the vicinity of Crescent Avenue which include a house on either side of Crescent Avenue owned by the Mosely family and a dwelling labeled G. Clapp at the southeast corner of Crescent Ave and Dorchester Ave. The oldest house in this area is located at 56 Crescent Avenue and may be the house shown on the 1850 map north of Crescent Avenue labeled T. Mosely. By 1874 this house was one of two houses on a 5,000 square foot lot labeled S.P. Holbrook. S. Pinckney Holbrook played a major role in the development of late 19th century Dorchester through his real estate and auctioneers company called Holbrook and Fox (based at 8 Kilby Street, Boston). #56 Crescent Street was apparently the secondary house on the property. A much larger house, now the site of modern condominiums was the main Holbrook residence. By the 1930s this house had evidently become a boarding house whose tenants included Louis De Simone, painter, James Beith, machinist, as well as Thomas H. O'Neil and Clifford Pennington, occupations unlisted). The Italianate house at the corner of Crescent and Newport Streets has firm historical associations with the Mosely family who had been associated with this area since at least 1850. In 1874, Elisha Mosely, coal dealer is listed here (working out of 86 Devonshire Street, Boston). Mosely's house lot encompassed 16,000 sq. ft extending from Newport Street to Spring Garden Street. By 1894, the Mosely's had sold this property to a James and Margaret Daly, lunch room owners and the lot was reduced to its present size. The Dalys lived here until at least the early 1930s.

- 42.448644,-71.129721 06379 Murphy, H. D. East Lexington Massachusetts 0 Carrig-Rohane, Winchester, MA
  - Boston was then in the grip of the Arts and Crafts movement, which favored strong, simple lines and durable construction. This reinforced Murphy’s new insights. He began to experiment with frames for his own paintings, stripping away the ornamental excesses of Continental style in favor of a cleaner look. By 1898 the first American reviews of his painting also commented favorably on his frames. An indifferent businessman, he nevertheless saw the need for a shop that would produce frames of high quality and strong, modern design. In 1903 he opened the frame shop Carrig-Rohane (Gaelic for “red cliff) in the basement of his Winchester home. Convinced that frames were worthy of attention as artworks, Murphy became the first American framemaker to sign and date his work.
Financial success was quick, and critical success followed. By 1906 Murphy had gained a reputation as the founder of what International Studio was already calling the “Boston group” of framemakers—“the first serious attempt in this country to restore the picture frame to something of its old-time honor and to introduce the spirit of individual artistic responsibility.” By 1907 Murphy was, according to The Sketchbook , “the leading frame manufacturer in Boston, that is, of high-priced frames.” (High-priced they were, selling for twenty to twenty-five dollars in a time when a meal at a fine restaurant might cost one dollar.)
By 1909 Murphy numbered among his customers the artists Emile Carlsen, Frank W. Benson, Abbott Thayer, and Childe Hassam. The lovely gilded frame seen here was manufactured in the Carrig-Rohane studio that year, and it represents the Murphy shop at its best. The outer carving is openwork; the channel behind is painted black to bring out the extreme assurance of the work. This example is on the high end of the price scale for Carrig-Rohane frames, which are now regarded as highly collectible; a New York gallery specializing in period frames and mirrors values it at twenty-eight thousand dollars.

  - Beebe Woods
The elegant summer estate of the Beebe family in the center of Falmouth would be a housing tract today, not several hundred acres of town conservation land, if not for the vision and generosity of a Falmouth benefactor.
There were several schemes envisioned for the property once the last of the Beebe children, Frank Beebe, died in 1932. A health center, research laboratory, and a sanatorium were among the proposals. Finally, developers planned a 500-home subdivision that seemed certain to succeed. Just a few weeks before the sale became final in the fall of 1972, Josiah K. and Josephine Lilly purchased the estate and deeded 388 acres to the townspeople of Falmouth.
A century earlier, James Madison Beebe had bought the land on the outskirts of the small village of Falmouth. The Beebe family built two mansions on the property — Highfield Hall and Tanglewood — and created a network of bridle paths through the woods.
Tanglewood is gone, and Highfield Hall has been restored by a private, nonprofit preservation group. The bridle paths and other trails remain, and they are widely used by residents.
The woods lie across the top of the glacial moraine that stretches from Woods Hole to beyond the Cape Cod Canal. The hills were created some 15,000 to 18,000 years ago at the close of the last Ice Age. Evidence of the glacier's work is everywhere, from the huge boulders to the irregular shapes of the hills and the kettle holes.
Beebe Woods is easily accessed. Parking is available by the Cape Cod Conservatory at the end of Highfield Drive and on Ter Heun Drive, where there is a small unpaved parking area west of Gosnold on Cape Cod. Maps of Beebe Woods and Peterson Farm, which abuts the woods, are available at The 300 Committee office. <http://www.300committee.org/beebewoods.htm>

[rt half - "Part of Town of Falmouth" showing Beebe properties]

- "They built and rebuilt miles of stonewalls, many that long ago had formed pastures for the sheep and cattle that roamed the hillsides. They surveyed their vast holdings, and at various and numerous points placed markers of expensive polished granite that can still be seen throughout the woods. And they built their woods roads so well that today, cleared of windfalls and other obstructions and thoroughly brushed out along their edges, they're as smooth and pleasant to travel over as they were almost a century ago. And all along their ways Frank Beebe [youngest son of James M. Beebe] planted trees and shrubs to enhance the natural beauty of the woods. (Ring Around the Punchbowl, by George] Moses, p. 132)

The woods were of greater personal interest to Frank Beebe than any of the others and there he planted many of the trees and shrubs "foreign" to Falmouth soil that are found in its midst today. His death certificate, at his expressed wish, stated that he was an "arboriculturist." (Moses, p. 123)" from "Beebe's Woods: Falmouth's Miracle" by Judith G. Stetson

- After the death of James Beebe in 1875, his children built two grand residences on the hill. Brothers Pierson and Franklin and sister Emily built a lavish "summer cottage" in the Queen Anne stick style modeled after the British Pavilion in the great 1876 Philadelphia Centennial Exposition. Highfield Hall was completed in 1878, and its sister mansion, Tanglewood, where the J. Arthur Beebes took up residence, was finished in 1879. Thus began over fifty years of Beebes living and entertaining in their "summer cottages" at Highfield. In its heyday, the hill must have been a bustling scene. The miles of carriage trails, riding trails, gardens, two huge homes, and numerous outbuildings required a small army of servants to maintain. The Beebes even started a farm on Shore Street to provide produce for their Falmouth and Boston residences.

The Beebes were undoubtedly a formidable family. The children made an impact on Falmouth with their financial support for the building of St. Barnabas Church on Main Street (1890) in memory of their parents, St. Barnabas House (1890), a carriage shed (1894) for the church which in 1962 was converted into a garden chapel, and conversion of the Bodfish House into the Rectory (1901). For some years in the 1880s, the Beebes were the largest taxpayers in Falmouth.

Franklin, the last of the Beebe children, died in 1932. After that, Highfield Hall passed through a succession of owners, each with a dream for its use. First, in the thirties, E.H. Bristol wanted to turn it into a health resort. That was succeeded by two dreams in the forties: J. Elwin Wright, a religious revivalist, wanted it to become a religious hotel and retreat. Subsequently, Arthur J. Beckhard ran the two mansions as hotels and converted the former stable into what is now Highfield Theater.

By Devra First, Globe Staff | May 13, 2004
FRAMINGHAM -- On the outside, Bruce Davis's house is a basic Colonial. A very large, pink Colonial. On the inside, it's a wonderland. It has a ballroom, a glassed-in conservatory, quarters for servants, and a vast, oak-paneled living room -- all what you might expect of a century-old mansion, built as a wedding present for the daughter of a prominent family.
What you might not expect are the Mickey Mouse room, the Egyptian room, and the cowboy room. A hurdy-gurdy from 1887 and two large statues of the Disney character Goofy flank a pool table in the ballroom. A carousel horse stands in the living room. The effect is part "This Old House," part "Silver Spoons."
The house has 26 rooms and 9,000 square feet of living space, and Davis, 59, lives here by himself; his mother lived with him until her death at the end of March. Now his companions are two Pomeranians: a mother and daughter named Sadie and Maggie.
On Sunday, people can visit the house at Owl's Nest Farm -- as it is still called, though the farm on which it was originally sited is long gone. It is one of eight featured in the Framingham Historical Society & Museum's annual house tour. Built in the 1890s, it shared 1,000 acres of land with two other houses. (The current plot is 2 1/2 acres.) Its owners lived in high style.

- 42.591242,-71.58686 01129 Gardner, W. A. Groton Massachusetts 6 1887-188
  - Reverend Peabody was closely involved in the design of most of the buildings as well as the campus layout during his tenure as headmaster from 1884-1940. Between 1884 and 1902, the prominent Boston architecture firm of Peabody (possibly a distant relative of the founder) and Stearns was responsible for English Revival, Colonial Revival and Classical Revival designs in brick of Brooks House (The original schoolhouse, rector's residence and dormitory), Fives Courts (Handball courts), Hundred House (Dormitory) and original dining hall), the Schoolhouse and the second Gymnasium while R. Clipston Sturgis designed the wood frame Gardner House in the Colonial Revival style as a private residence for William Amory Gardner, one of the three original faculty members along with Sherrard Billings and Reverend Peabody. Henry Vaughan, a designer of the National Cathedral and of the Chapel of St. Peter and St. Paul at St. Paul's School in New Hampshire, designed the Gothic Revival style chapel which is the school's only limestone building.

The firm of Chase and Ames of Boston designed the Pest House to serve as the Infirmary in 1902. The Olmsted influence on the landscape and campus is visible in the round central open space which, according to landscape design researcher Faith Smith, was a compromise between Reverend Peabody and employees of Frederick Law Olmsted. (Smith indicates it is unclear exactly how much part Frederick Law Olmsted personally took in the design although he is known to have visited the site on at least one occasion). Secondary campus buildings from the period include mainly residences such as the Gardner House for William Amory Gardner (The town's largest individual taxpayer in 1891) by John H. Sturgis in 1887-1888 and his Pleasure Dome (Swimming Pool, Squash Courts, and Gym) in 1901 by Groton Alumnus Robert Burnside Potter who trained at the Ecole Des Baux-Arts... Caleb Butler, in his history of Groton, mentions Farmers Row, indicating that the road had become known by that name in 1847. His field notes for the 1832 map mention the No.3 brick schoolhouse in the northeast corner of the property. Miss Clara Endicott Sears (1863-1960) bought the land and house now at 90 Farmers Row (MIIC #83), moved the house approximately 1/4 mile to the south (Daniel C. Lovell was listed in the 1888 resident directory as a building mover and may have been involved in this project) and soon thereafter began construction on her mansion at 76 Farmers Row with help prior to construction from Charles Eliot of the Frederick Law Olmsted landscape architecture firm who sited her building. The construction date is based on job files in the Olmsted landscape architecture firm's archives retrieved by Faith Smith." Groton - Before the imposing granite of Branford House, there were graceful arches, shingles and subtle elegance...This is Morton F. Plant's Eastern point house...He had homes in Florida and New York City. Around Groton and New London he is remembered for his elegance, his aura, his philanthropy and his Branford House, built in 1904. But Plant bought his first piece of property in Groton in 1899 at Eastern Point. On it, he built a three-story, shingled frame structure a year later...Plant only spent a few summers at the house that still stands at 15 Shore Ave. He soon moved on to the grander Branford House...Plant sold the house in 1911 to William B. Thom of New York City, several years after Branford House was completed...In 1919, Thom sold the house to the Bow-Lands Corp. of New York City...evidently rented the house during the summers until selling it in 1926.   - "Before the end of the ice cutting operations on Hopedale Pond had arrived, the original three buildings had been changed to become a very large seven section single building. A windmill and a pump house were utilized to obtain power. (Just a thought here. Doesn't it seem more likely that the windmill operated the pump rather than the windmill and pump house were used for power? Since ice was often kept cold by insulating it with sawdust, perhaps as it was about to be shipped out, it was rinsed with water from the pond, pumped by the windmill.)
Cutting ice came to a conclusion during 1942. In December of 1944, the entire property was purchased by Thomas and Priscilla West. (He was the president of Draper Corporation.) The ice houses were removed and today a beautiful home stands on the site." from "Ice Cutting on Hopedale Pond - A Memory Rekindled" by Gordon E. Hopper" <http://www.hope1842.com/icehousehopper.html>

1930-1932                                      Marchant Ave., Hyannisport, MA

- This morning, traffic to one of our blog posts from last year, “The Kennedy Compound, Reagan’s House and Other Homes of Presidents” has been attracting a lot of attention due to the death of Senator Ted Kennedy, who passed away last night at his home in Hyannisport, MA after battling brain cancer. As I looked at the blog post, there was a lengthy comment left by “wglenn” who must live near the Kennedy Compound, located at 50 Marchant Ave, Barnstable, MA 02630. This is what he had to say about the Kennedy Compound:

To clarify, the Kennedy compound is not really a compound in the true sense.

The houses along Irving Avenue – JFK & RKF’s and Marchant Avenue are comprised of three separate – rather small plot but adjacent houses with the main waterfront house (in all the photos) originally owned by Joe & Rose and now owned by Sen. Kennedy who occupies the main house off & on throughout the year.

This is the only waterfront property.

In late 1956 JFK purchased a modest but sizeable house (in aerial photos it is the house toward the upper left corner second to the left from Joe & Roses) on the corner of Irving Avenue and Robert purchased a similar modest house between JFK’s and directly behind (North) Joe & Roses. Interestingly, JFK’s house is heated by steam radiators fired by oil...very New England.

RFK’s side yard abutts JFK’s side/back yard. RFK’s back yard abutts Joe & Rose’s back yard. Thus the area is still a Cape Cod residential street with nicer than average but not lavish homes.

Extended family members, e.g. cousins, 3rd generation Kennedy’s, etc. have homes in the immediate area but are not contiguous to the three original properties which to this day remain separately titled properties.

Other than stockade around portions of JFK’s place and rail fencing around RFK’s there is no security fence or closed streets albeit Marchant Ave at the end of which becomes a private drive of 20 feet or so into Joe & Roses place.

When the Senator is at home there is generally a Mass. State Police car parked on Marchant Ave. to deter curiosity seekers but the road remains public and if you’re discrete on winter days you can walk down Marchant to the edge of the driveway to Joe & Roses for an unobstructed view of the Big house. Don’t linger, be bothersome, or hang around and point, and you will otherwise not be bothered.

Caroline after her mother and brother’s death inherited JFK’s place sold it in 2005 to Sen. Kennedy. Prior to the house sale Caroline put up via Sotheby’s objects and furnishings from the JFK house. She spends her Cape time on Martha’s Vineyard at a newly constructed house that replaced the one her mother built (which Caroline had torn down...no emotional issues there, eh!).

I am guessing but assume JFK’s house is used occasionally by Caroline but otherwise as overflow accommodations when Sen. Kennedy or Ethel have a gathering or distant Kennedy relations need a grace & favor summer place to stay.

Robert’s wife Ethel in recent years has spent most of her time year round in the RFK house and permanently moved there in 2005 from the large Hickory Hill Virginia property which she sold in 2008.

To the right (right of the tennis court) of Joe & Roses is another large waterfront house that you would think is part of the compound. It is not and belongs I believe to E. Koch, President/owner of Koch industries.

Interior photos of JFK’s house can be found at: <http://www.pinkpillbox.com/hyannisport.htm>

This morning, Boston.com reports that the Kennedy Compound might be turned into a historic property like FDRs home in Hyde Park, NY or turned over “... to a national nonprofit group, possibly to be opened up as a museum or retreat center.”

RIP, EMK.

  - The Cottage Era
At the same time, on the backside of the hill, another family was building yet another "cottage." United States Naval Captain John S. Barnes, Flag Officer of the North Atlantic Fleet during the Civil War, purchased the land for $10,000 in 1882 and erected Coldbrooke, now known as Beecher's Cottage and part of the Cranwell property.
John Sloane, a relative of the Vanderbilts and co-owner of the famous furniture firm, W & J Sloane, became the next owner of the property when he built his "cottage" in 1894. After tearing down Rathbone's Wyndhurst and Beecher's farmhouse, Sloane constructed another Wyndhurst, which rivaled the enormity and elegance of the first. He also commissioned Frederick Law Olmsted, the landscape architect who created New York's Central Park and the Boston area's Emerald Necklace, to design the grounds. It is this new Wyndhurst that stands on the hill today.

  - The Vanderbilt "Berkshire Cottage"
The estate is still owned by original Vanderbilt family descendents. Elm Court is 55,000 square feet and is the largest American Shingle Style home in the United States. It contains 106 rooms, and was built by William Douglas Sloane and Emily Vanderbilt (granddaughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt "The Commodore,") in 1886, along with architects Peabody and Stearns. Emily's brother George built The Biltmore in Asheville, NC and her sister Eliza (Lila) constructed Shelburne Farms in Shelburne, VT. Both properties, along with Elm Court, are National Historic Landmarks, family owned and are open to the public year round.
Elm Court was constructed as a summer cottage to be enjoyed by family and friends. After many structural and aesthetic additions and makeovers, the home culminated in a finished version after the turn of the century. The Elm Court Talks held at this home in 1919, led to the creation of The Treaty of Versailles and League of Nations.

- Fairlawn Nursing Home Historical Building Inventory Survey
Massachusetts Historical Commission
"The original part of Fairlawn was built in 1872 by Charles R. Putnam, who in 1870 had purchased the 300-acre "Shagbark Farm" from Benjamin Fiske. Fiske had gone to Boston in the early 19th century and become a merchant but returned to Lexington in 1837 and acquired the various parcels that became his farm, one of which had been Samuel Downing's dairy farm. After Putnam bought the property in 1870, he built a new house in 1872 behind the existing Greek Revival cottage, a construction date indicated by the rise in the assessed value of Putnam's house from $1300 in 1872 to $15,000 in 1873. Historical photographs indicate that the new house was a rather elaborate five-by-five bay Stick Style building with a hip roof surmounted by a widow's walk, a pilastered chimney in a different location from any of the present ones, and cross gables with half-timbering over patterned shingles or with picket-fence siding in the pediments. Some of the original features still exist, i.e., the gables on the present façade and west elevations and the shed-roofed dormer on the west (the hexagonal dormer on the facade is in the same location as a former gabled dormer). Putnam farmed the property, sold it in 1890, and in 1893 it was acquired in the name of Thomas B. Morrill.
The purchaser was actually J. Reed Whipple from Boston, who had begun as a Roxbury grocer, become a buyer for the Parker House, and had eventually bought the Parker House, Young's Hotel, and the Hotel Touraine. According to the story told by nursing home residents, much of which is substantiated by deeds, Whipple's wife was an invalid who lived at the Parker House, but Whipple had fallen in love with the Parker House cashier, Mary A. Morrill, and bought Shagbark Farm for her. Whipple used the farm's produce, which included over 100 head of cattle, to supply his hotels and kept thoroughbred horses at Winning Farm in Woburn, which he also owned. In 1898 Whipple and Mary Morrill began to transform the estate, that year adding a high-style Colonial Revival stable with interior paneling and a brass names plate on each horse's stall, a structure pictured in historical photographs of the estate. In 1903 they began to remodel the house, which they called Cedarcrest, into the present English Revival Style mansion. That year the farm barn was also enlarged and a windmill and a hexagonal water tower added, the last also pictured in historical photographs.
Whipple died in 1910, Mary sold the property in 1912, and in 1917 the farm was acquired by Harvey C. Wheeler of Roxbury, the founder of the Towel Cleaning Supply Company, which distributed cloth towels throughout the Boston area. The Wheelers traveled extensively but used Fairlawn, as they called the Lexington house, as a summer residence. The Wheeler Place, as it was known in Lexington, included a pool surrounded by statues and a greenhouse. There were elaborate gardens including a Dutch garden, Italian rose garden, and English rose garden, connected by a system of paths that led over a brook and bridges to a windmill and fruit orchards. In 1930, however, the Wheelers purchased a house on Pelham Rd. in Lexington, Fairlawn was closed down, and the farm was then sold off in various lots. In 1949 Fairlawn was acquired by the Walshes and converted into a nursing home."

  - Frederick Lincoln Emery House, Home Historical Building Inventory Survey, Massachusetts Historical Commission

“Historic atlases seem to indicate that this property belonged to C.C. Goodwin until after 1906. However, directories and a long time resident indicate that the house was built and occupied by Frederick Lincoln Emery, a lawyer in Boston. Emery's father, George, an accountant, built a substantial house on the corner of Meriam and Stetson streets a decade earlier. F.L. Emery was president of the Field and Garden Club of Lexington and of the Mt. Pleasant Home for Aged Men and Women in Boston. According to a brief notice found in the Lexington Minute-man on February 2, 1894, "Mr. Fred L. Emery's new house on Stetson street is conspicuous from almost any point of view in the town. It has a remarkably fine outlook and is a rare location in that it is but a few steps from the centre of the town and yet has the advantages of a detached estate without the usual accompanying disadvantages". An announcement of the wedding of Fred Emery and Grace Harrington appearing in the Minute-man on June 1, 1894 noted that their new house on Stetson Street had just been completed. Fred and Grace Emery continued to live here into the 1930s. Grace Emery was a Christian Scientist practioner. Their son Leland was living here with his wife Lillian in 1942.”

  - W.A. Tower Estate Outbuilding, Historical Building Inventory Survey, Massachusetts Historical Commission

Together with Tower Park, an ornamental gate at Pelham Road (MHC #512) and the stone wall along Massachusetts Avenue and Pelham Road, this building is a last remnant of the William Augustus Tower estate which occupied much of the acreage along Mass. Ave. between Pelham Road and Middle Street (later Marrett Road). This house was originally located on Marrett Road (according to Edwin Worther's notes it stod on the "site of Sherburne-Carter house"). It was reportedly originally built at Mr. Tower's expense for Mr. Batchelder [the estate coachman] who occupied it for 13 years before it was moved to its present location and constructed a large addition. A brief mention in the Lexington Minute-man in 1902 confirms that Col. William A. Tower purchased this lot of land from Frank Pierce and began excavation of a cellar. The house, then occupied by Mr. Batchelder, was moved to the site for use by the Batchelder family.

In 1906 Richard Tower sold the house and land on Tower Road to Fred Earle, a conductor on the Boston & Maine Railroad (Lexington branch). The 1906 map indicates that the surrounding acreage had already been lotted. The house was occupied for many years by Fred Earle and his wife, Caroline (Carrie). The Earles continued to own the house into the 1950s. It was known as 14 Tower until the mid 1930s.

William Augustus Tower (1824-1904) was a very successful banker and businessman who moved to Lexington in the 1850s. In addition to banking interests in Chicago and Boston, he served as president of the Concord Railroad in New Hampshire from 1870-1873 and later president of the Nashua and Lowell Railroad. He was a member of the first board of trustees of the- Lexington Savings Bank and a founder of the Lexington Historical Society. He served as a member of the House of Representatives and the Governor's Council and was chief marshal at the Lexington Centennial celebration in 1875. Tower's residence south of Main Street was described as the finest in town in the 1868 Town History; a new house was built for Tower by a Mr. Ball in 1873. This mansion was torn down in the late 1930s or early 1940s.

  - d'AUTREMONT, Ruth Way, Hartford Courant, October 22, 2009
Ruth Way d'Autremont, 86, died peacefully on Monday (October 19, 2009). She was preceded in death by her husband of 63 years, her brother John Way, and her nephew Rick Way. Ruth was born in Hartford on July 26, 1923. She grew up in Hartford and Gilead, attended Oxford School, the Masters School and Smith College. During World War II she volunteered at the Hartford Hospital, where she met her future husband, Dr. Chester d'Autremont. They married on June 1, 1945, moved to Belmont, MA in 1947, to Lincoln, MA in 1957, and to Lexington in 2004. Ruth loved her family, both immediate and extended, her community and her friends. She was very proud of being a Connecticut Yankee, with roots back to the Mayflower. She had a strong sense of tradition, which manifested in wonderful holiday parties. Her guests were treated to a warm smile and remarkable enthusiasm, as well as generous food and drink. Her children and grandchildren are grateful to her for that sense of continuity and history, as was as for imparting her mastery of precise language, social graces, and the culinary and sartorial arts.

  - Little Nahant is Sold; Syndicate Buys Territory for Building Purposes
Lynn, Aug.19 - A real estate deal of considerable importance took place today when nearly all of Little Nahant passed into the hands of a syndicate. The property was owned by Miss Sallie Simmons, survivor of the family in whose possession the property has been since 1856.

The Simmons holdings embraced nearly all of Little Nahant, which lies between this city and Nahant proper. It is understood the syndicate will open it up, laying out streets and disposing of lots to builders. Boston Globe, Sunday Aug. 20, 1905, p.81

  - Brown Gables / Green Gables
The earliest deed found in regards to the entire property was in 1879 when Alonzo V. Lynde sold the land on the corner of Fuller Street and Hesperus Avenue to Daniel W. Fuller.
The structure of Green Gables was built in 1929 and later owned by James Groves of Field Road. The Green Gables building was used as a hotel for single ladies, and the Brown Gables cottage next to it was used for employees of the inn.
Green Gables was a three-story building, with sixteen rooms, ten bathrooms, six open fireplaces and asteam plant for heating. The basement housed the laundry, kitchen, storage rooms and servants' quarters. Yes, the hotel and gables were green. A much-liked longtime resident of Magnolia, Eleanor Benotti, arrived in Magnolia when herfather was chef at Green Gables.
In July of 1924, the property was sold at auction. Sarah M. Kelly bought the property and operated the hotel until her death in 1934 at the young age of thirty-five. From 1935 until 1959, the property had six owners and four names.

Then, in 1959, a fire destroyed the Green Gables Hotel, but the Brown Gables Cottage remained in tact. The hotel was replaced by a multi-unit apartment building that also suffered a fire in the 1970s. The complex that sits upon the grounds of what used to be Green Gables is now owned by Mr. McCarthy and is currently being sold as condominium units.

Brown Gables Cottage was purchased by Mario Furtado, a graphic designer in December 1995. He has made many attractive renovations to his residence since then.

- "'Fox Hill Lodge' The Summer Home of Mr. Prescott Bigelow, at Manchester, Massachusetts" by Mary H. Northend, American Homes and Gardens, June 1910, p.236 [with image]
A short distance back from the highway, at a point midway between manchester and Magnolia, one comes upon a most charming little house, built after the style of an English lodge, ensconced in a setting of close-cropped lawns and shaded by fine old trees. It crowns the crest of a low, broad hill, leveled at the top to make it even eith the roadway, and it overlooks as the rear broad stretches of meadowland that sweep to the water's edge. This is "Fox Hill Lodge," the summer home of Mr. Prescott Bigelow of Boston, Mass...

- “The route leaves the town by Sea St., turning left on Summer St., the Gloucester road, opposite the old burying ground of 1661. On the left of Summer St. are the grounds of the Essex Country Club, whose new club house and well known links are among the best on the coast. Proceeding under the railroad bridge, the route passes the entrances to the large estates owned by Philip Stockton, Mrs. Gardiner M. Lane, Richard H. Dana and Dr. J. H. Lancashire. Eagle Head, on the shore, is occupied by Ira N. Morris, the United States Ambassador to Sweden. Francis M. Whitehouse has a half timbered house on the waterfront. A road to the north by an old school house on a triangular plot leads to the Magnolia R.R. station past the places of Andrew Carnegie, 2nd and Walter J. Mitchell. Coolidge Point is reached by a drive near the pond. Here is the splendid Georgian house of Mrs. T. Jefferson Coolidge. Isaac T. Mann, S. H. Fessenden, Robert Treat Paine, 2nd, Reginald Foster, and Eugene C. Foster also reside here. The late T. Jefferson Coolidge, former minister to France, had an estate here and developed this section, which is the northern limit of the exclusive north shore colony.”, p.694, A Handbook of New England (1916), Sargent, Porter Edward on June 23, 2012 Richard Prouty, 99, of North Dartmouth, Mass. passed away peacefully on June 15, 2012. Born in Brookline, Mass. on November 20, 1912, he was the son of the late Olive Higgins Prouty and Lewis Isaac Prouty.

Mr. Prouty was a graduate of Milton Academy and Harvard University (Class of 1935), and attended Harvard University Law School. He served in the US Coast Guard during World War II, and was subsequently an executive at the Norton Company in Worcester, Mass. He formerly lived in Holden and Worcester, Mass., and also maintained a residence in Marion and Mattapoisett, Mass. before moving to Autumn Glen Assisted Living in North Dartmouth in 2005.

A life-long sailor and skier, Mr. Prouty was also an avid gardener, golfer, environmentalist and a worldwide traveler. He shared his love of the outdoors with his family who will miss him dearly.

He was pre-deceased by his sister, Jane Prouty Smith, his son, Richard Prouty, Jr., his daughter, Jane Chapin Prouty, and his grandson, Skyler Prouty-O'Brien. Survivors include his loving wife of 68 years, Ann Jenkins Prouty, his son, Jonathan J. Prouty of Fort Collins, CO, his daughter, Hilary J. Prouty of Oldwick, NJ, and his son Lewis I. Prouty and his wife Jennifer of Mattapoisett, MA. He is also survived by his grandchildren: Serena Van Rensselaer and her husband Bahram Foroughi, Richard Miles Van Rensselaer, Richard L. Prouty, Hilary L. Prouty Vineyard and her husband Sam, Emily B. Prouty, Ann E. Prouty, David H. Prouty and Michael J. Prouty; a great grand-son, Azziz Foroughi, as well as several nieces, nephews, cousins and friends. <http://www.wanderer.com/?p=4422>

  - Laboure Purchases New Milton Campus
Tuesday, August 07, 2012, Labouré College Purchases Former Aquinas Building For New Campus, Continuing a Legacy of Catholic Education in Milton
Milton, MA: Labouré College (Labouré) and the Sisters of St. Joseph of Boston today announce the sale of the former Aquinas College property on 303 Adams Street in Milton. Labouré, a small, private, Catholic college with a distinct focus on education in nursing and health sciences, has acquired the property and will continue to use it for educational purposes.

Labouré will renovate the building and create a new campus with modern facilities to benefit current and future students. The new facility is located only 1.3 miles from Labouré’s current location. Labouré will begin renovations to 303 Adams Street this summer and begin the move to the new campus in the spring of 2013.
“The college community is excited about the move to 303 Adams Street,” Labouré President Maureen Smith commented. “We are blessed to have found a location that will provide us the room we need to grow while remaining part of the Lower Mills community. We look forward to working with our new neighbors at Fontbonne Academy and the Sisters of St. Joseph.”
The building is part of what was originally known as the Wigglesworth Estate – a 17 acre parcel subdivided into three segments. The five acre segment which has been sold to Labouré College, is the site of the former Aquinas College, which opened as a secretarial school sponsored by the Sisters of St. Joseph in 1956. Aquinas College closed in 2000. Situated on the remaining twelve acres is Fontbonne Convent, the home of over 25 Sisters of St. Joseph, as well as Fontbonne Academy, which opened in 1954 and where the mission of the Sisters of Saint Joseph, to care for the dear neighbor without distinction, is woven throughout every facet of school life.

  - Bob The Milton Historical Society in a letter to me during the 1980's listed six Davenport homes in Milton, MA as historic assets of th town. These are:
(John) Davenport Farm, 1707, 1493 Brush Hill Rd.*

Isaac Davenport House, 1794, 1465 Brush Hill Rd.
Nathaniel Davenport House, 1788, 1238 Canton Ave.
Nathaniel Davenport House II, 1825, 1514 Canton Ave.**
Phineas Davenport House, C.1802, 1580 Canton Ave.
William Davenport House, 1780, ! Green St.

* This is a salt box colonial type home we were able to go through. Land bought from the indians.

** Wow! Stone wall on a two lane road, rising green area, beautiful mansion in the distance.

The Davenports were involved in Milton for 200 years. The Library there has a History of Milton book that has the Davenport story.

The Brush Hill homes were still in the Davenport family when I visited there in the 1980's. Hope this helps, Russ

- o John appears on Milton, MA, tax lists in 1777 and 1778. From Milton he went to Roxbury, MA, resided there for a short time and then removed to Wahington, NH, where he built a log house on the southern slop of Lovell's Mt. and cleared a farm. He was an enterprising farmer, a good citizen, and held the office of deacon in the Congregational Church. He remained in Washington until 1810, when he returned to Milton, MA, with all his family but his son John, and in 1816 bought a tract of nineteen acres near Blue Hill. While living in Washington, where wild raspberries were plentiful, John started in a small way the business of putting up preserves and carrying them to Boston. the lot purchased in Milton may have been utilized for the production of small fruits used in this industry in Milton, later continued extensively by his son Whiting and his grandson George. Shortly before his death he sold the lot to his son Harvey, and two years later, in 1828, Harvey sold it with a building which had been erected on it, to Isaac Davenport. It is now owned by the heirs of Governor roger Wolcott. <http://vosegenealogy.info/robertvos/robertvos.ged>

[showing Mabel Hunt Slater property bordered by Blue hill Ave. and Atherton St.]

- Horatio Nelson Slater was married in 1891 to Mabel deC. Hunt of Boston and Milton, daughter of the famous artist William Morris Hunt, at Mizzen-top, the Hunt family's summer house in Bar Harbor, Maine...The Slaters kept a townhouse at 448 Beacon St. in Noston's neck Bay and later purchased fifty-six acres of land from her family in Milton. Slater died in 1899...After his death, his widow had her brother, Paul Hunt, design a large, rambling Tudor Revival manseion set on a knoll overlooking the extensive landscaped grounds that ran from Blue Hill Avenue to Brush Hill Road. Christening the estate Pine Bank...the Slater amnsion was sited on a knoll overlooking the circular carriage drive. The forecourt had a stone ballustrade that overlooked the gardens and rustic twig-and-branch benches set throughout the grounds.

The Slaters summered at Pine Bank until the 1920s, when the estate was sold and became Jeanne d'Arc Academy, a Roman Catholic boarding and day school for girls. Mrs. Slater kept an apartment on Fifth Avenue in New York and died in 1942. Today, the Hunt-Slater Estate is part of the attractive campus of Curry College, and Pine Bank is used as a dormitory, albeit a magnificent one." p.137, Milton: A Compendium, Anthony Mitchell Sammarco, The History Press, Nov 15, 2010

- Jeanne d'Arc Academy opened in 1930 at 1071 Blue Hill Avenue, on the grounds of "Pine Bank," the 40 room Tudor Revival home of Mabel Hunt Slater designed by her brother Paul Hunt. In 1971 the Roman Catholic girls academy sold the property to Curry College which now uses the former mansion as a dormitory.

- 1980 survey and planning grant, part i - hyde park. Published 1981 .
Boston Landmarks Commission, Building Information Form, Form No. 62, Area: Hyde Park, Address: 18 Yuill Circle; (1912 Atlas) Owner: Mabel H. Slater
Significance: 18 Yuill Circle is undoubtedly the most unique [sic] bungalow to be found in Hyde Park. Characterized by whimsical facade arrangement of the QUEEN Anne style, it imposes Colonial Revival & QA motifs & asymmetrical AQ [sic?] massing on a basic Bungalow form. Unfortunately, no building permit can be found, therefore, the designer of this highly individual house must remain unknown for the present.

Originally known as 220 Milton St., it first appears in the Atlas under the ownership of Mabel H. Slater. The Slaters were apparently landowners & developers in the Readville area around this period; Mabel Slater owned the property nearby, and Slater's block was a commercial building located in Wolcott Square. 220 Milton St. is first mentioned in the 1911 List of Assessed Polls, when Henry L. Titus, horse trainer, was occupant; prior to this, only the triple-decker across the way is mentioned, pointing to a probable 1910 construction date. Titus was undoubtedly associated with the Readville Trotting Park which had just opened in 1896. (p.452 of 624, electronic document)

  - In September of 1926, forty-five boys assembled in a former barn near North Maple Avenue. They were there because three mothers were unhappy with the local boys' schools and decided to start their own. They enlisted Florence Rockefeller, and she had offered a building, one she had planned to use as a carriage house. <http://www.gcds.net/page.cfm?p=4>
  - John L. Miner was appointed as the school's [NY's Harvey School's] first headmaster when its doors opened in October 1916, with an enrollment of four boys. Mr. Miner served the school for ten years before leaving to establish Greenwich Country Day School, originally known as The Harvey School of Greenwich. Herbert Carter, Jr. graduated from Harvey in 1919, and from Princeton University in 1923. Following a year at Oxford, he returned to Harvey to teach English, and in 1926, he succeeded Mr. Miner as Headmaster. <http://www.harveyschool.org/page.cfm?p=505>

  - Staten Island Neighborhood Profile: Grasmere
In 1788, the towns of Northfield, Southfield, Westfield, and Castleton were developed on Staten Island. These towns encompassed the whole of Staten Island and were comprised of many small villages. In the town of Southfield, which was actually made up of the eastern villages of Staten Island, there was the village of Concord. During the nineteenth century, a community now known as Grasmere was developed by a Sir Roderick Cameron.
It is often misconstrued that Sir Roderick Cameron had named it after his birthplace, the lovely village of Grasmere that is a part of England's Lake District. However, Sir Cameron was born in Canada. The only explanation I can give is this: Roderick Cameron was a wealthy businessman, as he co-founded R.W. Cameron and Company shipping. In 1883, he was knighted by the Queen and traveled much. In his travels, he must have gone to the Lake District. The Staten Island neighborhood that he had named during the middle of the nineteenth century had, at the time, been populated by many lakes and must have reminded him of England's Grasmere.
During the 1800s, the harvesting of ice on Staten Island's lakes and ponds was a very profitable business. At this time, a Philip Brady acquired a portion of the land in what is now Grasmere. It is not certain whether Brady owned the land before Sir Roderick Cameron came to the area, or if Sir Cameron had sold him, a portion of the land, which included a very large swamp. Nevertheless, a dam was placed on the nearby swamp, and the swamp was converted into a pond. Philip Brady, in turn, began to harvest ice on the pond that is now known as Brady's Pond.
Brady's Pond is New York City's only freshwater pond that enables visitors to swim in it. The park in which the pond is located, which also bears the same name, is surrounded by the streets of Hylan Boulevard to the east and Narrows Road South to the north, as well as the pond itself, to the west. People who do not reside in the neighborhood of Grasmere may access the park by Manorville Court, which almost juts into the pond, underneath the greenery of the park.

  - Sir Roderick Cameron, of the Australian Steamship Line, had an unusually large estate in park-like surroundings near the Grasmere lake which bears his name (34). The house was still standing in the 1920s, but has been demolished since then. However, the remodeled gatehouse stands near the intersection of Steuben Street and Fingerboard Road. The mansion, known as "Clifton-Berley," was the scene of many gay social events in the late 1800s. Interesting newspaper accounts may be consulted on the microfilm files at the Staten Island Museum.* Cameron and Roderick Avenues and Cameron Lake remind us of this vast estate. Several large homes were erected in the Arrochar section of the
  - "Clifton Berley" was Sir Roderick's 150-acre estate that he purchased in 1861. There, he spent much time and money importing, breeding and raising thoroughbred horses. A listing for a large collection of horse ancing documents on Christie's web site included several from Sir Roderick. Apparently, some of Sir Roderick's horses were some of the best of their time.

Sir Roderick died in 1900 and I don't know how long his family retained ownership of "Clifton Berley". However, by the time of these pictures in the May of 1932, the once beautiful mansion was a decaying hulk. Significant patches of tiles are gone from the roof and I strongly suspect that on the other side of the roof's peak has holes in it. The road around the house is in obvious disrepair. I imagine these pictures are final documents of the house before its demolition.

Today there is almost nothing to indicate the house was ever there. Its rolling grounds and fields are covered with asphalt and dozens of houses. The only vestige of Sir Roderick's forty years of ownership is his name on the small lake to the west of where his home once stood.

Distinguished Civil War Veteran
Milton, Oct. 18 -- Maj Charles B. Amory, a distinguished Civil War veteran and for many years a prominent cotton broker, died suddenly early today at his home on Atherton st. He was 73 years old. Death came while he slept.
Maj Amory was born in New York in 1841, one of his grandparents being Gov James Sullivan of Massachusetts. He attended school in Jamaica Plain and at 17 entered the counting room of B.C. Clark & Co. Commercial Wharf, Boston. When the Civil War started, he had already served two years in the New England Guards and was commissioned first lieutenant in the 24th Massachusetts Volunteers. In 1867 Maj Amory married Miss Emily A. Ferriday of Concordia, La, who died in 1879. In 1881 he married Miss Lily Clapp of New Orleans, who, with their four children survives him.
The children are Charles B. Amory Jr, Mrs Charles E. Perkins of Burlington Ia; John Austin Amory and Rodger Amory.

  - Building began for the New Bedford Jewish Convalescent Home in November 1964 on the grounds of the Hawthorn Street estate of Edward D. Mandell. The first residents were admitted in March 1966. The New Bedford Jewish Convalescent Home has established a "tradition of excellence." In addition to regular services for Jewish seniors, the home offers Kosher meals for its residents as well as Kosher meals for the "Meals on Wheels" citywide program. Rubye Finger was the campaign coordinator of the Building Fund Campaign, responsible for this worthwhile project. She later served as Director of the home from 1971 to 1973. In 1966, the administrator was Mrs. Harvey Shanbrun. The first president was Melvyn A. Holland, assisted by vice presidents, Dr. Eli Nochimow and Dr. Irving Weinschel; Mrs. Harvey Kroudvird was recording secretary and Louis D. Finger was treasurer.

- "In September 1883, Olmsted designed the grounds of the Hawthorn Street estate of Edward D. Mandell, a director for Wamsutta Mills. These plans are in the Frederick Law Olmsted Historic Site, Brookline, Mass., Job #672, and correspondence documenting the project is in Library of Congress, Manuscript Division. In all, Olmsted's firm proposed or undertook six projects in New Bedford. Only two are coeval with the Howland Mill-the Mandell estate and a May 1893 contract for specifications for a driveway and walks for the Frederick Grinnell estate on County Street between Bedford and Orchard streets (Job #1381). Charles Eliot produced a landscape design for the extensive estate of New Bedford attorney James D. Ten years after their work for Mandell, Olmsted, Olmsted and Eliot returned to New Bedford and produced proposals, beginning in 1893, to build "certain drives, walks, masonry and and doing certain grading and cultivating on the estate of Frederick Grinnell, Esq. at New Bedford, Mass...With the passing of Joseph Grinnell, the first president of the Wamsutta Mills, the 1832 Greek Revival mansion on County Street was left to Frederick Grinnell. The estate, now fifty years old and marred by fire which destroyed the entrance portico, was in need of modernizing. - The second aspect of early Queen Anne architecture is the quasi-medieval manner influenced by John Ruskin. The Bayley House (1883-84, #N-7), possibly by Peabody & Stearns, exemplifies this mode. Queen Anne characteristics are the irregular mass and broken roof line. Ruskinian Gothic overtones include the polychromatic masonry in which bands of brownstone contrast with red pressed brick, and the half-timbered gables. Each of the ground-floor reception rooms was designed in the style of a different period. <http://pdfhost.focus.nps.gov/docs/NRHP/Text/64000285.pdf>
- In the early years of the twentieth century the Classical of McKim and the Gothic of Cram were the only dominant strands of many in Boston, which in a sense was beginning to look a whole to look like the Bayley House at 16 Fairmount Avenue in Newton, designed in 1883-1884. Each of the ground-floor reception rooms of the Bayley House was in a different period style and by 1920 the same could be said of Boston's buildings generally." p.195, Built in Boston: City and Suburb, 1800-2000 Douglass Shand-Tucci, Univ of Massachusetts Press, 1999 <http://books.google.com/books?id=pE-raWX3k8kC&pg=PA195&lpg=PA195&dq=bayley+newton+%2216+fairmount%22&source=bl&ots=s6-2IztxyQ&sig=gxLPqPpuJczgbp5O3GTNzGJzplL0&hl=en&sa=X&ei=HXR9UOf5C-bL0AGe6oDYBg&ved=0CCAQ6AEwAA#v=onepage&q=bayley&f=false>
- Bayley House was designed and built in 1883-84 by the Boston-based architectural firm of Peabody and Stearns, noted for its commercial and residential architecture in the late 19th century. The house—originally commissioned by James C. Bayley, a Boston shoe merchant who died within months after ground was broken in late 1883—was built of brick, freestone, red slate, and wood. Its main entrance is behind the porte-cochère on the tower side of the house. Bayley's widow, Martha R. Bayley, oversaw the completion of the house, but she and her young children never moved in. The first occupants of the house were the family of Cyrus Anderson, who lived there from 1884 to 1897. Subsequent owners were the Luther Adams family (wife Lizzie), from 1897 through approximately 1901. Adams was a wine merchant in Boston. Also residing with them were daughters Fanny M. and Mabel Adams. Luther Adams died in 1901 at age 68. The house was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Edgar P. Van Etten (President, Boston and Albany Railroad) in 1903. From approximately 1905 to approximately 1919, the home was owned by the Charles H. Breck family who formerly lived at 62 Bellevue Street in Newton. Breck was in the agricultural tools business at 51 North Market in Boston, known as Joseph Breck & Company (now called Breck's, founded by his grandfather Joseph Breck and his father, Charles H.B. Breck). Mrs. Charles H. Breck (Marion A.) was, in fact, a daughter of Luther Adams, a previous owner. Her sister Fanny also lived here. Other children included Charles H. Breck Jr. and Luther J. Breck. From 1919 to 1925, the home was owned by the John H. O'Brien family, O'Brien was in the wool business at 619 Atlantic Avenue, Boston; his wife was the former Emma M. Matthews. Their children included Byron H. O'Brien and Arnold N. O'Brien. (Arnold, a coal dealer, was born in Dorchester in 1906 and married Helen F. Priest in Keene, New Hampshire on June 10, 1933.) From 1931 through 1945, the home was used as the Damon Hall Junior College, run by Frank and Annie Damon. A private family (John Ronne, an attorney) lived in the home again from 1948 until approximately 1963. From 1964 through 1984, the home was owned by the religious order of Stigmatine Fathers, a Catholic religious congregation of priests and brothers. The order also owned the house next door at 36 Fairmont Avenue. The house is currently in use as a private residence, as it has been since approximately 1984.   - In 1894, Reverend Charles F. Russell brought the game of golf to Weston from England. Francis H. Hastings, J. Bertram Williams, and Robert Winsor joined him in creating the Weston Golf Club, one of the earliest American golfing organizations. From 1894 until 1916 the Golf Club was located on the west side of Church Street on land leased from Arthur L. Coburn and his neighbors.

Another of the original buyers was Arthur J. Russell, son of 1st Parish Church minister Charles Russell and architect with the Boston firm of Brainerd, Leeds and Russell. Russell purchased Lot B in April, 1900 and constructed the Shingle Style house, presumably of his own design, now numbered 20 Pigeon Hill Road (1900, MHC 569, Map #24). Russell also designed other houses in Weston including the mansion for cotton broker Brenton H. Dickson Jr. at 125 Highland Street at the corner of Love Lane, built about the same time.
Charles H. Stimpson purchased Lot G in March, 1901 and by the time of the 1908 Middlesex County atlas, they had built a house on the site, now 25 Pigeon Hill Road. It is not clear whether the present house at this location was built then or in 1920. The adjacent house at 29 Hill Top Road was built in 1935 for Stimpson's son, Charles Jr. and his wife Emily.

  - ROSALYN WEISMAN
Weisman-Rosalyn (Shuman) , age 88, died peacefully on June 6, 2010 at Newbridge On The Charles assisted living in Dedham, where she had resided for the past eight months. Wife of the late Dr. David Weisman and daughter of the late Frances and Harry Shuman. Loving mother of Linda and Edward Davis and Marcia Weisman. Beloved nana of Derek and Whitney Davis. Sister of the late Jacob and Franklin Shuman Rose was raised in Mattapan and graduated from Boston University. She met her husband on Nantasket Beach and the were married six months later. They moved to Hull where David had a dental office and Rosalyn stayed at home to raise her two daughters. In 1964 they moved to Newton and lived there until David died in 1973. She then moved to Chestnut Hill and began a career at Filenes in the Shoe Department where she worked for 18 years. She retired from Filenes and enjoyed her life traveling and spending time with her family and friends. She was famous for her baking and culinary skills which she loved to do and share with others. In her final months at Newbridge on the Charles Assisted living she made many friends and enjoyed her life despite declining health. She was given the best care and the family will be forever grateful to the staff at Newbridge for their love and kindness. Funeral services will be at the Brezniak-Rodman Chapel, 1251 Washington St. West Newton on Wednesday, June 9 at 1 PM. Memorial observance will be at the Davis residence, in Framingham on Wednesday until 9 pm and Thursday 2-4, 7-9 PM.

  - Summary, Kenrick Family Era, 1790-1872 The King's Handbook description of both properties, excerpted from a much longer narrative in the Handbook, is filled with some inaccuracies, but nevertheless describes an important transformation on Nonantum Hill in the mid to late nineteenth century. Started on open farmland in the 1790's, perched at the edge of a fine, emerging village of homes and businesses, the Kenrick Nurseries gradually transformed the western side of Nonantum Hill and Dale with exotic, imported fruit and ornamental trees. As the Nursery aged, and eventually ended, the trees that were left behind provided an attractive setting for the large estate suburb that developed here. Kenrick Park and its surrounding subdivision were filled with mature oaks, beeches and chestnuts - all species featured in the Kenrick Nursery catalogs. Alexander Wadsworth designed the subdivision of the William Kenrick Nursery to take best advantage of both the topography and the plant collections which remained. It is possible that the greenhouse complex at the Farlow estate may have been the remains of William Kenrick's nursery houses.

- # 4 The Shaws and the Shaw Estate

Any story of the Anginos must include their connection with the Shaws, an influential Boston Brahmin family. Crescenzo's employer, Robert Gould Shaw II, was a first cousin of Colonel Robert Gould Shaw, the famous Civil War commander of the 54th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry of African-American soldiers. Robert II's mother was Pauline Agassiz, daughter of the Harvard natural historian Jean Louis Agassiz. His father had made an estimated $30 million in cooper mining out West. In 1909 they bought the 245-acre Appleton estate on Nahanton Street for their son, a property the Appletons had formed from 14 separate parcels around 1872.

Robert set about developing his country estate, which he called Boulder Farm. By 1913, he had built an English style manor house, Shaw Hall. He also constructed an impressive stable for his polo ponies and developed polo fields where he put on frequent matches for his friends.

- "The new site was the 19th century estate of William Summer Appleton, which after the death of Appleton was acquired by Robert Gould Shaw and renamed "Boulder Farm." The old Appleton House is said to have been demolished in 1916. A new house, designed by Boston architect J. Lovell Little Jr., was built in 1912 by Shaw, and this building became Shaw Hall, the nucleus for the new Mount Ida campus. In 1956, a two story dormitory, designed by architect Albert C. Rugo of Milton, was added to Shaw Hall. Additional buildings, built in the 1950s and 1960s were also designed by Rugo." from "Shaw Hall", Historic Campus Architecture Project, <http://hcap.artstor.org/cgi-bin/library?a=d&d=p1191>

- By the way, I don't know if we can draw any connection between the former Grafton Golf Club, a private six hole (turn of the century to approximately WorldWar One) golf course on the Harry Worcester Smith estate, now Deering property in Millbury/Grafton, and your great grandfather Willie Ogg, but given his early involvement as golf professional with the Worcester Country Club and the design of the original, and still fondly remembered Green Hill Golf Course layout, it does merit some further research on my part. I've walked the Deering property extensively with Dick Dion of the Land Trust and we do know that the Harry Worcester Smith historical papers and archives, at least as they are related to his interest in fox hunting and horse events on that property, are in the National Trotter's Museum in Virginia.
<http://groups.yahoo.com/group/graftonma/message/569>
- In 1925 an informal group of Worcester businessmen and flying enthusiasts began to scout potential sites for an airport in Worcester County. But, as often happens when committees are involved, the plans stagnated. Finally, Whittin' Whittall grew impatient with the delays. He used his own money to hire engineers to survey possible sites. Inches Farm field in North Grafton came up at the top of the list. Whittall took out options to purchase the land, then drummed up excitement and support from Worcester businessmen. Within three weeks, the group had the funds to incorporate, and by October 3, 1927, two runways and two hangars were open for business. Whittall Field became Worcester's first airport. Whittin' Whittall succeeded not only in getting the airport built but also in spreading his excitement about flying. On October 12, 1927, the day the airport was dedicated, roads around the airport were jammed for miles. A huge crowd turned out to witness the opening ceremonies and flight demonstrations, including daring maneuvers performed by a female German pilot. A festival atmosphere prevailed, in spite of endless speeches by politicians and dignitaries.
For 18 years, Whittall Field was one of the busiest spots in Worcester County. Until 1945, the field hosted airplanes such as Jennies, Robins, Wacos, Fords, Stearmans, Cubs, and Taylorcraft; special charters brought visiting performers and dignitaries, and pioneers such as Wiley Post made stopovers on around-the-world flights. In the years leading up to World War II, the field was especially busy with the Civil Pilots Training program.

World War II brought major advances in aircraft design, and it became clear that the old farm fields would soon be too small for modern aircraft. On May 4, 1946, a new Worcester Airport was dedicated; commercial service to New York City began a week later. The old Whittall Field was sold for a housing development in 1951. <http://www.massmoments.org/moment.cfm?mid=286>

  - Brigham Hill Farm was established in 1975 on over 13 acres. the gardens are entered either through the granite slab driveway or down the bluestone walk. an herb garden near the kitchen includes boxwood hedges, water trough, and fountain. This garden is set off seasonally with potted herbs and flowers. A vegetable garden exists behind the house. The raised beds were made with Milford pink granite beds, which match the home's foundation. Just past the vegetable garden is a small space, Gertrude's Garden. A small fountain/bird bath and boxwood hedges surround a lawn. The perennial gardens consist of several island beds and borders . A circle of Malus "Sugar Tyme" crab apple trees is being trained to create a bower in the garden for a shady sitting area. The owners placed a small rustic arbor made from red cedar cut for the property. A moon garden is located in a corner with white-flowering and silver foliaged plants. The water/wild garden begins past the pool area with a series of ponds and waterfalls cut into the native granite outcropping that provide water for plant and animal life. A small semi-circular council ring allows a seating area. Other garden features include several cut flower beds, small fruit beds, a chicken house with green roof, and shrub borders. <http://siris-archives.si.edu/ipac20/ipac.jsp?uri=full=3100001~!270742!0#focus>

  - In 1955, the Rev. Edwin Grilley became rector. During his pastorate, a combination of unforeseen circumstances and the growth of the parish made it apparent that the church building required extensive reconstruction. A number of alternative solutions were suggested and discussed by members of the parish; however, it subsequently became clear that a new site was needed. God, in His infinite grace, created a unique set of circumstances and guided the parish in the solution of this problem by providing the opportunity for the church to purchase the former Plimpton estate property, consisting of 3.1 acres on Chapel Street, the location of our present church building.
The Plimpton family owned Plimpton Press, one of the largest book publishers in the country. We now have the honor and pleasure to have the Rev. Hollis Plimpton, a grandson of the Plimptons who owned the estate on which Grace Church is now situated, as our Priest Emeritus.
In early October of 1961, in a snow squall, the cornerstone of the present church building was laid. The building was dedicated on September 16, 1962 by the Rt. Rev. Anson Stokes, Jr., Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Massachusetts. <http://www.gracenor.org/history.html>

75 Waterside Avenue | Falmouth, Massachusetts

Located at 75 Waterside Avenue in Falmouth, Massachusetts, this elegant 3 building compound graces the Belvidere Plain section of Falmouth Village like a sparkling jewel. Situated near the end of Waterside Avenue, this home offers beautiful views of the entrance to Falmouth Harbor as well as view of Martha's Vineyard.

Waterside was the name of an early estate that was located here. at the bend of Shore Street and Surf Drive. Originally built for Hammond, it was later owned by Moses Gulesian, the first American American millionaire and the person who "saved" Old Ironsides An advertisement for Waterside in 1907 proclaimed it to be "an estate like no other in Falmouth". Catalpa House, as it is now known, continues in that same tradition.

The main house incorporates the original structure, from perhaps as early as the 1700s, into a new house with features and amenities of the most modern of homes. Designed by Greg Jones and built by CH Newton Builders, named one of the top 50 builders in the United States), the seamless blending of old and new is pure artistry. <http://www.nashuavideotours.com/virtualtours/sample/75waterside/mls.html>

  - February 15, 2011 - small non-hydro dam removal
Tuesday, February 15, 2011 From the dam removal department:
Picture a small dam stretching about 50 feet across a stream. The Gravesleigh Dam on Sackett Brook in Pittsfield, Massachusetts was built in the 1930s by Merle Dixon Graves, a native of Bowdoinham, Maine who served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives from 1921-1924 and who owned Gravesleigh, an estate surrounding the brook just above its confluence with the Housatonic River. Merle Graves had the dam built to create a small pond for his estate. Over the years, the pond filled with silt, and much of the Gravesleigh estate became Massachusetts Audubon Society's Canoe Meadows Wildlife Sanctuary.

  - Early New Plymouth and Plimoth Plantation
Thanks to the generosity of the Hornblower family, the museum acquired approximately 100 acres of land by Eel River in south Plymouth in 1956. The property was similar to the original site in three important ways. It was close to the ocean and next to a river. There was a hill, although not as steep as the original, overlooking the bay.

  - Telling the iconic story of Plymouth Colony was the fulfillment of a young archaeologist's boyhood dream. With help and support from friends, family and business associates, Henry Hornblower II started the Museum in 1947 as two English cottages and a fort on Plymouth's historic waterfront. Since then the Museum has grown to include Mayflower II (1957), the English Village (1959), the Wampanoag Homesite (1973), the Hornblower Visitor Center (1987), the Craft Center (1992) and the Maxwell and Nye Barns (1994). <http://www.plimoth.org/about-us>

  - Beale-Rice House
One of the City's grandest Federal residences, the Beale-Rice House is located at 181 Adams Street, Quincy MA. It was built in 1792 by Captain Benjamin Beale and was inherited by his grandson, George Washington Beale, and his granddaughters, the last being Caroline Miller Beale who died in 1906. It was bought in 1907 by Fred B. Rice, but following his death in 1933, the house was vacant until about 1946 when it was purchased by three women physicians. In 1973 the Beale-Rice House became part of the Adams National Historic Site and is no longer a private residence (information from Thomas Crane Library web site).   - Historical Narrative
Architectural Style: Queen Anne Revival
Builder: George McGerrigle
History: The house was constructed for Henry Belcher of Randolph, who owned the R.H. White Company, a Boston department store.
The property originally included extensive grounds, consisting of the main house lot, and the property of the present day Jasper Lane condominium complex. The latter lot includes the Carriage House off of Grove Street. The gardens laid out by Olmstead's firm consisted of naturalized plantings of rhododendron and other native shrubs planted amidst glacial boulders and rock outcrops, which feature was reflected in the foundation of the house and the stone wall surrounding the property.
By the 1920s, the house had a new owner, Marc B. Claff, founder and owner of Claff Box Company on West Street, a company that made wooden shoe boxes, and later branched into other types of containers and was a mainstay business in Randolph until it moved to Brockton around 1980. Mr. Claff was also one of the first Jewish residents of the town, and was also involved on sundry town committees, including the Coal Board during WWI. Some of the stained glass and other decorative elements may have been added by Mr. Claff in the 1920s.

  - In 1921, the course of study was lengthened from two to four years, and in 1932, Salem Normal School became Salem Teachers College. To accommodate the burgeoning enrollment, expansion continued and flourished in the mid-1950s with the addition of new programs and the construction of new buildings, including the administration building in 1959 and Meier Hall in 1964. Later that decade, a liberal arts program was added. The first residence halls opened in 1966. Renamed Salem State College in 1968, new programs in business administration and nursing led to the acquisition of South Campus, including the former Loring Estate, in 1972. The Salem State Series, which began in 1982 with former President Gerald R. Ford as its first guest, continues to bring renowned speakers to the university each year in a public forum. <http://www.salemstate.edu/about/history.php>

  - The Dexter Family
The internationally-known Charles Owen Dexter was the next owner of the land. He bought the property, then known as Shawme Farm, in 1921. Mr. Dexter was a successful textile manufacturer in New Bedford. With his uncle and cousin, he established the Beacon Manufacturing Company which became one of the largest manufacturers of cotton blankets in the United States. A true renaissance man, he was active in civic affairs as well as a photographer, violinist and yachtsman. At the age of 59, Mr. Dexter was told that he wouldn't have long to live which led him to purchase Shawme Farm. However, despite the warning, he lived for another 22 years. Beginning in 1921, Mr. Dexter and his wife spent summers at the farm and for the next 15 years he worked in his garden hybridizing plants. He started with vegetables and expanded his interests to rhododendrons.
Charles Owen Dexter
It was for the latter that he became well-known. Mr. Dexter employed a landscape architect, Paul Frost of Cambridge, to turn the wooded farm into a country estate. In 1935, he moved to the farm full-time and commuted to work every day.

- Joshua Montgomery Sears was a real estate investor. According to a September 19, 1877, Boston Globe article, he was “heir to the Sears estate in this city, reputed at $7,000,000 in value” and bought the house [12 Arlington St.] as a “bridegroom’s gift” costing $110,000 for Sarah Carlisle Choate, whom he married in September of 1877.
Sarah Choate Sears was a well-known and respected watercolorist and pictorialist photographer. The Sears also maintained a summer home, “Wolf Pen Farm,” in Southborough.
In 1893, they acquired 1 Commonwealth Avenue and combined the houses. The entrance to 1 Commonwealth Avenue was removed and the entire second story was remodeled into a music room.
J. Montgomery Sears died in June of 1905. Sarah Sears continued to live at 12 Arlington with her son, J. Montgomery (“Monty”) Sears, Jr., and daughter, Helen.

  - What is the address of the Prouty Mansion in Spencer MA?
Bit of a trick question in that there were two Prouty Mansions, one on Cherry Street which is still standing but a larger one that was build on 27 High Street in the late 1800's - it stood side by side with an identical mirror image mansion owned by another prominent Spencer family, the Hammonds. However the High Street Prouty Mansion burned down I believe in the early 1920s, leaving the Hammond mansion still standing at 25 High Street and which is often mistakenly believed to be the Prouty Masion. I know - I grew up there http://wiki.answers.com/Q/What\_is\_the\_address\_of\_the\_Prouty\_Mansion\_in\_Spencer\_MA

  - 36. James Duncan Phillips (1876-1954) and his wife, Nannie Borden Phillips (d. 1963), of Salem and Boston had summered in Topsfield at the new Pingree mansion on Hill Street for several summers before purchasing over 100 acres of farmland across the street. Here, at 120 Hill Street, they built their country seat in 1911 and 1912. Phillips descended from another prominent Salem family who also had made fortunes in the shipping business. An 1897 graduate of Harvard, he was a Vice President at Houghton Mifflin publishing company, and a renowned historian who wrote articles for the New England Quarterly and the Essex Institute's Historical Collections. While the Phillips retained residences in Salem and Boston, they developed Donibristle Farm as a model dairy farm and prominent rural retreat. They hired prominent Boston-based architectural firm, Putnam & Allen, to design their large summer mansion as well as other buildings on the 100-acre estate. Like the "gentleman farmers" before him, Phillips was a member of the Essex Agricultural Society and participated in the annual agricultural fairs. <http://www.topsfield-ma.gov/documents/historic/documents/FARMSANDRURALRETREATSLECTURE.doc>

  - The year 1928 was when Howard and Clare separated and from then on they never reconciled. In March, 1930 their divorce was finalized with Howard gaining custody of their daughter Jennifer. Later that year Clare passed away in a London nursing home and is buried in Richmond Cemetery just outside of London. After the separation from Clare in 1928, Howard focused on writing screen plays and did so for the next ten years. In 1931 just a year after Clare's death Howard remarried Leopoldine "Polly" Blaine Damrosch a New York socialite. Three children resulted from this marriage; Sidney born in 1933, Walter in 1935, and Margaret in 1938.
In 1936 he wrote a screen play for his 1934 theatre play Dodsworth. The play had a run of 278 performances and the screenplay was his most financially rewarding. His screen play writing later wins him an Academy Award for Arrowsmith in 1931 and another award in 1939 for Gone with the Wind. GWTW was up for 12 Academy Awards and walked away with 8 including awards for best actor, actress, and picture. Howard was at this time the highest paid screenwriter of his time in Hollywood and New York (White, Preface).

In 1935 he purchased a five hundred acre dairy farm in Tyringham, Massachusetts. Here he spent most of his time working the field, cattle and garden. Also during this year Howard was elected to be the President of the Dramatist Guild of the Author's League of America for a two year term (White, 31). In 1938, just a year before his tragic death, he became a co-founder of the Playwrights Company with Maxwell Anderson, Robert E. Sherwood, Elmer Rice, and S.N. Behrman. The Playwrights Company was an undeniable milestone in Broadway theater history (White, 33). On August 23, 1939 Sidney Howard died in a tractor machine accident on his farm. He was 48 years old. Nearly fourteen years later, on December 1, 1953 Madam, Will You Walk? opened in New York and ran for 42 performances. It was his last production. - Tyringham Cobble Reservation is located in the Town of Tyringham, in Berkshire County, Massachusetts. Long known simply as “The Cobble,” it is the centerpiece of Tyringham Valley, rising some 450 feet above the village. The main entrance to the property is from a parking lot off of Jerusalem Road and is located approximately .3 miles from the village center. This property is shown on U.S.G.S. Map Monterey, MA N42o 14’30” -W73 o 12’30”. The area marked “Cobble Hill,” roughly bordered on the northeast by Main Road and on the southeast by Jerusalem Road, and on its western edge by a natural gas pipeline is the location of the Reservation. Northeast boundary landmarks also include Hop Brook and to the south and west it is bounded by the Howard Farm and Fernside property and to the northwest by portions of Four Brooks Farm and land owned by the National Park Service for the protection of the Appalachian Trail corridor.

The Tyringham Cobble Committee was formed in 1935, antedating The Trustees’ acquisition of the property by twenty-eight years. The original “Cobblers” were Miss Martha L. Draper, Mrs. Bayard James, Dr. Walter W. Palmer, Mr. Edward Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Reber. Dr. Rustin McIntosh replaced Mrs. Reber about 1947 and soon after was elected chairman. The Committee remained in place when The Trustees acquired the property by gift in 1963. Dr. McIntosh relinquished the responsibilities of the chair in 1974 to Walter D. Howard who acted as Chairman until 1987. Thereafter Clinton Elliott served from 1987-1997, Robert Alsop from 1997-2000, Margaret Howard from 2000-2004 and David Lamb is the current chair.

7.3.1 Inventory of Adjacent Landowners

Abutting landowners to the Cobble are listed as follows:

  - “Our original Charles Bulfinch-designed clubhouse was built as a residence in 1808 and as Oakley's clubhouse became the focal point for all activities for 65 years. Shortly after the club was founded, a young golfer arrived from Scotland to redesign Oakley's golf course and to compete professionally in America. Donald Ross would grow from his initial employment at Oakley as a golf pro, to greenkeeper and club maker, to become one of the legendary golf course architects of the twentieth century. While any "Donald Ross" course is distinctive and distinguished, the uniqueness of Oakley Country Club's Golf Course is that it represents the very first Ross golf course design in America. In 1963, fire destroyed the magnificent original clubhouse; however, Oakley's membership responded quickly and constructed a clubhouse that served the membership well for over thirty years. Our newly constructed clubhouse was completed for our Centennial Celebration in 1998. The new clubhouse accommodates an expanding membership in an elegant style reminiscent of the turn of the twentieth century.” <http://www.oakleycountryclub.org/club/scripts/public/public.asp?GRP=20191&NS=PUBLIC>

Like his father, Henry was intensely interested in the aesthetic aspects of landscape gardening and estate development and sought to preserve the natural beauty of the rolling hills and woodlands of his property. The original 1888 purchase consisted of about 248 acres along Pond Road and East Central Street in Wellesley and Natick. Within ten years, however, Henry had increased his holdings to more than five hundred acres by systematically acquiring adjacent farms and woodlots." Hunnewell, of the firm Shaw & Hunnewell, whose office was in the same building. Mr. Hunnewell proposed to make a handsome place gradually out of a rough, rocky, and rather barren wooded tract in Wellesley. The house site was to be selected, the approach road laid out, all the lesser buildings and enclosures provided for, the gardens designed, the woods improved and new plantations made...The following letter, written after Charles had become a member of the Olmsted firm, and therefore signed Olmsted, Olmsted & Eliot, describes the garden which was ultimately made..." Charles Eliot, landscape architect, a lover of nature and of his kind, who trained himself for a new profession, practised it happily and through it wrought much good (1902)

  - By 1928, 129 Commonwealth was the home of banker Arnold Welles Hunnewell and his wife, Mary Copley (Amory) Hunnewell. In 1927, they had lived at 261 Commonwealth (it had been built by his parents and, in the 1920s, was the home of his unmarried brother and sister, Francis W. Hunnewell and Louisa Hunnewell). Arnold Hunnewell is shown as the owner of 129 Commonwealth on the 1928 and 1938 Bromley maps.
They continued to live at 129 Commonwealth until about 1933, when they moved to Natick. During the 1933-1934 winter season, it was the home of Frank Jenkins, an investment broker, and his wife, Frances Converse (Gould) Stearns Jenkins. Their primary residence was in Brookline. Living with them was Rose Gordon Stearns, Frances Jenkins's daughter by her previous marriage, to Richard Hall Stearns, son of the founder of the R. H. Stearns department store. Rose Stearns had been a debutante during the previous season and the Jenkinse probably leased 129 Commonwealth for her post-debutante season.

  - The Cottage
Across the street from Wellesley lies The Cottage, the second estate built by the Hunnewell family. Hunnewell chose the site for its proximity to Wellesley, revealing his desire to keep the family together. On July 25, 1870, he noted in his diary, "Commenced digging cellar. This is for the use of any of the members of the family who, it is hoped, may be tempted to occupy it." The Cottage served as a convenience, a temporary lodging for the Hunnewell children while they were building their own homes nearby. As such, it was key to the development of the District: without this “spare” house located so close to their own new construction, one or more of the children might have chosen to build elsewhere. From its construction in 1870 until Hunnewell’s death in 1902, many relatives took up residence on an interim basis. The original estate consisted of about six acres. Hunnewell employed a friend, the architect John Hubbard Sturgis, to build a Queen Anne-style home of stone, wood, and stucco. In 1923 when Hunnewell’s unmarried daughter, Louisa, took up permanent residence, she hired Henry V. Hubbard and Percival Gallagher of the Olmsted Brothers firm to redesign the entrance driveway and plantings and to add a naturalistic pool, new stone, brick, and stucco boundary walls along Washington Street, and various terraces and garden beds around the house and grounds.” “Private Pleasures Derived From Tradition The Hunnewell Estates Historic District” by Allyson M. - Sloat F. Hodgson

Biography
Sloat was born in Atlanta, Georgia on May 17, 1911. He was the fourth of seven children of Frederick Grady Hodgson and Mary Crocker Fassett. Although blessed with a high IQ, he was not a conventional student and found the requirements of college curricula to be not his "cup of tea." He spent one year at Princeton and then went to Rollins College where the fun and games were too tempting to pay enough attention to studies. While at Rollins he developed an erratic heart - later diagnosed as congenital malformation of the atrial valve. The valve was replaced with a pig valve when Sloat was in his seventies. In 1947 he married Nancy Weadock in West Falmouth and they had two children, Tom and Michele. The marriage ended in divorce in 1955 and in 1960, he married Ariel Camp Horton who had two grown children from a previous marriage. In 1951 he went to work for the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution as a Research Technician staying there until his retirement in 1973. His boss was Dr. Henry Stommel, whom Sloat considered the most brilliant man he ever knew. In the late 1950s Sloat spent three years in Bermuda recording sea temperatures of the currents around the islands. Sloat had his own lab and shop at WHOI where he repaired battered equipment from deep sea experiments and constructed many specialized pieces of equipment for recording sea temperature. Aside from his work, Sloat's great passions were small sailboating, reading, and golf. He considers his life work to be a book entitled Hog Island Racers, Chronicles of the Launch Boy which contains stories of small sailboat racing with frequent references to his attitude on life.

- Donations of conservation restrictions to protect land began to appear in Falmouth in the late 1970s. One of the earlier conservation restrictions preserves 12.8 acres at the end of Little Island Road in West Falmouth.

The spit of land is on Buzzards Bay at the entrance to West Falmouth Harbor. The restriction allows public access "on foot for purposes of fishing, hiking, and nature study from one hour before sunrise to one hour after sunset."

The trustees of the Little Island Trust, which owns the land, were well-known residents of West Falmouth—Jacob Fassett, Charles Jones and Sloat Hodgson. They donated the CR to the town in 1975.

Description of the Site: The original house was destroyed in the hurricane of 1944. It is likely that nothing remains from the original design. A bathhouse was constructed on the site and it is now a public beach. The only things of interest are the two white painted, clapboard posts at the entrance to the site.

- o "Early in 1742 Jacob Chamberlain of Newton purchased seventy-five acres of land on Salisbury Street from Richard Flagg. Chamberlain, deacon of the old first church on the commons and a selectman of Worcester, began the farm that remained in the family for over one hundred and sixty years. Known as the Chamberlain District, the property was home and work to four generations and twenty-nine children. The Chamberlains could claim ministers, a general, a sheriff and a founder of the Worcester Horticultural Society among their number.
For a few years the land was occupied by J. W. Bennett, a dairyman, and was purchased in 1914 by Lyman F. and Prue Louise Cox Gordon of Grafton. Mr. Gordon, a well-respected and successful businessman, considered one of Worcester's first citizens, had established with his partner Horace Wyman the Wyman Gordon Drop Forge Company. He commissioned E.J. Cross of Worcester and Little and Brown Architects of Boston to construct the house styled on the French manor of the 17th and 18th century. Mr. Lyman died during the house's construction.
In 1917 Lucius James and Laura McGinley Knowles of Worcester purchased the estate and increased the acreage to one hundred and twenty-two. Named Knollwood, the manor house and its cottages were considered the most beautiful residence in Worcester County. Crompton and Knowles Loom Company of which Mr. Knowles was president, was at that time the largest loom manufacturing corporation in the world. L. J. Knowles shared the heritage that made the Knowles family recognized not only for their business acumen but also for their contribution to the cultural and recreational life of Worcester County.
In 1928 the estate became the property of Theodore T. and Mary Griffin Ellis who used the manor to house their extensive art collection. Mr. Ellis was president of the New England Fibre Blanket Company and published the Worcester Telegram and Gazette. Upon the death of Mrs. Ellis in 1940 the property was parceled into lots and in 1950 at the request of Bishop John Wright the Sisters of Notre Dame bought a twelve-acre tract and established Notre Dame Academy as a college preparatory school for young women."

- “The newer homes east of Arch and Cedar, on the bluff overlooking Marquette Bay, mark the site of the John and Mary LONGYEAR MANSION, one of the largest and grandest houses in the Upper Midwest. It can now be seen in Brookline, Massachusetts, just outside Boston. It was a vast sandstone mansion in the round-arched, vigorous Romanesque Revival style, with landscaping designed after a site visit by no less than Frederick Law Olmstead, the father of the American parks movement. Longyear, from Lansing, started with surveying jobs and parlayed the influence of his father, a Congressman and judge, into a fortune of millions. As a landlooker, Longyear became familiar with Marquette mineral lands, then went on to make fortunes on the Gogebic and Mesabi iron ranges. "Longyear's shrewd ability to assess the region's mineral and timber resources and to deal with speculators, developers, and regulators aided his own transactions," writes Eckert. The Longyears planned to donate bluffside property near here as a memorial park for their dead son. Other civic leaders rejected the plan and opted to build a railroad along the lakeshore. Rebuffed, the Longyears dismantled the house under the architect's direction, shipped it off on 190 railroad cars - this oft-told story is always embellished with 190 railroad cars— and rebuilt it in Brookline. The rebuilt Longyear Mansion, after serving as a museum and archive for the Christian Science church headquarters, is now the clubhouse for an elite condominium project that adjoins it and respects its historic architecture.” http://hunts-upguide.com/marquette\_ridge\_and\_arch\_historic\_district.html

"Lovely," comments Judy Avery. "How nice of you to provide us with a chance to check out that barn none of us got last month." The house is known as "The Meadows," writes Michael Brueger, "built in 1936 on Geddes Road." It's also referred to as "The Manor at Concordia University," points out Karl Rose. "Or, Earhart Manor," writes Judi Taylor, noting that it was originally built for H.B. Earhart and family. Harry Boyd Earhart--president of the White Star Refining Corporation in Detroit--purchased the Botsford farm along the Huron River in 1917, according to the historic designation marker. His family lived in the farmhouse until the mid-thirties, when Earhart moved it to a neighboring property to make way for his French Manor retirement home. The Manor's "classic, simple proportions were enhanced with elegant details that included ... a Pewabic ceramic fountain," shares Louisa Griffes, citing Grace Shackman's 1997 Observer article. "What luxury!" exclaims Judi Taylor."

  - The Earhart Mansion
Published In: Ann Arbor Observer, June 1997, Author: Grace Shackman
"Not too many in Ann Arbor lived such a life," says Molly Hunter Dobson of her great-aunt and great-uncle, Carrie and Harry Boyd Earhart. The Earharts' 400-acre estate along the Huron River included a small golf course for "H. B." to practice his swing, forty acres of woods where he went horse-back riding, and formal gardens and a greenhouse where Carrie indulged her love of flowers. Today, most of the estate has disappeared, swallowed up by Concordia College and the Waldenwood subdivision. But the stone-walled mansion the Earharts built in 1936 still stands on Geddes Road near US-23. Newly renovated to serve as Concordia's administrative center, the man-sion and adjoining gardens will reopen with public dedications on June 16 and 22.

Born in 1870, H. B. Earhart made his fortune in the gasoline business. He was the Detroit agent for the White Star Refining Company, a faltering oil company based in Buffalo, New York. Earhart bought the company in 1911 and moved its headquarters to Michigan--just as the automobile industry was taking off. Under his direction, White Star grew into a major enterprise, with a chain of gas stations and its own refinery in Oklahoma. Earhart eventually sold out to Socony Vacuum, later Mobil.

Four years into his retirement, at age sixty-six, Earhart decided to replace the farmhouse where his family had lived since 1920. Earhart's correspondence with his landscape consultants, the famous Olmsted firm of New York, reveals that Carrie Earhart had doubts about the proj-ect. Though she eventually went along with her husband's desire for a big house, she insisted that it be functional rather than gaudy or ostentatious. Their extended fam-ily would use every inch of it, from the basement pool room to the attic theater.

The mansion was designed by Detroit architects Smith, Hinchman, and Grylls, with input from the Olmsted firm. Its classic, simple proportions were enhanced with elegant details that included a slate roof, copper eaves and detailing, and a Pewabic ceramic fountain. Outwardly traditional, the house incorporated the latest in modern technology. Beneath the limestone exterior (hand-chiseled to simulate age), its struc-ture was steel and concrete. It boasted what is believed to be the first residential air-conditioning unit outside of New York City, showers with ten heads, and vented closets with lights that went on when the door opened. There were bells every-where--Carrie Earhart never had to go more than ten feet to summon a servant.

  - The Three Lives of 1830 Washtenaw
Published In: Ann Arbor Observer, June 1989, Author: Grace Shackman
The stately and prestigious Women's City Club started as a simple farmhouse.
Scott moved into the house on Washtenaw in 1886, a few years after starting an orchard and nursery on what was then a thirty-acre plot just outside the city limits. He planted elm trees along his 1,000-foot Washtenaw frontage (from present-day Ferdon all the way to Austin) and named it "Elm Fruit Farm."
In 1915, after the city had annexed the area, Scott sold the bulk of his farmland to Charles Spooner. Spooner subdivided it into building lots and, in collaboration with architect Fiske Kimball, built the elegant homes that still grace the neighborhood. Reminders of the land's earlier owner can be found in the street names Scottwood and Austin (the name of Scott's father, brother, and son) and in a few ancient fruit trees, most of them pear, found in the neighborhood.

Two years after selling the land, Scott moved to a smaller house at 1930 Washtenaw, on the eastern edge of his property. He sold the big house and three acres of land to Dr. R. Bishop Canfield, a professor in the medical school who was returning to town after wartime duty in the U.S. Medical Corps.

Canfield hired architect Lewis J. Boynton to turn the forty-year-old farmhouse into something more suitable for its increasingly prestigious address. Boynton succeeded in transforming the simple box into an impressive house in the then fashionable Dutch colonial revival style. He replaced the old-fashioned wraparound porch with small extensions on each end of the house. Then he added a massive sloping roof that came down over the porches and allowed the attic windows to peek through as dormers. The finishing touch was a delicate front entrance porch with slender Ionic columns.

Canfield was one of the nation's leading specialists in ear, nose, and throat problems. He and his wife, Leila, a nurse from Colorado, had one child, a redheaded adopted daughter, Barbara. Alva Sink, a longtime member of the Women's City Club, knew the Canfield family well. For three of the years that she was a student at the U-M in the early 1920's, she ran a private school on their third floor, teaching Barbara and five other children of prominent families, including Jane Burton, daughter of the U-M president. Mrs. Sink remembers the Canfield house as "beautiful," and says that the interior "looked much as it does today." She recalls that Mrs. Canfield's help included a cook, maid, and yardman.

Canfield died in 1932, at age fifty-eight, when his car ran into a tree near the present site of Arborland. He was returning home after driving his wife and daughter and Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Furstenberg (he would later become dean of the medical school) to Detroit to catch a train to New York, where all but Mrs. Canfield were to sail for Europe. Mrs. Canfield hurried home as soon as she received news of her husband's death. Unfortunately, the Furstenbergs and Barbara had already sailed. Informed by ship's radio, they could do nothing but sail on to Gibraltar, where they boarded a ship returning to the U.S.

Mrs. Canfield continued to live in the house until her death almost twenty years later. When the house went on the market in 1950, a group of local women were looking for a location for a women's club. Up to then, many groups had met on campus, especially in the Women's League, but increased enrollment at the U-M after World War II made university space harder to obtain.

  - An Intimate look inside one of the oldest estates in Barton Hills
Jean Spero, granddaughter of former Detroit Edison president, Alex Dow (1862-1942), recently sent us several photographs of her childhood home in Ann Arbor. Known as "Brushwood," this country estate was one of the first homes to be built on the rolling slopes above Barton Dam, which eventually became Barton Hills. Local historian Grace Shackman covers the origins of this area in her article, "The Buried History of Barton Hills."
Spero's childhood memories color her personal tour of Brushwood. For example, here's one about the Brushwood Library, her grandfather's favorite hideaway:
"There were two walls filled with books, a special radio, a fireplace, two desks, one his and one for the secretaries who often came out for a week or so to work with him....they were very sweet and two became especially good friends of mine. As a teen when Grandfather wasn't there I would use that room to 'entertain' my friends by listening to the radio in front of a roaring fire...wonderful atmosphere. As a little one I read all I could get my hands on, including the Encyclopedia Britannica which was thoughtfully put on a lower shelf! The collection was very diverse, lots of folklore, philosophy or religious tomes of every sort of religion, history, plus, of course, current novels, etc. I have two of the books, Willa Cather's My Antonia and a huge coffee table-sized book on Scottish tartans...." (J. Spero)

  - The Buried History of Barton Hills
Published In: Ann Arbor Observer, June 2005; Author: Grace Shackman and Lois Kane
Ann Arbor's first suburb recalls the golden age of landscape architecture.
Barton Hills Village is a 140-home enclave set on rolling hills between the Huron River and Whitmore Lake Road. Ann Arbor's first suburb was a financial disaster for its developers, but a century after it was conceived, it remains a masterpiece of the landscaper's art. Designed by the Olmsted Brothers, whose father created New York's Central Park, it was carefully planned to preserve and emphasize the land's natural forms. Today, its winding lanes and thoughtfully sited homes recall a moment in American history when landscape architecture was an important cultural force.
Apparently, the area has always been recognized as special. In 1998 a builder working on a new home uncovered human remains at a site on Barton Shore Drive. He called the Washtenaw County sheriff's office, which called the U-M Museum of Anthropology. Archaeologist John O'Shea came to investigate. In a subsequent talk to Barton Hills residents, O'Shea recalled that he and his colleagues at first doubted whether the site was of archaeological interest: the remains seemed too fresh, and the bones seemed too long to be pre-historic. But further analysis of the bones, soil, and artifacts established that the first recorded person at the site of what is now Barton Hills was a tall, slim young woman who lived more than 1,000 years ago. She must have been something of an aristocrat, because when she died, she was buried in a stone-lined grave instead of being left exposed to birds, insects, and weather, the usual practice at the time. <http://aaobserver.aadl.org/aaobserver/18521>

- Ishpeming: Jasper Knob, Cliffs Cottage and vicinity

Jasper is a kind of dense, opaque quartz with crystals too small to be visible. Michigan jasper is a deep red. This huge outcrop, locally touted as "the world's largest gemstone," forms a dramatic knob with a good view on the southeast edge of Ishpeming. The stately wall around it makes it look like a public park.

Actually it's owned by Cleveland-Cliffs Iron, which does not encourage visitation because of liability. The public is allowed on the property, though footing is difficult here. From downtown, take Division/BR 28 east to Jasper St., turn south. The Knob is in one block.

Back down a little on Jasper at Bluff, the entrance gate to the Swiss-inspired 1891 Cliffs Cottage can be seen. CCI president William G. Mather built Cliffs Cottage as his summer home. CCI uses it to entertain employees and guests. It's not visible from the street.

- o “One of William G. Mather's earliest undertakings was construction of a cottage in Ishpeming, built on a hill overlooking the southeast side of the city near the soon-to-be abandoned Moro mine. Designed by local architects Charlton, Gilbert and Demar of Marquette and landscaped by Warren Manning, a nationally known landscape architect, the cottage became Mather's headquarters on his very frequent visits to the company's mining operations. With additions in 1903, the cottage came to be used increasingly for business purposes, including meetings between Mather and local mine managers and meetings of Cleveland-Cliffs' board of directors when the board visited the region.” p.84, Iron Will: Cleveland-Cliffs and the Mining of Iron Ore, 1847-2006, Professor Terry S Reynolds, Virginia Parker Dawson, Wayne State University Press, Mar 15, 2011

1853 - Guilford Graham Hartley is born in New Brunswick.
1883 - Guilford marries Caroline Woodward in Minneapolis.
1890 - Guilford Hartley purchases 80 acres of land straddling Woodland Ave. in Duluth, Minnesota. The land is cleared for commercial produce and dairy, and becomes the Smaller Allandale Farm.
1900-1911 - Hartley purchases another 700 acres, expanding both produce and dairy capacity, thereby becoming the largest private farm in Duluth (known now as the Greater Allandale Farm).
1913 - Hartley Road and Hartley Pond are constructed, the latter by a man-made dam on Tischer Creek.
1919 - A Farm House and Root Cellar are built at the base of Rock Knob, the remnants of which are some of the only traces of the farm left today.
1922 - Guilford Graham Hartley passes away.

