HISTORY

The historic buildings at Independence National Historical Park (INDE) are known throughout the world and include a World Heritage Site and several National Historic Landmarks. The United States Congress has charged the National Park Service with the responsibility for preserving these treasures for the enjoyment of present and future generations. The Utilities Improvement Project (UIP) was an ambitious, multi-year project that helped ensure the continuing preservation of these historic buildings.

Initiated in the fall of 1992, the Utilities Improvement Project incorporated multiple parkwide objectives. Those objectives included the rehabilitation and improvement of old and failing utility systems, the installation or improvement of fire detection and suppression systems, the installation or improvement of security systems, the removal of hazardous materials associated with utilities, and the replacement of or addition to the interpretive exhibits in some 15 buildings throughout Independence National Historical Park. The project also identified several supporting goals of improving the overall energy efficiency of the building systems, meeting the preservation objectives of the park, addressing overall operational and maintenance needs, and facilitating the park's interpretive objectives. The UIP also included a review of accessibility issues throughout the park under the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The Utilities Improvement Project received tremendous support from its inception. The Mid-Atlantic Regional Office (MARO), the administrative predecessor to the current Northeast Regional Office, first identified the UIP as a priority for National Park Service construction funding. The UIP schedule was also dependent upon Congressional funding for both planning and construction; hence, the project schedule varied each year as the funding for that year was identified. The scope and scale of the UIP and its long term presence underscores the national importance of the park's cultural resources and the high profile of Independence National Historical Park within the National Park Service.

The UIP began with hazardous materials abatement on Independence Square, which facilitated the utility replacement work that followed in September 1993. Replacement of major utility system components (heating, air conditioning, plumbing, electrical, fire and security systems) in the five buildings on Independence Square (Independence Hall, Congress Hall, Old City Hall, and the East and West Wings of Independence Hall) came next. Other major projects included construction of a central chilled water plant and underground utilities distribution system that replaced in part central air conditioning systems in many park buildings; and projects at the Merchants' Exchange Building (MEB), the Free Quaker Meeting House, the Bishop White House, New Hall and Pemberton House, the Second Bank of the United States, and the Deshler-Morris and Bringham Houses.

Work under the Utilities Improvement Project ceased in 2012. The records from these completed projects span over two decades and form the major series of the Utilities Improvement Project Records.
