NHL Significance:

- The Manenggon Concentration Camp NHL is strongly associated with the Japanese occupation of Guam during World War II and the wartime experiences of Indigenous Pacific Islanders. It is where the Japanese military incarcerated approximately half of the island's 21,000 Indigenous CHamoru in the weeks before the July 1944 American recapture of the island. It embodies the deprivation, indignity, subjugation, and brutality endured by the CHamoru people during the Japanese occupation and holds symbolic meaning as a testament to CHamoru courage, strength, sacrifice, and triumph over adversity.

- The Manenggon Concentration Camp NHL represents the unparalleled thirty-two-month Japanese occupation of Guam, a US naval base, during World War II, wherein the island and its ethnic population, the CHamoru, legally classified as American nationals, were subsumed into the Micronesian possessions of the Japanese Empire.

Integrity:

- The Manenggon Concentration Camp site retains a high degree of historic integrity of location, setting, feeling, and association. The fundamental character of the site is its physical environment—an isolated floodplain at the Ylig and Manenggon river confluence. Water was the central natural feature critical to CHamoru survival and remains intrinsic to the community’s relationship to the place.
- Hundreds of shelters constructed of tangantangan, coconut fronds, and bamboo that sheltered the CHamoru detainees were so crudely constructed as to be almost part of the natural environment and wholly ephemeral.
- While some of the valley has returned to subsistence farming, the remainder is largely jungle vegetation, as it was during the period of significance. A narrow road follows the route of the trail shown on a ca. 1942 map. The site remains otherwise largely undeveloped with unaltered topography and typical vegetation people used to survive.

Origins of Nomination:

- When the property was nominated to the National Register in 2016, the Director of Guam Department of Parks and Recreation requested it also be recommended for consideration for nomination as a National Historic Landmark. The Guam State Historic Preservation Officer co-signed this request. The Organization of American Historians, through a task agreement with the NPS Preservation Partnerships Program in the legacy Pacific West Regional Office (Interior Regions 8, 9, 10, & 12), commissioned the Guam Preservation Trust to prepare a nomination. This was authored by Jolie Liston, PhD, Micronesian Heritage Consulting, LLC, and H. David Tuggle, PhD (for Guam Preservation Trust).

Potential for Positive Public Response or Reflection on NHL Program:

- The CHamoru people have long recognized the Manenggon Concentration Camp as the central site to commemorate and honor the survivors who endured the Japanese occupation, their triumph over hardship, and as a solemn reminder of World War II and the power of the human spirit.
- NHL designation will recognize the World War II experience of the CHamoru as recommended in the Asian American–Pacific Islander NHL Theme Study.

Potential for Negative Public Response or Reflection on NHL Program: None known