Businessman-sailor Hazen James Burton built Chimo eight years after he helped found the Minnetonka Yacht Club in 1882...Hazen Burton also favored the ninety-acre property because the railroad ran below it and across the road, affording him easy transportation to downtown Minneapolis every day. Later his wife, Hazel Maisen Burton, called the station Deephaven, eventually the name of the surrounding community.

  - "In 1895, David and Jane Francis built their own 'great affair' in the West End, a magnificent grayish-white stone mansion. The principal architect, William S. Eames, had designed many of the handsome brick buildings that graced downtown St. Louis [great description of interiors]...The address was 4421 Maryland Avenue. Maryland was the street to the south, and there was a semi-circular, six-columned two-story portico on that side, but the entrance gates were on Newstead to the east. The main entry, at the top of a semi-circular drive, had a triangular pediment held up by four columns, very reminiscent, some said, of the White House -- or, for that matter, of the plantation houses of Francis' rich Kentucky cousins." p.87 Standing on a Volcano: The Life and Times of David Rowland Francis, Harper Barnes, Missouri History Museum, Oct 1, 2001 http://books.google.com/books?id=UJW-vNbk5zYC&pg=PA400&lpg=PA400&dq=%224421+maryland+ave%22+%22st+louis%22+%22david+francis%22&source=bl&ots=tiPSdN\_AN5&sig=-9GrnPfCy73tva0uXbu25fz6YRM&hl=en&sa=X&ei=NNr2UM3qPJKK0QHt2oGIBg&sqi=2&ved=0CC8Q6AEwAA#v=onepage&q=4421%20maryland&f=false

He and his father-in-law, William H. Waters, established the Walters-Pierce Oil Company (later controlled by Rockefeller’s Standard Oil Company). The H.C. Pierce Residence photo album has 56 identified photographs showing the exterior and furnished interior of the Henry Clay Pierce mansion at 40 Vandeventer Place in St. Louis. Albany, New York architects Fuller and Wheeler designed the home in a Richardson Romanesque Revival style popular in the 1880s. Construction on the mansion began in 1886 and took three years to complete. When it was finished the $850,000, 26- room mansion had 15 bedrooms, a third floor ballroom, stained glass windows designed by Louis Tiffany, a separate building to house its 22 servants, and a stable and carriage building. The home was said to have cost in excess of $800,000 when built for the oil magnate in the mid-1880s. Pierce fought a losing battle against Standard Oil for control of both the Mexican Fuel Company and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the early 1900s. - Bernard Corrigan was born in Quebec in 1847, and he moved to Kansas City in 1858. Corrigan built his fortune as a contractor, street railway magnate, and real estate speculator. He hired noted architect Louis S. Curtiss to design his grand estate at the corner of 55th Street and Ward Parkway. Corrigan's own firm served as the contractor for the project, and construction began on the home in 1912. The house was completed the following year, but Corrigan died suddenly in January 1913, only two months before he was scheduled to move into his new house. Corrigan's widow sold the property to Patrick J. White in 1914 for $101,370.86. White owned the property until 1917, when he sold it to Joseph J. Heim. Joseph J. Heim was originally from St. Louis, Missouri, where he learned the techniques of brewing. Heim came to Kansas City in 1884 where he began building his brewery empire. By 1901, the Heim Brewery in the East Bottoms had become the largest brewery in Kansas City, producing in excess of 140,000 barrels annually. Heim and his brothers also opened an amusement park near the brewery in 1899. The amusement park featured Heim beer piped in directly from the nearby brewery. Heim was also involved with numerous other business ventures including real estate, banking, street railways, and telephone companies. Heim lived in the Corrigan for only six and a half years. He sold the house when his wife died. Robert Sutherland acquired the home from Heim in 1923 for $90,000. Sutherland was a native of the state of Kansas, who moved to Kansas City at age sixteen and began working in a lumber yard. Sutherland began to acquire numerous lumber yards in the early 1900s, which brought him considerable fortune. Sutherland died in 1941, but his widow continued to own and reside in the Corrigan House.

- [red herring:] This marvelous brick and stone home was built in 1895 by J.J. Heim, the oldest of the three Heim brothers that owned and operated the Heim brewery in the East Bottoms. Like many of the Victorian era homes in this neighborhood it is on the Historic Registry and harkens back to a day when horse drawn carriages were the main mode of transportation, the servants had their own staircase, and people gathered in the conservatory after dinner to listen to the piano.   - Hermann V. von Holst (1874-1955) was an American architect practicing in Chicago, Illinois and Boca Raton, Florida, from the 1890s through the 1940s, best remembered for agreeing to take on the responsibility of heading up Frank Lloyd Wright’s architectural practice when Wright went off to Europe with Mamah Cheney in 1909. Von Holst was born in Freiburg, Germany on June 17, 1874,[1] the son of the eminent historian Hermann Eduard von Holst and Hoboken, New Jersey, native Annie Isabelle Hatt who were married on April 23, 1872, in New York City.[2] The von Holsts lived in Germany with visits to the United States until they emigrated from Germany to Chicago in 1891, where von Holst, Sr., became head of the department of history at the University of Chicago.

Architectural work – partial listing: The Glamis Summer Country Estate of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Macbeth, Bethlehem, NH - 1904-5 - Summer Cottages in the White Mountains by Bryant Franklin Tolles, 2000, page 128 http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hermann\_V.\_von\_Holst

- "Few if any visitors (including students of architectural design) to Bethlehem today are aware of "The Glamis", perhaps the single most significant example of summer country estate architecture in northern New Hampshire. This is hardly surprising, for to locate it is an exercise in detective work. If one proceeds to the west end of town on Main Street, and follows Prospect Road to the north, within a mile on the left side, one will notice a long fieldstone wall, with two openings, through which nearly overgrown narrow gravel roads plunge into heavy mixed forest growth. At the end of the wall, on the same side of Prospect Road, is another road, leading to a white farmhouse and outbuildings, one of which, built of fieldstone masonry, appears to have been a former horse barn and automobile garage. Passing up the road on the left of this building, one cannot but be struck by the patterned placement and variety of the trees and shrubs, suggesting a formal landscaping scheme of many years past. Moving farther along the road, through heavy undergrowth and long grass, suddenly one sees the shape of a large house, looming up against a backdrop of tall hardwoods. As one draws closer, it is clear that the building had been abandoned, for there is no evidence of life, though efforts have been made to maintain the exterior in stable, weatherproof condition. Its long, strongly horizontal lines, accentuated by expansive overhanging, flared hipped roofs over the main central block and wings, are still impressive. Stylistically, the house combines the shapes, materials and elements of the Shingle style of the coastal Northeast, with the Prairie style of the Midwest. The mark of a professional architect is evident...George Macbeth's first contacts with the White Mountains and Bethlehem were through his sister Frances, the wife of John Jacob Glessner, the Chicago businessman who initiated development of the neighboring estate "The Rocks," in the mid-1880s. Over the next two decades. Macbeth and his wife, Kate, often visited there in summer. Finally in 1904, convinced of the virtues and benefits of the area, they acquired the former Noyes farm on what was then called Cherry Valley Road and began the planning of their own country house, outbuildings and grounds." pp.129-131, Summer Cottages in the White Mountains: the Architecture of Leisure and Recreation, 1870 to 1930, Bryant Franklin Tolles, University Press of New England, 2000

- "Another significant commission for von Holst was the summer home known as Glamis, built for Frances Glessner's brother George Macbeth of Pittsburgh (shown [below]). Located adjacent to the Glessners' summer estate in Bethlehem, New Hampshire, the sprawling residence featured eleven bedrooms and combined the shingle style of the northeast with the Prairie style of the Midwest. Bryant Tolles, in his book Summer Cottages in the White Mountains, praises the house as "one shining example of von Holst's abilities" and goes so far as to declare it the most significant example of summer country estate architecture in northern New Hampshire."

  - "Glessner, his wife Frances, and their children George and Fanny began visiting New Hampshire's North Country in 1878, seeking refuge in the clean mountain air for George's hay fever during the summer months. In 1882 Glessner purchased a 100-acre farm from Oren Streeter for $2,300. He had the Big House, the family's summer residence, constructed in the Queen Anne Style of architecture in 1883. Designed by Isaac Elwood Scott, the 19-room mansion was situated high on a hill, with spectacular views of the White Mountains. Over the years, the Glessners constructed various buildings, built elaborate gardens (including a formal garden designed by Frederick Law Olmsted's company), and added land to their Rocks Estate. "

  - National Register of Historic Places Inventory—Nomination Form for The Rocks "The gardens at The Rocks played a crucial role in the sustenance and aesthetics of the estate. Gardeners produced most of the vegetables eaten by a family and staff numbering over thirty, taking orders each day from the kitchen. The ritual of flower arranging was an integral part of the Glessner's life at The Rocks. John G. Lee, John Glessner's grandson, recalled, that each morning the gardener brought in a huge basket of flowers. My mother [Frances G. Lee] spent an hour or more arranging them. There was a great collection of vases and other ornaments resting on a foot-wide shelf that went all around the living rooms of the house. It covered the top of the fieldstone base." <http://pdfhost.focus.nps.gov/docs/NRHP/Text/84003197.pdf>

Provenance: Dr. and Mrs. Egil Boeckmann, St. Paul, Minnesota, supplied by Charles R. Yandell & Co., 7 West 45th Street, New York in 1916 for $275. Thence by descent to Gertrude Boeckmann Ffolliott and acquired from her estate.
Lot Notes: The screen was supplied to Dr. and Mrs. Egil Boeckmann in 1916 by Charles R. Vandell & Co. of New York, 'manufacturers of solid leather screens and wall hangings' where it was described as 'one three fold leather screen-bordered design Chinese in character - made expressly to order special height and width.' The Boeckmanns employed the architect David Adler in the 1920s to build their elegant St. Paul home as well as their country estate on White Bear Lake which he later expanded over the years. Mrs. Boeckmann, who was the key decision-maker on such projects, was the daughter of railway magnate, James J. Hill (David Adler, Architect: The Elements of Style, Chicago, 2002, pp. 125-126). Even with Adler's involvement, Mrs. Boeckmann continued to make various purchases herself. Her homes were furnished with eighteenth century objects as well as contemporary pieces in the period style.

DELLWOOD — Twenty-five years ago Ron Peltier approached Peter and Gertrude Ffolliott to buy the property Gertrude's grandfather had given her mother, Rachel Boeckmann. Her grandfather was railroad baron James J. Hill, who owned massive tracts of undeveloped land in Dellwood and what is now North Oaks. The Ffollietts said no.
When Peter died in 2010 at the age of 97, five years after Gertrude, or "Tudie," as he called her, the 188-acre estate went into a trust. Last November, Peltier bought the property of his dreams.
It features a 28-acre lake, virgin timber, a 100-year-old mansion that served as the Ffollietts' country house, and something new: grapevines.

Ron and his wife Arlie are planting a vineyard on the farm, which adjoins the third and fourth holes of the White Bear Yacht Club. Why a vineyard? "Why not?" Peltier replied. "I have this beautiful land with key ingredients for a destination winery."

The Peltiers plan to spend the next few years restoring the century-old mansion and at least two of the other four living quarters on the estate. Few people have seen the house. It was built by noted architect of the time, David Adler, and is not visible from any direction. Locked iron gates along Highway 96 are the only clue a private residence is even there

...

Mansion dates pre-WWI

St. Paul archivist Eileen McCormack was hired by Peter Ffolliott after Gertrude died to help organize the family's papers and photographs.

She is an expert on James J. Hill history, having worked in the reference library named after the man known as the "Empire Builder." Gertrude Boeckmann Ffolliott was Hill's last surviving granddaughter. McCormack wasn't exactly sure when Gertrude's parents built the Dellwood mansion, but it was before the great flu pandemic of 1918. She knows because Gertrude's father, Egil Boeckmann, an Army doctor, wrote letters home from World War I warning his wife to stay at the country house instead of going back to their home on Summit Avenue.

As objects were archived, many were given to the Hill Library in St. Paul. The family was extremely generous, McCormack said. One example of their philanthropy was the Kashmir sapphire.

McCormack said Gertrude left instructions in her will to donate the sapphire to Friends of the James J. Hill House, administered by the Minnesota Historical Society. The 22.66-carat gem was given to Gertrude's grandmother, Mary Hill, by her husband in 1886. The society sold it at auction for a whopping $3 million. "It ended up being worth much more than anyone thought," she added.

Only one of the Ffolliott's five children lives in Minnesota and no one wanted the house. But it is quite "glorious," McCormack said. "The interior was marvelous and filled with beautiful early American furniture. I'm so happy it's not getting torn down and someone will live in it again."

  - This photographic collection is from the years 1908-1912. It primarily chronicles the Lesh family in Newton Center, Massachusetts, and at a location in New Hampshire. The Thornwell Jacobs family lived in Clinton, South Carolina after the wedding, eventually moving to Nashville, Tennessee in 1905, and then to Atlanta, Georgia in 1909.

Most of the photos appear to be taken by Maude because we believe she appears in only a couple. It's likely that she took her young children north for the summer as her husband Thornwell was a very busy man. There is only one photograph in the entire lot that appears to be of Thornwell, but we cannot say for sure. The album was discovered in Massachusetts, and it was either something that Maude put together around 1913 for her family, or was bequeathed to someone upon her death.

Thornwell and Maude's oldest son John appears in many of the photographs, which show the life and times of a wealthy family in New England at the turn of the century. Horses, tennis courts, estate homes, Dartmouth college, winter sports, visits to the beach, a trip to Atlantic City, family and friends are just some of the subjects of the images.

One of the photos is identified as being Canaan St., and using Google Street View we have determined that the house the Lesh Kistler Jacobs families stayed in is just south of what was once known as the Lucerne Inn on Canaan Street in Enfield, New Hampshire. All the houses pictured in the New Hampshire photos still stand. Most of the New Hampshire photos were taken at or near this location on Canaan Street. There is a lake in New Hampshire which is referred to as Crystal Lake, not to be confused with the Crystal Lake in Newton, Massachusetts. The New Hampshire lake is known today as Canaan Street Lake, and in the past was referred to as Crystal Lake, Hart's Pond, or Heart Pond.

It was a special, prosperous time with little suggestion of the changes to come. In Claremont, N.H., Frank Maynard, an affluent industrialist, completed his summer home, an 18-room mansion with porches all around, acres of lawn, and of course, a gazebo. To spend a summer at this lavish dwelling would be to relax in the elegant surroundings reserved for the elite.

[showing NH Historical Society on Main St., east side, between Washington and Chapel Streets]
- NH Historical Society building is a temple of history
By Sue Hertz, in New Hampshire Home
To best understand how such a temple came to Concord is to understand the forces that created the building. First there was Todd, who jumpstarted the fundraising by donating $5,000. When he realized that the society's ever-expanding "cabinet of curiosities" would soon overwhelm a mere addition, he began lobbying for a new building. Massive funds were needed, and so he turned to a second force, Edward Tuck.
First, they hired architect Guy Lowell, who had designed buildings for Brown, Harvard and Phillips Andover Academy, and was just finishing the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. Not one to rest on his laurels, Lowell plotted to create "the like of which does not exist in the United States." The building would be Greek in spirit, he said, but not archaic. He defined its purpose as "a library in character an athenaeum in fact" and that it would also express "the dignity of a home for art and a meeting place for lectures and research."
Second, when Lowell submitted his drawings, Tuck and his wife Julia realized the lot the society had purchased was too small.
How much to purchase the brick building on the adjacent lot? asked Julia.
More than the society had, Kimball said.
So the Tucks bought it, and some other adjoining lots, too.

Third, only the best materials would be used. The exterior would be granite, not brick. The interior would be marble, not concrete.

- 42.91073,-72.066772 03560 Jencks, Francis M. Dublin New Hampshire 2 1908
  - A substantial five-part, 2-story, Georgian Revival house with hipped roof and wide projecting eaves. The windows are 6/6 and 12/12 throughout, and the walls covered by horizontal board siding (like the Upham-Young house, #107, also by C.A. Platt) with simple pilasters and dentil cornice. Sited near the summit of Beech Hill (elevation about 1900 ft.) the house is both a prominent landmark from the eastern approaches to Dublin and commands magnificent views of the surrounding countryside. (New flat-roofed 2-story addition with vertical casements at south end.)
Designed and built in 1902-03 by the distinguished American architect Charles A. Platt (1861-1933) as a summer residence for his sister and brother-in-law Mr. & Mrs. Francis M. Jencks of Baltimore. Bought by Mr. & Mrs. Grosvenor Backus (she was the artist Josepha Backus) c.1920. Since 1949 guest house of Beech Hill Foundation alcoholic rehabilitation center.

- The 36-bed hospital, built by Hiram Hitchcock in memory of his wife Mary, opened in 1893. Linked closely with Dartmouth Medical School, which was founded in 1797, Mary Hitchcock Memorial Hospital has always served as a teaching facility for medical school students and as a training ground for interns and residents.

- In 1985, leaders of Mary Hitchcock Memorial Hospital decided it was time to move the hospital from its location adjacent to Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H., to a larger campus in Lebanon, just south of Hanover. Six years later, the move occurred, leaving empty the buildings that had been home to the hospital since its founding in 1893. And on the morning of September 9, 1995, a crowd gathered to watch the planned destruction of the old hospital to make way for new Dartmouth College facilities.

- Notes for JOSEPH CUTTER:

Joseph and Rachel Cutter had six sons and three daughters. Five of the sons raised large families. One had eight children, two of them had nine, and two had ten children. The five sons settled in Jaffrey, New Hampshire. Nehemia Cutter one of the six sons married three times, without issue. Nehemia was a physician in Pepperell, Massachusetts and died 15 Mar 1859.

Joseph Cutter was a farmer by vocation, and an executor of his father's will in 1771. Not long after his father's death, he removed from new Ipswich to Jaffrey, where the cellar of his dwelling, near the spacious mansion of his son Joseph Cutter, is still to be seen. During the first year of the revolutionary contest he was once in active service with the provincial forces before Boston, for which duty he was honored with a pension from the government.

He was of medium height, rather stout in body, and quick and agile in his movements. He was forcible in expression, and a man of few words. He held a captaincy in the State militia, and received a commission of Justice of the Peace, but never served the office, being disqualified by a very limited education.

His wife, Rachel, was amiable and industrious, and possessed an excellent judgment. She had a particular fondness for family antiquities.

He removed with his father, first to Waltham, second to Shrewsbury, and thence to New Ipswich. He came to Jaffrey probably as early as 1773, and settled on lot 17, range 3, now (1928) owned by Martin P.

Garfield. He soon after sold this place to Joseph Bates and took up land on the foothills of Monadnock where, near the site of his dwelling, the spacious mansion now known as the Ark remains a monument to his descendents. He was a Revolutionary soldier.

By his industry and shrewdness he acquired a competence and became the largest landed proprietor in town. He gave a farm to each of his sons; and after disposing of much of his real estate, lived near the Meeting House in Jaffrey Centre Village in the house where his brother Benjamin had previously kept tavern, now owned by Endicott Marean.

Notes for BENJAMIN CUTTER:

The Cutter brothers were perfect types of New England manhood, poor, independent, industrious, ambitious. But while capable of hard work and self-denial in order to succeed, they would never lend themselves to sharp dealing in any shape. They were scrupulously honest and kind in their business transactions, always keeping within the spirit as well as the letter of the law.

There were three of them, Moses, Orlando, and Abilene Davis Cutter, who came here at an early day. They were the sons of Benjamin and Catherine Farnsworth Cutter of Alstead and Jeffrey, N. H. There were other sons and daughters who remained east.

Meanwhile, Moses Cutter, the eldest son, either remaining in Vermont or returning there, married and started a country store in Royalton.

At the age of twelve Orlando went to live with this brother, who sent him to school for three years, then paid him $4.00 a month and board for his services in the store, and the following year doubled his wages. Orlando was now eighteen years of age, and he went to Boston and clerked for the next three years for a dry-goods merchant. The estimation in which he was held for industry and honesty by his employer can be judged by the fact that when he concluded to seek his fortune in the far west, this man loaned him four hundred dollars for that purpose.

Detroit was his objective point, but after reaching that place he formed a business partnership with a Detroit firm and came to Cleveland to start a branch store. There were but three stores established here at that time, October, 1818, and there seemed to be business enough for more, on account of rapidly increasing trade between this port and the large farming district south of it.

But within a year his (Detroit) partners failed, leaving him responsible for debts that took ten years to liquidate. He paid them all and established himself on a firm basis, "without assistance from any one, not even to the amount of a dime."

He also introduced an auction business which for many years was a valuable asset to the city. This he turned over, eventually, to his sons and spent his declining years in caring for estates intrusted to his keeping.

Two years after his arrival in Cleveland, at the age of twenty-three, Orlando Cutter married Phyllis Phelps of Willoughby, O., daughter of Seth and Sarah Pierce Phelps, formerly of Aurora, N. Y.

She lived nine years afterward, and was the mother of three children, two of whom reached maturity.

He was a man of great energy and enterprise, always looking for larger opportunities, which led to frequent changes of residence. He lived in New Hampshire, Vermont, and Canada, and his pursuits were as various as his places of residence. Previous to 1781 he came from New Ipswich to Jaffrey, and lived first on lot 17 range 1, near the Dublin line, after him the homestead of Benjamin Frost and his son John. The place is now abandoned. About 1782 he removed to Alstead, New Hampshire where five of his children were born. Two or three years later he returned to Jaffrey, where he kept a tavern near the Meeting-house, later the home and tavern of his brother Joseph. Here he apparently did a thriving business and was so cramped for room that he sought and obtained from the town permission to move the Meeting-house because it interfered with the approach to his tavern. He was granted permission to move it at his own expense westward into line with the east end of the horse sheds. A change of plans doubtless prevented him from carrying out his purpose. The place, now the summer residence of Endicott Marean, was described by Judge Parker in his Centennial Address as "a large pile of buildings of which only the main dwelling house now remains". As shown by a survey of the property preserved in the records of the town the buildings in his day occupied the entire space from the house now standing to the cemetery wall. He was a Revolutionary soldier. In 1798 or 1799 he returned to Alstead, thence to Woodstock, Vermont and from there to LaChute, Quebec, Canada, where he died February 7, 1820.

J.R. Whipple grew up on a New Boston farm. He became a successful hotelier in Boston, Massachusetts, but always maintained a connection to New Boston. He supplied his Boston hotels (the Parker House, Young's Hotel and the Hotel Touraine) from his 2,500-acre New Boston farm, established in 1881. In 1893 he built the railroad line between New Boston and Parker Station in Goffstown so that he could ship produce to Boston more easily.

In 1928 The garden was completed (designed and planted by Olmsted Brothers Landscape Architects) and a garden club was formed. Over the years the garden deteriorated, due to the depression, "38 hurricane, and WWII. In 1960 a partial restoration was done. In 2002 a fund raising began and the garden since has been restored as closely as possible to the 1928 plan. Images from the Historical Society have just been added.

- welcome to colby farm

From I-89 North: Take exit 11, Route 11 East toward Andover/New London (that is, at the end of the ramp, turn right onto Route 11). About 1 mile along this road, there is a 4-way intersection with a blinking yellow light. At this light, turn left onto Main Street. A half-mile later, you will pass Our Lady of Fatima Catholic Church on the left. After the church, the fourth house on the right is known as Appletree Cottage. The driveway to Colby Farm is just past this cottage's driveway and BEFORE the black mailbox marked #619 Colby Farm and the fire hydrant. Turn right into the winding driveway, drive behind the Curtis L. Ivey Science Center, and between the low stone walls into the garage area of Colby Farm.

  - This traditional farm in Tamworth, New Hampshire might be the last place you might expect to find a bowling alley but it has one and it's decorated with animal heads too. Great Hill Farm is a private estate on nearly 72 acres which include hayfields and pastures, woodlands, expansive lawns and even a private pond with a sandy beach. The land includes an original two-story home which was constructed in 1785 and added to over the years for a total of seven bedrooms and 5,453 square feet of space. There is also a circa 1910 recreation/hunting lodge with a huge fieldstone fireplace, game room, loft and the bowling alley.

  - History of Mountain View Grand

On a rainy night in 1865, a stagecoach en route from Boston to Montreal hit a large mud hole and overturned on a back road in the small township of Whitefield, N.H. Two passengers climbed out and were told by the driver to follow the dirt road a half-mile until they reached a farmhouse. Despite the late hour, the travelers were welcomed at the home of William and Mary Jane Dodge, thus beginning a long tradition of Mountain View hospitality.

They awoke early the next morning to the smell of a home-cooked breakfast. After their meal, they wandered out onto the porch where they were quickly captivated by the breathtaking views of the Presidential Mountain Range, a glorious series of 4,000-foot peaks in the White Mountains. Impressed by the hospitality of the Dodges and the beautiful surroundings, the guests insisted their hosts permit them to stay a few days longer. The following summer the accidental guests returned for a sojourn of several weeks, inspiring the Dodges to add the first of many additions to come and to begin a small boarding establishment they called the Mountain View House.

  - 11. Spaulding-Bottomley House, "Balmoral", 58 Ocean Boulevard (or 5 Willow Avenue), 1930-2. Contributing building.

The Spaulding House is an impressive brick Colonial Revival dwelling which is set on a large lot extending from Ocean Boulevard to Willow Avenue. Completed in 1932, the two-story dwelling is capped by a slate hip roof with two large paneled brick chimneys and a modillion cornice. The house is oriented with its narrow four-bay end facing the ocean and its main facade, seven bays wide, oriented northward. The center entrance has a paneled door which is capped by a transom and crowned by an iron railing above. Windows primarily consist of 6/6 sash, framed by blinds, while arched dormers punctuate the north and west roof slopes. Projecting from the ivy-covered south elevation is a single-story glazed porch lit by continuous 6/6 windows framed by pilasters. This brick Colonial Revival dwelling was constructed in 1930-2 for Huntley N. Spaulding, who served as Governor of New Hampshire from 1927-1928. The land was once part of the property of Franklin Pierce and the house which was formerly on the site was moved to 788 High Street in Hampton by a Col. Ashworth. After Gov. Spaulding's death in 1955, the Spaulding property was acquired by Alvan T. Fuller in 1956. It is presently owned by Gov. Fuller's daughter, Lydia Bottomley, widow of Dr. George Bottomley." Several of the homes along Park Avenue served as living quarters for "the help" of the estate. One of the Kinney daughters married William Campbell Clark of the Clark Thread Company. The Clarks took over the estate from the Kinneys and lived there until the 1940s. The name of the estate was "The Oaks" in recognition of the many native oak trees in the area. It was from this that the name "Oakhurst" evolved.

 Across Park Avenue on the north side of the street, another Kinney daughter built her family vacation home. A thirty five room mansion and exquisite gardens were the central features of the Frelinghuysen Estate." p.52, An Historic Perspective of the Township of Ocean (1974)

In 1927 Mr. Dodge's wife, Geraldine Rockefeller Dodge, held the first Morris and Essex Dog Show at Hartley Farms. This, the largest dog show in the world, would continue to be held on the estate annually for the next 30 years.

[showing property of Lippman]
- 25. Van Beuren Road - Crestley, Block 5, Lot 4 Contributing site, 1921-22 with additions ca. 1960
The main estate house at Crestley is a French-inspired Eclectic Revival house designed by Boston architect Walter P. Henderson, and built in 1921-22 for Mr. and Mrs. Aurthur Marsters. It is notable for its exceptionally high quality detailing. The hipped-roof house is covered with thick slate, and features casement and mufti-paned sash windows, brick walls with low-arched window openings, and limestone trim around the wing to the rear.
Setting / Outbuildings: This secluded brick house is perched on the side of a steep hill, and it looks west over the upper valley of the Pine Brook. The stone gateposts at the end of the long (1/2 mile) driveway leading up to the house bear a metal plaque with the name Crestley cast into it. The landscaped grounds were designed by the firm of Frederick Olmsted, and include a small golf course and a tree-lined driveway. Near Van Beuren Road stands a tenant house and two barn/garages. The tenant house is a 1 1/2 story frame East Jersey Cottage type vernacular dwelling, with gable roof which extends to form an integral front porch across the facade. The five-bay, center-entry house appears on local maps between 1853 and 1868, when it was the property of A. Sayre. It is believed to have been built in 1798 as the home of Peter Birmingham. It was extensively restored in 1922, as part of the creation of the Marster's estate, and it has recently been restored again. Behind the tenant house is a large, stucco-covered gambrel-roofed barn cupola on top. The small, high banked windows indicate that this was built ,as a dairy barn, probably in the early 20th century when this tract was part of the F. L. Lippman farm. Behind the barn is a long, low single-story garage, with stucco walls and five bays of paired, sidehinged doors with panels below small, high windows.
Significance: The small farmhouse now serving as the gate house is the evidence of the property's earliest use, as a family farm belonging to the Birmingham and Sayre families. The transition from family farm (Sayres) to specialized dairy farming in the early 20th century (Lippman family) to estate (Marsters) paralleled the general development of much of southern Morris County between 1850 and 1920. Frances

Lippman operated a dairy farm between 1887 and 1920, and the large barns the property are testimony to the extent of the operation. The land was purchased for an estate by Mrs. and Mrs. Arthur Marsters in 1921. He was Secretary of American Telephone and Telegraph, and she was the niece and adopted daughter of Alfred Vail, who built AT&T into a 20th century corporate giant. They named their secluded French manor house "Sundown" for its westerly views across the fields and woods of the Frelinghuysen property and upper valley of the Pine Brook. The estate was renamed "Crestley" in 1959 when it was purchased by Ann and Lewis Kirby. Silver Lake Historic District NRHP Nomination Form

  - 30. Off Van Beuren Road - Seth Thomas Estate Contributing building, Block 4, Lot 14
Seth Thomas, Jr., a member of the famous clock-making family, had this Colonial Revival style house built in 1918 to plans by Harrie T. Lindeberg, a prominent architect of country houses. The main block of the house is rubblestone with brick quoins, gables and window surrounds. The tall, 2-1/2 story structure has a gable roof punctuated by pedimented gables and tall end brick chimneys. The front door frame is limestone with a carved surround of oak leaves and acorns, a symbol of longevity and a reference to the grove of oak trees nearby. The second floor center bay of the five-bay facade is a projecting oriel window. A two-story wing extends from the southeast gable of the house; a single story covered walkway leads from there to a small rubblestone outbuilding, and creates an "L" plan courtyard in front of the house. A raised flagstone terrace on the rear (south) side of the house is reached by French doors. Setting / Outbuildings: The house is set well back from the road in the center of a levellawn, with oak trees in the front yard. The original estate has been subdivided into smaller building lots, so that the Seth Thomas house is now on a flag lot, surrounded by newer houses, although careful landscaping obscures most of these houses from view. The original barn/stable complex for the Thomas estate lies to the east, outside the historic district boundaries. The stable was extensively remodeled to a residence in the 1960s, removing most historic fabric and architectural integrity.
Significance: The Seth Thomas house is a fine example of New York architect Harrie Lindeberg's work. The house was published in Architectural Record, (Vol. LV, 1924, pp. 333,335, 337,368, & 371) in 1924, several years after completion of the building, because Lindeberg preferred to publicize his buildings in mature landscapes.   - There are four key contributing properties in the district that embody its rural agrarian and the estate era history. "Red Gate Farm" represents a beautifully preserved 19th century farmstead. It was purchased in 1915 by Seth Thomas Jr. the grandson of the original clockmaker and president of the company for many years. It was incorporated into his estate as a showcase farm. The nearby Seth Thomas, Jr. estate was the site of the original "Red Gate Farm." The estate house was built in the early 20th century and is an excellent example of the Colonial Revival style. It was designed by noted architect Harrie T. Lindeberg. Harding Township Master Plan; Historic Preservation Plan Element, Adopted March 14, 2005

The stone Georgian Colonial mansion, designed by New York architect Harrie T. Lindberg in 1921, has 27 rooms, each with a fireplace, stable and kennel groups. A Brief History of Oakland's "Stream House"
Built in 1902 as the office building for the dairy farm operations of Edward Day Page, a millionaire businessman whose Oakland estate at its height was variously described as either 600 or 700 acres in size. Page was a founding member of the Sons of the American Revolution. Three of his ancestors fought at Concord Bridge, and some two-dozen others served in the Revolution in state militias or in the Continental Army. Page served at various times as councilman and mayor (1909 - 1911) in Oakland, and was at the time of his death (Christmas Day, 1918) a member of the school board.
<http://www.oakland-nj.org/streamhouse.html>
  - "The railroad also brought the arrival of Edward Dey Page...a retired, wealthy businessman from New York City. He once owned about one-fourth of Oakland, built the Page mansion located at the top of Hiawatha Boulevard, built the great Vygeberg Dairy Farm, was instrumental in the initial incorporation of Oakland and was our second mayor." p.51
"Edward Page was a wealthy individual who owned a mercantile firm in New York City. He came to Oakland in the 1890s and initially purchased a small farm off Ramapo Valley Road near the Mahwah border. Apparently, he retired from his business and set about amassing land to begin a dairy operation in Oakland. At the height of his landholdings in Oakland, he owned two thousand contiguous acres. As a successful businessman, he was appointed as Oakland's first treasurer with the responsibility of assessing the valuation of all Oakland property, land and buildings for tax purposes." p.66
"The Demise of the Page Mansion and Dairy Farm: As discussed previously, Edward Page had owned approximately one-fourth of Oakland in the northern section of town, inclusive of the Van Allen House...In addition to building his dairy farm, of which the Stream House was its business office, he also built a mansion located at the top of Hiawatha Boulevard, the entire length of which served as his driveway"

  - Inn flux: Montclair hotel sold; future uncertain

STAFF WRITER
The Montclair Times
The 110-year-old Georgian Inn on North Mountain Avenue has a new owner whose name might ring a bell. The classical revival structure was once a private mansion, built in 1902 for township resident and lawyer C.E. Van Vleck by the architectural firm of Van Vleck & Goldsmith.
At one point the house belonged to Dr. Edward Weston, a world-renowned inventor of portable instruments that could measure electricity and developer of the dynamo.
The building was turned into an inn in the 1940s, and the interior still has much of its original grandeur and charm. The walls are arrayed with old paintings and decorative molding. The hotel has 13 fireplaces, the interiors of which are lined with marble. Some of the units have hardwood flooring and gold-leaf detailing on their unusually high ceilings. Guests entering the lobby are greeted by a central staircase that rises to a large stained-glass window.

Stone Eagles, 60 Undercliff Road, a splendid stone manor house designed by architects Goodwillie and Moran in 1929, was considered to be one of the most extravagant houses of its time in the metropolitan area. Built for Wil-liam H. Eshbaugh, a stockbroker and lumber magnate, the unique interior details include 15th-century linenfold paneling and wood carvings by Grinling Gibbons.

- 40.755271,-74.160182 00619 Kearney, John Watts Newark New Jersey 3 1879
  - Two plans 619-2 and 619-z2 show subdivision proposals (but may be reverses of one another or original layouts?)
  - The action at Ox Hill was fought in one of those savage Virginia thunderstorms. Kearney often did his own reconnaissance, and in the murk he mistakenly rode into Confederate lines. When called upon to surrender, he fled and was killed by a bullet that entered at the base of his spine.
Kearney 's death was regretted by both sides, since the Army that had fought in Mexico was a small one and was well represented in Blue and Gray. Old comrade Bobby Lee sent Kearney's horse and equipment to his second wife, now a widow, and his body was returned under a flag of truce.
Whether his son had much love for him or not, the General's death left him the largest inheritance in the history of young America. John Watts Kearney eventually settled at his father's estate at Bellegrove, near Newark, New Jersey.
It would be interesting to see the place, how the very wealthy lived in the century before the last one. But it was torn down in 1926 to make room for a real estate development. Blacktop looks pretty much the same, whether it is Ox Hill or Bellegrove.
It seals things up, and keeps the dust down.

  - Part of a historic estate in Kearny, NJ which has been held by the Kearny family for eighty-eight years, will be utilized as the site for an FHA large-scale rental housing plan.
The project, one of the outstanding construction operations of recent months in Hudson County, will occupy the plot where Clark Avenue and Belgrove Drive meet...This was a part of "Belgrove," purchased about 1850 by Major Gen. Philip Kearny, father of John Watts Kearny, and utilized by him as a site for a mansion which became popularly known as "Kearny Castle"...The "castle" at Kearny was sold and demolished in 1926 and the only remaining part of General Philip Kearny's 500-acre estate is to be the site for the 169-family garden apartment project which will bear his name.

- 40.943829,-74.196854      09076   Hobart, Garrett Paterson      New Jersey      10      1929-1931      Ailsa Farm, Haledon, NJ

- Since 1951, William Paterson University has been situated on one such estate. Called Ailsa Farms, the property was owned by the family of Garret Hobart, the twenty-fourth vice president of the United States who served under William McKinley. Its stately 40-room mansion, nestled in a hollow at the southeastern end of the estate, served as the setting for numerous holiday parties and important social events, a place where dignitaries and prominent business people of the time gathered.

Today, the Tudor-style mansion, Hobart Manor, is the centerpiece of the University's 320-acre campus. The building, with its public reception rooms returned to their turn-of-the-century elegance through a fundraising campaign spearheaded by the Alumni Association, once again serves as a focal point for campus, alumni, and community events.

The history of the estate begins in 1877 when John McCullough, a Scottish immigrant who made a fortune in the wool industry, constructed a two-story fieldstone castle with two octagonal turrets facing the valley to the East.

At the turn of the century, McCullough permanently returned to his native Scotland and the property was sold at auction in 1902 to Paterson resident Jennie Tuttle Hobart. Mrs. Hobart, the widow of former Vice President Garret A. Hobart, who died in office in 1899, deeded the property to her son, Garret, Jr., as a Christmas gift that year.

In 1915, Hobart Jr. engaged Paterson architects Fred Wentworth and Frederick Vreeland to undertake an extensive remodeling and expansion of the castle. The octagonal towers were removed and replaced with a new stone entrance way surmounted by a bay window. The second floor stonework exterior was replaced with brick; leaded glass casement windows replaced the old sash windows. Hobart Jr. also added a three-story brick wing on the East side of the castle, expanding the house to 40 rooms. Most of the rooms contained fireplaces, some with elaborate plaster overmantles of flowers and fruit.

The expansion was completed in 1919, and Hobart, Jr. and his wife and children moved into their new home. His mother, who also maintained the family home on Carroll Street in Paterson, moved to the Manor in 1940. She died there on January 8, 1941; her son died on September 29 of that same year, also in the Manor.

...Today, the Manor houses the offices of the President, Institutional Advancement, Development, and Alumni Relations. Its refurbished public rooms include the original dining room, drawing room, library, billiards room, and central foyers. Furnished with period reproductions, the rooms once again offer a reminder of life in another era.

- Ailsa Farms
FarmsMemories of Ailsa Farms

For the children of the Hobart family, life at Ailsa Farms in the early years of this century must have been near idyllic. From the first Christmas in 1902, shortly after Jennie Hobart, the family matriarch and widow of Garret A. Hobart, 24th vice president of the United States, purchased the property, the house worked its magic on the family.

The house on the hill in the country was a weekend retreat from their spacious, elegant city residence, Carroll Hall. It was to Ailsa Farms that the young children in the family were taken to escape the heat of the city during the summer. Loaded into horse-drawn carriages and accompanied by their nurses, these young children, by the end of World War I, had a wonderful house to explore and spacious grounds on which to play.

Elizabeth Hobart Kingsbury, the daughter of Garret Hobart, Jr., was just a young child when she moved into the manor house with her family after the war.

- 1930 census lists Charles L. Denison (65yo unemployed owner of $100,000 home!) and wife Ella (66yo unemployed) residing on Chestnut Ridge Rd., Saddle River, NJ [likely at location of Denison Dr. and Chestnut Ridge Rd.]
- the formerly unrestricted right to use property in the borough for private school purposes and the validity of the issuance of a building permit, subsequently recalled, to Chestnut Ridge Land Co., Inc. (which we will call the "land company"), the owner, and The Saddle River Country Day School (hereafter designated as the "school"), the lessee, for structural alterations of a residence property incident to the conversion thereof for use as a private day school. The lower court upheld the amendment, and its applicability to the premises in question, ...

Saddle River is located in north central Bergen County and has an area of six square miles, much of it hilly country. It is described as a highly desirable residential community appealing to persons wishing an expanse of land and a rural atmosphere, and as such one of the most attractive in the county. The present population is slightly less than 1,400. Its growth has not been rapid, the nature and pace thereof no doubt having been largely controlled by zoning ordinance requirements to be adverted to shortly. Such requirements have tended to development along the line of large and expensive homes on substantial tracts of land. Less than 1% of the area is used for business purposes and that is devoted to retail stores and service establishments concentrated in the center of the community and designed to serve the needs of the residents. There is no industrial use. The single public school accommodates about 250 local children from kindergarten through grade eight. Secondary education for about 70 borough students is provided at Ramsey High School. Probably half of the high school age children are educated in private schools outside the municipality. There is also a private nursery school in the town for those of pre-school years. The general character of the community may be further illustrated by the fact that the borough has no police department, law enforcement being served by three part-time marshals.

The premises directly involved in this litigation is the so-called "Denison estate" — an older 17-room mansion on an irregular tract of some 20 acres with varying topography, bounded roughly by the westerly side of Chestnut Ridge Road, the northerly side of Woodcliff Lake Road and the easterly side of Allendale Road. These roads are principal inter-community arteries. The adjacent area was referred to by one expert witness as the focal point of highest values in the borough, because of the elevation, fine view and value of homes that have been built in the vicinity. These homes, mostly of recent construction, include those of plaintiffs in the Wollen suit and others. They are principally of the estate type on tracts ranging from slightly over 2 to 26 or more acres and with values of from something over $40,000 to close to $150,000. In the early part of June 1957 the Denison estate was owned by Leonard C. Bierbrier and wife. Bierbrier was mayor of the borough. It was on the market for sale, the Bierbriers apparently desiring to move out of the municipality. The broker was Albert Zecker, a local resident.

The history of The Beacon Hill Club begins when the property of Carroll and Margaret Bassett, 250 Hobart Road, was put up for sale upon the death of Mrs. Bassett in 1954 and Carroll P. Bassett in 1952. Among people interested in the Bassett Estate were a number of builders who eyed the vacant areas with interest. By the end of 1954, a group of Summit residents had joined together to purchase the property for the purpose of a private family-oriented club to the great relief of a great many local residents. Even so, it was a year later when, after numerous City Council and Zoning Board meeting, that approval was finally given for Beacon Hill Club. Memorial Day, 1955 was set of opening day.

  - History
Circa 1741
Paul and Colleen Villareal, Owners
Richard Green, grandson of early settler William Green, purchased over 400 acres of land in 1741. The homestead comprised 250 acres which he called Blooming Grove Farm. For many years West Upper Ferry Road was called Blooming Grove Road.
Upon Richard's death in 1797, the residence was left to his eldest son, William R. Green, who devoted his energies to farming, but did his duty as a soldier in the American Revolution. Before he died he divided the property between his two sons. James B. Green inherited the homestead with 140 acres of land in 1812. He was a man of influence and a trustee of Ewing Church. Title then passed to his son, James B. Jr. in 1847, the last member of the Green family to own Blooming Grove.
In the mid-1860's, the original house was dismantled, and a new, more spacious house was built behind the original site.
The years after James death remain hazy, but it is likely that the house became the Blooming Grove Inn. Located a half mile from the Delaware River, it was an ideal site for a stagecoach stop. At the turn of the twentieth century it was known to be a restaurant and during prohibition it was a well frequented speak-easy. Several owners followed and about 1950 it became Mary Marks' Ewing Manor. From 1970 to 2002 it was owned by the Lieggi family. Now know as Paulie's, it has been beautifully restored by the current owners, continuing as a venue for fine dining.

  - Schuyler Mansion was home to Philip J. Schuyler, the renowned Revolutionary War general, US Senator, and business entrepreneur. He and his wife, Catharine Van Rensselaer, descended from affluent and powerful Dutch families. Together they raised eight children in this home. The Georgian structure, reflecting Schuyler's English tastes - was built on a bluff overlooking the Hudson River. Originally situated on an 80-acre tract of land, the grounds once included an orchard, a formal garden, and a working farm. Throughout the Schuyler family occupancy from 1763-1804, the mansion was the site of military strategizing, political hobnobbing, elegant social affairs, and an active family life. The wedding of daughter Elizabeth Schuyler to Alexander Hamilton took place in the house in 1780. Today, visitors can enjoy a guided tour of the mansion as well as an orientation exhibition in the Visitor Center focusing on Philip Schuyler's life. Temporary exhibitions and public programs are scheduled year-round. Tours for school and adult groups, as well as outreach programs, are available by reservation. Group tour rates are available for 10 or more people.

  - Wenga Farms was a 900-acre apple orchard in Armonk, NY, not far from the Log Cabin Restaurant. Wenga is Agnew, the owner's name, spelled backwards. Art Hendry, the foreman, a thoughtful, pipe-smoking man, was a friend of both my father and grandfather. Everyone in town, all 500 or so, was dismayed to learn that IBM had bought the property for their new World headquarters. I visited Art during the last Spring before the bulldozers would arrive. He took me on a long tractor drive around the entire property, pointing out the many apple varieties blooming. "Take a good look at all this and remember it, Peter, because next Spring, this will be gone."

The famous Magoun estate on Long Island's south shore, just east of Babylon Village, is being transferred into an exclusive waterfront colony under the direction of C.M. Davison, Standard oil executive. Originally, the estate was purchased from the Magoun family by the late Emil Bommer, who left it to Dartmouth University. When Mr. Davison purchased the property he decided to reserve one choice site for his own estate and develop the rest of the immense property into an exclusive residential waterfront colony.”

Designed by Grovsnor Atterbury of the architectural firm McKim, Mead and White, Broad Brook Farm was the country home of New York City mayor, Seth Lowe. Incredible restored original woodwork, eleven fireplaces and architectural detailing throughout are but some of the hallmarks. Thoroughly updated, the home remains as delightful as ever with light-filled, classic design. Eight plus acres provide pastoral views and open skies for celestial sunrises and sunsets. Included are two large paddocks, pond, heated greenhouse and three car garage with bonus room above. Listed at $4,850,000 by

  - After some smaller commissions for camps on Upper Saranac Lake such as Camp Intermission, he designed Camp Wonundra for William Rockefeller in 1934. In 1937 he built "Eagle Nest" at Blue Mountain Lake for Walter Hochschild, and in 1948, Camp Minnowbrook, in the same area, for R.M. Hollingshead. There were also seven smaller great camps on Lake Placid, and work on the Lake Placid Club. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/William\_G.\_Distin
  - Harold Hochschild a New York City business executive, long-time seasonal Adirondack resident and lay historian published Township 34, a history of the Central Adirondacks, in 1952. The book furnished a plan and its author guidance and financial support for the Adirondack Museum through the first decades of its development.
William West Durant was born in Brooklyn in 1850, and educated in England and Germany. His father, Dr. Thomas C. Durant, a vice-president of the Union Pacific railroad, accumulated one of the great fortunes in nineteenth century America. By the 1880s the Durant family had acquired 658,261 acres of Adirondack land and William arrived in the region to manage the family's investments.
Accustomed to refinement, Durant modeled his Adirondack developments after the baronial hunting estates of European aristocracy. In the process he developed the unique architectural style for what became known as Adirondack Great Camps.
Owners of Great Camps acquired vast land holdings, which included wilderness lakes, ponds, and rivers. The camps, actually small isolated villages, were self-sufficient, and often included working farms, greenhouses, icehouses, and even chapels. They were very expensive to build and maintain.
The region's isolation was a major obstacle to Durant's development plans. In an effort to attract wealthy tourists, the family built and operated railroads, steamboats lines, roads, sawmills, and a grand resort hotel, the Prospect House in Blue Mountain Lake, New York. By the 1890s Durant was financially overextended. Despite his growing money problems, Durant began a new project in the spring of 1899; the Eagle's Nest Country Club. In the summer of 1900 the country club and its golf course were opened with a series of exhibition matches played by the Scottish professional, Harry Vardon. Vardon's fee was $500 for the week and a bottle of Scotch whiskey every night. On Saturday night, August 4, to celebrate the opening, Durant gave a dance at the club's casino, to the music of an eight-piece orchestra, brought from Utica.

Durant spent nearly $70,000 building the Eagle's Nest Country Club.

By 1904, awash in a sea of lawsuits, including one brought by his own sister, Durant lost control of his Adirondack lands. The assets of Durant's company were seized by creditors who, in turn, sold the country club's land to three New York City men: Ernst Ehrman, Henry Morgenthau Sr., and Berthold Hochschild. The three formed a holding company for the land called the Eagle Nest Country Club.

Beginning in 1904 Berthold Hochschild, his wife Mathilde, and his sons Harold and Walter spent June through September every year at Eagle Nest. First the father, then the sons, commuted on the New York Central's sleeper car from Grand Central Station in New York City to spend weekends at the family's summer home http://www.adkmuseum.org/about\_us/adirondack\_journal/?id=6

Biographical Sketch

Harold K. Hochschild was born in 1892 in New York City, the son of Berthold and Mathilde Blumenthal Hochschild. Hochschild graduated from Yale University in 1912 and joined the American Metal Company, Ltd., in New York City in 1913. This company was co-founded by his father in 1887 and became a leading custom smelter and refiner of ores and scrap metal in the United States. Hochschild became president of the company in 1934. He married Mary Marquand in 1941 and they had one son, Adam. Hochschild served in the U. S. Army during World War II and after two years of service in Europe, he retired as a Lieutenant Colonel. He retired from the American Metal Company, Ltd. in 1957, but remained on its board of directors.

Hochschild received an L.L.D. (Doctor of Laws) from St. Lawrence University in 1962; an L.H.D. (Doctor of Humane Letters) from Hamilton College in 1963; and a Litt.D. (Doctor of Letters) from Princeton in 1968. He served as chairman of New York Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller's Temporary Study Commission on the Future of the Adirondacks from 1969-1971. He was the founder of the Adirondack Museum, which first opened in 1957 in Blue Mountain Lake, New York. The museum was established on the site of the Blue Mountain House, a resort hotel built in 1876. Part of the original hotel is now part of the museum's exhibits. Hochschild served as president of the Adirondack Historical Association and as trustee of the New York State Historical Association. He authored Township 34 (1952), a book on the history of an Adirondack township in Hamilton County, N.Y. Hochschild and his family made their home in New York City and Blue Mountain Lake. Hochschild died in 1981.

    - In time the DeLamater-Robinson-Donnell estate began to break up. One of the first sales was to Dr. Frank L. Babbott, Jr. Dr. Babbott expanded and lived in the house across from Bevin Road by the Sound and later rented it to Eugene O'Neill who wrote some of his great plays there. In 1927 the Eaton's Harbors Corporation was formed to sell the rest of the estate. Gradually homes began to appear on the streets of Eaton's Neck. Henry Morgan bought approximately 440 acres and built a large house overlooking the Sound. The Bevin and the Vezin heirs also began to sell their holdings.
<http://www.eatonharborscorp.org/about/default.aspx>
    - The road to the lighthouse on Eaton's Neck was through private property, belonging to Beacon Farm, which was owned by a pediatrician, Dr. Frank Babbott, who wanted to raise special cows to produce very healthy milk. Eventually he sold it to Henry S. Morgan and the road remained private. Public access to the lighthouse became very limited; permission had to be granted ahead of time. Scouts were often given a tour of the lighthouse, and various similar groups. The land, which had formerly been farmland, became a hunting ground for duck and pheasant shooting. Beacon Farm became a kennel for the raising of hunting dogs, many imported from Scotland.

- "In many respects, the seeds of Black Rock Forest were sown when banker James Stillman moved to the Hudson Highlands in 1885. Like many of his wealthy business associates, including William Rockefeller, Edward Harriman, and J.P. Morgan, Stillman desired to build a family estate along the banks of the Hudson River. At first he attempted to settle in the exclusive community of Tuxedo Park. However after being snubbed by that society's upper crust, who regarded him as nouveau riche, Stillman decided to create his own elite development in the nearby town of Cornwall, where he had attended boarding school as a boy. There he purchased a large tract of land on Storm King Mountain which he hoped to transform into a country compound for his family and friends.
James Stillman never realized this dream. Upon his death in 1918 the property around Storm King remained undeveloped and reverted to his youngest son, Ernest, who was then practicing medicine in the village of Cornwall. Although not yet built upon, the Stillman land was nevertheless in a ruinous state.<sup>2</sup> Like most of the Highland forests during the early twentieth century, the property had been cutover numerous times and its timber used as fuel for both nearby iron furnaces and brick kilns. James Stillman, for instance, had often leased the wood rights to his property to local woodcutters. Yet whereas the elder Stillman had bought the Storm King property in an age of industrial capitalism, his son inherited it during the Progressive era, a time when reformers such as Theodore Roosevelt began challenging the unregulated practices of big business." From "Black Rock's Hidden Past: A History of Land Use Practices Prior to the Creation of Black Rock Forest" by Neil M. Maher, Associate Professor of History, Federated History Department, New Jersey Institute of Technology — Rutgers University, Newark

- "I was recently reading about James Stillman (Chauncey's grandfather) and the way he treated (or mistreated) his wife. Eventually he packed her off to Europe and wouldn't let the children even mention her name in his presence. She did return to New York after James' death, apparently. Anyway, in Fran Dunwell's book about the Hudson Highlands, there's a funny passage describing the way that Stillman, when he was ready to leave for work each morning, would make his family and all their servants line up in the main hall of their house on Storm King Mountain. Due to her husband's strict prison-like rules, Sarah Stillman evidently felt completely constrained in her own home. It was reported that as soon as she saw his yacht leave the Cornwall dock, Sarah would rush to a neighbors house and "madly play the piano until she'd gotten her him out of her system." - Anonymous post, Big Old Houses [blog], The Upper Class, between the Wars, Thurs. - FORMER SPLENDOR
The main house at Garondah had been built by a wealthy copper merchant as his family's summer home in the 1890s.
Frank Munsey, a very successful New York City publisher, owned Garondah from 1918 to 1925. In 1923, he had the Gaming Cottage built close to the main house, formal gardens and tennis court. Its ample dimensions and large, elegant stone fireplace provided a stylish recreational center for guests on a rainy day.
In 2003, the cottage still retained vestiges of its former architectural finesse despite years of neglect and ill use. Handsome interior wood braces supported the roof, oak flooring still covered sections of the floor, and the massive stone fireplace stood intact in the center of the western wall. On either side of the fireplace, now ill-fitting, weather-worn French doors opened outward to the piazza with views of a meadow and the peaks beyond. - Garondah Lodge (Elizabethtown, Essex County) was built in 1881 by Thomas B. Coddington, a New York City iron master. Subsequent owners included: John Stevens (1887); Lewis Hyde (1903); Erman Ridgeway (1909); Frank Munsey (1917), publisher and one of the owners of the New York Herald; Sol H. Goldberg; and Dan Somers (1960s). Somers operated a country club and restaurant for several years until it closed. It slowly began to fall into disrepair and eventually was demolished.

  - The following obituary is from "The Quarterly Journal of the New York Historical Association," Vols. 1 (1919)-6 (1925) on The Internet Archive:
Aaron Augustus Healy, born in Brooklyn June 26, 1850, son of Aaron and Elizabeth Weston Healy, died at his summer home in Cold Spring-on-the-Hudson September 28, 1921. His first wife was Elizabeth Bradley, of Washington ; his second wife was Mary Theodosia Currier, of Oberlin, Ohio. The latter and his son, Henry W. Healy, of Maplewood, New Jersey, survived him. He was educated at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. In 1919 he received the degree of doctor of laws from Oberlin College. He was at one time a manufacturer and dealer in leather under the firm name of A. Healy & Sons, New York. He was first vice-president of the Central Leather Company until 1910 and thereafter continued as one of its directors. He was also a director of the Nassau National Bank of Brooklyn. For some years before his death he had not been actively engaged in business. Mr. Healy was an Independent Democrat and from 1893 to 1897 was collector of internal revenue for the eastern district of New York. He was president of the board of trustees of the Brooklyn
Institute of Arts and Sciences ; a director of the Brooklyn Academy of Music; a member of the Art Commission of the City of New York. His clubs were the Rembrandt, Century, Hamilton, Reform, City, National Arts. By the will of Mr. Healy $120,000 was left to the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences, of which he had been president for twenty-five years. Of this bequest $100,000 was to be invested and the income expended in the purchase of works of art; $20,000 was to be used in the furtherance of work in the botanical and educational departments of the Institute. The Institute received an additional bequest of twenty paintings to be selected by it from Mr. Healy's private collection. Packer Institute received a bequest of $5,000 for its endowment fund." - Till the Soil at P'town's New Community Garden
Al Bingham and his son, Noah, are hard at work preparing their 10'/20' gardening plot for their pumpkins, tomatoes, peppers, corn, and beets at a new community garden on land owned by Libby Healy, of Lane Gate Road in Cold Spring .
It was Libby's idea - "There is good land here, and I'd like to see it used for a community garden." The idea became a reality as Libby met with avid Philipstown Garden Club gardeners and their husbands: Miriam and Eric Wagner, JoAnn and Kirby Brown; and Penny Brickman.
The land had to be plowed, tilled, divided, fenced, and provided with a water source. All of which have been done, and the garden is ready for planting.
Plots are $50 for a 10'/20'; $30 for a 10'/10' for the season. Plenty of sunshine; a magnificent view of Hudson Valley; and chemical-free soil! All plots have been rented for this year, but if you are interested in renting next year, contact

Cold Spring Harbor's development from a popular summer resort into an affluent residential community at the turn of the century is illustrated in "Wawapek," the estate of businessman and civic leader Robert W. DeForest Built from 1898 to 1900 on the prominent bluff overlooking Shore Road, Wawapek is a distinctive example of twentieth-century estate architecture designed by prominent architect Grosvenor Atterbury. Reminiscent of late nineteenth century Adirondack lodges, the estate is constructed of cobblestone, brick and wood. The main house has varied fenestration, multiple roof-types, massive stone chimneys, circular towers and classically inspired architectural details including Palladian windows, door surrounds with pilasters, fanlights and sidelights, and porches with Doric and Ionic columns.

- Wawapek Farm, for example, is an 1898 country house built for the philanthropist Robert W. deForest in Cold Spring Harbor that is owned by his descendants. Tour members admired its Adirondack lodge flair and collection of furnishings that spans a full century. "This is just marvelous because you can see the accretion of the family over a period of time and nothing is edited," said David Maxfield, a designer who works in house restoration in Washington.   - The second generation of Wadsworths carried on the family commitment to the lands in Livingston County. James Wadsworth's elder son and namesake built Hartford House at the north end of the village at the time of his marriage to Marcy Craig Wharton of Philadelphia. "The Homestead" which at that time was still referred to informally as the "Home farm" or the "homestead of the Wadsworth estate" was inherited by James's second son William Wolcott Wadsworth in 1844. Two years later he married a Bostonian, Emmeline Austin, "a lady of means and determination" who was left alone with three young sons after her husband's untimely death in July 1852.
Emmeline Wadsworth continued to live mainly at "The Homestead" but made frequent visits to her brother in Boston. It was probably during her tenure that the two-story kitchen wing (now the dining room) was added to the house, and also Emmeline is said to have been responsible for the relocation of Geneseo's South Street 150 feet to the north on account of the noise created by traffic.
Between the 1870's and the 1890's dramatic steps were made in "The Homestead's" evolution. In these years it became a palatial residence typical of this extravagant "Gilded Age" of late nineteenth century America. Emmeline was still disturbed by the nearby street, and in 1874 while visiting in Boston she sent her elder son the following telegram, "Move house. I will return as soon as possible." The move was accomplished despite the contractor's disappearance midstream leaving William A. Wadsworth to supervise the operation himself." <http://wadsworthhomestead.com/ourstory/our-history/>

  - "It was an impressive sight to approach Wood Farm from the Abbott Street entrance. On each side of the entrance were handsome stone curving walls perhaps five feet tall and ten feet in length. Attached were the wrought iron gates. Spruces lined the drive up to the farm at the crest of the hill. Half way up the driveway was the gardener's home and the gardens on the right."
In "Memories of Hoosick Falls" written by Elizabeth Powell Conry, who lived on 11 Abbott Street in Hoosick Falls from 1912 to 1927, described her memory of the Wood Farm. "At the end of our street were the iron gate entrance to Wood farm, flanked by curving stone walls, inside of which was a large wooden stand where they left the big milk cans. The David Scott family lived in the caretaker's house and at the end of the road was the Wood Farm - cow barns - an arched barn with hay lofts on either side. Beyond that were pens where they kept the bulls, and the road curved down to the wooden plank bridge over Wood's brook and Wood's Pond. There were several buildings on the farm - three houses - a sheep barn way up on the hill - another group of buildings off Ball Street, an ice house. - Another road led down the hill to the Wood Mansion overlooking Wood's Park. In my day the mansion was empty, but Mrs. Dorothy Wood (later to found the Seeing Eye in Morristown, N.J.) visited periodically. I remember seeing her walking her big police dog thru the village. There was a brick walled garden behind the house." from "The Mystery of the Wood Farm and the Magic", by Marie Sheldon Hine

[showing "Chateauiver" property of Charles A. Gould between curretn Caledonia Rd and Wolf Hill Rd]
  - Usually when we think of the Gold Coast, we think of mansions near the waters of the North Shore. However, in 1908, industrialist Charles A. Gould extended the Gold Coast to Dix Hills when he built his Gilded Age mansion, Chateauiver, on his 500-plus-acre estate on the west side of Deer Park Avenue between Caledonia Road and Wolf Hill Road.
Born in 1849, Gould achieved prominence as a steel and iron manufacturer and real estate investor. In 1892, he established Gould Coupler Co., which manufactured automatic railroad car couplers, and Gould Steel Co. Gould Coupler Co. changed its name to Gould Battery Storage Co. when it expanded its product line to produce storage batteries for trains, electric utilities, subways, elevators and farms.

  - As already noted, there was talk as early as 1919 about expanding the course, and indeed the financing was in place by 1920. In 1921, Henry Evans, an active member of the Board for a number of years, offered the club the use of some of his land north of the course - provided that no trees were cut down. But no changes were made to the course at this time, aside from new greens for the first, fifth, and 18th holes, which were built in 1923.
After Evans died on August 29, 1924, member Harry Kelly, Jr., purchased his estate, including his mansion, which was called the "Knoll." Kelly acted partly in the interests of the club, realizing that the Evans property formed a buffer between the golf course and adjacent land, room for the club to grow when the time came. That it did, in 1925, when a crisis, fueled by declining membership, and an out-of-date course that did not help attract new members, forced a change.

[showing property of H. B. Hollins west of Bay View Ave. and Harry Hollins east of Bay View Ave.]

- After Hollins' bankruptcy, Meadow Farm, the country manor, was sold to Charles L. Lawrance along with 116 acres (0.47 km<sup>2</sup>) bordering the Great South Bay and Champlin Creek. The family renovated one of the farmhouses on the northern portion of the approximately 480 acres (1.9 km<sup>2</sup>) remaining to which they relocated. After the death of Mrs. H. B. Hollins, a month after her husband, her daughter Marion as the administrator of the estate sold most of the property not utilized by the family.

Meadow Farm was demolished in 2002/03 as part of the Harbour View project. This project was completion of The Moorings, a wealthy gated community by the subdividing Meadow Farm's remaining 16 acres (65,000 m<sup>2</sup>) into 11 lots. The purchaser of the 5.88-acre (23,800 m<sup>2</sup>) parcel (now 150 Meadowfarm Road) containing Meadow Farm learned the cost of refurbishing the mansion would have well exceeded $1 million and opted to replace it with a newer estate. According to a New York Times article written in 1999, the new estate's owner planned to salvage marble fireplaces, panelling and other appurtenances from the mansion.

Remnants of Hollins' Meadow Farm can still be found off of Dock Road, including the original gates now leading to a small community named after the family, Hollins Estates. The once private road leading to the manor house was named Hollins Lane. The Hollins' stable and clock tower remains as a residential house at 37 Blackmore Lane. A carriage house, located west of Meadowfarm Road and last used as a residence, was demolished in the late 1980s to make way for a subdivision. At 35 Blackmore Lane is what was believed to have been the estate manager's (Blackmore) house, which had been moved from another location nearby. At 42 Blackmore Lane is a structure on a 5-acre (20,000 m<sup>2</sup>) parcel which also belonged to Hollins. It was the renovated farmhouse they relocated to after parting with Meadow Farm. Harvard Class books from the 1930s were found in the house in the 1980s - a member of the Hollins family was pictured in those books. A company, Yarmouth Estates of Bay Shore, New York, has purchased the house at 42 Blackmore and is requesting a subdivision. Harry Hollins Jr.'s estate house, designed by the architectural firm of Cross & Cross and built in 1907, remains at 18 Crick Holly Lane and Gerald Hollins' home remains at 180 Bayview Avenue. The carriage house for Gerard Hollins' house still stands at 158 Bayview Ave and is now used as a private residence. Gerald Hollins later built a home on White Oak Lane, which still stands and is now the visitor's center for the South Shore Nature Center.

Another Hollins' house, that of Robert L. Hollins, stands on the border of Hecksher State Park. That house is believed to have been one of the earliest houses in the area, originally part of the Nichol farm. It is now owned by the East Islip School District and is used for special education services.

A private road once ran across all of the Hollins holdings, crossing Bayview Ave and through the estate of HB Hollins Jr., where it continued into what is now Hecksher State Park. The outline of this road can be seen running through the woods on one of the last undeveloped parcels of land off White Oak Lane. As recently as the 1980s, one area resident was concerned as the road was still listed as a legal right-of-way in his property deed. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/H. B. Hollins

  - "Although some of Bosworth's subsequent American commissions were office buildings, like the Ocean Cable Office Building (1916) (since demolished), most were houses, estates, and townhouses, like the house for William Barclay Parsons (at 121 East 65th Street), Philip Gossler (on 14 East 65th Street) in New York, a mansion for Walter Farwell (1920), and house alterations and a garden for Charles A. Stone, both in the Locust Valley area. Vail, who was a great admirer of Italian art and had traveled extensively through Italy, asked Bosworth in 1916 to design his home in Morristown, New Jersey. Bosworth also designed extensive gardens for the house of Samuel Untermyer, a famous lawyer, in Yonkers, New York. In 1925, he designed the unbuilt Egyptian Museum for Cairo. In 1921, Bosworth built his own house on Long Island next to that of Stone."

- Wing's Castle is an American marvel. Located 75 miles north of New York City, the castle was the brain child of artists Peter and Toni Ann Wing. Wing was raised on a dairy farm adjacent to where the castle now sits, the Millbrook Winery has become what was once the Wing Farm.
Wing returned from Vietnam in 1969, proposed to Toni Ann and in 1970 the long illustrious love affair of building a castle began. This enigma is still, to this day, 40 years later, under construction...as Toni states, " it has become a live in art project".
Along with a love affair of castles came a love of anything old, come for a visit and be memorized by the museum of antique memorabilia and collectibles, everything from military to primitive trinkets.

- Orvis Sandanona is a place where the traditions of the field and the hunt are held in the highest regard and is the oldest permitted shotgun shooting club in the country. The main lodge was built during the presidency of Thomas Jefferson and using its richly textured past as a foundation, Orvis Sandanona has built a thriving, modern sporting clays shooting ground that is consistently ranked among the very best in the nation. Orvis Fly Fishing and Wingshooting Schools, and a fully-catered lodge facility that includes ample meeting space create a benchmark experience for both corporate recreation and individual sporting pursuits. Sandanona is open 363 days a year.

  - After winding uphill through a romantic forest, Brookside comes into view. It's a modern house for Millbrook, looking more like it belongs in Tuxedo Park. Unlike most big old houses, it is in virtually original condition...
In 1901, McLane bought a not-quite-fifteen-acre parcel from Harry Harkness Flagler, owner of an adjoining estate called Edgewood. McLane was 57 years old at the time. He had married late in life the daughter of Brooklyn mayor Fred A. Schroeder, and was already in his sixties when his three children - Henry Jr., Huntington, and Alys - were still toddlers.

- 41.773344,-73.690538 06246 Flagler, Henry Harkness Millbrook New York 0
  - "When Harry Flagler died in the early 1950s, he left Edgewood to his widowed daughter, Mary Flagler Cary. She was a woman with a passion - nay, a fixation - on trees, and was never happy unless planting, pruning and/or moving enormous specimens all over either this or another nearby property. The Cary Institute for Ecosystems Studies, on the other property, was her gift to posterity. Edgewood was her gift to a nephew who wanted it like he wanted a hole in the head - and this in spite of a half million dollar trust established by his late aunt purely for the purpose of defraying the costs of maintenance and taxes. The nephew auctioned off the contents instead, tore the house down, held the land for a decade or so, then gave it to the Millbrook School to sell. Half a million bucks was big money in 1968...The 1920s were Edgewood's heyday. The estate grew in elaborateness and, not surprisingly, in the process it became a maintenance monster. Flagler liked to "do the thing handsomely," as they used to say - in the community, in his garden and in his private life. The clubhouse of the local Golf and Tennis club, located across the street from the main gate to Edgewood, was originally built for the wedding reception of Flagler's daughter Elizabeth to J. Andrews Harris III, then moved across the street after the reception. I suspect the enormous second addition to the house was built in anticipation of the Harris wedding. They probably needed the guestrooms." <http://bigoldhouses.blogspot.com/2011/05/two-old-house-stories-1-of-2.html>

- 41.786209,-73.678844      06285   Miller, Roswell Mrs.   Millbrook   New York   1   1915      Caradoc, Millbrook, NY
  - "Caradoc" was built in 1902 by the President of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, a man named Roswell Miller. It speaks to the Gilded Age "chic" of Millbrook, a smart little village in the gentle hills of Dutchess County, New York, that Miller would build here. His son, Roswell Miller Jr. eventually married Andrew Carnegie's daughter, Margaret, and built another fine house nearby. "Caradoc" is an odd name for a country house, odder still considering the myth from which it comes. Caradoc was the name of the Chief Elder of King Arthur's Round Table, a man abused by a traveling wizard into thinking a sow was a beautiful woman. While sinning with the pig, the wizard impregnated Caradoc's wife. Years later Caradoc discovered the true paternity of his boy, at which point father and son hatched a preposterous plan to give the wizard a dose of his own porcine medicine. Unsurprisingly, there were consequences to disrespecting a wizard. Cutting to the chase, Caradoc Jr. did manage to disentangle an enchanted serpent from his arm, but only at the cost of leaving the arm itself withered, and accidentally cutting off his bride's left nipple. It's complicated, as must be the reason for the President of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul RR to name his house after these people. Miller's wife survived him by decades, dying on Christmas Eve, 1955. Six weeks later a local restaurateur bought the house on 57 acres for the grand sum of $35,000. He subdivided the estate - none too gently, alas - leaving the house on what would eventually boil down to a 4-acre island in the middle of a new horseshoe-shaped road. The route of this road owed more to utility than aesthetics, but interestingly, almost no new structures have been built on the estate since the late 1950s. The main house bounced through a dozen or so hands - suffering considerable hard use and neglect in the process - before the current owner bought it in 2003. A slow restoration is now under way. The original design firm, Shepley Rutan and Coolidge of Boston, MA., provided the wonderful vintage images of the house with original landscaping. "Hi John, truly an awesome and amazing site. The pictures are fantastic. I'm a Millbrook resident...born and raised. Where exactly is Caradoc? Butts Hollow Rd? " Its off Nine Partners Lane on a small dirt road called Danielle Drive. <http://bigoldhouses.blogspot.com/2010/12/fine-old-house-in-millbrook.html>

  - Colonel James Neilson, the son of John Neilson, built Wood Lawn on a portion of the land originally purchased by his mother's grandfather, Johannis Voorhees, in 1720. A member of the Rutgers Board of Trustees who had also served as a commander of a company in the war of 1812, Colonel James Neilson was a prominent New Brunswick businessman. He sought to establish Wood Lawn as a gentleman's farm. The Colonel was widowed three times; James Neilson, his only son by his fourth wife, was the last Neilson to occupy Wood Lawn. James Neilson and his wife, Mary Putnam Woodbury, were collectors of rare

Americana. They shared Wood Lawn with Neilson's mother for several years before building the cottage next door, where they lived until 1905, when they returned to the large house which had been vacant since 1893 when Neilson's mother died. <http://www.eagleton.rutgers.edu/about/woodlawn.php>

- [Red herring:] Delancey Kane, a wealthy member of New York society and brother-in-law of Iselin, was a pioneer in the short-lived sport of public coaching in the late 1870s. Members of his New York Coaching Club (primarily members also of New York's "Four Hundred") took paying customers and guests to various hotels, clubs, and estates in Westchester, Long Island, and New Jersey. With his famous coach, the "Tally-Ho," Kane sponsored regular runs from the Brunswick Hotel in New York to the Huguenot Hotel in New Rochelle and later to the "Castle Inn." Kane and Iselin converted the Castle's sweeping front lawn to a polo field, and the surrounding woods were soon populated by fox hunters. The members of the Queens County Hunt club did not renew their lease on the Castle when it expired in March 1882. Several weeks later, on the night of March 30, the old public school building of Trinity School burned to the ground; immediately the school board met and voted to lease the vacant Castle for a temporary school. Thus, for two years, public school classes were held in the Castle. In 1884, Adrian Iselin, Jr., the son of Oliver Iselin, bought Leland Castle, its 40 acres, and an adjacent farm with the purpose of developing the land into a residential park. During the next five years, the Castle was presumably used as a boarding house. Then, from 1889 to 1892, the building was rented by the New Rochelle Collegiate Institute, a boarding school for young boys. Sometime after the tenancy of the New Rochelle Collegiate Institute, Leland Castle lost the crow-stepped gable over the entrance and the arched wooden porte-cochere. Subsequent changes are difficult to trace because of the absence of photographs or written descriptions during this period. The greenhouse and three wooden verandas were demolished. Possibly it was at this time that the rear section of the Castle grounds, now known as the Cloister Garden, was excavated; the Leslie engravings show a veranda in this area, adjacent to the Dining Room and Drawing Room. The 40 acres of the original estate were diminished to 2

1/2, while Iselin's new Residence Park, one of America's early suburban "developments," occupied the gardens and woods of Leland's former estate.

Adrian Iselin, Jr., a shrewd businessman, did not try to sell Leland Castle until most of the plots of the Residence Park were sold. Possibly he realized that an individual buyer would not want such a large mansion on so small a piece of property. Rather, an institution such as a school seemed a more likely client. Thus, after serving as a boys' boarding school, Leland Castle became a girls' boarding school in 1896, when a Miss Morse of Boston rented the building for her academy.

  - Kane: Thomas Kane, an Irish immigrant, made a fortune by collecting horse manure in the streets of New York City for fertilizer. In 1876, he bought from E. K. Collins' widow, Sarah, a 50-acre tract along the western side of Beach Avenue below the Post Road. The property was developed as Woodbine Park in 1890. Described in his 1894 obituary as 'of a somewhat retiring disposition and never what is known as a club man,' he contributed [generously] to a number of charitable organizations and was a major donor to the building funds of St. Augustine's Chapel in Larchmont and Holy Trinity Church in Mamaroneck.
<http://villageoflarchmont.org/larchmont-street-names/>
  - Once an estate always an estate I guess. The Heathcote/ Scarsdale/ De Lancey property was sold in the early 1790s. One piece of the estate was purchased in 1795 by Peter Jay Munro. This property was later sold to a shipping magnate named E.K. Collins, who called the property Larchmont. In 1860, Frederick law Olmsted was commissioned to survey the Larchmont Estate and lay it out in building lots, as the establishment of the railroad and Collins's need for cash had finally brought about the division of the estate into smaller pieces for the construction of summer houses for people escaping the heat of New York City. As Judith Doolin Spikes puts it in her history of the Village of Larchmont "The railroad (which began in 1848) revolutionized travel from the city and initiated the process that changed all of this area from rural farmland to suburban garden plot by the turn of the century."

  - "The route passed through West Orange along the ridge of the first mountain on a path (no longer accessible) paralleling Prospect Avenue before connecting with Northfield Avenue. In the 1870s John Crosby Brown, a prominent NY banker, owned a sprawling estate on the mountain ridge overlooking the Orange Valley named "Brighthurst". Mr. Brown was active in the St. Cloud Presbyterian Church which was founded in 1877. Upon realizing that the Christian Path came through his property he decided to erect a memorial to the early settlers who had passed this way. In 1878 on his property he erected the Pilgrim Cross along side the old route. Even at that time the Christians Path was slowly fading from memory. If not for John Crosby Brown we might not know it's story today. On the stone cross was inscribed " The Christian Path" and on it's base a plaque with the following phrase: " The Christian Path - The Christian Pilgrims who this pathway trod, are now in Heaven and walk with God (1878)"

At the demolition of the Aron house in 1968, the room was given to the Brooklyn Museum of Art, which passed it on to the Royal Ontario Museum, Toronto, which de-accessioned it. When Patterson's son Morehead took over A.M.F. they were making mostly cigarette rolling machines but by his death in 1962 they had become the leading maker of bowling equipment, especially after they debuted the 'Automatic Pinspotter'. They also produced pretzel bending machines, bicycles and motors. Most people today recognize A.M.F. exclusively with bowling.

  - 'Big Tree Farm' was built for James Norman Hill by the firm of Walker & Gillette in Brookville c. 1917, with Olmsted landscaping. Hill was the son of James Hill, one of the biggest railroad tycoons in the country, and himself was a vice president and director of the Northern Pacific Railway. James Hill and his wife were very prominent horticulturists, and grew numerous specimen trees and plants on their estate, and also won numerous botany competitions. The name of the estate, 'Big Tree Farm', derives from a massive sycamore tree that sat (and maybe still sits) somewhere on the estate. Following Hill's death, his wife inherited the home and continued to live there until her death. Today the home is run as the AHRC

  - "Of all the restrictions, none gave the subdividers as much pause as the ban on domestic animals, and especially on chickens (and other fowl) and rabbits. As the Olmsteds, who were very much in favor of a ban on domestic animals acknowledged, "any intending purchasers will strongly object to this restriction." A case in point, of which the Olmsteds were well aware, was W. S. Kies, a New York banker who was thinking about buying a lot in Frank A. Vanderlip's subdivision in Scarborough-on-the-Hudson. After reviewing the Olmsteds' proposed restrictions, he complained that the ban on domestic animals was too stringent. "There ought not to be any objection to the keeping of poultry," he told H.J. Slaker, Vanderlip's agent. "provided it did not run at large and hen-houses were so placed as not to interfere with adjoining property." From Bourgeois Nightmares: Suburbia, 1870-1930 by Robert M.   - Completion of the Willis T. Hanson Estate ten years later strengthened the prestigious character of the neighborhood. Suffering financial difficulties in the 1880's, Union College had begun to sell its tracts of unused land east of the campus. On land purchased from the college, Hanson built his Queen Anne style mansion in 1888. Together with a picturesque carriage house, servants' quarters and landscaped gardens, the Hanson Estate is but one illustration of the wealth enjoyed by Schenectady's elite late in the nineteenth century.

  - Plans for #7643 inconclusive
  - Unclear relationship among Skaneateles properties and Syracuse property work
  - The mansion that is now Stella Maris Retreat and Conference Center was designed by Stanford White, built in New York City and brought to and assembled on Skaneateles Lake in 1879. It was originally the summer home of Frederick Roosevelt, cousin of Theodore Roosevelt.
In 1945 it was acquired by Burns Lyman Smith of the Smith Corona Typewriter Company who gave it to his sister, Flora Bernice Smith. She sold it in 1952 to the sisters of the third Franciscan Order of Syracuse, and after some renovation it was blessed as Stella Maris - "Star of the Sea" by Bishop Walter A. Foery in 1954.
It began as a retreat house for Catholic women and over the years has expanded to include men and women of other denominations and to act as a conference center for various groups desiring a peaceful space of meetings, retreats, gatherings, etc.

Stella Maris is owned and operated by the Sisters of St. Francis who, along with a dedicated staff and volunteers, serve the needs of all who come here desiring spiritual growth, renewal and peace. [address 130 E. Genesee St. Skaneateles, NY]

- Miss Flora Bernice Smith of E. Lake Road. Skaneateles, daughter of the late Lyman C. Smith, founder of the L. C. Smith Typewriter Co. and heiress of the L. C. Smith typewriter fortune, died yesterday at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Miss Smith lived in her family's James St. Mansion, Uarda, most of her life before moving to her summer residence in Skaneateles in 1956. She was a native of Syracuse.

In 1952, Miss Smith sold the Skaneateles estate of her brother. Burns Lyman Smith, to the Franciscan Sisters. It is now known as the Stella Maris Retreat House.

Her father pioneered in the typewriter business and had interests in early electric railways, steamship lines and steel companies. He died in 1910.

<http://www.findagrave.com/cgi-bin/fg.cgi?page=gr&GRid=76362818>

- The Smith family lived in grand style at 804 James Street in a 19-room mansion bought from Howard Ganson White, the owner of the Syracuse Standard newspaper. L.C. Smith called his home "Uarda" and spelled the name out in flowers in the front yard. [The name was taken from Georg Ebers' Uarda: A Romance of Ancient Egypt (1877) in which the title character clutches a rose and says, "I am called Uarda – like this flower – and I love roses and the fresh air."]

In 1920, Flora's mother died. When the estate was settled, Flora had inherited the other half interest in Uarda as well as "property recently acquired in Skaneateles," most probably the summer cottage on East Lake Road that she would eventually occupy, with its 1,000 feet of lake frontage.

However, owning a mansion in Syracuse and a summer home in Skaneateles did not dissuade Flora from traveling. In 1925, she was in Miami again, and also in Europe, where she was delayed in Strasbourg for two weeks by a traveling companion's illness; she toured Spain and Italy on that trip as well...

In 1926, she hired Olmstead Brothers, the firm of Frederick Law Olmstead, Jr., to landscape her Skaneateles property. She was probably familiar with their work as they had landscaped Burns Lyman Smith's James Street estate in 1911. (Only one other estate in Skaneateles was landscaped by the Olmstead firm, that being "Lone Oak," owned by C.D. Beebe, in 1907-1908.) To care for her Skaneateles grounds, Flora employed Joseph Henry Warner...

Flora Bernice Smith died in Skaneateles on January 20, 1966. Her fortune was estimated to be $4 million. She left her house and its contents, and half a million dollars tax-free to Bertha Harder, who had served her for 40 years as maid, personal secretary and friend. Flora also made provisions for her other employees, both past and present, including paying the taxes on each bequest.

When asked what she planned to do with her bequest, Mrs. Harder said, "We haven't planned anything. It has all happened so suddenly." Mrs. Harder later sold the estate and retired with her husband to the Virgin Islands.

Flora Bernice Smith's estate, with its 1,000 feet of lakefront and landscaping by Frederick Law Olmstead Jr., was subdivided in 1974.

- Elliott Smith, Alonzo Potter and Gerhard Dahl Property - On the Nissequogue River between 25A and Landing Avenue, Smithtown

Two hundred and fifteen acres at the head of the Nissequogue River between Landing Ave and Smithtown Rd formed the estate of Elliott Robins Smith. Elliott R. Smith, born in Smithtown in 1844, was a descendant of the Smiths of Smithtown. In the late 1890 and early 1900s he lived in Japan and was involved in the tea importing business. In 1910 he and his wife, Marcia, AKA Minnie, were listed in the Federal Census on Nissequogue Road near Turnpike Road in the Village of Smithtown.

In November 1913 the 216 acre Elliott R. Smith Estate at "Smithtown Landing" was sold to Alonzo Potter (NYT). By 1917 Alonzo Potter had torn down the old wooden house and built a large brick Georgian house designed by Peabody Wilson & Brown (NYT & AF).

In 1919 the property was known as "River Head Farm".

In 1925 Alonzo Potter sold the property to Gerald Dahl. According to the Suffolk News Gerhard Dahl paid $180,000 for the property.

"The Potter estate, which consists of upward of 100 acres, a twenty-five-room house, formal gardens and extensive stables, has been one of the show places of this section for the last ten years. It is on King's Park Road near the Nissequogue River, and has been occupied by Mr. Potter and his family as a Summer residence and during the hunting season."

New York Times, May 21, 1925

The house of Alonzo Potter was featured in The Architectural Forum, October 1924.

The house was razed in 1979. The area now encompasses part of the Suffolk County's Blydenburgh Park and a residential housing.

  - The Hamilton White House is a historic home in Syracuse, New York. The house, Greek Revival in design, was built by and for Hamilton White, Esq circa 1840/42, and occupied by his family in 1842/43. Many believe based on similarities in structure and style that the unknown architect and builder was the same person who designed and built the Moses Burnett House, completed in early 1842, later to become the Syracuse Century Club building. The house was added to the National Register of Historic Places in 1973 due to its significance in the area of architecture and its relationship, through Hamilton White, to the commerce and politics of Syracuse.
Hamilton White, born in 1807, lived at the White House until his death in 1865; his family retained ownership until 1911/12, although the building briefly housed the Kautagh Club. The house is the last of a number of National Register of Historic Places-listed residential structures, in original construction and exterior, remaining in the immediate vicinity of downtown, along the city's Fayette (later, Fireman's) Park.

In 1976 it was purchased by an investment group and converted into business offices. In 2002, it was sold to a private environmental firm, but remains offices for lawyers and other small businesses.

- Mattie Edwards Hewitt
Mattie Edwards Hewitt (1869-1956) was born in St Louis to a middle-class family and studied art before marrying Arthur Hewitt. Her husband earned a living as a photographer and taught her to be his darkroom assistant. During the Pan American Exposition in 1901, Hewitt met Frances Benjamin Johnston who recognized her appreciable printing talents. Soon, Johnston began to mail her negatives to Hewitt for developing and printing. After Hewitt divorced her husband in 1909, she moved to New York City and opened a studio with Johnston (1913), specializing in portrait, architecture and garden photography. After their professional and personal separation, Hewitt took up landscape photography and achieved some success over two decades in photographing the gardens and homes of the wealthy. Hewitt, like Johnston wielded a weighty field camera, hiring an assistant to carry it from estate to estate, while arranging her commissions to minimize the time and effort she expended in travel. The leading home-and-garden periodicals regularly published her work, providing her with additional income.

In the Town of Oyster Bay alone, Hewitt photographed the following gardens and estates

1919: Egerton L. Winthrop, Muttontown.

