Group Cabin Camping

In Brief

Since 1936, Prince William Forest Park has proudly represented the National Park Service as the model of organized group camping. During the Great Depression, the men of the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) constructed five cabin camps in the park, providing overnight camping for underprivileged youth. During World War II, America's first intelligence agency, the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), used these cabin camps to house and train intelligence operatives. Since then, generations have enjoyed cabin-camping at Prince William Forest Park.

Join our nation's legacy and reserve a cabin camp today!

Facility Information

The National Park Service (NPS) administers five camps composed of groups of small, historic, wooden structures located in Prince William Forest Park. Only Cabin Camp 5 (Camp Happyland) has heat and is open year-round. These rustic forest retreats include:

Dining Hall

Most central dining halls feature exposed beams and brick or stone fireplaces. Facilities include a commercial size oven, stove top and griddle, walk-in refrigerator, large freezer, counters, and a spacious area for dining.

Air conditioning is not available in any of the camps. Heating is only available in Cabin Camp 5 (Camp Happyland).

Sleeping Cabins/Dormitories

Cabins are equipped with single cots, closets, and mattresses.

Bathrooms

Restroom facilities with hot showers and flush toilets are located centrally in each of these camps. Toilet tissue is provided.

Craft Lodges

Exposed beams, fireplaces and craft tables make these buildings a perfect place for meetings, gatherings or crafts.