1920: G. Bertram Wood, Oak Knoll, Oyster Bay. Mrs. Benson Flagg, Apple House, Brookville.

1921: Dr. Robert Fowler, Oyster Bay. William R. Coe, Planting Fields, Oyster Bay.

1922: Henry Sanderson, La Selva, Oyster Bay.

1923: Myron C. Taylor, Locust Valley.

Rockefeller will present to his son and the latter's bride, who is now Miss Abbie Aldrich, a handsome mansion on what is the most desirable site in all Westchester County. Mr. Rockefeller now owns some 2000 acres of land adjoining his home. His most recent purchase was Buttermilk Hill, This is across the railroad tracks of the Putnam Road, which Mr. Rockefeller has spanned with a steel bridge. As the great stables which have been erected indicate that Mr. Rockefeller intends to build near where his present house is, the conclusion hasd been reached that the site on Buttermilk hill is intended for a home for his son." Enjoy an early morning walk along the carriage roads and foundation ruins of William Rockefeller's summer mansion Rockwood Hall, now part of the Rockefeller State Park Preserve (125 Phelps Way, Pleasantville 914-631-1470; nysparks.com/parks/59). One gander at the panoramic views of the Hudson River and you'll know why he set up his homestead here. Rockwood, where Rockefeller lived from the late 1880s until his death in 1922, is set on more than 1,000 acres, and, according to the Rockefeller Archive Center, was built using stonemasons from Scotland, master wood carvers from Switzerland, gardeners from England, and horticulturists from Japan. Among the structures on the property: a three-story coach stable, a farm barn, a hennery, 17 greenhouses, and a steel bridge spanning the New York Central Railroad tracks from the estate to a two-story boathouse on the Hudson River. A siding was added to the New York Central tracks, where Rockefeller kept his private railroad car.

- Rockwood Hall is the site of the former summer home of William Rockefeller (1841-1922), brother of John D. Rockefeller. In 1886, he purchased Rockwood, a 200-acre estate, and built Rockwood Hall, a mansion with 204 rooms. Frederick Law Olmsted designed the landscape, which includes many ornamental trees. Following Rockefeller's death in 1922, the estate was converted into a country club, which soon went bankrupt. In 1937, the property was acquired by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., William's nephew, who arranged for the mansion to be razed in 1941-42.

The Rockefeller family donated Rockwood Hall to New York State in 1999, and it now forms a part of Rockefeller State Park Preserve. Although the buildings are gone, the foundations remain, and the carriage roads that were constructed by the Rockefeller family offer an opportunity for a delightful stroll through the property, with panoramic views over the Hudson River. Bicycles are not allowed, and while equestrians are permitted (with a permit), a recent visit indicates that the carriage roads are rarely used by horses. Although not blazed, the roads followed by this hike are easily followed Rokeby Farm was a wedding gift to Margaret Rebecca Armstrong and her husband General Armstrong Jr. from John Jacob Astor I . Rokeby Farm is located in upstate New York in the Hudson River Valley just north of the present Rhinebeck town line. Margaret renamed the farm Rokeby shortly after she, her husband and their eight children began residing there in the summers starting in the 1800. Margaret named the farm Rokeby after a poem with a tower.

A huge, octagonally shaped library was General Armstrong's favorite retreat. Margaret and William's eight children, four boys and four girls, were named Emily, John Jacob III, Laura, Mary Alida, William Jr., Henry, Robert, and Sarah. Emily married Sam war jr. She died giving birth to a daughter Margaret Astor Ward. She married John Winthrop Chanler, and they had 3 children. Richard and Winthrop Adrich own Rokeby Farm and Bronson Chanler.

Price Collier, Legendary Private Gilded Age Mansion, is Offered by Christie's International Real Estate at US$4,600,000
New York, New York—The Price Collier estate in elegant Tuxedo Park, just 38 miles from Manhattan, is one of the few homes reminiscent of the Gilded Age glamour, a period highlighted by America's upper-class opulence. What today forms the village and the areas immediately surrounding this property was then a resort for the Blue Blood society developed by Pierre Lorillard IV.
In the 1880s, Pierre Lorillard, the tobacco millionaire and sportsman, acquired approximately 5,000 acres of land and hired architect Bruce Price to build a new community, sited around three sparkling lakes and nestled in the beauty of the Ramapo Mountains.
Price Collier is a Georgian estate that retains its original ambience, graciousness, and charm, sitting on 11 acres of land overlooking beautiful Tuxedo Lake.

Georgian; multi-storied under high hip roof; red brick; limestone trim; cornice; frieze; soffit; porte-cochere; portico; tracery windows; gable dormer windows (casements); quoins; 5 brick chimneys. Built c. 1900 by Bruce Price 1845-1903. Illustrated in Brick Builder and American Estates & Gardens as the country residence of Hiram Price Collier. This stately Georgian mansion typifies the estates built in Tuxedo Park, an exclusive community for the wealthy and socially prominent of the late 19th century. Built in 1900 and designed by Bruce Price, it was "well known for its commodious servants quarters". Price Collier, 1860-1913, was the son of Robert Laird Collier, a distinguished Unitarian Minister of Maryland stock; married Katherine Delano, an aunt of Franklin Delano Roosevelt; European editor of the Forum, 1893-95; founder and first president of the Tuxedo Park Library.

[showing Keech estate bordered by Lake View Rd and Ridge Rd.]
  - Inventory form for building located on Lakeview Rd; east side; west of Ridge Rd. recording the following information: Edgar Bartolucci (owner at time of inventory). A one story rectilinear 'pavilion'. Steel frame with glass, stucco and wooden beams. Asphalt tile on cathedral gable. Central entrance (side) with two wings. Thermopane windows, sliding glass doors, One large chimney incorporated into ruin. Atriums for sculpture (house is filled with original paintings and large sculpture). Round slate steps make a winding path in a field of white gravel, this outside. Inside, heat issues from floor. Built 1970-73 by Edgar Bartolucci. This is one of the recently constructed houses in the Park and should probably be listed as an intrusion to the proposed historic district. It was, however, designed and built by designer/architect as his own dwelling, and is one of the finest examples of contemporary low-cost building in the Park. The ruin upon which it is constructed was an early estate built for Frank B. Keech from rocks taken from the site. The first transaction for this property seems to have been 1902, and Mr. Keech's mansion appears on the 1903 map as a frame dwelling (one must assume the stone foundation). It is said that Keech bid his chauffeur to set fire to it after suffering financial losses in the stock market. In the end, he did not collect, and committed suicide. All of this, 1929-30. Mr. Bartolucci and family have spent three years clearing away piles of rubble and constructing their house with a deliberate adaptation to the 'landscape'. The result is a successful marriage of diverse materials, of the old with the new.

- 41.208913,-74.21535 06614 Blair, J. Insley Tuxedo Park New York 114 1915-1922
  - Inventory form for building located on Camp Comfort Rd. recording the following information: Tuxedo Park School (owner at time of inventory). Enormous 2 1/2-story; gable ends; red brick (diagonal brick design on 2nd-story); limestone quoins & window trim; tower; dentils; elaborate frontispiece; broken pediment; engaged columns; 2nd-story galleries; scrolled dormers; slate roof. Built c. 1920, Carriere & Hastings. This monument to the era of opulence was designed by Carriere & Hastings for John Insley Blair in the early 1920's. The same architectural firm also designed the home of railroad magnate, Edward H. Harriman, in Arden, N.Y. Blair was the son of John Insley Blair, Sr., railroad builder & capitalist who before the era of consolidation "owned more miles of railroad than any individual". It was also noted that he loaned the government $1,000,000 in the Civil War period. The Blair estate included stables, gardener's cottage, greenhouse, formal gardens, chauffeur cottage and employed approximately 30 servants. In 1956 the Blair house was donated by the heirs of the estate to the Tuxedo Park School.

- 41.202084,-74.212925 07201 Mitchell, Charles E. Tuxedo Park New York 20 1923-1925
  - Inventory form for building located on Camp Comfort Rd. recording the following information: Mr. Sam Sugden (owner at time of inventory). A two and a half story stucco on tile over a stone foundation. L-shaped, gable ends, slate roof. Hipped dormers with casement windows, dormers are covered with slate.

Main front entrance has Tudor arch and leaded tracery window and stone buttresses. There are bays and two arched piazzas with buttresses. Qualities of early Gothic and Italianate. Built in 1922 by Stewart Walker and Leon N. Gillette. Richard Delafield, prominent banker (his estate Kilkare, located at the northern end of Tuxedo Lake), purchased Lot 12 from the Tuxedo Park Association in 1902. The 1903 map shows the acreage as Brook Farm, a large property with many outbuildings and a bridge over Babcock Brook. A frame cottage appears here as well and it is likely that it was the carp hatchery "once started in a mead", which Mr. Edwin Kent describes in The Isle of Long Ago. Mr. Delafield sold to Charles E. Mitchell in 1922 and this mansion designed by Walker and Gillette was constructed at that time. Cleveland Amory gives a vivid account of the Queen of Romania arriving with a retinue of sixteen to be house guests of the Mitchells with only three days notice. When Mr. Mitchell suffered heavy financial losses in Wall Street, he sold the estate to Stuart W. Cragin in 1939. Cragin subdivided the property into many parcels. The main house was turned into a home for British refugee children in 1947. Mr. Darlington purchased the estate almost ten years ago. <http://www.hrvh.org/cdm/compoundobject/collection/tpl/id/5145/rec/3>

  - "Exploring the Montauk peninsula, Long Island's southern fluke, [Robert] Moses found an irregular shoreline and a number of small islands that, he reported to Smith, "afford many miles of beaches, dunes and varied waters for cruising, fishing, swimming, golfing and other forms of recreation. Driving back along the southern fluke, Moses discovered other miles of unused beaches in Hampton Bays. He found still more on Long island's northern fluke, Orient Point, where farmers lived in farmhouses built in the seventeenth century. Searching out deserted estates, he found two in the center of the Island, one owned by the son of financier August Belmont, the other owned by a family named Yoakum. And, roaming one day far out in Suffolk county, near Wading River, he stumbled upon a magnificent brick-and-stone mansion, set on a bluff overlooking Long Island Sound, that not only was deserted but looked like it had never been lived in. Inquiring later, he found out it never had been. Roland G. Mitchell, a financier, who commissioned the architect Stanford White to design it, and who named it Wildwood, had died just as it was finished in 1906, and the spacious, high-ceilinged rooms had remained shuttered and unfurnished ever since." p.59, "Annals of Politics; The Power Broker - 1-The Best Bill Drafter in Albany" New Yorker, July 22, 1974

Kennilworth is an enclave of one hundred and sixty acres situated on the North Shore of Long Island on what was formerly the fine old waterfront estate of Roland Mitchell. No property could have a more attractive location than Kennilworth. Ensnared within the Village of Kings Point, Kennilworth is a quiet, waterfront community of exclusive estates with private roads, a beach and pool club and a private dock on the Long Island Sound. The stewardship of the community is entrusted to an association of home owners and an elected Board of Directors. The look of the community is old world with its many mature trees overhanging its gracefully winding roads. The atmosphere in Kennilworth is quiet, refined and family oriented. Imagine sitting in your yard and listening to the music of song birds or a gentle wind rustling through tall trees, while at the same time being minutes from the heart of Great Neck with its top schools, fine shopping, incredible recreation and many houses of worship. Of course, Kennilworth is just a short commute to Manhattan by either the Long Island Railroad or by car and is convenient to John F.   - Oliver Payne willed the Esopus estate to Harry Payne Bingham in 1917. Bingham owned the estate until 1933, when he donated it to the Protestant Episcopal Mission Society of New York City. Charles Osberg came to the estate in 1912 and was still handling the electrical and engineering problems at the time of the transfer. He remained on the estate until it was sold in 1942 to the Marist Brothers. These letters give some insight into the reasons for the donation by Bingham.
<http://academic2.marist.edu/foy/esopus/essays/bingham%20to%20osberg%20letters.html>

- Oliver Hazard Payne, after assembling the entire estate by late 1909, commissioned Carrère & Hastings to build the mansion and several other buildings. Payne died in 1917 and willed the estate together with $2,000,000 to Harry Payne Bingham, one of his two favorite nephews. The other favorite, Payne Whitney, inherited Payne's estate at Thomasville, Georgia along with $2,000,000. Actually, these nephews inherited virtually all of Payne's money, but most of the assets had been transferred prior to probating the will. Oliver Payne's estate is estimated at between $90 million and $300 million. One researcher lists Payne as the 24th richest man in history (when monies of different times are adjusted to match current values).
At the time Harry Bingham inherited the Esopus property, he was serving in the United States Army as a Captain in the Artillery. His wife and children moved into the mansion, but soon Bingham cut back on expenses. Elizabeth Burroughs' father, Julian was dismissed and given until April 1918 to vacate the premises. It is not known how long Bingham lived in the estate, but available evidence indicates that he moved his family from Cleveland to New York City and operated his banking and financier business out of there. Finally, in 1933 he donated the entire property to the New York Protestant Episcopal Mission Society. This organization operated on Bleecker Street and serviced the city's poor. The Society attempted to operate a school for delinquent Protestant boys on the property west of route 9-W, and a convalescent center on the property east of the highway. The Society added extensions to the Pratt House and used it as a kitchen and dining hall. This convalescent project failed about 1937, and the property remained vacant until in 1942, when it was purchased by the Marist Brothers, who moved their high school for prospective Brothers to the site from Poughkeepsie. The mansion and the English village were renovated to provide classrooms, dormitories, recreation areas, and gymnasium. The mansion became the site of the chapel, classrooms, kitchen, dining rooms, infirmary, and residence of some of the faculty. The hill leading to the river was gradually cleared of overgrowth, mostly maple saplings, and returned to lawn. In winter, it became a sledding area. Before Payne built the current stone dock, there was a landing, but since the Neidlinger property was separate from the Pratt property, the road up the hill from the landing wound up the front hill by way of serpentine switchbacks. Some of the curves were still evident in the adjacent woods in 1942-1945. In 1986, the Brothers sold 60 acres including the mansion to a private individual

  - Formerly a private estate with over 40 rooms, Hillside Inn is nestled in the hills of historic Wyoming in Upstate New York. This stately Classic Revival Mansion sits among 30 acres of serene splendor with woods, streams, hills, ravines, and old fashioned gardens.
Hillside was built as a health spa in 1851, to take advantage of the abundance of mineral spring water. The spring water is still being used today. In 1858 it was purchased as a private residence and remained in the same family for 70 years.
Hillside welcomed the nation's great artists, poets, and scientists, including notables such as John Muir, Susan B. Anthony, and the Roosevelts. Hillside served as a forum for discussion and interchange of ideas. Few American homes have ever been more fully shared with the outside world and the current owners are continuing the fine tradition. The interior and exterior of the mansion and the grounds have been restored to their original beauty, as once again Hillside welcomes visitors from around the world.

  - This is Alder Manor, and it's without question one of the most amazing places I've ever had the pleasure of scouting. Built in 1912 by William Boyce Thompson, an extremely successful copper magnate, his plan was for a 72-room country estate for entertaining (he lived in New York City at the time) on 22 acres of hilltop land in then rural Yonkers.
After both he and his wife died, the mansion was traded between owners who had no use for it and eventually wound up abandoned. Thankfully, it's been purchased in recent years, and its restoration is slowly taking shape.

  - 'The Oaks', originally named 'Masquetux' and built for Henry Baldwin Hyde by Calvert Vaux c. 1874 in Bay Shore and later owned by Hyde's son James Hazen Hyde. The elder Hyde was president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States. James Hazen Hyde was vice-president of the same company and vice-president of the National Bank of Commerce. The stick-style house was significantly altered by the younger Hyde c. 1900 and sold a few years later to Louis Bossert. Bossert was the builder and owner of the Hotel Bossert in Brooklyn Heights as well as president of Bossert Lumber Co. and Louis Bossert & Sons, Brooklyn (sash manufacturers). The house is extant but has been significantly altered to serve as the clubhouse for the Southward Ho Golf Course.

Van Bergen commissioned Frederick Law Olmsted, Jr. to create a landscape plan for the property while adding a new carriage house that, according to tradition, was designed by Richard Morris Hunt. (The formal garden area and the carriage house are pictured here circa 1913). Subsequent owners of the house were Henrietta Bates McKee (friend of the Vanderbilts and President Roosevelt), millionaire Brewster Chapman, and Herman Gudger (General Manager of DuPont during WWI and Vice-President of film-famed Goldwyn Corporation). Chapman hired Richard Sharp Smith, the supervising architecture for Biltmore Estate, to update the house in 1913. <http://www.wnchistory.org/people.html>

  - Plan #2219-4 shows lots and lands with Roebing property delineated (current St. Dunstan's neighborhood)
  - Historical Overview
    - The development of the Saint Dunstan's neighborhood began in the early 1900's when John A. Roebing, II, began procuring land from N.R. Perry on the south side of Asheville, just north of the Swannanoa River and Biltmore Village. Originally from New Jersey, John A. Roebing, II, was a civil engineer of the famed Roebing family of New York. John A. Roebing, Sr., and his son Washington Augustus Roebing (John II's father) designed and completed the Cincinnati and Brooklyn Bridges, and founded a wire rope factory, among other notable achievements.
    - In February, 1902, while residing at 134 Cumberland Ave, John A. Roebing, II purchased over 15 acres of land for $26,000. The parcel was located along the western boundary of Hendersonville Road on a hill overlooking the Swannanoa River, opposite the north boundary of George W. Vanderbilt's Biltmore Estate.

In combination with land acquired during 1899-1901, John A. Roebling had assembled nearly 25 acres of land south of the city of Asheville. With progressive foresight in infrastructure planning, typical of Asheville at the time, Roebling purchased sewer rights from G.W. Vanderbilt in 1903 for $1 in anticipation of development.

  - "In 1883, at the age of thirty-five, Hornblower formed a partnership with J. Rush Marshall. How the two became acquainted is not known, but they had been listed at the same home address since 1877, when Hornblower returned from Paris. The year the partnership was formed Hornblower's father died; his mother moved to Washington, and he built her a house, which they shared, at 1402 M Street, N.W. In 1893 Hornblower married his first cousin, Carolyn Bradley, daughter of associate justice of the Supreme Court Joseph P. Bradley and Mary Hornblower Bradley. In 1897 they moved into their own house, designed by Hornblower, at 2030 Hillyer Place. It is still standing."

Houston, Druim Moir

Hotchkin, Germantown, Mount Airy and Chestnut Hill, 1889, p. 422-24: name means "Great Ridge." name of abbey, later protestant cathedral for Co. Down, Ireland, w/ castle. "Mr. Houston's fine mansion is built of local stone, with granite trimmings and shingle roof. The location is at the end of the ridge on which the Wissahickon Inn lies. One of the most striking features of the building is a fine English Tower five stories in height, with a battlement surrounding it, containing a portion of the library in the lower story. The house is of a composite style of architecture. At the eastern side of the mansion a piazza commences which runs southwest round the tower and then to the end of the dining-room. An ample porte-cochere invites the guests to enter. The kitchen is in the rear of the carriage entrance. An embattled square-roofed erection rises in the rear of the porte-cochere, covering the entrance. Three gables in English fashion face the northeast whole an oriel rises with its conical top, next which an exposed outer chimney gives another English touch to the exterior. Adjoining this, a dormer window prettily breaks the roof. The grounds were tastefully laid out by the owner, and winding drives and natural shrubbery which adorned the ground before the erection of the house, mingle with flower and rhododendron beds planted by Mr. Houston."

from Appleton's Rural Homes: "One of the largest and most commanding suburban villas in this country is that owned by Mr. H. H. Houston, in the suburbs of Philadelphia. The walls are built and faced with Chestnut Hill gray stone, laid in coursed work, rock face, and the trimmings are of Eastern granite. Entering the building, we find the hall and stairway in oak; the parlor in butternut, the reception-room in mahogany; the library and dining-room in quartered oak; the office in cherry; the servants' quarters in white pine; and the principal bedrooms, in oak, cherry, and sycamore. Particular attention may be directed to the high wainscoting of the main hall, and to the wooden ceiling on each floor; also to the dome at the top, with a centre skylight. All the columns and arches of the hall are in oak, with carved panels and caps. The wainscoting of the dining-room and library is accompanied by paneled ceilings in oak. The work was finished in July, 1886. On leaving the house one casts a respectful glance at the large red-stone mantel in the hall and the mosaic floors in the vestibule. The architects were Messrs. G. W. Hewitt and W. D. Hewitt, of Philadelphia."

- "Considered in its more general aspect, this house has many manifestations of common sense in architecture. For example, in arranging the rooms connected with the kitchen, care has been taken that the servants shall be required to traverse as little space as possible in the performance of their duties; the butler's pantry has been put just where it is most convenient, without interfering in the least with the more important rooms. In this position it serves also the useful purpose of preventing the necessary odors of the kitchen from permeating the hall and library, and is of convenient size, with appropriate dresser, shelving, drawers and closet. The practice of incorporating what is known in England as a serving or side-board room, in the interior plan of the house, is less common here than there, although, where the house is one of any pretensions, the purpose of the sideboard-room, . . . Furthermore, the architect has succeeded in arranging the various rooms of the first floor as to provide each with the requisite space, and to locate all as compactly as possible. The drawing-room is not so large as to rob the library. Whenever an opportunity has offered for favoring one room above another, the preference has been given to those rooms in which the family pass most of their time; and for them special arrangements have been made in the interest of ventilation and heating. The value of light in these apartments could not have been more thoroughly appreciated; and there is little disposition to sacrifice this luxury for the sake of adding a convenient piazza or introducing an imposing balcony. . . . It seems as if the owner had said to the architect, 'What I desire, first of all, is a comfortable place to live in'; and as if the architects, in meeting this wish, had possessed adequate apprehensions of the necessity of treating servants well, if the full measure of household comfort was to be secured. The position of the porch, in relation to the points of the compass, has been carefully considered. Some porches are so heavily built that they dwarf the impression made by the walls themselves; and others are so large that they seem intended as places of permanent abode, or at least to serve the purpose of an entrance-hall. Nothing of this kind occurs in the house at hand; and when we come to the entrance-hall itself, we find it both artistic in its appurtenances and convenient in its dimensions, as if in memory of the fact that in our modern house it is all that remains of the old Gothic hall."

Roman Bath House and Gentleman's Bath at Berkeley Springs. (WV) [1]
These mineral springs have been prized since the time Native Americans first discovered them. Lord Fairfax maintained them as a village green and they soon became known as "Bath Square" and then "The Grove." From his first visit in 1748, George Washington became a regular at the warm springs. In 1815, the Roman Bath House was built and is still in use today. The springs include:
    - The south baths where treatments like massage are offered
    - Gentleman's Bath House where visitors can sample the clear, tasteless water
    - Spring pools where waders can feel the water bubbling up beneath them
    - An outdoor swimming pool open in the summer
Listed on the National Register of Historic Places, the springs are now known as Berkeley Springs.

  - ENGINEERING ASSOCIATION OF THE SOUTH; PAPERS Note: This Society Is not responsible as a body for the facts and opinions advanced in any of its publications; "DEVELOPMENT OF SOUTHERN ASSEMBLY GROUNDS NEAR WAYNESVILLE NC" By JW Seaver Jr Member of the Association
"At a meeting held at Chattanooga Tenn in the summer of 1910 the Laymen's Missionary Movement connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, decided to establish an Assembly Ground near Waynesville NC for the use of their own and affiliated church organizations. The selection of this location was made after visits to various places throughout the entire South and only after a reconnoissance survey had demonstrated the practicability of an exceptionally large and comprehensive development at this point. Options having been secured on some 1,200 acres of land the writer was placed in charge of the work in the late summer of that year first rerunning all the property lines and marking the corners of the entire boundary then in the preparation of a general plan toward which all subsequent work should be directed. In this last undertaking the advice of Messrs Olmsted Brothers of Brookline Mass and later that of the late Edgar F Randolph of New York both prominent landscape architects was obtained and proved to be of great assistance. It was planned to erect a dam across the valley thus forming a large lake within the grounds; construct roads, bridle paths, walks, play grounds and parks; erect several hotels for the accommodation of transient guests, a large auditorium and other public buildings install a modern waterworks and sewer system, subdividing all the remainder of the land into building lots - in short to construct a new and complete summer resort having all the conveniences of an up to date city. The first estimate of cost for these proposed improvements was, practically, a million dollars and three years experience on the work has not caused me to alter these figures materially."

- "Inspired by the dream of James Atkins and George R. Stuart, the land for Lake Junaluska was purchased for the creation of the original Lake Junaluska Assembly. Atkins and Stuart believed that the South needed a place of ministry that provided spiritual and leadership enrichment similar to the assemblies each of them had visited in Chautauqua Lake, New York, and Winona Lake, Indiana. In 1908, Atkins contacted Stuart while a missionary conference in Chattanooga, Tennessee was taking place. Although Stuart was not attending the missionary conference, he met with some conference attendees shortly after speaking with Atkins and called for a resolution to build a lakeside assembly in the South, which is now referred to as the Lake Junaluska Conference and Retreat Center. Six weeks after the Chattanooga conference, information about the project was sent out to generate interest in the creation of a lakeside assembly. Those who attended the missionary conference in 1908 set up a commission, the Southern Assembly, Inc., and granted it the responsibility to build the assembly. The Southern Assembly, Inc. purchased 1,200 acres in Richland Valley, North Carolina, and construction on the dam and an auditorium soon began." from Lake Junaluska Conference and Retreat Center, 1908-1913: Humble Beginnings" <http://www.lakejunaluska.com/events.aspx?id=10632>

  - The Odd Fellows Hall in Baltimore, Maryland, United States, is a historic building that was the meeting place of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows fraternal organization, and is now an office building. It was built about 1883 and is a five bay structure featuring a central arched entrance with brownstone Romanesque columns and architraves. In the late 1970s, an adaptive reuse project retained most of its exterior architectural character while providing modern office space in the renovated interior.[2]
Odd Fellows Hall was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1982.[1]

Before a post office was built at this spot in 1913, the First Spring of the Pilgrims looked as shown in a postcard photo. The arched sign over the spring reads: DRINK HERE AND QUENCH YOUR THIRST / FROM THIS SPRING PILGRIMS DRANK FIRST. On the wall of the house to the right the sign reads: "This Noted Spring Is On The Lot Of Land / Owned And Built Upon By / Elder Brewster 1671 / And Is The Original / Elder Brewster Spring." The post office building, added to the National Historic Register in 1986, still stands although its function was removed to a new building out of center Plymouth in the 1970s. There is a similar Brewster Spring marker on it.

  - Overview:

The Lost Pond Conservation Area is located in the extreme northwest corner of Brookline. This 30-acre tract of natural, undeveloped land adjoins the Kennard Park and Conservation Areas in Newton and the State's thirty acre Lost Pond Reservation. Together, these properties contain over one hundred acres of open woodland, rocky outcrops, marsh, bog and stream. A network of trails interconnects these conservation properties. Lost Pond, one of the few natural ponds remaining in Brookline, is a <sup>3</sup>kettle hole<sup>2</sup> pond, formed around a mass of ice left by glacial activity about 17,000 years ago. Aquaking peat bog developed on its northern edge. The Lost Pond Reservation, owned by the Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation, property lies adjacent to Lost Pond Conservation Area. The pond is located on the reservation property. The sanctuary is used for wetland protection, conservation of wildlife habitat, environmental education, and passive exploration, such as bird-watching and nature walks.

Park History:
In 1915, Frederick Kennard diverted the Lost Pond drainage to South Meadow Brook. In 1945 the Town acquired the land. It was used for the Town's incinerator and landfill site from 1952 to 1975. It has since been used as a transfer station. Subsequent leaching from the landfill site near the Pond caused deterioration of water quality. The Town transferred a section of the land to the Conservation Commission in 1982. Two citizens bought the reservation property and donated it to the state.

  - There has been a railroad station at Porter Square since the Fitchburg Railroad began operations in the early 1840s. The first station, built in 1843-45, was called Porter's Station.[5] Later stations at the site were known as North Cambridge, then later simply as Cambridge.[6] In 1869, the original station was moved to the North (now Massachusetts) Avenue bridge over the tracks.[5] A new station (depicted) was built in 1897, slightly to the southeast, behind the Lovell building (now Commonwealth Lock). In 1927, the Fitchburg Cutoff became freight-only between the Alewife area and Somerville Junction. Passenger trains from the Lexington Branch and the Central Massachusetts Railroad were diverted to the Fitchburg mainline and began to stop at Cambridge station.[7] In 1937, the Boston and Maine Railroad built a two-story brick depot by the bridge, with the ticket office at street level and the waiting room and platforms below.[8]

  - When the "new" U.S. National Museum building, now known as the National Museum of Natural History, opened its doors on March 17, 1910, it housed art, culture, history, and natural history collections. At the time the Smithsonian was founded in 1846, its legislation provided for the National Museum. Spencer F. Baird, the first Curator of the National Museum and second Secretary of the Smithsonian, oversaw the development of the Smithsonian as the national museum of the United States. The Museum's early collections included the artifacts and specimens from the United States Exploring Expedition, 1838-1842, and the collections from the great surveys of the American West in the 1850s, 1860s and 1870s. The collections were originally housed in the Smithsonian Institution Building or "Castle." In 1881, they were moved to the first U.S. National Museum building, now known as the Arts and Industries Building. By 1882, however, Museum Director G. Brown Goode was already pleading for more space, and the Smithsonian Board of Regents resolved to expand the overcrowded Smithsonian facilities with a third building.
On January 30, 1903, the U.S. Congress appropriated funds to the Smithsonian Institution for a new museum, based upon an initial study by William Henry Holmes, Curator of Anthropology at the National Museum. The local architectural firm Hornblower and Marshall was selected to design the building, and ground was broken for the new building on June 15, 1904.
In 1905, during the construction of the building, Smithsonian Secretary Samuel P. Langley halted the work to alter the Hornblower and Marshall design of the central domed rotunda. The Smithsonian was unhappy with the architects' ornate French baroque design for the entrance. They wanted something simpler and more sober. Charles Follen McKim, of the famed architectural firm McKim, Mead, and White, was quietly brought in to develop a new solution. McKim had been serving as an architect member advising the Senate

Park Commission—which was then engaged in restoring Victorian, red-brick Washington to the monumental, white neoclassical city envisioned by the founding planners. McKim developed a new Roman profile for the dome and central pavilion, and simplified other elements of the exterior as well. After these modifications, construction of the Museum proceeded.

  - The Wildlife Conservation Society was originally chartered by New York on 26 April 1895 as the New York Zoological Society with a mandate to advance wildlife conservation, promote the study of zoology, and create a first-class zoological park. Its name was changed to the Wildlife Conservation Society in 1993. Among the founders of WCS were Andrew H. Green, best known as the father of greater New York City, and Henry Fairfield Osborn, Columbia University professor and curator of the American Museum of Natural History. Theodore Roosevelt and other notable New Yorkers were also involved in the Society's creation.
The Bronx Zoo (formerly the New York Zoological Park) was designed along the lines of other cultural institutions in New York City, such as the American Museum of Natural History. The city provided the land for the new zoo and some funding for buildings and annual operating costs. WCS raised most of the funds for construction and operations from private donors, and selected the scientific and administrative personnel. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wildlife\_Conservation\_Society
  - THE BRONX ZOO
The Central Park Zoo, the oldest Zoo in New York City, began as a menagerie, purportedly opened when the park's workers received a bear and other animals as gifts. By 1864 the menagerie had a separate budget published in the annual report of the parks department, and it was a popular attraction despite the poor condition of its animal cages. It survived proposals by real-estate developers to abolish it or move it to Manhattan Square (now the site of the Museum of Natural History), to another location in Central Park, or out of Manhattan altogether. Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux included zoological grounds in their design of Prospect Park (1866), but the zoo did not open until 1893.

New York State awarded a charter to the New York Zoological Society in 1885 that empowered it to build a zoological garden. William Hornaday (1844-1937), a well-known zoologist and one of the founders of the National Zoological Park in Washington, became the director of the project and selected a site for the new zoo in southern Bronx Park. Plans were drawn up by Heins & Lafarge in 1897, and construction began in the following year. The New York Zoological Park, which became known as the Bronx Zoo, opened in 1899. Its naturalistic, parklike settings were in marked contrast to the small exhibits in Central Park. In 1902 the Bronx Zoo appointed the first full-time veterinarian at a zoo in the United States. Breeding sanctuaries were set aside for the nearly extinct American Bison, a project that influenced wildlife conservation efforts worldwide.

  - Boston Harbor Chronic Disease Hospital - a quarantine facility located out on Long Island, a narrow island in the harbor - was Boston's answer to the isolation hospital on Ellis Island. Borrowing heavily from some aspects of the latter - including the aboveground passageways for transport - the hospital was used to contain various illnesses brought by ship to the area. After it was no longer needed for this purpose, it served many other functions, including as a shelter for chronically ill homeless and as a juvenile detention facility. Currently, several buildings in the complex - including this nurses' residence - lie abandoned. <https://plus.google.com/111433926516886244464/posts/RBhRU4F9RhG#111433926516886244464/posts/RBhRU4F9RhG>

- Boston Light (est. 1716) on Little Brewster Island is the oldest continuously operated lighthouse in America. Fort Warren on George's Island (completed in 1851) was used in every war since the Civil War until it was decommissioned in 1951. Deer Island served as the site of the Suffolk County House of Correction for more than 100 years (1882-1991), and is now the site of the Massachusetts Water Resources sewage treatment facility. The city's chronic disease hospital was located on Long Island, which now serves as the site of a homeless shelter." p.2, Report #587, HARBOR ISLANDS 2000 Census of Population and Housing <http://www.bostonredevelopmentauthority.org/PDF/ResearchPublications/587HIslands.pdf>
- "The Tuberculosis Question and the Log Island Hospital
As a consequence of Dr. W.T. Councilman's detailed statement, published recently in the Boston Herald, and to which we alluded in our issue of last week, an impression appears to have arisen that the design is to convert the Long Island Institution into a hospital for tuberculosis. This naturally is not the fact, and a careful reading of Dr. Councilman's statement will show that his plan, as outlined, is to place a hospital for tuberculosis on Long Island along with the hospital already there established. For many years there has been on Long Island a hospital for chronic disease accommodating between two and three hundred patients in connection with the almshouse, and including in its numbers many persons suffering from tuberculosis. This hospital must continue to exist whatever may be done with the tuberculosis patients already there. As previously stated on more than one occasion, we are in favor of establishing at Long Island a municipal hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis, but the further fact should not be lost sight of that the development of a hospital for chronic disease in general has now been going on for many years, and has finally reached a stage when more rapid growth may be expected in the near future. The city needs and must have an adequate hospital for the chronic tuberculous. It also requires no less urgently a hospital for sufferers from other forms of chronic disease, whose needs, as Dr. Councilman says are as great as those of the consumptive and whose sufferings are often greater." p.87, Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, Vol. CLII, no. 3.   - The Re-use of the former Malden Hospital
Status
Hallmark Health System reacquired the former Malden Hospital site at the end of May. The site had been purchased three years ago by Deaconess Abundant Life Communities, who planned to re-develop the area into a senior living community called "Parkview on the Fells."
Unfortunately the project fell victim to the tough economy and could not secure the necessary funding to move forward with construction, despite support from the community and successful pre-sale numbers. Hallmark Health has not made any decisions on the future of the former Malden Hospital at this time, but still believes assisted living for area seniors is the best fit for the site as well as for the community.

Hallmark Health is disappointed the “Parkview on the Fells” project could not move forward as planned, as it would have been a great use of the site and an important addition to the city of Malden.

Hallmark Health is actively looking for a buyer for the property and has a number of feelers out to developers both in the state and across the country. It could take up to a year before any final decisions are made on the future of the property.

The former Malden Hospital is located at 100 Hospital Road in Malden, near the Medford line.

- "All of the fraternities represented at Amherst have chapter houses and in most cases own them. These buildings are large enough to accommodate at least a portion of the members beside providing parlors reading rooms and a lodge room for general use. The chapters of Chi Psi Psi Upsilon and Alpha Delta Phi now own the entire southern end of the square bounded by the village Common, Northampton Street and South Prospect... Returning to the Amherst House and proceeding in the direction of the College at the right are the Alpha Delta Phi Amherst Chapter houses which occupy the lot on the corner of Pleasant and Sellen streets and extending back to North Prospect Street. The new house was erected in 1890 and is a three story and basement building the materials used being Elyria sandstone pressed brick and terra cotta. On the first floor are drawing banquet and reading rooms while the two upper floors furnish accommodations for eighteen members of the chapter. The house stands some distance back from the street and faces the village Common." pps.147-148, The Handbook of Amherst, Massachusetts, Frederick Hills Hitchcock, Emily Dickinson, 1891

- Alpha Delta Phi was the first national Greek letter fraternity to establish a chapter at Amherst. It developed from an original nucleus of eleven members of the class of 1837, who organized in September 1835, under the name of Iota Pi Kappa to promote the study of history. Iota Pi Kappa was not destined to long life, for in September 1836, there arrived in Amherst two delegates from the Yale Chapter of the Alpha Delta Phi, who, having gained the good graces of the members of Iota Pi Kappa, proposed that Iota Pi Kappa change its name and constitution to that of the Alpha Delta Phi. Finally, after two or three months of debate, during which time nearly all the members of Iota Pi Kappa were one by one initiated into Alpha Delta Phi, an agreement was reached (“duobus exceptis”) to discard the constitution of Iota Pi Kappa and to adopt that of Alpha Delta Phi. The first meeting of the new Chapter was held on Monday, January 9, 1837. The charter members of the Amherst Chapter numbered seventeen members of the classes of 1837 and 1838.

The history of the Chapter has been on whole one of well-ordered growth and development. During the first five years of the Chapter's history its membership was confined to the Senior and Junior classes. But the advent of another fraternity in 1841 compelled the admission of the sophomores and freshmen. From then until 1946 the Chapter consisted of members of all four classes, chosen, for the most part, at the beginning of freshmen year. Until 1879, however, the two lower delegations did not wear the badge of the Fraternity.

In 1874, a chapter house was purchased and the Chapter took possession of its new property in August 1875. This Chapter house was the first in Amherst.

The great fire on the morning of July 4, 1879, which swept away the business part of the Amherst, did not spare Alpha Delta Phi; but the Chapter had the good fortune to save all its records. A new chapter house was built (1889-1890), occupying a commanding situation near the old house. In 1929 on this same piece of property another and larger home was constructed.

While the fraternities were dormant during World War II the Alumni Council, Faculty and Trustees made a study of conditions, with the cooperation of representatives of all the fraternities. As a result, after the war the fraternities were allowed by the Trustees to reopen in the fall of 1945.

Following a concerned effort by the alumni Brothers to renovate the physical condition of the chapter house and to reestablish successful rushing, initiations were renewed in the fall of 1946, and the Chapter continued to flourish and was once again the pre-eminent fraternity at Amherst College.

The Sisters of Notre Dame purchased Grayling Hall and 17 acres of the property and utilized the structure as a rest home for nuns with tuberculosis. In 1941, the Sisters opened Julie Country Day School in what was formerly the stable and slowly added to the school facility. The Sisters sold Grayling Hall to The Trustees in 1999 after it had remained vacant for a number of years. In 2000, The Trustees razed Grayling Hall and slowly restored the grounds of the former Estate. In 2001, The Trustees opened the 10 acre Pierce Park and it is now part of the 170-acre Doyle Center & Community Park. After the school closed in 2006, Louise Doyle purchased it for The Trustees, who then sold it in 2010 to the Boys and Girls Club of North Central Massachusetts. <http://www.thetrustees.org/places-to-visit/central-ma/dcpc-history.html>

"Dec 16 1912: This city has erected and has opened for treatment a tuberculosis hospital accommodating 25 patients. Plans have also been drawn for a scarlet fever and diphtheria ward on a lot of land owned by the city and adjacent to the tuberculosis hospital which when completed will cost in the neighborhood of $70,000 but no active work has been done to carry these plans into execution. The Associated Charities of the city maintain a clinic where patients may be examined for tuberculosis which is open daily from 11 to 12 am and 5 to 6 pm. There is a temporary hospital of wooden construction erected about two years ago which is located near the city hospital. This contains two rooms each 10 by 12 feet which may be used for diphtheria and scarlet fever cases when necessary but it is not practicable to send patients there in the winter time on account of the poor construction of the building the latter being controlled by the board of health." p.396, Monthly Bulletin of the State Board of Health of Massachusetts, Volume 7, Massachusetts.   - Littleton Regional Hospital History, Littleton Hospital Association, 1906 – 2001

  - In 1906, sixty-two residents of the Littleton area recognized the need for a local hospital. They resolved to fill that need by incorporating themselves into the Littleton Hospital Association, and on April 3 conducted their first organizational meeting. The objective of the association was to establish and maintain a community hospital.
  - Under the leadership of Dr. William J. Beattie and with major financial support from John J. Glessner, industrialist and summer resident, the association quickly developed the momentum to found a hospital. Financial support came as a natural response to the need that residents had for hospital care. Those without personal experience knew of incidents like the one, "at the small home of a Gilmanton Hill Road resident who was so tall that he laid on the doctor's folding operating table - his feet in the kitchen, his head in the bedroom (where the late Dr. Giles gave the anesthetic) and the incision point in the dining room." By September 1906, funds had been raised and the ground was broken for the new Littleton Hospital. The original two-story brick building with stately white pillars and large double piazza was dedicated on June 27, 1907. The Hospital had an operating room, and bed capacity for 15 patients.
  - The Littleton Hospital Training School for Nurses opened in 1923 in a new, white, wooden structure adjacent to the hospital. This training school served as a source of nurses for the hospital and as a community resource for education and training of area women motivated to a career in health care. In the Fall of 1935, this school was "discontinued indefinitely" as a result of the economic pressures of the period. Some 80 women were "capped" after their years of training in the Littleton Hospital. Area population growth and a need to modernize caused the association to undertake the first major construction program, which was concluded in 1932. A three-story building was joined to the rear of the original hospital increasing the bed capacity to 47. A maternity department, a laboratory, and a new operation suite were contained in the addition. A new heating plant and laundry were located in a separate building. The new Littleton Hospital was recognized as one of the best in New England for its size.

Constructed in 1912, it served as the Ventura County Courthouse until 1962. Designed by famed Los Angeles architect, Albert C. Martin Sr. in the "Beau Arts" or Neo-Classic style, the building features the faces of 24 monks on the facade and stained glass skylights and domes in the interior. Restored and converted into Ventura's City Hall in 1972, it stands as one of the state's premier civic buildings. The west wing, formerly the County Sheriffs Office and Jail, was restored and added to the City Hall designation in 1988. - o email exchange from April 2013:

"Hello -

We're trying to determine if the current location of the VC administration building (S. Victoria and Telephone Rd) would be the same location as it was in 1911-12? We have some records indicating that the Olmsted firm did some very small consultation on the site and are looking to confirm where that site would have been in that time period. " [ - ONHS staff]

"This is an interesting question. The short answer is "no."

The somewhat longer answer is that 1911-1912 is a transition period. In 1911 all County functions were conducted in the first Ventura County Courthouse, located on Santa Clara Street, between Figueroa and Junipero Streets. This building had been built in 1873. In 1912 construction was begun on the second county courthouse (now San Buenaventura City Hall), located at the intersection of Poli and California Streets. This building officially opened on July 5, 1913.

Interestingly the City of San Buenaventura is celebrating the centennial of this building on July 25 with a series of events. I imagine this is the building / site your firm was involved with.

Hope this helps,

Charles Johnson, Librarian"

- Bergen Regional Medical Center is a hospital in Paramus, New Jersey. Bergen Regional is both the largest hospital with 1,070 beds and the largest licensed nursing home in New Jersey. Additionally, with 323 beds, Bergen Regional is one of the largest medical resources providing a continuum of care for the behavioral health community.

The facility was known as Bergen Pines for about 80 years until the name was changed to Bergen Regional Medical Center in 1998. Since then, the hospital has been privately managed and considers itself a "community hospital." - History The Polk Center's roots stretch back to 1893 when then; Pennsylvania Governor Robert E. Pattison appointed a commission to select a site in Northwestern Pennsylvania for the creation of an "Institution for the Feeble-Minded." At that time, only one such institution existed in the Commonwealth, the Elwyn School, was located in the eastern part of the state. After careful consideration, the Polk site was chosen for its abundance of natural resources, fertile farmland, and access to railways. Construction soon began on the 2,000 acre campus and Polk Center opened its doors in the spring of 1897. Many of our historic buildings were modeled after the architectural theory of Dr. Thomas Kirkbride. Communities are offset so that each room has access to sun and fresh air, the proposed therapy of the day. From 1916 to 1917, Mr. T. Kawada, a Japanese teacher and psychologist, visited Polk Center and worked alongside Superintendent Dr. Murdoch. Based on what Mr. Kawada learned, he returned to Japan and designed a home and training school for those with mental retardation. In 2004, a group of professors from Japan's University of Tsukuba returned to trace Mr. Kawada's experience and update themselves on the progress of Polk Center through the years. They left impressed, and published their experiences in a Japanese textbook. By 1955, the census at Polk Center exceeded 3,400 persons. This number dropped to 3,000 in 1970 and has continued to decline over the next decades following the advent of more community-based services. Today, we are committed to an interdisciplinary model and seek the varied expertise of many staff and family members to support the people, who call Polk Center home, with important life decisions.

- The State Institution for Feeble-minded of Western Pennsylvania was established by act of the State Legislature on June 3, 1893, which act authorized the Governor to appoint five commissioners to select a site and build an institution for the accommodation of the feeble-minded children of Western Pennsylvania. Under the provision of this act the Governor appointed a commission consisting of the following: Norman Hall, Christopher Heydrick, George A. Jenks, W. Horace Rose and George W. Guthrie.

The site was to consist of a tract of land not less than 500 acres in extent, so located as to be most accessible by railway facilities to the counties of Western Pennsylvania; to be good, arable land, well adapted to the preservation of the health and the occupation and maintenance of the inmates, with an adequate supply of good water and natural facilities for drainage.

The buildings to be of the best design for the construction of such institution, without expensive architectural adornments or unduly large or costly administrative accommodations. The buildings to be in two groups, one for the educational and industrial departments and one for the custodial or asylum department, with such other sub-divisions as will best classify and separate the many diverse forms of the infirmity to be treated. All on such scale as to accommodate not less than 800 inmates, planned and located for easy and natural additions as population demands. The total cost of buildings and grounds not to exceed the sum of $500,000.

The commissioners selected a site of 850 acres at Polk, Venango County, Pa., on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway, six miles west of the City of Franklin. The site, which consists of about 400 acres, is beautifully situated on a plateau 1116 feet above sea level, with good drainage and with an abundance of fine spring water. The commission selected F. J. Osterling, of Pittsburgh, as architect, and plans were prepared on a semi-cottage plan.

- Polk Center (Polk State School and Hospital)
1894, Frederick J. Osterling; 1902–1903, c. 1915, Fredrick J. Osterling, with Samuel D. Brady and Louis Stevens, associated architects; many additions. Lakewood Circle

In 1893, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania commissioned a large residential home for the “feeble minded.” Institutionalized care of the mentally ill began in Pennsylvania on a large scale in Philadelphia in the 1850s. Polk State School and Hospital expanded the system to the fourteen counties of the northwest, purchasing approximately 773 acres in and around the Thomas McKissick farm adjacent to the borough of Polk. This flat land was bracketed by two creeks and located on the rail line six miles west of Franklin. The buildings form one of the most interesting ensembles in western Pennsylvania in their siting, integrity, and homogeneity of the design.

Set north of U.S. 62, the campus is first visible across a wide, flat field. Frederick J. Osterling of Pittsburgh designed an enormous campus of red brick buildings with fat, rounded turrets and arched windows. The main administration building resembles the courthouse of a rural county seat, combining elements of classicism, as in the Ionic pedimented porch, with such Chateausque features as the rounded conical-roofed corner towers, steeply sloping roofs, and turrets.

Large, homelike structures behind the administration building give the campus a collegial air. Circular, one-story structures with conical roofs accommodate meeting rooms with interesting interior trusswork. Samuel D. Brady and Louis Stevens worked with Osterling on the early-twentieth-century additions: Murdoch Hall (also called the Hospital and the Nursery building), built between 1902 and 1903, and School Hall and the auditorium.

Polk was occupied by 1897, and over the years has housed over 13,000 developmentally disabled persons. The complex was almost self-sufficient, with its own spring-fed water source, a power generation plant, hospital, sewage plant, greenhouse, laundry, garage, and farm. Residents were trained in various skills, including shoe cobbling and sewing. At its peak in 1953, the campus had 102 buildings, 3,490 residents, and a staff of 1,955 in an area intended to house 1,200. In the 1970s, the state changed the name to Polk Center and community-based treatment became the norm. The trend in treatment shifted over the years from a medical model to a rehabilitative and then an interdisciplinary model. To facilitate the newer form of treatment, an indoor pool facility was completed in 1995 by I. J. Chung Associates. For the past thirty years, Polk Center's population has grown significantly smaller. In 2000, there were 478 residents and 1,137 staff in 90 buildings on 802 acres. - "Pío Pico State Historic Park features one of southern California's few remaining 19th century structures made out of the massive sun-dried mud blocks called adobe. Pío de Jesus Pico IV was one of California's most remarkable historical figures. He rose from poverty to become influential and wealthy. He was born at the San Gabriel Mission on May 5, 1801. His life spanned a remarkable time that saw the Spanish, Mexican and American flags flying over Alta California. He was twice governor of Alta California under Mexican control. His heritage included Spanish, Italian, Native American and African. After America took Alta California by force, Pío Pico returned to California. In 1848, he began buying an 8,894 acre property. He named the land El Ranchito, the little ranch. Around 1853, Pico built an adobe ranch house near the San Gabriel River. He sold cattle during California's gold rush, becoming wealthy. Beginning in the 1860s, crops of wheat, barley, oats, orange trees and grapes were grown at El Ranchito. He opened the Pico House in Los Angeles in 1870. This three-story hotel was the finest in southern California at that time. Pío Pico's fortunes declined. The end of the gold rush, unpredictable weather, bad luck in business and unethical actions of other businessmen depleted his assets. He was defrauded out of his beloved El Ranchito. He died on September 11, 1894, in Los Angeles, at the home of his daughter Joaquina Moreno. The Pío Pico Adobe fell into disrepair. In 1907, Harriet Russell Strong and others came together to restore the Pío Pico Adobe Ranch House. The house was deeded to the State of California in 1917."

- Site Overview
The five acre park encompasses historic gardens and the beautiful restored adobe home of Pío Pico. It is registered as California Historic Landmark NO. 127. A bell marks the original El Camino Real, which passed directly in front of the park during Pío Pico's time. The park was once part of Pío Pico's 9,000 acre ranch, Rancho Paso de Bartolo. Visitors can enjoy the park with picnics, bird watching and exploring the parks features including; a fifteen room adobe with interpretive displays, an horno (bread oven), a dovecote and a children's archaeological sand box. The park is located near the entrance to the Greenway Bike Trail. http://www.parks.ca.gov/?page\_id=621

  - The history of Holy Apostles begins centuries before the college was created. The land on which the college sits also is the site of the oldest home in Cromwell, the Ranney House, built by one of Cromwell's founding families. This home, now known as St. James Hall, became famous as the starting point for the amazing adventures of a subsequent owner, Capt. John Riley, whose cargo ship ran aground in Africa in 1815 and who was sold into slavery, along with his crew, by desert nomads. Riley's travails were chronicled in Dean King's best-selling book, "Skeletons on the Zahara" (Little, Brown & Co.).
The Ebenezer Beckwith Octagonal House, now known as St. Peter's Hall, was erected in 1854. The operations of Cromwell Hall, a private sanatorium that treated various emotional disorders, moved to the site in 1883, after which the adjacent Octagonal Barn (now St. Andrew's Hall) was remodeled and enlarged with a brick addition. At one time Cromwell Hall had 14 buildings with 112 rooms. Patients came from all across North America and included Bing Crosby and Judy Garland.
The campus' extraordinary natural setting was enhanced through the work of the famed Olmsted landscape architecture firm whose founder Frederick Law Olmsted designed New York City's Central Park. In 1908, the Olmsted firm created a small arboretum on the property.
Cromwell Hall closed in the early 1950s and the property lay unused for several years before being acquired by the Rev. Eusebe Menard, O.F.M., who founded Holy Apostles Seminary as a minor seminary to help older men discern their call to the priesthood.
The seminary was originally operated by the Missionaries of the Holy Apostles, an order of priests founded by Father Menard. In 1984 the order invited the three Roman Catholic bishops in Connecticut to join the Board of Directors, along with lay men and women. This expansion of the board gave the college and seminary the benefit of episcopal oversight, along with ecclesial and professional expertise. The bishop of the Diocese of Norwich, currently the Most Rev. Michael Cote, serves as the school's chancellor.

  - The Lamont Family
In 1929, Thomas W. Lamont (1870-1948), a Wall Street banker, constructed a weekend residence overlooking the Hudson River in Palisades, New York. He named the estate "Torrey Cliff" after John Torrey, a prominent botanist who had spent summers on the site from about 1854 to 1865.
In 1948, Thomas W. Lamont died and his widow, Florence Corliss Lamont (1873-1952), an alumna of Columbia University, donated the estate to Columbia. She wrote, in part, "I am giving the property in my husband's memory. My gift is unrestricted," but she was pleased with the University's plans to make the property a center of geological research, and assured that "the world [would] benefit."
Lamont becomes Lamont-Doherty
In 1969, the Observatory was renamed "Lamont-Doherty" after a major contribution from the Henry L. and Grace Doherty Charitable Foundation. Henry Latham Doherty (1870-1939) was the founder of the Cities Service Company. The Henry L. and Grace Doherty Charitable Foundation is a major supporter of oceanographic institutions.
The Geological Observatory becomes the Earth Observatory
In 1993, the Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory was renamed the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory in recognition of its growing scope of expertise and influence in the Earth sciences.

History of "Cluett House" Which Survived 60 Years

BY EVELYN OUTCALT

The house which was destroyed by fire yesterday was built in 1910 for Walter H. Cluett of the Cluett Peabody Co., makers of Arrow Shirts, who came to Saranac Lake to "cure." It was the first building built here by J. J. O'Connell, founder of J. J. O'Connell and Sons, Inc. which is still doing business in Saranac Lake.

The house also was the first erected in the 70-acre tract, known as Rockledge Park, which Cluett, Arthur Chalmers — a manufacturer from Amstredam and New York City — George Duryee and Eddy Whitby real estate men from Montclair, N. J. had acquired and set about developing. They formed the Rockledge Co. and engaged the Olmsted brothers of Brookline, Mass., well known landscape architects of that day, to plan for sub-division of the property. The company sold three acres late that year to Alexis W. Stanley, founder of the Stanley Tool Co., who was the second person to build a home on the site. J. J. O'Connell was his builder also. - 39.715721,-84.19673 06945 Beck, M. Z. Dayton Ohio 0 Glenbeck Ave., Kettering, OH (Carrmonte)
  - Though these are, to me, fairly different communities, no one calls them "Carrmonte" or "Berkley Heights" anymore. They are all "Southern Hills" and are, believe it or not, part of Kettering.
In fact, this was where Kettering was born.
Dayton was doing a big annexation push in the late 1920s, annexing the suburban parts of Van Buren Township that are known today as Belmont, and trying to annex Oakwood (though the Oakwood story is a bit more nuanced ).
For some reason Dayton did not try to annex Southern Hills at that time. Which was a big mistake, as when Dayton did make a move on this area after WWII, the Southern Hills community association decided to push for the incorporation...of not just Southern Hills but of all of Van Buren Township, effectively foreclosing any further annexation attempts by Dayton (and Oakwood) to the south. This new suburban entity was to be called "Kettering", after its most famous resident.
This was rather controversial at the time, and led to three de-annexation attempts by various parts of Van Buren Township. Only one was successful, which led to the creation of Moraine.
So one can say the beginnings of postwar suburbia as something "seperate" from the city was here, as was the political beginnings of Kettering.

  - The study hall is used as an assembly room. Every boy has a small office containing a desk, chair, and any other article of furniture which he may wish to make for it in his manual training class. The offices are separated by partitions, which are low enough to permit assemblies.
Along one side of the lunch-room are a series of open cupboards in which the pupils keep their dishes. There are also, of course, tables on which the pupils may eat their lunches and a sink in which they wash their own dishes.
There are three primary rooms, one is a class room for the older pupils of the Junior Department, the second is a classroom for the younger group, and the third is a recreation room for both. The recreation room contains a work bench, wading-pool and sand-pit.

  - The school began its first session in June 1917. For two months, the 33 boys that had enrolled and the two teachers met in a building located in what Morgan called Delco Dell Community. Since it was summer, the students did most of their work outdoors. When Morgan considered building something to house the school, he found state authorities required many arrangements that would raise the cost to about $25,000. In order to avoid such expense, he recommended using the greenhouse, 225 feet long and 50 feet wide, that Charles Kettering had built for research into photosynthesis. When Kettering offered to donate this greenhouse to the school, he quipped that he would rather raise kids than cucumbers. To make it suitable, the directors had carpenters lay flooring and build eight foot high partitions to create different classroom spaces. Transportation to and from the city was easy. The trolley, or electric traction, stopped fifty feet from the building. WOODCREST MANSION
Completed in 1902
Woodcrest was first the residence of James W. Paul, Jr. who commissioned Horace Trumbaur, well known Philadelphia architect, to design his country estate. The mansion's terraced front looked over Radnor Valley.

Mr. Paul's wife, Frances Drexel, was deceased at the time the house was built. Her father's financial firm was Mr. Paul's place of employment. The three Paul children and their father entertained at Woodcrest in Main Line fashion, as did many of their surrounding neighbors.

In 1925, Mary Paul Munn sold Woodcrest estate to the family of Dr. John T. Dorrance. Dr. Dorrance, at the time, was President of Campbell Soup Company where, earlier, he had developed the method of condensing soup. <http://www.cabrini.edu/Library/archiveweb/Woodcrest.htm>

- "Woodcrest," currently referred to as "The Mansion" is the main building of Cabrini College and also the first building to have been erected on the property.

Several administrative offices are located within the Mansion, in addition to offices held by several professors and the college President.

The lower levels of the Mansion, quite posh in appearance, often play host to both campus and external functions. The lawn behind the Mansion is often the site of commencement services for not only the college itself, but also for nearby Randor High School.

HISTORY

Woodcrest Radnor, King of Prussia and Eagle Rds. 1900

Currently Cabrini College Woodcrest was the residence of James W. Paul, an investment banker, and his three children. The mansion was accompanied by extensive stables, a gatehouse on King of Prussia Road, cow barn and dairy, springhouse, garage and a pavilion for the pool, all on 230 wooded acres. All buildings were designed by Horace Trumbauer in the Elizabethan-Tudor style. One of the most impressive features of Woodcrest was the stable complex. It was capable of holding 60 horses and also housed the estate's non-household staff. His nephew Oglesby Paul was known locally as an excellent landscape architect, and designed the plantings for the entire estate. Paul came from an important family. His father was a well-known attorney in Philadelphia, his wife was daughter of banker and Wayne developer Anthony J. Drexel, and his sister was married to New York's William Waldorf Astor, who died on the R.M.S. Titanic in 1912.

1900: Woodcrest construction begins

1901: The stables were built

1906: Estate undergoes renovations, including the addition of a stone wall around the courtyard

1908: The estate is inherited by Paul's two daughters and son, none of whom decide to live in the house

1914: Daughter Ellen Drexel Paul builds Woodcrest Lodge on the grounds of the original estate

1924: John T. Dorrance, president of the Campbell Soup Company, buys Woodcrest

1925: St. Davids Golf Club moves to Radnor, and acquires part of the estate

1954: Woodcrest sold by the Dorrance family to the Sisters of the Sacred Heart; turned into an orphanage

1957: Becomes the campus of Cabrini College

[showing much larger "Cairnwood" farms estate of John Pitcairn adjacent to "Academy of the New Church"]

- “Cairnwood Estate was designed in 1892 and completed in 1895. As one of the firm’s earliest large scale country house commissions, and the only private estate designed by Carrère & Hastings still existing in the state of Pennsylvania, it is a unique combination of rustic and high style resembling a French Chateau. It is unknown how the Pitcairn’s were first introduced to the firm, but it is possible business interactions between Standard Oil executive Henry M. Flagler and John Pitcairn may have precipitated the interest. The collections of John and Gertrude Pitcairn include an 1887 show book of Flagler’s hotels entitled, “Florida, American Riviera, St. Augustine, The Winter Newport,” and showcasing the Carrère & Hastings designs and interiors hotels Ponce de Leon and Alcazar. Whatever the reason, archival records indicate that Mrs. Pitcairn was most influential in the designs of the home and landscape for the estate. John travelled extensively on business, leaving Gertrude in charge of the plans under the guardianship of his brother-in-law, Robert Glenn.”

(1896) Dear Mrs. Pitcairn,

I have so often thought of the delightful visit which I so much enjoyed with you all that I am prompted to write you not only to tell you how much I enjoyed my visit but also to tell you how much pleased I was with the interest you take in your place and the care you have taken of it. I must tell you that I do not think that I have ever built a house for anyone who has taken such an intelligent interest in further developing what I have endeavored to accomplish. So much is dependent upon the good taste and judgment of the client that the architect oftentimes (sic) suffers—when he is not really responsible. I cannot resist the impulse I feel in writing you how much pleased I was to see the great improvements accomplished. Hoping soon to see you again and with kindest regards to Mr. Pitcairn...

Always faithfully yours, Thomas Hastings

  - The outbreak of the American Civil War would threaten the welfare of the family, the house, and the gardens themselves. But the plantation would recover from the war to see additional growth of the gardens as they became the focus of the plantation over agriculture when the gardens opened to the public for the first time in 1870 and saved the plantation from ruin. Since that time, the plantation and gardens have evolved and grown into one of the greatest public gardens in America with a rich history. To explore that history in-depth and hear the stories of those who lived and worked there over the centuries, visit Magnolia Plantation & Gardens today.

- WORK OF F. W. NORRIS. "A Boston newspaper printed the following description of Forris w. Norris, under the column "Who's Who In Real Estate." In conservative Boston gray hair and at least a couple of score of years still seem to be necessary ingredients to conspicuous success In the real estate business, A few of the big brokers and operators have not yet reached half of the allotted Biblical three score and ten years. But most of them are well beyond. Outside of the city limits, however, the reverse seems to be true. Most Of tho successful real estate men still have several milestones to pass before reaching 40. Forris W. Norris for example, one of the most successful real estate men outside the limits of Boston, has just turned 30, and scarcely looks his age. In the 10 years during which Mr. Norris has been connected with the real estate business he has risen from office boy to the head of a number of development companies, has become an extensive operator in Cambridge and elsewhere and a large property owner. Mr. Norris, incidentally, is another one of the young men who aro developing residential property in the suburbs along lines recommended by city planning boards —and priving [sic] that it pays. Mr. Norris has sub-divided a big estate in Cambridge, for example, in such a way that it approaches in attractiveness the exclusive Brattle Street section of that city, near which it Is situated. Several other properties are being developed by Mr. Norris With similar effect. In addition, Mr. Norris has found time to build a number of apartment houses in Cambridge and Boston. One group of buildings alone —in the Cambridge parkway— represents an outlay of more than $750,000. Mr. Norris has also given freely of his time and energies to the Industrial development of Cambridge. A few years ago, as chairman of the Cambridge Industrial Commission, Mr. Norris, in conjunction with Mayor Barry, induced between 40 and 60 large manufacturing concerns to locate in that city. Three years of such activity resulted in an increase of more than 30 per cent in Cambridge industries. Besides being the organizer and active head of a number of real estate development companies, Mr. Norris is director of the Fidelity Trust Company and Guaranty Trust Company. He is also vice-president of the Cambridge Board of Trade, a member of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, Boston City Club and the Belmont Spring Country Club. His home is in Cambridge." Cambridge Tribune, Volume XXXIX, Number 49, 3 February 1917

- The Ashland County Historical Society is located in the heart of the Center Street Historical District of Ashland, Ohio. Its campus consists of three houses. The Manor House was the first purchased. It was built by J.P. Cowan in 1859 and sold to P.A. Myers in 1906 to be given to his son Guy and his new bride Kate as a wedding present. It was likely the first brick structure on the street.
Guy and Kate resided in the home until the death of P.A. Myers. After that, several Myers relatives lived there. In 1952, the home was given to Ashland College to be used as a residence for the President. In 1969, the University used it as a Historical Center until the sale.
In 1981, the Historical Society, after the generous people of the county supported a fundraiser, bought the house. The Carriage House followed. Then in 1996, thanks to a generous bequeath from Eloise Ridgeway Noonan, a long-time board member and supporter, the Noonan House was built.

Cheney Bridge to Elm Bank
The Cheney bridge provides access to Elm Bank, a state-owned property with two miles of frontage on the river. The 182 acres of woodlands, fields, and old estate property is surrounded on three sides by the Charles River. Elm Bank was given its name in 1740, when Colonel John Jones acquired the land and planted elms along the banks of the Charles River. The site was later occupied by the Loring, Broad, and Otis families before being sold in 1874 to Benjamin Pierce Cheney. At the time of Cheney's death in 1895, the property contained over 200 acres (80 hectares), and passed to his eldest daughter Alice in 1905. In 1907, Alice and her husband, Dr. William Hewson Baltzell, engaged an architectural firm to build a neo-Georgian manor house, and the most prominent landscapers of the day, the Olmsted Brothers, were hired to design and improve the gardens. The entire site was placed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1987 and is currently owned by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and leased to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

Waban Arches

When I came to the confluence with Waban Brook, I paddled upstream to the Waban Arches. These support the Sudbury Aqueduct which carried water from a reservoir in Framingham to Chestnut Hill Reservoir in Boston.

Published: Sunday, June 09, 2013
Laura Barton may finally have found her ideal space.
Ironically, it's just a stone's throw from the corner location her art gallery called home for 15 years.
The owner of Laura's Fine Art Gallery & Framing sat down with FCL at her new address, 20 Railroad Place, Westport, to talk about her life's path and the goals of her business, which has literally taken a new lease on life.
Fifty-five-year-old Barton was born in Norwalk Hospital and raised in Westport on St. John's Place. Her dad, Eugene Bulakites, owned Bill's Smoke Shop on Main Street, which is now Williams Sonoma. She attended Bedford Elementary, now the site of Westport Town Hall, and Bedford Junior High, which is now Bedford Middle School. In 9th grade, the family moved to the Black Rock Turnpike area of Fairfield, where Barton finished high school at Andrew Warde.

  - "Ormsby Village-Ridgewood: Ormsby Village was the popular name given to a residential institution for dependent and delinquent children that was funded jointly by the city of Louisville and Jefferson County between 1920 and 1968...Traditionally, Ormsby Village referred to the main campus on LaGrange Rd. This facility had its origins in Progressive Era reforms in the care of children by local government. The county Government (Jefferson County Fiscal Court) purchased the 400-acre Hamilton-Ormsby farm near Lyndon for its new child care facility, the Parental Home and School Commission, in 1912...In 1920 this agency was merged with the older and much larger City of Louisville Industrial School of Reform to form the Louisville and Jefferson County Children's home...By 1923 the former Industrial School property at Third and Shipp Streets was sold to the University of Louisville, and an expanded facility was constructed on the Ormsby land under the leadership of the new superintendent, George Colvin" p.678-679, The Encyclopedia of Louisville, John E.   - At dusk last night I biked through the Hurstbourne Green Office Park in Eastern Jefferson County, east of Louisville. Long before this area sprouted with corporate glass boxes and manicured greenery, it once was considered the "country." That's why back in the 1920s a home and complex for "wayward" children was built here on the advanced idea that rehabilitating kids in the fresh rural air would do them better than punishing them and forcing them to stay in prison-like buildings in the grimy city. From 1920 to 1967, The Louisville and Jefferson County Children's Home operated properties in this part of the county, one for white kids called Ormsby Village and another for black kids called Ridgewood (about a mile or less to the southeast).
Ormsby Village was mostly cleared out in the '80s and '90s for development, yet one large and very stately home from the complex still stands almost completely hidden behind a lush grove of trees. Few people in the area seem to realize that this creepy, but beautiful old abandoned home still exists just a few yards from the corner of Ormsby Station Road and Ormsby Station Court. It appears, at least from the exterior, to be maintained somewhat, possibly by the managers of the office park. It doesn't appear dilapidated, but there is no sign of life inside. The windows reveal a pitch dark interior. The house stands like a ghost, out of place in its time. Very eerie and isolated despite being in the middle of heavy development.

- “Baltimore Polytechnic Institute was founded in 1883 when Joshua Plaskitt petitioned the city authorities to establish an engineering school. The school was called the Baltimore Manual Training School and opened with 60 students in a building on Courtland Street. In the 1890's the school's name was changed to the Baltimore Polytechnic Institute. The curriculum was revised and strengthened under the leadership of Dr. Richard Grady (1883-1886) and Lt. John Ford (1886-1890), the first two principals of BPI. Poly soon became one of the country's outstanding engineering high schools under the leadership of Lt. William R. King (1890-1921), the third principal of the school.

The steady growth of the school population resulted in the school's relocation to North Avenue and Calvert Street in 1913. Under the leadership of Dr. Wilmer Dehuff (1921-1958), the curricular offerings were expanded and many athletic programs and other activities were developed. In 1952, Poly became the first high school in the Baltimore City school system to racially integrate its student body.”

- "A vision of shops, condos at schools' headquarters" May 02, 2005|By Laura Loh | Laura Loh,SUN STAFF
It's the place where Baltimore parents and students have flocked to air their frustrations over city schools for nearly 20 years.

Now some city officials envision turning the school system's hulking North Avenue headquarters into condominiums and retail stores. They've gone so far as to suggest that a restaurant could be housed on the first floor, with outdoor seating on the tree-lined terrace...

The property on which the impressive gray stone building sits has gone through several incarnations over the decades. In 1868, it became the site of the Maryland School for the Blind. The parcel was sold to the city in 1909, and Polytechnic Institute was built in 1912.

Poly moved to more spacious grounds on West Cold Spring Lane in the 1960s. And 20 years later, the city spent $14 million to convert the former high school building into a central office for then-school Superintendent Alice G. Pinderhughes' scattered administration - a lavish project that drew criticism and earned the building the nickname "Alice's Palace."

  - Hilda Worthington ("Jane") Smith was born in New York on June 19, 1888. She received a bachelor of arts degree from Bryn Mawr College in 1910 and a masters' degree from the same institution the following year, having studied economics, psychology and philosophy. Later she continued her studies at the New York School of Social Work, earning a diploma in 1915. In 1916 Miss Smith became Director of the Bryn Mawr Community Center and from 1919 to 1922 served as Dean at Bryn Mawr College. In 1921 Miss Smith was named Director of the Bryn Mawr Summer School for Women Workers, a pioneer school in the field of Workers' education. Her growing interest in this area of education resulted in her appointment as Chairman and Director of the Affiliated Schools for Workers (later the American Labor Education Service), a group of cooperating resident workers' schools. In 1929, Miss Smith established the Vineyard Shore Workers' School at her family's home in West Park, New York. However after four years this school closed for financial reasons. In 1939, the Hudson Shore Labor School (formerly the Bryn Mawr Summer School) moved to the Smith property in West Park. No longer affiliated with Bryn Mawr, this school served both men and women from industry and the service trades. It was taken over by Rutgers University in 1952 and merged with its Labor-Management program.

- There is a cluster of historic homes around the junction of NY Route 9W and Floyd Ackert Road running down to the Hudson River. These are close to the site of early farms in the area which stretched along the route of the predecessor of NY Route 9W. Heartsease, although remodelled and enlarged, is in fact based on one of the original West Park farmhouses. This property was owned by Hilda Smith, a significant national figure in the field of education of industrial workers. She opened the Vineyard Shore School on the site in 1929. This closed in 1932, and seven years later the Bryn Mawr Summer School, a summer school for women in industry, relocated to these building and became the Hudson Shore Labor School. The school remained here until 1952 when it became part of the Labor Management Program at Rutgers University. South of Heartsease is Vincroft, another site of an old farmhouse. It is a small estate encompassing a late 19th century stone mansion. Lawns now sweep down to the Hudson River where once there was farmland and vineyards. South of Vincroft, located on the east side of NY Route 9W near the junction of Floyd Ackert Road, is a Greek Revival residence believed to have been designed by Alexander Jackson Davis and built in 1835. It is one of the best examples of this architectural style in Ulster County. The large house has five bays and a portico with Ionic columns overlooking the Hudson River. Later named "Aberdeen", the property was once part of Hilda Smith's Labor Schools, but is once again a residence. There is a stone house down by the dock on the Hudson River. Originally a dock-keeper's home, this building is now a residence. The building resembles the plan of the Ascension Church rectory.

  - Binghamton University was first established in 1946 as Triple Cities College to serve the needs of local veterans returning from World War II of the Triple Cities area. Thomas J. Watson of IBM was an early supporter of the college and provided some of the initial support and helped to establish it in Endicott, New York; the college was a branch of Syracuse University. Originally, Triple Cities College offered local students the first two years of their education, while the following two were spent at Syracuse. However, starting in the 1948-1949 year, students were allowed to earn their degrees entirely in Binghamton. When the college split from Syracuse and became incorporated into the State University of New York (SUNY) in 1950, it was renamed Harpur College, in honor of Robert Harpur, a Colonial teacher and pioneer who settled in the Binghamton area. It was one of only two public liberal arts schools in New York state in 1950 (the other was Champlain College, Plattsburgh). Of the four University Centers (Stony Brook, Albany, Buffalo and Binghamton), Binghamton was the first to join SUNY.
Thomas J. Watson is an important figure in Binghamton's fabric. Having been a founding member of IBM in Broome County, Watson viewed the region as an area of great potential. In the early 1940s he collaborated with a group of local leaders to initiate the creation of Triple Cities College (of Syracuse University), which would later become Harpur College and then finally Binghamton University. He donated land at and around the original IBM site in Endicott, which the school called home for a few years.

Hollingsworth Siter and wife. It included several existing buildings, one later named the White House, and a brick swimming pool and barn<sup>10</sup>. The cost was $70,000. A second transaction occurred December 10, 1920 when 104 adjacent acres were purchased from William Taylor and wife for $55,000.<sup>11</sup> That property contained an old house later named the Taylor House. Now owning 234 acres the Trustees began to construct the Ellis College.

The original four buildings of the Newtown Square campus were designed by John Toorey Windrim (1866-1934) who also was the architect for several buildings constructed in Girard College during the 1910-1930 period. His father, a Girard College graduate, was the architect for the Girard Estate and designed several buildings constructed in Girard College during the 1870-1900 period. It is interesting to note that the Ellis College Administrative building and school, later called Ellis Hall and sometimes Main Hall, has some of the same characteristics as Founder's Hall in Girard College except on a smaller scale. Although the main building and the cottages (Nos.6 and 7) on each side of it were designed by John Windrim, they were not among the original buildings. Their construction was delayed nearly 8 years while people in Philadelphia petitioned the court to prevent construction, claiming the Will's intent was to have the school built in Philadelphia and poor girls were not benefiting from the Trust.

  - History

St. Andrew's School has an interesting and inspiring history. Having gone through many changes, the school has kept the core values of our founder, the Reverend William Merrick Chapin, that are still as vibrant as they were more than 100 years ago. St. Andrew's was founded in 1893 by Father Chapin, the Rector of St. John's Episcopal Church in Barrington. He was a visionary and man of great generosity of spirit. Among his many accomplishments, he founded several churches and two schools.

St. Andrew's began when Father Chapin found a homeless boy begging at the Providence train station and provided him a home. Without hesitation, he took the boy in and founded a school. The School was incorporated in 1896 as St. Andrew's Industrial School and it quickly became an almost self-sustaining community. However, Father Chapin never intended for the School to be based only on an Episcopal foundation: he believed that St. Andrew's should serve any student who needed it, regardless of race or religious background. This thinking continues today, and has created a small community that is truly as diverse as the world in which we live.

  - 1777 Moses Brown served on a committee to produce a plan for the education of children of the New England Yearly Meeting of Friends.
  - 1784 The New England Boarding School opened in Portsmouth, Rhode Island.
  - 1788 Post-Revolution instability and a remote location hurt the school's efforts to recruit qualified students and faculty, and the Meeting decided to close the school for one year. In fact, the school remained closed for 31 years, during which time Moses Brown held onto the school's funds and vision.
  - 1819 Moses Brown donated 43 acres of his farm for the relocation of the school to Providence. The school's future was secure when it received a generous bequest of $100,000 in the will of Moses' son, Obadiah, at the time the largest single contribution made to an American educational institution.
  - 1879-1904 In the wake of the Civil War, the school made significant academic and social shifts and the school's curriculum was broadened with music, art, and a more organized athletic program.
  - 1884 The first day students were admitted.

1926 As a result of changing national attitudes toward coeducation, Moses Brown became a single sex school, admitting only boys.

1976 The school returned to its roots and once again enrolled girls.

  - When the college was established in 1854 as the Rhode Island State Normal School, its goal was to provide teacher preparation to young people from Rhode Island. With the dedication of a new building in 1898, the institution began a period of steady growth, evolving first into a teachers' college, the Rhode Island College of Education. In the 1958-59 academic year the college moved to its current Mount Pleasant campus, and in 1959 was renamed Rhode Island College to reflect its new purpose as a comprehensive institution of higher education. With an enrollment predominantly from Rhode Island and nearby Massachusetts and Connecticut, the institution historically has served as a "College of Opportunity" for first-generation college students. <http://www.ric.edu/aboutric/history.php>
  - Renamed the Rhode Island Normal School, the institution settled into a period of steady growth punctuated by periodic moves to larger quarters.[4] The general favor won by the school after its first difficult years had passed and was confirmed in 1898 when it moved into a large building specially constructed for it on Providence's Capital Hill near the State House (this space is now occupied by the Providence Place mall). At first, the Rhode Island Normal School offered admission to both high school graduates and non-graduates, with high school graduates expected to complete their studies in one year. However, by 1908 the program had been lengthened to two and a half years and restricted to high school graduates. In 1920, the Rhode Island Normal School was renamed Rhode Island College of Education by order of the General Assembly, the college now offering a four-year program which upon completion one would receive a Bachelor of Education degree. At this time the observation school, which dated back to the 1890s, was renamed the Henry Barnard School. The college's graduate program also originated in the early 1920s and the first master's degrees were conferred in 1924.

For the next three decades the college remained a small, teachers' college with a student body of four to six hundred men and women, most of whom went on to teach in the elementary and junior high schools of the state. Early in the 1950s that calm was shattered by intense debate that arose over the college's role in the state system of higher education and for a time serious doubt was cast on its continued existence. There were plans to merge the institution with Rhode Island's other four-year college, the University of Rhode Island. After careful consideration, the Board of Trustees of State Colleges decided to keep the college independent and strengthen it overall.

In 1958, the college was moved to its current campus in the Mount Pleasant section of Providence.

- The University was first chartered as the state's agricultural school and agricultural experiment station in 1888. The site of the school was originally the Oliver Watson Farm, the original farmhouse of which is still maintained as a small museum. In 1892, the school became known as the Rhode Island College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. The first class had only seventeen students, each completing their course of study in two years. In 1909, the school's name was again changed to Rhode Island State College as the school's programs were expanded beyond its original agricultural education mandate.

- The institution was modelled on the American state university, with an emphasis on extension work and applied research.[12] The University of Saskatchewan, at Saskatoon, was granted a provincial charter on April 3, 1907.[13] A provincial statute known as the University Act. It provided for a publicly funded, yet independent institution to be created for the citizens of the whole province.

The governance was modelled on the provincial University of Toronto Act of 1906 which established a bicameral system of university government consisting of a senate (faculty), responsible for academic policy, and a board of governors (citizens) exercising exclusive control over financial policy and having formal authority in all other matters. The president, appointed by the board, was to provide a link between the two bodies and to perform institutional leadership.[12] The scope of the new institution was to include colleges of arts and science, including art, music and commerce, agriculture with forestry, domestic science, education, engineering, law, medicine, pharmacy, veterinary science and dentistry.

Saskatoon was chosen as the site for the University on April 7, 1909 by the board of governors. On October 12, 1912 the first building opened its doors for student admission.[13] It awarded its first degrees in 1912.[12] In the early part of this century, professional education expanded beyond the traditional fields of theology, law and medicine. Graduate training based on the German-inspired American model of specialized course work and the completion of a research thesis was introduced.[12]

Battleford, Moose Jaw, Prince Albert, Regina, and Saskatoon all lobbied to be the location of the new university. Walter Murray preferred the provincial capital, Regina. In a politically influenced vote, Saskatoon was chosen on April 7, 1909

  - Peabody traces its history to 1785, when Davidson Academy was chartered by the state of North Carolina, of which Tennessee was then a part. In 1806 the school was rechartered and used the name Cumberland College until 1826. The name changed to University of Nashville in 1827. In 1875, when the school was receiving financial assistance from the Peabody Education Fund started by George Peabody, the state legislature amended the charter to establish the State Normal School. In 1889 it became Peabody Normal College.[6]
  - After 1911, Peabody College was located directly across the street from the campus of Vanderbilt University. It later became affiliated with Vanderbilt University, and is now known as the Peabody College of Education and Human Development at Vanderbilt University.[5]
  - It was located on the site of the campus of the former Roger Williams University, a school for African American students which burned around 1906.[7] The site was then occupied by Peabody, which was then for whites, although its "demonstration school" (now University School of Nashville) became one of the first high schools in Nashville to be desegregated in the early 1960s.

  - Once the home to UVM's main library until its move to Bailey library, Billings was designed by one of the country's most influential architects of the era, Henry Hobson Richardson. After the library left Billings, it became UVM's main student center until the Dudley H. Davis Center was finished in 2007. Billings will return it to its library roots when UVM's special collections (along with the Holocaust Studies Department) move in. In Billings you'll find a hallowed atmosphere with large windows, wood floors, high ceilings and soft couches popular with students hitting the books. Cook Commons, located one floor down, is a constantly busy spot, with an open dining area and a large cafeteria.

  - "Camp Farwell is located on 100 acres on Hall's Lake (Hall's Pond to the natives), near the little village of West Newbury, Vermont.
  - Julia Hutchins Farwell was born in 1855. An only child, she grew up in nearby Wells River. She is listed in the town history as one of 43 Newbury natives to graduate from college in the late 1800s, and only three of them were female. She graduated from Mt. Holyoke Seminary and worked for four years in a parochial school on Long Island, but resigned this position to study in Germany. When Julia returned to the United States, she studied for a year at Radcliffe before transferring and graduating from Barnard College. One year later she received an MA from Columbia College. For the next 23 years she taught at Miss Mason's School for Girls, also known as The Castle School. The lure of spending summers in Vermont must have been strong for Julia; she ran her camp for 29 years. When she sold it in 1918, it was with the stipulation it continue to be called Camp Farwell, which remains today."   - After the War, a normal school ("normal" meaning to establish standards or norms while educating teachers) was formalized in 1868, with former Union brevet Brigadier General Samuel Chapman Armstrong (1839–1893) as its first principal. The new school was established on the grounds of a former plantation named "Little Scotland", which had a view of Hampton Roads. The original school buildings fronted the Hampton River. Legally chartered in 1870 as a land grant school, it was first known as "Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute."

  - Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute became simply Hampton Institute in 1930. With the addition of departments and graduate programs, it was accredited as Hampton University in 1984.[5] Originally located in Elizabeth City County, it was long-located in the Town of Phoebus, incorporated in 1900. Phoebus and Elizabeth City County were consolidated with the neighboring City of Hampton to form a much larger independent city in 1952. The City of Hampton uses the Emancipation Oak on its official seal. From 1960 to 1970, noted diplomat and educator Jerome H. Holland was president of the Hampton Institute.   - Founded as Augusta Female Seminary in 1842 by Rufus W. Bailey, Mary Baldwin College is the oldest institution of higher education for women in the nation affiliated with the Presbyterian Church. Among its first students, totaling 57 young women (paying as much as $60 per semester to attend), was Mary Julia Baldwin.
  - Augusta Female Seminary was renamed Mary Baldwin Seminary in 1895 in honor of Miss Baldwin, and became Mary Baldwin College in 1923. Although much has evolved on campus since its early days in the mid 1800s (including the addition of a few good men in our graduate and adult programs), MBC continues to thrive as one of the finest residential colleges for women in the nation and a leader in personalized, transforming education.

  - Parkersburg High School was one of the very first high schools in the state of West Virginia. The school was founded in 1867, and the original location of Parkersburg High School was in downtown Parkersburg. The current building housing PHS has a Tudor Style architecture with three stories. It was designed by noted Ohio architect Frank Packard (1866–1923), and built in 1917, making it one of the oldest school buildings in West Virginia and it remains the largest high school campus in the state. Later additions included Stadium Field and a multi-story gymnasium.[6] It is located in the Parkersburg High School-Washington Avenue Historic District, listed to the National Register of Historical Places in 1992

  - Monday, December 15, 2008, Early Moraine: The New Edgemont
The Moraine story really begins in Edgemont.
During the 19th century Edgemont was one of Dayton's zones of industrial expansion. The Short Line (later Big Four and New York Central) cut through the neighborhood in the early 1870s, and industrial development followed starting in the 1880s.
Development pretty much followed the railroad south, with factories lining the railroad and housing plats on either side. By the early 1900s development was approaching the bottom reach of the long bend of the Great Miami, which formed a natural barrier.
One of the last developments (1907) was by the Edgemont Real Estate Company , controlled by the Estate of Adam Schantz
This subdivision is probably the forerunner of Moraine as it appears to have been planned as a mix of large lot industrial sites and town lots for residential development, as sort of a very basic, diagrammatic "planned community"

  - In early geological times, before the gravel ridges in the area between Carrmonte, Hills and Dales, Moraine farm and Delco Dell had been formed, the eastern side of the Miami valley was formed not by the high land now stretching southward from Calvary cemetery to the Grand View farm, south of the Stroop farm and west of Delco Dell, but by the high territory extending north and south along the Lebanon pike, more than a mile east of the Delco Dell. Along this eastern margin of the ancient Miami valley, the advancing ice sheet plastered the hill slope with till, a part of this till rising considerably above the level of the till in the gravel pit northwest of the Calvary cemetery.

  - Runnymede Playhouse
Straight ahead of you at the stop sign is the former site of the Runnymede Playhouse. Today, homes built in the 1970s cover the secret the playhouse once held. Originally part of the Talbott family estate, the Runnymede Playhouse was first a social and entertainment center for the Oakwood community. Groups would gather to play games, sports, and hold social meetings in the massive building. The playhouse was large enough for 1200 women to play bridge together. The complex included indoor tennis and squash courts as well as a ballroom and stage.
During WWII, the US Army used the playhouse for research and production of polonium triggers for the atomic bomb. The Monsanto Chemical Company ran five total research sites around Dayton. The Runnymede Playhouse, known as Unit IV, housed much of the scientific research relevant to the Dayton Project prior to the completion of the better-known Mound lab in Miamisburg. Although the playhouse's Oakwood neighbors had no idea of the activities going on at the site, nearly 90 people worked at Unit IV. From the Dayton Daily News: "Between big trucks rolling in and out, the floodlights and heavy-duty power lines strung all over, the place was a real mess," Lee Jones of Oakwood recalled in a 1983 story about Runnymede Playhouse, part of the Talbott family estate where the polonium was refined. "But those were the days when you knew enough not to ask questions."
In 1949, operations moved to Miamisburg, and the following year the Runnymede Playhouse was dismantled and later buried in Tennessee.

Fenwick Farm, Lundy's Ln., Niagara Falls, Canada
  - Clark Hill was the original name of the beautiful estate situated on the high ground just north-west of Dufferin Islands. It is today known as Oak Hall and is the current administration offices of the Niagara Parks Commission.
It was once the home of Colonel John Clark, who commanded the 2nd Lincoln Militia for the British during the War of 1812. The original house disappeared many years ago, but it stood well back from Portage Road amongst the many trees on the site near the present structure of Oak Hall. Colonel Clark occupied the home until his death in 1837.
Following his death, the home was purchased by Samuel Street Junior. Mr. Street operated a mill along the banks below the moraine. This property formerly included Dufferin Islands as well.
During his ownership, Mr. Street rebuilt the house and made many improvements to the property.
The next owner, Mr. Sutherland Macklem, inherited a considerable portion of the Mr. Street property. Mr. Macklem made many more improvements to the grounds surrounding the islands. Macklem opened Dufferin Islands (formerly Cynthia Islands) to members of the general public. Dufferin Islands were later designated parklands under the fledgling Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Parks Commission.
Soon after the death of Sutherland Macklem, his property was sold to James R. Smith on August 5th 1898. Mr. Smith was a wealthy lumber merchant from Tonawanda, New York.
In 1904, Grace Grant inherited the property from her father James Smith. Grace was married to Doctor Harry Grant, a successful Buffalo oculist. Grace and her husband took up residence in the existing house.

In 1916, the Grants sold the house and adjoining property to Walter H. Schoellkopf Sr. (1882-1955).

On July 15th 1924, mining millionaire, Harry Oakes purchased the property from Walter H. Schoellkopf Sr..

Harry Oakes hired the architectural firm of Findlay and Foulis to design and build the Tudor style mansion. This is the same firm which designed and built the Table Rock House. This project took four years to complete.

In 1928, Harry Oakes and his family moved into their rebuilt mansion which was situated on top of Clark Hill overlooking Dufferin Islands. The cost of this home exceeded $500,000. Mr. Oakes rebuilt this estate house to include thirty-five (35) rooms, seventeen (17) bathrooms and air conditioning throughout. It also included a swimming pool and a five hole golf course. Harry Oakes named his estate Oak Hall.

In 1935, Harry Oakes and his family moved to Nassau in the Bahamas in order to avoid taxes.

In 1943, Lady Eunice Oakes, deeded Oak Hall to the Government of Canada so that it be used as a convalescent hospital for the Royal Canadian Air Force. When there was no longer a need for the convalescent hospital, the Canadian Government deeded the property back to Lady Oakes.

Sir Sydney Oakes, the eldest son moved back to Oak Hall with his wife, Lady Greta. They lived here for several years before returning back to the Bahamas.

On May 25th 1959, the Niagara Parks Commission purchased the Oak Hall estate.

Called Niagara's "Castle on the Hill", this historical mansion sits on a cliff overlooking picturesque Dufferin Islands. This stately mansion was the former home of several prominent Niagara Falls residents. The earliest known occupant of the home was Colonel Thomas Clark, a commander in the Second Lincoln Militia during the War of 1812. He obtained the home in 1816 and called it Clark Hill. Upon his death in 1837 the home was passed to Thomas Clark Street. Street rebuilt the home in 1850 incorporating part of the old house in the new design. Street's nephew Sutherland Macklem inherited the home from his uncle where he lived until his death in 1898. In August of 1898 the property was sold to James R. Smith of Tonawanda New York. Smith was a wealthy lumber merchant and he lived in the home until his death. The home was then passed on to his daughter Grace in 1904. Grace was married to Dr. Harry Grant a Buffalo oculist, and they resided in the home until they sold it in 1916 to Walter Schoellkopf. Schoellkopf came from a prominent Niagara Fall's New York family, who was associated with the development of hydro electric power in the Niagara Falls, New York area. The mining millionaire Sir Harry Oakes, bought the mansion in 1924 from Shoellkopf, and renamed it Oak Hall. He had the mansion renovated which took four years, adding an entire wing. Oakes made his fortune when he found a gold mine in Kirkland Lake Ontario. He lived in the stately home for six years with his family until he moved back to England and later to Nassau in the Bahamas. The home currently serves as the offices for the Niagara Parks Commission, which purchased the home in 1959. Several rooms have been preserved to their original splendour and are open to the public. There is also a par-three golf course on the grounds, which is open to the public.

- “Now Owns Big Oakville Block: Harry Ryrie of Toronto has purchased fifteen hundred acres; half million dollars has been laid out in buying several large farms
With the closing of one deal a couple days ago, Harry Ryrie now owns a block of 1500 acres at Oakville. He has been quietly adding farm after farm for more than a year, buying the greater proportion of the block during the last summer...Asked what his intentions were he declared he had made no plans for the property's use. He couldn't say if he would transform it into a personal estate. He has a farm and summer residence at Clarkson's, four miles to the east...The 1500 acres purchased lies in an almost complete block a mile and a quarter wide extending northerly from just below the Grand Trunk railway tracks. A farm of 100 acres entailed in such a way that the present occupant cannot sell cuts into the block, which at its nearest point is a mile east of Oakville Station. James Ryrie, Harry Ryrie's brother, owns nearly 300 acres and a fine residence on the Lake Shore road due south of the 1500 acre block. Between them they own almost 2000 acres in the Oakville and Clarksons fruit district.” Toronto World Sept. 15, 1913

- 43.724878,-79.373834 09256 Vaughan, J. J. Toronto Ontario 0 190 Yonge St., Toronto, ON
  - Donningvale, perched on the crest of a hill at the end of a long and winding driveway that meanders through 31 acres, was built by John James Vaughan, vice president of The T. Eaton Company Ltd. in 1930-1931 to designs drawn by the architectural firm, Burden and Gouinlock. Now known as the Vaughan Estate, it was Elizabethan in style, the main ivy-covered facade planned around a gabled main entrance with higher gables at each end.
 The grounds of both mansions were designed by landscape architect, Gordon Culham, who had a talent for making modest size properties seem immense in the grand English country house tradition.
 The interiors of both houses are sumptuously appointed. Mahogany and walnut paneling line the walls of several rooms. Massive fireplaces dominate the principal spaces. Intricate cornice moldings, carved plaster ceilings and leaded casement windows fitted with gracefully curved handles decorate every room.
 In 1966, the two properties were taken over by the University of Toronto.
 J.J. Vaughan had died that year and the widow of J.S. McLean had moved to a smaller house. Sunnybrook used the McLean House as a clinical facility. Graceful archways were blocked in and fitted with regulation fire doors. Garish EXIT signs capped paneled doors. Paint peeled, plaster cracked, the grounds were neglected.
 Then, in 1982 McLean House was rescued by the Junior League of Toronto and the Interior Designers of Ontario who renovated and revitalized the mansion and opened it to the public as a designers' showcase home. When the event finished, Sunnybrook maintained the house as a popular meeting place and venue for social events, the profits from which are put towards medical research at the hospital.

Then in October 1991, Vaughan Estates opened for public use, similarly renovated and revitalized and enlarged by a 10,000-square-foot addition. Six interior designers donated their time and talent to seeing that the Vaughan Estate was brought to life once again.

Two important houses from an important time in the development of Toronto have been preserved.

The next stage in McLean House's history began in 2009. In the spring of 2009, McLean House was site of the Junior League of Toronto Designer Showhouse. Toronto's top interior designers transformed each of the rooms in the house during March & April of 2009. In May, McLean House was opened to the public to view the designers' work. Once the Showhouse was over, in June 2009, McLean House became available for meetings, conferences, and private social events. <http://estatesofsunnybrook.tumblr.com/Heritage>

- SAWMILL ONCE FLOURISHED AT FAIRGROUNDS SITE

August 04, 2006 12:00 am

- Dick Mason
- The Observer

People attending the Union County Fair this week might be able to hear echoes of a noisy and industrious past if they listen closely and have a good imagination.

Decades ago the fairgrounds were the site of a large sawmill. It encompassed the entire area where the fairgrounds and the Mavericks grounds are today, said La Grande historian and author Robert Bull. Bull has done extensive research on the mill for his next book, "A Little Bit Of This & A Little Bit Of That: La Grande And Union County Trivia, Vol. II." The book will be published next spring.

The mill Bull is writing about opened in 1907 and was built and run by the George Palmer Lumber Co., started by George Palmer, who was the company president. Palmer was born in Vermont and moved to Oregon from Iowa. He came to La Grande in 1904 and became a prominent member of the community, serving on a bank board and doing much charity work.

"He was a good, upstanding citizen," Bull said.

Palmer died in 1922, and his mill was sold to the Bowman-Hicks Lumber Co. Almost nothing about the mill changed after Bowman-Hicks took it over, Bull said.

Much of the lumber processed at the mill was cut in the Palmer Valley north of Elgin and in west Wallowa County near Howard Creek and Smith Mountain. Logs were transported by train to the mill in La Grande.

A railroad line ran to the south entrance of the mill where there was a large pond. All of the logs were immediately dumped into the mill pond. This was dangerous work and at least one man was killed when logs crushed him as they were being transferred to the pond, Bull said.

The pond was where the south fairgrounds parking lot is today. The pond had a large concrete block that held a light post. The block can be found in the parking lot today.

Other features of the mill included a large refuse burner.

Bowman-Hicks operated the mill through about 1940 when it was closed. It is not known why the mill closed, but Bull believes competition from the Mount Emily Lumber Co. mill, which opened in 1925, may have been a factor.

Most of the structures at the Bowman-Hicks mill were torn down. Today only the old office building remains, Bull said, adjacent to the east fairgrounds entrance. The building is used every year at the fair.

The Union County Fair began using the site of the old mill sometime in the 1940s.

- Shore Acres State Park

Perched on rugged sandstone cliffs high above the ocean, Shore Acres State Park is an exciting and unexpected combination of beautiful natural and constructed features. Once the grand estate of pioneer timber baron Louis Simpson, Shore Acres features lushly planted gardens with plants and flowers from all over the world. Something is in bloom almost every day of the year.

In the landscaped area you'll discover a formal garden, an oriental-style pond and two rose gardens which include an All American Rose Selection display. From Thanksgiving through New Years, the gardens are ablaze with thousands of colored lights and holiday decorations put up by community volunteers and The Friends of Shore Acres in cooperation with the Oregon Parks and Recreation Department.

After seeing the garden, you can stroll down a trail to a secluded ocean cove at Simpson Beach or skirt the cliff's edge to see spectacular ocean vistas which often include towering waves crashing against the shoreline after a storm and migrating grey whales. On the site of Simpson's vanished mansion, a fully enclosed observation building will allow you to view the ocean and protect you from the weather. The observation building has interpretive panels describing the history of the Simpson estate.

The Friends of Shore Acres operate a gift and information center at the entrance to the formal gardens where visitors can purchase items that relate to the historical and natural features of Shore Acres. The Friends also sponsor a variety of horticultural and cultural events at the garden throughout the year. A large Monterey pine (pinus radiata) dates back to the historic Louis J. Simpson estate. A member of the national Big Tree Register, the pine is 95 feet tall with a 208-inch trunk circumference and a 74-foot crown spread. It shares co-champion honors with a Monterey pine in Carmel, California, which has a smaller trunk, but a wider crown. It was probably planted around 1910.

- TBD 03992 Biddle, Mrs. (Captain) William S. Portland Oregon 0
  - "Suit for divorce on the ground of desertion was filed in the Clatsop County Circuit Court Wednesday by Mrs. Margaret Burrell Biddle against Captain William S. Biddle. The complaint is short, setting forth their marriage, in Portland December 22, 1897. Her husband deserted her, Mrs. Biddle charges, March 18, 1913. Copies of the complaint and summons were received by Sheriff Word yesterday to serve on Captain Biddle, but he was out of the city. The suit was filed by Attorneys Smith & Barrett, of Astoria. Mrs. Biddle asks for the custody of their three children, Margaret, aged 15; William, aged 13. and Martin, aged 12, on condition that their father be allowed to visit them at reasonable times. No property rights are mentioned in the complaint. Since their marriage whenever they have been in Portland Captain and Mrs. Biddle have been prominent at select social affairs. Before their marriage Mrs. Biddle was Miss Margaret Burrell and has always been identified with Portland's smart set. She took an active part in all local horse shows and won several blue ribbons, both for her mounts and her horsemanship. She is a sister of Walter F. Burrell and Mrs. Gordon Voorhies. Though Portland has always been her home, Mrs. Biddle has traveled extensively, both before and after her marriage. For the past several years she has maintained a home at Seaside, where she is living at present, with her children, whom she devotes much of her time. She still maintains a home in Portland, at 777 Marshall street. Captain Biddle has apartments at the Arlington Club." Morning Oregonian, May 1, 1914 <http://oregonnews.uoregon.edu/lccn/sn83025138/1914-05-01/ed-1/seq-16.pdf>
  - "The Nelson House, built in 1924 and designed by the distinguished Portland architect Jamieson Parker, is a modest sized, but fine example of the English Cottage style. Some of the elements typical to the style and incorporated into this house are the fairly steeply-pitched gable roof with minimal eaves, asymmetrical plan, irregular, multi-light window configuration with dormers and picturesque details. The wood shingle cladding adds a note of informality that is further heightened by the naturally landscaped setting.

In 1923 he [Jamieson Parker] was married to Margaret Biddle and together they raised three children. He designed their house in Waverly Heights, Portland. He was an excellent violinist even taking his instrument to play around the campfire while on outings with his hiking group. Jamieson Parker was known as a humorist and creator of limericks. He was a consummate reader and had been quoted as saying "a day without reading 2 hours was a day lost". He was a good father and in addition to being a fine architect, he was a landscape gardener as well.

Jamieson Parker suffered from Hypertension and Bright's Disease (a liver ailment) and died in Portland, Oregon 8 December 1939 at the age of 44.

  - Harry W. Hogue was but five years of age when the family removed to Portland, so that his early education was acquired in the schools of this city, being continued through successive grades until he had completed the Latin course in the Portland high school, from which he was graduated on the 1st of June, 1882. In 1883-84 he was a student in Harvard University and in 1888-89 attended the Columbia College School of Law in New York city. His preliminary reading, however, was done in the office of Benton Killin, of Portland, who directed his studies from 1885 until 1888. His taste in youth inclined toward being literary and while a high-school student he edited an amateur paper. After leaving school he became a newspaper reporter on the Evening Telegram of Portland, devoting his time and attention to that work until he determined upon the practice of law and qualified for the profession by his studies in this city and in the eastern universities. He was admitted to practice by the supreme court of Oregon in October, 1888, but spent the succeeding year in further study in the law school of Columbia College and in October, 1888, opened an office in Portland, where he has since followed his profession. A large and distinctively representative clientage has been accorded him, connecting him with much of the important litigation tried in the courts which hold their sessions in this city. He served as municipal judge of Portland from the 1st of July, 1902, until the 1st of July, 1905. His record on the bench was in harmony with his record as a man and citizen, distinguished by unfaltering fidelity to duty and by a masterful grasp of every problem that was presented for solution. On the 23d of January, 1909, Mr. Hogue was married, in San Francisco, California, to Anastasia Norton. His military experience covered service with Company G, of the Oregon State Militia, from 1885 until 1888. He is a member of the First Presbyterian church of Portland and his personal worth and social qualities are such that all who know him are glad to call him friend. p.116, Portland, Oregon, Its History and Builders: In Connection with the Antecedent Explorations, Discoveries, and Movements of the Pioneers that Selected the Site for the Great City of the Pacific, Volume 2, Joseph Gaston, S.J. - In 1907, The Nortonia Hotel opened its doors in the heart of Portland's Theatre District and quickly became known as the "home-away-from-home" for many of the artists who performed in the theatric productions of the time. The hotel registry was a who's who of the entertainment world including Louis Armstrong, Mel Torme, Spike Jones, Sammy Davis Jr., Lionel Hampton, Billy Bardy, Kay Starr and the list goes on and on. The Nortonia was remodeled in 1966 and renamed The Mark Spencer Hotel. While it remains "home" to many modern-day artists and performers, The Mark Spencer Hotel is also an enduring favorite among travelers from around the world who appreciate friendly service, affordable comfort, and Old World charm.

  - The pair of Italianate mansions on the right of the lithograph belonged to two brothers, Ralph and Isaac Jacobs, and their families. In 1882, when this lithograph was made, mansions such as these at Southwest Park and Montgomery were a common sight in what is now downtown Portland. Over time, most were torn down to make way for new construction, however, one of the Jacobs' family homes endured until the 1940s.
By the late 1860s and 1870s, many of Portland's merchants had become prosperous. They began to commission gracious residences with manicured gardens near what was then the edge of town. Within a few years, the town grew up around them, and before long many of the homes were at the center of downtown activity.
The Corbett mansion, at Southwest Fifth and Yamhill, was one of these. It survived until Henry L. Corbett's widow, Gretchen Hoyt Corbett died in the mid-1930s. She was his second, and younger, wife, and her home was a tourist attraction because she kept her cow pastured in the north end of the block until 1925. Finally, rising taxes compelled her to allow the construction of a large office building over the cow pasture.
The Ladd Carriage House at Southwest Broadway and Columbia is among the last remains of the great downtown estates. The Oregonian building is now across the street from it where the Ladd mansion itself once stood.

  - William S. Ladd was born in Vermont in 1826 and grew up in New Hampshire working on his family's farm before leaving home at age 19 to go work for the Boston, Concord & Montreal Railroad. A few years later at the age of 25, Ladd headed west to San Francisco seeking a new life in the mercantile business. The year was 1851, and by this time the San Francisco marketplace had become saturated, so Ladd decided to head north to the Oregon Territory (Oregon wouldn't gain statehood until eight years later), and he set up shop there in the spring of that year.
Noting its historical significance, the Ladd Carriage House was placed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1980, but by the early 2000's, its owners were looking for a more suitable, long-term tenant to fully restore the property. The adjacent church (above at far left) that owned the entire block was beginning to entertain offers for redevelopment of the site which included the construction of a high-rise condominium building on the northern half of the block. As plans for the high-rise moved forward, the fate of the carriage house was in jeopardy as it would have been in the way of the excavation needed to provide underground parking facilities for the twenty-three story condominium building.

  - "LADD FARM FOR A SITE.
Now as the project of the 1905 Fair promises to become a certainty, the time approaches to look about for a suitable site for such, and water is, in my opinion, of prime importance to secure a success of the enterprise. Several places are in contemplation from competent people, but I beg to be allowed to suggest that I believe that the 400-acre tract belonging to the Ladd estate on the East Side, known as the Clearwater farm, situated between the carshops of the Southern Pacific Company and Sellwood, would be an ideal spot for that purpose. There is a fish pond of several acres' dimension, ice-cold spring water as clear as crystal adorned with a growth of fir trees and other Oregon ornamental trees, with a stream of water running over the whole ground strong enough to drive a mill of any size. The configuration of the ground is undulating and well fitted for building purposes, and the laying out of a suitable exposition park for landscape, horticultural and agricultural purposes. I think that a circular aquarium, in which to show the products of the sea, river and streams of the Pacific Coast, would be of commercial interest. The place is accessible by street-cars and railroad to visitors as well as for freight traffic, for the Southern Pacific Railroad runs through the tract and that company would certainly build a depot for visitors and freight" The Morning Oregonian, Dec. 21, 1901 <http://oregonnews.uoregon.edu/lccn/sn83025138/1901-12-21/ed-1/seq-3.pdf>
  - About
One of Portland's most beautiful neighborhoods, genteel Eastmoreland (PDF map) offers a sophisticated respite from hectic city life. Eastmoreland is nestled between the Crystal Springs Rhododendron Garden, which is alive with pink, white and red blossoms in the spring, and Eastmoreland Golf Course, which is rated one of the best public courses in the country. Eastmoreland is also home to Reed College, a liberal arts college with a reputation for innovative teaching and an edgy, youthful energy that serves as a nice counterpoint to Eastmoreland's regal demeanor. With its winding, elm-lined streets, stately homes and abundant greenery, Eastmoreland is a relaxing place to come home to.
History
Originally owned by William S. Ladd, Portland's fifth mayor, what was to become Eastmoreland began as Crystal Springs Farm. In 1910 Ladd's son, W.M. Ladd, donated 40 acres of the farm for the home of Reed College, which he saw as the cornerstone of an elegant neighborhood that would attract wealthy newcomers nostalgic for the stately environs they left behind in the East.

  - Ladd Estate Company
The Ladd Estate Company played a major role in the residential development of Portland and surrounding areas. William Sargent Ladd was the wealthiest person in the Northwest at the time of his death in 1893, and his estate included extensive land holdings. When Ladd died, his son, William Mead Ladd, became president of the family's Ladd & Tilton Bank, which managed the properties.
The Ladd Estate Company was formed in part to avoid the scrutiny required by the 1907 Oregon Banking Act. By that time, the bank was $2,500,000 in debt, and William M. Ladd had accepted a loan from his brother-in-law, Standard Oil heir Frederick B. Pratt. Pratt took control of the Ladd & Tilton Bank with the agreement that real properties would be separated from the bank's control. For those reasons, the Ladd Estate Company was incorporated on May 13, 1908. Although the company was a separate legal entity, William M. Ladd served as president of both, and many of the same individuals were involved in both enterprises.

Ladd's Addition in southeast Portland had been platted by William S. Ladd in 1891, but the economic Panic of 1893 and Ladd's death the same year delayed development. The Ladd Estate Company began development in Ladd's Addition in 1907, and most of the undeveloped land owned by Ladd in the Portland area was converted to higher-end residential districts. In 1909, Ladd's 462-acre Hazel Fern Farm was sold to the Laurelhurst Company, but the Ladd Estate Company maintained control. Ladd's 500-acre Crystal Springs Farm was platted into Westmoreland (1909) and Eastmoreland (1910), and forty acres were donated as the site for Reed College. Another Ladd property was developed as part of the working-class Brooklyn neighborhood.

William S. Ladd was president of the Oregon Iron Company (later Oregon Iron & Steel), centered at Oswego (now Lake Oswego). After the demise of that industry, some of the company's 24,000 acres were developed by the Ladd Estate Company. The first post-iron era development was Lake View Villas, platted in 1912. William M. Ladd filed the first Dunthorpe plat in 1916 and built his residence there. The Oswego Lake Country Club was built in 1924 on the site of Ladd's Iron Mine Farm.

William M. Ladd served as president of the Ladd Estate Company until his resignation, due to ill health, on October 1, 1926. At that time, Paul C. Murphy and Frederick H. Strong purchased the entire holdings of Ladd Estate Company and the Oregon Iron & Steel Company, reportedly for $5 million. The purchase included undeveloped portions of Dunthorpe, Oswego, Eastmoreland, and Westmoreland. Strong and Murphy quickly divested themselves of all but the Oregon Iron & Steel property—that is, Oswego and Dunthorpe. Strong served as president until Murphy bought out his interest in 1930 and became president. The Ladd Estate Company existed under Murphy's direction and later his son, Paul F. Murphy, into the mid-1940s. Although inactive, it remained a registered corporation until October 15, 2001.

- WILLIAM PARSONS LEWIS.

William Parsons Lewis is an architect and contractor of Portland and many of the buildings which he has put up have been erected after designs which he has made. England claims him as her native son, his birth having occurred in Somersetshire in 1852. The days of his boyhood and youth were there passed and in that country he studied architecture, thus qualifying for the profession which he has followed much of his life. He was apprenticed to an architect when twelve years of age, and continued in that service until seventeen years of age, when, tiring of the routine and the limited opportunities offered him, he ran away and came to the United States, crossing the Atlantic in 1869.

After tarrying in the east for about four years, Mr. Lewis came to the Pacific coast in 1873, settling first at San Jose, California, where he remained for seven years, during which period he was connected with mill and stair building.

On the 5th of January, 1880, he arrived in Portland and here he continued in the same lines which had previously claimed his attention. He operated the Portland planing mills for a time and in 1896 established his present business as an architect and contractor. Within this period he has superintended the construction of the Lincoln high school and the residences of C. E. Ladd and W. W. Spaulding, together with some of the other leading buildings of the city. His ability as an architect enables him to make his own plans and designs, and in this he studies forms of beauty as well as of practical utility. p.404 Portland, Oregon, its history and builders : in connection with the antecedent explorations, discoveries, and movements of the pioneers that selected the site for the great city of the Pacific (Volume 3) Joseph Gaston. In 1880, Lewis came to Portland, where again worked as a stair builder, then established a planning mill in Portland. He later went into business as a building contractor. After establishing his Design, Building and Architectural Firm of Lewis & Lewis in 1898, Lewis is reputed to have designed and built many fine houses in Portland, including houses for C.E. Ladd and W. W. Spaulding. He also superintended construction of the old Lincoln High School, on the South Park Blocks, erected in 1911. William P. Lewis died on July 22, 1918 at the age of 66. Cicero H. Lewis was one of Portland's well-known and respected merchants. Lewis was born in Cranbury, Middlesex county, New Jersey on December 23, 1826. He moved with his parents to Newburgh, New York when he was 13 year old. He lived his young adult life in the community. When he was 20 years of age he went to New York city and worked in the dry good firm of Chambers, Heimer & Company for several years. He left New York with L.H. Alien on February 13, 1850 for the Pacific coast, via the Panama route. Lewis arrived in San Francisco, stayed for a short time, and then proceeded to Portland, where he started a business with Mr. Alien. Due to Mr. Alien spending a great amount of time in the East, the business of Alien & Lewis was closed. Lewis returned to San Francisco and went to work with Eugene Kelly & Co. A few years later Alien returned to Portland to work.

On January 18, 1857, Mr. Lewis married Miss Clementine Couch, a daughter of Captain Couch, one of the earliest Oregon pioneers. They became the parents of eleven children: Mrs. J. Bingham; John Lewis; Mrs. Evelyn Scott Mills; David Chambers Lewis; Sarah Heard Lewis; Robert Wilson Lewis; Cicero Hunt Lewis; Mrs. Clementine Hall and Mrs. Frances Fairbanks. Lewis was prominent in the work of Trinity church and the Mason organization. Lewis also served as a director in the Security Savings & Trust Company and several other banking institutions. Lewis was an active member of Engine Company No. 1 of the Portland volunteer fire department." - WEDDING MOST NOTABLE

MISS FRANCES LEWIS MARRIES HENRY FAIRBANKS.

Bride of Prominent Portland Family and Groom From New York, Where Couple Will Live.

One of the most prominent weddings in years was that of Miss Frances Lewis, the youngest daughter of Mrs. C. H. Lewis, to Henry Fairbanks, of New York, which took place yesterday at 4 P. M. at Trinity Church. The Lewis family is one of the oldest and most prominent in the state and has been identified with Portland since its inception. The bride is an exceptionally popular girl and numbers friends by the legion. The ceremony, which occurred at Trinity Church, was confined to the relatives, which number over 100. Mrs. C. H. Lewis is a daughter of the late Captain and Mrs. Couch, and a sister of Mrs. R. B. Wilson, Mrs. Rodney Glisan, Sr., and Miss Minnie Couch, who is now in Paris. At the ceremony were the children and grandchildren of this extensive family.

Following the ceremony a reception for over 500 guests was given at the handsome Lewis residence on Nineteenth and Glisan streets. The grounds were inclosed in canvas and the interior of the residence was transformed into a bower of roses. The Portland Hotel orchestra furnished the music. The reception lasted from 4:30 until 6 P. M., during which the attractively gowned guests offered their congratulations.

The bride is a sister of Mrs. John E. Bingham, John Lewis, Mrs. Sherman Hall, of Kansas City, Mrs. George Goode, Miss Sally Lewis, Mrs. A. L. Mills, Hunt Lewis, Robert W. Lewis and David C. Lewis. Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks left last night for their future home in New York City. The Daily Oregonian, June 23, 1909 <http://oregonnews.uoregon.edu/lccn/sn83025138/1909-06-23/ed-1/seq-9.pdf>

Lombard), situated immediately south of and adjoining the Slavin Road, and adjacent to the O. & C. R. The land is in a canyon, but at some time, under proper development. will 'oe available for park uses. This generous dedication is without condition, and was accepted by the Park Board. "Report of the Park Board, Portland, Oregon, 1903; With the Report of Mssrs. Olmsted Bros, Landscape Architcets, Outlining a System of Parkways, Boulevards and Parks in the City of Portland"
  - Might be "Olmstead Park" addition at 45.550121,-122.63345 based on:
Here's the cadastral map from 1909 showing the Olmstead Park plat. This roughly five-block square area is north of the Alameda Ridge and tucks in under the southeast corner of Alameda Park. Today this part of the neighborhood is clearly considered part of the Alameda District. Out on the ground even in 1911, these two brand new districts were indistinguishable, interwoven by the same streets, the same water, gas and sewer mains, and many of the same architects and builders who were beginning to populate this area with homes. The Olmsted in "Olmstead Park" was probably John Charles Olmsted, stepson and nephew of the legendary landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted (this is not a typo...someone added an "a" into the plat name over the years). John Charles Olmsted and his brother Frederick Law Olmsted, Jr. helped design Portland's park system and were busy with other commissions here in Portland — including one for the Alameda Land Company — in the years after the 1905 Lewis and Clark Exposition (which they also designed).
By 1909, the neighborhoods to our north and south were already established, and the Portland Railway, Light and Power Company was opening its Broadway Streetcar line with a connection to the heart of Alameda Park and Olmstead Park.
In 1910, before home construction was underway, much of the property in Olmstead Park was owned by one man: B.M. Lombard, a real estate developer who owned large tracts in north and northeast Portland, and whose name is memorialized by North Portland's Lombard Street. In fact if you look at the plat, you can see that today's Dunckley Avenue was originally platted as Lombard. Other properties were owned by construction companies, investment banks and real estate developers, including Oregon Home Builders Inc., Colonial Construction Co., Hibernian Investment Bank, Provident Trust Company and Clodfelter Real Estate.

  - [red herrings: ] Eden Valley Orchard originally established between 1885 and 1898 by early fruit grower Joseph H. Stewart and expanded between 1899 and 1932 by Gordon Voorhies, the property has strong associations with the development of the fruit industry in southern Oregon. Serving as the Voorhies family residence until Mrs. Voorhies death in 1949, the property remained in family ownership until 1986. Eden Valley Orchard retains aigh degree of integrity in setting, location, design, materials, and workmanship. The complex of buildings and distinctive landscape features accurately and effectively convey the associations for which this property is significant. The Gordon and Helen Voorhies House is a large two and a half-story wood frame residence constructed in the Colonial Revival style. Irregular in plan, and built in several sections, dating to 1890, 1906 and a 1920 remodel, the house has a combination of hipped and gable roofs with dormers. The residence has a two-story portico with four boxed columns on the east elevation, and primary facade. This house also has a solarium that opens onto a terrace on the south elevation. The dwelling is approximately 92 feet by sixty feet. The Voorhies House contains two main volumes. The older central volume of the house is the 1890 J.H. Stewart house. Appended to the east elevation in 1906 is a large second volume. In 1920 the house was remodeled and two wings were added to the dwelling.
By 1896, Stewart's Eden Valley Orchard was producing 95 railcars of pears and apples for market. In 1899, Stewart at the age of 65 sold the property. At that time, he was widely recognized as the "father of the fruit industry" in Southern Oregon. Gordon Voorhies purchased Eden Valley orchard and he and his family commuted between the Orchard residence and Portland. Voorhies in partnership with his brother-in-law created the Burrell Investment Company and renamed the property the Burrell Orchard. By 1906, receiving record-breaking money for sales, Voorhies began remodeling the house and purchasing hundreds of neighboring acres for the Burrell Investment Company. Increased production and record prices for the produce increased the wealth of the Investment Company, and in 1913 much of the land surrounding the Burrell Orchard was subdivided and sold, hi 1920 Voorhies moved his family permanently to the orchard. That same year, after great damage due to frozen pipes, the Voorhies undertook another remodel of the house. Their youngest son, Charles Voorhies, was an architecture student at Harvard and designed the exterior and interior changes to the house, as well as designing the gardens. The Voorhies continue to live in the house, operate the orchard and contribute greatly to local politics and business until his death in 1940 and her death in 1949. - Although not specifically trained in landscape design, [Charles] Voorhies had traveled in Europe and was quite interested in Italian landscape design and plant materials, an interest which remained throughout his career (Peter Voorhies, Nov. 2004). Early in his career, Voorhies worked periodically in this field, most notably designing a pool and walled garden area for his family's own home at Eden Valley Orchard. The Voorhies and Carpenter families were acquainted both socially and through business ventures and it was probably through this connection that Charles first become involved with the design of the landscape at Topsides, likely shortly after the initial construction phase. Mr. Voorhies returned to Topsides to work at Topsides, designing the pool, pool house and tennis court area, in 1930.

Among the other known examples of Voorhies landscape work for the family home in the Waverly Heights area of Portland, a monument to Nion Tucker, a member of the prominent De Young Family, of San Francisco, that was constructed near Prospect, on the Rogue River, and the Leonard Carpenter House, in Medford, where he again was responsible for the design of a swimming pool. Virtually all of the drawings and papers related to Mr. Voorhies early career were lost when his studio, at the family's Eden Valley Orchard home, burnt in 1950 (Peter Voorhies, Nov. 2004).

Kimball, Dr. Shakespeare, B.F. Clyde, John Rulon-Miller, and W.F. Fotherall. It was purchased of the John Mather estate, about A.D. 1886. John Mather was an excellent man, who lived to a good old age, and whose venerable form was a familiar sight when the writer of these lines used to visit old St. David's Church, Radnor, where the aged farmer loved to worship. The Mather family had held this place from Penn's day. The old stone farm-house was enlarged and modernized by the present owner, who uses it as a country-seat. Two 'cabins' containing a library and billiard and sleeping-rooms have been added. Greenhouses brighten the place. The stables are built on an English plan. A driveway introduces to the stables, which have the coachman's and gardener's houses before them ... The name Lindenshade is said to have been given the place by William Penn himself, owing to the great number of linden trees growing on it. The original deeds are signed by him." Rural Pennsylvania by Rev. S. F. Hotchkin

Charles Barton Keen was among the many architects who made their reputations designing Main Line mansions. Keen apprenticed in several prominent Philadelphia firms in the 1890s and by the turn of the century, he was striking out on his own.
Keen designed Laurier for C. Hartman Kuhn, a banker, in 1916. Situated on a hill in Radnor Township, the 18th-century, French-style chateau resembles the Petit Trianon on the grounds of Versailles.

- “A Devon landmark home on Waterloo Road known as "Oaklands" built in 1905 for Philadelphia financier, C. Hartman Kuhn, was demolished in 2002 to make way for a 10-lot subdivision and new homes. The loss was keenly felt as the house was designed by famed Philadelphia Art Museum architect Horace Trumbauer. Since 1955 it had been occupied by a religious order, and was known locally as the Regina Mundi Priory.”

The Succop Conservancy, located at 185 West Airport Road in Butler Pennsylvania, is a beautiful banquet and meeting facility that we highly recommend. The Succop Conservancy has been around for several years, but has only recently opened its doors to brides and grooms. The 177-year old property is spread over 50 acres of woodlands, open fields, wetlands, two ponds, walking trails, gardens and much more. The property is also home to the Heritage School, an art school teaching classes in time honored trades and crafts. Classes include blacksmithing, woodworking, stained glass design and 18 century writing. This natural environment serves as a classroom for teaching everything from conservation and environmental stewardship to alternative sources of energy.
Succop Conservancy dates back to an Irish immigrant by the name of Mr. John Maharg. Maharg settled in Penn Township in 1804. The main part of the house was built in 1830. The bank barn, summer kitchen and wash house were added in the 1850's. John Maharg died in 1871 and the property remained in his family until 1921.
The home and property were then sold to T.W. Phillips Jr., who was the son of the founder of T.W. Phillips Gas and Oil Company. Shortly after the passing of T.W. Jr., his daughter Margaret and her husband, A. Craig Succop purchased the estate and updated the house with all the modern amenities including indoor plumbing. At this time the estate was a working farm with chickens, cows and horses. Following World War II, the Succops once again updated the house by adding two more wings on to the original house. Margaret passed away in 1990 and her husband Craig, passed away in 1996. The Succop's eldest son Tom and his wife Jo Ann moved back to the family estate shortly after the death of his father. Tom and Jo Ann graciously donated the estate to the Butler County Community College Education Foundation in 2001. The Succop Conservancy is owned, operated and maintained by the foundation.

"This has brought back a lot of memories. I spent every summer of my youth in Butler since my moms family are long time Butler residents. Our house is on Pearl and Second and my cousins and I did lots of roaming around the neighborhood. We decided to jump the fence into the Phillips estate one day and were just amazed at how beautiful the home and grounds were. Ben Phillips was walking around and caught us but was very pleasant. He just asked that we stay out of the gardens. I seem to remember other large homes on the property. Were there other family members who also lived on the grounds? The original TW Phillips house at the top of Second Street is quite an impressive home also. It is four stories high and very similar in style to the other homes in the neighborhood, except bigger and fancier. I come to Butler about once a month and still think about sneaking into the Phillips property when I drive up McKean past Polk.

  - Francis Innes Gowen was born in the Germantown section of Philadelphia in 1855, the son of James Emmet Gowen and Clementine Innes. His father was a noted railroad lawyer and his uncle, Franklin B. Gowen, was a president of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. After attending the school of Dr. John W. Faires, the young Francis Gowen entered the University of Pennsylvania in the fall of 1871. While a student in the College, he was a member of Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity. According to the yearbooks of 1872, 1873 and 1874, he played on his class baseball and cricket teams as well as on the varsity cricket team. Gowen was also a founder and vice-president of the College Boat Club and a charter member of the University Athletic Association.
Gowen left the College during his junior year to study law. After passing the Pennsylvania Bar, he practiced law with his father until James Gowen's death in 1885, and then with his uncle, Franklin B. Gowen, until his death in 1889. At that point Francis I. Gowen formed a practice with James E. Hood and Charles E. Ingersoll. In 1902 he was appointed General Solicitor for the Pennsylvania Railroad; in 1912 he became General Counsel of that Railroad, adding the title of vice-president in 1921. In 1922 Gowen asked to be relieved of these duties and was instead appointed as Special Counsel. Francis was also involved in his family's development of the estate of his grandfather James Gowan, in Mount Airy, a residential neighborhood in northwest Philadelphia.
Gowen married Alice Robinson; they had one son, James E. Gowen, and two daughters, Alison Robinson Gowen and Mariana Gowen. He died at his home in Wyndmoor, Pennsylvania, on April 8, 1927.

House:

"Orchard Lea" is a Stucco House with Half-timber Gables

And stable:

- 768 Mt Moro Rd
Date of Construction: 1911
Original Architect: Bailey & Bassett
Original Owner: Clinton Gage / Villa Nova Company, Limited
Description of the Resource: "Eastfield" was designed as part of the Moro Phillips tract, developed by the Philadelphia architectural firm of Baily and Bassett. Moro Phillips, the Duc de Moro, was a chemical manufacturer from Poland who acquired 800 acres of land in this area by 1890 under the name of the "Phillips Co. Limited." This was the largest tract ever held under one ownership in the history of Lower Merion. Frederick Phillips, the second son of Moro Phillips, named the property "Stoke Poges" (also known as "Stoke Pogis") after a small town west of London near Slough and William Penn's manor there. After Phillips' death, the firm of Baily and Bassett erected several homes as part of a design-build speculative development, designing residential work for the Villa Nova Company, Limited who purchased 500 acres of the Phillips tract. Some of these residences by Bailey and Bassett include "Underhill House," “Eastdene” and “Overview.” Archival research indicates that Eastfield was designed for Clinton Gage, owner of estates “Westfield” and “Orchard-Lee” on either side of the 7-acre Eastfield property, yet atlases indicate that the property was owned by the Villa Nova Company, Limited until c.1920-1926. This building was originally the Eastfield carriage house and has been converted to a private residence. The front (east) façade of this side-gable frame building has a clipped cross gable to the north and a second-story overhang on the south gable end. It has a gabled dormer and two large shed-roof dormers. The north ell also had a clipped gable, and there is a small porch at the northwest corner. (10/2012) A Tudor carriage house that was built for "Eastfield," by Baily & Bassett in 1911 for the Villa Nova Company.

- "Born in Goshen, Kentucky, in 1874, James S. Crutchfield moved to Florida in 1891, taking a job with Nelson & Company Produce. Following the 1894-1895 freezes, he moved to Philadelphia to work with a commission house. While there, he learned of the need in Florida for standardization, better shipping containers, more efficient transportation, and refrigeration.
 In 1896, he joined with his cousin, Robert Woolfolk, to create the Crutchfield-Woolfolk Company, centered around a new commission house in Pittsburgh. The company later created branches and other productions throughout the East.
 In 1903, their firm opened its first Florida packinghouse in Crescent City. Here, Crutchfield helped to work on new procedures for coloring, washing, sizing, packing, and stamping citrus. He also helped to reform the industry's standard trading rules and practices. Soon Crutchfield's firm opened numerous new packinghouses within the state. In 1919, Crosby and Woolfolk incorporated their company as American Fruit Inc. This new corporation was centered around the new Blue Goose Brand, for which Crutchfield worked to create name recognition. He also worked with Porcher, Woolfolk, Rule, and Michael in the development of Deerfield Groves.
 Crutchfield worked hard during his career to emphasize sound marketing principles. He was a major proponent of improving both appearance and quality. He also improved packaging, supply, and advertising. Crutchfield frequently worked with fellow Hall of Fame members Joshua and Sidney Chase of Sanford. He was inducted post-humously into the Florida Citrus Hall of Fame in 1971.

- "But whenever one speaks of Freemasonry in Oldham he thinks of James Stapleton Crutchfield. Recent research has given us new material on the life of this remarkable man. He was born in 1800 on the old Crutchfield mill farm near Goshen where his ancestors settled when they first came to this section. He lost his father when about ten years of age and had to depend upon his own efforts throughout life. He had only two years at a little log school in winter and was self educated after that. He spent a while with his relative Thomas Barbour of Westport and then was with the Duerson family near Goshen. Later for several years he managed the big farm of General Zachary Taylor his cousin near Louisville while the general was away in Florida fighting the Indians in the wars of long ago. This gave him a chance to get into the confidence and friendship of Old Rough and Ready who was a great influence in yourg Crutchfield's life." p.193,

“In 1850 the trustee was changed from William Barbour, Thomas' son, to J. S. Crutchfield, acting for him. Over the next four years under Crutchfield's extraordinary management, the farm prospered. These years reflect the following taxable values:

| Year | Farm Value | Acreage |
|------|------------|---------|
| 1850 | $23,457   | 750     |
| 1852 | $36,270   | 750     |
| 1854 | $47,050   | 750     |

During this time, 1850-1854, the value of farm land in the county remained relatively stable. Mr. Crutchfield was known as an excellent farm manager and his expertise proved itself in the management of the Barbour trust.” National Register of Historic Places, Registration Form, Clifton Farm, Goshen, KY

- "Some of Springfield's notable families still ring out on our street signs too. These reflect the people who built the roads that their homes resided on: (William J.) Bysher (Sr.), (Albert) Comly, Fleming, (Robert) Gordon, (Frederick) Haws (or Haus), (Albert L.) Jones, McCloskey, (Enos) Rich, (Edward F.) Swade, (Morris A.) Weiss, and Yeakel. Another interesting family named street is (Henry) Auchy, owner and managing partner of the Chestnut Hill (White City) Amusement Park in Erdenheim. Springfield's participation in the glamorous Gilded Age just prior to and after the turn of the 20th century is still remembered through the following streets: Harston (Henry Frazer Harris' "Harston Hall"), (Arthur) Lea ("Rylston" estate), (Arthur) Newbold ("Laverock Farm"), and (Edward) Stotesbury ("Whitemarsh Hall)." The Challenge: Preservation, Research, Education

Wissahickon Style III, The Comfortable House
When the Red Rose Girls (RRG) could no longer lease the Red Rose Inn, they looked for a bucolic, romantic old house near Philadelphia. George Woodward (whom they dubbed St. George ( legend has it that this is how a disjointed bit of Allen's Lane became St. George's Lane,) offered them 5 acres and an old farmhouse that would be redone by architect Frank Miles Day. This was a generous offer, since the rent Woodward proposed cost less than what they were paying for at the Inn. Hence the genesis of Cogslea with its stables and outbuildings. Why Cogslea? Well, Cogs for the initials of the 4 women, and lea because it was an olde timey way of saying meadow.
http://wissahickonschist.blogspot.com/2012\_01\_01\_archive.html
  - “In 1906, the Woodwards persuaded artists Violet Oakley, Jessie Wilcox Smith and Elizabeth Shipman, along with their friend Henrietta Cozens, to move to West mount Airy. Frank Miles Day remodeled a farmhouse for the four women, which they named "Cogslea" (their four initials, plus "lea" for valley). They named the street on which they lived St. George's Road after george Woodward. Violet oakley remained at Cogslea until te 1960s.” p.80, Chestnut Hill, Thomas H.   - Those Marvelous Mansions
Published: Sunday, January 30, 2011
By Kathy O'Loughlin

"A third facility for older-adult living that started out as a private mansion is the Mary J. Drexel home in Bala Cynwyd. In 1951 John Lankenau, of Lankenau Hospital, bought the house and then donated it as a tribute to his wife, Mary J. Drexel Lankenau.

The mansion, called Willoughby, dates to 1908 when Philadelphia lawyer Percy Hamilton Clark and his wife, Elizabeth, the daughter of Pennsylvania Railroad president George Brooke Roberts, received property on the Roberts tract along Belmont Avenue. The couple commissioned their cousin, architect Clarence Clark Zantzinger, to design the mansion, which would become home to their family, which would eventually include eight children and a large staff, including a cook, a governess, a chauffeur and a nurse. The estate also included a working farm with seven cows, one horse and 400 chickens, according to "The First 300."

  - Summary. Anita Packard Montgomery and Park Packard are brother and sister, the grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Clothier, who lived on Valley Hill Farm on Clothier Springs Road. They grew up at Meadow Crest, a house on the Clothier farm. This is a family history, with lots of interesting stories about the William J. Clothier family. Topics included in this interview include life on the farm, with its blacksmith shop, gardens, farm animals, the lodge, favorite pets and parties; activities at Valley Hill, including tennis, swimming, sledding, horses and riding; origins of the seeing eye dog program; riding in the Devon Horse Show and the Pickering Hunt; and Strawbridge and Clothier. The interviews end with a tribute to Marian Gillespie, housekeeper extraordinaire. Two interviews.   - Friday, June 10, 2011 WASP Emma Coulter Ware, 43-3 May 29, 2011
Emma Coulter Ware, 96, died May 29, 2011 in her St. Louis home of 63 years. She was preceded in death by her husband, James Boyd Ware and is survived by her six children and four grandchildren. She was born in Greensburg, PA on May 17, 1915 as the only child of Richard Coulter and Matilda Bowman Coulter. "Both her father and grandfather were generals when generals rode horses instead of jeeps."
She first attended Miss Voegle's School in Greensburg. She graduated from Miss Porter's School in Connecticut and completed her education in New York City at Barnard College. While there she became an avid Gilbert and Sullivan devotee. Her interests were zoology and art history.
World War II was imminent and she joined the civil air patrol after earning her pilot's license. She then graduated in the third class of Woman Air Service Pilots (WASP) in 1943. She served as a ferry pilot of war planes, flew as part of the Tow Target Squadron, and helped test drone airplanes. Emma met her husband while at Biggs Air Force Base in Texas. They married on the last day the WASPs were in service, December 19, 1944. They settled in St. Louis, her husband's hometown.

- 40.039641,-75.350547 r01291 DaCosta, Dr. J.M. Villa Nova Pennsylvania 8 1890-1893
  - The Spring, 2012, issue of ANTIQUES AND FINE ART magazine on p. 188 pictures an excellent portrait of Dr. Jacob Da Costa of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, painted about 1899. About Dr. Da Costa the very short article about him says:
"Jacob Mendez Da Costa, MD, was appointed attending physician at Pennsylvania Hospital in 1865, a position that he retained until his death in 1900. Da Costa is most noted for his MEDICAL DIAGNOSIS (1864), which was translated into several languages and went through nine editions. During the Civil War, he used his observations of soldiers at Turner's Lane Hospital to document "Da Costa's Syndrome," a cardiac ailment frequently diagnosed in Civil War and World War I soldiers exhibiting fatigue, palpitations, and tremors." <http://genforum.genealogy.com/dacosta/messages/19.html>

- It's amazing that two of us could be looking for this guy at almost the same time! I'm not a descendant, but I'm looking for him, or more likely his son Charles Frederic DaCosta, because I have been told that he was the first owner of the house I grew up in, which was torn down in the 1970's. Since the Doctor himself died in 1899 or 1900, my sister and I think that his house (his "country residence", according to his son's wedding announcement) was actually the Gothic edifice next door to ours, and that his son built the more modern and elegant one that we grew up in, at some point in the 1920's or 30's. Both houses, now gone, were on Ashwood Rd., Villanova. Might you possibly be able to shed any light on this question?

  - York County, Pa., industrialist A.B. Farquhar's estate, Edgcombe, in the hills south of York, is shown in 1893. A golf course, which became the Country Club of York and then the Out Door County Club, later covered the fields in this vicinity. Today, York College covers that land. Farquhar's hilltop mansion, built in 1875, was later demolished. The entrance gate to the old estate exists today joining Country Club Road. [showing property of Cyrus G. Derr south of Walnut St. between 6th and Reed Streets]
- “workmen expect a vacant lot to mark the spot where now stands the palatial residence of the late Cyrus G. Derr. With the passing of the Derr ; home, on the southeast corner of Sixth and Walnut streets, Reading will note the disappearance of a landmark known for more than half a century, and the closing of an era. The Derr home is not the last of the post Civil War mansions, but it was certainly one of the most prominently located of the group, so much so that when it is gone Reading citizens . will experience a feeling of definite loss. ' Thousands " of persons have ' walked past Sixth street and Walnut street and have looked through the iron hare of the fence toward the impressive structure which stood aloof, serene, quiet and aristocratic in the midst of a hurrying, complex, noisy commercial section of the city. Imagination Stirred The rear of the grounds, where are situated the servants' quarters and the garage, were hidden from view by a high brick wall. Few persons knew what was Inclosed within those brick walls. An occasional light shining from a second floor window of the servants' quarters stimulated the imagination of the passerby. Now the residence Is being torn down. For a little while the curious will enjoy a view of those two structures which nestle in the rear of the lot, but as soon as workmen can do It. another wall will be erected, and again, as in the. past, the . Derr property will be a cause of wonderment. Mr. Derr's daughter, Mrs. Caroline Derr Archer, will live in what were once the expansive and attractive servants' quarters. A yard to the west will continue as it is now, a lawn and flower bed. Then there will be a high wall. And between that wall and the street will be the vacant lot with signs announcing that the motorist may park his car there for so much an hour, or day or week. Memories Aroused Workmen who are razing the structure have found inside the building the pleasant memories of a century that is dead. Spacious rooms lead off from the reception hall. Two steps down and one is in another room. Two steps up and entrance is gained to the servants' dining room. The butler's pantry is found in a small hall that leads to the master dining room. . The old residence was the scene of many social events during the half century the Derrs occupied it. These functions were held usually in the ballroom, situated on the ground floor in the southern wing. The crystal chandeliers, the white columns, the white . carved mantel and woodwork bordering the walls - and ceiling lent to the room an atmosphere that in these very modern days is found for the most part only in motion picture sets of dramas of the Gay Nineties. If the guests so chose they could walk, through a huge door onto the expansive enclosed porch to the rear. In the winter this porch was "heated. In the summer the windows were opened and the porch became a cool haven, bordered by flowers .and shrubbery. Rambling Structure TjP and down, zigzag, crosswise the Derr mansion seems to wander about the grounds. There is none of the balancing of the modern home to be found here., Where a room was needed it was placed, and if it unbalanced the house it was of no concern to those who lived so long within its grey walls. In a setting of the nineteenth century there was. all the comfort of the twentieth. Crvstal chandeliers, massive, sparkling ornaments hanging from the high ceilings, were equipped for gas and electric illumination. And there was heat, too, more heat than the average modern structure enjoys. A steam heating plant was located in the cellar.” Reading Times, Feb 11 1936 <http://www.newspapers.com/newspage/47581229/>

  - Change Is Coming To The Hill Upscale Buyers Threaten Tiny, Bucolic Paradise
By Mary Jane Fine, Inquirer Staff Writer
Posted: May 28, 1986
The hill is a thin slice of land just south of Media in Delaware County, two blocks of 19th-century frame dwellings so narrow they might be dollhouses. It doesn't look like the suburbs or feel like the suburbs, but it is tucked away there, a nook, a cranny, a throwback to the past.
Once an old mill neighborhood, it was occupied largely by black nursery workers around World War II. Then, a decade or so ago, it began evolving into a collection of artisans, teachers, carpenters and others who rented their homes, mostly from Wirt L. Thompson, proprietor of the nursery and the nephew of its founder.
For business reasons, Thompson has begun selling the houses that tenants consider home.
The past is the mill. Called Bancroft Mill in some histories, the Upper Bank in others, it gave the area a reason for existing until, in the mid- 1800s, it ceased to exist itself. In a sense, what began happening a couple of years ago is what has happened all along: transition, the area's fortunes rising and falling with the Civil War and the mill and sundry floods and fires.

Thompson is the landlord of the hill. The owner of Upper Bank Nursery, he still owns more than a dozen hill houses. Before he began selling them, he owned nearly three dozen out of about 40 on the hill, inherited from an uncle who bought the land and its dwellings in 1916.

A ruddy-faced patrician of 75, Thompson views the hill with a fond paternalism that has its roots in the past.

"The idea was never to make money," he says. "The idea was just to upgrade."

It began with his uncle, the late Fairman Furness, who bought the mill house - Upper Bank - as his residence in 1916. When he showed the property off to a relative, Thompson relates, the relative said, "It's great except for the slum you have to go through to get there."

That is when Furness bought "the slum," whose houses then had no indoor plumbing, and began to upgrade them. Later, when Furness turned dairy farmland into a nursery, many of the hill tenants went to work for him. During World War II, he encouraged them to keep pigs and goats and to grow vegetables "so they could feed themselves that way."

It was Thompson who began painting the houses. And it is Thompson who holds an annual neighborhood Christmas party in his home. In the summer, he buys the hot dogs and beer for the warm-weather cleanup of the surrounding woods, where outsiders dump mattresses, old stoves and other trash.

- o Wirt Thompson, passionate nurseryman with connections to well-known Pennsylvania families

By JOHN F. MORRISON, morrisj@phillynews.com 215-854-5573

Posted: June 29, 2010

"Wirt Lord Thompson Jr., a man of many talents and accomplishments - math teacher, inventor, jazz pianist - but whose abiding passion was for the plants and flowers in his nursery, died Thursday. He was 99.

Thompson inherited the 45-acre nursery from his uncle, Fairman Furness, a member of a prominent Philadelphia-area family and a man equally passionate about cultivating plants and flowers. He died in 1971.

Along with the nursery, Thompson inherited a number of 19th-century frame houses that comprised a tight-knit community of old-timers and newer artsy-craftsy types along South Orange Street and South Avenue, near the nursery.

Thompson would hold annual Christmas parties for his tenants in the nursery. He gradually sold the houses, mostly to the former renters.

Thompson was energetic and active until shortly before his death, even though macular degeneration had stolen most of his eyesight. Last May 11, he played the piano at his 99th birthday party.

And he was still riding that golf cart two weeks before he died.

Thompson was the son of Wirt L. Thompson and Helen Kate Furness Thompson. He attended the Meadowbrook School, in Jenkintown, graduated from St. Paul's School in 1930 and Yale University in 1934.

He was a medal-winning pole vaulter and a member of the U.S. Track Team in 1934."

- o History of Glen-Gery Brick

The history of Glen-Gery is the story of how imagination, determination, leadership and luck came together to form the foundation on which was built one of this country's leading manufacturers of face and paving brick.

The company's unassuming origins can be traced back to Reading, Pennsylvania, in 1890, during the height of the Industrial Revolution when new construction was abound. A local businessman, Albert A. Gery, nicknamed AA, decided to try his hand at making fire brick. With financing from his father-in-law, Mathan Harbster, a prominent hardware merchant, Gery purchased 32 acres of land rich in fire clay near the Montello Station of the legendary Reading Railroad. Gery built two rectangular kilns and formed the Montello Clay and Brick Company.

His intent was to make dense fire brick; however, in an unexpected turn of events, Gery was contacted by a Philadelphia contractor who needed a million red common facebrick to build the Wernersville State Hospital, five miles from Montello. With this job, the new brick company fired up.

  - Headmaster Reveals A new gymnasium will be built at St. Francis Preparatory School for Boys, near Spring Grove, it has been announced by the Rev. Jude Gleeson, headmaster. The school is operated by the Franciscan Fathers. According to preliminary plans. Father Gleeson said, the building is to be finished within the next three years. St. Francis school is situated on the former country estate of the late W. L. Glatfelter, known as "The Hill." The property was purchased several years ago from the Glatfelter estate. Since the school was moved to the Spring Grove area from Loretto, Pa., several years ago, the basketball teams have used the Spring Grove school gymnasium for games. The Evening Sun, June 16, 1949

  - Note on the History of the Beefeater Farm, from the Descendants of P.H. Glatfelter In 1864, Philip Glatfelter left his job as a papermaking apprentice in Maryland and ventured to Spring Forge, PA, with his life savings. His intent was to purchase a defunct paper mill at public auction, which he did, for $14,000. Years later, the success of this venture enabled his son William to purchase land surrounding the village that was to become the W.L. Glatfelter estate. The estate was composed of a large stone dwelling and various other buildings that housed family members, guests and the workers who supported the estate. In later years, this property would become the campus for St Francis Preparatory School. Other parts of the estate included a dairy—Old Forge Farm—and land dedicated to agriculture and livestock. Although much of the estate was later sold, the pasture land and some wooded acreage was retained and renamed Beefeater Farm, in recognition of either the family’s love of beef cattle or perhaps good English gin—a mystery that to this day has never been solved.
The land was eventually passed on to nine members of the 5th generation of the Glatfelter family, who decided the best way to honor the legacy of their ancestors was to seek ways to preserve the land. This goal was made possible through the assistance of the Farm & Natural Lands Trust of York County. Family legacy and heritage are important. By preserving Beefeater Farm, our family has not only honored the memory of those who came before, but preserved their legacy for those who have yet to come.

- [ red herring:

This house of Queen Anne style architecture located on the corner of South Main and East Church Streets was built around 1879 by P. H. Glatfelter I, who lived here with his wife Amanda and their five children. In 1887 the family moved to the stately Victorian house they had built nearby. That year, their son, William and his bride, the former Kathryn Holinger, moved into this dwelling and lived here until 1912 when he and his family moved to "The Hill", the newly built Glatfelter estate outside of town. The next occupants of this home were William McClellan and his family. McClellan was P. H. Glatfelter II's brother-in-law. Although the building has been used by the Glatfelter Company as office space for several decades, it is still often referred to as the McClellan house.

o Golf Club Atlas

GolfClubAtlas.com => Golf Course Architecture => Topic started by: Joe Bausch on August 06, 2013, While poking around the Tufts archives for Ross drawings I noticed preliminary plans for a course called "Maryland Woods" in 1947. What I found surprising is the course was to be located in SE PA. Haverford Township! In fact, adjacent to Merion West. I know little more about this subject, but looking for more. Here is the drawing:

(<http://xchem.villanova.edu/~bausch/images/MarylandWoods/MarylandWoods.jpg> )

I was looking for the manse on google street views, but you can't see much behind the shrubbery. I did find that Mary Thomson was originally married to one of the Wannamakers before she wed Archibald Thomson, a doctor. They were fairly well off as they listed a few maids, cooks, handymen, etc., as living on their estate.

Archibald was a member of the Philadelphia Club, The Philadelphia Country Club, The Racquet Club, and The Radnor Hunt Club.

Joe,

Is this the property (1948) ? Looks to be a reasonably good match to the plan.

- o Watson-Curtze Mansion History
The mansion, built in 1891, was the residence of the Watson and Curtze families before it became a museum in 1941.
Harrison Watson

H.F. Watson, his wife Carrie Tracy Watson and their daughter Winifred moved into the house in 1891 upon its completion. Harrison Watson was president of the H. F. Watson Paper Company, which manufactured building, roofing and lining papers and materials, as well as steam pipe and boiler packaging and coverings. In 1923, Winifred and her husband Ely Griswold sold the house to Frederick Felix Curtze. Mr. Curtze was president of the Erie Trust Company, Heisler Locomotive Works, Union Iron Works, and the Keystone Fish Company.

Fredrick, his wife Caroline and his two children Lousie and Fredrick, lived in the mansion until the death of Mr. Curtze in 1941. His family offered the Mansion to the School District of the City of Erie to be used as a museum. The Museum Department of the Erie Public Library moved into the mansion, which then became the Erie Public Museum and then the Erie Historical Museum in 1979. In 2000 the Erie Historical Museum and the Erie County Historical Society merged. Today, the mansion is a fully furnished Victorian that offers a glimpse into these families' lives and the sumptuous living available to them.

- o "Preoccupied with war work, Olmsted declined. But after the war ended, he began in the spring of 1920 a two year commission for landscaping the James Park estate. Pittsburgh architect William Boyd designed the Park house and asked Olmsted to plan gardens, terraces, and the driveway as well as plantings for the property which abutted the country club. Olmsted's hand-picked gardener, Jetson Dyer, from Maine lived on the Park estate and supervised the project. However, Olmsted's relationship with Park steadily deteriorated largely because Park objected to the expense. In laboriously written notes to the Brookline office Dyer beseeched Olmsted for another assignment because of Park's unrelenting negative and penurious attitude" from "The Olmsteds in Pittsburgh: (Part I) Landscaping the Private City" by Edward K. Historic nature of Moon house adds to its fanciful allure
November 20, 2004 12:00 AM
By Kevin Kirkland Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
"Like its namesake, Roselea unfolds itself slowly to visitors, who enter its curving, tree-lined private drive off Coraopolis Heights Road in Moon.
A fieldstone terrace comes into view first, followed by creamy white stucco walls on a sturdy stone foundation. And then the house just keeps going, with enough gables, brick chimneys and half-timbering for a fairy-tale village.
Built in 1905
The house and one of the barns were built in 1905 as a summer home for George E. Shaw, one of the founding partners of the law firm Reed Smith. Shaw hired architects McClure & Spahr to design Roselea in a Swiss farmhouse style, but there are also Tudor and Craftsman elements. James Lockhart, another lawyer, bought the house in 1915 and added a sun room with sleeping porch above, breezeway and the farmhouse, designed by the same architects as the house. Lockhart also had the barn moved 200 yards west, apparently to get some distance from the smell of his herd of Guernsey cattle.
In 1922, Lockhart sold the property to D.F. Crawford, an engineer with the Pennsylvania Railroad who added the second barn in 1926. Roselea Farm, the proper name, has had livestock for much of its history. The Crawfords' dairy cows and a few draft horses were still there, along with most of the furniture, books and other contents of the house, when Nancy's parents, Russell and Nancy Patton, bought it in 1950. During one brutal winter, Nancy remembers her father using the horses to deliver quarts of milk to neighboring families with infants."

Five golf course architects have worked at Allegheny C.C. over the years. The most famous one, Donald Ross, contributed three holes in the 1920s and consulted regularly.<sup>2</sup> Tom Bendelow designed the original course in 1902. Gil Hanse was the most recent architect on the scene. Hanse won the competition to design the course for the 2016 Summer Olympic Games in Rio de Janeiro. As a tribute to golf history at Allegheny C.C., the Invitational will present four courses to players and fans<sup>3</sup>: the original course and three composite courses.

response:
I gave it my best and could not locate the property. The drawings, photos, and correspondence we have for the Edward Roberts House lists Paoli as the location, without further elaboration. We have no site plan (the drawing set is incomplete) and the work is for mostly interior alterations to an earlier design (also an alteration / addition) by Wilson Eyre, dating to about 1914. We have a good collection of Eyre, but, again, no details for the house location.
Best I could find is the name and death date of Mrs. Roberts, who seems to be the client:
May Martin Roberts (d. Paoli, Aug. 6, 1942), wife of the late Edward Roberts – brief obit in the New York Times.
The times also reports the Roberts visits to Palm Beach in the society pages. One letter in our file is from "The Reef" in Palm Beach, the house the Times reported they were staying at.
A 1916 directory shows them living in Easttown, Paoli.
I tried every way that I could to find them in the Census records for 1920-1940, but to no avail. Strange.
Good luck!
Bill

- Eleazer Pomeroy, one of the most prominent business men in Northern Pennsylvania, died at his home 'The Elms ', in Troy, Pa., yesterday. The deceased had been in failing health for the past two years, and his death had been expected for; the last few weeks.

His only daughter and heir, Mrs. Geo. O. Holcomb, with her husband and two sons , Harry and Herbert, remain apart of Mr. Pomeroy's household at his own instance and request, Mr. Holcomb having had a share in and general supervision over their large business for several years . It is a sad coincidence that during his last sickness of many months his wife has also been stricken down with a fatal and painful malady and both go to the brink of the dark river without the kindly ministrations of each other, but being tenderly cared for in separate rooms by Mr. and Mrs. Holcomb, who have for months devoted every effort to soothe and alleviate their sufferings

- In 1956 the Piarist Fathers opened Devon Preparatory School for Boys on a 20 acre campus on North Valley Forge Road in Devon, Pennsylvania. They paid $86,000 for the Main Line campus, which included an old mansion, a carriage house, a stable and workers' quarters.

The mansion, the centerpiece of the estate, was built in 1913 by Philadelphia publisher Dr. Charles M. Lea. After World War II the estate was sold to a real estate developer, who lived on the estate for only one year. During that time he divided the original property into smaller parcels. The remaining land and properties were sold to a physician, who turned it into a psychiatric hospital. However, complaints from the neighbors prevented his project from succeeding. The mansion was abandoned for several years until it was bought by the Piarists.

The task of transforming the mansion into a school began in March of 1956. It was renamed Calasanctius Hall after St. Joseph Calasanctius, founder of the Piarist Order. The first entrance exam was given on April 28, 1956. Devon Preparatory School opened its doors on September 8 with 49 freshmen, including several boarders.

<http://libwww.freelibrary.org/75th/residential.htm>
  - Thomas Harrison Montgomery Residence
"Ardrossan," Maple Avenue Station, West Chester
""Ardrossan," meaning "high promontory," is the home of Thomas H. Montgomery, Lit. Doc. (Univ. of Penn. 1901), a descendant of Bishop White, an eminent American fire underwriter, an historian, and for the past 20 years the president of the American Fire Insurance Company. The name is from a Scottish estate possessed for 800 years by the family."
<http://www.brynmawr.edu/iconog/king/main6.html>
  - Renowned architect Horace Trumbauer designed the three-story, 38,000-square-foot, 50-room baronial brick Georgian Revival structure. The interior was the work of White Allom and Company (think Buckingham Palace).
Ardrossan was built between 1911 and 1913. Col. Robert Leaming Montgomery and his wife, Charlotte Hope Binney (Tyler) Montgomery, moved in at the end of 1912. They named the estate after the family's ancestral home in Ayrshire, Scotland. It was always an event house—one designed for maximum guest appeal. "On the approach from the driveway, you don't see Ardrossan at all—then suddenly you do," says David Nelson Wren, Ardrossan's leading historian. "Inside, only invited guests could see through to the backyard."
By now, it's a well-known piece of local trivia that the estate was the inspiration for The Philadelphia Story, the Philip Barry play that became a 1940 Oscar-winning film starring Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant and James Stewart. It's been said that Hepburn's Tracy Lord was inspired by the Montgomerys' first daughter, Helen Hope Montgomery Scott.

  - "Hillbrow", John Lowber Welsh Summer Home
Wyndmoor, PA 1880
Hillbrow was designed by Frank Furness in 1880 as a summer home for John Lowber Welsh.
John Lowber Welsh had long known Frank Furness at the time of this commission. At the outbreak of the Civil War Welsh, Furness, and a number of other prominent Philadelphians, many of whom Furness would also later build houses for, had tried to form a cavalry unit under Captain William Rotch Wister. The unit's failure to be accepted into the Union Army would lead to Furness joining Rush's Lancers. While Furness would then go into architecture, Welsh would follow his father as a financier, would become a receiver for the Reading Railroad, is credited with having the idea for the creation of the U.S. Steel Corporation, and consolidated mass transit in Philadelphia through combining the smaller companies into what would become the Union Traction Co. and later Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co.

From Ancient and Modern Germantown, Mount Airy and Chestnut Hill by Samuel Fitch Hotchkin:

"The English looking house of John Lowber Welsh faces the end of Birch lane on Montgomery avenue. The position is a remarkably fine one for a dwelling. Mr. Welsh is a son of the late Hon. John Welsh, who was the United States Minister to England. The mansion which he has constructed is an architectural one of stone that would draw the attention of the passer-by for its beauty. A piazza gives the privilege of a view of uncommon extent and grandeur."

  - "Smyth's design was published in the American Architect & Building News April 19, 1884 figure 20 - Samuel Strang died in 1898. In 1901 his widow sold Shadow Farm to John L. Welsh of Philadelphia. The architect Welsh employed to make-over the house and plan a new group of outbuildings has not been determined. Whoever he was, the architect did an extraordinary job, eliminating the Queen Anne flourishes of the main house, recasting its picturesque form into a horizontal mass with vertical accents recalling in its horizontality and the nuances of its visual balance and counterbalance the work of Wright and his followers. The outbuilding complex is no less an achievement. Architecturally, the Welsh outbuildings rank with the best in the state. John Welsh's circa 1904 revisions to the estate established its fundamentally early twentieth-century architectural character. Lacking good documentation, it is difficult to determine with precision which components of Shadow Farm's landscaping resulted from early twentieth-century modifications and which date to the 1880s or even earlier. Like the main house, it is probably- best to consider the extant landscape design a very pleasing hybrid. The siting of the main house on the -highest ground overlooking the lake to the south was set by 1884 and in all likelihood in 1870, when the first house on the estate was erected. The oval drive before the residence and the naturalistic plantings surrounding the house and along the lakeshore are nineteenth-century century in inspiration, surely, and correspond to what is at least suggested in the Smyth rendering published in the American Architect in 1884. The perimeter plantings of laurel and rhododendron, the modest main entrance gateway, and the relatively straight main drive, on the other hand, appear to be early twentieth-century emendations, as does the walled kitchen garden, the foundation planting-on the north front of the house, the screen planting hiding the service ell, and the rows of trees leading to the back gate and outbuilding complex...
The Welsh family continued to use Shadow Farm as a summer place until well after the Second World War. It was then the property of John Welsh's daughter, Mrs. - Caryl Roberts. The Roberts eventually lived here year-round. Farm operations were discontinued in the 1960s and portions of the agricultural acreage away from the environs of the main house, -on the opposite side of Silver Lake, were sold. The estate, reduced to some thirty acres, remained in family use until 1979." National Register of Historic Places Inventory - Nomination Form, Shadow Farm, Kingston, RI

The mansion was originally built by Jacob Nolde, in an area which has a rich history. Nolde later gave the mansion to his daughter, and it became known as the Guthrie Mansion.
Nolde, who was the co-founderin 1890 of the Nolde & Horst mill, Reading's first full-fashioned hosiery mill, later built a second mansion, now the center piece at Nolde Forest Environmental Education Center.

  - For many decades, the annual Christmas expedition to buy a tree at Sheerlund Forests has been a much-loved tradition for thousands of Berks County families. But not many people realize that the tradition stretches back more than one hundred years.
It was in 1901 that George Horst, founding partner in the women's hosiery firm of Nolde & Horst, first purchased a plot of land three miles south of Reading on the New Holland Road. He built a summer house on that land, and planted the open fields on the steep hill behind the house with evergreens. As the trees gradually grew, he invited his friends to visit at Christmastime and to choose a Christmas tree to take back to town. He loved the beautiful rolling fields and hills around Sheerlund because they reminded him of his native Germany, and ultimately he purchased almost 500 acres (along with his business partner Jacob Nolde, who purchased another 500 acres across the New Holland Road, a tract that is now Nolde State Forest). In 1910, he constructed the stone observation tower that still stands atop the Sheerlund hill, where the larger Christmas trees are now located.

After George Horst's death, his daughter and son-in-law, Caroline and Robert Sullivan, decided to plant the entire Sheerlund valley in trees, transforming Sheerlund "Forests" into Berks County's largest Christmas tree farm. The land was planted up after World War II, and the retail tree lot opened in the 1950's, along with the Ornament Barn. <http://www.sheerlundforests.com/about.html>

- Built in 1744 as a country summer home by wine importer John Wister, Grumblethorpe was originally known as "John Wister's Big House" because it had multiple stories. Built from stone quarried on and oak cut from the Wisters' extensive property, the house is a prime example of domestic Pennsylvania German architecture of the period. Intended as a summer retreat, the house was occupied also in winter in the year 1793 when the Wister family sought refuge from the yellow fever epidemic raging in Philadelphia. In the early 19th century, Charles Jones Wister I, grandson of John, made it his year-round residence. The family retained ownership until the 1950's. - o [image of "Oakley" at 500 Moreland Ave.]

Description: 500 W. Moreland Avenue, called "Oakley." Built 1899-1900. This impressive Tudor-style dwelling was designed by Peabody & Sterns, one of New England's most prominent architectural firms at the turn of the century. They had very few commissions in Philadelphia, and only one other in Chestnut Hill, "Krisheim" on McCallum Street, the home of Dr. George Woodward. This was the residence of Frederick Strawbridge who moved from his residence "Torworth" at School House Lane and Wissahickon Avenue, now the site of Alden Park Manor. Contractor was William J. Patterson. Frederick Strawbridge's son was Gordon and his daughter is Sally Strawbridge Magnason, class of 1945 at Springside School. Her father lived in California, but she came to this house to live to attend her junior and senior year at Springside.

Another of the Wyomissing textile magnates, E. Richard Meinig, emigrated from Saxony to Reading around the turn of the 19th century. Unlike the others, who manufactured hosiery, Meinig made silk dress gloves at a Reading factory that employed 800 workers.

The house Meinig built, a Georgian Revival mansion at 607 Trent Ave., was a gathering place for Wyomissing's nouveau riche.

Our setting allows residents to retain maximum independence by having the help that they need to meet a variety of health concerns. We create individualized service plans to help with mobility, balance and keeping abreast of current events.

The majestic Victorian mansion elegantly reflects the grandeur of earlier times when the textile baron, Gustav Oberlander, entertained heads of state and visiting dignitaries from overseas. The rich European craftsmanship is evident throughout the flowing library, ballroom and formal dining rooms. The popular back patio fills the senses with a panoramic view of the manicured acreage framed by the exotic trees imported from around the country. William G. Warden (1831-1895), who had settled on School House lane after relocating from his native Pittsburgh...He also acquired many properties in the neighborhood of School House Lane, including this site. After Mr. Warden's death, this site was conveyed to his estate. Sometime between 1908 and 1911 Barbara Warden Strawbridge and her husband, civil engineer William J. Strawbridge (partner in the engineering firm of Tasker & Strawbridge) moved to this property from the intersection of the lane and Wissahickon Avenue. In 1916, when Mrs. Strawbridge was widowed and still living there, William G. Warden's widow, Sarah W. Warden and the other trustees of his estate sold the property to the family's School Lane Land Company, presumably for the development of middle-class housing.

Gibbs Estate, 3300 West School House Lane, p.101

Early History:...In 1880, when the Ashton family ...sold the western portion of their property to Thompson Bell, whose family later sold the lot (still 9-plus acres) to Henry L. Davis, who in turn sold it to William G. Warden in 1888. Mr. Warden 1831-1895, who had settled in School House Lane after relocating from his native Pittsburgh in 1865, was a very successful businessman in oil refining, gas and shipping. This was just one of the properties he had acquired in the neighborhood...The eastern side of the property, including a stone dwelling, was conveyed at an 1882 sheriff's sale to John F. Orne, and in 1905-06 that lot also passed on the Warden family. Finally, the Warden Estate sold the property (lot 6) to John H. McClatchy's School Lane Land Company in 1916." - Pearson “favored dramatically posed asymmetries, surprising curves and angles, patterns in brick colors, windows of insistent contrasting forms, and a remarkable willingness to combine varied historical languages, often all in a single building,” Cohen wrote in 2006, the year that another Pearson mansion, known as Red Gate, was demolished despite public outcry by Philadelphia University.

- Early Days
Bay View Asylum: Built in 1886, this original, three-story ediface evolved into today's Mason F. Lord Building
Bayview began life in 1773 as the Baltimore City and County Alms House. Situated on what is now Baltimore's west side, near where Maryland General Hospital is today, it was repeatedly pushed to the fringes of urban development. It landed on its present site, a rolling parcel of land far to the southeast of the city and overlooking the Chesapeake Bay, in 1866 when it came to be known as Bay View Asylum. It housed the poor and insane and was known as a dreaded, sinister place. Bay View was a name Baltimore mothers evoked when they disciplined their children, as in, "If you don't behave, you're going to wind up at Bay View!"
The link with Johns Hopkins was forged in the mid-1880s, even before its hospital opened, when William Welch, University pathologist, began studying Bay View Asylum patients in his research. Later, medical students from Hopkins joined University of Maryland students doing clinical rotations there.
Baltimore City Hospitals
In 1925 Bay View Asylum was renamed Baltimore City Hospitals—plural because it encompassed three separate hospitals: one for acute care, another for chronic care, and a third for tuberculosis patients. Psychiatric patients continued on at City Hospitals up through the 1930s when they were admitted to state institutions.

  - The Herkness Family was very active in real estate; they purchased the land once owned by John Wanamaker and developed much of Rydal and Meadowbrook. The home of Alice and John Smylie Herkness sits back from Valley Road. Built in 1920, the house later became a Roman Catholic convent. Today, the building is for sale. The Herkness's daughter Alice married J. Liddon Pennock in 1936. As a wedding present, the couple received the newly constructed house and what is now Meadowbrook Farms." p.97, Abington, Jenkintown, and Rockledge, Arcadia Publishing, 2000

S. F. Hotchkin, Rural Pennsylvania, 1897, p. 37: "The solid house of the father, with its bay-windows, shows a comfortable abode. A grand oak tree, with wide-spreading limbs has owned a piece of the ground for many years, whatever human tenants may claim. A rustic seat beneath it invites repose in summer, and may remind one of balmy airs if seen in winter." =Greystone.

  - "On January 14, 1901, the Olmsteds wrote W.L. Mellon at the suggestion of William Falconer, Superintendent of Schenley Park, offering their services for planning the property of his projected residence near the Murdoch Street entrance of Schenley Park. Falconer knew of work the Olmsteds were doing on the Schenley Hotel and the Bigelow Boulevard entrance to the park in Oakland. Mellon obviously reacted positively, for as noted in the vignette opening this article, John Olmsted arrived by train in Pittsburgh on January 29, 1901, and after briefly visiting Mellon at his office, joined adjacent property owner Leonard G. - "Other East End commissions and inquiry in this post-World War I period stemmed from the firm's past and ongoing work in the city. Whiting reported to the Brookline office in March 1921 on a site visit to the Georgian brick home of architect Frederick I. Merrick. Merrick was the Morewood Heights neighbor of Howard Heinz, a client of the Olmsteds a decade earlier. A local architect, Stanley Roush, the nephew of a Mt. Lebanon client, businessman J.C. Roush, had recommended the firm to Merrick. The Olmsted firm prepared a preliminary report, but Merrick terminated the relationship after deciding to carry out some aspects of the project himself, and at his own pace." from "The Olmsteds in Pittsburgh: (Part I) Landscaping the Private City" by Edward K.   - "In early 1931, while Olmsted's long-time associate, E.C. Whiting, was still supervising R.B. Mellon's garden reconstruction, the Olmsted firm agreed to prepare plans for the adjoining Shady Avenue property of R.B. Mellon's son-in-law, Alan M. Scaife. Later that summer, having evaluated Olmsted's preliminary plans and detailed work sheets, Scaife (like his father-in-law had earlier done) bristled at the expense. He paid the outstanding bill, requested a copy of the report, then (unlike his father-in-law) brusquely decided to do no further business with Olmsted." from "The Olmsteds in Pittsburgh: (Part I) Landscaping the Private City" by Edward K.   - "A Short History of PCA [Pittsburgh Center for the Arts]'S Buildings

For the industrialists in the early 1900s, a major living area in these years was Pittsburgh's East End, where a building boom was underway. They commissioned a parade of mansions along Fifth Avenue to what became known as "Millionaires Row" for some of the wealthiest and most celebrated families of the town, such as the Mellons, the Benedums and the Fricks.
In 1909, one of the most impressive mansions was the 65-room Richard Beatty Mellon House on 11 acres bordering Fifth and Shady Avenues and Beechwood Boulevard or what is now known as Mellon Park. Richard Beatty Mellon and his wife Jennie King Mellon raised two children, Sarah Cordelia King Mellon and Richard King Mellon. Beside the very large mansion were a garage and a carriage house, which housed servants on the second floor. The carriage house was donated to the city and is now the Phipps Garden Center. The 65-room mansion was torn down in 1941.
There was another earlier Tudor revival mansion on the Mellon Estate. Constructed in 1904, it was given as a wedding gift in 1927 to R.B.'s daughter, Sarah, who married Alan Magee Scaife, a fifth generation industrialist and Mellon National Bank Director. In February 1946, the Scaifes donated their home and property to the city. This mansion is now the Scaife Building and houses art classes for the Pittsburgh Center for the Arts." <http://pca.pittsburgharts.org/about/pca-history>
  - 1940 census lists Allan M. Scaife (40yo executive, coal production; owner $100000) and wife Sarah (36yo unemployed) and daughter Cordelia (11yo) and son Richard M (7yo) and servants as residing at 1047 Shady Ave. (current address for the PCA)

  - KIRBY PARK ESSENCE OF OLMSTEDS' STYLE
JEFF DEAN Sunday, May 13, 2001 Page: 1G
The famed landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted, designer of New York's Central Park, Chicago's South Park and Montreal's Mount Royal Park, retired in 1895, leaving his two sons, Frederick Jr. and John, to keep the firm alive.
In 1921, Wilkes-Barre city councilmen contemplating uses for the plot of land just donated by famed Wilkes-Barre resident F.M. Kirby commissioned the Olmsted Brothers' landscape architectural firm to design a park to rival any other park in the country. "The Olmsted Brothers were the most prominent landscape architects in country at the time," said Vance Packard, a retired historical preservationist and industrial archaeologist.
Packard lives in a Bear Lake home originally owned by Gilbert McClintock, who was one of the city councilmen who commissioned the Olmsted Brothers to design Kirby Park. After their work for Wilkes-Barre, Packard said, the Olmsteds designed McClintock's personal grounds, a design that exists on the land today.
"The Olmsteds, senior and juniors, were basically trying to recreate nature," said Packard, pointing out that, at the time, the dominant trend in park design was to follow French and Italian influences and create very formal, symmetrical, manicured spaces. "The fact is that most of what the Olmsteds did wasn't really very natural, since they tended to introduce a lot of foreign species, but it is still beautiful."
Packard said that while the elder Olmsted didn't invent "naturalism," he did do a lot to make it popular, and when his sons took over the business they continued in the same style.
"They would substitute (plant) species and move the earth around," said Packard. "Sometimes they even built streams and lakes, but the effect was to try and make a park look as natural as possible, with a picturesque setting."

  - Sale upsets ex-Wilkes U. prof
School archivist Cox says McClintock Hall has sentimental value.
WILKES-BARRE – A former Wilkes University professor and the school’s archivist said he’s “deeply disappointed” in the school’s decision to place McClintock Hall up for sale.
The building at 44 S. River St., built circa 1841 and believed to be the oldest existing home in Wilkes-Barre, is among seven properties the school is trying to sell. It’s listed on the National Register for Historic Places and has sentimental value to the school’s history, according to Harold Cox of Exeter.
“It’s part of its heritage; an essential part,” Cox said. “It is the base from which Wilkes was built.”
Gilbert McClintock lived in the home while serving on the board of directors of Bucknell University. The Lewisburg school opened and operated Bucknell Junior College in Wilkes-Barre and McClintock served as the chairman of a group formed to administer the school’s needs. The school became Wilkes College in 1947 and McClintock served as the first chairman of its board of trustees. He died in 1959, while still board chairman. He gave the house to the school in 1951 and it has been used mostly as student housing in recent years.   - 11. McClintock Law office (1840’s)
34 South River Street
Attorney Andrew McClintock’s small Italianate law office, now the Baltimore Company, is a quaint survivor from Wilkes-Barre’s days as a sleepy county seat: Next door McClintock’s house has borne witness to both phases of River Street’s existence. Originally, the house was designed in the Greek Revival style. In 1863, McClintock, made wealthy by the growth of the mining industry, engaged New York architects Calvert Vaux and F. C. Withers to remodel his house. The spare structure was soon transformed into the first High Victorian Gothic house in Wilkes-Barre, boasting a polychrome brick arcade which made the house as fashionable as any of its neighbors. <http://downtownwilkes-barre.org/new/tour.pdf>

  - 10. Guard Center (1909)
16 South River Street
24 South River Street
The Guard Center building was constructed in just ninety days during the winter of 1908 to house the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, one of eight major coal operators dominating the industry at the turn of the century. Its imposing granite columns signify the important role that the coal companies once played in the life of the city. Wilkes-Barre architects Welsh, Sturdevant and Poggi designed this Neoclassical Revival structure. Coal company president Frederick Huber commissioned the same architects to design his home next door in 1911.
The Craftsman Style detailing of the three-story mansion hints at the influence of contemporary Prairie School architects like Frank Lloyd Wright; however, the house’s massing is resolutely traditional. <http://downtownwilkes-barre.org/new/tour.pdf>

  - Names of York: Samuel Small
Posted on November 27, 2010 by Joan
Place: Small Athletic Field in York
Who was it named after? The property's 19th-century owners were P.A. and Samuel Small. Samuel Small, in particular, was an 1800s merchant in the York area. Many members of the Small family were well-known, but Samuel was York's leading 19th-century philanthropist and spearheaded construction of York's first real hospital, a three-story, 12-bed building on College Avenue.
Something interesting: Small was no stranger to big projects. He sparked the York Collegiate Institute, forerunner of York College, the Children's Home of York and the York Benevolent Association, among other community work.

- "This monument is not readily available to the public because it stands near the Box Hill Club within the confines of the gated Regents' Glen community in Spring Garden Township. It's been there since the 1920s. Background posts: Glatfelter, Morgan Smith head industrial legacy list and The real big York County house that little false teeth built and Chocolate Bliss? Tooth shining flavors 'cooked up' in York. The variety of tree known as the white oak has loaned its name to many things around York County. White Oak Park, a hangout north of York, stood amid a stand of such trees. White Oak School was a one-roomer near Hametown in southern York County. White Oak Plains was an area running from present-day Regents' Glen near the Country Club of York and extending toward Indian Rock Dam...
 "Upon the rich alluvial soil along this part of the Codorus," historian George Prowell wrote in 1907, "groves of large white oak trees grew luxuriantly at the time of the first settlement of this region."
 A stand of the old oaks was saved from timbering in the 1920s, and a monument celebrates those early conservation efforts by a member of the prominent Smith family of S. Morgan Smith fame. It stands near the community's golf course and a stand of houses, just down hill from the Box Hill Club. Purdon Smith Whiteley, daughter of Charles Elmer Smith, erected the monument with the inscription: "This property, known as White Oak Plains was bought in 1736 from the Wm. Penn Family. These old White Oaks were saved by Charles Elmer Smith when the neighboring woods were timbered about 1920."

- "On what is now Grantley Hill adjacent to Wyndham Hills, stood the mansion of George Small, a member of the prominent York firm P. A. & S. Small. During 1878 the residence was named "Grantley" in honor of Mary Grant, the maiden name of Mrs. Small; thus the origin of the naming of Grantley Road and ultimately the naming of Yorkco's Grantley Plant."

  - The Water Board has given the subject serious consideration the past season and has directed its superintendent to make studies and plans for a larger supply These plans and studies have been examined critically by Mr FP Stearns CE formerly Chief Engineer of the Metropolitan Water and Sewerage Board and they have received his approval The plan stated briefly contemplates purchasing about 128,544 square feet of land in addition to the 10,000 square feet now owned by the town on WC Cabot's hill and building thereon a covered reservoir of a capacity not exceeding six million gallons The construction of the reservoir will be such that it will add to rather than take from the natural beauty of the hill." p.310, Annual Report of the Town Officers ... and the Town Records, Brookline (Mass.), 1908

[showing the Edward T. Storebury property]
  - Old money had its claim to the main line, west of the city. New money found company in the northern Philadelphia suburbs palatial estates were, in a fashion, paid for with hats (Stetson), ice cream (Breyer), magazines (Curtis), and oil and transportation (Elkins). Each was more opulent than the previous. But none outdid Whitmarsh Hall, paid for by money made with money. Edward T. Stotesbury, who built Whitmarsh Hall with his wife Eva, headed Drexel & Company, part of J.P. Morgan empire. The Stotesbury Rittenhouse Square mansion, it seemed, was not quite enough for entertaining in the new grand style. In 1917, they commissioned architect Horace Trumbauer and landscape architect Jacques Greberto convert more than 300 acres of rolling Montgomery County farmland into one of America's most flamboyant estates. Three million dollars and three years later the Stotesbury's motored past the massive entry gates down two miles of white gravel drive. They had arrived in style. Whitmarsh Hall had 150 rooms, 28 bathrooms, three elevators, and separate apartments for guests, who were each assigned a servant and chauffeur. Neither princes nor presidents, cardinals nor comics, declined a Stotesbury invitation.
<http://www.serianni.com/wh0.htm>
  - As the Stotesbury's began to entertain more often, Lord Joseph Duveen convinced Mrs. Stotesbury that her "petit palais" no longer suited the grand dimensions of their new life. It was then that Mr. Stotesbury purchased 300 acres outside Chestnut Hill to build what would become known as Whitmarsh Hall. To build the estate, consisting of 146 rooms, took 83 million dollars and three years. Upon the completion of the home in 1921, the Stotesbury's did not spend much time at the townhouse. In 1922, Mr. Stotesbury placed the townhouse up for sale. Due to the exorbitant price, the home did not sell until October, 1925 when the Philopatrian Club purchased a portion of the townhouse for $400,000. Thomas Logue, Esquire, a long-time Philopatrian, negotiated the deal with Mr. Stotesbury. The club also purchased a large portion of the priceless collection of paintings located in the home. The Philopatians sold their clubhouse at 1411-13 Arch Street to the U.G.I. Company and moved into 1923 Walnut Street in March, 1926. One of the most popular additions to the new clubhouse was the Billiard Room. The Philopatians brought their Brunswick, Balke, Callender Company pool table and billiard table from the old clubhouse to the new location. The tables date back to 1912 and are longer than regulation tables of this day In fact, "Minnesota Fats" often played with members and at pool exhibitions at the new clubhouse.

  - After his two year term expired Murphy returned to the civic life of Newark. He was always active in society, his daughter had married William Kinney, and now he worked to bring horse shows to Newark. He was also one of the fifty charter members of the Newark Museum. Still engaged in civics, Murphy protested Russia's treatment of Jews and continued to support the Republicans.
Murphy died in Palm Beach, Florida in 1920 at age 74. He is buried in Mt. Pleasant cemetery. Mayor Vincent Murphy was not a relation.
The statue itself was the work of J. Massey Rhind, a Scottish-born sculptor who worked in New Jersey. Rhind also created the statue of Washington in Washington Park and the Colleoni replica in Lincoln Park. The caryatids over the doors of Macy's are Rhind's, as is statuary for the American Surety Company Building, the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, and Grant's Tomb.
The statue was commissioned by the Essex County Park Commission that Murphy had once served. It was unveiled in November of 1925 with the now-unreadable inscription:
A FRIEND OF HUMANITY ENDOWED WITH RARE CIVIL ZEAL AND EXECUTIVE FORESIGHT;
AN ORGANIZER AND LEADER AMONG MEN. GOVERNOR OF THIS STATE 1902-1905.

- "The Central Ward—the section of Newark most impacted by the pivotal 1967 riot and the subsequent exodus from the city—has large tracts of vacant and abandoned properties. It also sits between the two great Olmsted creations, Weequahic Park and Branch Brook Park. Connecting these 700 acres of greenery is a concept that goes back 100 years. In the early 20th century, John C. Olmsted proposed a parkway system for Essex County that included a “Weequahic Parkway” running up to Branch Brook. Today the city is talking of a “Newark Greenway Project” in the vicinity of West Side Park that would involve traffic-calming...” from “Newark, New Jersey: An Open Space Analysis” written by Peter Harnik, n.d., The Trust for Public Lands http://cloud.tpl.org/pubs/ccpe\_newark\_open\_space\_analysis.pdf

- o Hartland MacDougall House (Ashburton)(10/1900)

Dorval, QC, Canada

Residential, Country house [basement, 2 floors, attic, 10 bedrooms]; brick; composite

Client: Hartland MacDougall

Architect: E. Maxwell & G.C. Shattuck

Description: Maj. MacDougall, born in 1840, headed MacDougall Stockbrokers, was the Director of the United Financial Corporation Ltd., and was one of the founders of the Mount Royal Club. He commissioned the partnership of Maxwell and Shattuck to design a country home for him off the shore of the Saint-Louis Lake, when Edward had just completed the work on the Dorval Yacht Club. The country house Ashburton, was essentially rectangular in plan with two lateral projections with elaborate Classical ornamentation. The entrance front was divided into three sections defined by quoins and pilasters. A pediment over the front door was repeated at the roof level, where the ornamentation was more elaborate, with pilasters topped with pinnacles. All window openings were elegantly crowned with keystones, which is a common feature in most of Edward's projects. The plan was based on Bois-de-la-Roche, the principal body of the building being flanked by two projecting wings to form a quadrangle. The entrance led to a large hall dominated by an elegant fireplace and the staircase. All the interiors featured pine wood detailing and intricate carvings. Three large rooms occupied the space beyond the hall: a drawing room, dining room, and billiard room. These rooms had broad French windows that opened onto the covered verandah, with a view towards the lake. All together the house accommodated a total of ten bedrooms out of which five were located in the first floor and the remaining in the attic floor. The basement was comprised of a store room, furnace room, and rain water tank. The Hartland MacDougall summer residence was sold to Mr. J.W. McConnell and was altered during the 1920s. The architect Kenneth Guscotte Rea, who was hired for this job, created a spacious living room by removing the wall between the drawing room and billiard room. The new kitchen was added to the eastern side of the house and a solarium to the west side. A large terrace was also introduced to the exterior of the house, which faced the lake. The summerhouse survived for sixty years and was destroyed by fire in the 1960s.

  - In 1892, James Ross commissioned Bruce Price, a renowned American architect, who also designed McGill's Royal Victoria College and the Chateau Frontenac in Quebec City, to build a house for him on Peel Street on the Square Mile. Ross was an entrepreneur of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, whose interests included yachting and collecting masterpieces. As such, he was the commander of the St. Lawrence Yacht Club and, later in his life, helped to create the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts. The house, with its two circular turrets and larger central tower, was constructed of Credit Valley limestone and was designed in the French Chateau style. Between 1897 and 1912, Edward and William Maxwell, a pair of well-known Montreal architects, were commissioned to redesign and expand parts of Price's original work. Part of this work involved adding to the mansion an art gallery wing, a breakfast room and bedroom, and several wrought iron and carved details. In 1913, James Ross died and his son, J.K.L. Ross inherited the house and a considerable fortune. He hired the firm of Trowbridge and Livingston to expand and remodel his late father's home, giving it a more austere, Classical appearance. In 1935, having spent all of his fortune on parties, horse racing, and yachts, J.K.L. Ross went bankrupt and the house was sold for a mere $51,000. John W. McConnell bought the Ross Mansion in 1948 as a gift to McGill. At this time, it was renamed Chancellor Day Hall, after one of the University's first Chancellors, and was given to the Faculty of Law, which still occupies it today. In 1966, the firm of Bland and Lemoyne erected a six-storey, precast concrete tower just west of Chancellor Day Hall and connected to it by a corridor. This extension, which blends with the adjacent Stewart Biological Sciences Building, provided more classrooms and library space.

- 43.130462,-77.60416 12291 Ononto Park (29/1) Rochester New York 0
  - [still unsure of where "Ononto" comes from - correspondence? No apparent genesis with records?]
  - The 1890 Park
After two previous failed attempts to get the Rochester City Council to accept the offer of donated land to be the start of a public park system, City Council in October, 1887, accepted the offer of 19.63 acres from George Ellwanger and Patrick Barry, leading citizens of Rochester. The land offered was a part of their world-famous Mt. Hope Nursery and adjoined the lands of the 1875 city reservoir. The gift specified that the city would hire a landscape engineer to develop the park and establish an arboretum of the first class; but along with the restrictions came the offer to provide from the Mt Hope Nurseries numerous specimen and rare plants for use in the new park. The New York State legislature created the City of Rochester Parks Commission in April 1888, and this commission would develop and operate the city parks system until 1916. On the advice of the Buffalo Parks Commission, they interviewed leading landscape engineers and selected Frederick Law Olmsted, Sr. and Sons as their adviser. This relationship with the Olmsted firm was to last into the twentieth century.
Initially, Frederick Law Olmsted was reluctant to design the new park because he thought that it lacked an element essential to good park design. The elements he desired were turf (lawn), forest and free flowing water; the lands to be designed lacked the water element. Olmsted voiced his desire to develop two parks along the Genesee River, north and south of the existing city, connected by a series of park boulevards. The Commission stood firm: he could design all the parks or none of the parks. Olmsted relented and began the task of designing a park system for the citizens of Rochester, one of only four systems he designed in the country.
One of the characteristics of an Olmsted landscape and, consequently, one of the principles of landscape architecture, is the look of natural beauty, even though the landscape is designed and in some cases constructed. In Highland Park, dedicated in 1890, Olmsted used the existing topography of the Pinnacle Range, a glacial moraine, to emphasize the plant materials and park elements incorporated into the design. The high ground east of the existing reservoir served as the location of a focal point and as a viewing feature of the surrounding areas. To enhance the scenic vistas, a three story pavilion designed by Shepley, Rutan & Cooledge of Boston, and based on a sketch by Olmsted, was constructed, using funds donated by Ellwanger and Barry and dedicated in September 1890 to the children of Rochester. This structure served as the park's focal point until it was demolished in the 1960's."

  - Edward S. Clouston House [Bois-Briant]: Additions and Alterations([1898-1911])
170 chemin Senneville, Senneville, QC, Canada
Residential, Country house [addition: 2 floors, attic, 3 bedrooms, 2 servants' rooms]; stone; wall bearing Client: Sir Edward Seaborne Clouston
Architect: E. & W.S. Maxwell
Description: Edward S. Clouston purchased Bois-Briant in Senneville from John J.C. Abbott's estate in 1898. John Abbott, a Montreal lawyer, headed the Faculty of Law, McGill University, from 1855 to 1880. As a politician, Abbott represented Argenteuil at the House of Commons (1857-1874, 1880-1887), was called to the Senate in 1887 and was named Prime Minister of Canada (1891-1892) after Sir John A. MacDonald's death. He had owned this property since 1865 and probably commissioned the existing stone Neo-Gothic house – whose architect is unknown -- shortly thereafter. Many other buildings, such as a barn, mill, greenhouses, icehouses, cottages, were also present at the time of his death in 1893. One of the largest summer properties in Senneville (from the gatehouse to the mansion itself, the driveway extends to no less than 1950 feet), Bois-Briant was considerably remodelled by its new owner. Banker Edward S. Clouston, Vice-President and, between 1890 and 1911, General Manager of the Bank of Montreal, was born at Moose Factory, Ontario, in 1849. Having joined Bank of Montreal in 1865, Clouston climbed the ranks so successfully that he was eventually referred to as Canada's J.P. Morgan. In 1893 he chose Edward Maxwell to design his urban residence at 362 Peel (55), demolished in 1938. Obviously pleased with the results, he commissioned Edward Maxwell the first alterations to Bois-Briant in 1898-1899. Only minor changes such as a bay window added to the all on the ground floor were implemented at that time. The existing Sulpician mill was renovated and the gatehouse built with Shingle and Tudor style details. Shortly thereafter a kitchen wing, placed at a 45-degree angle to the rear, was begun. Edward Maxwell asked his Boston colleagues, the landscape architects Olmstead Brothers, to redesign the grounds. In 1905, a major addition to the lakeside part of the house called for a new dining room wing to be placed perpendicularly to the north east corner, with new bedrooms upstairs and a portico joining the existing hall wing. Stone and half-timbering used in elevation and a less steep roof profile distinguished Edward and William Maxwell's work but still fitted nicely with the original Neo-Gothic façades. Finally, in 1909, another addition -- a bedroom wing designed mostly by William Maxwell -- brought the length of the house to about 150 feet. Five new bedrooms and 4 bathrooms were added: the first floor's bedroom opened unto a sleeping porch with views on three sides. In elevation, the Tudor character was more assertive than the previous addition, with William's sure handling of proportions, fine detailing and juxtaposition of stonework and half-timbering as well as the confident placement of openings. Landscape architect Frederick Todd contributed plans for the terrace, steps and pergola that overlooked Lake of the Two Mountains (Lac des Deux-Montagnes). Bois-Briant remained in the Clouston family after his death but most of the Maxwell's additions in the Tudor style (dining room wing, portico, bedroom wing and kitchen wing) were torn down during the Second World War, returning the house – ironically -- to roughly its original, nineteenth-century size and Neo-Gothic style. Save a porte-cochère extending above the driveway and interior alterations, Bois-Briant, the Abbott-Clouston country house has remained the same since.

- "On Rumstick Point, William H. Hoffman erected the large house at 53 Rumstick Road about 1885. Fifteen years later, he sold the house to his brother Henry Hoffman and moved up the road to a new house designed by architects Stone, Carpenter & Willson and landscaped by the Olmsted firm between 1900 and 1932. [job# 411] The house burned in 1957, and the land was subdivided. The Arnold Hoffman House [job #6428], designed by architect John T. Walker of Brookline for William Hoffman's son, still survives at 251 Rumstick Road. It was originally the north lot of three cottage lots laid out by the Olmsted firm in 1911-12." p.23
 "The process of development of Barrington plats varied, of course, depending on date and developer, but a single example may help to explain the process. In June, 1938, R. C. Stark Incorporated purchased a six-acre tract bounded by Rumstick Road and Ferry Lane from Henry Hoffman. The sale was arranged by J. Benjamin Nevin's office. The tract was described by a newspaper article as "elm studded," and contained a house and a barn. The town's zoning ordinance prescribed 10,000 square-foot lots for the area. Rossiter C. Stark remodeled the old house for himself. C. Reuben Moberg, a Providence architect associated with the Stark firm, drew up the subdivision plan: eighteen buildings lots, roughly 100 x 100 feet, and a road running parallel from Rumstick Road onto Ferry Lane." p.38
 "53 [Rumstick Rd] WILLIAM H. HOFFMAN HOUSE ca. 1885: A 2-story, cross-gable roof, stucco-clad dwelling with English Cottage influences in its design. The asymmetrical roof line has deep eaves with heavy brackets. A large Victorian carriage house is located on one side. This home was sold to Henry Hoffman, William's brother, in 1900 when William built a second house no longer extant. The house was remodelled in 1907, and the Olmsted firm was commissioned to do the landscaping, which remains largely intact." p.75-76
 "251 [Rumstick Rd] ARNOLD HOFFMAN HOUSE ca. 1916, T. Walker, Brookline, MA, architect: A 2-story, hip-roof; stucco-clad dwelling with some Mission style features in its design. It is set well back from the road. Arnold was the son of William Hoffman and this house represents the last remaining piece of William's large estate, No. 53 Rumstick Road, which was extensively landscaped by the Olmsted Brothers from 1916 to 1924." p.77, Historic and Architectural Resources of Barrington, Rhode Island, Rhode Island Historical Preservation Commission, 1993

- "NAYATT POINT LIGHTHOUSE 1828 et seq.: A 3-story, square brick tower attached to a 1-1/2-story and 2-story complex structure, comprised of three connected sections laid out at right angles to each other, each built at a different period. The 1828 center brick section and ell served as the keeper's quarters for a former freestanding tower nearer the western tip of Nayatt Point. In 1856 the present tower was built; it retains a cast-iron lantern and ventilator and an iron balustrade. At this time a 1-story northwest wing was added to connect the original dwelling to the east side of the tower; a shingled second story was added on this section ca. 1905. In 1875 a second 1-story wing was added to the east end of the center section, and a full length clapboarded second story was also added early in the 20th century. After 1894 the lighthouse was deactivated and sold to Isaac B. Merriman for a summer cottage. Merriman made these extensive renovations and commissioned the Olmsted firm to do landscaping." p.70-71, Historic and Architectural Resources of Barrington, Rhode Island, Rhode Island Historical Preservation Commission, 1993

- "Ferry Rd : WIND HILL/JOHN B. MILLS HOUSE c. 1890, 1922: New Yorker John B. Mills hired Trowbridge & Livingston to design his Tudor Revival style summer home on eighteen acres acquired from the John Rogers Gardner estate. The L-plan, 2-1/2-story house, with a steep cross-gable roof and foliated bargeboards, was enlarged in 1922. The second owner, Paul C. Nicholson, president of the Nicholson File Company, commissioned Wallis E. Howe to add the foyer and south wing, with its lower cross-gable roof, and Jackson, Robertson & Adams to do an enclosed swimming pool. Olmsted Associates produced a master landscape plan for the property." p.65, Historic and Architectural Resources of Bristol, Rhode Island, Rhode Island Historical Preservation Commission, 1990

  - "HOPE STREET: 1392 - NORTH FARM AND ARBORETUM mid-19th century et seq.: Now the site of modern development, North Farm is notable today primarily for its historic landscape. In 1832 Benjamin Hall 1752-1812, a State Street merchant, purchased a tract encompassing this property. His son George Rogers Hall 1821-1899 served as a physician in China before giving up medicine to become an exporter of oriental objets d'art. Dr. Hall subsequently moved to Japan and in 1861 began to ship unusual oriental plants to the United States. After his return to Bristol in 1862, the arboretum at North Farm was established as a result of his interest in horticulture. Hall is credited with introducing many exotic species to America, including zelcova Japanese elm and Japanese dwarf yew, examples of which can be found here. This property came to be called North Farm after a son-in-law, James M. Howe, purchased the northern part of Dr. Hall's estate in 1897. By 1902 Howard L. Clark, a Providence banker, had purchased North Farm. Clark hired Charles A. Platt, the noted architect and landscape designer, to build a handsome Neo-Classical house and a magnificent Italian garden. In later years the estate was operated as a gentleman's farm owned successively by William B. MacColl, president of the Lorraine Mills in Pawtucket, and William S. Cherry, of the Cherry & Webb specialty store chain. North Farm was sold in 1953 to the Framingham Motor Inn Corporation, and Platt's house for Clark was demolished in the 1960s. The Rhode Island Land Company purchased North Farm in 1973 and began construction of condominiums. In addition to Dr. Hall's arboretum c. 1862 et seq. and remnants of Platt's garden for Howard Clark c. 1902, surviving elements from earlier phases of development include a Gothic Revival outbuilding c 1855 erected during Benjamin Hall's tenure, now used as a pool cabana; a library c. 1904 built for Howard Clark; and some early 20th-century stables and barns." p.97-98, Historic and Architectural Resources of Bristol, Rhode Island, Rhode Island Historical Preservation Commission, 1990

  - Plan #7000-2 shows outline of property, a long N/S plot bordered to the N by Sycamore Ave., W by Prospect Ave., and to the S by Naragansett bay. While Sycamore does not exist any longer (although streets like Elm and Cedar surround the property) and Prospect St lies well to the North (historically continuous? trajectory is right), the shape of the plot and the location of the house within the lot match to this location
  - "Lucien Sharpe, a founder of the Providence precision- tool company Brown & Sharpe, and Lewis Dexter built houses on adjacent lots flanking the Nayatt Point Light House. The grounds were landscaped by Robert Morris Copeland of Boston in 1871 and modified by the Olmsted firm between 1921 and 1948. Neither the houses nor plantings survive. C. D. Owen engaged the architectural firm of Stone & Carpenter to design his house at 23 Nayatt Road in 1876. Charles H. Merriman, a manufacturer and co-founder of the Silver Spring Bleaching & Dyeing Company in Providence, built the house at 38 Nayatt Road in 1881." p.23, Historic and Architectural Resources of Barrington, Rhode Island, Rhode Island Historical Preservation Commission, 1993 www.preservation.ri.gov/pdfs\_zips\_downloads/survey\_pdfs/barrington.pdf

- "The boundaries of the Jackson House encompass all of the 200 foot by 953 foot lot purchased by Benjamin A. Jackson from Jesse Metcalf in 1882 (Deed Book 13, page 37). The size of Jackson Waterfront acreage was increased to about 10.4 acres by further purchase of 385 foot frontage to the east in 1906 in two deeds from the heirs of Edmund D. L. and Elizabeth G. Parker (Deed Book 19, Pages 288-290). This land was decreased to its present size by sale of a part of the Parker land in 1920 to Henry and Mary K. Buker (Book 28, page 142) and sale by the heirs of Benjamin Jackson in 1929 to G. Howard and Olive B. Smith (Book 334, page 136). The current Lot 445 has 215 frontage on Nayatt Road and 900 foot depth to Narragansett Bay; the depth of this lot has been affected by erosion due to the hurricanes of 1938 and 1954."

  - Description      The Rocks (Ocean Avenue west of Bailey's Beach) was built ca. 1870 by Boston architect John Hubbard Sturgis for artist Edward Darley Boit and his wife. The Queen Anne-style villa was built on land owned by Mrs. Boit's family. Robert B. Potter purchased the estate after the Boits went to Paris in 1871. By 1890 the estate was owned by New York financier Henry Clews and his wife; Mrs. Clews owned The Rocks throughout the 1930s. Between 1945 and 1950 the house was demolished and the grounds incorporated into the neighboring Cushing property. - "There is a very beautiful late Federal-Greek Revival-style mansion on the Warwick side of Division Street in Cowesett. Today, this home, located on six acres of well-kept land at 159 Division Street, is the Royal Manor Retirement & Nursing Residence. It was once part of the large estate known as Fyrtre Hall. One look at the imposing mansion with its columned veranda and elaborate doorway easily evokes images of the grandeur and splendor of pre-Civil War days."
<http://www.warwickonline.com/stories/Fyrtre-Hall-part-1,71902?print=1>
- "In 1901 William L. Hedgman purchased Fyrtre Hall and the adjoining property. In 1904 he added the east and west wings to the house. After his death the property passed to his daughter, Mrs. T.I. Powell. In 1949, the beautiful mansion was acquired by Marie Harkings. This lady felt that she would like to start a "retirement and nursing home" that would not be a sterile institution but a place where "guests" could enjoy gracious living.
This 1949 dream has become a reality in Royal Manor. The home is owned and operated by members of her family who carry on the tradition she had started. Today, the mansion is a well-maintained and handsome home. One cannot help but be impressed by its many fine features, such as the magnificent grand stairway and the dozen or more marble fireplaces. The house ranks high among the finest mansions in Warwick in beauty, charm and comfort. Mrs. Hugh Doolin, one of the founders' daughters, believes that the interior of the house should remain as much as possible as it was in the time of Thomas Hill's residency there."

  - "Why George Babbitt chose to build rental housing aimed at a middle-class market at the eastern end of his plat, where the prospect of living on what was planned to become an elegant boulevard with a water view might have attracted higher-income buyers, is a mystery. Eventually, such a buyer purchased all five of Charles D. Wilbur's waterfront lots on the east side of Narragansett Boulevard. Herman G. Posner, a Providence paper-clip manufacturer, consolidated the five lots into a single piece of property (over 100,000 sq.ft.). In 1901 he built an elaborate stone house overlooking the bay that became known as "The Castle" and was an Edgewood landmark for nearly a century. In the 1920s-1930s the Castle was owned by Dutee Flint, proprietor of the country's largest Ford automobile dealership, who briefly operated a commercial radio station from the house; and in the 1940s-1950s the Castle became "Harmony Lodge," headquarters of a local chapter of Freemasons. The house was demolished about 1990, and the property was subdivided into six lots (measuring from about ,000 sq.ft. to over one acre), all of which soon had new houses built on them: 1320, 1326, 1330, 1332, and 1340 Narragansett Boulevard."   - "Edward Arnold's improvements to his property involved modernization projects, but also demonstrated an interest in history or concern for family artifacts. Although he constructed a new house on Arnold Farm, he encompassed his grandfather's Cape Cod house within it. He reportedly raised the older house up, and then added a second story and additional two-story wings (Anon. ca. 1905). At the time of this construction, the 1838 house on the property was only 50 years old, but Edward Arnold's efforts to retain portions of the older house shows that he valued it. Similarly, he incorporated the hand hewn beams from the original 1780 barn on Arnold Farm into a new barn, which was constructed with a stone cattle close (Anon. ca. 1905). He continued to update the Arnold Farm with modern conveniences such as new wells, a septic system, and electric lights in the house and barn. Edward Arnold also constructed two greenhouses and a garage/workshop to repair tools and farm equipment (Anon. ca. 1905). In the early-twentieth century, Edward Arnold commissioned Professor Frank Bates to write a history of Arnold Farm and hired the Olmsted Brothers Company of Brookline, Massachusetts to construct a formal entrance to the property north of the house (Bates ca. 1920; Brockway 1988; NAOP 1987)." 1909-1940 Wando Plantation, Charleston, SC

- Lexington Plantation – Wando Neck – Charleston County

1930 – Bought by one of America's wealthiest women, Henrietta Hartford, widow of Edward V. Hartford. Mrs. Hartford built a 32-room home where the original house had been, and she planted an avenue of oaks. At this time, she also added a saltwater swimming pool, tennis courts, a nine-hole golf course, stables, a guest house, and servants quarters. Her gardens were designed by the Olmsted firm. (Frederick Law Olmsted was a landscape architect who also designed the Biltmore Estate in Asheville, Central Park in New York City, and Cherokee Plantation in Colleton County.)

Mrs. Hartford married Prince Guido Pignatelli of Italy in 1937 and thus became Princess Pignatelli.

1947 – Sold to O.L. Williams Veneer Company, which later became part of Georgia Pacific / Destination Wild Dunes

1991 – Scratch Gold Company acquired property; developed Dunes West Golf Club

Clubhouse built on site of original house and outbuildings

- Plan #1073-2 shows layout of original property; litho 681-2 shows location of lot surrounded by Beacon Hill Rd and Brenton Rd

- [Red Herring (see job #1299): "Planned originally for a similar rocky site on Beacon Hill Road in the King-Glover-Bradley Subdivision, this house began as a project in 1887 for William Edward Dorsheimer (1832-1888), who lived in an H.H. Richardson-designed house, which he had commissioned in the late 1860s, at 434 Delaware Avenue in Buffalo, NY (NR). Dorsheimer had worked closely with both Richardson and Frederick Law Olmsted, whom he brought to Buffalo to design the park system and whom he engaged for the Beacon Hill Road project. Richardson's death in 1886 brought this commission to Hunt, to whom Dorsheimer specified a Romanesque design, an otherwise anomaly in Hunt's work. Hunt was still in the project's design phase when Dorsheimer himself died. By December of 1890, however, English-born yachtsman Joseph R. Busk had assumed the commission for the house with Hunt, but moved the project to this location. Busk also engaged the Olmsted firm to site the house and to landscape the grounds. The project was completed in the late summer of 1892.

In 2007 it was bought by the 90 year old Betty "Boop" Blake, who is a prominent collector of modern art and the one that made Picasso famous. She continues to live here, summering in Newport and wintering in Dallas." <http://wikimapia.org/5074382/Indian-Spring>]

- "In his public career Dorsheimer proved Olmsted's loyal advocate; in his private life he became his valued client. Against considerable opposition, Dorsheimer promoted the ambitious program of separate parks linked together by parkways that Olmsted proposed for Buffalo, the first such urban park system in the country. In Albany, Dorsheimer sponsored Olmsted's appointment to the New York State Capitol project and championed his proposal that the State of New York preserve Niagara Falls as a scenic reservation, a campaign that was first envisioned in August, 1869, when Olmsted, Dorsheimer, and Richardson visited the Falls together (See Roper 379.) Dorsheimer also asked Olmsted to landscape the grounds of two residential properties he purchased for himself after leaving Buffalo. One was at Dosoris near Glen Cove, Long Island where Olmsted worked in 1886, and the other was at Newport where Olmsted landscaped Dorsheimer's property on Telegraph Hill in 1885-86. This was prior to the erection there of the house that Dorsheimer commissioned from Richard Morris Hunt. The Newport Daily News of October 13, 1885, described the grounds as "one of the most sightly locations on the island and one that can hardly be surpassed for beauty the world over," The estate passed into the hands of the Busk family after Dorsheimer's death in 1888, before construction had begun on Hunt's rambling stone and shingle residence. Busk erected the dwelling in 1891 and called it Indian Spring. There are no records at Fairsted, the Olmsted office in Brookline, to indicate that Olmsted designed the grounds around Dorsheimer's Buffalo home. (I am indebted to Susan Stein Ganelin, who is presently cataloguing the Hunt drawings owned by the American Institute of Architects Foundation, for identifying the Busk house as originally planned for Dorsheimer.)" <http://www.buffaloah.com/a/del/434/kow/index.html>

Description Armsea Hall (Ridge Road) was built in 1901 for General Francis Vinton Greene by architect Francis Laurens Vinton Hoppin. Within two years Charles Frederick Hoffman was the owner of the estate, and it then passed to Mr. Hoffman's wife. At the time of this photograph Armsea Hall was owned by Mrs. Aymar Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman's daughter. It sold in 1967 and again in 1968; in 1969 the villa was demolished and the property used for the construction of new housing. Sunset Ridge (Ridge Road near Harrison Avenue), visible to the right of Armsea Hall, was built in 1877 for retired China merchant Abiel Abbot Low by architect George Champlin Mason. Also known as the Low-Ledyard Estate, the villa was purchased by New York lawyer Lewis Cass Ledyard in 1905; following Mr. Ledyard's death Sunset Ridge passed to his wife. The estate eventually was joined with the neighboring Broadlawns, partially visible to its right. Sunset Ridge was demolished in 1955. Source: Paul Berry, Newport architectural history enthusiast. - A large porticoed Palladian villa dominating the lower East Passage of Narragansett Bay, Armsea Hall was New York architect Francis Laurens Vinton Hoppin's Beaux-Arts masterpiece in Newport. Designed for General Francis Vinton Greene, the villa's neoclassical central corps was flanked by two lower projecting wings with Doric colonnades. The estate, with its noted rose gardens, passed within two years to Charles Frederick Hoffman then to Mrs. Aymar Johnson, the former Miss Marian K. Hoffman. In 1945, Mrs. Hoffman sold the palatial estate for $14,000 to Mr. and Mrs. Colin D. Mawer of Brooklyn, NY. The property, which abutted the Auchincloss family's Hammersmith Farm, the childhood summer home of Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy, was subsequently proposed as the official summer White House in 1962. President Kennedy privately leased the estate for the summer season of 1964. His assassination precluded the rental and Armsea Hall was sold in 1965 for $150,000 for a planned resort. In 1967, the property was purchased at a mortgagee sale for $195,000 and in 1968 was sold a final time for $212,000 for a residential subdivision. The villa was demolished in 1969 and modern homes subsequently built on a portion of the site. <http://www.newportmansions.org/learn/history-highlights/lost-newport/1896-1910>

- Chateau-sur-Mer's grand scale and lavish parties ushered in the Gilded Age of Newport. Chateau-sur-Mer was built as an Italianate-style villa for China trade merchant William Shepard Wetmore. Mr. Wetmore died in 1862, leaving the bulk of his fortune to his son, George Peabody Wetmore, and a generous allowance for his daughter, Annie Derby Wetmore. George married Edith Keteltas in 1869. During the 1870s, the young couple departed on an extended trip to Europe, leaving architect Richard Morris Hunt to remodel and redecorate the house in the Second Empire French style. As a result, Chateau-sur-Mer displays most of the major design trends of the last half of the 19th century. George Peabody Wetmore had a distinguished political career as Governor of Rhode Island and as a United States Senator. He died in 1921 and his wife in 1927. They were survived by their two daughters, Edith and

Maude, who never married. The house was purchased by the Preservation Society in 1969. In 2006 it was designated a National Historic Landmark. <http://www.newportmansions.org/explore/chateau-sur-mer>

  - STUART INGERSOLL, NAVY ADMIRAL, DIES
Published: February 2, 1983
Stuart H. Ingersoll, a retired Navy vice admiral who commanded the Sixth and Seventh Fleets, was superintendent of the United States Naval Academy and headed the Naval War College, died Saturday in the Naval Regional Medical Center in Newport, R.I. He was 84 years old.
In the 1940's, Mr. Ingersoll was the commanding officer of Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter. In World War II he served in the North Atlantic as staff operations officer for the escort of the North Atlantic convoys. He later commanded the aircraft carrier Monterey, operating with the Third and Fifth Fleets in the Western Pacific. One of the officers on the Monterey was Gerald R. Ford.

"The first time Ms. Briggs, now 45, walked into these greenhouses was about 1990. Mrs. Skelly, as she was known after she reclaimed her maiden name, had been an indefatigable nightclubber well into her 80's. At last, she was slowing down and the party began coming to Bois Doré. Ms. Briggs was living nearby, and trying to help out. "She'd never really entertained here before," Ms. Briggs said. (Although Mrs. Skelly bought Bois Doré in 1978, she also had houses in St. Louis and Dallas; the Mansion at Turtle Creek was her house before it was a hotel.)

  - In 1922, buoyed by the continued growth of the Catholic population in Rhode Island and with a deep conviction for the value of Catholic education, Bishop William Hickey started a campaign to raise funds for the construction of two new Catholic high schools, one in Pawtucket and the other in Newport. By 1924, Bishop Hickey had raised the required funds and worked with the De La Salle Christian Brothers to open the two new secondary schools for boys.
The Pawtucket high school was to be located in a large Federal-style mansion on Walcott Street that had been purchased from the prestigious Goff family for $95,000. An additional $60,000 was required to transform the residential building into appropriate classroom, library and science lab space.

  - History
The Lumb Mansion
The mansion now known as the William W. Tripp Funeral Home was originally built as the residence for the Lumb-Potter Family. The home's cornerstone was laid in 1917. The home, taking two years to build, was finally completed in 1919. The mansion was built for Mr. James C. Potter, the owner of the Potter and Johnson Machine Company, now Hasbro Industries on Newport Avenue. The home was presented to his daughter Mary as a wedding gift upon her marriage to Mr. Ralph Lumb, the son of the owner of Lumb Knitting Mills, now Teknor Apex on Central Avenue.
The Lumb Mansion is fashioned in the English Tudor Style, constructed of red tapestry brick. The first floor originally contained the library-parlor with quartered oak paneling and a vaulted oak beamed ceiling. The focal point of this room is its massive gothic styled fireplace mantle featuring the combined coat of arms of the Lumb and Potter Families. This coat of arms is found again on the fireplace screen. The Fireplace andirons, screen and gate were hammered and fashioned at the Potter and Johnson Machine Company. Outside the library-parlor you would walk into an open air sun porch, now enclosed and used as a funeral arrangement conference room. There was also a formal dining room, now a sitting room, this room contains quartered mahogany paneling and a gothic style ceiling and fireplace as well. Just off this room was a solarium enclosed with cathedral style glass painted French doors. Located just to the rear of the dining room in what is now the back of the main chapel was a sunken parlor-music room containing a baby grand piano. The main foyer of the grand home, the Newport Avenue entrance, is a vaulted paneled room with a vaulted ceiling, leaded glass oak door and staircase to the residence on the second floor. The rear of the house contained the butler's pantry and kitchen, from the kitchen the maids could access their quarters on the third floor of the home by way of a servant staircase. The kitchen overlooked rose gardens and manicured lawns and also a child's play house. The play house was actually large enough to be used as a private residence. The play house was dismantled and eventually moved to Cape Cod, where it was converted into a summer residence.

The second floor had three bedrooms, two baths, powder room, dressing room with a walk in red cedar wardrobe and a "summer sleeping room" now a kitchen that opens almost completely to the outside. The second floor bedrooms all contain their own fireplace and walk in closets. The third floor contained the nursery and maids quarters with accommodations for two maids. The third floor had two bedrooms, bathroom, small parlor and storage for the house linens and towels.

The basement of the home at one time contained a wine cellar, preserve room for jams and jellies, laundry and a children's game room with billiard table and shuffle board painted onto the floor. The basement also housed the boilers, coal bin, and central vacuum system.

The Lumb Mansion was converted into the William W. Tripp Funeral Home in 1957 by William and Ethel Tripp. The funeral home opened it's doors to the public on April 14, 1957. The William W. Tripp Funeral Home has been proudly and honorably serving the families of the community for over 50 years.

  - Plan #2229-1 shows mansion and stable at corner Charlesfield and Benefit Streets
  - "Major changes to the property and its outbuildings occurred between the 1889 Sanborn map and the 1900 Sanborn map (Figure 6). By 1900 the HIH footprint changed significantly. While the original house is still intact, the three connected outbuildings have been torn down. In their place is a large residential addition to the house, with rounded extensions along Charlesfield Street and one reaching south-east from the house proper. To supplement the destruction of the three connected outbuildings and the carriage house, a very large outbuilding has been erected to the east of the house. Architecturally, this outbuilding appears to mimic the rounded features of the house. To separate the house from the outbuilding, a brick wall was constructed, as labeled in the 1900 Sanborn map. These changes presumably occurred under Robert Ives Gammell, who officially owned the property beginning in 1878, when William and Elizabeth Gammell deeded him the land." - "The north end of the district encompasses Wanskuck Park, originally the estate of the Metcalf family, partners in and later exclusive proprietors of the Wanskuck Company. The main house is now gone but several outbuildings, a wrought-iron gate, and a stone wall along part of the Woodward Road frontage remain, together with informal plantings of trees and shrubs on an undulating expanse of lawn. Across Woodward Road from the park is the Roger Williams Baptist Church photo #18, a handsome Gothic-style granite edifice erected under the auspices of the Wanskuck Mill proprietors for Protestant employees of the company. The church stands on a triangular-plot adjacent to the terminus of Veazie Street. A recent housing project, southeast of the church off Veazie Street on former Wanskuck Company land, is excluded from the district as non-contributing development. ...229-295 Wanskuck Park ca 1870, 1949: Jesse Metcalf, a founder of the Wanskuck Company, created an estate on this site around 1870. The house, a large 2½-story structure with a cross-gable roof and wrap-around veranda, was demolished in 1949 as stipulated in the will of Louisa P. Sharpe Metcalf, who bequeathed the land to the city for a public park. The house's foundation is still visible. A double row of trees outline the drive that once led to the building. A large barn was also destroyed in 1949, and a stable that suffered from periodic vandalism was removed in 1979. Three clapboarded buildings remain: a shed-roofed garage, a barn with a jerkinhead hay hatch, and a 1½-story caretaker's cottage with a veranda overlooking the estate. A stone wall and a screen of trees separate the property from Woodward Road....The large, open, marshy area between the Wanskuck Mill and Veazie Street, formerly site of the Wanskuck Mill Pond Assessor's Plat 103, lots 85 and 86 and Wanskuck Park, formerly the Metcalf Estate, are included because they have historically been integral parts of the village and their status as open space has been and remains an important component of the district's environmental character." - CRIME: Robber's Den: "Cabmen who motored Carl Rettich around Providence, R. I. thought he was a rich doctor or lawyer. He was a personable man—tall, robust, black-haired, elegantly dressed. Only his eyes, cold and unsmiling as a cat's, were discomfiting. But most of downtown Providence thought him a "swell fellow." He had a fine seashore house on nearby Warwick Neck, a spacious Dutch Colonial mansion with weather-stained shingles and white columns only a field away from the estate of Rhode Island's rich U. S. Senator Peter Goelet Gerry. Also nearby was the swank yacht-going Warwick Country Club... Senator Gerry and club members often graced Neighbor Rettich's lawn parties with their presence. - Title: Carl Rettich mystery home

Date created: 1935

I know this house very well! It is situated on a huge terraced piece of land running several hundred feet down the west side of Warwick Neck. There are now a lot of trees which have grown up to the left and in back of the view shown here.

The beautiful residence looks just the same, and fortunately the land of the estate is intact!

Date created: 1935

Physical description: 1 negative : glass, black & white ; 4 x 5 in.

This mansion is situated on the north side of Kirby Avenue, Warwick Neck, Rhode Island. The front entrance, shown here, has been modified some what by the current owners. A verandah has been added which shelters the approach to the door. Standing at the door one can look entirely thru the large entry hall and view the water of Greenwich Bay beyond the other side of the house. The estate continues to enjoy the great slope of lawn to the west. It is still a beautiful spot today (2012).

Mellon & Sons' Bank. He was also a director of the Federal Reserve Bank. Mellon's brother Andrew became Secretary of the Treasury and was a founder of the National Gallery in Washington, D.C. Located on a hill on the southerly side of Nepun Road and the westerly side of Westerly Road, north of Ninigret Avenue, is the Sunshine Cottage property. The cottage is approached by a driveway which crosses over a stone bridge. The property originally stretched westerly from the hill to include the area along Sequan Road known as "Sunshine Park," and it was landscaped by the Olmsted Brothers firm. The name "Sunshine Park" is carved in a granite step leading to the property from Foster Cove Road, near the corner of Sequan Road. A memorable event of the Mellons' years at Sunshine was the dance they gave in 1922 for their daughter Sarah and her fiancé, Alan M. Scaife. Seaside Topics reported that "Japanese lanterns were strung all about the spacious lawns and porch and the dance orchestra's music floated out over the village. Favors were of solid gold, compacts for the girls and cigarette cases for the young men Mrs. Gretchen V. Schoonmaker, who acquired Sunshine Cottage in 1942, held Sunday evening hymn sings to which she invited the community. She sold the property to Donald C. Lillis in 1967. Lillis subdivided its seventeen acres, and a number of lots were later split off and independently developed. After Lillis's death, his estate sold the property to the family of Dr. and Mrs. Robert E. Knisley in 1970. The Knisleys' Christmas Eve parties were festive occasions, the house fragrant with paper whites and bright with candles and poinsettias, and a throng of teddy bears were additional genial hosts. The Knisleys lived at Sunshine Cottage for thirty years." p.121-122, Watch Hill Through Time: The Evolution of a New England Shore Community by Chaplin Bradford Barnes, The Watch Hill Conservancy, 2005 http://www.thewatchhillconservancy.org/books/WatchHill\_TT\_web.pdf

  - At the end of Arraquat Road, on what is known as Curtis Point, are two cottages built about 1906. The first, called Westmoreland, was built by George W. McLanahan, who had concluded that he wanted a site by the bay and decided to move there from To Windward. Westmoreland was constructed with stucco in the Mission style, on land which McLanahan had purchased from his lawyer and son-in-law, F. Kingsbury Curtis of New York. The other, called Shortlands, was built by Curtis and his wife, Cornelia McLanahan Curtis.
The second of these cottages on Curtis Point was Shortlands, which looks across the harbor to the Beach Club and Napatree (fig. 67). Shingled, with a central core and flanking wings, it was built, as noted earlier, by the F. Kingsbury Curtises. Curtis, a leading corporate lawyer and partner of the firm of Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle, with which his family had been associated since its founding in 1830, was also the principal of a real estate development corporation known as Tuxedo Houses, Inc. Tuxedo Houses built and owned properties in the various communities in which Curtis maintained homes: in addition to Watch Hill, Tuxedo Park, New York City, and Venice, Florida. At the time he built the cottage, Curtis filled in the marsh between it and Westmoreland and built a tennis court, about which more will be said later.

Shortlands remains in the family of the original owner. Tenants over many years have been the Edward W. Franklin family of New York." p.116-117, Watch Hill Through Time: The Evolution of a New England Shore Community by Chaplin Bradford Barnes, The Watch hill Conservancy, 2005

Tapley family of Springfield, Massachusetts. Beginning in 1899, the Tapleys assembled Lots 54 & 57 of the Watch Hill Farm, running along Westerly Road from the Sunshine property to Nepun Road. They owned the property until 1931, when the Mellons acquired it and added it to the Sunshine estate. The Mellons razed the cottage, and in 1931 Seaside Topics reported that it was rumored that "a new artistic cottage" would be constructed onthesite for their daughter, Mrs. Scaife. Many years after the Mellons had sold the property, another house was built on the foundations. The garage on Nepun Road, later a guest cottage, was built by the Mellons and added onto by the Schoonmakers. It became the home of the Spencer E. Gray family in 1972. From 1960 to 2001, Gray served a remarkable forty-two years as the tennis pro of the Misquamicut Club." p.122, Watch Hill Through Time: The Evolution of a New England Shore Community by Chaplin Bradford Barnes, The Watch hill Conservancy, 2005

  - Quetico-Superior Wilderness International and Unique The Living Wilderness, December 1942
This is Sigurd's first article in the magazine of the Wilderness Society, and his first to address management issues on the Canadian side of the Quetico-Superior canoe country.
This strip of country lying along some one hundred fifty to two hundred miles of the international border between Lake Superior and Rainy Lake just this side of Lake of the Woods has come to mean a great deal as a recreational area and is destined to mean more and more as wilderness lake country becomes increasingly rare. Here is a vacationland that really belongs to the people, the kind of an area that will and can contribute to the happiness and welfare of all.
To those who knew the old Quetico-Superior wilderness and who were willing to work as of old to reach the quiet stretches of the inland lakes, this massing of the forces of exploitation seemed like the voice of doom. It seemed impossible for them to believe that those peaceful waterways which since the days of the voyageurs had been undisturbed by human development were at last to change. Twenty years ago the signs were unmistakable and each time they paddled through the old favorite routes they wondered how long it would be.
Then in September of 1925, E.W. Backus of Minneapolis, Minnesota, a power and timber magnate of the old school, proposed that the Rainy River basin covering most of the Quetico-Superior watershed be dammed for the purpose of furnishing additional power for his pulp mills at the end of Rainy Lake. Seven great storage dams were to be built at the outlets of some of the largest and most beautiful of the border lakes, raising water levels high enough to flood all shores and islands and ruin much of the timber.
In 1934 President Roosevelt, who had become greatly interested in the idea of a Quetico-Superior International Forest as a peace memorial, created the Quetico-Superior Committee whose function was to work toward the consummation of a treaty with Canada.

- “BICKNELL, WARREN, JR. (5 Sept. 1902-23 April 1975), leader in both business and PHILANTHROPY, founded the BICKNELL FUND with his wife, Kate Hanna Bicknell. He was born in Wheaton, IL, to Ann Guthrie Bicknell and Warren Bicknell, Sr. By the fourth grade, his family lived in CLEVELAND HEIGHTS and he attended UNIVERSITY SCHOOL. He graduated from Taft School (CT), and Williams College (1925). Bicknell served as president of his father's business, the Cleveland Construction Co. from 1940 until retiring in 1969. President of the BUILDERS EXCHANGE (1945-46), he was also a director of the M. A. HANNA CO., Union Salt, the National Acme Company (see ACME-CLEVELAND CORP.), the Cleveland Storage Company, and the Society for Savings Bank (see SOCIETY CORP.), among other corporations, and of philanthropic entities such as Advisory Services, Inc. In the realms of EDUCATION and HIGHER EDUCATION, Bicknell served as a trustee of Williams College, LAUREL SCHOOL and the Western Reserve Academy in Hudson, Ohio. He was a life member of the BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA (BSA).

Bicknell married Kate Hanna, granddaughter of Howard M. Hanna, Sr. They lived in Chardon with children Constance Reynolds, Kate Kirkham, Wendy, and Warren, III. Buried in Thomasville, GA, Bicknell has a memorial headstone in LAKE VIEW CEMETERY.”

- “However, not all the changes taking place in 2012 were based in the gardens. Two major changes were taking place indoors – the first giving Holden’s library a fresh new look and the second adding new classroom space at the former Warren H. Bicknell Sugarbush, which is being transformed into Holden’s Working Woods.
The site of the Working Woods has not been used as a site for maple syrup production since 2006. The new classrooms are just the first step in the evolution of the former sugarbush into the Working Woods, which will someday help demonstrate how smaller wooded properties can be utilized by their owners.” from "Renovations at the Corning Library, former Sugarbush buildings" by Cait Anastis, editor, in Leaves, vol. 11, no.1, Winter 2012-13, Holden Arboretum

- sent Jan.23, 2014 to research@lakehistory.org:
In the process of researching locations for the work the Olmsted firm carried out across the country, we've run up against the Warren Bicknell (Jr.? possibly?) estate in Kirtland (although a photo album is labelled as "Willoughby"; the photos don't provide any clues). We know the location for the Bicknells Cleveland city home (1801 Chestnut Hill Dr.) but are a little flummoxed by this country estate. Architects Meade and Hamilton also seem to have been involved in the design of this distinctive Y-shaped this farmhouse as well. It was possibly called "Katydid Farm" (from one 1943 "Belgian Review" from the Belgian Draft Horse Corporation of America) and a 1934 issue of "Your Home and Garden" refers to the "Kirtland estate of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Bicknell" (still tracking down the rest of that citation).
Additionally Holden Arboretum promotional material refers occasionally to the "Bicknell Sugarbush" near to their location, but I can't really tell if that's related to this property. (In fact, a graphic on one of their flysheets shows Bicknell properties around the Arboretum, but none seem to match our plans.
<http://www.holdenarb.org/contact/documents/factsheet.pdf> and the historic maps I'm looking at from 1920s/30s don't seem to contain Bicknell references). Our plans, mostly in the 1928-29 range, don't indicate any roads or specific locations; I've attached a quick snap of one in case that helps locate the property, either by lot shape or house footprint.

My other hope is to contact the presumably nice folks out at the Holden Arboretum (looks like a recent renovation has left them with a lovely new facility) for information. If you have any contacts out there or any other repositories that may help us solve this mystery, we'd appreciate being passed along!

Thanks in advance for any assistance you may be able to offer!

Best,

Anthony Reed, Archivist

Hello Mr. Reed,

I have looked through our archives and the only piece of information I was able to find was a telephone directory from The Ohio Bell Telephone Company from 1949, and it lists a Warren Bicknell Jr on Kirtland Chardon Road in Kirtland. I am sorry that we do not have any more in depth information on the topic. I hope that the Holden Arboretum was able to provide some further information for you.

Sincerely,

Jenna

 - A Brief History of Mooreland
Mooreland was the summer home of Edward William Moore, a prominent Cleveland capitalist who made his fortune in banking, electric railroads and telephone distribution in the late 1800s. Moore and his business partner, Henry Everett developed the Cleveland Painesville and Eastern Interurban Railway. Moore and his wife, Louise Chamberlain Moore had five children: Margaret, Franklyn, Kathryn, Edward Jr., and Elizabeth.
Edward W. Moore, a prominent Cleveland capitalist, made his fortune in banking, electric railroads and telephone distribution during the late 1800s. During this time, Moore commissioned Cleveland architect Arthur N. Oviatt to design a summer country home in Lake County, Ohio.

- The Lewis House:
This photo does not do justice to this handsome French Renaissance Revival house that noted Toledo-area preservationist Ted Ligibel once said may well be the finest in the entire state of Ohio. It sits far back at the end of a tree-lined driveway at 28503 East River Road. The French Linden trees are kept carefully trimmed, almost in the fashion of topiary art.
Built in about 1928 by Frank S. Lewis, the stone-clad building was designed by Toledo architect George L. Walling.
The multi-acre property with its well-kept gardens, like others along Perrysburg's so-called Gold Coast, was named Chanticleer, as bronze roosters on the gate still proclaim.
Mr. Ligibel, in his application of the property to the National Register as part of the East River Road Historic District, described the house and gardens as "20th century additions to the Ohio architectural scene of the first importance."
The large house is said to have been patterned directly after a hunting lodge at Versailles, France. The front entrance is in a slightly projecting extension capped with a segmental pediment. Other than the east wing, which has a dormered Mansard roof, the building has a balanced, symmetrical facade typical of its style. The rear offers a splendid view of the river.
Toledo-bred Frank Stewart Lewis was born in 1879. He was educated at Denison University and Harvard Law School and, upon passing the bar in 1905, joined his father and a brother in a Toledo law firm that eventually became Doyle and Lewis, of which he was a partner. He became a noted corporation attorney and civic and social leader. His wife, the former Ethel Chesbrough, was a member of one Toledo's oldest and most prominent families.
Mr. Lewis died in 1947. Prior to that, in 1938, the property was sold to the C. Lockhart McKelvey family, in whose hands it remained for more than 60 years.

 - The Jay K. Secor House:
In 1929 this house (actually an earlier version of it) was the lone anchor for a large estate long since subdivided. It is known as the Jay K. Secor house at 109 Rockledge Drive on East River Road, though it was completed by his widow eight years after his death in 1921. Designed by Perrysburg architect George B. Rheinfrank, Sr., it was one of the chain of large baronial houses built along the river between Perrysburg and Rossford by prominent Toledo industrialists during and not long after World War I. The brick structure is perhaps best described as Neoclassical in design, with a dominant full-height curved central entry porch between angled wings with front-facing gables.
The classical porch columns are square, and the symmetrically balanced windows are six-pane. The up and down river view from this site is perhaps the best along the East River Road.
Actually, the present house developed over a period of time, having started (as did others along the river) as a large summer cottage while the Secor family still lived in Toledo's Old West End. Mr. Secor died in 1921 and his wife converted it to a brick structure. The original version was decidedly different in appearance except for the same curved porch and columns. The earlier wings had different shapes and roof lines. The present ones are identical from the front.
Rockledge, the name of the estate, was a working farm and there are still-existing buildings (now private homes) at the far north end of the property that were lived in by employees and that over time housed stables and garages. A barn in which there was once an indoor badminton court with seats for spectators still stands, largely in its original form, but it has been converted to an attractive house.

 - Description The Luther L. Buchwalter home, shown here, was built in 1916, at a cost of $36,000, by the Dayton, Ohio architectural firm of Dexter and McClure. It is located at 2132 East High Street in Springfield, Ohio. Buchwalter was vice president of the American Seeding Machine Company. The home was sold in 1936 to Mr. and Mrs. James Baker, who lived in the home until 1985, when it was sold again. The house was restored and featured in "Designer Showhouse '88" presented by the auxiliary of Community Hospital. The symmetrical architecture is an example of the Federal style. This photograph is from Art Work of Springfield, Ohio, published by Gravure Illustration Co. in 1927. The 61 plates in the volume provide views of buildings and other locations throughout the city including the Clark County Memorial Building, Warder Public Library, Snyder Park, and Greenwood Hunt and Polo Club. It measures 10" x 13.5" (25.4 x 34.29 cm).

- "After the war, Colonel Joseph Wehrle, started a grocery business and later joined with John Moser and established the Moser and Wehrle Foundry. The Foundry had specialized in cast iron coal and wood stoves for cooking and heating. Colonel Wehrle and his two sons, William and August, purchased Moser's stock in the company and changed the name to the Wehrle Company.

The Wehrle Company was the largest stove manufacturer in the world turning out 900-1400 stoves per day. Approximately 2,000 people were employed there with a monthly payroll of over $100,000. The Wehrle Company made stoves exclusively for Sears Roebuck and Company. Joseph and his sons developed an extensive industrial, oil and real estate business. Their former mansion and accompanying land on the south shore of Buckeye Lake is being developed as Heron's Bay. The Wehrle farm near Hebron now serves as the site for the Diocese of Columbus St. Peter and Paul Retreat Center (formerly the PIME seminary complex)." from "The Wehrle Family"

- Old West End takes center stage, BY JULIE M. McKINNON, Published: Sunday, 6/7/2009, Toledo Blade
"As Carmen Zwiefel wandered through the 8,300-square-foot Tillinghast-Willys Home Saturday, details from the entryway's quarter-sawn oak woodwork to a second-floor bathroom's tiled floor reminded the Toledo woman of an Old West End apartment she rented in the 1960s as a newlywed.
Her fellow DeVilbiss High School graduate, Peggy Lowden of Sylvania, also was impressed by the English Tudor mansion with French embellishments that auto pioneer John North Willys bought in trade for 12 Pope-Toledo cars after the original owner went bankrupt during its construction.
"In my next life, I'm buying one of these," Mrs. Lowden said while touring the three-floor house now owned by Micheal Vogel and Catherine Kenney.
The Tillinghast-Willys Home, last partially open to the public in 2000, is one of five private homes and two other buildings featured in this year's Historical Old West End Festival and Home Tours.
The two-day festival continues from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. today with home tours until 5 p.m. for a fee. There also is free entertainment, including an art show, children's activities, and garage and yard sales.
Sammy Spann of Toledo was among those taken with a 1933 Willys Overland car owned by Dick and Shirley Hamilton of Wauseon displayed outside of the Tillinghast-Willys Home. The car was built at Toledo's former Jeep Parkway plant that began construction in 1910 as Willys-Overland Motor Co. It later gained fame by churning out World War II military vehicles.

Mr. Willys bought the 2210 Robinwood Ave. mansion from its builder, which had reobtained the home after licorice tycoon Alvin B. Tillinghast went bankrupt. Original plans for the Tillinghast-Willys Home called for a wing stretching east along Bancroft Street that would have doubled the mansion's size."

 - The MacNichol Estate House:
George P. MacNichol Jr., a glass industry executive, built this house in 1921 on an estate he called Orchard Bend just outside of town. Designed by Mills, Rhines, Bellman & Nordhoff of Toledo and built by the Carl Ruck Construction Company, it makes use of Queen Anne and Tudor details best appreciated by viewing all sides.
Half-timbering is visible at the lower left in this picture. The river side has a combination of patterned brick, half-timbering and stucco and an interesting use of windows and dormers. Landscaping was done by A. D. Taylor of Cleveland, and the interior was designed by Hester Mills of New York City. MacNichol, whose grandfather was Edward Ford who founded what was to become Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, came here from Wyandotte, Michigan. He grew up in Toledo but moved here when other prominent Old West End families chose East River Road for their permanent homes.

 - About the Center
Formerly the home of Mary Jane Hayner, the 1914 Romanesque mansion houses a lively community arts center. Eight exhibits are presented annually. Performing arts events, speakers, films, antiques seminars, workshops and family activities are among the cultural and educational programs offered free and open to the public.
Classes in art and a variety of other subjects are offered for children and adults.
The Center houses historic furnishings and works of art, a Victorian doll house, and a permanent exhibition about the Hayner Distillery Company. The facilities of the Center are available for public use.

 - Kidder, then in his middle 50s, didn't retire just yet. He and his wife, Georgeanna spent time at Resthaven, their farm north of Troy. They also helped establish the Miami County Golf Club. A scandal broke at the Hayner Distillery in 1925, with a federal investigation revealing a large liquor consignment had been withdrawn from the facility with fraudulent permits. Three years later, in 1928, the Hayner facility — Troy's landmark business for more than 62 years — was finally shutdown.

This 200 S. High St. Greek Revival property has a rich history and vibrant past. Originally built in 1849, the home was occupied by Colonel John H. Young, a prominent attorney, who also served on the Ohio Constitution Committee...After the death of Col. Young, the home was acquired by Isaac T. Johnson around 1906 and during his ownership underwent major renovation. Mr. Johnson was one of four Quaker brothers who came to Urbana and founded the Johnson Manufacturing Co. The home remained in the Johnson family until the 1940's before being willed to The Wilmington College and later acquired by the late Lewis and Jean Moore in 1946. The beautiful European chandeliers on the first floor of the home were purchased by Mrs. Moore in the late 1940's. Mr. Moore became the CEO of Grimes Aerospace and later the Mayor of Urbana. Three generations of the Moore Family have graced the home and the north sun/family room was added during their ownership of the home. Harold and Carolyn Carr purchased the home in April 2008 from the former owners, Dr. Robert and Mrs. Sheryl Head. The Carrs moved to Urbana from Texas to make their home in Urbana and to begin a long time desire of the heart to open a bed and breakfast. High Street Manor Bed and Breakfast was born!  - CHERRY PARK
Residential development came to J. Milton Cherry's extensive farmland, situated between Rock Hill and Ebenezer and stretching west toward the river, in the early twentieth century. In the 1920s, land owned by Cherry's daughter, Anna Cherry Beaty, became the residential suburb of Cherry Park with broad, deep lots lining Milton Avenue, Eden Terrace, and Myrtle Drive. Cherry Park was part of the 1941 annexation that expanded Rock Hill's city limits.[note] ([note:] The recreational area known as Cherry Park was developed in the 1980s and is unrelated to the Cherry Park neighborhood, which is known today as Eden Terrace/Myrtle Drive. The common name derives from the fact that both the neighborhood and the recreational park occupy parts of what was once the extensive farm of J. Milton Cherry.)" p.43-44, CITY OF ROCK HILL Historic Resources Survey Update Prepared for The City of Rock Hill, South Carolina and The South Carolina Department of Archives and History Prepared by Edwards - Pitman Environmental, Inc. 1903 731 Hopmeadow Street, Simsbury, CT
 - A HISTORICAL NEW ENGLAND COUNTRY MANOR
"The land where Simsbury 1820 House stands was originally owned by Revolutionary War hero Noah Phelps who gave it to his son Elijah. In addition to the land, he also passed on a legacy of patriotism and public service. The family's pride in his heroism nurtured a strong sense of patriotism and motivated much of the family's interests and even the architecture of the home.
Built in 1820, the house was an imposing building for its rural location. Set on a rise on the main road through town, an American eagle was placed above the front door, a symbol of the patriotic family who lived there. Subsequent generations carried on the tradition of patriotic duty, serving as U.S. Senators and Governors.
In 1890, Elijah's son-in-law, Amos Eno, built a large extension onto the house. Bedrooms were added on the second and third floors of the new wing bringing the total number of rooms to 30. At this point, the house looked very much as it does today.
The house was then passed on the Amos' daughter, Anoinette Eno Wood. Wanting to honor the family's heritage, she added Colonial Revival architectural details throughout and gave it the name "Eaglewood" a further symbol of her family's patriotism. She also contracted the landscaping firm begun by Frederick Olmstead - who designed New York City's Central Park - to develop the plan for the grounds.
Mrs. Wood's most important legacy in terms of patriotism was the ritual of the Fourth of July Ice Cream Social. Each year she entertained the entire town of Simsbury with a party celebrating our country's birthday. It was the social event of the season.
The house stayed in the family until 1948, when it was bought by a group of local businessmen and leased to a restaurateur, who named it The Simsbury House. The town of Simsbury purchased the house in the 1960's and in 1985 Simsbury House Associates was successful in its bid to buy and renovate the building. Since the house was listed on the National Register of Historic Places, all work had to comply with the exacting standards for listed properties. Craftsmen painstakingly duplicated missing architectural woodwork and restored the decorative glass.

- Biographical/Historical Note
Benjamin Rush Strong was born to Joseph Churchill and Sophronia (Marrs) Strong near McMillan's (Knox County), Tennessee on March 24, 1848. He was one of nine children, including Robert N. (born about 1834), John (born about 1835), Martha Ann (Strong) Monday (born about 1839), Joseph Churchill (born about 1841), Mary (Strong) Borches (1843-1911), Gideon Hazen Strong (1850-1919), William E. (born about 1854), Albert N. Strong (1856-1930), and Horace. B. R. Strong studied at Spout Hollow, Walnut Grove Academy, the University of Tennessee, and Eastman's Business College in New York. He began his business career by investing in a sawmill with his brother-in-law, W. O. Monday, but sold his share after six months and invested in a store in Ellistown. Construction exhausted his finances, and in order to earn money to buy stock Strong taught school in Spout Hollow. He later moved to Straw Plains and finally to Knoxville, Tennessee, where he opened a shop on Market Square. Strong made his first sale, a can of lard, to a farmer on December 16, 1876 and celebrated "Lard can day" for the rest of his life. Strong later took on a partner and changed the store's name to Strong & Co. He eventually sold the enterprise and entered the real estate business with W. M. Epps and Barnabas Braine under the firm name Strong, Braine, Epps, Monday, & Nelson. B. R. Strong was also active in banking and wrote articles for local papers under the pen name "Gnorts" ("Strong" spelled backwards). B. R. Strong died on March 2, 1915 in Daytona Beach, Florida and is buried in Old Gray Cemetery.

- "The Hugh Sanford House, 3316 Kingston Pike
The Hugh Sanford House was designed by Harrie T. Lindeberg in 1926. Hugh Sanford was a graduate of Harvard University, and after graduating, he returned to Knoxville and bought half of the company Sanford Day Iron Works. He was secretary and treasurer of the company from 1901 until 1917, then was president and manager until 1938 and served on the Board of Directors until 1946. When Sanford died in 1961, he was considered the wealthiest man in Knoxville.
New York architect Harrie T. Lindeberg designed the home (his only one in Tennessee) and was well known all over the country for his country estate designs. Lindeberg designed for many prominent families in New York, New Jersey, and elsewhere in the Northeast. The First Methodist Church purchased the property in 1962, and it is still used today by the church for meetings and events."  - "[Architect Donald] Southgate opened an independent practice in Nashville in 1914 and he designed numerous apartment buildings and residences throughout the city in the early 20th century. The Colonial Revival and Neo-classical styles were widely employed by Southgate for his designs which included the Jacksonian Apartments on West End Avenue (razed) and the St. George's Episcopal Church in Belle Meade. Residences designed by Southgate include the J.B. Shwab House at 420 Jackson Boulevard and the M.J. Cain House at 115 Jackson Boulevard, both built in the 1920s in Belle Meade. Southgate's design for Thomas P. Kennedy, Jr. featured a recessed two-story portico with Doric motif columns, multi-light sash windows, and Colonial Revival inspired mantels and interior detailing. The dwelling is one of the most notable examples of this style surveyed in Forest Hills." p.9, National Register of Historic Places Registration Form, Kennedy, Thomas P. Property Details: Renowned Palm Beach architect, John L. Volk, designed this neo-classical masterpiece for Philip Kerrigan and family. Architectural significant detailing includes: copper roof, walk-out windows, elliptical transoms and Doric columns. Charming English boxwood gardens surround the property and a Jane Eyre vintage greenhouse is the perfect sanctuary for getting back to nature. Custom wrought iron by Kerrigan Iron Works is found throughout the property. Kerrigan also did the iron work at Nashville's beloved Cheekwood. The property does allow for up to 4 horses.

- "Examples of the Neo-Classical, French Chateau, and International styles were also constructed in Forest Hills during the early 20th century. Common characteristics of the Neo-Classical style are a dominant full-height porch with classical columns, a symmetrically balanced facade, and a pedimented main entrance. The "Hibbetage" built in 1939 at 2160 Old Hickory Blvd. is a notable example of this style and was constructed as a replica of Andrew Jackson's home, the Hermitage. This property was listed on the National Register in 1998 for its architectural significance. Another outstanding example of this style is the Philip Kerrigan House at 1800 Chickering Road (DV-25906). Built in 1948, this one-story brick dwelling displays a full-height portico with fluted Doric columns. Because of its intact exterior and interior design and detailing, this property meets National Register criteria for its architectural significance." p.F-25-26, National Register of Historic Places, Multiple Property Documentation Form, Historic and Architectural Resources of Forest Hills, Tennessee

- An Historic Catering Venue In Dallas
Beginning as an extraordinary gift in the early 1900's, the history of Aldredge House commences with a true love story.
Construction of the house began in 1915 when prominent West Texas rancher William J. Lewis, native of Maryland, secured architect Hal Thomson to build a beautiful Southern mansion for his 20-year-old bride, Willie Newbury Lewis. Miss Willie was one of Dallas' first debutantes and Mr. Lewis wanted to honor her with the most beautiful home in Dallas.
The house features influences of English Georgian and French Renaissance styling. In 1921 the mansion was purchased by George N. Aldredge, a prominent banker. He and his wife Rena (Munger) were active civic leaders and major contributors to the arts. Aldredge House was recorded as a Texas Historic Landmark in 1982.
Today, this tradition of romance and prominence continues as celebrants choose Aldredge House as the venue for their most special catered affairs. This grand dame of historic Lakewood provides a lovely setting for parties and special events throughout the year. From summer morning weddings on the terrace to spring and fall ceremonies in the garden, Aldredge House radiates elegance and warmth. And the charm of horse drawn carriages down the opulently decorated Swiss Avenue adds an extra sparkle to holiday celebrations.

 - “After an abbreviated career working for his stepfather, [Edward Hamlin] Everett tried banking, a career that did not suit his entrepreneurial spirit. Striking out on his own, he acquired the Newark Star Glass Company of Ohio, changing its name to the E. H. Everett Company. Hard work plus innovations in the bottle manufacturing industry led to his earned title, “the Bottle King.” He amassed his fortune in the manufacture of glass bottles along with enterprises in natural gas and oil, real estate, cattle and orchards.

In July, 1886, Everett married Amy Webster King, daughter of Oren King, owner of the Newark Star Glass Company. Together they had three daughters, Amy, Mary and Ann. Upon the death of his wife in 1917, he later remarried Grace Burnap, an aspiring mezzo-soprano who bore him two daughters, Sarah and Betty Grace. Just a few days shy of his 78th birthday, Everett died from complications of prostate cancer surgery. Soon after, his daughters of his first marriage and second wife, Grace waged an acrimonious legal battle for his estate, estimated at over $2 million dollars but widely believed to be 20 times greater, just months before the stock market crash of 1929. The daughters were represented by Warren R. Austin of Vermont, who later served as a Senator from Vermont and became the first U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations.” The Orchards: The Everett Mansion at Southern Vermont College, 1911- 2011

 - The Mansion (built 1866-67)
In 1866, Ira C. Allen bought the property from Judge William Kittredge who had a house on the property. This house was removed to another site. Moving houses was common in those days because it was cheaper than building or buying. The house was placed on rollers and as horses pulled it, the rollers were moved from back to front. The marble came from Proctor and according to the story, each piece of marble was numbered and lay on the lawn for quite some time before it was used in construction.
Grandfather (Ira C.) Allen and his family moved in on January 1, 1868.

The parlors were not furnished. Two hot air furnaces and coal stoves were in the dining room. In 1870 with two large cisterns well water was brought in and pumped to the second floor. With running water on the second floor baths and toilets were put in. Two years later the town of Fair Haven put in water works. The parlor was furnished at a cost of $4,000.

At first the marble house was piped for gas with kerosene lights; then in 1893 the house was wired for and became the first house in Fair Haven to have electricity. All the marble was brought from West Rutland by ox teams and had sheet lead put in between.

The Allen & Vail Families

Upon his death Ira C. Allen left the marble house to his four children: Charles R. Allen, Ira R. Allen, Jessie A. Allen, and Francis Allen. The eldest, Charles R. Allen, resided at the mansion with his wife Jessie Dailey Allen and his family. Charles' siblings Jessie A. Allen and Francis Allen boarded at the home at this time. Eventually the three sons sold their shares to Jessie in 1889 for $15,000.

In 1903 Jessie conveyed it to George Vail for the sum of $1.00. George was married to Elizabeth Allen, a relative of the Allen family. When Elizabeth (Aunt Libby) Allen Vail died, the marble house was taken over by Aaron Vail Allen, Sr. and his wife Rebecca. Their son, Sherman Vail Allen became the next in line and upon his death in 1975 the mansion was sold and left the Allen family.

 - After [James] Monroe's death, the property passed out of the Monroe family. John W. Fairfax, later a lieutenant colonel in the Confederate States Army, bought Oak Hill in 1852. His wife remained there while Fairfax was away fighting in the American Civil War; it was visited by General George G. Meade of the Union Army on the invitation of Mrs. Fairfax about a week prior to the Battle of Gettysburg. The property passed out of the hands of John Fairfax after the war, but was later repurchased by his eldest son, Henry, a civil engineer and state senator.[8] The estate remained in the Fairfax family until after Henry Fairfax's death in 1916. The mansion was enlarged by the addition of two wings in 1922 while owned by Frank C. Littleton and his wife, but the central facade looks much as it did during Monroe's lifetime. The property remains in private hands today as the residence of Thomas DeLashmutt and his wife; it is not open to the public.  - "CARTER HALL, Millwood. With its stately architecture and landscaped park, Carter hall presents an idealized image of the patrician South. The house was erected in the late 1790s for Col. Nathaniel Burwell, originally of Carter's Grove, James City County. The heroic Ionic portico was added in 1814 by Burwell's son George. In 1862, Stonewall Jackson set up headquarters here, using the park as his campground. The plantation was purchased in 1930 by pharmaceutical magnate Gerard Lambert, who commissioned New York architect Harrie T. Lindeberg to undertake an extensive remodeling. Lindeberg removed a cupola and had the stucco reoved from the stone walls. The Georgian-styled woodwork and flying spiral stair are also Lindeberg's design. The beautiful park provide son of Virginia's most impressive landscape settings for a historic house. - "While General Patrick waited from 10:00 A. M. until 7:00 P. M. (November 21) in a log house at French John's Wharf, the note was passed through the hands of a civic committee who had previously met General Lee at "Snowden," (now the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Baldwin) on which were: Mayor Slaughter, William A. Little and Douglas H. Gordon. A note from General Lee was then transmitted to the town officials by General J. E. B. Stuart. This Mayor Slaughter, Dr. Wm. S. Scott and Samuel Harrison delivered late in the afternoon to General Patrick. General Lee simply said the town was non-combatant; that he would not occupy it, nor would he allow any one else to occupy it...Though not so old, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Baldwin at "Snowden," has long passed the century mark, and the substantial brick structure, with its massive white pillared portico, its wealth of English ivy, wistaria, and other shrubs, its magnificent shade trees, planted irregularly on the extensive lawn, its flower garden on the west, in which peonies, hollyhocks, crepe myrtle, and other gay perennials vie with each other in glowing color and beauty, all unite to form a lovely spot. Nor can one forget that here General Lee and his staff, and citizens of Fredericksburg, sat in the old parlor twice before they decided that though the Federals carried out their threat to devastate Fredericksburg, they would not submit to an unjust demand, and for the only time in the war save at Appomatox and where Jackson died, tears gleamed in General Lee's eyes as he stepped in boots and gauntlets from "Snowden's" front porch to mount Traveler on the driveway."  - The next owners of Belmont were Mr. and Mrs. Edward B. McLean, who purchased it in 1915. Mr. McLean was the son of the owner-publisher of the Washington x. Mrs. McLean (Evelyn Walsh) is best remembered as being an owner of the famous Hope Diamond. During the McLean ownership, Belmont became noted as a fine horse farm. The distinction was short-lived; the Depression caused the horses to be auctioned in 1931, and in the following year, the whole estate was sold to Mr. and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley. Mr. Hurley had served as Secretary of War during the Hoover administration. The Hurleys sold Belmont and its contents in 1943 to the late George C. Clarke, a Washington, D. C., attorney, who in 1969 sold the estate to the International Business Machines Corporation. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke retained a life interest in the house and a portion of the property, but this interest was given up when the widowed Mrs. Clarke vacated the house in 1974.

 - "Archibald Cary Coolidge and the Harvard Library" p.435: "Coolidge's life was a life of books. He was seldom without them. In his younger days he traveled across Asia with a trunkload of them. In later life, even in the garden at Tuckahoe [footnote 258], he read as he walked up and down the mile long "cedar lane"." [footnote 258: Tuckahoe was the Randolph family plantation on the James River, one of the boyhood homes of Thomas Jefferson, an estate going back into the early years of Virginia history, which Coolidge, his father and brothers acquired in 1898. Coolidge owned a quarter interest in the property. He was also always ambitious to preserve his great-great grandfather Jefferson's "Monticello".]

 - "Tuckahoe Plantation, boyhood home of Thomas Jefferson, is a National Historic Landmark and is protected in perpetuity by a preservation easement donated by the owners. It is considered by architectural historians to be among the finest early 18th century plantation homes in America. A guest at Tuckahoe in the late 1700s commented that the house seemed "to be built solely to answer the purpose of hospitality". Built between 1730 and 1740, this unique Randolph family plantation home and its outbuildings have persisted through a rich American history. Almost three centuries have passed, and Tuckahoe still fits the description of southern hospitality." <http://www.tuckahoeplantation.com/history/>

- William Bolcom can hardly make his way across the foyer of the University of Washington music building, because he keeps encountering and greeting a crowd of former faculty colleagues and former students. A photographer is waiting to take his picture; a reporter is ready to hear his life story, and a radio interview has just come to a close.

Thomas Wolfe said you can't go home again, but Bolcom has proved him wrong. The UW alum and former professor is back on campus again, as the J. Hans and Thelma Lehmann Distinguished Professor of Music - a two-week residency.

"Usually I don't do residencies," Bolcom explained, "but for Hans I will. We're very dear friends. I grew up right where his house is now, in the old Bolcom mansion (before it burned down), and I remember him and Thelma from the old days." Bolcom's father owned an estate overlooking Puget Sound, where the Lehmanns subsequently built their own home.

- "Robert and Virginia Bolcom weren't sure what to do with their son William. Here he was, 4 years old, not yet old enough for kindergarten, yet he played the piano like a maestro. And he composed, too-a Mozart in the making.

Young William grew up in a cocoon of music. His grandfather was a flamboyant Seattle lumber baron who thought nothing of smoking 20 cigars and downing two quarts of Scotch a day. He built an entire wing on his mansion overlooking Golden Gardens Park to accommodate famous musicians (such as renowned pianist Ignace Paderewski) who visited Seattle to play with the symphony."

- “One block to the south, the Highland Boulevard section of Rockwood also drew buyers desiring large lots and custom-designed homes. The A. W. Witherspoon residence, designed by C. R. Wood, departed in style from previous homes, reflecting Italian Renaissance and Mission styles in a formally symmetrical design. This large stuccoed home, at 2124 Rockwood Boulevard, has both arched and rectangular windows. A green tile hipped roof is low pitched with wide eaves and two hipped dormers. The entry, framed by large Tuscan pillars, has a shed roof. Beyond its front veranda, the original landscaping for this street was designed by the Olmsted firm, with completion of the design for the Witherspoon lot by M. E. Estep.”

The Corbin and Moore-Turner Heritage Gardens were established in 1889 and maintained by the owners of the houses until 1932. The names come from the families, which lived in the two houses at the time. The Corbin and the Moore houses were both designed by the famous architect Kirtland Cutter in the then fashionable 7th Avenue hill section of town. Mr. Frank Rockwood Moore was the first president of Washington Water Power. He also held mining investments and was partner to James Glover in the First National Bank. He died in 1895. Senator George Turner bought the house in 1896. He was a member of Washington’s state Constitutional Convention, and was appointed a Justice in the Washington Supreme Court. Developed in two main stages, the first from 1888 to 1891 and the second from 1911 to 1913, the Moore-Turner Garden is a local example of the landscape style that accompanied the Arts and Crafts Movement in America. George Turner and his wife Bertha purchased this residential garden, first laid out by F. Rockwood Moore, in 1896. During their ownership, the Moore-Turner Garden achieved its fullest development when the Turners commissioned Portland, Oregon landscape architect Hugh Bryan to supervise extensive additions. Incorporated into the South Hill’s unique geology, the property comprises over five acres and offers some of the finest views of the city. Once the site of one of the city’s early mansions, the property still reflects its historic character in location, design, setting, materials, and association. No other hillside landscape in Spokane retains the traces of its past to the same extent. While the South Hill's other hillside gardens have been compromised or have disappeared altogether, the remnants of the Moore-Turner Garden are identifiable. The grounds are owned by the Spokane Parks Department and are currently under restoration. The infra-structure for the gardens was completed in 2006 and included removing brush and debris; stabilizing the basalt walls, staircases and foundations; preparing the planting plan; recovering the carriage road; installing the irrigation system; and installing the perimeter wrought iron fence with basalt columns.

"Any list of Portland's big business men, whose activities have been distinctively and literally constructive in character, must include the name of Andrew R. Porter, who ranks among the leading general contractors of this country. The scope of his operations for a long period of years has been international and of great magnitude and his business methods have been on a plane that has commanded for him the unqualified confidence of all with whom he has dealt. Mr. Porter was born in Nova Scotia, Canada, in 1857, and is a son of James and Jane (Patrick) Porter, both of whom are deceased. His father was a farmer and contractor.

Mr. Porter received his educational training in the public schools and before attaining his majority engaged in the contracting business. In 1883 he went to Duluth, Minnesota, where, in association with his brothers, R. B. and J. D. Porter, he took contracts on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. In 1886 they went to Helena, Montana, where they did extensive contract work on the Great Northern Railroad, and three years later they helped to build the main line of the Great Northern from Haver to Seattle, Washington, this work occupying their attention for three years. They were engaged in contract work at various places on the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroads until 1917, and during this period also built the Oregon Trunk Railroad, in central Oregon, the greater part of the North Bank Railroad, from Portland to Spokane, and the Northern Pacific from Vancouver to Tacoma. In 1913 they commenced the construction of the Ocean terminal at Halifax, Nova Scotia, one of the largest ocean terminals on the continent, which they completed in 1917. They also built the great ocean terminal at Norfolk, Virginia, at a cost of thirty million dollars, and also two sections of the new Welland canal from Lake Ontario to Lake Erie, and are now engaged in the construction of the tubes under the river between Detroit, Michigan, and Windsor, Canada. J. D. Porter died in 1926 and Andrew R. and R. D. Porter, who have been associated together for forty-five years, are carrying on the business. In October, 1923, Mr. Porter and his brothers purchased the splendid twelve-story office building in Portland which bears their name, besides which he has other large property interests in this city and in Spokane, Washington, in which city his brother resides. Mr. Porter became a resident of Portland in 1908 and here the general office of the business is maintained. On his big contracts Mr. Porter employs thousands of men and he long ago demonstrated his ability to successfully handle any job, regardless of its size or difficulty. He is a director of the United States National Bank of Portland and for the past ten years has been a member of the Port of Portland. In 1885 Mr. Porter was united in marriage to Miss Mary O'Rorrick, of Nova Scotia, and to them have been born a son and daughter: Guy R., who is manager of the Porter building, is married and has four children, while Margaret, is the wife of Robert Butler, of St. Paul, Minnesota. Mr. Porter gives his political support to the republican party, and fraternally is a Knight Templar Mason and Noble of the Mystic Shrine, and an Odd Fellow, and also belongs to the Arlington Club, the Waverly Country Club, the Multnomah Athletic Club and the Chamber of Commerce. A man of positive character, strong determination and keen and discriminating judgment, he commands respect wherever he is known and is regarded as one of the representative men of the Pacific northwest."

He purchased Tacoma Smelter and Refining Company, and after a year of rebuilding, he began smelting lead and later refining copper. Rust sold the company in 1905 for 5.5 million dollars, which was ample funds to construct a dream home for his wife Helen and sons Howard and Henry. #### JOHN E. WEBB

Having ginned financial independence John E. Webb is now living retired in Walla Walla. He was born in Illinois, August 13, 1870, and was reared in that state. He received a public school education and was also trained to agricultural pursuits during his boyhood and youth. In early manhood he went to Nebraska, whence, several years later, he came to Walla Walla county, Washington. He readily adapted himself to the crude conditions here, and as the years passed he purchased additional land and now owns about nine thousand acres. His property affords him double pleasure in that it is the direct result of his own business insight, resourcefulness and enterprise. He is one of the largest land holders in the county and he has always been among the first to adopt new methods or improved equipment.

In 1906 Mr Webb was united in marriage to Mrs. Annie Pickard, the widow of Charles F. Pickard. By her first marriage she had six children, namely. Clara, who married O. L. Compton; Thetford; Anita; Russell; Olive, the wife of C. W. Cornelius; and Beatrice.

To Mr. and Mrs. Webb has been born a son, Harry E. Mr. and Mrs. Webb spend their winters in California and all the comforts of life are theirs. Mr. Webb has never been ambitious to hold public office, preferring to concentrate his attention upon his individual interests. However, in developing his large farm holdings, he has played an important part in the upbuilding of Walla Walla county along agricultural lines. He has a number of fraternal connections, belonging to the Masonic lodge, the Knights of Pythias lodge and the Elks. Few men are more widely known or more highly esteemed in Walla Walla county than he, and it is largely recognized that his integrity, as well as his ability, is above question.

- CHARLES F. PICKARD, deceased.
There have been few men in Walla Walla county who gained better success than did Charles F. Pickard. A man of energy, industry and wisdom, he brought to bear every influence to win success and conserve the interests of the business that he made to prosper so well. Then he started out for himself and immediately came west, Walla Walla being the objective point. He entered the employ of Willard H. Babcock, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume, and was engaged in wheat raising for Mr. Babcock, on Eureka Flat. He remained with him until 1888, when he purchased three quarters of a section of land from his employer and commenced raising wheat for himself. Mr. Pickard had the ability to make a success and it was evident from the start that he would become one of the leading grain producers of southeastern Washington. His estate gradually increased until each year he raised twenty-eight hundred acres of wheat and summer-fallowed as much more. He also owned five thousand six hundred acres of pasture land, giving him the magnificent estate of over eleven thousand acres. Everything about the estate from the merest detail to its general . management was under the close supervision of Mr. Pickard and everything was done in a business like and thrifty manner. His crops were among the best produced on Eureka Flat and he was considered one of the best grain raisers in the state.

On August 12, 1902, Mr. Pickard was handling a fractious team which ran away, and, true to the grit that he possessed, he clung to the reins and was finally thrown on a wheel and killed instantly.

Owing to Mr. Pickard's unexpected death his estate was left without will and his widow has been managing the same since. She has an able assistant in John Webb, who entered the employ of Mr. Pickard in 1892 and has been foreman of the estate much of the time since. In the year of 1904, the crop Mrs. Pickard raised averaged thirty bushels per acre for her entire estate, which was the banner yield in that part of the country. In addition to raising wheat, she pays some attention to handling stock and hogs and has shown exceptional ability in taking up the immense business her husband conducted and to handle it in such manner as to win still further success" p.212, An illustrated history of southeastern Washington, including Walla Walla, Columbia, Garfield and Asotin counties, Washington (1906)

The busy intersection of Martinsburg Road and Washington Street now dominated by two gas station/convenience stores has an impressive history. The expansive Van Rensselaer estate extended south and east from the corner. Eugene Van Rensselaer, owner of the Berkeley Springs Water Company, built Glen Luta mansion there in 1872. Van Rensselaer razed the building in 1915 for a luxury hotel which was never built. After his death in 1925, its grounds were laid out and sold in lots. The corner became commercial with Glen Luta miniature golf opening in 1930 and lasting two seasons. The Glen Luta Restaurant was succeeded by Tastee Freeze, now Sheetz."

  - In 1946, Stanley and Polly Stone of Fox Point, Wisconsin, began collecting decorative arts, a passion they would maintain for the rest of their lives. The Stone's particular interests centered around early American furniture and historical prints, and seventeenth and eighteenth century British pottery. By the early 1960s their collection was impressive enough to capture the attention of Charles Montgomery, then Senior Research Fellow and former Director of the Henry Francis DuPont Winterthur Museum pottery (click here to read Mr. Stone's 1983 recollections of the early collecting years). At Montgomery's urging the Stone's established a the Chipstone Foundation with the dual purpose of preserving and interpreting their collection, and stimulating research and education in the decorative arts. Following Stanley Stone's death in 1987, the foundation was activated by an initial endowment provided by Mrs. Stone. Since then, Chipstone has steadily expanded its collections and broadened its support of the decorative arts world.

To many decorative arts enthusiasts, Chipstone is a familiar name but the foundation's precise mission or purpose remains something of an enigma—and understandably so given Chipstone's primary and longtime role as a private collection. Stanley and Polly Stone housed their wonderful collection in a colonial revival brick home they named Chipstone ([Origin of the name "Chipstone" Stanley Stone's affectionate name for his wife Polly was "Chipmunk." Merging this term with their last name created the word Chipstone.]), which was built on a bluff overlooking Lake Michigan.

Walter J. Kohler, then Governor of Wisconsin, commissioned architect Richard Philipp, of the Milwaukee firm of Brust & Philipp, and the world-renowned Olmsted Brothers, well-known for creating Central Park in New York City and the Harvard and Stanford campuses, to design his estate.
The grounds were landscaped in the English tradition to accentuate the natural beauty of the site that captivated Walter and his wife Charlotte.
Throughout the 1920s and 1930s, Riverbend was a special gathering place for social occasions. Walter and Charlotte regaled their guests on a grand scale. The house was later acquired from Walter's descendents by the National Trust for Historic Preservation. The Kohler Co. purchased Riverbend in 1985 from the Trust.   - On the south side of the Fontana-Geneva Road, which bounds this resort property on the south, on the northeast corner of the farm of the late Edward E. Ayer, stands a boulder marker which marks the course of the Chicago Trail, which here crossed the road to Indian Hills. This marker was erected by the Geneva Lake Historical Society, and was unveiled on July 28, 1927. The bronze tablet bears the inscription: "The old Indian trail from the foot of Lake Michigan to Lake Geneva and on to the 'Four Lakes' at Madison — part of a primitive system that practically crossed the continent — passed here."
On the bank of a brook flowing through this woodland and near the above mentioned trail flint chips and fragments were found. Doubtless the camp site extended at least this far into the grove.
29. Edward E. Ayer Camp Site. (Fract. Sec. 13)
On the summer residence property of the late Mr. Edward E. Ayer (Fairoaks) an Indian camp site was located on land now in use as a vegetable garden. During his lifetime, Mr. Ayer, and Mr. Henry Tallman, the caretaker of the Ayer's Estate, both collected many Indian stone implements here and elsewhere on the property. This garden was under cultivation and no careful examination of it could be made.

- The most notable early development along the southwestern shore of the Lake was that of the EE Ayer estate Fair Oaks begun in 1875 and continuously added to and beautified with each succeeding year. Extending from the shore of the Lake to the heights of the hills far to the southward the resultant private park contains 8 miles of driveways while the varied tastes and interests of its owner have made the residence the repository of one of the most wonderful and beautiful collections of objects of art and of historical interest in all America.

- This building is the Abbey Springs Yacht Club, which is part of the Abbey Springs Condominium Development. In addition to the yacht club, Abbey Springs has a beautiful golf course, swimming pool, and tennis courts.
The Abbey Springs Development is built on the site of the Edward G. Ayer estate known as The Oaks. It was built in 1875 and included 1200 acres of property. A stone boathouse, some of the walls along lakeshore drive, and one of the barns are all that remain of the original estate.
Mr. Ayer was in the lumber business and was co-owner of the Ayer and Lord Railroad Tie Company. Mr. Ayer made his fortune selling ties to the major railroads as they expanded westward. He was instrumental in building the Art Institute of Chicago and also persuaded Marshall Field to contribute a million dollars to the fund, which financed the construction of the Field Columbian Museum of Natural History in Chicago. This museum was built as a memorial to the 1893 Columbian Exposition and stood in Jackson Park where the Museum of Science and Industry now stands., The Field Museum was moved to its present location in Grant Park in the 1920's. <http://www.lakegenevaestates.com/top-10-mansions/abbey-springs1/>

The goal is to preserve the agricultural tradition of the farm and make tribute to the farm as an innovator to new ideas and concepts. Recently I was there and viewed the operations of the dairy which sells milk to local markets. Many buildings I noticed here support core operations of the farm and are the focus of historic preservation efforts. A day here is a real treat for everyone. The 133-acre pasture is a grassland for nesting birds and late-season forage for livestock. The Mass Bay Circuit Trail of Essex County crosses the farm here.

  - "THE SHORE DRIVE I am pleased to be able to report that I have already secured nearly all the land requisite for the construction of the Bay Ridge Parkway or the Shore Drive as it is more popularly called. The law for the purchase of this land was approved by the Governor May 22d 1894. Under its provisions Mayor Charles A Schieren appointed as the commission to lay out this public driveway and parkway, Messrs. John B Woodward, Elijah R Kennedy, George Ingram, William Brown, John Condon, Solomon W Johnson and Simeon B Chittenden. This commission selected Messrs Olmsted Olmsted & Eliot as the architects to arrange for landscape effects On February 20th of the present year this committee in compliance with the law filed its report together with a map showing the land and riparian rights to be acquired for the purposes of the driveway." p.68, Annual Report of the Department of Parks of the City of Brooklyn for the Year ..., Volume 35, Part 1895, Brooklyn (New York, N.Y.). - o Charles Albright Flint is named after his grandfather, Dr. Charles Edgar Albright, who married Schlitz heir Laura Uihlein Albright. Dr. Albright must have been a delight to his father-in-law Henry Uihlen, president of Schlitz brewery, because he became a success in his own right, which was rare among husbands of early 20th century heiresses.

Doc made his money not in medicine, but in insurance, becoming a legendary producer for Northwestern Mutual, which relies heavily on business from wealthy patrician families like Uihleins and Albrights and their pals. For a remarkable 30 years (1905-1935) Albright was the number one producer of NML's 6,000 nationwide agents. The sale of Lorraine Uihlein Albright's antiques in 1968 was a national event. Chances are that Flint had his pick of goods pre-sale.

Charles Flint does not appear to have engaged in any active business pursuits. He and his wife are not known to the philanthropic community, as nearly as can be determined. Flint used a 735 N. Water St. address on some business stationary, significantly omitting a suite number. But that building has long held the family offices of the Uihleins, and there is a good chance Flint operated out of them, or at least had his mail forwarded there.

Margaret Connolly, of New York City had already lost both of her parents at the time of her marriage to Charles Flint, who at that time had spent six years in the army. He attended Milwaukee Country Day School, St. John's Military Academy and Carroll College, from which he apparently did not graduate. But success in money does not always lead to happiness, it has been said, and the Flint story bears this out in spades. The Flints would consider the Kennedy family to be exceptionally lucky.

Flint's uncle, Charles Albright, Jr. killed himself on New Year's eve 1938 by walking in front of a train in Oconomowoc. His aunt, Marion Albright Tallmadge, died in a mysterious 1958 fire that destroyed her 25-room Oconomowoc mansion just six months after a son died in an airplane crash. Police were not amused with the dynamite and 42 machine guns stored in the home, the property of W. David Tallmadge, another son of Marion.

- "The golf course would become a centrepiece of what was to be called the Mid Ocean Club. As the fairways took shape, Charles Wetmore's clubhouse rose beside the sea. Tennis courts, beach houses and bridle trails followed. The company's second ambition was to sell up to 300 one-acre lots dotted through its new Tucker's Town domain. On these, "quality" residential tourists could build tasteful "bungalows" in which they could spend the winter months in Bermuda's warmth and seclusion. The first of these lots was sold with much fanfare to Theodore Roosevelt's nephew, George Roosevelt...In 1923, [Harvard architect John S.] Humphreys flattered the Mid Ocean Club's intentions by publishing Bermuda Houses, a book celebrating Bermuda's visual distinctiveness." "Trading Places" Bermuda [magazine] Summer 1996
- "The Mid-Ocean Club is one of the world's most exclusive oases of the famous and the wealthy. There are 400 members, 80 percent of them non-residents of Bermuda. An even dozen are Canadian. Guests must be put up by a member to enjoy the privileges. The club house, opened thirty years ago, has 40 bedrooms and baths. There are also 55 elegant homes in the residential colony, privately owned by members and laid out over 600 of Bermuda's choicest acres. The first was built by George Roosevelt, nephew of Teddy."   - Virginia Park - Located on the northeast corner of E. 9th Street and S. Campbell Street, Virginia Park is a 2 acre, historic park, bequeathed to the City by the late John C. Latham in 1909, in honor of his mother. Originally designed by the landscape architectural firm of Frederick Law Olmstead [sic], who also designed New York City's Central Park and many of the parks in Louisville, Kentucky. Virginia Park currently includes the original band stand, sidewalks, park benches, and picnic tables.

  - "The professionals abandoned the old site at 28th and Elliott. By 1894 the grounds had been cleared and were used as a YMCA athletic ground. In 1906, after a brief court battle between the city and the heirs of Dr. T.D. Elliott, the City of Louisville received title to the 3.9-acre site for use as a public park. Two years later, Louisville Mayor, Charles F. Grainger agreed to let the Louisville Branch of the Women's Auxiliary of American Park and Outdoor Art Association plant some trees in the park as part of their Arbor Day celebration. Shortly after that, Olmsted's firm was hired to create a design plan for the park which continued up until 1923.
The Louisville Olmsted Park Conservancy describes Elliott Park as an oasis of green sandwiched between residential properties on the east, industrial to the north and west, and retail on the south. Today, Elliott Park is has a basketball court, horseshoe pits, picnic shelter and tables, playground, spray ground, restrooms, and it still has a ball-field available for baseball."

  - River Fields, Inc: Celebrating Over 50 Years
Our Mission Statement: River Fields protects, preserves and enhances the natural and cultural resources, including agricultural and scenic resources, on both sides of the Ohio River between Westport and West Point, Kentucky, for the benefit of the public.
River Fields is the largest and oldest river conservancy along the 981 mile Ohio River. For 50 years, River Fields has utilized its resources to effectively protect, preserve and enhance the natural and cultural resources of the land and water around the Ohio River in our region. Through our programs of land conservation, advocacy, and education, River Fields strives to create harmony between nature, history and the people who live here. River Fields owns land or holds conservation easements on 33 properties, totaling more than 2,200 acres, most of which is preserved forever. River Fields is one of the nation's few land trusts tackling regional advocacy work and land conservation.

- Lowell's largest and most beautiful park is Fort Hill Park the summit of which is two hundred and sixty seven feet above sea level and one hundred and forty two feet above the street A new granolithic sidewalk has been laid on Rogers street from High street to the main entrance but there are sections of this beautiful park which are neither graded nor laid out in walks An important step towards beautifying Lowell would be to have this park remodelled provided with a shelter house traversed by spacious driveways and well lighted On the summit a bandstand could be erected and Lowell would then enjoy a park unsurpassed by any other in New England Park Garden in Belvidere which would be an excellent location for the Rodin statue and Tyler Park in the Highlands are two of Lowell's smaller parks both of which have received ordinary maintenance care

- BELVIDERE PARK The so called Belvidere Park was at first much larger than it is now but on the subsequent location of streets the area was circumscribed to its present limit surrounded by a slab fence and occupied as a cow pasture After a while it was leased to Mr Edwin Sheppard for a garden and thus acquired the name of Park Garden which still adheres to it to some extent Mr Sheppard occupied it for ten years for the cultivation of plants fruits and vegetables He built a saloon upon the premises for his dwelling and the entertainment of his patrons At the expiration of Mr Sheppard s lease the spot was sold to the city for a park by Thomas and John Nesmith in the year 1860 on the 10th day of April for the sum of $2100.00 it is in that part of Lowell called Belvidere bounded on the north by Chestnut on the south by Andover on the east by Park formerly called Washington and on the west by Nesmith Street It has been improved from time to time until it has become one of the most beautiful spots in the city It is now surrounded by a nice granite curbing

  - "Utica Parks and Parkway System - The People Who Made It Happen!
    - Thomas R. Proctor – In 1899, when the City of Utica extended Rutger Street to the east to accommodate the newly built Masonic Home, Proctor opened 60 acres of the old Bagg's Hotel farm (located west of the Masonic Homes grounds) to the public. He cleared 35 of the 60 acres and left the other 25 acres wooded. In 1904, Proctor purchased land on what is now known as the Memorial Parkway. He purchased several farms until he held acreage totaling about 380 acres. He engaged Frederick Law Olmsted, Jr., and Olmsted Brothers Landscape Architects, to lay out walking paths, driving roads, and to plant trees. He had a 20-ton boulder placed on the site, along with a bronze plaque, and dedicated the site in honor of Roscoe Conkling. In 1909, both Roscoe Conkling Park and Thomas R. Proctor Park were formally dedicated for use by the City of Utica's citizens.
    - Also in 1904, the city added an additional stretch of land to the Parkway, from Genesee Street to Elm Street. In 1911, the Parkway was extended further to Mohawk Street. In 1919, the City Council authorized additional work to extend the Parkway from Mohawk Street to Welsh Bush Road.
    - There were also plans at one time to extend the Memorial Parkway west of Genesee Street, and T.R. Proctor donated land to the city for this purpose. Though the plans conceived by Olmsted and Proctor to continue the Parkway never materialized, Horatio Seymour Park was established on the corner of Sunset Avenue and Burrstone Road. This land eventually became the site of Murnane Field and field house, during the WPA period." <http://www.cnyconservancy.org/history-archives/contributing-individuals/>

- Prospect Park
65 Prospect Park Road, Troy NY 12180
Office Number (518) 235-7761
Prospect Park is a city owned park centrally located within the City of Troy. One of three major parks in the City. The park consists of approximately 80 acres of land conveyed by the Warren Family to the City of Troy by deed dated December 23, 1902. Prospect Park's 14 court Tennis Facility is the only major tennis facility of its type (public or private) in the Troy Area. The facility represents 56% of all the public courts within the City. Prospect Park opens each season in early April and remains open through early November. [other parks listed - Frear and Knickerbacker - seem to have formed after the 1918 correspondence dates; contrariwise, correspondence may document formation of one of these parks]

- “In the 1900's Punxsutawney became the commercial shopping center for the many miners, the railroad men, and their families. There was industrial development starting in about 1880 and increasing to it's height in the 1920's. Natural gas came to Punxsutawney in 1884, the water works opened in 1887, electricity came in 1889. Factories moved in. There were iron foundries here. The Punxsutawney Iron Works covered an area, about an acre, that now comprises the Punxsy Plaza. There were breweries and a silk mill and a boiler maker . There was a meat packing plant producing "Groundhog Brand" meats. The were brick making industries also. There was a steel hoop mill, a glass plant and a planing mill as well.”

- "From 1893 to 1895, Menauhant was acquired by Henry Bryant, a retired sea captain and businessman, through a series of negotiations with several members of the Bourne and Davis families. Bryant commissioned Ignatius Sargent to design and construct a residence overlooking Waquoit Bay and Vineyard Sound. The house was three stories, flanked by two ells. Built as a seasonal retreat, the house was lighted by kerosene lamps and heated by several fireplaces. To facilitate crossing to the mainland, Bryant obtained a permit to operate a hand ferry linking the island with a landing on the Seapit River
Henry Bryant died in 1904, leaving the estate to his widow Alida. In 1912, she sold the property to a corporate group of investors and bankers including Albert Henry Washburn. To recoup their investments, the partners planned to sell parcels of land for private development. The only sale to materialize was an area of approximately 4.5 acres along the southern beach to Fred and Fannie Collins, who built a summer home, a guest house, and a garage in front of a glacial outwash still known as Collins' Hill.
The corporate members changed their plans and Henry and Florence Washburn purchased the rest of the island for their own use. They moved into the Bryant house, which they did not change except to bring in electric and telephone lines. To improve access, a narrow-bridged causeway was constructed across the sandspit separating Eel Pond from Vineyard Sound. The Washburn family enjoyed the peace and tranquillity of the island where they spent extended summer vacations. During this time the property became known as Washburn's Island. On October 26, 1926, the residence was destroyed by a spectacular fire which lit up the skies of Falmouth. Shortly before midnight a maid discovered smoke and flames and alerted other members of the household. As the fire enveloped the upper floors, alarms sounded at the Menauhant Village fire department. Firefighters responded and rushed to the scene, but their trucks bogged down in soft sand as they crossed the causeway. Upon arrival, the firefighters found no adequate water supply and had to pump from a nearby pond. The wing housing the servant quarters was the only section which could be saved. The cause of the fire was traced to a defective chimney in the den.
Henry Washburn died of food poisoning in Vienna in 1930. During the succeeding years in which Florence Washburn owned the Island, she never posted her property or restricted recreational use by visitors. Washburn Island became increasingly popular as a picnicking, camping, and swimming site. As more people took advantage of her generosity, vandalism became a serious problem. Thieves stole anything of value and want only destroyed what was left. Beer and bonfire parties increased the danger of fire and left the grounds littered with rubbish and garbage.
In September 1938, a severe hurricane hit Cape Cod. A tidal surge washed out the sandspit and causeway opening up a channel 125 feet wide and seven feet deep between Vineyard Sound and Eel Pond. Washburn Island was now truly an island, to the delight of yacht owners. Boats could navigate through the breach into the Sound without having to travel the two or three miles formerly required to circumnavigate through Waquoit Bay." Bridgewater Review, Volume 20, Issue 2, Article 10, Dec-2001 "A History of Washburn Island" by Donald L. Keay, Bridgewater State College

  - "The importance of lax building regulations to working-class homeseekers is illustrated by the early failure of one working-class suburb, Torrance. Located in southwest Los Angeles in the heart of oil country, Torrance was incorporated in 1921. It diverged from unplanned blue-collar suburbs - like Home Gardens - in being highly planned and regulated. It was envisioned as a "model industrial suburb" for the working class, designed by John C. and Frederick Law Olmsted Jr. to incorporate City Beautiful into the suburban landscape. Part of this involved imposing restrictions on housing style and quality. Their strict requirements shut out many prospective homebuilders, who instead headed to hospitable working-class suburbs like Home Gardens, where laxity was the watchword. As a result, Torrance languished and grew at a snail's pace during this period." p.21, My Blue Heaven: Life and Politics in the Working-Class Suburbs of Los Angeles, 1920-1965, Becky M. Nicolaides, University of Chicago Press, May 2, 2002

  - Poinciana City promotional materials, 1927
HistoryMiami Archives & Research Center
Scope and Contents: Brochures, plat maps and a newspaper advertisement pertains to the development of the proposed city of Poinciana in Monroe County. One of the brochures refers to projects for a hotel and general merchandise store by the Poinciana Business Enterprises Inc.
Administrative/Biographical History: Tropical Florida Development Corp. was a Miami real estate development company. The city of Poinciana, advertised as "The coming Miami on the Gulf," was located at the mouth of Lostman River, on the Gulf coast of Florida. The 1926 hurricane swept away its grand plan,s along with the few portable buildings that were erected. The company went out of business a few years later.
Poinciana Business Enterprises Inc., also located in Miami, was organized by its shareholders to develop profitable commercial enterprises in Poinciana. Initially, they planned to build and operate a hotel, a general merchandise store, and a building materials yard. The shareholders were made up of a group of Poinciana property owners.

  - "Soon after [President Younger] Ford had taken office in 1914, the university had offered $30,000 for the Norris property, a large, undeveloped tract in Louisville's Highlands neighborhood. After this offer was refused, the family of William R. Belknap, a local hardware dealer who had recently died, donated funds sufficient for the school to acquire the seventy-nine acre Gaertner tract for $61,000. Referred to - prematurely, as it turned out - as the Belknap Campus, it was adjacent to and twice the size of the Norris property...Discouraged by their defeat at the ballot box, university officials in 1923 sold the Highlands property acquired through the Belknap family. Wakefield-Davis, a real estate firm, bought it for $125,000, giving the university a good return on the sale. It was quickly developed as University park, a residential area with streets named Princeton, Harvard, Yale, and Sewanee." p.64-65, The University of Louisville, Dwayne Cox, William James Morison, University Press of Kentucky, 2000

<http://books.google.com/books?id=JYoVg6RogawC&pg=PA65&lpg=PA65&dq=%22university+of+louisville+%22+%22wakefield+davis%22&source=bl&ots=KrA7dKw3fx&sig=w44nAHO2787SxYbfbsaJ0010NmW&hl=en&sa=X&ei=ENc6U7v2AeersASOq4Ao&ved=0CC0Q6AEwAQ#v=onepage&q=%22university%20of%20louisville%20%22%20%22wakefield%20davis%22&f=false>

- "By the early 1900s, U of L had outgrown its campus at Second and Broadway (now home to Jefferson Community and Technical College), said Tom Owen, an archivist at the university. Around 1915, the family of the recently deceased William R. Belknap donated $61,000 to U of L for the purchase of the Gaertner Farm, a 79-acre tract just east of the 90-degree turn where Douglass Boulevard becomes Norris Place.

As U of L made plans to develop its "Belknap Campus," Owen said, International Realty Associates, an out-of-town firm, broke ground on the first piece of University Park subdivision.

But in 1920, a proposed bond issue to finance the development of Belknap Campus failed at the polls. It was defeated in part by black voters who paid city taxes but were barred by state law from attending the university, Owen said. "They said, 'There's nothing in this for us.'"

Lacking the funds to build the campus, the University of Louisville sold the Gaertner Farm to the Wakefield-Davis real-estate firm and "fell back to Plan B," Owen said, buying the former Louisville Industrial School of Reform, an orphanage and reform school on Third Street. "The buildings were already there, the campus was there. They just built an administration building and moved in."

And so "University Park" was a name with no namesake. It remained that way until late 1950, when a university finally opened next door: Bellarmine College."

- 43.633777,-70.324652 09670 South Portland - Longcreek Terrace South Portland Maine 30 1944
  - “One of those housing complexes was Long Creek Terrace, a 27-acre area that is now the site of Home Depot and Home Goods. Here is some of the information from the report:
“Just a quarter of a mile from Redbank Village, Long Creek Terrace provided 500 homes for families in 74 dwelling buildings of six to eight families each. These were two-story buildings with flat roofs. There were three, four and five bedroom units, some of them furnished. Long Creek Terrace housed the families of war workers from May of 1943 until it closed in April, 1946. The Community Building contained 3,496 square feet of floor space, was constructed of cement blocks and was arranged so that rooms could be divided or combined for various activities. During its short period of use, it was a very busy place. The Administration Building adjoined the Community Building by a breezeway.”
After the war ended, in 1945, the shipyards closed and families began to move out of South Portland. At the same time, though, veterans were returning from the war to overcrowded communities and colleges, so a new use was found for the wartime housing in South Portland by moving it under the Title V program to other communities to provide housing for veterans and their families. The buildings from Long Creek Terrace were moved to Cambridge, Mass., to the University of Maine, and also some to Colby College.”

  - "Prominent landscape designers put their mark on the area as well, working on projects that sought to realize the latest trends and aesthetic ideals of their era. Holywood Cemetery, designed by Shedd & Edson civil engineers, embodied the romantic, rural cemetery in the mode of the revolutionary Mt. Auburn cemetery (1831). Frederick Law Olmsted developed a design for the Crafts Road neighborhood, however his plans were not used. Another desired landscape of the era was that of the golf course. The Chestnut Hill Golf Club and clubhouse were built in 1897, and were located where Fairway Road is today. The lands of the golf course were the last open lands developed in the area, which is reflected in the relative newness of the homes on Fairway and adjoining streets." in "Chestnut Hill" by Linda Olson Pehlke [includes 1905 graphic mapping the neighborhood for development]

- The Cambridge Housing Shortage, or, Why Has My Rent Doubled In the Past Six Years?
By KATHARINE L. DAY, January 22, 1971

“The largest (and richest) developer in Cambridge is Max Wasserman of Wasserman Development Corporation, who recently acquired the immense $51/2 million Bertha Cohen estate. He has numerous holdings in Boston and in Harvard and Putnam Squares.

Wasserman built the twin high-rise (22-story) buildings in Fresh Pond which house 500 moderate-to-low-income elderly and families. There is a waiting list for apartments in these eye-scrappers, where rent is proportionate to income and the elderly receive government subsidies. Having bought the land very cheap years ago. Wasserman profits well from the two Rindge buildings.

Although the new units do help to ease the tight housing market, less than half the residents are formerly from Cambridge, so the City's population is increased.

The Rindge buildings have problems inherent in that kind of sky-high living condition. Family units tend to become isolated from each other, and children don't come into contact with peers in the neighborhood area. They become restless, lacking direct access to the outdoors or companions. Wasserman neglected to install any sort of recreational facility which might alleviate some of the tensions of life in a non-neighborhood. The crime rate in the buildings has been very high. Another problem with Rindge is the inaccessibility of schools, which are over a mile away.”

- ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION Describe architectural, structural and landscape features and evaluate in terms of other areas within the community.

Peak Rock Farm at 156 Barney's Joy Road (DAR.38) is located on the west and east sides of the road. The house is set back from the road edge. The dwelling is located on a level grassy lawn and is bounded on three sides by stone walls. The dwelling is bounded on the north side by the gravel drive. The gravel drive splits into two drives just past the stone wall to the rear (west) of the dwelling, forming a U-shaped drive. The stone walls are a significant character defining feature of the farm, bounding not only the lawn but a kitchen garden to the rear of the dwelling and the pastures and fields on both sides of the road associated with the farm.

HISTORICAL NARRATIVE Explain historical development of the area. Discuss how this relates to the historical development of the community.

Ralph Allen of Sandwich MA was a Quaker. He was driven from the Sandwich because of his religion and settled c1633 in Dartmouth. His farm on Barney's Joy Road has been known as Barney's Joy Farm, Allen Farm, and Peak Rock Farm. It was owned for many years by his descendants. The house is across from a local landmark called Peak Rock. The rock is marked with the date 1664. In 1871 the farm was owned by GF Allen, probably Giles F Allen (1824-1901) whom married Mary Slocum. "In the early eighteenth century, this land belonged to the Slocum family. By circa 1800, the land passed [back] to the Allen family, who referred to it as the Old Slocum Homestead. The deeds to the house and property include some interesting rights: sea weed and drift privileges were reserved, and George Slocum and Gideon Smith (neighbors) had the right to take sand from the property. " (Ken Weinstein & K Fair, Dartmouth Historical Commission, 1983) By 1895 the house was owned by Henry T Allen (1862-1924) the husband of Elizabeth.

Subsequent owners include: Emily N Vanderpool (1906-1940); Floyd L Vanderpool (1940); Margaret Downs (1940-1958); Angelica Russell & Katharine Lloyd (1958-1966); Frank & Earlene Babbitt Jr (1966-1974); Harry & Kathleen VanErtfelda (1974-2006) Kathy Von Ertfelda was a classical dressage trainer; and Harry E VonErtfelda Jr (2006-2010).

In 1955 the farm was known as Peak Rock Farm and was operated as a poultry farm by Virgil N Downs." Inventory Form A Continuation Sheet, Dartmouth 156 Barney's Joy Road ; Massachusetts Historical Commission, 220 Morrissey Boulevard, Boston, Massachusetts 02125

  - The Olmsted stamp of approval?
Even those of us with no background in landscape architecture (most of us, really) know the name Olmsted, and we often associate it with the urban oasis of Central Park. In the South Coast, we have our share of Olmsted designs. Fall River has North Park, Ruggles Park, and Kennedy (formerly South) Park, while New Bedford is home to Buttonwood Park. In fact, the Olmsted name has been invoked to counter attempts by the Buttonwood Park Zoo to expand its footprint using park land.
And while the name Olmsted typically connotes some degree of reverence and appreciation, this might not always be justified. After all, the Olmsted Brothers firm lasted well beyond the team of Frederick Law , Jr. and John Charles, shuttering in 1980. So while we might associate the team with our favorite city and national parks, the firm's name is also stamped on the design of Fairfax Gardens, a Taunton, MA housing project that is being demolished through a HOPE VI grant awarded last summer. (The Urban Initiative is serving as the independent evaluator). It's certainly hard to see how a firm with such an illustrious legacy could produce this, though the era of urban renewal may have had something to do with it.

- 40.735877,-73.813709 06915 Flushing Country Club Land Company Flushing New York 1 1921
  - One plan (6915-1); shows square lot with spot “reserved for club house” in 1921
  - [bit of a red herring:] The Old Country Club was organized in 1887 – just eight years after the pioneering Myopia Club – as the Flushing Athletic Club,<sup>18</sup> making it one of the earliest such clubs in the United States.<sup>19</sup> Though not originally planned with golf in mind, the club was not immune to the attractions of the sport. In the words of the club’s 1927 Year Book: With the introduction of golf in this country, so many members became interested in the then new game, that golf soon became the principal activity. A Nine-Hole Course was constructed, and in 1902 the name was changed to The Flushing Country Club. The Flushing Country Club was not part of a specific suburban development, but it played a large role in making the surrounding area desirable for suburban homes. Its nine-hole golf course, however, soon came to seem too small. As described by the Flushing Country Club’s 1927 Year Book: Seventeen years passed, and in 1919 a majority of members banded together to form a new club on larger grounds. A handful of faithful golfers refused to leave their old course and promptly reorganized, taking the appropriate name of The Old Country Club, thus distinguishing themselves from the new club. Steps were taken in 1922 to purchase the original Nine-Hole Course and sufficient adjacent property for nine additional holes. The membership was raised to Four Hundred, and The Old Country Club Land Company, Inc., was formed to acquire the desired land. ... One year later the Eighteen-Hole Golf Course was ready. The original site on which the Flushing Country Club was built had been acquired from the Mitchell estate, a large tract of land. The land purchased in 1922 by the Old Country Club Land Company, adjoining the original club grounds, was part of the estate of Cornelia Mitchell Wickham.” Landmarks Preservation Commission, September 20, 2005; Designation List 368, LP-2160, FITZGERALD/GINSBERG MANSION, 145-15 Bayside Avenue, Queens. [showing Pomonok Country Club across from Queens College
  - The course just across the street from Queens College was called “Pomonok” – a variant spelling of the Algonquin name for Whitman’s favorite place. The course was built by members of the Flushing Athletic Club, which began in 1886 as one of the first golf clubs on Long Island. They leased 83 acres of land along Northern Boulevard in Flushing. When their lease was set to expire in 1919, some members favored finding a new, larger site that had room for an 18-hole course. Others favored renewing the lease at the original site and gradually expanding their 9-hole course. The membership ended up splitting, with the bolting members forming the Pomonok Country Club along Kissena Boulevard in 1921. [The Flushing Athletic Club did eventually expand their course to 18 holes, but the club didn’t make it past the 1920’s.] The Pomonok Country Club was famous for having female caddies and for hosting the 1939 PGA Tournament during the World’s Fair. The above photo is a shot of the 17th green with the 18th hole and clubhouse in the background. Becoming a club member in the 1920’s required one to purchase a $900 share of stock and pay an initiation fee of $250. Annual dues were $150. It’s no wonder that the surrounding neighborhood soon adopted the prestigious name of Pomonok. The Club survived until 1949 when its members made a decision to disband and sell the property.

- A fair-weather winter has gone far to hasten the construction of the new Flushing Country Club on Jamaica ave., and the work on the 18-hole golf course has progressed -with a rapidity beyond the fondest dreams of the most ardent golfer. Such miracles have already been worked with the 140-acre plot that there seems to be not the slightest doubt that the club will be formally opened on next Decoration Day. "The contractors have done such good work," said Clarence M. Lowes, the president of the club, "that we will surely open the last of May, and it is not unlikely that golfers will be playing over the course somewhat before that time. This wonderful winter weather has given us an opportunity to get ahead with our construction in a manner most unexpected." The history of the Flushing Country Club has been one of growth and expansion. Over 30 years ago, with only a handful of members and the smallest capital the Flushing Athletic Club was formed and one of the first nine-hole golf courses in America was laid out on its small property along Whitestone ave., north of Flushing. After five years the name was changed to the Flushing Country Club. A year ago, when the membership had swelled to an inconvenient size, the need for new accommodations was felt and under the leadership of Mr. Lowes a realty company was formed which bought the acreage on Jamaica ave., opposite the Parental School. The Brooklyn Daily Eagle > 1921 > February > 20 February 1921 > Page 54 <http://www.newspapers.com/newspage/55389334/>

- “Great Ideas Continue To Thrive
The first clusters of OHA houses were in an area bounded by Lombard Street, Washington Avenue, Seventh Street and Front Street. But it wasn't long before the Association purchased and renovated houses in Germantown, Kensington and Manayunk. Octavia Hill's Impact Was Quick and Positive
The Association flourished in its first 20 years and prompted the formation of a new corporation called The Philadelphia Model Homes Company. This division built 48 innovative new units in Philadelphia's Port Richmond section in 1915. These townhomes were placed around a courtyard to incorporate open green space and to ensure a feeling of community.”

EDWARD MAXWELL – BIOGRAPHY by John Bland, Professor Emeritus of Architecture, McGill University
"A diary entry for 7 January 1892 notes that Mr. and Mrs. Meredith called about a house. It materialized as a Queen Anne design in red brick with a strong feeling for materials and the crafts. Nothing quite like it had been seen in Montreal. Moreover, the house had an unusual site facing north well below street level yet with a spectacular exposure to sun and view at the rear. He handled these circumstances skilfully and with the help of the younger Olmsted, a familiar collaborator in the office of his former employers, produced a setting of extraordinary naturalness." <http://cac.mcgill.ca/maxwells/edbio2.htm>

- o "Counted among Richland-West End's early residents are Benton McMillin, governor of Tennessee from 1899 to 1903, Hilary Howse, Nashville mayor from 1909 to 1915, an attorney general, several legislators, professional baseball players, and numerous business people (including a World War I mule trader who made his fortune selling mules to the Army and a bootlegger who made his fortune selling spirits to politicians). Often several members of a family bought adjoining lots. Children in the neighborhood were assigned to county schools but could pay tuition to attend Nashville's public schools. During World War I, troop trains would back up along the L&N Railroad tracks for hours; hospitable residents would offer the young recruits food and drink. Coon hunts occurred on the property of B.F. Wilson (where Westminster Church is now located) well into the 1920s. According to a resident who has lived here some sixty years, this was a neighborhood "where people talked to each other, not about each other."

- o Neighborhood history

Today's Cherokee Park neighborhood began to take shape when prospering downtown Nashville created the need — and new technologies such as electric streetcars and automobiles created the means — for suburban development. Located southwest of West End Avenue, Cherokee Park is adjacent to the Richland / West End neighborhood, which was developed beginning in 1905 by the Richland Realty Company. In the 1920s, Nashville's city limits were expanded to include land upon which the neighborhood was developed. Cherokee Park was surveyed in April 1928 and included lots fronting on Wilson Boulevard, Cambridge Avenue, Aberdeen Road, Cherokee Road, Lauderdale Road, Mayfair Road, Mockingbird Road, and Valley Road. The subdivision was developed by Wakefield-Davis Realty Company of Louisville, Kentucky, and original plats were filed in May 1928, making Cherokee Park Nashville's first suburban subdivision. <http://www.cherokeepark.org/about>

- o William and Michael Hogg, the sons of former Texas Governor Jim Hogg, and attorney Hugh Potter established River Oaks in the 1920s.[1] Potter obtained an option to purchase 200 acres (81 ha) around the River Oaks Country Club in 1923, and in the following year William Hogg established the Country Club Estates in order to support the development of the community.[4] The two brothers promoted the sale of lots in the subdivision for $2,200 apiece in 1928.[5] The brothers, along with sister Ima Hogg, oversaw the construction of Bayou Bend, a stately southern-style home on the banks of Buffalo Bayou.

The development plans ensured that River Oaks's parks and esplanades were planted with oaks, shrubs, azaleas and other flowers. Every detail of the development was planned to establish a well-integrated community.[6] Advertised as a "distinguished experiment in fine living," River Oaks became a national model for community planning.[7] River Oaks' planning standards, residential architecture, and landscape design were publicized during the 1920s and 1930s in national newspapers, real estate media and design journals.[8] Deed restrictions at the time restricted home prices to over $7,000 and specified architectural styles, with a gentlemen's agreement excluding blacks, Jews, and other minorities.[1] Homes along Kirby Drive were restricted to American Colonial or English Tudor style architecture.[5]

During the 1920s, River Oaks was so effectively organized, planned and restricted that it became the most expensive neighborhood in Houston.[10] The City of Houston annexed the community in 1927, adding 3,465 acres (1,402 ha) of land to the city limits.[11] Bus service to Downtown Houston opened during the same year. After World War II, as Houston experienced its greatest growth, River Oaks became a haven for the wealthy of the city.[12][13]

River Oaks has been the subject matter of scholarly studies, primarily because its significant contributions to Houston's history and development as an elite suburban community

The three-story Miller Building at 184 North St. is scheduled to be sold to a group of Pittsfield businessmen for approximately $475,000, it was disclosed today.
This is the second major North Street structure to change hands within a month...Walter M. Johnson III, vice president of the Berkshire Bank & Trust Co. is president of the group buying the structure under the name North Eagle Realty Corp. The sellers are the trustees of the Miller Buildings Realty Trust. ...Johnson said that he will act as manager of the building for the new owners...The present building which extends half the block between Eagle and Fenn streets was constructed in 1912 to replace the original Miller Building which was destroyed that year when the Academy of Music building and neighboring structures were leveled by one of the worst fires in the history of Pittsfield." Berkshire Eagle, June 26, 1973

- o From NMH Archivist Peter Weis '78, P '13:

Northfield Mount Hermon was different from other private schools from the beginning, and we carry on our distinctions and traditions with pride. Founded by celebrated 19th-century evangelist Dwight Lyman Moody as two institutions (Northfield Seminary for Young Ladies in 1879 and Mount Hermon School for Boys in 1881), the schools aimed to educate young people who had limited access to education because they were poor. Moody hoped to create generations of committed Christians who would continue his evangelical efforts.

While the Bible was the primary tool for instruction in the early days, the institutions were never dogmatic. Religious instruction was accompanied by a challenging academic program similar to that of other private secondary schools of the era.

Another factor that distinguished the schools (and continues to do so today) was the manual labor required of all students. At Northfield, girls worked 10 hours per week, helping with meals or cleaning dormitories. At Mount Hermon, boys performed janitorial, laundry, kitchen, and farm work. The work requirement has shrunk over the years (it is now four hours per week); while students still help in the dining hall and on NMH's farm, they also work in the library and in computer labs or give tours of campus.

Moody's commitment to providing education to those who had been systematically denied it produced remarkable diversity among students. The schools matriculated students from all races and ethnicities: 16 Native Americans were among the first 100 students at Northfield, and Mount Hermon's first graduates included a former slave as well as students from China, Sweden, England, Ireland, Canada, and Japan. NMH maintains a commitment to diversity: Today, students of color make up 18 percent of our student body and 25 percent are from other countries.

After Moody's death in 1899, his eldest son, William, continued his father's work at the schools. The younger Moody pushed for consolidating the two schools into a single corporation called the Northfield Schools. Throughout the 20th century, a new Christian view was taking hold, stressing social justice and good works in place of personal salvation. From the 1940s on, the schools worked to overcome educational inequalities, first establishing a relationship with the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students. In 1962, A Better Chance, now a national program, was born as Northfield and Mount Hermon leaders worked to find opportunities for students of color. A 40-year relationship with Upward Bound also serves as testament to this commitment to opportunity education.

In 1971, Northfield and Mount Hermon became a single coeducational school. The school consolidated to the Mount Hermon campus in September 2005, and the Northfield campus was sold in 2009.

At that point, the Wrights turned from experimentation, and from 1906 to 1908, they concentrated on patenting and marketing their invention. In 1910, they once again returned to the Huffman property to open a flight school. Lieutenant Henry "Hap" Arnold, who later became commanding general of the U.S. Army Air Forces in World War II, was just one of the renowned pilots who trained at the Wright School of Aviation. Even though the school closed in 1916, the property retained its link to aviation; in 1917, it was subsumed into one of the military antecedents of Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. It lies today at the end of the base's flight lines. The air above is often filled with planes ascending and landing, a frequent reminder of Wilbur and Orville Wright's contribution to modern aviation.

<http://npshistory.com/newsletters/crm/crm-v23n2.pdf>

In 1916, about one year after Orville Wright sold the Wright Company, the flight school at Huffman Field closed. In 1917, Huffman Prairie became part of Wilbur Wright Field which was established to train Army pilots, armorers, and aircraft mechanics for World War I. Huffman Prairie is still associated with the field of aviation, being a part of Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

- The University of Dayton's history is one of perseverance, tenacity, ingenuity and transformation. The school began with an act of faith more than 150 years ago.

In the middle of a cholera epidemic, the Bishop of Cincinnati sent Father Leo Meyer, S.M., to minister to the sick at Emmanuel parish in Dayton. Here, he met John Stuart, whose little daughter died of cholera the year before. Mr. Stuart wanted to sell his Dayton property and return with his wife to Europe. Father Meyer gave him a medal of St. Joseph and a promise of $12,000 in return for Dewberry Farm — 125 acres of vineyards, orchards, a mansion and farm buildings.

On July 1, 1850, St. Mary's School for Boys, a frame building that not long before had housed farm hands, opened its doors to 14 primary students from Dayton. Known at various times as St. Mary's School, St. Mary's Institute and St. Mary's College, the school assumed its present identity in 1920.

Today, the University of Dayton is recognized as a top-tier national research university.

  - “By the 1920's Laurel had become the "number one industrial town in the state of Mississippi and was later called the "yellow pine " capital of the world. Between 1920 and 1925, Laurel's population grew 32 percent, and the school-aged population grew 27 percent. Laurel approached the 19,000 residents mark. Plans to solve overcrowding problems resulted in the St. Elmo Church Library Project, completed 1922 as Southside School. A second plan resulted in the building of the Southside School #2. This institution became the Sandy Gavin School and began operating in 1925. The project solved a smaller problem, but the black community was still in need of a high school. By 1925 there was on going confusion between the whites and the now well-defined black middle class. The interaction between the two, although there was disagreement, was always respectful. The two groups agreed first on the establishment of the Queensburg Academy for Colored Students. Queensburg was built in 1925, and later became Oak Park Vocational High school. The Oak Park Vocational High School, under the supervision and jurisdiction of the Laurel City School System, opened in September, 1928. Oak Park consisted of 325 students and 10 teachers. A board of trustees controlled the grounds on which the school was built. Funds were put aside for the school's support system. J. E. Johnson became principal and was later assisted by J. H. Mosley (Oak Park Story 7-13)” <http://www.mswritersandmusicians.com/writers/cleveland-payne.html>
  - “Private donors and municipal funding converged again in 1927 to create the Oak Park Vocational School for Blacks. The building received financing through the implementation of a twenty-five thousand dollar bond issue, while private funds donated the two hundred and thirty nine acres that encompassed the school’s campus. The school consisted of a manual arts building, a home economics building, and a large area for agricultural production. The campus also contained housing for the principal and faculty. Though centered around agricultural and service industry trades, Laurel’s Oak Park Vocational school became the State of Mississippi’s first municipally maintained agricultural and vocational school for blacks.” Laurel, Mississippi: A Historical Perspective. David Stanton Key, East Tennessee State University, A thesis presented to the faculty of the Department of History East Tennessee State University , December 2001 <http://dc.etsu.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1171&context=etd>
  - “In 1928, Oak Park Vocational High School opened its doors, attracting and paying for the best black teaching talent from around the country. Under the label “vocational” it became the center of a conspiracy that operated under the radar of Jim Crow. The school was shaped to a large degree by a proud, strong-willed black middle-class, unwilling to let segregation and discrimination deprive their children of a splendid future. Their “vocational school” conspiracy launched surgeons, lawyers, political scientists, college professors, star athletes, Army generals, concert pianists, and yes, operatic superstars. Oak Park was one of the few black schools in the South that when it closed its doors in order to integrate into the white schools, the community felt like they might be coming-down in the world.” <http://jon-odell.com/blog/publications/selections-from-the-award-winning-column-series-city-beautiful/city-in-a-bubble/>
  - "Oak Park Vocational High School, located at this site, opened in September, 1928. Based on the pattern of Tuskegee Institute, the school provided academic, vocational, and agricultural education to African American students, and included faculty housing and dormitories. Among the school's graduates are Ralph Boston, an Olympic gold medalist in the long jump, and world-renowned opera singer Leontyne Price. A fire destroyed most of the school complex in 1957. A new Oak Park High School building was constructed the following year." (and many photos courtesy of the National Oak Park HS Alumni Association)

- North High School was a public high school located on the north side of Columbus, Ohio at 100 Arcadia Avenue. It was a part of the then Columbus Public School district, now Columbus City Schools. It was closed in June 1979 due to declining enrollment.
In December 1921, the Columbus Board of Education purchased a thirteen-acre tract of land on Arcadia Ave., which included the old Columbus Sewer Pipe Factory, for $39,000. Famed architect, Frank L. Packard designed the building, of Tudor Revival architecture, costing approximately $1,000,000. Construction began in 1923 and the building opened on September 2, 1924. It graduated its first class in January 1925.[2]
After North High School was closed, it was later turned into an adult education center, which ended after the 2005-2006 school year. Starting the 2006-2007 school year it was reopened as a high school, this time as a temporary location for other high schools in the district while they were being renovated. From August 2006 until December 2008 the old North building was used by East High School as a remote school site while East was being completely renovated. East returned to their own building in January 2009. Beginning August 2009 Linden-McKinley High School took residence while their building was renovated. Columbus North International School is now located permanently at the old North High School building.

  - "Good Samaritan Foundation, Inc.: Good Samaritan began serving health-care needs in Central and Southeastern Kentucky, with regard to race, creed, or economic condition, more than 100 years ago. Good Samaritan Hospital of Lexington, Kentucky, traces its origin to the Protestant Infirmary located on East Front Street just west of the present-day Rose Street extension. The infirmary was established by the Womens Guild at Christ Church Episcopal in 1888, and began its service to the community with separate wards and facilities for men and women.
In 1890 the Infirmary Board announced its plan for a "regular training school for nurses". The first class of new nurses, four young women graduated in 1893...Changes, which were brought about in 1889, continued the spirit of adaptation to community needs. Growth of the infirmary meant a need for broader community support. In January 1899, a new corporation was formed, the Good Samaritan Hospital, with a board of trustees composed of representatives from six local protestant, including the original Christ Church. The Women's Guild transferred the land and Infirmary to the new community-based corporation and it began operating under the name "Good Samaritan." In 1906, the board was expanded to include representatives from the Jewish and two additional Protestant congregations.
The hospital continued to grow, and between 1905 and 1907 land was purchased on South Limestone and a new facility erected for the hospital and nursing school. The Short Street property was sold in 1906."

- o "DR. NADEAU BECOMES DIRECTOR OF HOUSING IN QUEBEC.

Dr. Emile Nadeau has been appointed Director of Housing for the Province of Quebec, which on March i/th sanctioned an act by which the Province will take advantage of the Federal loan for housing purposes. The portion of the Federal loan allotted to the Province of Quebec will total about $7,000,000. It is Dr. Nadeau's purpose to have it used if possible for the promotion of 6 or 7 small model developments in different parts of the Province as object lessons with a view to inducing the Government to put up more money at a still lower rate of interest.

The press of the Province hails the appointment of Dr. Nadeau as an indication that "the Provincial Government intends to embark on a real better-housing program/'

"In the appointment of Dr. Nadeau of Quebec as Director of Housing for the Province," says the Canadian Municipal Journal, "the Government of Quebec has given tangible evidence of its keen interest in the housing problem of the workers. For many years Dr. Nadeau has preached the gospel of better housing in the city of Quebec, and because of his studies of the housing schemes of Europe and the United States on the spot, he spoke with authority.

While essentially an idealist, the doctor has never lost sight of the practical side of housing, and just before the war broke out he had partially launched in the vicinity of Quebec a scheme for work-men's dwellings which would have done much to solve the present problem of housing in that district." p.32-33, Housing, Volumes 7-8 National Housing Association., 1918

- “De Emile Nadeau Quebec Sanitary Housing Company Quebec Canada: Some people seem to think that cooperation is a failure. I would like to give you some figures concerning co operation in England. In 1910 the wholesale co operative stores in England sold goods for a total amount of $555,000,000. Out of these $555,000,000, $60,000,000 was profit. Now that profit of $60,000,000 instead of going into the pockets of five six or seven or eight individuals has gone into the hands of 2,129,000 co operators. The housing business conducted in England on the co operative plan has also been a success. The Quebec Housing Company is going to be a cooperative company. The tenants will have to take five shares of our stock. The shares are $50 each and they pay for them any way they like: $2, $3, $4, $5 a month. When they have paid for their shares if a man is out of employment or sickness occurs in the family or he is sick himself and cannot pay his rent then the company takes enough out of those shares to pay the rent until the tenant is able to resume payment. I think it is a far better plan than for a man to try to buy a house and fail. I have given lectures to our people in Quebec re sanitary housing. They had not heard much about it before. We had slides of Port Sunlight and Bournville of Hampstead and Letchworth and of a mining village in France. I had some slides also that were made from illustrations from a report published by the Medical Health Officer of Toronto. The Quebec people started to laugh when they saw the slides showing the slums of Toronto. I told them not to laugh that I would come next with slides showing the slums of Quebec. I came along with 18 slides of Quebec. Quebec would have been a very good city to live in if it had been kept the way God made it but it has been spoiled by man. We have slums in Quebec. We are not ashamed of them because we are going to clean them up I hope.” p.115, Proceedings of the National Housing Association National Housing Association, 1913

- "Historic: Lansford makes national list" BY TOM RAGAN (STAFF WRITER) Published: September 26, 2012
“...He explained that Lansford had to hire a consultant to prepare the official nomination document for historical places. The nomination requires an explanation of the history and architecture of what remains today, accompanied by photographs, along with research on the period it covers, in this case from 1870 to 1954.
"All the deep mines went out of business in 1954," Freudenberger said.
Lansford evolved into a shopping district hub, he said, but there were remnants of the coal industry.
"The coal company built a facility at Edgemont for corporate events and a community swimming pool that still stands today," he said.
The miners also built a hospital for their families that is now St. Luke's Hospital - Miners Campus in Coaldale.

The coal companies built structures throughout Lansford, including a huge silk mill with significant architecture that shows the wealth in the area at one time. Smaller "patch towns" also were established."

- St. Luke's-Miners Campus demolishes nurses' building BY SHAWN KELLMER (STAFF WRITER)
Published: March 8, 2013

"St. Luke's Hospital-Miners Campus is demolishing the vacant nurses' building on its property in Coaldale. The decision was made to demolish the building after it was deemed too costly to renovate according to hospital officials.

The hospital began in 1910 as Panther Creek Valley Hospital which was exclusively for the care and treatment of the coal miners in the area and eventually became part of the state hospital system. As part of the state system they offered care to anyone in the area."

- Lake Wales Medical Center is a hospital in Lake Wales, Florida. It is owned by health care provider Community Health Systems. Lake Wales Medical Center's main building is a general use hospital that includes an emergency department, an intensive care unit and various outpatient services. Nearby, at 1120 Carlton Avenue, Suite 1300, is the hospital Neurodiagnostic and Sleep Center.[1]
History[edit]
The first hospital building was built in 1930 at the site of the current emergency department. It was a community-owned hospital that expanded its facilities over the years. An expansion included the Deeley Hunt Building, which housed a nursing home. In 1997 Mid-Florida Medical Services, the parent company of Winter Haven Hospital, owned Lake Wales Medical Center. In 2003 it was purchased by Community

Health Systems (CHS). Since CHS obtained the property, the nursing home was closed and used as patient rooms and offices. Also, the original building was demolished and a new emergency department was built on the original hospital site.   - Potentially Twilight Park, then 42.190961,-74.088623
Resort Is 100 (But Keep It Quiet) By CONSTANCE L. HAYS Published: June 27, 1988
For all of its hundred years, Twilight Park, a resort that clings to a rocky mountainside near this village in the Catskills, has kept quietly to itself.
Now, though, "the park," as everyone here calls it, is preparing to step out. New begonias have been planted in a "1888-1988" configuration just inside the entrance to the resort. A time capsule containing written reminiscences, a commemorative poster and a videotape of events planned to mark the centennial will be buried beside the All Angels Episcopal Church, where most of the summer residents - known as cottagers - worship, regardless of denomination. There are even special tennis balls and book bags with the centennial dates printed on them.

But make no mistake; Twilight Park remains fiercely committed to the principles upon which it was founded, one of the most emphatic of which is privacy. The centennial events, which include a community picnic next weekend for cottagers as well as townspeople outside the resort, are by invitation only. "It is kind of a secret place," said Bruce Dayton, president of the board of directors, who has been summering here for 42 years.

The resort, lying about 100 miles north of Manhattan in Greene County, began as an extension of a private Manhattan men's club. The Twilight Club, so named because its members met at dusk for stimulating conversation over 13-course dinners and cigars, was founded in 1883 by Charles F. Wingate, a sanitation engineer. In 1887, according to a historical account written by several park residents, Mr. Wingate was summering at a now-defunct Catskills hotel when he asked the hotel's owner, a man called "Christian Charlie" Haines, about local land prices. Teetotaling Namesake

Mr. Wingate, according to the history, promptly paid $10 an acre for 160 acres of a treeless sheep meadow owned by Mr. Haines, whose name reflected his teetotalism and whose terms of sale included the condition that no alcohol ever be consumed on the sheep meadow. (That stipulation has come to be ignored.) Within a year there were 75 houses built, several by members of the Twilight Club. The resort was incorporated as a not-for-profit entity, and its own water tanks and sewer system were built.

- Referring to the early history of Twilight Park, Mr. Wingate said "I came to the Catskills by mere chance in 1888 but with a "park project" clearly elaborated in my mind. I had planned a similar scheme for another locality, but did not secure the start I was after. In a very short time after my arrival at Haines Falls, I decided to buy a large tract of woodland and pasture and lay out a park. The admirable situation of the ground, the picturesque beauty of the scene, the noble forest trees, abundant waterfalls, to say nothing of natural drainage all combined to satisfy my judgment that here was the ideal spot for a cottage community." from "Twilight Park" in The Office, September, 1891

- "The Cantonment Division consisted of four general divisions headed by Colonel Issac W. Littell. Among prominent architects to volunteer their services after war had been declared, William A. Starrett, President of Starrett & Van Vleck, Architects of New York City, was asked to head the Committee on Emergency Construction. Littell's board, also known as the Starrett Committee, included many prominent leaders from the design and construction professions. Landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted, Jr., President of the National Conference on City Planning, was asked to be a member, along with Leonard Metcalf, a leading designer of water and sewerage systems, and two outstanding consulting engineers, George W. Fuller and Asa E. Phillips. In addition, architect and planner George B. Ford and other members of the National Council on City Planning, the American Institute of Architects, and the American Society of Landscape Architects acted as advisors to the Army and applied the principles of city planning to military needs.

Responding to the Army's concern of avoiding the outbreak of sickness that occurred in the Spanish-American War, Olmsted's primary concern was to "properly plan the water supply and sewage arrangements, and certain other features of the general layout for the cantonments of the health of the troops and the general efficiency of the work. [note 58] He recommended that site selection and plans for each individual site be done by a city planner, a water and sewer engineer, and an Army officer charged with construction. These design professionals were to "select sites and prepare plans for the individual sites to be entrusted to three experts for each site,"" Olmsted expressed surprise that the Army had no housing or site plans except standardized plans for officer's housing from the 1890s.

Historic Kessingen Spring County: Polk
Year: 2011
Address: Mosaic Peace River Park
Description:
Historic Kissengen Spring is located approximately one mile north of this location. At one time the spring discharged up to 20 million gallons of water a day into the Peace River. The spring's pool was 200 feet in diameter and reached a depth of 17 feet above the spring vent. Its boil reportedly was so powerful that the strongest swimmer could not reach it. Archaeological evidence shows this area of the Peace River was inhabited by Native Americans who established large villages near the river's springs. In the late 1800s developers sought to acquire the spring as a resort destination and sanatorium. Although plans for rail lines, trolleys, and boats never were realized to exploit the spring for tourism, a dance floor, dive platform, and bathhouses were built, and thousands of locals and tourists visited over 75 years. In the 1930s the popular spring was the site of major political rallies. During World War II, it served as a rest and recuperation resort for members of the military based near Bartow. The spring ceased to be a tourist destination after its groundwater was captured for other uses.]

The James B. The hospital, formerly named Mercer General Hospital, opened at its present location in 1949. The name of the hospital changed from the Mercer County General Hospital to the James B. Haggin Memorial Hospital in 1953. This change was made in honor of James B. - The three available sets of meeting minutes of this committee show slow progress overall in developing the Medical Center due to the lack of funds by the hospitals and the University of Louisville financial shortfall made it difficult to proceed with land condemnation, land clearing, and construction. There was also an inconsistency in the scheduling of meetings. In meeting #3 (March 19, 1946), there was an early start in the economic analysis and specific discussion about land acquisition through the University of Louisville's statutory power of condemnation 106 to "to extend the usefulness of the University." But again, the University of Louisville was in no position to make the necessary financial outlay (President's Office files 1929-1971, University Archives and Records Center, University of Louisville). A year and a half later in meeting #6 (September 18, 1947) the minutes contain a statement by committee chairman Morton Boyd that none of the hospitals had actually decided yet whether they wanted to form a medical center. The Evangelical and Reformed denominational group was bogged down by a lack of funds while the Methodist group (planning to replace the old Deaconess Hospital) wanted to put their new facility on the old "Claggett Estate" in the south Highlands area of Louisville.   - The Carmelites Mark Their 57th Year in New York City
The April 15, 1946 New York Times noted the 57th anniversary of the Carmelite priests in New York. Known as the White Friars, the order was best known for ministering to patients at Bellevue Hospital, which lay in their East Side parish. The order had ten priests in Manhattan then, who lived in a priory at East 28th Street. While their actual anniversary was this week, it would be celebrated with a fundraiser featuring Irish folklore and music at the Manhattan Center on May 3. Mayor O'Dwyer was the honorary chairman.
The Irish order of the Carmelites came to the city in 1889. According to a story that appeared in The Times in 2007, the New York archdiocese had invited the Carmelites to the city at least in part to help quiet an uproar among Irish working class immigrants after a popular priest, Dr. Edward McGlynn, was excommunicated. He had been admonished for openly supporting Henry George, the Socialist candidate for mayor, and then excommunicated for failing to obey Vatican orders. He would later be reinstated to the priesthood. McGlynn was well-known in the city in the decades after the Civil War for his charitable work, his large and prosperous congregation and, at a time of religious hostilities, for his cordial relationships with the city's Protestant clergy. His church, St. Stephen's, a Romanesque Revival edifice on 29th Street near Lexington, had been designed by James Renwick Jr., architect of St. Patrick's Cathedral. and was in the mid-19th century, before the cathedral was opened, the most prominent Catholic church in Manhattan with a mostly Irish congregation that included both affluent and working class members.

The Carmelites held their first mass in a tobacco factory near 28th Street and First Avenue but soon were given a church in the Country Gothic style, Our Lady of the Scapular, at 338 East 28th Street between First and Second Avenue, not far from St. Stephen's. The Carmelite parish ran from 24th to 32nd Streets and from Second Avenue to the East River, while St. Stephen's retained the more prosperous neighborhood to the west. Second Avenue long was the dividing line between the working and middle class on the East Side of Manhattan. According to The Times, in 1946 Our Lady of the Scapular was one of the smallest and poorest parishes in the city but it also encompassed Bellevue Hospital, which became the order's primary mission. Our Lady of the Scapular was also the only Carmelite church in Manhattan.

The Times story in 2007 noted the active role the Carmelites in New York took in sheltering Irish revolutionaries. including Eamon de Valera, early in the 20th century. They also stored a cache of submachine guns in the priory. The weapons, wrapped in burlap bags, were seized by federal authorities after being smuggled to a steamship in Hoboken in 1921 for shipment to Ireland.

Our Lady of the Scapular was torn down in the 1980s when the parish was merged with St. Stephen's. The Carmelites were put in charge of the merged parish. In 2007, Cardinal Egan evicted them from their church and priory, which meant the loss of their chaplaincy at Bellevue. It was not an entirely amicable parting. At the same time, the Archdiocese also closed the nearby Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary church on East 33rd Street, merging it with St. Stephen's, maintaining a chapel at the 33rd Street site. Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary had been established in 1915 to minister to the largely Italian neighborhood above 32nd Street on the East Side.

Two of the five Carmelites who lived at the 28th Street priory were reassigned in 2007 to St. John the Martyr parish on East 72nd Street. That congregation had moved into a former Presbyterian church in 1904 and served a predominantly Bohemian congregation until the postwar period. In 1946, this neighborhood still was mostly tenement buildings and part of the ethnic melange of Yorkville.

- o Carmelites Displaced in NYC, Ministry at Bellevue Ends

The Carmelites first lived in and staffed Our Lady of the Scapular Parish, which was located on 28th Street between First and Second Avenues. Since the beginning, the Carmelites have provided Catholic chaplains for Bellevue Hospital – the oldest public hospital in the United States and one of the busiest in the City of New York.

In the early 1980s, the decision was made to combine Our Lady of the Scapular with St. Stephen's Parish on 29th Street off Lexington Avenue. The Carmelites then continued to serve at the newly created parish of Our Lady of the Scapular-St. Stephen's. Eventually, the old Our Lady of the Scapular was torn down and the land sold for development. Much of the funds from this sale of land went toward needed repairs and renovation at the newly created parish and toward maintaining the ministry there over the years.

- North Idaho Parks, Part 2, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 2010
 Located on the north shore of Lake Coeur d'Alene and just a block from downtown, the Coeur d'Alene City Park is one of the most popular parks in North Idaho. How the park came about is another interesting piece of local history.
 Much of the land now considered City Park, North Idaho College and the Fort Grounds residential neighborhood were in the boundaries of Fort Coeur d'Alene, later know as Fort Sherman. The fort was active from 1878 to 1898 and the town and later City of Coeur d'Alene built around it. By the turn of the century the fort was decommissioned and officially closed on March 9, 1900. Not long after that the land was auctioned off to the public.
 One of the biggest local investors was wealthy lumberman Frederick Blackwell who came here in 1901.
 Blackwell and his partners built the Coeur d'Alene and Spokane Electric Railroad and started hourly trolley service between the cities in 1903. Like all good railroads, they built and promoted attractions to put passengers on the trains. By 1905 Blackwell Park had become 20 plus landscaped acres with walkways, fountains, flowers and over 250 different varieties of shade trees and was one of the most popular destinations of the Inland Northwest. A dance pavilion hosted a band five nights a week, and there was a baseball diamond, bath house and grandstand within the park. In 1909 a fatal head-on train wreck brought financial ruin and the rail line was sold to the Great Northern and the park to the City of Coeur d'Alene.
 In 1937 a Civic Center was built to replace the pavilion and was touted as one of the largest log structures in the Pacific Northwest. Between bleachers and floor seating, the building could house 2,500 people. In 1942, after the construction of Farragut Naval Training Center, the building became a USO where thousands of sailors relaxed and were entertained. In 1945 it was set afire by a disgruntled (drunk?) sailor and burnt to the ground. <http://fyinorthidaho.blogspot.com/2010/04/north-idaho-parks-part-2.html>

    - The Newport Art Museum & Art Association is one of the oldest continuously operating organizations of its kind in the country. A group of community-minded artists and intellectuals, spurred on by activist and Pulitzer prize-winning author Maud Howe Elliott (1854-1948), founded the organization as the Art Association of Newport (AAN) in June 1912 for "the cultivation of artistic endeavor and interest amongst the citizens of Newport." A new charter adopted in 1915 expanded the AAN's mission to encompass all the arts, art education and the establishment of a public art museum.

The Association held its first exhibition in June 1912 and incorporated an art school in 1913. After purchasing the John N. A. Griswold House on Bellevue Avenue in 1915, the organization moved into the house in 1916.

To honor artist Howard Gardiner Cushing, an early member of the AAN, the Association erected the Cushing Gallery in 1920. In 1998 the art school became the Minnie and Jimmy Coleman Center for Creative Studies, and moved from Griswold House to the newly acquired Gilbert S. Kahn Building, completing the organization's three-building campus. The Association became the Newport Art Museum & Art Association in 1984.

- Arthur Gerrish Cummer

Birth: Oct. 10, 1873 Death: Jan. 2, 1943

The Cummer Museum of Art & Gardens is the culmination of the civic, social, and business involvement of a remarkable family. The Cummers came from a long line of lumber barons, whose business interests began in Canada before branching out to Michigan, Virginia, and Florida. As early as 1890, Wellington Willson Cummer (1846-1909) recognized the value of Florida cypress and prolific stands of pine timberlands in the state. After relocating his family from Morley, Michigan, to Jacksonville, Florida, he went on to found the Cummer Lumber Company in 1896. Among his many feats, Wellington built a railroad for transporting lumber from the low country of Florida to Jacksonville, where the mills and distribution centers were located. His sons, Arthur Cummer and Waldo Cummer, along with his son-in-law, John L. Roe, all of whom came up through the ranks in the family business, assumed control of the company after Wellington's death in 1909.

The elder of Wellington's sons, Arthur Gerrish Cummer (1873-1943) attended the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. While there he met Ninah May Holden (1875-1958), a bright and energetic young woman who hailed from Michigan City, Indiana. Ninah was one of the few women attending the University of Michigan where she studied languages. After graduation from the university in 1895, Ninah taught Greek and Latin at Michigan City High School. Following their marriage in 1897, the newlyweds joined Arthur's parents in Jacksonville, by then the center of the family's thriving lumber business, where they were quickly folded into the close-knit family compound.

  - Camden Village Green
After a fire destroyed a summer hotel with sweeping views of Camden Harbor, a group of patrons led by Mary Louise Curtis Bok purchased the one-half acre site and hired Olmsted Brothers to design a village green. Frederick Law Olmsted, Jr. completed the design and Leon H. Zach was the site inspector. Olmsted, Jr. considered Bok's request for a simple, unadorned place, while also addressing the awkward topography and lack of trees. He suggested re-grading the site to create a longer sweep of lawn visible from downtown, along with planting trees and shrubs of varying heights to screen neighboring buildings. He specified a simple border fence of wooden rails set into rough-cut granite posts. The town followed much of Olmsted Jr.'s plan, but altered the plantings and installed a more formal fence of smooth-cut granite posts and heavy iron chains.
Years later, citizens asked for a memorial to World War II soldiers. Despite her own reservations but in deference to the community, Bok hired Olmsted Brothers to design a memorial flagpole which remains on the site today. The village green is listed on the National Register of Historic Places as a contributing resource to the Chestnut Street Historic District.

  - Village Green
The Village Green, at the corner of Chestnut and Elm Streets is a 0.86-acre lot that serves as in-town open space. The Green is an important visual element in the character of downtown Camden. With its memorial flagpole, it is also a historically significant, landscape, designed by the Olmsted Brothers.

Harvard St., Ayer, Massachusetts, 01432
The lot is situated in Woodlawn Cemetery, Section 1, lots 195, 203, 206 and 211. Ayer, Massachusetts is near Fort Devens. The lots were purchased from Woodlawn Cemetery in 1918 and cover 1,056 square feet. The majority of the 52 men interred in the soldiers' lot died at Fort Devens in 1918. The last interment was made in 1931. In 1937, it was strongly recommended that the remains be removed to the Fort Devens post cemetery, but no action was taken. All deceased are known and their graves are marked by government headstones." p.325, American Military Cemeteries, 2d ed. Dean W. Holt, McFarland, 2010

  - "Oral History: Janice Murray

So they bought a house up on Moss Hill, off of Pond Street. I just drove through the neighborhood, and I think right now the school at the end of the street is called the Showa Institute. I went to part of my grade school in that school. It was owned by the Archdiocese of Boston when I was a kid. It was called Holy Childhood; it was an orphanage for Catholic kids called Nazareth, run by the Sisters of Charity. So we moved up to Moss Hill. My father passed away about 13 years ago. My mother held onto the house for awhile but it got to be too much for her and she sold it.

I went to kindergarten at the J.P. Manning School which is located behind the Faulkner Hospital. That school was built, I believe, for the politicians and for the lawyers and all, for the people up in the Moss Hill area. The school was built with political money, so that their kids could have a school up there. Off we went to the J.P. Manning School and I hated attending school there. I didn't care for the kids. [chuckles] So I only stayed at the Manning School a couple of years and then I ended up going to Holy Childhood which was at the bottom of the street I grew up on. I grew up on a street that is parallel to Pond called Woodland Road. "<http://www.jphs.org/people/2005/4/14/oral-history-janice-murray.html>

As was fashionable in the late 19th and earlier 20th century, several Pittsfield families commissioned landscape gardeners and architects to design plots to inter multiple family members. Prominent among these is the Merle D. Graves Plot, designed in 1927 by the Olmsted Brothers, landscape architects of Brookline, Massachusetts. Located on the north side of Evergreen Slope, this intimate plot is rimmed on its backside by barberry and yew shrubs, and shaded by an apple tree. Clematis and ferns grow in and amongst the several individual grave markers.”

  - "If you are ever in Stockbridge, MA, don't fail to tour his "summer cottage" there. It is called Naumkeag. It has been featured in magazines, and the lovely grounds have been on the Victory Garden program on Public Television. Truly a wonderful place to visit.
While there go to the cemetery that borders the back of the property. Joseph and his family are buried in a plot known as a "pie". It is a smaller version of the Sedgewick Pie, also in that cemetery. The first of many generations of Sedgewicks are buried in the center of the plot, with their children buried in a circle around them, all facing the parents. Several succeeding circles are descendants of the first generation. What an interesting place! They are all buried (in their night clothes) in plain caskets that are lined with their own sheets, and they are resting on their own pillows. They believe that when Christ comes again and the dead are raised, that the first people they see will be their relatives -- and God.

The Choate plot isn't so elaborate because of their four children, only one married and had children, so there is only one circle." <http://archiver.rootsweb.ancestry.com/th/read/CHOATE/1999-09/0936632580>

  - Mount Calvary Cemetery was founded as United German & French Roman Catholic Cemetery in 1859, changing its name in 1982. The cemetery property known as Mount Calvary is located at the north end of Pine Ridge Road. The first burial in the grounds was 1925. The corporation's office is located here. Ridge Lawn Cemetery a non-sectarian cemetery incorporated in 1897 became part of the Mount Calvary Cemetery Group in 1984. The entrance way off Harlem Road brings you to the Stonehenge Memorial a unique and lasting tribute built with stones from the Welland Canal creating a tranquil setting as a final resting place.

United German & French Roman Catholic Cemetery was founded in 1859 by representatives of six Roman Catholic parishes in the city of Buffalo. Our founding name is now used to refer to our first & oldest cemetery.

At the turn of the century, Buffalo Cemetery was relocated to Pine Ridge Road from North Street in Buffalo. The North St. property was sold to build an armory. Those buried there were transferred to other cemeteries of the family's choice. If no one chose for the family and they were non-Catholic, they were transferred to Buffalo Cemetery on Pine Ridge Road. If the deceased were Catholic, they were transferred to United German and French Roman Catholic Cemetery. Most of the reinterments took place in 1901. Mount Calvary took control of the operation of this cemetery in 1985.

The Biological Laboratory Collection
At the end of the 19th century, the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences founded a laboratory for training high school and college teachers in marine biology. As biologists and naturalists of that time worked out the consequences of Darwin's theory of evolution, they often established their laboratories at the seashore, where there was an abundance of animals and plants for study. In 1889, John D. Jones gave land and buildings (formerly part of the Cold Spring Whaling Company) on the southwestern shore of Cold Spring Harbor to the Brooklyn Institute for Arts and Science (BIAS). BIAS used the Jones gift to established its presence in Cold Spring Harbor as the Biological Laboratory (Bio Lab) engaged in science research and training of secondary school teachers. In 1917 the Bio Lab officially became one of the four departments of the BIAS (along with the Brooklyn Art Museum, Brooklyn Botanical Garden and Brooklyn Zoo) and an endowment was raised from contributions of interested Cold Spring Harbor neighbors. In 1924 BIAS turned over the administration and ownership of the Biological Lab to the Cold Spring Harbor community and it incorporated as the Long Biological Association (LIBA). LIBA was initially administered by Director Reginald Harris, and continued as a scientific research and educational institution, funded by local residents and a far reaching list of private donors.

  - The Memorial Cemetery of St. John's Church is situated along Rte. 25A in Laurel Hollow approximately one mile west of the church. The cemetery is distinguished for its landscaping by the Olmsted brothers beginning ca. 1911 as well as the notable personalities who are commemorated there. The site's use as a cemetery dates from 1862 when it was founded by John Divine Jones, initially for his own family. This section, containing significant monuments to the Jones and Hewlett families, is immediately adjacent to the present chapel and columbarium near the cemetery's entrance.

By approximately 1912, land bought by the DeForest family, an area of about ten acres further east bordering Cove Road, was joined to the initial area. Subsequent increments brought the cemetery up to its present size. The cemetery's informal landscaping, using mostly native plantings sited to enhance scenic topographical features sustained the 19th century premise of park-like cemeteries.

This approach is associated with the Olmsted firm which was brought in by the DeForests for whom they had done estate garden design. Further, the Olmsteads were in certain instances engaged by other families to do landscape designs on individual plots. Their work is typified by the creation of fairly large areas laid out in patterns of wide arcs bordered by low stone walls, with dense plantings of laurels and rhododendron, shaded by tall oaks and conifers. Steps and winding paths lead from one secluded bower to another, and each family area comprises a distinct environment unto itself. The early 20th century sections done by the Olmstedes also typically restricted the heights of gravestones to about six inches, so the memorial tablets tend to be flat and set close to the ground.

Among the many notable persons interred in the cemetery are Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., Chairman of General Motors; George Cortelyou, Secretary of the Treasury under Theodore Roosevelt; David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture under Woodrow Wilson; Otto Kahn, banker and philanthropist; Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War under Taft, FDR, and Truman; William Adams Delano, architect, of the firm Delano & Aldrich; William S. Paley of CBS fame; and the American Modernist painter Arthur B. Dove.

The New York Times (October 26, 2008) stated: "A sense of seclusion and natural beauty pervade this 1862 burial ground. Such beauty is no accident, as the site was designed by the firm headed by the son and stepson of Frederick Law Olmsted, the father of American landscape architecture. Spread over 37 hilly acres, the grounds are organized to provide privacy." It may also be noted, that a veritable stylistic history of the American decorative arts and architecture is suggested by the varied carving on monuments which span over an almost 150 year period. <http://www.stjohnscoldspringharbor.org/about/memorial-cemetery.html>

  - "Sculptor Joseph Pollia (1893-1954) erected reasonably priced copies and modified versions of his My Buddy monument (1925) in the Richmond Hill neighborhood of Queens (fig 3.2) for the city of Glen Cove (1926) and for the village of Tarrytown(1927), all in New York...The memorial features a strapping soldier who takes a moment to stand before the grave of a lost comrade (fig 3.2). His head is bowed in contemplation of a small cross protruding from a mound of dirt. A helmet hangs from his right arm, leaving his lowered head bare and showing off thick locks of hair that fall in waves onto his forehead. Aside from minor alterations in pose, including the position of the figure's legs and hands, Pollia's doughboy in GHlen Cove, dedicated in 1926, is almost identical, exuding the same comradely sentiment. Glen Cove's soldier is likely the one that Charles Vanderbilt noticed "while motoring on Long Island", inspiring him to contact the artist, inquire after the price, and begin a campaign to erect a similar memorial in Tarrytown (the Tarrytown memorial is identical to Richmond Hill's) (fig 3.3). For years, a "suitable" memorial had been discussed in Tarrytown, but it took the encouragement and financial support of a Vanderbilt to make the project a reality. Pollia's doughboy, located outside the Glen Cove Public Library, expressed the right mixture of solemnity, heroism, and movie-star good looks, to catch Vanderbilt's eye." pp.104 Sculpting measured drawings & archival research | woodlawn cemetery | columbia university, new york

Studio field work was conducted at Woodlawn Cemetery in the Bronx, New York, with the goal of contributing to the archival repository of documentation for several individual mausoleums where little to no information was known to exist.
A series of measured drawings was produced for a mausoleum designed by architecture firm Walker & Gillette for an extremely accomplished business leader Ernest Stauffen. Archival research, original sketches, and formal analysis were utilized to create graphics depicting the mausoleum's original grand landscape scenery surrounding the structure's austere, monumental stone façade, reminiscent of Walker & Gillette's style recurrently used for banks.

The mausoleum is constructed on a raised rectangular earthen podium, accessed by eleven steps that span the façade of the structure. The front features four evenly spaced Ionic columns supporting an entablature with the Garvan name and rinceau pattern engraving, and a gabled roof. The bronze doors to the mausoleum are bordered by two bronze low bas-relief sculpture panels by Edward Sandford Jr. (1927). Together, the panels depict six women bearing symbols of death, including an urn, palm frond, eternal flame, and scroll, toward the door of the mausoleum. Inside, the mausoleum features a simple altar and is finished with marble with distinctive venation. The landscape surrounding the mausoleum was designed by the Olmsted Brothers (1930-1931)."   - "Met Mr. and Mrs. Beck at Hotel, 11:45 AM, went with them to their property 10 miles south of city [Seattle] along Sound, 5 miles this side (north) of Three Tree Point. They have about 150 acres of steep hillside land covered with trees, etc. cut off about 35 years ago, although many smaller trees were not cut. Therefor the tree growth looks quite virgin and thick. It consists of about 5 pieces or hills which could easily be sold as individual estates..." from "Mr. Bruce Beck" Nov 19, 1929, in California Office Correspondence, [B.C. [showing beachfront property of Eleanor Beck at current Ed Munro Seahurst Park]
  - "Seahurst Park was a popular picnic spot in the early 1900s. Charles Hughes was born in 1895 on his parents' farm near downtown Burien. After the berries were picked and the hay gathered in, his folks would "hitch old Dobbin to the spring wagon" and take the kids to the beach. "No one lived from Salmon Creek to Three Tree Point," so campsites were plentiful. They picked wild berries, dug clams, and caught fish from driftwood rafts. Jack Stokes, who moved to Seahurst from Seattle as a boy in 1914, fished down Stearns Creek where Seahurst Park is today.
"In 1915, the Seahurst Land Company owned 200 acres from 16th SW to Puget Sound, north of SW 152nd St. The company's president was C.W. Keisel; the superintendent was a Mr. Harbaugh. This parcel contained 12 to 14 springs, many of them in Seahurst Park. Pumps, used to get the water into small tanks, were installed near SW 142nd St. and 21st Ave. SW."

  - "The beach park site included the former Beck and later the Fox family home and the small swimming pool. By reorganizing of partitions, this house became the base for a marine technology program from 1968 through 1972, when a new two-story building was completed." "The first war memorial in Huntington, a list of 40 men who had died during the Civil War, contains familiar old Huntington names such as Sammis, Conklin, and Brush. The second war memorial in Huntington, created in 1923 to commemorate the 39 Huntingtonians who had died during World War I, reflects Huntington's changing ethnic make up. In addition to the old Huntington names, the list includes names such as Algerio, Romano, Solomoff, Sickenberger, and Tivola. More interesting is that the list includes a woman, Janet Ford."

  - Louisa Curtis
Original name: Louisa Knapp
Birth: Oct. 21, 1851
Death: Feb. 25, 1910
Journalist, Author. The wife of Philadelphia publishing magnate Charles H. K. Curtis, she contributed a column titled "Women At Home" in her husband's magazine "Tribune and Farmer". The column became so popular that it spawned a separate magazine in 1883 that became known as "The Ladies Home Journal". Read by over a million subscribers at it's height, she served as the magazine's editor from 1883 to 1889.
Note: Louisa was the Editor of the Ladies Home Journal.

  - Thaw Family Plot
Section: 16 Lot: 119
The best-known person buried here is William Thaw (1818-89). In 1840 he became a partner of Thomas S. Clarke to operate steamboats and canal boats. In 1856 they turned their attention to coordinated railroad freight service west from Pittsburgh and eventually managed the Star Union Line created by the Pennsylvania Railroad for this purpose. Almost as famous is his son Harry Kendall Thaw, d. 1947, who in 1906 created a national scandal by murdering the famous architect and clubman Stanford White to avenge his chorus-girl wife, the former Evelyn Nesbit of Tarentum. William Thaws monument of 1892, ironically, is of a sort that White might have designed. Three of the family have been Corporators.

- "The Cemetery was founded in 1846 by Charles Evans, a prominent local lawyer and philanthropist who desired to establish a nonsectarian cemetery where the friends and relatives of those departed might linger and meditate. Employing unusual vision, Charles Evans selected and purchased 25 acres of land on a prominent hilltop situated, at that time, a mile outside the City limits. It was to be for all people of Reading, a dignified place of interment where natural beauty would be preserved and enhanced with the years. He provided money for a Trust Fund to be used solely for the purpose of making the Cemetery even more beautiful with the passing years - to provide perpetual maintenance of its buildings, trees, shrubbery and spacious lawns."

  - "Several family lots are noteworthy for the landscape architecture that defines the area as a private sanctuary. A squarely trimmed privet hedge borders the turn of the century Wetmore family lot and divides it in half. Cypress trees mark the entrance. The back edge of the east section is lined with evergreens. In front of the trees is a large tablet with the inscription "Wetmore." The gravesites are defined by a bed of pachysandra and small headstones. - The west half of-the lot contains a ledger on a high base marking the grave of Anne Derby Rogers Wetmore Sherman, the wife of William Watts Sherman. Granite curbing surrounds the entire lot. The setting is serene and simple." [also indicates Wetmore family plot at #12 on map following]

The Hazard Memorial and Peace Dale Library

Peace Dale, Rhode Island - 1917-1920

The Hazard Memorial Building was constructed in 1889 and dedicated in 1891 in honor of Rowland Gibson Hazard, (1801-1888). The building was deeded by the Peace Dale Manufacturing Company to three trustees in 1891 to be used for the benefit of the community. Funding for the trust was initially provided by the Peace Dale Manufacturing Company and later by two endowment funds set up by Caroline Hazard in 1920 and Edith H. Forbes in 1926.

In 1920 a bronze sculpture named "The Weaver" was created by the famous sculptor Daniel French and placed on the front lawn slightly behind the large white sycamore tree, (which I believe is the tree at the extreme right of the picture). The sculpture was designed to honor all weavers from prehistoric basket makers to the mill workers of the Hazard textile era. Daniel French also sculpted the Minuteman at Concord Bridge in Massachusetts and the seated Abraham Lincoln statue in the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, DC.

The building was initially used for a variety of local activities including theatrical performances. The first floor of the building initially housed the Peace Dale Library and also housed several classes for the South Kingstown Public School District from 1941 to 1954. The Peace Dale Library became the sole tenet of the building in 1970.

o Brief History of National Memorial Park:

National Memorial Park was established in 1933 on approximately 200 acres. The original owner, Robert Marlowe purchased the land from the Ball family who were the descendants of freed slaves. These 200 acres were deeded to the Ball family's ancestors after the Civil War and had been operating as a dairy farm prior to being purchased by Robert Marlowe. This property's landscape with its rolling hills and trees lends to the great beauty of what is now National Memorial Park.

John B. Dennis, financier and creator of modern Kingsport, was born in Gardiner, Maine, the eldest son of David and Julia Bartlett Dennis. His father was a prominent businessman and president of the Merchants National Bank of Gardiner, and Dennis received his early education in the local public schools and attended Cornell University for three years. At the end of his junior year, he transferred to Columbia College and graduated with an A.B. degree in 1887. During the following years he became involved in the investment and security business, working for several brokerage firms in Boston and New York. In 1890 he became associated with the newly organized private banking firm of Blair and Company of New York. Within three years Dennis had received a partnership in the firm, and for the next twenty years he engaged in banking, promotional, and reorganization activities.
Around 1914 the directors of Kingsport Farms authorized Dennis, as the Blair and Company representative, to purchase approximately 6,355 acres of land in Sullivan and Hawkins Counties from the Carter Coal Company. The Kingsport Improvement Company (KIC) then purchased land for a proposed town from Kingsport Farms. With controlling interest in both companies, Dennis provided financial backing for the establishment of Kingsport.

  - o "1870 – The Origin of the Campus; the Berry Estate The Chatham College campus occupies a height of land approximately four miles east of where the confluence of the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers form the Ohio in downtown Pittsburgh. This apparent hilltop site is actually an ancient eroded Appalachian upland plain; it overlooks the wide, glacial Shadyside/East Liberty valley to the north. This area was farmland until the coming of the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1853. Shadyside, East Liberty and the nearby heights then became early suburbs of downtown Pittsburgh. The Murray Hill area was developed during the Civil War as a picturesque landscape containing Gothic revival style villas and cottages featuring views of the farms and estates in the valley to the north. The area was served by Woodland Road, a narrow winding drive that follows a small ravine south from Fifth Avenue to the top of Murray Hill...

By 1890, the grounds around the original Berry Hall were simplified and more institutional in character, composed of a drive, lawn and specimen trees. In 1893 and 1905, the College sold two lots that were originally part of the Berry property to George M. Laughlin. In 1896, the College acquired a narrow lot from the Yoder Land Company, bordering an existing street outside the western boundary of the campus. This provided additional access from the campus to the street now known as Murray Hill Avenue.”

  - “At the enactment of Prohibition in 1920 Labrot & Graham sealed and shut the ten stone buildings that formed their expanded column still complex, leaving everything intact. Resumption of the industry in 1933 by a newly incorporated Labrot & Graham firm rebuilt the old buildings but also brought further new construction and materials, specifically three glazed clay tile warehouses and the gravity barrel run. Purchase of the distillery in 1940 by Brown-Forman initiated new water and fire-safety standards resulting in the construction of the concrete dam and spillway to form a pond.
Between 1945 and 1973 little new construction was carried out by Brown-Forman. Additionally, the distilling industry went into a general decline. The site was sold to a farmer for storage use, remaining neglected for twenty years. In 1994 Brown-Forman, a corporation producing other alcoholic beverages, repurchased their former distillery to initiate production of a long-aging specialty bourbon that would be produced, stored, and bottled at the site. Full rehabilitation of the setting and existing buildings was undertaken from 1994 to 1996 to create a newly functioning distillery as well as a heritage tourism site where the historic industrial architecture could tell the history of Kentucky bourbon production.”

  - 2526 Durant Avenue was built in 1891 for Mrs. Ellen Blood, who first arrived in Berkeley in 1889. A woman of means, Mrs. Blood engaged the architect Robert Gray Frise to design a prominent Queen Anne house with a large side garden that complemented the other fashionable houses lining Durant Avenue. In 1907 the Blood House passed on to Perry Tompkins, a college classmate of Mrs. Blood's son (class of '92) and a lifelong financial partner of Duncan McDuffie, with whom he promoted the development of Berkeley's Claremont district, San Pablo Park, and Northbrae, as well as San Francisco's St. Francis Wood. Tompkins also was instrumental in the establishment of two of Berkeley's leading financial institutions. Perry and Xora Tompkins' residence in the Blood House added a new name to the list of "Blue Book" families living on Durant Avenue in the early days: Judge William H. Waste; Addison W. Naylor (Shattuck's successor as president of the First National Bank of Berkeley); Dean Witter, founder of the investment firm; William E. Knowles; University Physician George F. Reinhardt and his wife Aurelia—future president of Mills College; Frank Lawton, developer and partner of James L. Barker; Professor Cornelius Beach Bradley; J. Edward McCreary; and later, as apartment residents, the John Galen Howards. A residential street of stately homes and apartment houses, Durant Ave. gradually evolved until, by 1930, it also accommodated clubs, churches, and even a hotel. In 1936 the Tompkinses remodeled their house by redesigning some features and facing the house with stucco—perhaps to reflect the revival styles of the day.   - Here's a fine Studebaker paused in front of the palatial Los Feliz mansion built by William Mead, president of the Municipal Housing Commission and subdivider of the Griffith Ranch holdings into the beautiful Hillhurst Park subdivision. By the time this photo was taken, the eight acre estate had passed to David Hamburger of department store fame. Designed by Hudson & Munsell in 1912 for the Mead's, the estate, although shorn of some of its acreage, still exists at 4533 Cockerham Drive and was recently for sale for just under $5 million.
  - William Mead House, Hudson & Munsell Architects 1914
Described in the Los Feliz Improvement Association Historical Survey c.2000 as a 'Prairie' influenced-style, the house was designed by the eminent architectural firm Hudson & Munsell for William Mead, a pioneer real estate developer in Los Feliz. Mead purchased 400 acres adjoining Griffith Park in 1911 from Col. Griffith J. Griffith and began planning what would become one of the City's most beautiful subdivisions. He added another 132 acres to his holdings in 1925. For a period of time, Mead owned the entire neighborhood above Los Feliz Boulevard, from Western Avenue to the Los Angeles River. A Los Angeles Times article reported on June 2, 1912 that 'Mr. Mead plans to build a dwelling of palatial proportions by his architects Hudson & Munsell; the design will incline towards the English mansion types, although no style will be slavishly adhered to, the architects having aimed primarily at harmonizing the structure with its unusually attractive and picturesque surroundings'.
By 1925, ownership of the house passed to David Hamburger, President of the Hamburger and Sons Department Store which had been founded by his father in 1881. The house became the site of many elegant social gatherings during the Hamburgers ownership. After Mr. Hamburger's death in April 1945, the property passed briefly to Harold and Lucile De Armand before Frederick and Muriel Cockerham gained ownership seven months later. Mr. Cockerham, who went by the professional name of Charles Fredericks was a singer and member of the Screen Actor's Guild. Between 1954 and 1965 he appeared in many motion pictures including 'To Kill a Mockingbird', 'Tender is the Night', 'My Fair Lady', and 'The Great Race'. In 1949, the house was severely damaged in a fire in which eighteen of the rooms were destroyed.
The historic house is currently on the market and listed for sale for $4,988,000. The main house has six bedrooms and seven baths in 9,707 sq. ft. in addition to a guest house, staff quarters, swimming pool with pavilion, Koi pond and garden paths meandering throughout the property of over 87,000 square feet. The current owner, Nimit Vongchinsri has decorated it in an opulent European style that is a sight to behold. Located at 4533 Cockerham Drive in the Los Feliz neighborhood of Los Angeles.

The house to be remodeled is an old brown shingle and is to be turned into a stucco of Italian feeling; the garden now consists of a good lawn, some border planting and a number of fair sized trees. - Ceiling History: This ceiling was commissioned by A.T. Jergins in 1932 for his home at 2935 East Ocean Blvd. in Long Beach, California. Mr. Jergins was a prominent figure in California, well known for the Jergins Trust Building. He died in 1959.
The home was designed by the then very well known architect Kirtland Cutter, who had recently won the first place award offered by the Southern California chapter of the American Institute of Architects. Built in the style of an Italian villa, the Mediterranean home featured a ceiling that was painted by an Italian artist. The house was demolished in 1963 to make room for the Galaxy Towers.
Ceiling Features: The ceiling consists of 135 oil paintings on canvas measuring 21" across. The canvas is then cemented to 1/2" thick fiberboard. There are 10 different pictures. A decorative wood overlay is 1-3/4" thick and made of pieces of white cedar and maple. The mouldings are painted, gilded, stenciled and antiqued.
Ceiling Status: The oil paintings are in good condition. The woodwork needs restoration. Each oil painting and piece of wood moulding is numbered on the back and there is a computer diagram showing the numbered layout of the entire ceiling. The panels are octagonal, 8-1/2" and 9" on a side. The ceiling measures approximately 21'4" by 35'.
The ceiling is currently located in Apopka, FL. It is packed in boxes, ready to ship. There are xx boxes approximately xx" X xx" (containing the wood mouldings) and xx boxes approximately xx" X xx" (containing the oil painting panels.)
Photos: There are photos of the ceiling showing partial assembly, a sample of each oil painting (10 pictures or subjects and 1 small square), computer 3d models, and assembly drawing.
There is also a short video of the rotating computer 3D model. (It is a large .AVI file and will take a minute or so to load.)

- Built by Oil Millionaire: Razed Ocean Front Home Had Many Elegant Features by Vern Anthony
Built in 1932 on the grand scale of an oil millionaire, a picturesque oceanfront mansion has been razed to make way for a 20-story apartment structure.
It was the house built at 2935 E. Ocean Blvd. by A. T. Jergins as a wedding present to his son, Merritt D. Jergins.
Last owner, before the corner property was sold to developers for construction the Galaxy apartment towers, was Mrs. Anna M. Buse.
Occupant of the home for more than 19 years, Mrs. Buse last week reminisced about the, unusual structure. It was an authentic copy of a Mediterranean home, she said, and was designed by the personal architect of E. L. Cord of Cord automobile fame.
THE CEILING of the large living room was done by an Italian artist, with paintings on canvas and octagonal wood paneling. Light fixtures had been imported from Europe. Doors were of Philippine mahogany and hand-carved. The stairs had been built with low 'rises' to make for easier walking. The fireplace was of Italian granite. The House contained the first intercom system used in a Long Beach home. Bedrooms were extra large, as were powder rooms and even servant quarters over the garage.
There were (now it can be told) two safes on the second floor and a big walk-in safe in the basement. The house had plank floors, tile roof, wrought iron rails for the stairs and two balconies.

There was a large sun deck on the second floor, north side, with imported green tiles and black dragon inlays, also with shower facilities for sunbathers.

In the large yard were many rare trees and flowers, Mrs. Buse said. She won top or near top honors two years in Pacific Flower Show competition.

One of the features in the back gardens was a large fish pond, the fountain for which had been imported from Italy.

Many of the treasures were retained by Mrs. Buse in making the sale. She has moved to College Park.

Demolition of her old home and the house next door to the west at 2915 E. Ocean for erection of the Galaxy has been carried on the Acme House Moving Co.

  - FRANK P. PUTNAM.

Named for a president of the United States. Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire, and bearing an old and honored New England name, one borne by a great Revolutionary hero, Frank P. Putnam eschewed the political traits of one and the military ardor of the other, and found his vocation in merchandising. In the not always peaceful arts of trade he has won eminence, and in his native city of Lowell is well known and highly esteemed as merchant and citizen. There are few men who, if fortune had been kind to them in a financial way, but would develop some special interest which often amounts to a passion, sometimes a hobby. Mr. Putnam is not an exception, his passion being the cultivation of flowers, carnations and single chrysanthemums being his specialties. Many are the prizes and first premiums which adorn his home, where four large greenhouses are stocked with the specimens and varieties which most appeal to the owner's tastes. Thus a successful business man finds his recreation, keeps his mind and body fit, and brings joy to every lover of the beautiful in nature, who is privileged to visit his greenhouses or gardens. In business life he is the honored president of the Putnam & Son Company, dealers in clothing, located at Nos. 166-168 Central street, He is a son of Addison Putnam, who established the business in Lowell, in 1840, at the corner of Hurd and Central streets, later locating at the corner of Market and Central Streets, the present location being occupied since 1878. Addison Putnam, the founder continued head of the business which was incorporated as the Putnam & Son Company, in 1901, until his death in 1906, having been connected with the business as founder and head for sixty years. Addison Putnam married Hannah Planchard Tarbell, they the parents of Frank P., to whom this review of an honorable, upright life is inscribed.

Frank P. Putnam was born in Lowell, Massachusetts, November 15, 1848, and has ever resided in his native city and added to her mercantile greatness. He attended the public schools of the city, but at the age of fifteen years left high school to go into his father's store, business life greatly attracting him from boyhood. This was in 1863, or 1864, the clothing store of Addison Putnam then being located at the corner of Market and Central streets. He rapidly absorbed the principles upon which the business was conducted and the special details of the clothing business, soon becoming his father's assistant, and upon arriving at legal age his partner, the firm trading as Putnam & Son. In 1878 the store was moved to Nos. 166-168 Central street, and this oldest of Lowell's men's clothing and furnishing stores took up a new lease of life. Boys' clothing was added to the lines carried, and a large business developed, which continues a prosperous one at the same location for the past forty years.

Addison Putnam was a member of the Board of Aldermen for a time, but Frank P. has accepted no political office, but served the city for twenty-one years as a trustee of the Public Library. He is a director of the Appleton National Bank; trustee and vice-president of the Lowell Five Cents Savings Bank; director of the Traders' and Mechanics' Insurance Company of Lowell; and is a member of the Board of Trade. He is a thoroughly public-spirited citizen, one who can be relied upon to aid in any movement promising better things for Lowell or the county-at-large. He is a Republican in politics.

Mr. Putnam married, in Lowell, November 1, 1898, Sarah Barry. The family residence is at North Tewksbury, where the greenhouses are Mr. Putnam's especial pleasure, and a generous hospitality is extended.

- o FORM B – BUILDING, MASSACHUSETTS HISTORICAL COMMISSION, MASSACHUSETTS ARCHIVES BUILDING

Address: 1420 Andover Street

Historic Name: Frank Putnam Greenhouse Building

ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION:

Describe architectural features. Evaluate the characteristics of this building in terms of other buildings within the community. The remains of a greenhouse operation at 1420 Andover Street include the boiler room, chimney stack, and greenhouse foundation. The stone boiler room is a rectangular building with a side gable roof that ends in a hip on the west elevation. The roof is sheathed in asphalt shingles. Narrow rectangular paired windows are located near the top of the walls. The round stone chimney stack is located to the rear of the boiler room. The boiler room is connected to several smaller sheds, including a gable front garage. The remains of a greenhouse are visible to the east of the extant buildings.

HISTORICAL NARRATIVE

Discuss the history of the building. Explain its associations with local (or state) history. Include uses of the building, and the role(s) the owners/occupants played within the community. The boiler room, chimney stack, and greenhouse foundations were associated with a greenhouse operation probably built by Frank Putnam 1902-1909. Putnam operated Putnam & Son Company, a clothing store in Lowell. He married Sarah Barry in 1898 and they moved to Tewksbury 1902-1909. He built four large greenhouses for his hobby gardening. He grew carnations and chrysanthemums. His wife's parents died young and Sarah's brother James came to live with the Putnams. In 1905 James Barry McCashin changed his name to Barry Putnam. Barry Putnam subsequently owned the house and greenhouses.

The lot associated with the house and greenhouses was subdivided three times in the 20th century. The extant house is located at 1440 Andover Street TEW.37.

Additional owners include: Conrad Kitson c 1966. Since the late 20th century the remaining greenhouse buildings have been owned by the Bernat family.

  - HISTORY OF SHARON HEIGHTS, MENLO PARK

Sharon Heights was named after Frederick Sharon, son of William Sharon, Comstock Lode silver mining millionaire and Peninsula developer. The younger Sharon purchased acreage in 'Menlo Hills' and by 1906, owned upwards of 600 acres upon which he constructed his 32-room mansion, "Sharon Heights". Enthusiastic entertainers, Sharon and his wife, Louise, hosted a multitude of notable parties at their estate. After the passing of both Sharon and his wife in 1914 and 1938 respectively, the manor was inherited by their daughter, who showed little interest in occupying the rural mansion. The estate was sold in 1957 to Arizona housing developers Duncan McDonald and Mark Radin.

The partners invisioned a modern suburban community of single and multi-family housing, shopping, schools and business, which centered around an élite country club and park. Initial membership to the country club included a steep $3,500 initiation fee that climbed into the 6-figures by the 1990s. By the 1970s, the community of Sharon Heights had taken root and established itself as one of the most sought-after neighborhoods in Menlo Park.

  - A second life for St. Denis Church began in 1959 when the Archdiocese of San Francisco purchased a 14 acre site in Sharon Heights, the former Frederick Sharon estate, for about $231,000. Plans were made for a church and elementary school to serve the many families who were to move into Sharon Heights and Stanford Hills. Hopes were high in those days and it was predicted that 1,000 families would move into the Stanford Hills development that was to extend to Searsville Lake, the very site where Dennis Martin's farm and mills once stood.
  - The new St. Denis was established as a parish by Archbishop Mitty in 1961 and Father Thomas I. Kennedy, then principal of Serra High School, San Mateo, was named its first pastor
  - Father Kennedy came to Menlo Park in June, 1961. He resided for a few months with Msgr. Edwin Kennedy at St. Raymond's Parish. In July he said his first Mass on the porch of the historic Sharon Mansion overlooking all of Sharon Heights.
  - On the Feast of St. Denis, October 9, Father Kennedy moved into the mansion with his dog, Rua (Irish for red). They lived in two rooms of the 28 room mansion that had no heat, no water. When winter came, Father Kennedy said Mass in the ballroom decorated with fanciful Japanese lights.

Father Kennedy had a mixed blessing. As he tells it, he was the last member of his class to get a parish and that parish was one of 138 families, the smallest in the archdiocese and the smallest ever created in the archdiocese. Stanford University decided to build the Linear Accelerator on its land instead of the predicted 1,000 homes and parish growth was severely restricted.

Along with the problems of founding a new parish, many good times abounded. Friends were quickly made in the little parish and the historic mansion was the scene of many festivities including a New Year's reception, barbeques and a costume party. Soon all the parish family was pitching in and the School of Religion and the St. Denis Guild were founded that first winter. Father also loaned the mansion to the women's auxiliary of the Woodside Priory to hold their first Christmas boutique.

In June, 1963, the new St. Denis Church, 2250 Avy Avenue, was dedicated. The church was the design of Robert W. Hagman, of Hagman and Meyer Architects, a Sharon Heights resident and parishioner. The building contractor was W. A. Moroney, Inc., of Burlingame.

Sharon club house scheduled for demolition this month

By Jane Knoerle

Almanac Staff Writer

The dining room of the Sharon Heights Golf and Country Club, setting for countless wedding receptions, formal dances and holiday galas, was empty last week, except for tables of used golf shoes ($3), straw hats ($1) and old paperbacks for sale.

The new club house, scheduled to be completed by February 2003, will be very different in appearance from the existing one. The new club house will emulate the stately appearance of the old Sharon mansion, torn down 40 years ago, rather than the 1960s ranch-style of the existing club house.

- Here comes the Guide; Southern California - The Most Outstanding Locations for Weddings, Receptions, Parties and Special Events, Lynn Broadwell, Hopscotch Press, 1994 ed. on "Villa Montecito" (p.58):
"Call us suckers for old-world European luxury, but we love this place. This Mission Revival mansion set on four exquisitely landscaped acres is one of the most gorgeous private estates we've seen. It was designed in 1920 by architect Carleton Winslow for William P. Nelson, a wealthy meat-packer from Chicago. The Nelsons, along with the Armours and the Swifts, were some of the most influential movers and shakers of what became known as Montecito's "Golden Age". And for a group of hot dog purveyors, they had surprisingly good taste - they purchased large portions of land and created their own "Gardens of Eden". Villa Montecito is one of them, and take our word for it, Adam and Eve would have had a fine time here. Ceremonies can be held in front of the mansion's facade, near a rectangular reflecting pool that's centered on a lush lawn bordered by thick stands of fir and oak trees or in the koi pond courtyard. Both sites are a bit awe-inspiring, and the professionally-lit grounds near the reflecting pool make it particularly enchanting for evening celebrations.

Although the mansion's overall design is Mediterranean, the details are strictly French classical. The main entrance has a classical pediment and pilasters in painted sandstone. An arcade with five bays on the south side facade sets off a raised terrace, the space within is vaulted and leads to a dramatic [galleria?] running the length of the house."

An apprenticeship with Florence Yoch furthered her training as a designer, and in 1923 she opened her own practice working on estates in Southern California. Her early projects included gardens for Harry Bauer, John Barber, and the William C. McDuffie Estate, for which she won an award from the American Institute of Architects, Southern California Chapter. In 1935, Bashford participated in the National Housing Exhibition in Los Angeles. The following year Fred Barlow became a partner in her firm, a relationship that would result in an extensive portfolio of designs including Harbor Hills, Aliso Village and Ramona Gardens.

- o Oakland's list of landmark properties to grow

By Annalee Allen Oakland Tribune Columnist

POSTED: 04/14/2013 12:00:00 AM PDT

The Claremont Pines section of Upper Rockridge was subdivided in the early 1930s from what had once been a 58-acre grand estate belonging to a Philip E. Bowles, who called his estate The Pines. In addition to his villa, which is no longer standing, there were stables where thoroughbred horses were kept and gardens landscaped with trees, lawns and exotic plant specimens, all meticulously maintained.

Developers of the former estate followed guidelines from what has come to be known as the Garden City Movement. These consist of curvilinear streets, rolled curbs, undergrounded utilities and elegant cast-iron street lamps.

The 1991 Oakland hills fire destroyed 75 of the 200 homes in Claremont Pines; fortunately, the Morse House survived.

On April 20, the Oakland Heritage Alliance is sponsoring a home tour of the Claremont Pines and Upper Rockridge neighborhoods. Volunteers are needed to staff the houses featured on the tour, which includes the Morse House. Contact the alliance at www.oaklandheritage.org to find out the details.

- "In 1890, Colonel Presley C. Baker (1838-1893) married Clara Bradley Wheeler (1855-1954), after the death of her first husband. Colonel Baker had moved to sunny Southern California in the early 1880's for his health, as he had been afflicted with Bright's disease. In 1892, they had constructed a new house in Pasadena along Orange Grove Boulevard. The home was not overly ostentatious, but was excellently sited on a large lot with an extensive view both east and west. Sadly Col. Baker died the next year, and so was unable to enjoy much time in the new home. Mrs. Baker remained, however.

Clara remained in the house until 1919, when she sold the house and retired to Pasadena's Hotel Maryland. In 1922, at the urging of many friends, she wrote a biography about her late husband. From 1930 on she resided in the Huntington Hotel. She died in 1954.

Clara sold the house in 1919 to Thomas and Nettie Warner. Thomas had just sold his auto steering and transmission parts company of Muncie, Indiana to General Motors, and then he retired to Southern California. An auto garage (guest house) had been added out back prior to the purchase. Then in 1926 Nettie had the house razed and erected a new structure on the property. She and Thomas remained there--he passed away in 1947; she stayed on until her passing in 1962. The property was then redeveloped as apartments. The former garage appears to be the same one--at some point it appears to have been sold to the property owner to the west. No vestige of the former Sunnycrest house remains."

- "Have you seen the 20 foot high earth dike in the front set-back at a new apartment project under construction at 865 S, Orange Grove Ave.? This property was the old Warner Estate which had a long, sloping lawn leading up from Orange Grove Avenue to a mansion on the crest of the Arroyo. The current developer has leveled the site and produced a projecting terrace close to the front property line which stands out on the avenue like Jimmy Durante's nose...with about the same aesthetic value."

- "The $323,605 estate left by Pasadena socialite Thomas W. Warner HI when he died in an accidental fall four years ago will go to the second of his four wives. The California Supreme Court upheld Warner's will in a decision rendered yesterday. Warner's fourth wife, Mrs Anita Lipton Warner, 38, one time actress known as [Nora 'erry?], had challenged the will alleging that the Pasadenan was not of sound mind and used alcohol to excess when the document was written. The will, dated July 2, 1953 and amended in a codicil signed Jan. 17, 1955, contained no provision for the fourth wife. She received a $600-a month separate maintenance from him. When their marriage ended in 1950, she also won ownership to their 22-room, $250,000 Bel Air home, its furnishings and $15,541.95 worth of community property. The second wife, Mrs. Jean McDonald Warner, 44, Sherman Oaks, is the mother of Warner's only son, Thomas W. Warner IV, now 16. Warner, heir to the [Born?]-Warner auto parts fortune, fell over a 12-foot wall from a driveway into a garden at the family estate, 891 S. Orange Grove Ave., Pasadena, on May 13, 1955. He died of a broken neck. On the previous evening, he had been out with Mrs. Mariette Mordue Faber, 40, South Pasadena, whom he said in his will was to become his fifth wife. Mrs. Faber received a $25,000 bequest from the will, with the rest of Warner's estate marked for his second wife and his son. Warner's first wife, whom he married in 1938 in Las Vegas, was Mrs. Virginia Warner. His third was actress Anne Irling, with whom he eloped to Tijuana. A few months after their marriage in 1944, Miss Sterling obtained an annulment charging his divorce from the previous Mrs. Warner was not final. Warner's death was investigated, by the District Attorney's office after wife No 4 said she thought he might have met with foul play. No evidence to support her theory was found." Pasadena Independent, Friday Feb. 27, 1959, p.5

They say their method of charging is "similar to a doctor or lawyer; for our personal advice we charge a fee which in this case would be at a rate of $10 per acre for the number of acres mentioned." All in is approximately $21/acre.   - History of the Reserve
Mount Sutro Open Space Reserve is a peaceful 61-acre area in the midst of San Francisco homes, businesses and the University of California San Francisco campus (UCSF). Named for its former owner and San Francisco Mayor Adolph Sutro, the Reserve has a history of transition much like many San Francisco neighborhoods.
A successful engineer and real estate investor, Adolph Sutro served as San Francisco Mayor from 1894 to 1896. Sutro's many land holdings included Mount Parnassus, now named Mount Sutro in his honor. Like most of San Francisco's higher terrain in the 1800s, the hill was covered primarily with native grasses, wildflowers and shrubs. In celebration of San Francisco's first Arbor Day in 1886, Sutro began planting the hill with imported blue gum eucalyptus, Monterey pine, Monterey cypress and possibly other species. The eucalyptus quickly adapted to the new location and soon became the predominant tree species on the hill. Sutro donated 13 acres of land on Parnassus Avenue to the UCSF Regents in 1895 for development into the UCSF Parnassus Heights campus. It wasn't until 1953 that UCSF purchased a 90-acre parcel to the south, which included Mount Sutro. Most of this land is now the Mount Sutro Open Space Reserve. UCSF is committed to maintaining the Reserve as a resource for San Franciscans and takes seriously its responsibility to keep the site safe and accessible.

- [red herring:] Dr. Emma Merritt, daughter of Adolph Sutro, along with John Tait and his group of investors rebuilt the Cliff House on behalf of the Sutro estate at a cost of $75,000. It was neoclassical in design and carried on the tradition of sumptuous dining and great entertainment. Built with steel reinforcing bar and poured concrete, this Cliff House was certain to still be standing 100 years later. Tait reopened the third version of the Cliff House on July 1, 1909; although more modest in design, it still provided a ballroom for dancing as well as fine dining rooms and its breathtaking views.

In 1918 the Cliff House was shut down due to military orders signed by the President of the United States, "all establishments within a half mile of military installations are to halt the sale of liquor." John Tait and his group of investors did not believe the Cliff House could continue to operate without liquore and decided to close it. In December of 1920 Shorty Roberts leased the Cliff House from Charles Sutro. During prohibition a dry Cliff House lacked its previous draw, so Roberts shut down all operations in 1925.

Roberts was famous for Roberts-at-the-Beach restaurant located at Great Highway and Rivera Street and later opened Roberts-at-the-Beach motel, which continued to operate until 2008.

Purchased by George and Leo Whitney, the owners of Playland, in December 1937, the Cliff House was extensively remodeled and reopened in August of 1938. The Golden Gate National Recreation Area acquired the Cliff House in 1977. <https://www.cliffhouse.com/history/1909.html>

- SUTRO HISTORIC LANDSCAPE UNDER OWNERSHIP OF EMMA MERRITT: 1898-1938
Sutro Heights Park

Despite financial difficulties, Emma Merritt attempted to maintain Sutro Heights for the enjoyment of the public. Reductions in the grounds staff from eleven to three resulted in decreased maintenance and supervision of the gardens. Plantings requiring intensive maintenance were replaced with those requiring less care, and the upkeep of paths, walks, and structures was neglected. By 1904, the Sutro residence, which had deteriorated significantly, was being used as a caretaker's residence.

In 1920, the ownership of Sutro Heights was transferred to the City of San Francisco under the condition that it be "forever held and maintained as a free public resort or park under the name of Sutro Heights." The Merritts retained a lifetime residence on the property. Between 1920 and 1933 the Merritts continued to allow visitors access to Sutro Heights, but provided for minimal maintenance of the site. Although not officially responsible for the maintenance of Sutro Heights during this period, the City of San Francisco conducted two emergency repairs on the Sutro property made necessary by the 1920 widening of Point Lobos Road, which had destabilized the western cliff face. These repairs included construction of a reinforced concrete roadbed on a section of the Esplanade in 1924 and erosion control measures on the adjacent cliff face to support the west flank of the heights promontory.

In 1933, at the request of Emma Merritt, the City of San Francisco agreed to assume maintenance of Sutro Heights but there was no major improvement or rehabilitation of the grounds. A December, 1935, program of the San Francisco Garden Club presented a description of the garden at Sutro Heights as ghostly and neglected, though tempered by hope for the future"

Mrs. Webster complained that her husband was altogether too enthusiastic in his manifestations of esteem for her women friends. He patted one in an "offensive and intimate manner," she related; he tried to fondle another, and he kissed a third against her will, the wife charged.
Webster was penurious, Mrs. Webster asserted. She asked for a share of a community estate she valued at $50,000.

  - o "In 1941 the partnership of Bob Anshen and Steve Allen designed an artistically innovative house for R.K. Davies, a wealthy San Francisco businessman. Together with a stable, swimming pool, and greenhouse, the complex was constructed on land that had been subdivided as Woodside Heights San Mateo County, California, and recorded on November 14, 1925 in the Official Records of San Mateo County, California. At the time of subdivision, the owner of the property appears to have been Atholl McBean, a successful business man from San Francisco who invested in the land for an orchard. The subsequent landowner, Leonard C. Hammond, did not live on the property. Hammond sold it to Ralph K. Davies, after only about a year, in 1936. The house designed by Anshen and Allen was pivotal in the nascent residential design style that incepted the Bay Region Style. As an individual work it is one of, if not the, finest modern design on the Peninsula. [p.5]

In 1952, Standard Oil named its largest tankership the Atholl McBean. His long association with Standard Oil, as well as civic and social organizations in San Francisco, would have brought him in contact with Ralph K. Davies, former President of Standard Oil. Atholl sold the property in February 1935 to Leonard C. and Dorothy Hammond, short-time owners and who also had a home on Albion Way in Woodside. Leonard C. Hammond was the son of the owner of a lumber company in Oregon. He rose in the industry from a salesman to president of his own company while a part-time resident of Woodside (1925-1935) where the family had a home on Albion Avenue.[fn6] Their other residences were in San Francisco where Mr. Hammond headquartered his business and where he died in 1944. The Hammonds owned the property [on Lakeview Drive] from February 4, 1935 until May 20, 1936 when it was sold to Ralph K. and Louise M. Davies. The acreage appears to have been planted with an orchard, remnants of which remained until the Davies house was constructed in 1941." [p.9]

  - As their family grew, the house also grew, with several additions being built over the years. The Cusack's eventually had five children, Ann, Thomas Jr., Charles, Frank, and Evelyn. In 1920, Thomas Cusack purchased the Cascade Town Company, in what is thought to be the first private purchase of a town in the United States. He planned to develop the area as a resort for his company's employees. With this goal in mind, he had the once elegant, but now declining, Ramona Hotel, torn down. He planned to build a Spanish-style hotel and other resort buildings in its place. In 1922, Mary Cusack died of cancer. At the time of her death, Thomas Cusack had already begun the construction of a large new home just up the hill above Ellinor Cottage. The building was finished in 1923 and named Marigreen Pines in her memory. The new house was very large and beautifully furnished, with marble floors, marble fireplaces from Rome, elaborately decorated ceilings, hand-painted frescoes by Italian artisans, a marble grandfather clock built into the living room wall, and a state of the art fire suppression system. Colorado Springs architect and builder, Charles Thomas, best known for his work on Shove Chapel at Colorado College and the Will Rogers Shrine, supervised the construction of the residence.
Thomas Cusack was able to enjoy Marigreen Pines with his children and grandchildren for several years before he died of pneumonia near Chicago in 1925. His son, Frank Cusack, took over at the helm of the Cascade Town Company after his passing. Frank completed the construction of the Cascade Community Building near the intersection of U.S. 24 and the Pikes Peak Highway, as well as the Cascade Tennis Club. The community building was first used as a tea room, market, and garage, but later became Bob Young's Cabaret and then Drummer Tweed's Furniture. Frank Cusack also owned the Shootin Star Ranch in Florissant, which is now part of Florissant Fossil Beds National Monument. Thomas and Mary Cusack's children built the Chapel of the Holy Rosary in Cascade in memory of their parents in 1931. The stone chapel, which won an architecture award for its designer Charles Thomas, stands on the hill above the foundation of the old Ramona Hotel. Frank Cusack never built a resort building there as his father had originally planned. Instead he built the Pyramid Mountain Lodge at the top of the mountain on the sunny side of Cascade in 1935. The Lodge was once popular for its weekend parties, dances, and good food, but had to be torn down in 1961 after being badly vandalized. The Cusack family continued to live at Ellinor

Cottage and Marigreen Pines until 1979. At that time, Thomas and Mary Cusack's oldest child, Ann Cusack Johnson, donated both homes and the surrounding land to the Congregation of Holy Cross. An affiliate of the Catholic Church, Congregation of Holy Cross is best known in this country for the University of Notre Dame, where many of the young men in the Cusack family were educated. At the dedication of Marigreen Pines to the church, Ann Cusack Johnson was recognized by Pope John Paul II for her many acts of philanthropy and charity and presented with a medal by Colorado's bishop. She died in 1984. Congregation of Holy Cross has used Marigreen Pines as a novitiate for the past 33 years. Young men thinking about entering the priesthood or brotherhood spend a year there preparing for a life of religious service and deciding if it is the right path for them. At the end of their year as novices, the young men can choose to take their first vows. Ann Cusack Johnson was a founding member of the Ute Pass Historical Society, which was started in Cascade in 1976. At the time that she donated Marigreen Pines to the Congregation of Holy Cross, she stipulated that the Ute Pass Historical Society should be allowed to give tours of the property every three years. The last tours were in 2009. On Saturday, July 14 and Sunday, July 15, 2012 the Ute Pass Historical Society will once again host tours of this beautiful historic estate, including both of the Cusack family homes, Ellinor Cottage and Marigreen Pines. Tickets are available at the Ute Pass Historical Society office on the north side of the Woodland Park Library, or you can contact UPHS at (719) 686-7512 or uphs@peakinter.net. Tickets for the last Marigreen Pines Tour in 2009 were completely sold out three weeks before the event, so don't wait to get tickets if you want to take the tour.

- o Vacant land along the 12th hole at Pebble Beach Golf Links once priced at $14 million is now being auctioned, with a minimum bid of $7.95 million.

Auctions are unusual in Pebble Beach, but not unheard of. Mark Troen, chief operating officer of Sheldon Good and Co., which is handling the auction for the seller of 3418 17 Mile Drive, said auctions "are an alternative method when a property is difficult to price." He is advertising nationwide, including in the Wall Street Journal.

Troen would not identify the seller, but the website Insurance Day quoted Orange County developer Sanford Edward in 2010 as saying he bought the property, which then had a house built by the Orrick family in 1921. The land stayed with Orrick descendants until its sale on Feb. 29, 2008, for $16.25 million, county records show.

Troen said his client at first planned to build a single home of about 14,000 square feet, but decided to have the old home demolished and the property split into two parcels. The client split the property a year and a half ago and plans to build on the larger parcel, about 1.24 acres, and sell the 1.1-acre parcel. Troen said the smaller parcel was previously offered at $12 million. Its assessed value is $6,536,073.

"This is a unique property that will appeal to golfers," said Troen.

It's rare to have vacant land where a buyer can choose what to build, he said. [images from website alongside historic Olmsted NHS images]

John McLaren (1846-1943) is primarily known as the longtime superintendent of Golden Gate Park in San Francisco. Born in Scotland and trained at the Edinburgh Royal Botanical Gardens, he immigrated to California in 1870 to garden on the George Howard estate in San Mateo County. south of San Francisco. He also worked for Leland Stanford before being appointed Superintendent of Golden Gate Park in 1887, a position he held until his death. At the same time, he continued designing, planting, and consulting on public and private gardens in Northern California and the Northwest.

- Golden State Fortunes Come to the Peninsula

Take your mind back to a time in the late 19th century after the California Gold Rush. Men have made fortunes, not from gold generally, but from selling mercantile goods, banking, and building a range of other businesses that thrived in the wake of the craze for gold.

On the Peninsula, wealthy landowners began carving estates from Spanish ranches. The land had only recently passed from Spain to Mexico and then to the United States. In the tradition of the English manor, the Peninsula homes provided a retreat from the city and offered country living and recreational activities for the well-to-do, such as horse-breeding.

These men included merchant William Davis Merry Howard, whose estate, El Cerrito, was one of the first of these country homes. It was built on the former Rancho San Mateo which spread from San Mateo Creek (near downtown San Mateo) to Sanchez Creek in Burlingame (near modern-day Sanchez Avenue). Two others, Gold Rush banker Darius Ogden Mills and his brother-in-law Ansel Easton, purchased portions of the Buri-Buri rancho north of Howard's estate. From the land holdings of these men, the city of Burlingame would one day take shape.

Birth of a Leafy Oasis

After the death of W.D.M. Howard, his brother, George Howard, married his widow (Agnes Poett) and inherited much of his property. The remainder of the property passed to W.D.M. Howard's son and to his father-in-law, Dr. Joseph Henry Poett. Anson Burlingame, for whom the city is named, later purchased a portion of Poett's land with the intention of living here, but he died before he could return. In 1872, Mills, acting on behalf of Burlingame's children, sold part of Burlingame's holdings to William C. Ralston.* Ralston, a businessman and financier, had made a fortune in the Comstock Lode and, with Mills, founded the Bank of California.

Around 1873, George Howard hired John McLaren (who would later earn fame as landscape gardener of Golden Gate Park) to landscape his property as well as other areas being surveyed by Alfred Poett (Joseph Poett's son, Agnes Poett's brother, and George Howard's brother-in-law), who was an engineer. These included the property that Ralston held briefly. McLaren was directed to plant the subdivided avenues and drives with eucalyptus, pines, and deciduous trees, both to provide beauty and as a windbreak, making the area more hospitable. In the fourteen years of his tenure in San Mateo County, McLaren planted hundreds of thousands of trees, transforming the dry, grassy landscape into an oasis of trees and beautiful plantings. McLaren and his crew planted also planted eucalyptus trees (also known as gum trees) and elm trees at regular intervals along a four-mile section of the the "royal road" (El Camino Real), the principal road between San Francisco and San Jose, to create a landscaped, grand entrance to the estates of several prominent property owners.

Situated on more than four acres, overlooking the picturesque Long Island Sound, the Lighthouse Inn Resort features the historic “Mansion”, as well as two additional buildings and associated landscaping. The most prominent building is the celebrated 40,000-square-foot, two-story Lighthouse Inn, an example of Mission-style architecture built in 1902, which offers 27 guest rooms, as well as a kitchen, bar and dining area. The additional outbuildings include the charming 11,000-square-foot, two-story Carriage House with 24 guest rooms, an 860-square-foot salon/spa building, outdoor swimming pool, and gazebo.
“The Lighthouse Inn is a unique New London treasure,” said Mayor Daryl Justin Finizio. “The City has set its minimum bid price low and has limited the restrictions on any potential bidder’s proposal. Purchasing this historic structure will be a fantastic opportunity for the successful bidder.”

- “The members of the City Planning Board have presented to his Honor Mayor Peters a formal report relative to playground sites in South Dorchester and in harmony with the request of the South Dorchester Improvement Association and in answer to petitions filed by residents of the district. The report of the Board is as follows: The petitions specifically ask for a playground in the immediate vicinity of the Mary Hemenway School and set forth the fact that the proposed site on the old Callender estate is neither centrally located nor sanitary. The locality under consideration is outside the area served by existing parks or playgrounds and is therefore without proper recreation facilities. The old Callender estate known as the Tenean creek land is owned by the city and comprises about ten acres. This area was discussed by the engineer of the Park and Recreation Department under date of February 21 1917. The outline of the area was declared to be irregular and in order to make a playground of suitable size and shape for ball playing it would be necessary in his opinion to acquire the adjacent Humphreys property containing 34,000 square feet assessed for $2,000. The city land is all filled the Humphreys property is upland covered with trees. In view of the fact that the area is adjacent to the Old Colony Railroad thus rendering the site particularly valuable for industrial purposes it would appear according to statements made inadvisable to consider developing the land for park or playground purposes at this time. Furthermore in a report dated June 8 1914 on parcels of real estate owned by the city which for the most part were not being used for any specific purpose, the Boston Finance Commission recommended that this particular piece of property when filled in should be sold if no impediment to a sale.

Another available location is bounded by Rosemont road northeast on the north Adams street on the east the back property line of the houses on the north side of Lonsdale street on the south and the back property line of the houses on the east side of Florida street on the west. The area is in two parcels separated by Rosemont road southeast and contains nearly three acres assessed $16,700. The land is flat and has been developed to a certain extent by the grading and laying out of Rosemont road southeast. While little grading would be required to provide suitable ball fields the area flanked on two sides by the rear of multiple dwellings has an unattractive shut in appearance while the windows in the houses themselves would be in sufficient danger from baseballs and other projectiles The third location and the one most available for the purpose consists of two parcels of land fronting on Adams street opposite Lonsdale and Mallet streets and is assessed as follows ...

The agent for this property, Mr Henry B Rankin 27 Rosemont street Dorchester, declines to set any definite selling price but states that any reasonable offer will be considered. In addition there is a narrow strip of land at the rear between the Rankin property and Gustinc street which should be acquired in order to provide access from Gustinc street to the area under consideration. This property is assessed to George H Poor 2,657 square feet at $100.

These three parcels of land, if acquired, would provide adequate playground facilities for that portion of the district yet unserved lying between the Neponset, Christopher Gibson and Ashmont Playgrounds. The land has been used by the children of the Mary Hemenway School in which nearly 2,000 pupils are enrolled for school gardens for five years The topography of the land is varied. It is more or less level near Adams street sloping gently down to the center of the lot and then rising abruptly to the property line at the rear. The buildings on the Rankin lot consist of an old frame house and barn assessed at only $1,500. Close by the buildings is an attractive clump of cedar trees which should be carefully preserved and made to conform to a definite plan if the land is acquired for playground purposes. Considerable grading would be necessary particularly in the Coffin tract of land but it would be quite possible to develop a particularly attractive winter playground by grading the land away from Adams street and flooding the surface for skating. It is naturally adapted for coasting purposes. There is ample room for a ball field without interfering with a section which might be set apart for juvenile play as well as a sheltered corner for mothers and very young children. This does not presuppose the establishment of a regular baseball diamond for in our opinion such a playground should be restricted for general use to children under fifteen years of age and in no sense of the word be allowed to be used as an athletic field. The Board of Survey plans provide for the widening of Adams street at this point and in the opinion of this Board this is a most desirable feature of any development of this area. The City Planning Board therefore recommends that if a playground is to be established in the South Dorchester district at this time the two parcels of land on Adams street opposite Lonsdale and Mallet streets together with the narrow strip of land at the rear... or about four and one half acres be acquired for the purpose and that before any development takes place provision be made for the widening of Adams at this point." City Record, p.136, Feb 16, 1918

- o "The 2.24 acre park, popularly known as Wainwright Park for the street that defined its western edge, was originally named in 1922 for James L. Cronin, a Dorchester man killed in action during World War I. A memorial to another war hero, 20-year-old Navy Corpsman James F. Keenan, who was killed in action in Korea, has been moved to a more prominent place in front of the entrance from Melbourne Avenue. Rev. Loesch said he had suggested the park's name be changed to 'Peace Park' or 'President Barack Obama Peace Park.'"

All I know about him is that he (Jr) wrote a chapter "As a landscape artist sees Bermuda" in that book Residence in Bermuda which was published by the Trade Development Board in 1936. He says he had been coming for 20 years and more in both winter and summer. But there's no mention of any specific place.

Subject: RE: Olmsted in Bermuda
Reading this below reminded me of a passage about Albouy's Point in the National Trust's forthcoming City of Hamilton book in its Historical Architecture series:
Nathaniel William Hutchings and his brother Joseph Francis Hutchings, whose sawmill was almost directly opposite on the site of what is now the Somers Building, were chosen as architects for the Yacht Club and also offered their services in landscaping the park. However in September of 1934 a plan was presented with details for a park, prepared free by a visitor to Bermuda, Frederick Law Olmsted, a distinguished landscape architect and city planner who was the son of the man of the same name who had designed Central Park in New York City.
Although Henry Cox Outerbridge's hotel has long been demolished he has left us with yet another name for this area, Point Pleasant Park.
This is also known as Albouys Point. I will find out how our researcher knew it was free and whether there was anything else about Olmsted in the same source.
Unfortunately I can't make anything of the two house plans. Of the houses shown on the Savage map Felicity Hall is the most central but he certainly never owned it and we have no record of him living there. Anyway, Daniels Head is a long way from Tuckers Town.

A Mrs Roosevelt Roosevelt rented for a while in Paget but didn't own, though I suppose she could have redone the garden.

  - "In January of 1923, the possibility of the downstairs club room of the Masonic Lodge (formerly the Baldwin County Bank) was discussed as a permanent site for the library. On a Wednesday evening, May 15, 1929, a special session of the City Council accepted plans and specifications presented by city architect R. L. Williamson. Hampton D. Ewing, brother-in-law to Mrs. Gilmer, proposed that a building (to be used for the library, an office for the chief of police and as a town hall) be built on land he was willing to donate through the Bay Minette Land Company, if construction of the building were to take place.
A petition was drawn up calling for construction of a public library building and was signed by practically every man and woman in Bay Minette. According to the August 1, 1929 issue of the Baldwin Times newspaper, Mayor E.A. Moore and the Bay Minette City Council appointed a library committee comprised of J.B. Blackburn, E.D. Noonan and J.C. Burns to examine titles and other preliminary matters pertaining to the projected public library.
The May 15, 1930 issue stated that City Council members had approved the plans drawn up by a Mr. Clark of Owen & Clark Architects in Mobile. The plan called for a one-story colonial valued at $7,000. This building design included two library rooms, a council hall, a work room and a small cellar to accommodate the heating plant. The June 26th issue state that Lamar Eubanks had been awarded the contract for laying the foundation and was in the process of doing so with an anticipated completion date of 60 days.

Bay Minette's council financed the building and was deeded the lot and building with the understanding that (in the event of the failure of the library association and of any corporation which may be organized for library purposes and which shall have taken over the property of said association to continue as a public library, then the entire use and occupancy of said building shall pass to the town of Bay Minette forever to be used exclusively, however, and as a condition of this grant, for municipal purposes only.)

The City Council serving with Mayor J.S. Burns in December 1930 (when the formal opening of the Hampton D. Ewing Library occurred) was made up of E. D. Noonan, J.B. Blackburn, S. J. Whitley, M.M. McMillan and H.H. Mixon. Natalie Whitley was the city clerk at that time. Hampton D. Ewing, by giving the land and other contributions, was instrumental in securing the library building and for that reason the building was named for him." Paul D. Dean - A 12-year Half Moon Bay resident and highly active participant in several Coastsides organizations, Paul D. Dean died at age 82 on Aug. 3 at the Half Moon Bay home of his daughter, Stephanie Dean. "He was my Rock of Gibraltar, my whole life," said his daughter. "And in the end, he was like an island in the sea." Born in Boston, Mass., the son of the late Paul D. Dean and Gertrude Cooper Dean, Mr. Dean lived most of his life in Wellesley Hills and Marlboro, Mass., and was educated at Berkshire School and Harvard University. When not otherwise occupied by business and family matters, Mr. Dean enjoyed sailing, playing bridge and acting in plays and operettas. On the Coastsides, he was a member of the Half Moon Bay Yacht Club, and was also active in Senior Coastsiders and at the Coastsides Adult Day Health Center. He was also involved with This Side of the Hill Players, with which he played the role of "the Colonel" in the recent production of "One Flew Over the Cuckoo Nest." Mr. Dean is predeceased by his son, Benjamin G. Dean of Falmouth, Mass., and a grandson, Paul D. Dean IV. He was the loving father of Stephanie C. Dean of Half Moon Bay, Paul D. Dean III of West Hartford, Conn., Sarah Dean Moses of Glen Cove, N.Y. and Alexander E. Dean of McLean, Va. He was also a cherished grandfather to Richard Moses, Eric Moses, Robert Dean, Benjamin Dean Jr., Sarah Dean Casper, Rebecca Dean, Alfred Dean and Logan Dean. His life was remembered in separate memorial ceremonies in Vermont and at the Bach Dancing and Dynamite Society in Half Moon Bay. Mr. Dean was interred in Arlington, Vt. next to his beloved companion of 25 years, Patricia Barger.

Grand, historic, and romantic, this cherished piece of Concord's history preserves what is most authentic in Shingle-Style architecture in a pristine, 19th century landscape. This 24 acre farm runs along the banks of the Sudbury River with 850 feet of river frontage and a boat launch. Its scenic land and riverbanks are seemingly untouched since the days when Thoreau described them in his journals and are surrounded by hundreds of protected acres stretching to Walden Pond. This historic land and its neighborhood have been written about and documented by others in addition to Thoreau and photographed extensively by Herbert Wendell Gleason in the early 1900's. Many of the photographs are found in the 1906 Houghton Mifflin edition of "The Writings of Henry David Thoreau", Gleason's 1917 book "Through The Year With Thoreau" and the illustrated "Walden" Princeton Edition, 1973. The combination of proximity to river frontage, conservation land and riding trails, together with easy access to Route 2, downtown Concord, the commuter rail, restaurants and shopping makes this property a unique and highly desirable offering.FEATURES:Built as a summer home c.1900 with authentic shingle-style architecture Historic property 24 acres sited on what is thought to be the Hallowell Farm praised by Henry David Thoreau in his book Walden. Thoughtfully updated and maintained through the years preserving authentic details while integrating new mechanical systems and comfortable amenities. Interior boasts magnificent millwork, period hardware, original leaded windows and a paneled front door with panes of bulls-eye glass. The expansive floor plan is remarkably tailored to today's lifestyle affording architectural integrity, convenience and comfort. Fully renovated, window-wrapped kitchen with a perimeter of maple cabinetry, and marble countertops, premium appliances and a center island breakfast bar. 2006 studio/loft addition with a 40 window-wrapped, brick-lined gallery opening the home to panoramic meadow and River views. A non-profit organization, The Kalmia Woods Corporation, facilitates the use of the common land and coordination of activities within the Conantum neighborhood. A minimal yearly fee affords members access to the canoe landing on the Sudbury River as well as the use of tennis courts and participation in community activities.”

Greenwich City Directory 1937 [ancestry.com]
- In the late 19th century and early 20th century, the town had a resort industry with more than a dozen inns, including Ye Old Greenwich Inn, The Castle and The Crossways Inn in Old Greenwich, and The Maples Inn, The Lenox House and the Edgewood Inn in the central part of town. The Edgewood Inn, a 150-room hotel on 350 acres (1.4 km<sup>2</sup>) of former farmland, existed from 1902 to 1940. The 350-foot-long, five-story main building of the inn was constructed by J. T. Weir starting September 28, 1901. Then-modern features included steam heat, electric lights, a telephone in every room and a bath with a porcelain tub shared between every two rooms.

The hotel had a large dining room and two private dining rooms, along with "Ye Colonial Tea Room" and a pink and apple green ballroom. Milk and cream came from the hotel's Jersey cows and ice from the hotel's ice machine. The Edgewood Orchestra played for guests twice a day in an outdoor summerhouse covered in wisteria. For women there was a reception room, parlor and writing room were available. Also in the hotel were a billiard room, barbershop, and a reading and writing room for men. The hotel also had a smoking alcove, card rooms, and a nine-hole golf course, along with tennis courts and a clubhouse known as a "casino" with a bowling alley, a hall for dances, a stage, dressing rooms and a reading room. Individual cottages were also on the property. The Edgewood had 82 staff rooms, a 22-room building for chauffeurs. The Alfred S. Amer Co. was the original owner and sold the property for $160,000 in 1917. In 1920 the property was again sold, and in 1932 the Beechwood School leased the hotel for 10 years, opening Edgewood Park Junior College. But the school closed in 1940, the hotel's furnishings were sold at auction, and the Barnum Wrecking Co. of Bridgeport razed the building.

Manufacturing Company which was to endure for over 30 years. There he served variously as director, secretary, treasurer, and president. After his retirement from the presidency he was elected chairman of the board, a position he held until 1932. Eike his father-in-law he also was in a leadership position in other Torrington industries; he was a vice-president of the Hendey Machine Company, assistant treasurer of the Turner & Seymour Company, a director of the Union Hardware Company and the Plume & Atwood Company. Director of several local banks as well as both the Litchfield and Torrington Water Companies. Swayze was a founder of both the Charlotte Hungerford Hospital and the Hillside Cemetery Association and a trustee of the Torrington Library. After Clara Swayze's death in 1945 the house was sold, and in the late 1940s it was converted into a rest home by Jean Givanni. The property is still used as a nursing home, and patients are currently housed in the carriage house and its 1960s brick addition, and the Migeon/Swayze House contains offices and a meeting room, while the basement has been converted into a laundry facility." - "The Sunnie-Holme Gardens of Annie Burr Jennings: Fairy Land Nearby
In addition to her many contributions to the town of Fairfield, Miss Jennings created an amazing array of gardens in the highly fashionable Arts & Crafts style behind her mansion on the Old Post Road. With the exception of her formal rose garden, Miss Jennings designed them all, and with the aid of a team of full-time estate gardeners, she maintained them impeccably. True to her generous philanthropic nature, she opened her gardens to the public in 1915.
Stretching from the Old Post Road to Long Island Sound, and from Beach Road to what is now Mariners' Way, Miss Jennings' landscape included formal herbaceous borders and parterres set amongst long axial paths leading from the house; an evergreen garden leading to an all-white garden; beds based on particular colors or varieties of plants; an enormous cutting garden devoted exclusively for the home's arrangements; an herb garden with more than 100 varieties of medicinal, brewing, and culinary herbs; and a vast "wilderness" garden.
But the garden that was widely touted as the most beautiful was Miss Jennings' formal rose garden. Situated around a sunken reflecting pool with a fountain in the middle and stately paths all around were every conceivable variety of rose, either rambling up arbors or neatly arranged in rectangular beds. At the end of the sunken pool was a white "summer house," or pergola, where Miss Jennings and her guests often took their tea or sat to read. The skeleton of the pool and the flagstone flooring of the summer house hauntingly remain on Sunnie-Holme Drive, buckling under the strain of many years of frost heaves. Close to what is now Judson Road, a more naturalized area was constructed, with dark, shadowy paths opening onto various rock and succulent gardens. Peeping out from shaded nooks were several bronze rabbits as well as a mysterious dusky pool with a bronze statue of Pan with his pipes. An observer today might wonder if some of the rocks and trees behind the homes on Judson Road could be the remains of Miss Jennings' woodland garden. Over the years, thousands of visitors came to stroll through the verdant display, enjoying the intoxicating landscape or seeking refuge from their hectic lives. The gates to Sunnie-Holme were finally closed, however, upon Miss Jennings' death in 1939, and the gardens fell into disarray until the land was sold to a developer about six years later.
We know that Annie Burr Jennings stated in her will that her land should not be used for commercial purposes, as she strongly felt that the resulting traffic and noise would be a serious detriment to the best interests of the town. However, she went on to say that despite her opposition to creating a public park on her property, she would not be opposed to the "permanent dedication of my gardens for such uses and purposes." Ahhh...couldn't we all use a little bit of the "fairy land nearby" today?"

Thank you for your response. My wife, Carol was born in New Britian. Her Father was Harry Corbin - married Gertrude Gesner of Haddam. Her Grandfather was Willis Phillip Corbin II - who owned a farm that is now Corbin's Corner, CT.
If you have any info on this part of the family, it would be much appreciated!

This is very interesting and I wish I'd seen it much before this! My grandmother was Minnie B. Corbin and she was born in New Britain in 1883; her grandfather was Philip Corbin, the founder (with his brother Frank) of P. and F. Corbin, the hardware manufacturing company in New Britain. Their brother Hezekiah was Willis Philip Corbin's father. Their sister Ann (Angerona) lived on the farm at Corbin's Corner; eventually it was owned by my grandmother and passed on to her children including my mother. It was used as a golf driving range until my family sold it to the developers of the present shopping mall at Corbin's Corner.

 Description: The Fosdick Preserve is an assemblage of five properties that straddle Boggs Hill Road near the intersection of Willowbrook Road. On the west side of Boggs Hill Road visitors will find excellent hiking along two miles of trails over pleasant woodland and hilly terrain. As one climbs the hill from the Head O'Meadow School parking lot, a full-flowing brook offers waterfall scenes to photo-buffs. Hikers will be treated to several stonewalls, interesting rock outcroppings and varied and interesting terrain. A mixture of various hardwood trees comprise this relatively young, aggrading forest. The absence of larger, older trees belies its former use as pastureland.
 On the east side of Boggs Hill Road, two large boulders mark the entry to 1,700 feet of trail that will guide the intrepid explorer through a complex of swamp and wetland features, bedrock outcroppings, and several fine beech trees.

  - Metz had no plans whatsoever to elope with Cobble Pond Farm. In fact, a passionate relationship with a property just wasn't on her radar before she met the 250-acre Sharon farm in person back in 1981. But her husband, Jay, came home smitten after being shown the property and finally prodded her to make a reconnaissance mission personally. The house was alluring, for sure, but the garden sealed the deal. In the absence of solid plans to guide the restoration of the land, Metz followed her instincts. She looked at the telltale sunken garden with its expressive curvaceous hedges and deep beds. And she considered the singularly unique structures—like the garden house/gazebo that commands the scene—and connected the dots. Besides the trees, some lilacs, lots of peonies and an overload of shrubs popular in the 1950s but comparatively lackluster compared to modern improvements, the garden wasn't bristling with survivors. But Metz didn't dig in immediately. "I was advised not to touch anything for a year," she explains. When she made her move, she didn't go it alone. She called in an expert—the late Fred McGourty—who provided the sort of informed overview that the property deserved. Together, they revamped the gardens with respect for the past, but also an eye toward the future.

She had already enjoyed 14 years of working with the garden when the Olmsted Brothers' plans materialized in 1995, hidden in the potting shed attic. Of course, Metz was ecstatic to learn that the garden had roots—that would explain the property's well-wrought views and deftly executed interrelations. But she had already spent more than a decade getting Cobble Pond Farm up to speed, and there was no looking back.

The landscape was originally heavy on labor-intensive annuals, in keeping with the mid-19th-century trend. Not only did she want to spare herself the expense of annual replenishment, Metz wasn't fond of the flower carpet look. Instead, she opted for native shrubs, distinct trees and lots of long-lived, low-maintenance perennials. She banished the burning bush that was all the rage when Cobble Pond Farm was first planted. ("And one reason why we got into this invasive plant pickle in the first place," she says.) Most importantly, she won the battle with the clipped yew hedges. In her stewardship role, Metz went to seminars to keep current on woody plant maintenance, and that's how she came up with the compost-rich diet that turned the tide. Her pruning regimen was also key. Rather than cutting the hedge into the traditional straight-sided box, her solution was to angle the hedge edges and allow light in on all sides.

- Title: Cobble Pond Farm 1997-1998; 2010.

Forms part of: Garden Club of America Collection,

Phy. Description: 1 folder+ 33 35 mm. slides and 37 digital images.

Summary: The folder includes a worksheet and abbreviated garden plan.

Provenance: Milbrook (NY) Garden Club facilitated the submission of this garden's documentation.

General Note: Cobble Pond Farm comprises 250 acres with meadows, wetlands, a 22-acre pond that was lined with granite blocks, or cobbles, from an abandoned castle, a sunken garden, a formal Italianate secret garden, long herbaceous perennial borders, a sugar maple and dogwood allée, a cutting and vegetable garden, and farm animals including Aberdeen Angus cows and rescued horses, donkeys and llamas. The original garden was designed beginning circa 1930 by landscape architects Percival Gallagher and Edward Clark Whiting from the Olmsted Brothers firm. The Olmsted plan blends the formality of a European garden with the bucolic landscape of the surrounding areas. Within the formal areas there are broad lawns, stone footpaths and low stone walls defining the garden rooms. Although the garden was severely overgrown in some places and unplanted in others the current owners discovered old plans and researched the original garden before commencing to recreate it. The formal garden rooms were planted in a more contemporary style with perennials and shrubs rather than the bedding annuals from the original plans, and the old flagstone walkways were replaced with bluestone. The Italianate garden is centered with a fountain and divided into four quadrants with hedges of clipped yew. Nearby stands an apple orchard and a pergola planted with wisteria and climbing hydrangeas. The sunken garden is anchored at one end by a one-hundred year old copper beech and contains two topiary lilacs, clematis, hydrangeas, and climbing roses. In spring the cutting garden's rectangular beds are filled with the bright colors of daffodils and tulips while the summer brings on more muted colors, featuring sambucus black lace and a weeping katsura tree.

Outbuildings include a garden hospital for plants needing attention. The surrounding woodlands were the source for the mature sugar maples in the allée, and saplings are still being transplanted to the formal garden areas. The summer house built in the 1920s was named Tintern Abbey after the poem by William Wordsworth.

Persons associated with the property include: James Punnett (former owner, ca. 1905); the Schwab Family (former owners, 1905-1921); Harold A. and Margaret Milliken Hatch (former owner, 1921-1981); James T. and Kathleen M.   - Long-Lost Seapuit Golf Club
By: Rob Duca

There isn't much to see anymore. Nearly all evidence of Seapuit Golf Club on Cape Cod has vanished or, more specifically, been bulldozed and built over. It wasn't quite like paving paradise to put up a parking lot, but dyed-in-the-wool golfers might make that argument. In its place, tucked away in a wooded section of Osterville, Mass., are private homes, pristine flower beds, tennis courts and swimming pools.

If you know where to look, you can spot a vestige of the long-lost golf course. Buried in the woods, obscured between tall trees and bushes, and virtually unrecognizable beneath the overgrown grass and weeds is a rectangular piece of slightly raised land that once served as the tee box for the third hole. In the distance is the fairway that snaked alongside Marstons Mills River en route to the green. Back in the day, you could enjoy raw oysters on the half-shell and, legend has it, a dry martini - courtesy of P. Barnard Hinckley's seafood shanty - before continuing to the fourth hole.

"He certainly had a beverage on hand to go with the oysters," remembers 86-year-old Joel Davis, whose father, E.K. Davis, owned the course from 1930 until 1942. "Whether it was martinis, I can't say for sure." There are few people left with first-hand recollections of Seapuit because, like the private club, its members are also long gone. Even teenagers who served as caddies are now into their mid-80s and they too are dwindling. More than 50 private homes now sit where 70 years ago there were a golf course, a clubhouse and a hotel. These days, the former playground of prominent businessmen and politicians is remembered mainly in antique black-and-white photographs and yellowed newspaper clippings.

Back then, there were three private clubs in Osterville. Seapuit, which stood geographically between the Wianno Golf Club and the Oyster Harbors Golf Club, was one of Cape Cod's earliest golf courses. Dating to 1894, it had a tumultuous history, changing ownership several times before closing in 1942.

It was originally owned by Francis Parsons, a wealthy Chicago resident who summered in Osterville. Parsons purchased 200 acres of land on Osterville's west side, naming the property after a local Indian chief. The nine-hole golf course opened in 1896; the Seapuit Inn followed two years later.

Parsons imported a golf course architect from Scotland to design the layout. It featured rolling, tree-lined fairways, and views of Dam and Bog ponds, Cat Island and the Marstons Mills River. Those ponds came into play on most of the holes, often swallowing up wayward shots.

Despite its amenities, the club sank into bankruptcy after Parsons' death in 1925, closing down until Davis purchased the hotel and golf course in 1930. Davis, president of Aluminum Limited of Montreal, was more of a businessman than a golfer, and his interest was mainly in the value of the land. "He played a little golf, but not much," Holbrook Davis says.

Davis leveled the hotel in 1930 - for the sum of $400 - but reopened the golf course in 1932. However, memberships in private clubs thinned throughout the Depression. By World War II, his only reason for operating the club was to contribute to the war effort. In its final two years of existence, Davis donated the club's profits to the American Field Service, an organization providing ambulance services in North Africa. His son, Holbrook, was driving an AFS ambulance there at the time. "But the profits were pretty thin," Holbrook recalls.

By mid-1942, Davis closed the club and began subdividing and selling the land. And with that, one of Cape Cod's first golf courses quickly passed into history.

Description of the Site: It is unknown what the Olmsted Office may have done on this site. This is a very large parcel which will require further research. However, an initial survey of the property found several areas that looked like they were Olmsted landscapes. Some areas of this site have been subdivided and much of the area is very overgrown.

Description of the Site: A very cursory view of this site suggests that a romantic landscape design is still intact. The site is very heavily landscaped with plant materials such as ewes, rhododendrons, andromeda and pachysandra. A large beech tree is in the center of the circular drive. The building is an English romantic style structure with many steps, terraces, steep roofs and stucco siding.

- Plan #224-1 shows property between Hammond St. and Heath St./Woodland Rd. intersection
- "About the Recreation Center

The site has a wooded area, a specimen beech tree (which played a deciding role in the location of the rear soccer field), an isolated land area subject to flooding, and an interesting geological history. In addition to puddingstone and other rock outcroppings, the soil content is unique with 11 feet of peat found in one of the fields. Robinson Field, located near the site of the original main house, has 1 soccer field. The property also houses the newly renovated Environmental Education Center. The center has seasonal public restrooms and holds environmental education programs, including our summer and school vacation nature camps. The entire recreation area includes 2 soccer fields, tennis courts, expanded play equipment for both toddlers and school age children, and a splash pad water play area.

Park History

In 1961, the town bought this property for recreational purposes. The main house burned in 1963. The carriage house continues to be used as the Soule Recreation Center. The Baldwin School playground is contiguous with the recreation area. The area was renovated in 1995 - 1996 with Urban Self-Help State funds. A design review process began in 2005 to replace the play equipment. In 2007, construction was completed on the new equipment, providing exciting new play opportunities for all ages, as well as a new water play area. In 2011, there was a complete renovation of Lower Soule Field, including the installation of a new synthetic turf soccer field, improved drainage, a new handicap accessible entrance plaza, seating areas, improved site plantings, and replacement of sidewalks and fencing. This renovation was thanks to a generous donation by the Brookline Soccer Club."

  - About the Haven House [located at 42.249424,-71.176746]

DCH understands the historic value of the beautiful Haven House it occupies on High Street. The rooms on the first floor feature high ceilings, long French windows, tiled fireplaces, carved mahogany mantles and moldings, and original chandeliers. A graceful curved staircase leads to a second floor with smaller chamber rooms. The curved staircase lends its natural beauty to family photos, or as a perfect setting for the bride to enter her ceremony. Haven House is ideal for a small wedding, bridal shower, or a variety of special events and business meetings. To take a tour of the Haven House, please contact our Rental Coordinator: NManning@dedhamcommunityhouse.org

About the William Bullard House ("the Stone House"): [located at 42.25065,-71.177277]

Built in 1856, the Bullard House has the distinction of being one of the two surviving residences in Dedham that were built of Dedham granite. The interior of the house retains many of its original finishes, including a fine encaustic tile floor, marble fireplaces, ornamental plaster and wood trim. It is sited on a bluff above a bend in the Charles River, affording it a spectacular setting. Today it houses the DCH Preschool in a lovely juxtaposition of old and new. <http://www.dedhamcommunityhouse.org/about-us/history-a-mission.html>

- 125TH ANNIVERSARY
Violin Solo — Mrs. Harold Shaw.
The President: The Governor of the Commonwealth is descended on both his paternal and maternal sides from Dover stock. His grandmother, Abigail Richards, was born and reared on that beautiful farm which lies on either side of Noanet Brook, north of Dedham street. This estate is now owned by Mr. Augustin H. Parker, Secretary of the General Committee, who will read a letter from His Excellency Governor Eben Sumner Draper.

- "LEMUEL RICHARDS' farm is beautifully situated on Noanet's brook, since made famous by the story of "King Noanett." In early sales of real estate in this vicinity, "Noanet the Indian" is referred to, as he had his home in the vicinity of Noanet brook. This farm has been occupied since 1785, and was originally a part of a larger tract of land, which belonged to Joseph Chickering. In the cultivation of these farms there was as much prejudice against the use of buckwheat as there was in the Connecticut valley against the eating of shad, both were regarded as food for "poor folks." Consequently there was little buckwheat grown on Dover farms. Corn was the great staple and in lieu of money was often used in the purchase of real estate, as illustrated by a sale made by Lemuel Richards in 1780, of thirty acres of land on Dedham street, for which he received four hundred and forty-four bushels of Indian corn. Augustin H. Parker has recently erected on this estate a large brick house of the French manor type and appropriately retains the name of Noanet farm. Seth Blake, Lieut. Charles C. J. By 1827, Jones had become a partner in the ship chandlery and whaling industry, remaining in business after Dunbar's death in 1839. Jones was part owner and agent for numerous whaling vessels including the ships Congress, Emma C. Jones, Governor Troup, and Milo, along with the bark Elisha Dunbar, etc. Thomas Bennett Jr. (1820-1898) became clerk for Jones prior to becoming a successful businessman with the Wamsutta Mills. Jones first married Louisa Gibbs in 1835, but died shortly thereafter in 1839. He then married Emma Chamber Nye (1823-1852) in 1844 and fathered four children. Emma was born and raised on the island of St. Michael in the Azores and moved to the United States upon her mother's marriage to Thomas Nye Jr.

(1804-1882). She resided in Fairhaven with her parents and attended school in Boston. Three of the children from Emma's marriage survived to maturity. Emma Chambers Jones (1847-1920) was physically frail and spent most of her life under doctor's care in Litchfield, Connecticut, and New York City, N.Y. Diaries of Emma Chambers Jones span the years 1876 to 1909, contain information about her health, living arrangements and companions at Litchfield, Conn., and at New York City, N.Y., where she lived in an apartment house; friendship with New Bedford, Mass., artist, Robert Swain Gifford (1840-1905) and his family; social and cultural activities in New York City; and her travels to a summer residence in Dublin, N.H. and to Europe. Her correspondence consists of letters from family members, ca. 1857-1858. Also included in her papers are charades, 1856-1875, which she and her sister, Amelia, performed for friends and a presentation volume of verses, 1871." <http://www.whalingmuseum.org/explore/library/finding-aids/mss72>

- "Ryan launched the first women's architectural practice in the United States in Waltham, showing a particular concern for the design of modest housing. In 1909,[9] Ryan added fellow MIT graduate and women's rights activist Florence Luscomb to her practice, making this one of the first all-women's architectural practices in the United States.[10] In February 1913, Miss Ryan was appointed superintendent of buildings and grounds and buildings inspector for the city of Waltham, by Mayor Duane.[11] Typical of her work during this time is the house that Ryan designed for her nephew as a wedding present in 1914, located at 19 Boynton Street, Waltham.[12] The 2 1/2-storey smooth stucco residence turns its gable-end to the street. A small, 1-storey covered porch at the entrance is distinguished by an arched roof reminiscent of the work of George Washington Maher in the Chicago suburbs. Windows are placed singly, in pairs, or, as in the gable, in threes, while sill heights vary according to the interior needs. Ryan would continue the use of many of these distinctive elements in her work in Florida. During her Waltham practice Ryan also designed the spacious, well-appointed home of industrialist B. C. Ames (1917).[13] Many of the most attractive Waltham homes of that era were said to have been designed by Ryan."

  - 9. Ellington St. #7 to #141 and Farmington Ave. #6 to #143.[vicinity of 42.06297,-72.576501]
Ground was broken for this subdivision in 1917 by noted local developer Clifton W. Kibbe. The first houses were built along Ellington St. beginning in 1918. By the end of the 1920's most of the construction was complete. Homes on these streets, although some have been updated over the years, reflect the prominent architectural styles of the time: Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival and Craftsman.
22. Forest Acres ("The Kibbe Tract") Ellington Road, Farmington Road, Durham Road, Oxford Road, Eton Road (south of Converse St.), Rugby Road. [vicinity of 42.063297,-72.57045]
Clifton W. Kibbe, noted area developer, began construction on this neighborhood in 1930. Inspired by the layout of Colony Hills, the Kibbe Tract features large homes set well back on curved streets with large lots. Most homes reflect the Colonial Revival style of architecture. The historic integrity of this neighborhood remains intact, reflecting Kibbe's original vision. Of note is the maintenance of the public garden space adjacent to Farmington Road and Eton Road.

Submitted by TOM TOM (not verified) on Sat, 04/12/2008 - 23:29.
About 4 years back I bought 151 forest park ave, ohhh it was on the edge of deplorable, I am almost finished with it and some rooms could be refinished again, I did a ceiling to wall mural with clouds and a metallic compass where the chandelier hangs and scenic views of forest park referencing from old post cards such as the barney estate and rustic pavilion. I love the history here in Springfield and the homes, I have acquired some historical photos books and items over the years.
I am interested in how I can go about getting more information on the original owner of our home, I believe it is Alfred Chapin an industrialist in the late 1800's, now here is some really strange things I have heard that I have no idea if they are fictional, Alfred married a dime a dance girl from NY and brought her up here and the home was used as a cat house for a short time, maybe that is why there are a couple porcelain sinks in some bedrooms, do other homes have bedrooms with only sinks in the corners?
If anyone could direct me or assist me in how do research the original owner I would be so grateful, or if you would like to see what we have done, send me an email at tomtompainting@msn.com
Thanks

Alfred H. Chapin lived in my home also, and died here in 1962 at the age of 85. Much information can be found on him at the Quadrangle's Historical Museum (bring a #2 pencil!). There's a file on Chapin waiting for you with little effort. You will find that he was a well respected, influential leader in the community. He did remarry after his first wife passed away, but do not be fooled by his second wifes career just because she worked in the NYC shows. There's nothing to gossip about - they met because he produced plays in NYC as a hobby, and she was active in this field as a professional. Yes, my master bedroom has a sink, referred to as a barbers sink I believe.

"WILLIAM A. PAINE, BANKER, IS DEAD
Succumbed at Swampscott Summer Home
Senior Member at Paine, Webber & Co Began as a Clerk SWAMPSCOTT, Sept 24-After an illness of two weeks, William A. Paine, senior member of Paine-Webber & Co. bankers and brokers, died early this morning at his Summer home, 144 Beach Bluffs av. During the Winter Mr. Paine resided at 400 Commonwealth av. Boston. Mr Paine, who was 74 years old, was reputed to be one of the wealthiest men in Boston. Mr Paine made his fortune for him-self. His parents, Rev Albert Paine and Sarah Sargent Paine, were poor. William was born in Amesbury, but moved to Chelsea with his parents as a boy. From there the family moved to Beloit, Wis. to Rockford, Ill. and back to Charlestown. The Boy received his education piecemeal...Mr Paine belonged to many clubs and associations, among these the Algonquin Club, the Boston Athletic Association, the Exchange Clubs, the Country Club of Brookline, The Tedeso Country Club of Swampscott, of which he was president: the City Midday Club, New York, and the Union League Club, Chicago. He married on April 10, 1887 Miss Ruth Felton Ward. They had five children, all of whom survive. They are Francis Ward Paine, Mrs John H. Blodgett, Mrs Morris F. LaCroix, Stephen Paine and Mrs. David A. Brayton. Mr Paine's sister, Mrs William W. Everts, also survives him."

Notes for Stephen Paine

STEPHEN PAINE 1897-1993. Age. 95. Born in Roxbury died Duxbury, MA, April 15th. Attended Country Day School and Harvard College, Class of 1920. Son of William Alfred Paine, founder of Paine Webber + Co. now Paine, Webber, Jackson + Curtis, Inc. Called by his father in 1920 to work in the firm, he was still a registered representative until the day of his death. During W.W.I he was in the Naval Air Corps. He trained at Pensacola, FL and was a flying instructor for patrol plane pilots in Key West. During W.W. II he was a Commander in the U.S. Coast Guard serving as the northeastern district morale officer in charge of entertainment and family matters for all personnel. He had a life long interest in technology and entertainment. As a teenager he acquired professional competence and equipment for motion picture creation and projection. He enjoyed showing a variety of films to the family and neighborhood, but his sometimes spicy French films were usually terminated by a very proper uncle, who simply rolled up the screen. He was known for prize winning amateur photography and radio broadcasting. He was an Overseer Emeritus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a former Trustee of University Hospital, a founding member of The Footlighter's Club, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Town of Millis, where the family farm is located, a co-founder of WCRB-FM Classical Music, and Director of the Copper Range Company. Memberships: The Country Club of Brookline Eastern Yacht Club Duxbury Yacht Club Tho Boston Garden Club The Boston Stock Exchange. Left Harvard to enter U. S. Navy as aviator and served at Key West as instructor, Apr. 1918-Feb. 1919. Because of his ability as instructor he was kept in Key West and was not allowed to go abroad.

- The National Shrine of The Divine Mercy is a ministry of the Marian Fathers of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the authentic promoters of the message of The Divine Mercy. Located in the heart of the Berkshire Hills in western Massachusetts, the Shrine sits on 350 acres, known as Eden Hill.

In the fall of 1943, Fr. Joseph Luniewski, superior of the Marian House in Washington, D.C., sent a young priest, Fr. Walter Pelczynski, MIC, a native of Adams, Mass., to find a residence suitable for a novitiate or home for those preparing for the religious life. With the help of the pastor of St. Stanislaus Kostka Church in Adams, and with the assistance of family members and friends, the Marians purchased Eden Hill on November 24, 1943.

Prior to the Marians' arrival, this Hill had a rich history in the town of Stockbridge. Originally, the land had been the home of an early Christian mission to the Stockbridge Indians by Rev. John Sergeant. His home, known as the Mission House, can now be visited on Main Street in Stockbridge, where it was moved in 1927. The property known as Eden Park was originally purchased in 1855 by David Dudley Field, Jr. In 1906, S.W. Woodward, a successful businessman (Woodward & Lothrop) of Washington, D.C., purchased the property and built the current house, then known as Eden Hall. It replaced the Field residence which was either demolished or moved. Over the years Eden Hall was owned by several families, and by 1938 it had become St. Edmund's School — an Episcopalian preparatory school for boys.

Before the Marians moved in, many families of the Berkshires donated furniture and funds to make the first years unfold successfully. A community chapel was established in the new home with a "side altar" dedicated to The Divine Mercy. As the number of pilgrims to Eden Hill increased, a larger community chapel was needed.

  - RICHARD MARCY
Bom at Albany, N. F., June 25, 1876.
Parents Henry Sullivan, Emeline Josephine (Perham) Marcy.
School Browne and Nichols School, Cambridge.
Years in College 1893-95.
Degrees B.S., 1898 {Dartmouth).
Married Florence E. Goodwin, Nov. 9, 1910, Roxbury, Mass.
Occupation Retail coal business.
Address (business) 33 Moody St., Waltham, Mass.
{home) 29 Waltham St., Lexington, Mass.
On leaving Harvard I entered Dartmouth College, where I took degree of B.S. in 1898. I immediately went to work with the Fitchburg Railroad, working at Boston, Worcester, Gardner and Watertown until the winter of 1904, when I went to California. I went to California again in 1905-1906. In June, 1906, I formed a partnership under the name of Marcy and Company for retail coal business in Waltham. In September, 1907, we extended operations to Belmont, Mass., under the firm name of Marcy Brothers and Company, Incorporated, and at present "am marking time," waiting for further opportunities to "crop out." I was married in November, 1910." P.267-268, Harvard University. Class of 1897, [Fourth Report] June 1912 <https://archive.org/stream/1897report04harvuoft#page/268/mode/2up>

  - After Munro's death in 1933, on the eve of his retirement from Princeton, it soon became clear that all the writing he had been able to do for some time before his death was The Kingdom of the Crusaders, which Professor August C. Krey prepared for the press in 1935. But Munro had often discussed his plans for a detailed history of the crusades with his friends and former students, especially with Krey and with Professor Frederic Duncalf. The latter's summer home at Waquoit, Massachusetts, was the scene of several such sessions, which still remain most treasured memories to Duncalf and to Krey." forward, p.xv, Baldwin, M. W. PROS This Colonial Revival, built in 1920, has a stately appearance, with a curved portico and a facade balanced by a sunroom on one side and screened porch on the other. The kitchen is new. Arched doorways, dining room wainscot, and leaded glass at the entry are lovely. Up on the third floor are two bedrooms with great angles (if limited closets) and a full bath, which could be reconfigured to make a terrific master suite.

The nicely landscaped front yard is quite large; the rear yard is fenced. CONS Some of the hardwood floors have dark stains.

- The Capen farm in Dorchester was jointly owned by Aaron and his younger brother, Lemuel. After his mother's (Joan, wife of John) death, his father, John, asked Aaron to take charge of the farm. Against his own judgement, he consented to do so.
He raised the farm to a high state of cultivation, increased crops and livestock; cleared 8 acres of pasture land, and blasted rock (boulders) to build 120 rods of double stonewall across front of entrance. It was said that one could trot a horse on this wall. Aaron also built a barn on the marsh, and other out buildings. By a combination of fraudulent circumstances, his brother, Lemuel, forced Aaron, who had put so much labor and his own means, after his father's death, on the property, while Lemuel had done neither, to relinquish the property to him, Lemuel.
Aaron moved his family to Maine, 1834. From the government he purchased two islands of nearly 8000 acres, covered with timber, for $1.25 an acre. He became Agent to the logging interests on the Kennebec River (whose source is Moosehead Lake). He built a home on Deer Island, which was struck by lightning and destroyed, June 1858, and with it all family documents, including those showing his legal interest to the Dorchester property. Courts had confirmed his rights to the property, but on the evening before the decision was to be rendered, Lemuel, committed suicide by drowning.

- Ms. Forbes, who once proudly declared that she was “steeped in Colonial New Englandiana as a pickle is in brine,” was born on June 28, 1891, in Westboro. Her parents, Harriette Merrifield and William Trowbridge Forbes, were “enthusiastic historians, with a good library of source material on early New England and the power to put what they knew in writing,” according to the author. The Forbes family lived at 187 West Main St., Westboro, before moving to Worcester, seven years after she was born.

  - “The Charles L. Cushman House is significant as an unusual architectural specimen in the Queen Anne style and certainly one of the finest residential designs of George M. Coombs, Auburn's prolific and leading late 19th century architect. The house is also important as a reflection of the affluence derived from shoe manufacturing, the city's most important industry in the period.
Beautifully sited on a bluff overlooking the city, this massive pile of field stone with its ornamented gables, circular corner tower and elaborate porch and porte-cechere, was built in 1889 by Charles L. Cushman, son of Ara Cushman, founder of ome of the largest shoe manufacturing complexes in New England. At the time the house was built Charles was vice president and general superintendent of the manufacturing department of the Ara Cushman Company which consisted of three factories with 118,500 square feet of space and over 1,000 employees. All of this had sprung from a small three man operation in nearby Minot begun by his father in 1854.” National Register of Historic Places, Inventory—Nomination Form, Charles L. Family History – the Story Behind Shed Pond
In 1783, John Shed of Tewksbury left Massachusetts after his service in the Revolutionary War. He moved to Winthrop, Maine (part of Massachusetts until 1820), where he married Betsy Hall and bought the lower half of Settler's Lot #117. The newlyweds built a farm on the property just north of a pond that bears their family name.
In the winter of 1805-1806, John Shed was harvesting ice on the pond when his team of horses crashed through the ice. Though badly injured, Shed was able to claw his way out of the frigid water. After this harrowing experience, he required full time care, which cost him a large portion of his farm. Later, Captain John Gage acquired the property around the pond and named the water body in honor of John Shed.
Between 1925 and 1933, Walter Wyman, co-founder of Central Maine Power, bought several tracts of land surrounding Shed Pond. Perhaps Wyman envisioned using the pond as a source of water for his cattle. He had deeded rights to dam the pond and flood the surrounding area. An earthen dam was constructed in 1945. <http://www.tkl.org/gannetwyman/>

  - NEO-RATIONALIST/ARTS AND CRAFTS HOUSES
A small number of Bangor houses were designed just before and during World War I in the suave Neo-Rationalist or Arts and Crafts style.
Wilfred W. Mansur's first two designs in this style are somewhat less sleek stucco examples than contemporary Neo-Rationalist houses in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and retain sections of shingle facing and asymmetrical plans that defer to the Queen Anne and Shingle Style (Alfred J. Robinson House, 280 State Street, 1900; George I. Mansur House, 15 Somerset Street, 1911). In the great design of Milton W. Stratton, a Bar Harbor architect who did a little work in Bangor following the 1911 fire, the Dr. William C. Peters House (900 State Street, 1911), the simple and stripped quality of the style can be fully seen. Stratton specialized in seaside cottages, and the Peters house is similar to those cottages in its scale and pretension but quite different in its size. The house is simple in its finishes and relies on modern and unpretentious materials - cement stucco as a finish, cement for exterior steps and platforms, and notched and beaded spruce sheathing on the soffits of eaves.   - George B. Dorr (1855–1944)
Dorr was a private citizen whose life covered the last half of the 1800s and the first half of the 1900s. He came from privilege, the son of affluent Bostonians. He inherited fortunes from both his parents. He attended Harvard University and Oxford and traveled widely in Europe with his parents. He was a gentleman scholar and lover of nature who first visited Mount Desert Island in 1868 on a vacation with his parents and made the decision to make the island his primary home. The remains of the family residence, Old Farm, at Compass Harbor in Bar Harbor, are part of Acadia National Park today. He never married; instead he focused his time, energy, and intellect on preserving the natural beauty of his beloved island. Over four decades he worked tirelessly to acquire tracts of land for protection. He persuaded and cajoled others to give land or funds with which to acquire them, and he gave several parcels of his own.

  - As a senior project I built an interactive model of "Old Farm", a Queen Anne style house which was once located at Compass Harbor, in Bar Harbor, Maine. This building was owned by George Dorr, the founder and first superintendent of Acadia National Park and served as a site for meetings in the forming of the park. The details of the building were beautiful, made from craftsmanship difficult to duplicate today. "Old Farm" was razed by the park service in 1951, 7 years after the death of George Dorr, when disrepair made it unsafe and non-functional for park service use, and lack of finances and interest inhibited renovation. - The Robertson House, 1891, Kennebunkport
The Robertson House in Kennebunkport clearly demonstrates the link between the link between [draftsman William E.] Barry's recording of historic architecture in his drawings and the subsequent use of those models in his architectural practice...The house was built by Charles C. Perkins as a wedding gift for his daughter Evaline Perkins Titcomb Robertson. Reportedly, it did not suit Mrs. Robertson's idea of an appropriate summer residence, however, for she subsequently sold it and built a much larger summer house nearby." [fn.18] (p.83); fn.18. ▪ Barbara Brace Seeley

BELLEFONTE - Barbara Brace Seeley, 69, of 219 Yorkshire Lane, Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, and of Deer Isle, Maine, entered into eternal rest on Wednesday, June 4, 2003, at 10:05 p.m. in the Centre Community Hospital, State College, Pennsylvania. Her death was sudden and unexpected.

She was born in Hanover, Grafton County, New Hampshire, a daughter of the late Gerald Warner and Huldah Potter Laird Brace. Twice married, her first husband was Richard Allan Gotshalk, who survives. On May 21, 1967, she was married to Ralph M. Seeley, who survives. They combined two families and raised six children, all 8 to 13 years old at the start. During that period, they lived in Stormstown, where they lived until October 2002, when they moved to Spring Township, Centre County.

... Barbara first arrived at the Brace family property at Deer Isle, Maine in 1936, and later administered the property after her parents died. Her cremains will be scattered on Penobscot Bay at Deer Isle, by her family in July. At Deer Isle she was a member of the Walking Trails Group and the Island Heritage Trust...

She was preceded in death by her daughter Diane Gotshalk of Seattle, Washington, and by her brother, Gerald Warner Brace, Jr., of Paris, France.

- Francis L. Stetson - Stetson House
Francis Lynde Stetson (April 23, 1846–December 5, 1920) was an American lawyer. He was graduated from Williams College in 1867 and from Columbia Law School in 1869. He was admitted to the bar in 1869 and practiced in New York City. He devoted attention chiefly to corporation and railway law, becoming eminent in those lines. He became general counsel of the International Mercantile Marine Company, the Northern Pacific Railway, the Southern Railway, and the United States Rubber Company; also director in several railway companies and other corporations. In 1894, he formed the firm of Stetson, Jennings & Russell (a predecessor to the modern-day Davis Polk & Wardwell), which represented J. P. Morgan's United States Steel Corporation; he was also Morgan's personal attorney. President Grover Cleveland was a partner in the firm between his two terms as President, and a close friend. Stetson also served as counsel for Samuel J. Tilden in the controversy over the 1876 presidential election. He was president of the New York City Bar Association from 1910-1911. (Source: Wikipedia)

  - Plan #5815-1-tp1-sh1 does not have much information, but does indicate "Granville St."
  - Vancouver's first millionaire industrialist and the founder of BC Sugar, B.T. Rogers, built the Samuel Maclure-designed mansion "Gabriola" on Davie Street in 1900. A decade later, Rogers bought 10 acres in the country and had Somervell & Putnam architects design a 40-room house that would be the largest west of Toronto.

Unfortunately, the economy tanked in 1913 and war broke out the following year, delaying construction until 1915. Three years later, Rogers, 52, died leaving his widow Mary to raise seven children at Gabriola. Mary finished "Shannon" in 1925 and lived there for 11 years until selling it to Austin C. Taylor for $105,600. Taylor stayed until his death in 1965. Developer Peter Wall bought Shannon and hired architect Arthur Erickson in 1974 to turn the property into a housing development, Shannon Mews.

A brick one-and-a-half-storey gate house marks the Granville Street entrance, and a large brick coach house lies along the north property edge, both of which have been converted to residential units. The ten acre site slopes from the northeast to the southwest, with the mansion sited to take advantage of the slope by giving an unfolding view to the south.

The Shannon Estate is listed on the Vancouver Heritage Register (Category A) and the Mansion and the perimeter wall are municipally designated.

  - Shannon plays an important role in the history of Vancouver, as it was the estate of B.T. Rogers. The building was constructed by Dominion Construction, designed by the architects Somervell and Putnam in 1915-1925, and finished by Bernard Palmer in 1925, with the addition of infill housing designed by Arthur Erickson in 1974. The main house is an imposing Beaux Arts structure of red brick with stone trim. The architects are important for designing many landmarks in Vancouver including the Merchant's Bank, Seymour Building, Toronto Dominion Bank (now the Simon Fraser University Centre for Dialogue), Birks Building (now demolished), and Bank of Montreal (now the Simon Fraser University Centre of Business). The three-storey structure features a high degree of symmetry about its entrance garden facades. A Doric-columned porte cochere and loggia extend the house into the formal Italianate gardens. B.T. Rogers, an avid gardener, is known to have laid out the gardens.

B.T. Rogers, of Rogers Sugar, was one of the key business leaders of Vancouver. Rogers wished to create a large semirural estate and looked far south on Granville Street, almost to Marpole, to find the ten acre site for Shannon. Since 1967 Wall Financial Corporation has owned and managed the estate and commissioned Arthur Erickson to design the townhouses and apartments which surround the property.

o [red herring:]Vancouver's Gabriola Mansion

- Posted on December 31, 2009 by Gabriolan

Did you know that one of Vancouver's famous buildings is called Gabriola? It's on Davie Street near English Bay in the city's West End. The City of Vancouver explains:

Gabriola, (at the northwest corner of Davie and Nicola), is the last of the community's truly grand mansions. Built in 1900-1901 for industrialist Benjamin Tingley Rogers (founder of BC Sugar), it was designed by Samuel Maclure and was known as probably the most lavish private home ever constructed in B.C. Its superb stonework was quarried on Gabriola Island and the impressive stained glass windows were designed by the Bloomfield Brothers. The home was saved from demolition, rehabilitated in the mid-1970s and has since been a series of restaurants.

A website about the history of Vancouver's West End said this about the Gabriola mansion:

... a landmark on Davie Street since 1901. Originally built as a residence for the Rogers family, its sandstone exterior was quarried at B.C.'s Gabriola island. In 1977 it was converted to a restaurant, restoring "Gabriola's" interior closer to its original form. It's now home to Romano's Macaroni Grill. Meticulously maintained, the exterior has not changed since it was designed in 1898/99 by architect Samuel McLure.

- At the northwest corner of Davie and Nicola Streets, Gabriola House is the embodiment of a classic haunted mansion. It is the only one left of many grand homes that dominated Vancouver's West End in the early 1900s. Built in 1900-1901 for industrialist Benjamin T. Rogers, the founder of B.C. Sugar and its refinery, Gabriola House is considered by many local historians and architectural enthusiasts to be the most opulent of all private homes ever constructed in Vancouver. In its heyday, the property spanned an entire city block and its outbuildings included horse stables, greenhouses and work sheds. The mansion was built with sandstone blocks, quarried on Gabriola Island, and is adorned with fabulous stained glass windows and a grand interior staircase....After Benjamin died in 1918, his widow, Mary, moved into another home and, in 1925, Gabriola House became a 20-unit apartment building, known as the "Angus Apartments" (after Mrs. Rogers' maiden name, Angus). Fifty years on, the building had fallen into disrepair and its tenants had all moved out. In the mid-1970s, it was given a face lift and converted into a restaurant, Hy's Mansion. This establishment occupied the building for the better part of two decades and was well regarded by many Vancouverites. Then, in 1993, the interior was renovated to create another restaurant, Romano's Macaroni Grill. Following a significant fire in 1998, further repairs and restoration work was done. Today, Gabriola House sits empty and, as of December 2014, it is for sale.

  - "Important Sale - Robert B. Dula, formerly vice-president of American Tobacco Company has sold to Lucius T. Mayer of New York City, 10 acres adjoining Soundview Avenue. The purchase price is said to have been over $40,000 or more than $4,000 an acre for unimproved property.
Mr. Mayer, the purchaser, is one of the well-known engineers and he expects to build a fine country home for himself on the property he has just purchased. The house will cost over [$25,000?], it is said. The sale was made through the Fox Realty Company.
The property involved in the sale is part of [80?] acres of high class real estate in Soundview Avenue and Old Mamaroneck Road the Benoni Platt sold for John Miles to Mr. Dula about two years ago.
It was understood at the time that Mr. Dula bought the property for the purpose of speculation and the sale to Mr. Mayer is the first of the parcel to be sold.

The ten acres that Mr. Mayer bought adjoins the Eugene F. Reynal place now occupied by the Tewksbery School for Young Ladies, the Nathaniel C. Reynal Place and other fine estates in that section.

The remainder of the Dula holdings in that section are largely between Old Mamaroneck Road and the "Westchester" railroad. Some of it fronts on [Godsey?] Way." Eastern State Journal - White Plains - Saturday Feb 5, 1916

- About Us/Our History
In 1955, a handful of adventurous couple pioneers -- the Kellmans, the Bergmans, the Jacobsons, and the Roberts -- embarked on a journey to find a different, more personally enriching and inclusive Jewish religious experience. What started as an itinerant study group under the guidance of an early Reconstructionist Rabbi from the Society for the Advancement of Judaism (SAJ), soon joined with another independent gathering of some long time Reconstructionists living in Westchester, including Sylvia and Emanuel Dannett. Sylvia Dannett was the second recorded Bat Mitzvah, a wonderful ritual created through the Reconstructionist movement.
These two groups of pioneering individuals (about 20 member households) represented a wide range of Jewish experience, ranging from ultra Orthodox to ultra Liberal, but shared a common goal -to find an interpretation of Judaism for modern times. Reconstructionist Judaism was the answer. The group incorporated as Beth Shalom Synagogue in March 1956 and, with the help of Rabbi Mordecai Kaplan, the founder of Reconstructionist Judaism, the groundwork was laid for a new Synagogue - although they did not have a building. The first Friday night service, on March 2, 1956, was held at St. Paul's Church in Hartsdale with torahs on loan from Mount Vernon's Free Synagogue and a velvet bimah cover from the White Plains JCC to mask the cross on the pulpit.
The synagogue was without a home for several years. The members collected prayer books and kippot, traveled to members' homes for Hebrew School and held Shabbat services in a variety of locations. The nomadic period ended in 1958 with the purchase of a beautiful old mansion, "Clovelly", in White Plains. The budding congregation hosted Rabbi Kaplan and Dr. Ira Eisenstein, another early Reconstructionist leader, at the first service in their new home.

  - William E. Harmon: Real Estate Developer and Philanthropist
 By Mary Pendergast
 William Elmer Harmon was born in Lebanon, Ohio, in 1862. He wanted to be a physician but abandoned his studies due to his family's financial hardship. Instead, he took a job as a salesman at a nursery. Realizing his gift for sales, he then pondered what he might sell that would appeal to more people—and how he could make it affordable. The answer was land.
 At age 26, Harmon revolutionized real estate development when he developed an installment plan for buying lots in Cincinnati. For a dollar down and a dollar or less per month, people could now buy land that previously had required a one-third or one-half down payment.
 Wood, Harmon Company, which he formed with his brother and uncle, opened offices across the East and Midwest, becoming one of the largest real estate operations in the world. After starting Wm. E. Harmon &

Co. in 1907, he created Ravenswood Manor in Chicago, using the “improved real estate” strategy that had become popular following the release of the 1909 Plan of Chicago. He promoted quiet, spacious, tree-lined neighborhoods as a contrast to the city’s other noisy, crowded residential areas. His advertisements called it “The First Suburb Beautiful—of the New Chicago.

In addition to constructing streets, sidewalks, and utilities in Ravenswood Manor and Ravenswood Gardens, Harmon also built trellised archways over main entrances, planted trees, shrubs, and flowers in the parkways, set aside land for a “Motor Boat Colony,” and charged a $2/year fee to homeowners to maintain these parkways.

Harmon became a wealthy real estate mogul and settled in New York City. He also became a secret philanthropist. Under the name “Jedediah Tingle,” he sent checks to those aiding poor children and writers and artists in need, including those who were part of the Harlem Renaissance. He established the Harmon Foundation in 1922 to provide assistance to black artists, loans to college students, pensions to health care workers, rural clinics in South Carolina, and urban playgrounds. “Serving one’s own people,” he said, “transcends duty...and becomes a privilege.

  - JOHN McARTHUR HARRIS The 1907 history related much as to the successful career of Harris as an architect to that date It is the pleasure of the present Acting Historian to record but a continuance of such work in even larger measure and better than ever For as Harris conv pactly expresses it: "Richards and I have been busy in putting up good size buildings mostly east of the Mississippi and north of the James most of them fairly important monuments artistic or engineering in the localities where erected."
If anyone is physically still going strong and is chief of the ozone tramps we would suspect Harris as being it for his chief diversion is walking and he records that after crossing the fifty year mark he one day ticked off forty eight miles His mental diversion is reading American history and biography his hobby is the Pocono mountains (Does he collect specimens on his mantel piece) and his only - visible - alleged vice is tobacco.

- Harris, John McArthur (1867-1948)

ARCHITECT

Born: 3/5/1867, Died: 8/3/1948

Biography from the American Architects and Buildings database

John McArthur Harris, nephew of architect John McArthur, Jr. and son of Stephen and Catherine McArthur Harris, was born in Pottsville, PA, attended Germantown Academy, and received his B.A. (1887) and M.A. (1890) from the University of Pennsylvania, also attending drawing classes at the Franklin Institute from 1888 to 1889. He worked for architect George Peterson from 1887 to 1889 and was employed by Wilson Bros. & Co. in 1889. Following the death of principal Joseph Wilson, that firm continued under the aegis of younger brother and engineer, Henry W. Wilson, along with Harris and Howard S. Richards, using the name Wilson, Harris & Richards. When Wilson withdrew from the firm in 1910, Harris & Richards continued, only dissolving when Richards retired in 1935. Harris did not retire himself until 1937.

- “STOLEN GOODS FOUND. Port Jefferson, L. I. April 9 Several weeks ago the summer residence of Thomas Morch of Brooklyn, situated at Echo, was broken into and valuable furniture, clothing and bric - a - brac were stolen. Mr. Morch had reason to suspect Samuel Freedman of Setauket, as he found a mattress in his house which he believed was his property. He subsequently had Freedman arrested for petit larceny and at the hearing, before Justice T. W. Wheeler. Freedman was found guilty, the man who made the mattress to order for Mr. Morch identified it, which he did without any doubt. As there was some prospect of securing more of the stolen goods, the Justice suspended sentence and Freedman promptly decamped.” The Brooklyn Daily Eagle, Wednesday, April 9, 1902 Page 9

  - "The FBI reported that De Mohrenschildt told the FBI in 1945 that he happened to be in Palm Beach at the time he met Dorothy, in response to an invitation from a Mr. Kahler of 941 Park Ave., NY, NY, who I've found was Phillips Exeter 1914, a Yale 1918 classmate (a fellow military aviator) of Trubee Davison and Robert Lovett. In 1964, the FBI claimed to have much difficulty in verifying that a Kahler was ever known to reside in Palm Beach. The FBI included a June, 1942, report that Nancy Latimer of Lake Worth, FL, told an FBI agent she was suspicious of the sympathies of one Wood Kahler of Lantana, FL.
It turns out that Kahler was the son of Dallas banker, Harry A. Kahler and his wife, Beulah Pace, later of New York City and Littleton, NH. When finally located and interviewed in 1944, Kahler told the FBI that he still maintained contact with De Mohrenschildt and his wife was in receipt of a recent letter from George."

- Amory Ballroom/Trinity Hall, Dublin, NH Historic Resources Inventory
Originally the connector between 2 large 3-story segments of a palatial house (over 100 ft. long "the ballroom" is a stucco structure whose front has a five-bay glass-filled arcade with flat panels set in the stucco wall above. The entrance hall has a groin vault ceiling, Renaissance style fireplace, and is floored with tiles from Henry Chapin Mercer^ Moravian tile works, Doylestown, Pa. The building was built in 2 sections, the front entrance hall in 1910-11, and the ballroom itself in 1926-27. It faces a broad terrace leading down to the remnants of a large enclosed formal garden and pool, and beyond this a broad open cleared field, on upland approaches to Monadnock

- Amory House, Dublin, NH Historic Resources Inventory
The first of several Amory houses and cottages in the vicinity, this house was designed 1898-99 by architect John Lavalley of Boston as a summer residence for William Amory (d. 1900) of Boston, near the site of the old James Allison farm. After 1910, when Amory's widow, Louise, built a larger place up the hill, it was occupied by summer tenants including Sen. Albert J. Beveridge of Indiana (in 1910), and historian-biographer Henry Adams (1915). Subsequent owners have been Mrs. Edward Warren (1921), Mr. and Mrs. Edward Byron, and since 1968 Justine and Edward Auchincloss.

  - "Circa 1906 Tudor home filled with charm Denville estate boasts timeless appeal Timeless appeal awaits in a classic 100-year-old stone Tudor delightfully set on three-plus acres within walking distance of Denville's vibrant town center. This impressive home consists of 12 rooms and features six bedrooms, three full baths, two half baths, five fireplaces, an elevator, multiple staircases, a full usable basement and a separate stone carriage house. Originally built as a summer estate by the Irish family in 1906, it has only had three owners in its 100-year history. For over 60 years, this historic home was owned by the Swatland family, who added the spacious dining room and master bedroom. In 1978, the home was passed to the current owners. This elegant residence is set on acreage bordering the Denville Community Gardens and the Rockaway River. The property features long lawn views, white pines, sugar maples, spruce and holly trees and many perennial plantings. Using traditional architectural lines, the home's front hall leads from the main entry door to the rear of the home. French doors at the back of the hall lead to the long covered veranda. The formal living room spans the depth of the house with windows on three sides. This impressive space is designed with high ceilings, wood flooring and stone fireplaces at both ends of the room. The magnificent formal dining room is perfect for entertaining, featuring the highest ceilings in the home. Echoing the living room's layout, it also runs the depth of the house with windows on three sides. There is wood flooring, a floor-to-ceiling stone fireplace and a French door to the veranda. An oversized kitchen was originally used as a service kitchen. The current owners updated it with ceramic tile floors, a five-burner Thermador electric stove top, a large vent hood, two sinks, double wall ovens, a dishwasher and an abundance of cabinet storage. Remnants of the kitchen's original design remain. The "enunciator," which buzzed and alerted the servants as to which room was calling, still hangs on the wall. The staircase to the second floor laundry room still hides behind a "closet" door. And the Dutch door at the center-front of the kitchen is still used for outside access. The library at the rear of the home is a cozy gathering place amongst all the grandeur of the first floor rooms. It is fitted with floor-to-ceiling bookshelves and a brick fireplace clad in a white wood mantle. Upstairs, the master bedroom is right in keeping with the original design of the home. It features a brick fireplace, gleaming wood flooring, a windowed walk-in closet, and a master bath. The bath provides a large tiled shower stall, a pedestal sink and a 1930's style black and white tiled floor. There are five more bedrooms on this level, one with its own full bath, as well as an office with laundry area, sewing and elevator room, and a hallway bath. Stone foundation walls line the full basement, and much of this level has been used as additional living space. There is a sitting area, recreation area, a powder room, plus utility and storage space. This large area is serviced by two stairways to the main floor as well as the elevator. The home's original stone carriage house offers even more living space. It most likely served as quarters for the carriage and grounds staff. The carriage house contains a garage with barn-style doors and storage for four small cars on the lower level. Its main floor has a kitchen, two other rooms and a full bath. The second floor is finished attic space and offers a large room with two adjoining smaller rooms. As an additional convenience, the carriage house has its own oil tank, private septic, electric and public water supply. This remarkable vintage home is offered at $ 1,095,000. - "Newark mansion undergoes 'miracle' restoration as affordable apartment building"

"Built in the early 20th Century, the mansion, located at 527 Mount Prospect Avenue, traces its history to the Clark Thread and Nairn Linoleum Newark Co. industrial families of Newark.

The mansion was home to British-born author Coningsby Dawson, who was married to Helen C. Wright-Clark, daughter of Nairn Linoleum Company head Peter Campbell, and widow of John Wright-Clark, a member of the Clark Thread family.

In December 1940, the house was sold to Dr. Anthony F. DePalma, who used it for medical offices for 25 years before it became a nursing home. That facility closed in the late 1980s, the house was abandoned and it became severely damaged over the years.

The property was vandalized and, with a large hole in its roof, the mansion suffered extensive water damage."

  - Vintage Gardens is a large, late nineteenth century home with portions of the framing dating to the mid nineteenth century. Little is know about the property before the Jackson and Perkins families acquired it. The earliest record of the property is Kneeland Townsend's purchase of 14.21 acres from Lyman Sherwood in 1838. Local tradition holds that the Townsend family built the house, described as wood and of "ample dimensions." In 1842, Townsend sold a parcel of just over six acres to David H. Mandeville, a farmer and reportedly a one-time steamboat captain on the North River. The property changed hands again in 1849, when Thomas Barnes purchased six acres from the Mandeville estate. Mr. Barnes, also a farmer, served as the Arcadia town supervisor in 1841-43 and as a member of the New York State assembly in 1856 before starting a dry goods business. At Barnes's death in 1864, the property passed to Albert E. Jackson and Charles H. Perkins. Initially Jackson and Perkins farmed the property raising grapes, raspberries, and vegetables. The residence primarily reflects two major construction periods and occupation by two generations of Jackson and Perkins Company executives. The large, two and one-half story wood-frame building was substantially remodeled c1880 after Charles H. Perkins moved into the home. Local historians record that Stephen N. Keener, an important local architect, rebuilt the house in 1889. In 1919 when Charles Perkins moved to California, George C. Perkins and his wife, Caroline Stuart moved into the house. George Perkins remodeled the property in c1921-22. The design is credited to E.A.P. Krabbenschmidt, a native of Germany and another prominent New York architect. In 1935, George Perkins sold the property and followed his father to California.

Enclosure Historic District

“Around the turn of the 20th century there were more noted artists and writers in Nutley than in any other community in New Jersey, with the possible exception of Montclair. Many of the artists clustered around an area in Nutley called The Enclosure. James R. Hay, who lived in the John Mason House in Calico Lane, probably can be credited with convincing creative individuals to settle in The Enclosure. Hay dealt with real estate in New York and was able to tap the enormous resources of the city, including the influx of artistic talent. It was probably not terribly difficult to convince people to reside or work in the area. The rustic beauty and the quiet setting of The Enclosure was certainly ideal for concentrating artists. The green setting of The Enclosure was much more conducive to creative work than urban New York City. The market, however, was still in New York so most of the artists living or working within The Enclosure also had studios in the city and commuted via the railroad which had a station in Nutley merely two blocks away. The railroad, built around 1885, enabled The Enclosure to develop.”

Originally built as a home in 1870, the little building was dwarfed by its newer neighbors, such as the mansion built for Senator "Don" Cameron and the adjacent Queen Anne-style house built for Ohio Senator George H. Pendleton who later became U.S. minister to Germany. Both residences, as well as a house across the street on the northwest corner of the circle built for President Chester Arthur's Secretary of the Treasury William Windom, were erected in the early 1880s. [fn.10, Massachusetts Avenue Architecture. 71] The Pendleton House was later occupied by President Cleveland's Secretary of War William C. Endicott in 1885-89. [p.3]
William Windom's home became the Peruvian Embassy in the 1930-40s, and the Chinese Legation occupied a former dwelling on the northeast side of the circle. [p.4]
A year before the underpass construction began, the Cameron and Pendleton houses were razed and replaced by the General Scott Apartment House. The William Windom House was torn down for the Australian Embassy in 1964, and the Neoclassical Williams House was demolished in 1965 for an expansion of the National Education Association's headquarters. ○ However, Romanesque architecture remained just one of many picturesque Victorian styles built in Washington before Richardson's now demolished Nicholas L. Anderson house (1663) focused the attention of the city's architects and builders on his interpretation of the style.

The Sheraton Carlton Hotel

The Carlton is located on the east side of Sixteenth Street, between I and K Streets, N.W., in Square 199 on lots 58 and 9. Lot 58 incorporated subdivision lots 27 and 28, original lot 10, and that part of original lot 11 not taken for sub-division lots 27 and 28.

Previous Structures on the Site

The Nicholas Anderson residence, designed by Henry Hobson Richardson, stood on the northeast corner of the site from 1882 until it was demolished for the Carlton Hotel in 1925. Previously, the site had been used as storage space for Dickson and King's wood and coal business. (See SSA 1, 1530 K Street, N.W.) Further south on Sixteenth Street, within the Carlton site, were attached residences of substantial size.

History

There is, in certain of the larger capitals of Europe a type of hotel as distinct as it is delightful; a type which up to now at least, has not been emulated in the United States. In North America's most beautiful city — the magnetic Capital — Washington, which bids the world to her portals at all seasons of the year — there has been completed an hotel which embodies the technical and mechanical excellence of America's finest houses with the refinements and personalized service of the smaller houses of Europe. This is the Carlton Hotel.

This hotel lends distinction to a thoroughfare long recognized as distinctive in the Capital — Sixteenth Street. But three squares from the White House this new hotel is most convenient to the business, diplomatic and the social activities of the city'

Harry Wardman built two luxury hotels in this prestigious location within a two year period. A block apart, the Hay-Adams and the Carlton stand as reminders of that brief period of wealth and indulgence that separated the Great War from the Great Depression. Like the Hay-Adams, the Carlton took the place of a fine residence designed by Henry Hobson Richardson. Tragic as that may seem to this preservation-oriented society, it is understandable that to Washingtonians of the mid-1920s these old, dark, single-family residences looked out of place in an area increasingly dominated by commercial and apartment structures; one that, architecturally, was becoming more Classical Revival than Romanesque.

Nicholas Anderson died in 1892, less than ten years after the completion of his house; Mrs. Anderson continued to live there until her death in 1917. One year later her children sold the property to Margaret Buckingham and Isabel Freeman, who also owned what is now Saint John's Parish House at 1525 H Street, documented earlier in this volume. The Anderson house was sold again in 1921 to real estate developer William F Dennis, who occupied it until 1924; he sold it on 1 May to Anna C. Walker, who sold it on the same day to Harry Wardman. Wardman acquired additional property to the south, fronting on Sixteenth Street; he purchased the south half of original lot 10 from Mae M. Douglass in June 1924 and original lot 9 from Dr. Charles S. White in September 1925. This lot was purchased through an associate, Robert G. VanVranken.

Wardman razed the Anderson house in February 1925 and applied for a building permit in May. The Carlton Hotel was designed by Wardman's chief architect at that time, Mihran Mesrobian, who was also to design the Hay-Adams. Wardman was the builder, and the cost, as estimated on the building permit, was $2,000,000, although it was without a doubt considerably more.

The Carlton was a small hotel, only two hundred and fifty-seven rooms, and it was never designed to be a money-maker. Its appeal was to those who preferred an elegant, intimate establishment, similar (as the promotional brochure stated) to the celebrated smaller houses of Europe. THE A.J.T. TAYLOR ESTATE

Palmer and Bow, Architects

Situated in isolation, on a large property with a splendid water view, Kew House is a magnificent reminder of the vision of its first owner, Alfred James Towle Taylor.

Taylor was the President of the British Pacific Properties Company, and masterminded the Guinness family investments that led to the construction of the British Properties and the Lions Gate Bridge, which changed entirely the character of West Vancouver. Until this house was built, Taylor and his family lived in the penthouse of the Marine Building, which had also been bought by British Pacific Properties.

This is a very good example of the period revivals popular between the two World Wars, known as the 'Entre-Guerre' domestic style. Kew House is a unique combination of elements of the Spanish Colonial Revival and the French Eclectic styles.

"Kew Gardens have been built on a grand scale, sloping down to the sea, and winding paths tempt one to wander on and on. The view from the circular portico is unsurpassed." (Vancouver Sun, June 26, 1939).

THE LIONS GATE BRIDGE THE GREAT CANADIAN BRIDGE GAME

From a manuscript written by Joan O. Stockdiil on the life of her father A.J.T, Taylor, the Editors of the News have produced the following article which will appear in two parts.

"By late 1932 British Pacific Securities were moving into high gear in London, and Taylor felt he should have an office befitting its status in the community. In January 1933 the company moved into 4 Cleveland Square, a rather high and narrow house of beautiful Georgian proportions overlooking the back windows of St. James' Palace, and forming the centre of a most pleasing vista for the Londoner approaching the Palace along Pall Mall. He finished the apartment at the top of the six floor building and' planned to stay there during the week when he was in England, only going home to Rabbit Lane at the weekend. This seldom happened, because his wife Mona saw no reason for staying in London, less than forty miles from home."

  - Montgomery was chosen in 1846 to be the state capital. In 1861, Jefferson Davis was sworn in as the president of the Confederacy in Montgomery.
In October 1889, J. Hiram Vickers sold the land to William Davis and Thomas Scott. In 1904 a strip of land 100 feet wide through the land was dedicated to Montgomery County for the express purpose of building an electric railroad. The land must always be used for public transit or it reverts back to its owners. Today that strip of land is Madison Avenue.
The Remainder of the land was sold to Albert F. Wilson, James S. Pinkard and Massey Wilson for $25,000 in 1904. On November 29, 1904 Pinkard and the others started Capitol Heights Development Company. The land was broken up in Blocks and Lots and called Capitol Heights. H.L. Pinckard was the president for many years and was responsible for the development of the town. The town of Capitol Heights incorporated in 1907, and the area was graded and improved through the proceeds of a 1916 bond issue. Capitol Heights became a part of Montgomery around 1926. The structures in Capitol Heights were built in the vogue residence styles of the early 20th century. The Craftsman style of the Greene brothers in southern California made a definite influence on the developers, who altered the style to suit the climate and construction material available in Alabama. The low-pitched gabled roof flanked by ornamented exposed roof rafters and porches with brick and wood support columns are the most common characteristics of the homes. Some homes are accented with decorative beams with stucco, and multiple roof planes. A variety of construction materials were used, but the majority of the homes are brick craftsman and gingerbread bungalows or wood siding with brick piers and porch supports.

  - [Red herring?] I hadn't been to Montgomery, Alabama since the summer of 1996, when I took Amtrak's sweet old southbound, The Crescent, down from Washington, DC. The F. Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald Museum, on Felder Avenue in a house where Scott, Zelda and Scottie lived in 1931 and 1932, drew me there; I was a graduate student then, writing about Scott for what would turn into a keynote address for the Fitzgerald Centenary Conference at Princeton University that fall. Ten years before, in 1986, the house was to be torn down, but Julian and Leslie McPhillips saved the Fitzgeralds' old home from demolition and founded the only museum in the world dedicated to Scott and Zelda's lives and works. The town was quiet and beautiful, the museum evocative and full of items from books Scott inscribed for Zelda's father to Zelda's color-filled Modern paintings, and the McPhillipses were most gracious hosts. I vowed some day
I'd come back and stay longer.
  - Zelda Sayre had just graduated from Sydney Lanier High School in the spring of 1918. She was a playful, smart, sassy Southern belle, the youngest child of an Alabama Supreme Court judge and his beautiful wife, who was an artist, poet, and -- in the terms of her times -- viewed as eccentric. At an afternoon tea at Winter Place, a mansion just up the street from her family's house at 6 Pleasant Avenue, Zelda and Scott most likely saw each other for the first time: according to Joseph Winter Thorington, his aunt formally introduced the two.
Zelda would conjure up that first vision of Scott in the novel she wrote in Montgomery on Felder Avenue, Save Me The Waltz (1932)...

  - National Register of Historic Places Registration Form. Lothrop Mansion NRHP #88001346
"2001 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., known as the Lothrop Mansion, is a three-story, masonry-bearing residential structure built in 1908-09. D.C. Building permit #843 dated September 2, 1908 records the construction of this house on Lot 185 in Square 2536. (Prior to 1934, the house was known by the street number 2101.) Built for Alvin Lothrop, partner in the Woodward and Lothrop Company, the house was designed by the Washington, D.C. firm of Hornblower and Marshall. The large, limestone-faced residence was constructed to hold 40 rooms and was expected at the time of its building permit to reach $100,000 in construction costs.
The Location

The house is sited at the apex of Connecticut Avenue as it extends to the northwest beyond the original limits of the city of Washington. Located in the angle of the intersection of Connecticut Avenue and Columbia Road, the house commands one of Washington's most prominent sites, enjoying one of the city's best views. The main facade of the house is oriented to the south; its entrance way is less prominently placed on the north facade. Built on a grand scale, the house recalls the era when this site was on the edge of the city of Washington." <http://pdfhost.focus.nps.gov/docs/nrhp/text/88001346.PDF>

- MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE HEIGHTS
HIGHLIGHTS
 Massachusetts Avenue Heights is regal. The homes are grand, and the lawns are manicured. Several of the streets wind through wooded areas, making it hard to believe the community is in the heart of a metropolitan city. Like Kalorama to its south, Massachusetts Avenue Heights has many embassies. From Dupont Circle and through Kalorama and Massachusetts Avenue Heights, the area surrounding Massachusetts Avenue is known as Embassy Row. While several of the older palatial buildings are embassies, many of the newer grand homes are residences. Much of Massachusetts Avenue Heights has a tranquil, sylvan appearance with single lane bridges and narrow roads winding through the neighborhood. Within the Normanstone parkway is the Kahil Gibran Memorial Garden. Several of the streets also end in cul-de-sacs.

Rock Creek Park forms the southeast border of the community. The impressive Washington National Cathedral, St. Albans School, the upper school of National Cathedral School, and Beauvoir Elementary are located in Massachusetts Avenue Heights.

HISTORY

The northern section of Massachusetts Avenue Heights was part of the parcel of land granted to George Beall of Georgetown in 1723 and of a smaller parcel of that land purchased by Uriah Forrest, Benjamin Stoddart, and William Deakins in the early 1790s and called Pretty Prospects (see history of Cleveland Park). One of the estates that was carved out of Pretty Prospects was an Italianate mansion built in 1858 called both Belvoir and Beauvoir, which means beautiful view in French. The manor and its 13 acres were the summer residence of Dr. Samuel Busey. Upon his death in 1901, the property was given to Nevada Senator William Sharon. Mr. and Mrs. J. Townsend Russell, the last owners and the Residentary Canon of Washington, gave the property to the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation in 1922. The Beauvoir Elementary School was housed in the building until the early 1960s.

The city designed by L'Enfant in 1791 was to include a national cathedral, but it was not until 1893 that Congress granted a charter to the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia. The National Cathedral School for girls was established in 1900 and St. Albans School for boys in 1905, and both preceded the Cathedral. Dr. Henry Yates Satterlee, the first bishop of Washington, helped secure Mount Saint Albans as the site. Mount Saint Albans was originally owned by Joseph Nourse who bought the land in 1813. His daughter, Phoebe, who died in 1850, left $40 in gold for the establishment of St. Albans Church. In 1907 President Theodore Roosevelt struck the foundation stone with the mallet used by George Washington to dedicate the Capitol Building. The final tower was completed in 1990.

The southern section of Massachusetts Avenue Heights, particularly along Massachusetts Avenue, was much like its neighbor to the south (see history of Kalorama). Many fine residences were built along Massachusetts Avenue. Until the depression, some of Washington and the country's most influential citizens lived on or near the Avenue. When many lost their fortunes, the estate homes were bought by embassies and associations.

With Dr. Busey's death, in 1901, the property passed to Nevada senator William Sharon. The last private owners of the estate, however, were Mr. and Mrs. J. Townsend Russell, the Residentary Canon of Washington, who gave the estate to the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation in 1922. At the time, the property included 13 acres and was valued at $400,000. Beauvoir was used as an elementary school but was ultimately razed in the early 1960s to make room for a school by the same name," [n.b. - 1900 – 1993, Willard Gebhart

A graduate of the Cornell University School of Architecture, Gebhart took a position with landscape architects J.H. Small and Sons in Washington, D.C. upon concluding his studies. His career, which spanned over 65 years included site designs for the Folger Shakespeare Library, the British Embassy, and Senator Joseph Guffey's residence in Georgetown. Gebhart also worked on several projects in Michigan, including the landscape plan for Muskegon Causeway Memorial Park. In 1924, Gebhart laid out the garden plan for Arbremont, known today as Hillwood, the Washington, D.C. estate of Colonel And Mrs. Henry P. Erwin. The strong, central axis, formality in a casual garden setting, broad view terraces, and easy access between the house and garden became hallmarks of his style and can still be seen in Hillwood's gardens today.

- "Obituary – Edward C. Shotwell

Edward C. Shotwell, widely known throughout the trade and industry as the head of SH Shotwell & Son for years leading tanners of Gloversville, died at his Winter home at Enterprise, Florida on Wednesday February 15 as the result of injuries received when the tractor he was using in plowing toppled over and crushed him.

Mr Shotwell who was 44 years of age was born in Gloversville. On reaching manhood he became associated with his father Samuel H Shotwell who was already established in the leather business. On the death of the latter Edward C Shotwell continued to conduct the tannery until 1919 when he sold it to the Helburn Thompson Company the present owners. During the war Mr Shotwell was a “dollar a year man”. His knowledge of leather made him invaluable to the Quartermaster Department and throughout our participation in the war he was stationed at Washington in charge of glove and coat leather for the Government as a member of the Hide and Leather Control Board. Although he had retired from the tanning business at the time of his death he was vice president of the Van Vleet Glove Company of Gloversville and an official of the Acme Glove Works of Montreal Canada. Like the best men of his type, Mr. Shotwell never found himself too busily engaged with his own interests to devote considerable time to civic affairs and he had a part in all public movements and concerns. He is survived by his wife, a daughter and a son, a sister, and two brothers. The funeral was held at his home Johnstown NY on Monday February 20.” p.29, The Glovers Review, March 1922 <https://books.google.com/books?id=4tQcAQAAMAAJ&pg=RA2-PA29&dq=%22Edward+c+shotwell%22&hl=en&sa=X&ei=YZxcVf-KEomVNoGcgagN&ved=0CB0Q6AEwAA#v=onepage&q=%22Edward%20c%20shotwell%22&f=false>

  - Sisters open doors to community for 50th anniversary ; Daughters of Charity of The Sacred Heart by Krystin St. George, Editor of The Littleton Courier, August 18, 2010
 LITTLETON—Nestled at the top of Grove Street overlooking Littleton is one of the most peaceful places you will find in town.
 The grounds are lush with flowers, the views of the town and the surrounding mountains are spectacular and there is a calm that is inviting.
 This locale and its buildings aren't home to just anyone, but are the home of the Daughters of Charity of The Sacred Heart of Jesus.
 For 50 years, these Catholic sisters have lived among the Littleton community, giving assistance where needed and also getting help from people in the area when necessary.
 This Saturday, the sisters will say thank you for being part of Littleton for 50 years with a full day celebration.
 "We really hope people can avail themselves to join us," said Sr. Monique Couture. "We wouldn't be here if it weren't for the support of the community."
 The day will start with a small private meal with the sisters and distinguished guests at noon. That will be followed by a 1:30 p.m. festive liturgy at St. Rose of Lima Church on High Street and an open house from 3:30-6:30 p.m. at the convent. During the open house, Bishop John McCormack will rededicate the building.

Fifty years ago, it was community spirit that helped bring the sisters to Littleton, according to Couture. When the sisters branched out in 1949 after the government structure of the congregation was divided into provinces, Sacred Heart, which has its original building in Newport, Vt., took up residence in Colebrook. They established a school and it did so well, a bigger space had to be found for the administration and sisters. That land was found high up on Grove Street in Littleton, where the sunsets and mountain views are gorgeous.

In the summers, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Morron lived on that land, which extended towards the Rocks Estate and through where Interstate 93 is today, but was cut off when the interstate went through. The farm was called Hill Acres and a sign and pillars commemorating that can still be seen on and near a building on Route 302 heading towards Bethlehem.

The farm contained dairy cattle, sheep, thoroughbred horses and German shepherd dogs, according to Couture.

When the Morron's passed, Mrs. Morron's son, Lowell Burch and his wife Katharine, played a key part in the giving. According to, "Littleton: Crossroads of Northern New Hampshire," edited by the late Jack Colby, the couple donated the mansion and 68 acres to Francis Cardinal Spellman of New York. He sent the deed to the Bishop of New Hampshire, Ernest Primeau.

Couture said Primeau knew the sisters were looking for a place to expand and in 1960, the building and land were given to the Daughters of Charity of The Sacred Heart to be used as a novitiate, according to the Littleton book. <http://www.newhampshirelakesandmountains.com/Articles-c-2010-08-18-151883.113119-Sisters-open-doors-to-community-for-50th-anniversary.html>

    - Our History
The Great Masterpiece attraction was created around Leonardo da Vinci's Last Supper. In 1929, August Wagner Company of Berlin created a 300,000-piece mosaic of da Vinci's artwork. The artwork consists of 10 panels each weighing over 500 pounds. The mosaic was flown from Germany to New York and eventually assembled in Lake Wales, Florida. The original owners donated the mosaic which now adorns the Gustafson Fine Arts Center at Bob Jones University in Greenville, South Carolina.

The 75-acre Christian retreat center is located on the former Masterpiece Gardens tourist attraction, which closed in 1978. In 1985, Peninsular Florida District Council of the Assemblies of God completed a 450-bed dormitory, gymnasium and cafeteria as well as a 65,000-gallon swimming pool on the lush grounds of Lake Pierce.

Masterpiece Gardens has been committed to providing organizations with a safe, clean and exciting environment to hold conferences, retreats and camps. Our goal is to continue to build a tradition of excellence while developing new amenities for guests.

- Florida's Missing Masterpiece

It was a scenario ripped right off the silver screen. A work of art hidden in a basement to avoid the bombing in Europe during WW2 is later shipped out of the country to avoid Russian capture. It ends up a Florida tourist attraction.

The Great Masterpiece found a semi-permanent home in Lake Wales after being brought from Rockefeller Center in 1950. European artists painfully crafted the mosaic of Da Vinci's "Last Supper" over a two-year period. 300,000 pieces in over 10,000 color hues came together to form the whole. Lush vegetation surrounded the mosaic's housing, which was little more than a large outdoor wall with a pull curtain. Several rows of benches under palm trees provided a place for the devoted to reflect and the curious to gaze.

Promising visitors a different experience, The Great Masterpiece carved out a niche on the heavily tourist traveled Orange Blossom Trail. Coupled with Cypress Gardens and The Singing Tower, the attractions were coined “The Big Three” of central Florida.

Accompanying the great work of art at its early inception was a museum with small-scale replicas of Leonardo Da Vinci's many inventions. There was a court of flags area and a small train named the Phantom Express which gave rides through "a virgin jungle." Of course, there was also the obligatory alligator pool.

The attraction was active when it came to putting on a fresh face for the public. In the 60s the park expanded to include gift shop glass blowers. Fort Clinch, "a real Indian log fort reconstructed," was also added.

When the early 70s rolled around, the park promoted itself as having eight major attractions in one tropical setting. Later additions had included Monkey Island, a deer feeding park and sky ride over the 38-acre landscape. During this period of expansion, The Great Masterpiece was renamed Masterpiece Gardens.

Artifact from a lost attraction

Although Masterpiece Gardens was a mere 30 minutes from Disney, the mouse would show no mercy. Disney's all-inclusive park would once again suck visitors into its magic and blind them from what else Florida had to offer. The allure of art and nature that Masterpiece Gardens held was dealt a crippling blow by Walt's fantasyland.

Ken Curtis is one person who is all too familiar with Disney strategies. His family owned Masterpiece Gardens. Growing up and working on the attraction he witnessed first hand the white glove crunch of Mickey.

"Disney changed the whole thing. They've done a marvelous job of marketing. Disney is interested in only one thing - Disney. The smaller attractions couldn't compete."

In 1981, nearly 30 years after opening, Masterpiece Gardens met its maker. The rides went to auction. The property was sold to a religious group that now uses it for retreats. The Great Masterpiece mosaic found itself on the way to a South Carolina religious college.

There is an eerie feeling walking the paths and witnessing what is left to this once proud sanctuary. The jungle trail is almost impassable, as its pink bridge has become dilapidated. On the other side of it, overgrown plants and vines have grown up through and coiled themselves around empty, rusted animal cages. Other remnants of what was appear in various forms - an old sign, the weathered greens of a mini golf course, a dry gator pool and a large empty white wall, upon which, so many once looked in awe.

    - Mike_Cirba:
The Babe Zaharias Golf Course derives its primary significance from its association with Babe Didrikson Zaharias, a champion athlete known for her prominence in golf and other sports. Among her many accomplishments, Babe's participation is credited as an instrumental factor in the founding of the (LPGA) Ladies Professional Golf Association. Babe and her husband George Zaharias were owners of this golf course from 1949 to 1955.
The Babe Zaharias Golf Course also has significance for its relationship to the unique aspect of community development whereby a public facility is used as the focal point for the simultaneous development of surrounding residential buildings, with reinforcement of that relationship demonstrated by continuity of style.

History: Joseph Baker Legg (1885-1940) was born in Baltimore, the son of John Carter Legg (b. 1848, Winchester, Va.) and Belle Cunningham Legg (b. 1848, Berkeley Co., W. Va.). He lived at 102 N. Carey St. as a youth and attended Gilman Country School but did not graduate, going into the flour and grain business. By 1924, he worked as an adjuster with the C&P Telephone Company in Baltimore city, and lived at 2508 N. Calvert St., moving to 2415 N. Calvert St. by the time of his death. Legg was a member of the Maryland Historical Society.

At some point, Legg began systematically documenting Baltimore buildings and sites through photography, focusing especially on residences in the center of the city which seemed destined to be destroyed. In his application for membership to the Maryland Historical Society, Legg wrote: ". . . for last 4 or 5 years (I) have made study of old Baltimore, taking or copying pictures whenever available, I now have two albums of same".

o Likely red herring:

"This might have been the best obituary ever. Alexander Brown was the patriarch of a large family of bankers that settled here in Baltimore in the early 1800s and started Alex Brown and Sons. Some of them migrated to New York and started a bank called Brown Brothers. When I was doing some research on another one of my posts I stumbled upon this March 21, 1892 New York Times obituary of Alexander Davison Brown who died on March 20 of 1892 and was grandson of the bank's founder.

Alexander Brown's Death - An Old Age Made Miserable By An Unwise Marriage

"Baltimore, March 20 1892 -- Alexander Brown seventy-three years died here to-day. He was a member of the well-know family of bankers, but was outlawed from society on account of his marriage to Laura Hobson. This woman was the daughter of his father's lodge keeper. Brown fell in love with her and would have married her then, but she disappeared, and when next he met her she was the leader of the local demi-monde. He persuaded her to marry him"

...Mrs. Brown was granted a divorce a mensa-et-thoro from her husband, by the Baltimore County Court, July 9, 1891. Her former husband was to pay her $3,000 a year "during their joint lives". The decree of court says that "nothing in the decree or in the granting of the divorce shall operate to release or extinguish the defendant's right of dower in the real estate of Mr. Brown, nor any of her marital rights in his property if she should survive him." Mr Hack declares that Mr. Brown had only a life estate at Brookland Wood, and that at his death the estate went to his son, George Brown."

I. Alvin Pasarew, 90, state planning director
I. Alvin Pasarew, retired state planning director and civil engineer, died Tuesday of heart failure at Brightwood Retirement Community in Lutherville. He was 90 and lived in Pikesville.
Mr. Pasarew retired from state government in 1960 and became a consulting engineer.

The state planning chief from 1940 to 1959, he was a civil engineer who worked on projects from Allegany County to the Eastern Shore.

In 1946, he was appointed to a commission to study recreational uses for the Patapsco River Valley, and the panel's work led to the creation of Patapsco State Park. In 1958, he completed a similar study for Gunpowder Falls.

Mr. Pasarew held memberships in several professional organizations, including the American Society of Civil Engineering.

Born in Baltimore, he was a graduate of Polytechnic Institute and the Johns Hopkins University, where he received bachelor and master's degrees in civil engineering.

He wed Faye Louise Blechman in 1934; she died in 1972. In 1974, he married Henrietta Feldman, who survives him.

Services were held Wednesday.

Mr. Pasarew also is survived by two daughters, Sondra L. Weinstein and Rita Rosenfeld, both of Pikesville; a brother, Jack Pasarew of Baltimore; six grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren.

  - THE MADDOX FAMILY OF OAKLAND
Posted on Thursday, August 22nd, 2013 at 9:19 pm
By Larry Upthegrove
Robert's son, Robert Foster Maddox was well educated in the Atlanta schools, The University of Georgia, and Harvard University. In 1899 he went to work for his father's bank where he began with a menial job and worked his way up to Vice-President. He continued to hold high offices in this bank and all of the resulting mergers over the years. His last banking job was the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the First National bank. He was also very active in the affairs of the City of Atlanta and served on the Board of Commissioners of Roads and revenues of Fulton County for two years, and served as the Mayor of Atlanta for two years, 1909-1910. Under his Mayoral administration, the City, through annexation, doubled in size, and Robert was able to get a $3,000,000 bond issue for construction of 12 new schools, modern sewage disposal plants, and a crematory for garbage. Robert Jr. built the estate "Woodhaven" on West Paces Ferry Road in Buckhead and raised his family of three children there. In 1967 after a huge fire had badly damaged the mansion, it was sold to the State Of Georgia. The remnants of his home were removed and a new Governor's Mansion constructed there.

<http://www.oaklandcemetery.com/the-maddox-family-of-oakland/>

- F.M. Powers, the next major landowner, sold a 400-acre farm in 1903 to James L. Dickey Sr., who in 1904 sold a tract for a summer home to Robert F. Maddox, a banker, civic leader and soon-to-be Atlanta mayor. Maddox's rambling Tudor-style mansion, "Woodhaven," was a beacon for other civic and business leaders. In 1963, Robert Maddox sold "Woodhaven" and about 20 acres to the state of Georgia. The state saved the carriage house and terraced gardens, but demolished the house and built the present Governor's Mansion, which is open to the public. Woodhaven Road, which runs through land Maddox once owned, preserves the estate's name.

The Georgia Governor's Mansion, where 'Woodhaven' once stood at 391 West Paces Ferry Road. Open Tuesday - Thursday 10 a.m. - 11:30 a.m. No charge. (404) 261-1776.

  - 2015 PLACES IN PERIL: GLENRIDGE HALL, SANDY SPRINGS, FULTON COUNTY
THE STORY
Thomas K. Glenn, a pillar of Atlanta business in the early 20th Century, built this estate in 1929 on 400 acres of farmland north of Atlanta. Designed by Samuel Inman Cooper, the Tudor Revival mansion required 60 men and a calendar year to complete. The property also included stables, barns, smith and carpentry shops, and housing for workers. Thomas and his wife, Elizabeth lived at Glenridge until his death in 1946. Beginning in the 1980s, T.K. Glenn's granddaughter and her husband fought to preserve the house and its setting. Glenridge Hall was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1982 and the couple thoroughly restored the home with the dream that it be available for the public to enjoy. The home has hosted many charitable events and retreats over the years and has been used in films such as Driving Miss Daisy and, most recently, The Vampire Diaries.

THE THREAT

Of the original 400 acres, only approximately 80 acres remain as part of the Glenridge property. In the summer of 2014, that acreage was placed up for sale. Because of its location (just west of Georgia 400 and bisected by Abernathy Road), large-scale commercial development highly likely. At this time, there are no protections for Glenridge Hall that would keep the home from being significantly altered, or even demolished, and its surrounding property inappropriately developed. Conservation easements and other tax incentives could help preserve this beautiful home and grounds.

- Savage Sandy Springs House-Killing Caught on Camera

Tuesday, April 14, 2015, by Michael Kahn

[Depressing images via 11Alive.]

Death came swiftly to Glenridge Hall. From high above Abernathy Road, the 11 Alive team captured the scene Thursday as the 84-year-old matriarch of Sandy Springs was battered to death with bulldozers and front-end loaders. One of the few remaining vestiges of early Sandy Springs — and one of only two properties in the city included on the National Register of Historic Places — the Tudor manor succumb to "progress" (pronounced: "greed and shortsightedness"), making way for the ironic rise of a faux English Village. For those who like rubbernecking car wrecks, you'll find photos of the carnage after the jump. And for the record, there was nothing dignified about it.

- Glenridge Hall: A little known Sandy Springs historic gem

By Tova Fruchtman, Posted by admin on June 1, 2007.

Just off Abernathy Road in Sandy Springs, between Glenridge Drive and Glenlake Parkway, lies a driveway between two white picket fences that brings people to another place and time.

Nestled amidst the hustle and bustle of GA 400, office parks, traffic and strip malls, a person could drive by the historical gem every day and never know it.

But when Joseph Mayson and his 20-year-old daughter Caroline head home, they turn down the driveway, follow it through a natural wooded landscape of seasoned trees and arrive at Glenridge Hall—a home that is full of history and full of life.

Glenridge Hall was built by Thomas K. Glenn and his second wife, Elizabeth in 1929 on a farm that Glenn had purchased in 1915.

Glenn played a major role in Atlanta's history, holding leadership positions at Georgia Power, Trust Company of Georgia and Atlantic Steel among his many accomplishments. The family kidded that Glenridge Hall was built to rival Glenn's brother and sister-in-law's home: Callanwolde, which is now the Callanwolde Fine Arts Center. But after Glenn died the family moved from the home and it began to fall into disrepair.

  - "There was no fair in 1904 because of a suit filed to test the legality of funds granted to the Livestock Breeders' Association. The state auditor refused to authorize the money for the fair. The 1906 fair was again held at Churchill Downs, and the next year the Board of Agriculture decided on Louisville as the permanent site. One hundred fifty acres in the southwestern corner of the city at Cecil Ave. lying west of Thirty-eighth St. and north of Gibson Ln. were purchased on Dec. 6, 1907. The 1908 Fair opened in the shadow of a newly constructed livestock pavilion...In time the facilities became antiquated so that the 1946 legislature authorized the sale of bonds to construct the Kentucky Fair and Exposition Center on 357 acres (now over 400) south of Louisville, adjacent to Stabdiford field (later Louisville International Airport).” p.480, The Encyclopedia of Louisville, John E. - “The first Kentucky State Fair was held under the auspices of the Kentucky Live Stock Breeders Association and Louisville was selected as the place in which to hold it. Churchill Downs was leased and the Fair was held there in 1902 which initial effort was successful. In 1903 Owensboro offered the best proposition and was successful in having the State Fair held there that year. This meeting proved disastrous financially. There was no Fair held in 1904. In the year 1905 Lexington made the best proposal and secured the Fair. This was a great success and netted a profit of about $12,000.00. There arose a bitter fight between Louisville and Lexington as to which would secure the State Fair as a permanent location. Because of Louisville's greater resources a better offer was made by that city and so for two years the Fair was held at Churchill Downs. Louisville Ky during 1906 1907 Tn 1908 the State Fair was held at its present permanent headquarters Kentucky State Fair grounds Louisville Ky. The business interests of Louisville including the County Fiscal Court City of Louisville and some public spirited citizens of Louisville provided for the cash donation of $165,000.00 towards the purchase and equipment of these permanent grounds. The Legislature appropriated $40,000.00 for improvements. These funds aggregating $205,000.00 together with the profits of previous...” Biennial Report, Colorado.   - In Anchorage and east Louisville/ where Country Estates began developing prior to the turn of the 20th century/ these landscapes emphasized a park-like setting with trees and other vegetation dispersed around each property. Examples include Nash-McDonald House (JF612), Tilden House (JF614), Shallcross House (JF618)/ and Coldeway-Moore House (JF640)/ all in Anchorage. Eastern Louisville examples included Clifton and Fair View/ both of which were located off Frankfort Avenue and are now demolished.

  - Contrastingly/ in the communities which developed primarily in the 20th century/ Glenview/ Harrods Creek and the area around Cherokee Park in Louisville/ this landscaping was orchestrated in a formal manner which provided a heavily-screened border of trees and shrubs and a tree-peppered center. This latter feature served as a backdrop for the property's buildings. Also/ a greater number of these estates included formal gardens by this time. Examples of this variation located in Louisville include Barnard Hall/Seelbach House/ Roseheights/Allen R. Hite Estate/ Sunnyview/Frank Fehr Estate/ Gardencourt/Norton Sisters Estate and Altagate/William S. Speed Estate.

- o Wood, George T.

Manuscript Archive of George T. Wood, of Munfordville, Hart County, Kentucky, relating to the Stephen Girard Estate Lands, dated 1825-1875

The archive includes approximately 51 letters (59 mss pages) and 44 documents (53 pages) either hand written, or partially printed and completed in manuscript. Also includes 4 hand drawn plat maps. The outgoing correspondence consists mainly of retained copies of the originals, with the incoming correspondence (16 letters) being original. The archive appears to have come down from George T. Wood, who handled the Girard lands in Kentucky for the City of Philadelphia which inherited the lands from Stephen Girard. The archive is dated between June 21, 1825 to November 7, 1875.

George T. Wood (c1797-1876), of Virginia, married Elizabeth Helm, the sister of a Kentucky Governor. He appears to have spent most of his life at Munfordville, Hart County, Kentucky, where he was active as the Clerk of the Circuit and County Courts of Hart County. His venture as land agent for the City of Philadelphia would appear to be job to supplement his county clerk position.

Wood helped the City of Philadelphia get back the lands from the State of Kentucky and also proceeded to lease out some of the lands, all of which is recorded in various documents in this archive. Wood was compensated by the City of Philadelphia by drawing on the account of Martin & Griswald, of Louisville, Kentucky, where he had set up an account with the City of Philadelphia.

After the initial flurry of correspondence to reacquire the lands by the City of Philadelphia, there was no further correspondence until October of 1840, until Philadelphia's city solicitor Edward Olmsted wrote to

Wood for information on the lands, their condition, and if indeed the city owned them yet. The city apparently failed to correspond on the matter for several years. After re-establishing communication with Wood, the city inquired about the rents the lands were leased for and potential sale prices. The price was not sufficient and the city decided to continue to lease the lands. Wood later obtained better prices per acre and let the city know about it at the end of the summer of 1842.

A succession of individuals for the City of Philadelphia handled the Girard Trust Fund for the Kentucky lands. Originally it was Daniel Groves who had contacted George T. Wood, then Edward Olmstead, the City Solicitor, handled the matter for a time. Subsequently George S. Smith, Esq., treasurer of the Girard Trust (later Superintendent), who appears to have also been a correspondent of George T. Wood from the 1840s to at least 1874, at which point Wood resigned as the agent in Kentucky for the Girard Estate lands. Wood died in 1876.

- Maury (1846-1919), one of Louisville's most prolific architects, collaborated with Dodd in several projects significant in delivering the revolutionary Chicago Style to this city. One of this team's earliest buildings was the 1889-91 Louisville Trust Bank Building. In it, they captured successfully the spirit of the modern message for the first time locally in a Richardsonian skyscraper. Together they also produced a host of magnificent dwellings in fashionable Old Louisville and in the burgeoning suburb of the Cherokee Triangle. True to the national trend, many of the dwellings were executed in the immensely popular Romanesque revival mode; yet some, such as their 1893 American Colonial revival home for George T. Wood on Cherokee Road, reveal a fascinating propensity that the two had for embracing the most novel features of the quickly changing reservoir of historic styles and modeling them to this region's particular likes and dislikes.

- History of Hurstbourne

The center section of the present Club House of Hurstbourne Country Club was on Col. Anderson's estate, and is thought to have been built about 1818. For whom it was built is not known. Several families owned it before it was deeded on July 6, 1915 by Elizabeth A. F. Harris, widow of Joseph L. Harris, to Alvin T. Hert. The land in that deed was described as "Hurstbourne Farm in Jefferson County, Kentucky... on Shelbyville Turnpike and waters of Beargrass." Several Louisvillians remember the house when the Harrises lived in it and described it as very English, almost Tudor in decoration, and recollect that the living room was filled with silver trophies.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin T. Hert were prominent in Louisville Social and political affairs. Mrs. Hert was Vice-Chairman of the Republican National Committee from 1924 to 1936, and Mr. Hert, head of the American Creosoting Company, was also prominent in Republican politics until his death in 1921.

In 1928, Mrs. Hert engaged E. T. Hutchings, a Louisville architect, to remodel and enlarge the house for her residence. Her original plan was to give the appearance of the old 1918 brick center to wings which were to be added, but she liked the color of the new brick so well that the outside layer of the old brick from the center portion was removed and the whole house covered with the new. The Gothic details, added to the old brick house, possibly by the Harrises, were retained and carried out on the exterior of the mansion.

The most beautiful room in the house was the 60' x 30' drawing room with its 14' ceiling, now the main dining room of the Hurstbourne County Club. Mrs. Hert engaged Charles Duveen, head of the noted decorating and antiques firm of Charles of London, in New York, to panel the room for her with oak paneling from a century old English house, and the ornamental ceiling was designed from a pattern taken from the same house. H. Charles Duveen was one of the twelve children of Sir Joel Duveen, founder of the famous firm of Duveen Brothers in London, and was a brother of Lord Joseph Duveen, noted art connoisseur and dealer. It was Charles of London who introduced the vogues for Elizabethan period furnishings in America, and decorated many palatial homes in the United States. A year or so before he brought the paneling to Hurstbourne, he imported a paneled room once used by Charles I for William Randolph Hearst at a cost of $150,000.

There were 35 rooms in Lyndon Hall, now the Hurstbourne Club House, counting the storage rooms, vaults, cold rooms, machinery rooms and many baths. One of the garages behind the Club House was once a stable that was the home of the famous race horse, Ten Broeck, named for a family that occupied the house at one time. Mrs. Hert's saddle horse, Major Pendennis, and a German police dog are buried in marked graves on the estate. The beautiful, white frame house beside the Clubhouse belongs to the Charles McNeal family, relatives of Mrs. Hert.

For about twenty years, until her death in 1948, Mrs. Hert lived in her lovely home with its beautiful gardens complete with a gazebo and gorgeous strutting peacocks.

The estate was purchased in 1949 by L. LeRoy Highbaugh Sr. and Jr. and the name changed to Highbaugh Farms. The Highbaughs lived in the house for a number of years. Then in 1965 began to develop the estate into a community to be known as Hurstbourne, with plans for a shopping center, offices, schools, churches, a country club complex containing a 27 hole golf course covering 240 acres, and stately Lyndon Hall as its club house.

o Death of David M. Look

DAVID M. LOOK, 82, New York business man and Kentucky farmer and horse breeder, died at 1:00 A. M. on June 21, 1945, at The Union Club in New York. The news did not cause a surprise to many local friends of Mr. Look who knew that he was in poor health and had recently suffered a series of severe heart attacks. His plans had called for a trip to Lexington that week which could not be carried out because of his health.

Mr. Look was a native of New York, having been born at Claysville near Utica, March 30, 1863, the son of Samuel J. and Jennie Millard Look. With his parents he moved to Louisville as a small boy where he was reared and which caused the impression among many people that he was a native of Kentucky. He attended schools in Louisville after which he entered Princeton, from which university he graduated in 1894.

Following graduation he went to New York, where he entered business with James Talcott, the largest woolen brokerage house in New York. His original position with the firm was a minor one with a corresponding salary. He built up his position with the firm and through this and other interests, developed later, became a very wealthy man.

This made it possible for him to indulge his love for trotters, a natural inheritance as his father was senior member of the well-known firm of Look and Smith of Louisville, who did an extensive business in horses, especially trotters. His first brood mare was Morning Bells, a sister to Matin Bells 2.061/2, Beasant 2.061/2, Boreal, 3, 2.153/4, etc. The first trotter he bred was Emily Ellen, 3, 2.091/4, a Futurity winner, high-class brood mare, and a family founder. Both her sons and daughters bred on well. Three of her sons sired 2.00 performers, something no other mare has accomplished. Few men breed horses for close to forty years and retain their original animal bred. That was true of Mr. Look as Emily Ellen died but a few weeks ago at 38. Actually she lacked a few weeks of reaching 38 as her foaling date was June 26.

In 1913 Mr. Look bought Castleton, the former estate of the Castleman family, from the late James R. Keene, a native of England, who had with the assistance of his brother-in-law, Major Foxhall A.

Daingerfield, built up the most successful stud of Thoroughbreds in the United States. Castleton had been a trotting nursery before being acquired by Mr. Keene. In partnership with the late Watson B. Dickerman and John E. Madden, he bought the Ardmere stud of William Bradley of Raritan, N. J., with the famous stallion, Bingen at its head, which were moved to Castleton. Later Messrs. Look and Dickerman bought the interest of Mr. Madden and still later the horses were divided between these two, Mr. Dickerman moving his portion later to his Hillanddale Farm at Mamaroneck, near New York City.

...The Castleton Stud will be dispersed this fall. Announcement to this effect was made the past week by Samuel M. Look, who with his brother, Edward T. Look, is executor of the estate. There are 57 horses at Castleton all of which are to be sold with the exception of Lee Tide, 4, 2.05 that is now 27 years old, and a few aged mares which are to be pensioned. Thirteen yearlings are included in the list of horses, one of which is a full brother to the world's champion trotting stallion, Spencer Scott, 4, 1.571/4 that is also the joint champion four-year-old trotter with Greyhound. No disposition will be made of Castleton for the present. It has been in the ownership of Mr. Look for thirty-five years during which time it has been one of the most famous of all trotting horse farms. Previous to its purchase by Mr. Look, it was owned by the late James R. Keene. and was managed by his brother-in-law, Major Foxhall A. Daingerfield, which combination proved to be the most successful of that day in the production of Thoroughbreds. The farm will be under the management of Samuel M. Look.

—By Jesse Shuff— <http://www.mi-harness.net/SBreds/Memor119.html>

- o The ownership of Castleton passed through a number of hands in the late 1800's before it was acquired by Wall Street investor James R. Keene. Keene transformed Castleton into probably the greatest thoroughbred farm in the United States at the time – with thoroughbreds such as DOMINO, SYSONBY, SPENDTHRIFT, PETER PAN, KINGSTON, SWEEP, BALLOT, BLACK TONEY, BEN BRUSH (1896 Kentucky Derby winner), and COLIN originating from its soil.. In 1908, London Sportsman Magazine declared that Keene possessed, "the greatest lot of race horses ever owned by one man."

Keene exited the business as thoroughbred racing fell on hard times on the '20s. For it's next owner, Castleton would again become a trotting farm - the new owner was David Look, another New Yorker. Look would go on to have significant success with names such as SPENCER, and SPENCER SCOTT (1944 world champion trotting stallion).

During the Depression, Look encountered financial difficulties and finally sold the farm in 1945. In the decades that followed, Castleton was rebuilt and returned to glory under the ownership of Fredrick and Frances Dodge Van Lennep.

Creator: Anne Bruce Haldeman, 1903-1993
Biographical Note:
Anne Bruce Haldeman was born in Louisville, Kentucky in 1903 to the Haldeman family, prominent newspaper publishers. Haldeman lived to be 90 years old and left a legacy as one of the earliest and most pre-eminent female landscape architects in Kentucky. After graduating from Bennett College in New York State, she noted that her career in landscape architecture started 'accidentally' while her parents were designing a country home in Glenview, KY. She eventually enrolled in the Cambridge School of Architecture and Landscape Architecture, which is now part of Harvard University. Graduating in 1931, Haldeman, along with her classmate and partner Louise Leland (1902-1956), returned to Louisville in 1934 and founded the landscape architectural firm of Haldeman & Leland. The office was located in the Francis Building at 606 S. 4th Street. Haldeman and Leland resided in Glenview, KY near the Haldeman family property. Following the early death of Leland in 1956, the firm dissolved. Haldeman continued to work in landscape design for the remainder of her life.
While Anne Bruce Haldeman designed numerous gardens and landscapes throughout the region, she is best remembered for her role in the historically-informed gardens at My Old Kentucky Home State Park, in Bardstown, KY, Farmington Historic Plantation, in Louisville, KY, and as a consultant for Shaker Village of Pleasant Hill in Mercer Co., KY. Haldeman was a member of the group who spearheaded the movement to rescue the historically significant home and gardens of Farmington, the plantation originally built from 1815-1816 by John and Lucy Fry Speed. She helped to found the Historic Homes Foundation Inc., a local organization created to protect the integrity of historic homes. Throughout the late 1960s and 70s, Haldeman researched the Speed family, the home, as well as the time period, to create as historically accurate gardens as possible. In 1973 Haldeman was awarded the Mrs. Oakleigh Thorne Medal for outstanding achievement in Garden Design from the Garden Club of America. She was also one of the first women to join the American Society of Landscape Architects. Anne Bruce Haldeman died in 1993.

  - "19. History
The house was built in 1928 for Bruce Haldeman, a well-known figure in the Louisville newspaper field from 1885 when he began working as a reporter for The (Louisville) Courier Journal, until 1918 when he retired as president of the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times Company. The Haldeman family's involvement with daily newspapers in Louisville began prior to the Civil War when Walter N. Haldeman (Bruce Haldeman's father) founded the Daily Courier which merged with the Journal and The Democrat in 1868 to form The Courier-Journal--a newspaper which still exists.

The house was designed by the Louisville firm of Nevin, Wischmeyer, and Morgan, which was active from about 1920-1929 under that name. Frederick Morgan (1889-1970) was the partner most likely responsible for the plan. Morgan was well known for his work in Revival styles, especially Georgian and Colonial Revival. Many of his commissions were for handsome residences with particularly fine interior millwork and details. The original plans are in the possession of the present owners. The gardens were planned by Annie Bruce Haldeman, a Louisville landscape designer and daughter of the builder of the house.”

  - “Alloway House
At the center of the nearby Cherosen neighborhood is the Alloway House, one of the finest Tudor Revival residences in Louisville. It was built in 1907 by a prominent manufacturer and civic leader, Colonel Andrew Cowan, to overlook the eastern tip of Cherokee Park. Well-known Philadelphia architect, Wilson Eyre, noted for designing numerous private residences and estates in the Northeast, designed the house. The house took its name from the locality where the Scottish poet laureate Robert Burns lived and wrote. Andrew Cowan was born September 29, 1841 in Ayreshire, Scotland. He came to the U. S. in 1848 and served in the Union army during the Civil War, where he attained the rank of Lt. Colonel. He came to Louisville in 1866 and established the firm of Andrew Cowan & Co., manufacturers of leather belts, boot and shoe leather, harnesses and saddles and railroad and mill supplies. He also became a director of the Bank of Commerce and the Columbia Finance & Trust Company. He served as a member of the first Board of Park Commissioners.
At Cowan's death in 1918, the estate was sold to Richard S. Reynolds, co-founder and president of Reynolds Metals Company, pioneers in the aluminum products industry. The Reynolds family owned the estate until 1951. In 1952 the estate, which then comprised a little over 20 acres, was subdivided, leaving the house with about a one-acre lot.”

- “Brookland Parkway, Historic Name: Sherwood Park, Richmond, VA Stretching for three-quarters of a mile between Brook and Hermitage Roads, this parkway represents the sole realized feature of Frederick Law Olmsted, Sr.’s plan for Sherwood Park, the streetcar suburb commissioned in 1891 by local businessman Lewis Ginter. Located northwest of downtown Richmond, the 225-acre neighborhood was one of the earliest proposals for suburban development following the introduction of the electric streetcar in 1888. Here, Olmsted, Sr. planned the arcing Brookland Park Boulevard, now named Brookland Parkway, to be a central spine for Sherwood Park, flowing diagonally in counterpoint to the rectilinear city grid. Olmsted’s design for the suburb featured gently curving streets tracing the neighborhood’s topography, large lots with generous frontages, and oval-shaped blocks, some of which were three times the size of Richmond’s traditional rectilinear layout. Due to an economic downturn in 1895, Olmsted, Sr.’s plans for the suburb—save the boulevard—were never realized and, in the 1920s, rectangular blocks with modest frontages were developed.”

• 43.713749, -70.228420                      05675   Brown Chapel   Falmouth                      Maine 2                      1913

- “...Our story continues in 1889 with a young girl from Portland, Maine. Her name is Alida Greely Brown, and she is the daughter of General John Marshall Brown and Alida Carroll Brown. Sadly, the young Alida died while studying abroad in Switzerland. She had only lived for 18 years. In 1890, General and Mrs. Brown erected a private memorial chapel on their rural estate in Falmouth Foreside in honor of their beloved Alida. They named this chapel after the other young girl who is known today as Saint Mother the Virgin, the Mother of God.
The history of Falmouth helps to elucidate the evolution of both the beautiful structure and the character of Saint Mary’s. Falmouth was incorporated in 1718 as a town that included all of what is now Portland, South Portland, Cape Elizabeth and parts of Westbrook. The other communities separated later in that century and in the early 19th century. While Portland grew into a city, Falmouth remained a farming community. In the late 19th century, several large estates were built in the Foreside area, and that part of town became a summer community along the shores of Casco Bay.

The Memorial Chapel of Saint Mary the Virgin was inspired by the Norman Church of Saint Mary's in Iffley in Oxfordshire, England. General Brown also selected the site of their chapel with care: the chapel was orientated so that the sun will shine through the East window above the altar on the morning of the Feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary which occurs every year on March 25.

At that time, the whole chapel consisted of what is now the sacristy and the chancel, with the simplest carved wooden altar set under the stained glass windows that had been designed and executed by Henry Holiday. The chapel became used regularly in the summers for worship. In 1902, General Brown added the central Norman tower, in memory of his mother, father and daughter. During those early days, the summer congregation was composed of relatives, friends of the Brown family and "summer people". The choir was made up of volunteers recruited from the family and a few talented friends. They sat round the small, reed organ. The General died in 1907, and Mrs. Brown in 1911. Today, the remains of these three people are preserved in the crypt under the altar: General John Marshall Brown, his wife Alida Carroll Brown, and their daughter Alida Greely Brown.

Before her death, Mrs. Brown perceived the need for a Rectory and provided for the building of that structure in her will. The present English Rectory was finished and blessed in August 1915."

- "A MUCH-NEEDED IMPROVEMENT Dr. Wilson Says That Should the Ordinance for a Botanic Garden In Connection With the Commercial Museums be Approved by Councils the Low Marshes Near Woodlands Cemetery Will be Metamorphosed Into a Thing of Beauty. Dr. W. P. Wilson, the director of the Philadelphia Commercial Museums, was seen yesterday. In reference to the action taken by the Committee on City Property at their meeting last week In regard to the low, marshy ground on the west bank of the Schuylkill, between South Street Bridge and the line of the Woodlands Cemetery. Dr. Wilson described the large work now being carried out by the Board of Trustees' of the Commercial Museums in that locality. A retaining wall will be built, he said, on the west side of the railroad. The land assigned by the city as a site for the buildings of the Commercial Museums will be filled up to the new grade established by the city, and a One scope of buildings will be gradually erected there. It is not Intended to have anything lavish or costly about these buildings. They will be thoroughly fireproof and durable. They will be spacious and adapted for the vast collections the museum is forming, and thoroughly adapted to the views and needs of a great industrial community such as that of Philadelphia. Dr. Wilson says there is reason to feel confident that not only will the money come from outside toward the erection of these buildings, as In the case of the appropriation made by the Legislature at Its last session, but that private citizens Interested In commercial expansion will aid largely in the construction of the buildings. Proposed Botanical Garden. "It has been somewhat discouraging," said Dr. Wilson, "to flud in the neighborhood of the locality, where such a splendid Improvement is going on ns the Free Museum of Science and Art, now being erected at great expense by public-spirited citizens connected with the University, and the great scope of buildings about to be constructed for the Commercial Museums it is discouraging. I repeat, to have such a wretched eyesore In the Immediate vicinity as those low, marshy grounds between the Junction railroad and tbe river. This ground Is part of the tract which was set aside as a public park by the ordinance of July, 1883. This ordinance was in accordance with the act of legislature, which required that the city should reserve a portion of the almshouse grounds as a park to be Improved for public health. This fortunate condition enables the Board of Trustees of the Commercial Museums to apply to City Councils to have this waste land placed under their care, promising that they would Improve It and develop it into an economic and botanical sarden. thus mak ing It available for park purposes In the best possible manner. "As the Commercial Museums have no charter and are not Incorporated, because they are in reality an Integral part of the city organization and government; (his land will not be removed from the control of the city. It will be placed under the care of the museum authorities by ordinance, and It can be removed from threir care if so desired at any future time by ordinance of Councils. What Will be Done. The good accomplished will be manifold. In its present state the land Is an ugly blot and eyesore which ought not to exist neir the centre of a great city. It Is a breeding place for malaria and is a menace to the health of the Important institutions such es the University of Pennsylvania and the Philadelphia Hospitals, which are closely adjacent. All this will be done away with. It will be filled In aud sloped down and sodded to the water edge and rendered entirely sanitary. It will be laid out and planted with the valuable seeds and plants which come to the Museum from all parts of the world, and which will convert It Into an economic garden of great beauty and of eminent practical value to our community. "It ought not to seen surprising, therefore, that the committee on city propery recommended the passage of the ordinance by a unanimous vote upon the favorable report of the sub-committee, under the chairmanship of our experienced fellow-citizen, George Hawkes, who has made a careful examination of the locality. It is earnestly to be trusted that City Councils will promptly consummate this action by passing the ordinance in question. The Museum authorities will certainly do their part without delay and I am sure that all citizens will cordially approve the gratifying developments that will result."     - "At Holmdel Park, they have a garden named in honor of my great-uncle, Henry Handleman. Uncle Henry was the one who taught me how to throw the "pepper ball," a pitch he said he perfected in the minor leagues. At age 8, I believed every word. At age 8, you wanted to believe you could conceal a pepper shaker in your glove and doctor the ball so the pepper would somehow fly up in the batter's face and cause him to sneeze, thereby inducing him to strike out...Uncle Henry was born in New Jersey, in 1894. He was the only one of Abram and Frieda's 10 children to go to college. He graduated from Cornell with a degree in horticulture. Then he tried baseball for a couple of years. Avrom says he played for Syracuse, a Yankee farm club. Merna says it was Rochester, and that he later got traded to the Durham Bulls. Wouldn't surprise me if that's where he picked up the pepper ball. All the beautiful azaleas down South must have turned his head as well, says Merna. Soon he would be living in Lake Wales, Fla., running a nursery. Then in 1925, the tall rangy right-hander with the pepper ball would give up the ballplayer's life and get married. Years later, his daughter would read the yellowing announcement clipped out of the local paper and it would make her laugh out loud. "It said 'A few of his close friends knew, but it will come as a surprise to many others who know him'," Merna recalls. "I guess you could take that any way you wanted." Uncle Henry eventually established his own nursery down in Florida. When business tailed off during World War II, he returned to New Jersey and bought the farm on Phalanx Road, apples and peaches mainly."

  - Stratford-on-Olentangy, Delaware Twp.
This town is more properly referred to as Stratford-on-the-Whetstone. (The Olentangy River was originally named the Whetstone River.) Its location was along the west bank of the Olentangy, along SR 315 near the place where it intersects US 23. It was laid out in 1850, seventeen lots to provide housing for employees of the mills which had occupied that spot on the river since as early as 1808. More mills were built, adding carding and pulling, paper, and flour to the products made here. The paper mill was heavily damaged in a fire on All Hallow's Eve, 1840, but was rebuilt. Then, on February 27, 1857, another fire swept all the mills, doing $25,000 worth of damage. A new stone mill was built on the spot the following November. Aside from the industry, Stratford-on-Olentangy has quite a colorful history. They say that a guy named John Hoyt came up with the name while toasting to the town's prosperity in a local tavern. He said something like, "As Stratford-on-Avon has become famous as the birthplace of the immortal Shakespeare, so may Stratford-on-the-Whetstone be noted as the birthplace of some great genius." Most of the buildings in town were constructed from stone, including many of the houses. One of the stone mill buildings later served as a powerhouse and car storage barn for the Columbus, Delaware & Marion Railroad, circa 1900. It burned in 1927, but not badly. (As you can tell, Stratford-on-Olentangy was plagued by fires.) When the railroad folded in 1933, a plastics company bought the plant. It burned down in 1980. But the funniest piece of historical trivia from this ghost town is the brief life of Stratford Park, where the CD&M railroad brought more than a thousand people on May 25, 1903. They were there to see the "Famous Vernon Brothers" perform death-defying stunts, including a forty-five-foot dive into the Olentangy, and a bicycle ride across a cable strung high over the river. When showtime arrived, both of the famous brothers chickened out and left without performing their stunts, much to the pissed-off crowd's dismay.

Northeast Oakwood a study in complexity

By Harry G. Ebeling

Will I. Ohmer, a U.D. graduate, was somewhat of a mechanical genius, and was the founder of the Recording and Computing Machine Co. He was a brother of John F. Ohmer of the Ohmer Fare Register Co. His company employed as many as 9,000 employees and became successful in WW I building precision equipment. He was in a position to have great plans for this spectacular site when he agreed to build a house on it within four years after his 1919 purchase. Well, the ways of the world can be harsh, and his plans changed. With the end of the war. He built a summer home around the base of the tower, naming it Gracemont for his wife and daughter. In the 30's it was rebuilt, scaling down the tower, as a year round home. A circle driveway which was open to all went all around it and took advantage of the view. Built on five levels with a tower study, it had seven bedrooms and servants' quarters. During WW II it was rented, as were many Oakwood homes, as quarters for Wright-Patterson AFB officers.[includes greater map of Oakwood including other historic owners and plats]

In 1928, Ohmer platted the area into Gracemont with 10 lots and his house on a 4.5 acre tract but never sold any lots. In 1949 his daughter replatted it, sold all but the house, and created Lookout Ridge, a private road. In 1956, the house lot was replatted into Sec. 2 creating five lots and the cul de sac on Lookout Drive. The house was torn down and the late Tony Wenzler built another, making full use of the view that Adam Schantz Jr. had used for the tower back in 1913 for selling lots.

  - "The "Encyclopedia of Chicago" states that [Samuel Eberly] Gross built some 10,000 homes in 21 subdivisions in the Chicago area, including the Alta Vista Terrace development in Lake View near Wrigley Field.
By 1888, he and his wife, Emily, moved into a home on Lake Shore Drive in Chicago. That same year, he purchased land west of Chicago and christened the subdivision "Grossdale" in honor of himself. After residents revolted and renamed Grossdale as "Brookfield" in 1905, Gross moved to Battle Creek, Mich., where he lived at the "sanitarium" run by Dr. Harvey Kellogg.

In 1908 he filed for bankruptcy. His financial troubles were reportedly related to building speculation deals in Chicago and Milwaukee in 1903.

Emily and S.E. Gross divorced in 1909 after Emily found out that her husband was having an affair. At 66 years old, Gross married his 18-year-old mistress, a nurse at the sanitarium.

Gross died in 1913 and was buried in Rosehill Cemetery in Chicago. He had no children."

  - Hinsdale farm has a connection to Eastland disaster
Enos Barton, a co-founder of Western Electric Manufacturing, was a successful, wealthy, entrepreneurial and technologically innovative man of his time. He bought property in south Hinsdale to have a gentleman's working cattle farm. Ultimately he owned 1,100 acres, all of it south of 55th Street on both sides of County Line Road heading south to Plainfield. While his main barn and home were west of County Line Road, his guest house — the first Hinsdale residence built to have electricity — was on the east side, where the RML Specialty Hospital now stands...Over the course of the more than 20 years of the Sedgley Farm's existence, it survived severe electrical storms, fire and even a devastating outbreak of hoof and mouth disease which resulted in the loss of nearly all Barton's cattle. But, in 1915, the Eastland steamship capsized in the Chicago River, killing more than 800 people — Western Electric employees and their families on a jaunt — and Barton never seemed to recover after that. He died in 1916 and the farm was sold off piece by piece by 1920. At some point in 1934, what was Barton's guest house became a restaurant known as The Sedgley House. Its phone number was: "Hinsdale 676." In 1973, Chicago Guernsey Dairy sold its land and houses have occupied the land ever since.

Ironically, a crossed electrical wire started a fire that destroyed the Sedgley dairy building in 1913. Although the Sedgley barn was leveled, the animals survived and milk wagons continued to line up at Barton's dairy." DUPAGE NOTEBOOK. YESTERDAY.

Dear Mr. Reed,

I am trying to track down any record of Frederick Law Olmsted's plans for the Pearsall Mansion in Brentwood, Long Island, New York. I've searched the finding aids available online and cannot find any reference to it.

I am the archivist for the Sisters of St. Joseph, Brentwood, whose motherhouse property, over 200 acres, was purchased in 1896. On the property was the Brentwood Hotel, which had previously been privately owned by the Robert W. Pearsall family. Between 1863, when the land was purchased, and 1871, when Pearsall died, a French chateau-styled mansion was erected, with twelve acres purportedly landscaped by Olmsted. The rest of the land was a working farm.

Would you be able to help track down any connection of Olmsted with Brentwood?

Thank you very much.

Subject: Re: Olmsted design of Pearsall Mansion, Brentwood, NY

Well, there's good news and less than good news.

We don't have anything within our archives directly relating Olmsted to Pearsall at Brentwood (if work was done under another owner's name, I couldn't find it). There are three letters (1868, 1869), however, at the Library of Congress in the Olmsted Sr. personal papers relating to "Oakland Farm". A search on "pearsall" in the archival records search of our database (www.redisov.com/olmsted) will show you details of those documents (including the reel and frame reference to the microfilmed materials).

I believe this is the land you refer to based on this citation I found on Google:

"The most prominent offer has been made by Mr Robert W Pearsall on Oakland farm Brentwood Station Long Island who intends not only to make a present of fifteen or twenty acres of land to the proposed horticultural school but also of more than $2,000 of the improvements he put on a place near his own. This place contains a small but very pleasant cottage a second house for the gardner and a barn four acres land in good cultivation with bearing fruit trees quite near the railroad and its cost is $3,300. May not the Farmers Club as a branch of the American Institute or the horticultural department of the same institution be able to furnish the $3,300 ... " p.37, Annual Report of the American Institute of the City of New York, American Institute of the City of New York, C. van Benthuyssen., 1870

The folks at the LC may be able to print/scan these items from their collection and send directly to you, rather than requiring you to go to the Manuscripts reading room, or have you borrow the microfilm of these materials at your local public library.

So, it seems some connection but not a terribly robust one? Good luck with the research!

Dear Mr. Reed,

I am happy to tell you that I found, mislabeled, a landscape plan for "Brentwood Home Grounds," dated Oct 30, 1869! There is a stamp on the lower right corner that identifies it as the work of Olmsted and Vaux, and it bears an identification as No. 111.

It is in extremely fragile condition and cannot be completely unrolled without sustaining more damage. I did take a couple of photos of it for you and I see that the date fits in with the letters you found from Olmsted's personal papers relating to Oakland Farm.

What is really interesting for us is that the plan includes a pond; I have seen one such reference to its existence, but nothing else, and certainly no map of it.

- "The Providence Journal of monday says: "A wedding occurred in Newport onthe 11th inst., the parties of which occupy a very high position in European and American society. The bridegroom was Count Gio Resse of Reisback, Switzerland. He was born in Rome, Italy and his father was Gietro, Count Resse, and his mother, Carolina Lucia Volpi. The father of the bridegroom was for many years connected with the italian court, but certain circumstances led him and his family to take up their residence within the milits of the Swiss Republic. The bride was Mrs. Elizabeth Woodbridge Pearsall, formerly Phelps, of Brentwood, Long Island, the lady being the daughter of Mr. Thomas W. Phelps, one of our summer residents. This is the second time the bridegroom has been married, while the bride has had two former husbands. The couple were very quietly married by Rev. Thatcher Thayer, D.D. The marriage certificate was witnessed by Mr. Thomas M. Pearsall and Mr. John W. Stirling." NYT, Oct. 26, 1877
